Inge, William Ralph (1860–1954), Dean of *St Paul's. He was born at Crayke, N. Yorks, educated at Eton and King's College, Cambridge, and successively Fellow of Hertford College, Oxford (1889–1905), Vicar of All Saints', Knightsbridge (1905–7), Lady Margaret Professor of Divinity at Cambridge (1907–11), and Dean of St Paul's (1911–34). His sympathies with *Platonic spirituality found their expression in a long series of theological and devotional writings, including Christian Mysticism (*Bampton Lectures, 1899) and The Philosophy of Plotinus (*Gifford Lectures, 2 vols., 1918). The latter was an attempt to assess the positive value of Plotinus' system for the modern world. There followed two widely read series of Outspoken Essays (1919; 1922); they included a notable 'Confessio Fidei', which upheld a philosophy of value in which God was the 'supreme value' and true faith 'belief in the reality of absolute value'. Inge's grasp of the tastes and prejudices of the English mind, his provocative and epigrammatic manner of writing and his pure English style made him one of the best-known Churchmen of his generation.

There is autobiographical material in Inge's Vale (1934) and Diary of a Dean: St Paul's 1911–1934 [1950]. Life by A. Fox (London, 1960). R. M. Helm, The Gloomy Dean: The Thought of William Ralph Inge (Winston-Salem, 1962). W. R. Matthews in DNB, 1951–1960, pp. 529–32.

inhibition. An episcopal order suspending from the performance of his office an incumbent whose conduct makes such action advisable either for the avoidance of scandal or for some other reason in the interests of the parish. It is the duty of the inhibiting bishop to arrange and provide for the services during the suspension. Such orders are governed in the C of E by procedure under the *Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction Measure, 1963, and, except temporarily, can be made only after due judicial inquiry.

initiation. See BAPTISM.

Injunctions, Royal. A series of Tudor royal orders on ecclesiastical affairs, the most important of which are:

(1) By *Henry VIII, drawn up by T. *Cromwell, 1536. These required the clergy to observe the anti-papal laws and the abrogation of certain holy days and ceremonies, not to extol images, relics, or miracles, to discourage pilgrimages, and to teach their people the Pater Noster, the articles of the faith, and the Ten Commandments in English. The clergy were also ordered to teach and to administer the Sacraments more regularly and not to frequent taverns. Those with an income of £20 or more a year were to give a fortieth part of it to the poor; all incumbents were to devote a fifth part of their income to the repair of their own churches and parsonages.

(2) By Henry VIII, 1538, drawn up by Cromwell. This order, after confirming the previous injunctions, provided for the setting up of R. *Grafton's *Great Bible in all churches, for the regular instruction of the people in the Scriptures, and for the checking of certain superstitions. Only duly licensed preachers were permitted to officiate. A register of all marriages, baptisms, and burials was to be kept and stored in the parish chest. The use of prayer addressed to the saints in processions was strongly discouraged.

(3) By Edward VI, 1547. These Injunctions, issued from Grafton's press on 31 July, repeated most of the 1538 orders, but with important additions and modifications, e.g. all parishes were ordered to provide the Paraphrases of Erasmus as well as a Bible, together with an alms-chest near the high altar and a pulpit; readings and responses in services were curtailed to make room for readings in English, processions were banned, and the Litany was to be said or sung in English kneeling. All *primers were banned apart from the last English and Latin versions provided by Henry VIII.

(4) By *Mary I, 1554. These Injunctions prohibited administration of the Oath of *Supremacy and required all canons not contrary to statute law to be enforced, married priests to be either removed or divorced, the neglect of Baptism and Confirmation to cease, heresy to be repressed, holy days and ceremonies to be restored as at the end of Henry VIII's reign, and clerics ordained 'after the new sort' to have 'that thing which wanted in them before' supplied.

(5) By *Elizabeth I, 1559. Thirty-two articles of this series are substantially re-enactments of various Edwardine orders, mostly from the Royal Injunctions of 1547, with their extreme anti-Romanism and hostility to images and pictures toned down, perhaps in the interests of comprehensiveness; 21 are new. Of these no. 29, without forbidding, sought to discourage the marriage of clergy, but from the first it proved a dead letter. No. 49 was designed to encourage music (apparently plainchant) in collegiate and parish churches, and permitted the use of hymns before or after service. No. 52 enjoined bowing at the Holy Name; no. 53 slow and distinct reading of the service. Others prescribed the proper habiting of the clergy (no. 30), the observance of holy days (46) and the saying of the litany and prayers on Wednesdays and Fridays (48).

Texts in Gee and Hardy: (1) pp. 269–74; (2) pp. 275–81; (4) pp. 380–3; and (5) pp. 417–42, with variants of (3) noted; full text of (3) in J. E. Cox (ed.), Miscellaneous Writings and Letters of Thomas Cranmer (*Parker Society, 1846), pp. 498–504.

Inner (or Inward) Light. The Divine light in every individual, which is held to guide, teach, and lead to salvation, and to bring those who accept it into unity with God and each other. This concept (deriving from Jn., esp. 1: 9) is characteristic of, but not exclusive to, the Society of *Friends.

Innere Mission. The term covers all voluntary religious, charitable, and social work organized within the Protestant Churches in Germany apart from the actual parish work. It was first employed by J. H. *Wichern (q.v.) in connection with his foundation at Hamburg, but he soon came to use it for all 'works of saving love'. The chief object of the Innere Mission is to reclaim those who have strayed, a task carried out by preaching, distributing of religious literature (Bible and Tract societies), and charitable works, such as nursing the sick and assisting the poor. The years of its early enthusiasm (1848–*c.*1860) produced a number of new associations and revived old ones for nursing, prison reform, care of the homeless and the mentally deficient, and the institution of deaconesses on the model of the early Church. From 1890 down to 1918 the social question played a paramount part and theoretical discussions on the attitude of the Protestant Churches to socialism, the emancipation of women, and other topical problems, were in the foreground. After 1918 the work was resumed with special stress on education and the winning back of the paganized youth of the cities to Christianity.

During the Second World War it made a notable and not completely unsuccessful stand against the Nazi policy of *euthanasia for the physically and mentally chronic sick. In 1957 it was united with the Hilfswerk, an organ of the *Evangelical Church in Germany established in 1945 to relieve distress and try to make contact with those alienated from the Church. It has spread to France, the Netherlands, Poland, and Scandinavia.

M. Gerhardt, Ein Jahrhundert Innere Mission: Die Geschichte des Central-Ausschusses für die Innere Mission der Deutschen Evangelischen Kirche (2 vols., 1948). J. M. Wischnath, Kirche in Aktion: Das Evangelische Hilfswerk 1945–1957 und sein Verhältnis zu Kirche und Innerer Mission (Arbeiten zur kirchlichen Zeitgeschichte, Reihe B, Band 14; 1986). J.-C. Kaiser, Sozialer Protestantismus im 20. Jahrhundert: Beiträge zur Geschichte der Inneren Mission 1914–1945 (Munich, 1989). K. S. Latourette, Christianity in a Revolutionary Age, 2 (1960), esp. pp. 102–9; 4 (1962), pp. 251–3. W. Schütz in RGG (3rd edn.), 3 (1959), cols. 756–63; J. Albert in TRE 16 (1987), pp. 166–75, both s.v. with refs. See also bibl. to WICHERN, J. H.

Innocent I, St (d. 417), Pope from 402. A man of great ability, firm resolution, and high moral character, he made more substantial claims for the Papacy than any of his predecessors at *Rome. He insisted that major causes of dispute should be brought to the judgement of the Apostolic See. In the controversy with *Celestius, *Pelagius, and their supporters, Innocent took the side of St *Jerome against John, Bp. of Jerusalem, and endorsed the doctrines propounded by the African Councils. Through his Vicar, the Bp. of *Thessalonica, he exercised authority in a sphere which had recently come under the control of the E. Empire. He was, however, unable to save St John *Chrysostom from exile. His famous letter to Decentius, Bp. of Eugubium (19 Mar. 416), is important for the history of the *Canon of the Mass; it also speaks of *Confirmation as reserved for bishops and mentions the rites of *Unction and *Penance. Feast day, 28 July, dropped in 1969.

For his correspondence see J. P. Migne, PL 20. 457–636; also 'Collectio Avellana' (CSEL 35; 1895–8), pp. 92–8. Crit. edn. of his letter to Decentius, with Fr. tr. and comm., by R. Cabié (Bibliothèque de la RHE, 58; 1973); it is also conveniently pr. in G. A. Michell, Landmarks in Liturgy (1961), pp. 220–4. LP (Duchesne), 1, pp. 220–4. H. Gebhardt, Die Bedeutung Innocenz I für die Entwickelung der päpstlichen Gewalt (Diss., Leipzig, 1901). É. Demougeot, 'A propos des interventions du Pape Innocent I^{er} dans la politique séculière', RH 212 (1954), pp. 23–38. B. *Capelle, OSB, 'Innocent I^{er} et le Canon de la Messe', RTAM 19 (1952), pp. 5–16, repr. in his Travaux liturgiques, 2 (Louvain, 1962), pp. 236–47. E. Caspar, Geschichte des Papsttums, 1 (1930), pp. 296–343. C. Pietri, Roma Christiana: Recherches sur l'Église de Rome . . . (311–440) (Bibliothèque des Écoles françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 224; 1976), esp. chs. 11–16 (see index). J. Barnaby in DCB 3 (1882), pp. 243–9, s.v.; É. Amann in DTC 7 (1922), cols. 1940–50, s.v.

Innocent III (1160/1–1216), Pope from 1198. Of a noble family, the Scotti, Lotario de' Conti di Segni was educated at *Paris, where he studied theology under Peter of Corbeil, and perhaps at *Bologna, where he may have learned canon law under Uguccio of Ferrara. Rising rapidly in the Papal service, he became cardinal in 1189 or 1190, and in 1198, when not yet in priest's orders, was elected Pope in succession to the aged *Celestine III (1191–8).

In method, Innocent was businesslike and legally minded. He was wholly sincere, diplomatic but opportunist, liable to fits of depression, and above all determined to enforce, extend, and define the 'plenitudo potestatis' of the Roman see. In making the right of the Papacy to interfere in secular affairs depend upon its duty to control the moral conduct of rulers and upon the theory of Papal feudal overlordship, Innocent was enabled by the circumstances of his age and his own will-power and personality to make theory and practice correspond to an extent without parallel, either before or afterwards.

With a view to establishing his authority in Rome and Italy, Innocent began by expelling the German mercenaries from Sicily and elsewhere. The Emp. Henry VI having died in 1197, Innocent used the opportunity for arbitrating between the rival claimants to the Imperial throne. In the bull 'Venerabilem' he laid down that, though the right of electing an emperor lay with the Imperial electors, the Pope must have 'the right and authority of examining the person elected' (jus et auctoritas examinandi personam electam), and that the appointment of an emperor came within the sphere of the Papal authority 'principaliter' and 'finaliter'—principaliter since the translation of the Empire from the Greeks to the Romans took place through the Pope, and finaliter because the blessing, coronation, and investiture of the Emperor lay with the Pope. He supported first Otto IV, then Philip of Swabia (Henry's brother), and then, after Philip's murder in 1208 (when Otto, who was left without a rival, became as anti-Papal as his predecessors), *Frederick II, the only son of Henry VI, who was elected on condition that he did homage to the Pope for Sicily.

Outside the Empire Innocent was equally successful in enforcing his authority. In France he compelled Philip Augustus to be reconciled to his wife, Ingeborg of Denmark; his consequent support of the French king issued in his victory over the discarded Emp. Otto at Bouvines in 1214. The quarrel over the appointment of Stephen *Langton to the see of *Canterbury led to the submission of King *John of England, who agreed to recognize Innocent as his feudal overlord. The Pope also made his authority felt in Scandinavia, the *Spanish peninsula, the Balkans, and even as far east as *Cyprus and *Armenia. His patronage of the new orders of Friars, the *Franciscans and *Dominicans, was further proof of his genius. Like most of the medieval Popes, he wished to preach a *crusade for the recovery of the Holy Land, but the Fourth Crusade, of 1204, was diverted from its true objective to operate against the Byzantine Empire; the Greek patriarch of *Constantinople was then replaced by a Latin, Thomas Morosini, a Venetian.

The *Lateran Council of 1215 (q.v.) was the culminating event of his reign. Heresies, of which that of the *Albigensians, against whom Innocent had preached a crusade, was the most prominent, were condemned and doctrine clearly formulated. In addition reform decrees were passed, encouraging the foundation of schools and a higher standard of conduct for the clergy.

His pontificate may be considered as marking the climax of the medieval Papacy. He thought of his office in a semi-Divine light, 'set in the midst between God and man, below God but above man'. The vast extent of his ecclesiastical jurisdiction is seen in the number of cases which came up before him for decision from distant parts of the earth. He was the first regularly to employ the title 'Vicar of Christ'. 'No king can reign rightly unless he devoutly serve Christ's vicar.' 'Princes have power in earth, priests over the soul. As much as the soul is worthier than the body, so much worthier is the priesthood than the monarchy.' He was, so he affirmed, *Melchizedek, the priest-king, who would bring a centralized Christian society into being, and such was his genius that alone of all the Popes he was able to convert theory into short-lived but nevertheless active reality.

Innocent III was a considerable writer. Apart from his letters, sermons, and canonical rulings, his principal works were the De Miseria Humanae Conditionis, a widely read ascetical treatise written before he became Pope, and his De Sacro Altaris Mysterio, which is a valuable witness to the liturgy of his time.

Collected edn. of his Opera in J. P. Migne, PL 214–17; crit. eds. of his Regestum super Negotio Romani Imperii by W. Holtzmann (2 vols., Bonn, 1947–8) and F. Kempf, SJ (Miscellanea Historiae Pontificiae, 12; Rome, 1947) and of his annual Registers by O. Hageneder, A. Haidacher, and others (Publikationen des Österreichischen Kulturinstituts in Rom, II. Abteilung, Quellen. I. Reihe, 1964 ff.). C. R. Cheney and W. H. Semple (eds.), Selected Letters of Pope Innocent III concerning England, 1198–1216 (Lat. text with Eng. tr., 1953). C. R. and M. G. Cheney (eds.), The Letters of Pope Innocent III (1198–1216) concerning England and Wales: A Calendar with an Appendix of Texts (Oxford, 1967). 'De Miseria Humanae Conditionis', ed. M. Maccarrone (Lugano, 1955); also ed., with Eng. tr., by R. E. Lewis (Athens, Ga., 1978; London, 1980). Studies by A. Luchaire (6 vols., Paris, 1904–6), H. Tillmann (Bonner historische Forschungen, 3; 1954; Eng. tr., 1980), and J. Sayers (Harlow, 1994). E. W. Meyer, Staatstheorien Papst Innocenz' III. (Jenaer historische Arbeiten, Heft 9; 1919); M. Maccarrone, Chiesa e stato nella dottrina di Papa Innocenzo III (Lateranum, NS 6, nos. 3–4; 1940); id., Studi su Innocenzo III (Italia Sacra, 17; 1972). F. Kempf, SJ, Papsttum und Kaisertum bei Innocenz III. (Miscellanea Historiae Pontificiae, 19; Rome, 1954). G. Barbèro, SSP, La dottrina eucaristica negli scritti di Papa Innocenzo III (1953). H. Roscher, Papst Innocenz III. und die Kreuzzüge (Forschungen zur Kirchen- und Dogmengeschichte, 21; 1969). C. R. Cheney, Pope Innocent III and England (Päpste und Papsttum, 9; Stuttgart, 1976); W. Imkamp, Das Kirchenbild Innocenz' III. (ibid. 22; 1983). M. Laufs, Politik und Recht bei Innozenz III.: Kaiserprivilegien, Thronstreitregister und Egerer Goldbulle in der Reichs- und Rekuperationspolitik Papst Innozenz' III. (Kölner historische Abhandlungen, 26; 1980). R. Foreville, Le Pape Innocent III et la France (Päpste und Papsttum, 26; 1992). J. Moore, 'Lotario dei Conti di Segni (Pope Innocent III) in the 1180s', Archivum Historiae Pontificiae, 29 (1991), pp. 255–8; C. Egger, 'Papst Innocenz III. als Theologe', ibid. 30 (1992), pp. 55–124. C. Morris, The Papal Monarchy: The Western Church from 1050 to 1250 (Oxford History of the Christian Church, 1989), esp. pp. 417–51, with bibl. pp. 636–9. R. W. and A. J. Carlyle, A History of Mediæval Political Theory in the West, 5 (1928), pp. 151–234. Mann, 11 and 12 (1915); Fliche and Martin, 10 (1950), pp. 11–213, with bibl. W. Ullmann in NCE 7 (1967), pp. 521–4, s.v.; G. Schwaiger in TRE 16 (1987), pp. 175–82, s.v. 'Innocenz III'.

Innocent IV (d. 1254), Pope from 1243. He was the most outstanding *canon lawyer ever to become Pope. Born as Sinibaldo Fieschi, a member of a Genoese noble family, he taught at *Bologna and was the author of a major commentary on the *Decretals, commonly known as the 'Apparatus'. He was elected Pope in the middle of a crisis in relations with the Emp. *Frederick II and after a vacancy of 18 months. An initially promising attempt at negotiation failed, and at the Council of *Lyons in 1245 he proclaimed the excommunication and deposition of Frederick, and waged war against him by all available means. After Frederick's death in 1250, he continued the struggle against his son Conrad IV. Although the propaganda that emerged from his curia made extreme claims for Papal authority (notably the letter 'Eger cui lenia', 1245), his own legal teachings were more measured. Under the pressure of the financial needs for the war with the Emperor, he hugely extended the system of *provisions, and many of his grants had to be revoked by his successor Alexander IV. He continued the activity of the *Inquisition against the threat of heresy, and in 'Ad extirpanda' in 1252 authorized the use of torture in the course of enquiries. For these reasons he has been harshly judged by historians, but he also co-ordinated the reaction of W. Europe to the threat of the Mongols, collecting information about them and sending friars as emissaries to the heart of Asia.

His Apparatus was pr. at Strasbourg in 1478 [not 1477]; there were various edns. in the 16th cent., incl. that pub. at Venice, 1578. É. Berger (ed.), Les Registres d'Innocent IV (Bibliothèque des Écoles françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 2nd ser.; 4 vols., 1884–1919; full text of docs. not given in all cases); F. Guerello, SJ, Lettere di Innocenzo IV dai cartolari notarili genovesi (Miscellanea Historiae Pontificiae, 23; Rome 1961); Acta concerning E. canon law ed. T. T. Haluščynskyj, OSBM, and M. M. Wojnar, OSBM (Pontificia Commissio ad Redigendum Codicem Iuris Canonici Orientalis, Fontes, 3rd ser., vol. 4, tom. 1; Rome, 1962); further important docs. are preserved by *Matthew Paris in his Chronica Majora. A. Potthast (ed.), Regesta Pontificum Romanorum, 2 (Berlin, 1875), pp. 943–1286. Contemporary Life by his chaplain, Nicolao de Carbio (or Calvi), ed., with introd. and other docs., by F. Pignotti in Archivio della R. Società Romana di Storia Patria, 21 (1898), pp. 7–120. É. Berger, Saint Louis et Innocent IV (1893). G. von Puttkamer, Papst Innocenz IV: Versuch einer Gesamtcharakteristik aus seiner Wirkung (1930). A. Melloni, Innocenzo IV: La concezione e l'esperienza della cristianità come regimen unius personae (Testi e ricerche di scienze religiose, NS 4; Genoa, 1990). L. Pisanu, OFM, Innocenzo IV e i Francescani (Studi e Testi Francescani, 41; 1968). M. Pacaut, 'L'Autorité pontificale selon Innocent IV', Le Moyen Age, 66 (1960), pp. 85–119. J. A. Watt, The Theory of Papal Monarchy in the Thirteenth Century: The Contribution of the Canonists [1965], esp. pp. 58–73. J. M. Muldoon in NCE 7 (1967), pp. 524 f., s.v.; G. Schwaiger in TRE 16 (1987), pp. 182–6, s.v. 'Innocenz IV.', with bibl.

Innocent X (1574–1655), Pope from 1644. Giambattista Pamfili was a native of Rome. He became consistorial advocate in 1601, Auditor of the *Rota in 1604, *nuncio at Naples in 1621, and at Madrid in 1626. He was created cardinal in petto in 1627, the appointment being published in 1629. On the death of *Urban VIII he was elected Pope despite the opposition of the French court, which resented his pro-Spanish views. He at once broke the power of the *Barberini, the hated relatives of his predecessor, who were supported by J. *Mazarin. In the bull 'Zelo domus Dei' (26 Nov. 1648) he confirmed the protest of the Papal legate, Fabio Chigi, against the Peace of Westphalia (1648), on the ground that it violated the laws of the Church; but the protest was ignored. His most important doctrinal decision was the condemnation of the five propositions from the Augustinus of C. O. *Jansen by the bull '*Cum Occasione' (31 May 1653). A much-resented feature of his pontificate was the influence of Olimpia Maidalchini, the widow of his brother. He is the subject of the famous portrait by D. Velázquez in the Galleria Doria at Rome.

W. Friedensburg (ed.), 'Regesten zur deutschen Geschichte aus der Zeit des Pontifikats Innocenz' X', Quellen und Forschungen aus italienischen Archiven und Bibliotheken herausgegeben vom koenigl. preussischen historischen Institut in Rom, 5 (1903), pp. 60–124 and 207–22; 6 (1904), pp. 146–73; and 7 (1904), pp. 121–38. I. Ciampi, Innocenzo X Pamfili e la sua corte: Storia di Roma dal 1644 al 1655, da nuovi documenti (Imola, 1878). Pastor, 30 (1940). G. B. Picotti in EC 7 (1951), cols. 19–22, s.v. 'Innocenzo X'.

Innocent XI, Bl (1611–89), Pope from 1676. He became *cardinal in 1645, and Bp. of Novara in 1650, and in both offices was greatly loved for his piety and generosity. In 1669 his candidature for the Papacy was defeated through the influence of Louis XIV of France, but the latter's interference was unavailing in 1676. By careful economy he much improved the finances of the curia. He struggled continuously against the absolutism of Louis XIV in Church affairs, disapproving of Louis's revocation in 1685 of the Edict of *Nantes; and he also opposed *Gallicanism, which reached its climax in the *Gallican Articles of 1682. Similar motives led him to disapprove of the measures taken by *James II of England to restore RCism, and esp. of the *Declaration of Indulgence (1687). His piety and zeal inspired him to bring about several reforms within the Church, and he encouraged daily communion. In the bull 'Sanctissimus Dominus' (1679) he condemned 65 *Laxist propositions in moral theology; while in 1687 the bull 'Coelestis Pastor' condemned 68 *Quietist propositions. Innocent is thought, however, to have shown some favour to the *Jansenists, and for this reason his beatification, though begun in the next century, was long delayed. He was finally beatified in 1956. Feast day, 12 Aug.

I. I. Berthier, OP (ed.), Innocentii P. P. XI Epistolae ad Principes (2 vols., Rome, 1891–5); F. de Bojani (ed.), Innocent XI: Sa correspondance avec ses nonces (unfinished; up to 1684, 3 vols., 1910–12). G. B. P[ittoni], Vita d'Innocenzo Undecimo (Venice, 1691); F. Caccia, OFM, Innocentia Apostolica (1697). M. Immich, Papst Innocenz XI, 1676 1689: Beiträge zur Geschichte seiner Politik und zur Charakteristik seiner Persönlichkeit (1900). G. Papàsogli, Innocenzo XI (1611–1689) (1956); C. Miccinelli, Il Beato Innocenzo XI (1956). E. Michaud, Louis XIV et Innocent XI (4 vols., 1882–3). L. O'Brien, Innocent XI and the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes (thesis, Berkeley, Calif.; 1930); J. Orcibal, Louis XIV contre Innocent XI: Les appels au futur concile de 1688 et l'opinion française (Bibliothèque de la Société d'Histoire Ecclésiastique de la France; 1949). A. Latreille, 'Innocent XI, Pape "janséniste", Directeur de conscience de Louis XIV', Cahiers d'Histoire publiés par les Universités de Clermont-Ferrand, Grenoble et Lyon, 1 (1956), pp. 9–39. Pastor, 32 (1940), pp. 1–524, with Appendix on the Biographies of Pope Innocent XI in vol. 30 (1940), pp. 449–51. S. Monti, Bibliografia di Papa Innocenzo XI . . . fino al 1927, ed. M. Zecchinelli (Como, 1957). J. Paquier in DTC 7 (1922), cols. 2006–13, s.v., with bibl.; P. Gini in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 7 (Rome, 1966), cols. 848–56, s.v. 'Innocenzo XI'.

Innocents, Holy. See HOLY INNOCENTS.

Inopportunists. Those at the *Vatican Council of 1869–70 who were opposed to defining Papal infallibility on the ground not that they positively disbelieved in it, but that they considered the moment for its promulgation 'not opportune'. This position was adopted by the great majority of the opponents of the dogma.

Inquisition, the. 'Inquisition' (Lat. inquisitio) means a legal inquiry, but in the later Middle Ages the term was used to describe a special ecclesiastical tribunal concerned with the detection and prosecution of heresy. In early times the usual punishment for heresy was *excommunication. The Fathers generally disapproved of physical penalties, though after Christianity had become the official religion of the Empire, secular rulers tended to regard heresy as a kind of lèse-majesté for which confiscation and even death could be inflicted, as in the case of *Donatism and *Priscillianism in the 4th and 5th cents. On the whole the Church kept to its original attitude as late as the 12th cent., when St *Bernard laid down the principle 'Fides suadenda, non imponenda'. This changed in 1184 when Pope Lucius III enacted in the bull 'Ad Abolendam' that bishops should make inquisition for heresy in their dioceses and hand over those who would not recant to the secular authorities for punishment. This episcopal inquisition proved ineffective, and in order to deal with the problem of *Catharism *c.*1233 Pope *Gregory IX appointed full-time Papal inquisitors drawn mainly from the *Dominican and *Franciscan Orders. They had jurisdiction over all Christians within a defined area, except for bishops and their officials, and were responsible to the Pope alone, but there was no central bureau to co-ordinate the work of inquisitors in different provinces. They had no coercive powers but relied on the co-operation of the secular authorities to enforce their decrees. Inquisitors were appointed only in areas where heresy was rife and where lay rulers were prepared to assist them; the Papal Inquisition was never established in the British Isles, Scandinavia, or the medieval kingdom of Castile. The inquisitors examined suspects in camera in the presence of sworn witnesses. The accused was not normally told the charges against him, or allowed to call witnesses in his defence, and lawyers were unwilling to defend such cases for fear of being accused of abetting heresy. In 1252 Pope Innocent IV in the bull 'Ad Extirpanda' licensed the use of torture by the Inquisition against obdurate suspects, but there is no clear evidence that this power was widely used in the heresy trials of the 13th cent. The accused had the right to appeal to the Pope before sentence was pronounced. Inquisitors normally had no legal training and were advised by canon lawyers what sentences to impose; these were imposed at the sermo generalis. Heretics who recanted were given penances, most of which were of the same kind as those imposed in the Sacrament of *Penance, such as fasting, pilgrimage, or the wearing of distinctive crosses on their clothes, but, unlike other penances, those imposed by the Inquisition were legally enforceable. Confinement in the Inquisition prisons was also technically a penance, and was reserved for serious offenders. Such sentences were terminable only by the Pope or at the discretion of the inquisitors. Unrepentant heretics were handed over to the secular authorities to be punished in accordance with the law of the state; this normally meant *burning at the stake. Yet such cases were exceptional; when the Inquisition was at the height of its powers in S. France in the mid-13th cent. only three people a year on average were burnt for heresy. Catharism disappeared throughout the W. by *c.*1325, although it is debatable whether the Inquisition did more than accelerate a decline produced by other factors, notably the pastoral work of the *Mendicant Orders and the intellectual challenge of 13th-cent. Catholicism. In the 14th cent. the Inquisition was used by Philip IV of France to initiate his prosecution of the *Templars in 1307 and by Pope *John XXII in his quarrel with the *Spiritual Franciscans.

After the medieval Inquisition had become moribund in the 15th cent., it was remodelled by *Paul III (see HOLY OFFICE). Despite the initial energy of G. P. Carafa (as cardinal and subsequently as Pope *Paul IV) in centralizing control of the Roman Inquisition, the effective power of the revived institution remained limited in the long term. The Roman Inquisition contributed to the eradication of incipient Protestantism in the Italian peninsula by the end of the 16th cent., but despite Papal efforts to assert its authority in the Netherlands, France, the Holy Roman Empire and the Austrian Habsburg lands, it was only in the Papal States that it exercised undisputed power, seen for example in the burning of G. *Bruno in 1600. Even in other Italian states the effective authority of inquisitors over accused persons and their property depended on the degree of co-operation of the secular authorities (esp. in *Venice).

In the Iberian peninsula the Inquisition took on a quite new form. In 1477 *Ferdinand V and *Isabella became concerned about the problem of only nominally Christianized Jews, and in 1478 they obtained permission from *Sixtus IV to set up a new Inquisition, backed by royal authority, in the territories subject to the Crown of Castile. Activated in 1480, the Spanish Inquisition soon became a highly centralized organization, especially after the appointment of Tomás de *Torquemada as Inquisitor General in 1483. In 1484, in spite of initial Papal opposition, its mandate was extended to the territory of the Crown of Aragon, and in due course it was established in all the lands subject to the Spanish monarchy, except Naples. Although the Inquisitor General was technically appointed by the Pope, the Spanish Inquisition operated largely as an instrument of Crown policy, in considerable independence of the Pope, though judgement was reserved to the Holy See in cases brought against senior ecclesiastics. In the 16th cent. the Inquisition turned its attention more particularly to the 'Moriscos' (nominally converted Muslims), the *Alumbrados and others suspected of purveying a false 'spiritual' version of Christianity, and Protestantism. To some extent different tribunals had different interests and responsibilities; for instance, sodomy was never subject to the Inquisition in Castile, but it was in Aragon. *Witchcraft continued to concern the Inquisition in Navarre, although the Inquisition in general declined to believe that there was any such thing.

The methods of the Spanish Inquisition were essentially derived from those of its medieval precursor, including the anonymity of witnesses, which was considered controversial almost from the outset. Although the first decades of its operation were marked by considerable severity, the Spanish Inquisition seems to have been regarded by contemporaries as in some ways more benign than secular courts of the period. Its efficiency and thoroughness, however, induced widespread fear in certain quarters, and this fear was fostered by the staging of public autos de fe*. In some places in the early period 40 per cent. or more of those accused were handed over to the secular authorities and burnt, but from about the middle of the 16th cent. the percentage of cases resulting in capital punishment dropped to about 1 per cent. The tribunal was abolished by Joseph Bonaparte in 1808, restored by Ferdinand VII in 1814, abolished again under the liberal constitution of 1820–23, restored again in 1823, and finally suppressed in 1834.

In 1515 Manuel I of Portugal asked leave to establish an Inquisition in Portugal along the lines of the Spanish Inquisition, but Papal opposition thwarted his desire. Another attempt was made by John III in 1531 and eventually, in spite of continuing Papal resistance, the Portuguese Inquisition was set up in 1536. In 1561 it was extended to Goa. The Inquisitor General was appointed by the Pope, on the King's recommendation, and he in turn was to appoint other inquisitors. The Inquisition in Portugal was never as completely under royal control as it was in Spain, though it was closely identified with the traditional ruling class. After the restoration of the Portuguese monarchy in 1640 there was considerable tension between the Inquisition and the Crown. Under the Marquis of Pombal the Inquisition was brought almost entirely under secular control, and in 1821 it was abolished altogether.

The major concern of the Portuguese Inquisition throughout its history was the 'new Christians' (Christians of Jewish ancestry), of whom there were a great many, thanks to the forced conversions of 1496. It is unclear whether there was genuinely a serious problem of Judaizing or whether the Inquisition was more an expression of social tensions in the country, as has been suggested. The Inquisition also took complete control of the censorship of books.

H. C. Lea, A History of the Inquisition of the Middle Ages (3 vols., 1888; vol. 1, chs. 7–14, repr., with introd. by W. Ullmann, 1963). C. Douais, L'Inquisition: Ses origines, sa procédure (1906); J. [H.] Guiraud, Histoire de l'Inquisition au moyen âge (2 vols., 1935–8); H. Maisonneuve, Études sur les origines de l'Inquisition (1942; 2nd edn., 1960); Y. Dossat, Les Crises de l'Inquisition toulousaine au XIII^e siècle (1233–1273) (Bordeaux, 1959). R. Kieckhefer, Repression of Heresy in Medieval Germany (Liverpool, 1979). B. [F.] Hamilton, The Medieval Inquisition (1981); L. Kolmer, Ad Capiendas Vulpes: Die Ketzerbekämpfung in Südfrankreich in der ersten Hälfte des 13. Jahrhunderts und die Ausbildung des Inquisitionsverfahrens (Pariser Historische Studien, 19; 1982); A. C. Shannon, The Medieval Inquisition (Washington, DC, 1983). R. Canosa, Storia dell'Inquisizione in Italia dalla metà del Cinquecento alla fine del Settecento (5 vols., 1986–1990). L'Inquisizione Romana in Italia nell'Età Moderna: Archivi, Problemi di Metodo e Nuove Ricerche. Atti del seminario internazionale, Trieste, 18–20 maggio 1988 (Pubblicazioni degli Archivi di Stato, 19; 1991). E. van der Vekené, Bibliotheca Bibliographica Historiae Sanctae Inquisitionis (2 vols., Vaduz, Liechtenstein, 1982–3). E. Vacandard in DTC 7 (pt. 2; 1923), cols. 2016–68, s.v., with older bibl.; Y. Dossat in NCE 7 (1967), pp. 535–41, s.v., with further refs.

On the Spanish Inquisition, there is a useful collection of primary docs., ed. M. Jiménez Monteserín, Introducción a la Inquisición Española [1980]. H. C. Lea, A History of the Inquisition in Spain (4 vols., 1906–7). H. [A. F.] Kamen, The Spanish Inquisition (1965); id., Inquisition and Society in Spain in the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Centuries (1985). B. Bennassar and others, L'Inquisition espagnole (xv^e–xix^e siècle) [1979]. V. Pinto Crespo, Inquisición y control ideológico en la España del siglo XVI (La Otra Historia de España, 9 [1983]). J. Peréz Villanueva and B. Escandell Bonet (eds.), Historia de la Inquisición en España y América (Biblioteca de Autores Cristianos, 2nd edn., 1984 ff.). W. Monter, Frontiers of Heresy: The Spanish Inquisition from the Basque Lands to Sicily (Cambridge, 1990). L. Cardaillac (ed.), Les Morisques et l'Inquisition (1990). J. Lynch, Spain under the Habsburgs (2 vols., Oxford, 1964; 2nd edn., 1981); see index. Y. Dossat in NCE, loc. cit., pp. 540 f. See also bibl. to SPAIN.

On the Portuguese Inquisition, there are primary docs. in I. da Rosa Pereira (ed.), Documentos para a História da Inquisição em Portugal (Cartório Dominicano Português, Século XVI, fasc. 18; Oporto, 1984), and other vols. in this ser. A. J. Saraiva, A Inquisição Portuguesa (Lisbon, 1956); id., Inquisição e Cristãos-Novos (Oporto, 1969). L. M. E. Shaw, Trade, Inquisition and the English Nation in Portugal, 1650–1690 (Manchester, 1989). F. Bethencourt, 'Les sources de l'Inquisition portugaise: évaluation critique et méthodes de recherche', in L'Inquisizione Romana in Italia nell'Età Moderna, op. cit., pp. 357–67.

INRI. The initial letters of the Latin words over the Cross of Christ, namely: 'Iesus Nazarenus Rex Iudaeorum' ('Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews'). The superscription 'was written in Hebrew and in Latin and in Greek' (Jn. 19: 19 f.).

inscriptions, early Christian. Inscriptions on stone and other materials are a valuable supplement to other sources of Christian history. Though they abound at all periods, esp. in churches and cemeteries, Christian epigraphy is conventionally limited to texts of the first six cents. For practical purposes, inscriptions are 'Christian' if they bear evidence of Christianity, though others were doubtless set up by Christians.

Many Christian inscriptions are dated, by consular years, provincial eras, or indictions, but usually their date needs to be inferred from knowledge of either the site or building in which they are found or from the internal evidence of each inscription—its content, style of lettering, or accompanying symbols (e.g. the anchor is early and it is possible to date the forms of the Chi-Rho monogram (☧), which was used as a ligature in pre-Christian inscriptions and first appears in a Christian context, for the name of Christ, in the late-third cent.). If the well-known SATOR word-square is Christian, the examples of it found at Pompeii (destroyed in 79) must be the earliest extant Christian inscriptions. 3rd-cent. inscriptions are fairly common in the Roman catacombs; particularly interesting are those found under *St Peter's and under San Sebastiano by the Via Appia (see GRAFFITI). By the 4th cent. they are very common, esp. in *Rome, N. Africa, Syria, and Asia Minor. Some are heretical, *Montanist in Phrygia or *Donatist in Africa. Thousands of original inscriptions exist, mostly in Greek or Latin, and the text of others survives in copies.

In contrast to pagan custom, Christian inscriptions give little personal detail; epitaphs normally mention only the name, age, and date of death, occasionally adding the profession of the deceased. Prominent names occur, particularly in the memorials set up by Pope *Damasus in the catacombs, but the inscriptions are more valuable en masse as evidence of the texture of a community and the expansion of the Church; they bear witness to the beliefs of rank-and-file Christians of the period. Specially important are those which record the foundation of churches and witness to the cult of martyrs. Doctrine is illustrated vividly, but less fully and precisely than in the literary sources.

O. *Marucchi, Epigrafia cristiana (1910; Eng. tr., 1912); C. M. Kaufmann, Handbuch der altchristlichen Epigraphik (1917); P. Testini, Archeologia Cristiana: Nozioni generali dalle origini alla fine del sec. VI [1958], pp. 327–543 ('Epigrafia'). Selections in E. Diehl, Lateinische altchristliche Inschriften (2te Aufl., 1913, short); id., Inscriptiones Latinae Christianae Veteres (3 vols., 1925–31), with suppl. [vol. 4] by J. Moreau and H. I. Marrou (1967); corrections by A. Ferrua, SJ (Sussidi allo Studio delle Antichità Cristiane pubblicati a cura del Pontificio Istituto di Archeologia Cristiana, 7; 1981). General collections: Corpus Inscriptionum Latinarum, passim; Corpus Inscriptionum Graecarum, esp. vol. 4. There are many regional collections, notably G. B. *de Rossi, Inscriptiones christianae urbis Romae, 1861, cont. by I. Gatti, A. Silvagni, A. Ferrua, SJ, and D. Mazzoleni. J. Janssens, SJ, Vita e morte del cristiano negli epitaffi di Roma anteriori al sec. VII (Analecta Gregoriana, 223; 1981). H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 7 (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 623–1089, s.v. 'Inscriptions'. This dictionary is rich throughout in discussion and illustration of inscriptions. The progress of Christian epigraphy may be followed in L'Année épigraphique (1888 ff.) and Rivista di Archeologia cristiana (1924 ff.). See also works cited under GRAFFITI.

installation. The formal induction by the Dean, Provost, or his representative of a canon or prebendary to a seat or stall in a cathedral or collegiate church, symbolizing his admission to the chapter and right to perform the duties and enjoy the privileges of his office. In the case of canons appointed by the Crown, it appears that installation is not strictly necessary. The term is also used of the ceremonies of admission in certain orders of chivalry, and incorrectly to include both the *enthronization of a bishop and *induction to a rectory or vicarage.

Instantius (late 4th cent.), a Spanish bishop of unknown see. He was one of the chief supporters of *Priscillian, whom he accompanied to Italy (381–2) in a fruitless endeavour to secure the favour of St *Ambrose and Pope *Damasus. In 384 he was deposed by the Council of Bordeaux. It has been suggested that he may be the author of one or more of the 11 treatises attributed by G. Schepss to Priscillian.

The 11 tractates discovered by G. Schepss were pub. by him under the name of Priscillian (CSEL 18; 1889). G. *Morin, OSB, 'Pro Instantio. Contre l'attribution à Priscillien des opuscules du manuscrit de Würzburg', R. Bén. 30 (1913), pp. 153–73. Critique of Morin by J. Martin, 'Priscillianus oder Instantius?', Hist. J. 47 (1927), pp. 237–51. H. Chadwick, Priscillian of Avila: The Occult and the Charismatic in the Early Church (Oxford, 1976), esp. pp. 31–40, 47–51, 62–9. B. Vollmann in PW, Suppl. 14 (1974), cols. 554–8, s.v. 'Priscillianus', with refs. to earlier discussions. See also bibl. to PRISCILLIANISM.

Institute of Charity. See ROSMINIANS.

Institute of Consecrated Life. See INSTITUTES OF CONSECRATED LIFE.

Institutes, The. The abbreviated English title of J. *Calvin's Institutio Religionis Christianae. The first edition was published in Latin at Basle in 1536. Deriving much of its form and substance from M. *Luther's Kleiner Katechismus (1529), in its six chapters it expounded the Decalogue, the Apostles' Creed, the Lord's Prayer, the sacraments, and Church government. Dedicated to Francis I, King of France, the work was intended as a defence of Reformation principles and a plea for religious toleration. During his exile in Strasbourg, Calvin revised and expanded the work to 17 chapters (1539), and issued a French translation (1541). The considerable interest in the work and the controversy which it generated moved Calvin to issue a much expanded edition of 80 chapters (Latin, 1559; French, 1560), possibly modelled on *Peter Lombard's Sententiarum libri quattuor. Its four sections set out Calvin's characteristic views on (1) God the creator, (2) God the redeemer, (3) the nature, means of appropriation, and effects of grace, and (4) the Church, ministry, and sacraments (see CALVINISM). Although the arrangement of topics was altered from the 1539 edition (largely in the interests of clarity of presentation), no significant doctrinal development is evident.

The highly systematic structure of the work, its clarity of presentation, its lucid prose and pithy style (esp. in the French editions), its constant appeal to Scripture, and its logical rigour led to its becoming the most important theological text of the Protestant Reformation. Lutheran theologians, who retained the clumsy Loci communes format developed by P. *Melanchthon, initially found themselves unable to meet the formidable challenge posed by Calvin's work. The 1559 edition was widely circulated in translation and abbreviated forms, rapidly achieving the status of a Summa theologiae of Protestantism.

Convenient variorum edition of the Latin text in Calvin's Opera Selecta, ed. P. Barth and W. Niesel, vols. 3–4 (Munich, 1928–31). Crit. edns. of the Fr. text of 1539 by J. Pannier (4 vols., Collection des Universités de France, 1936–9), and of that of 1560 by J.-D. Benoît (5 vols., Bibliothèque des Textes Philosophiques, 1957–63). The 1559 Lat. text was tr. into Eng. by T. Norton (London, 1561). Modern Eng. trs. of the 1556 text by F. L. Battles (Atlanta, Ga., 1975) and of the 1559 text by id., ed. J. T. McNeill (Library of Christian Classics, 20–1; 1961), with comprehensive list of edns., trs., and abridgements, pp. 1527–30. J. W. Marmelstein, Étude comparative des textes latins et français de l'Institution de la religion chrestienne par Jean Calvin (Paris thesis; Groningen, 1921). A. Autin, L'Institution chrétienne de Calvin (1929). A. Ganoczy, Le Jeune Calvin (Veröffentlichungen des Instituts für europäische Geschichte, Mainz, 40; Wiesbaden, 1966), pp. 136–269; Eng. tr. (Edinburgh, 1988), pp. 133–238. See also other works cited s.v. CALVIN, J.

Institutes of Consecrated Life. The technical term now used in official RC documents for ecclesiastical societies in which members make profession of the evangelical *counsels of perfection. They are established either by the *Holy See or a diocesan bishop. The main distinction, however, is between Religious Institutes (still popularly called 'religious orders') and Secular Institutes. The members of Religious Institutes take public *vows and live a common life. Religious Institutes are known as Orders (or regular Orders) if historically or by their nature some at least of their members take solemn vows. The rest, whose members take simple vows, are known as *Congregations. Members of Secular Institutes bind themselves to follow the evangelical counsels and dedicate themselves to the sanctification of the world while living in it. They live in ordinary conditions, either alone, in families, or in groups. The origins of Secular Institutes go back to the 16th cent., but they were only fully established legally by the Apostolic Constitution 'Provida Mater Ecclesia' of 2 Feb. 1947. The canon law governing Institutes of Consecrated Life is contained in CIC (1983), cans. 573–730.

J. Pathiyamoola, MCBS, The Nature of the Religious State in the Latin and Oriental Codes (Rome, 1992); V. Koluthara, CMI, Rightful Autonomy of Religious Institutes in the Codes of Canons of the Oriental Churches (CCEO) and in the Code of Canon Law (CIC) (ibid., 1994).

institution. The term used to denote the admission of a new *incumbent into the spiritual care of the parish. It is contrasted with the (subsequent) *induction, which admits him into the temporalities of the cure. The institution is performed by the bishop of the diocese and (unlike the induction) may take place anywhere.

Institution, the Words of. The words used by Christ in instituting the *Eucharist (cf. Mt. 26: 26–8, Mk. 14: 22–4, Lk. 22: 19–20, and 1 Cor. 11: 23–5). They appear in the central prayer of the Liturgy in all its forms, with one or two possible exceptions in very early times, and in the W. it has been commonly held that the words 'This is My Body' and 'This is My Blood' alone effect the consecration of the elements. This view clearly underlies the rubric in the BCP that if a second consecration of either *species is necessary during the communion of the people, only that section of the Prayer of Consecration which contains the relevant words for that species is to be repeated. See also EPICLESIS.

Jungmann (1958 edn.), 2, pp. 243–51; Eng. tr., 2, pp. 194–201. E. C. Ratcliff, 'The Institution Narrative of the Roman Canon Missae: its Beginnings and Early Background', in K. Aland and F. L. Cross (eds.), Studia Patristica, 2 (TU 64; 1957), pp. 64–82; repr. in Ratcliff's Liturgical Studies, ed. A. H. Couratin and D. H. Tripp (1976), pp. 49–65. R. F. Buxton, Eucharist and Institution Narrative: A Study in the Roman and Anglican Traditions of the Consecration of the Eucharist from the Eighth to the Twentieth Centuries (*Alcuin Club Collections, 58; 1976). E. J. Cutrone, 'The Liturgical Setting of the Institution Narrative in the Early Syrian Tradition', in J. N. Alexander (ed.), Time and Community: In Honor of Thomas Julian Talley (Washington, DC, 1990), pp. 105–14. See also works cited s.v. EUCHARIST.

Instituts Catholiques. The five 'free' Catholic institutions for higher studies at *Paris, Angers, Lille, Lyons, and Toulouse. These Institutes were founded on the basis of a French legal enactment of 1875 as Christian counterparts to the secularized state universities, though a later law of 1880 denied them the right of describing themselves as universities. In the concluding years of the 19th cent., the Institut Catholique at Paris was the chief centre of the *Modernist Movement. Its professors have included M. *d'Hulst, L. *Duchesne, and A. F. *Loisy, and, more recently, L. Bouyer, Cong. Orat., J. *Daniélou, SJ, and P. Henry, SJ.

Instruments, Tradition of the (Lat. Traditio or Porrectio Instrumentorum). The solemn delivery to those being ordained of the instruments characteristic of their ministry. This ceremony, which now forms part of the Latin rites of Ordination, belonged originally to the *Minor Orders. At *Rome the ceremony was at first merely symbolical, as there was originally no formal ordination to these Orders, but in the *Gallican rites it was accompanied by a charge and formed part of a solemn Ordination. During the Middle Ages it was extended to the diaconate and priesthood. Deacons received the Gospel Book and priests the *paten with the bread and chalice, the delivery being accompanied in each case by an appropriate charge. In his 'Decretum de Unione Armeniorum' (1439) *Eugenius IV gave formal expression to the doctrine already asserted by St *Thomas Aquinas that this ceremony formed the essential 'matter' of the Sacrament, and this view was widely accepted by Latin theologians until the 17th cent., when J. *Morin, by his research into E. and early W. Ordination rites, showed it to be a comparatively late and entirely W. innovation and hence not an essential for Ordination. *Pius XII in his Apostolic Constitution 'Sacramentum Ordinis' of 30 Nov. 1947 laid down that the laying on of hands was the sole 'matter' of the Sacrament, and this view is now incorporated in the 1968 RC Ordination rite. In the first Anglican Ordinal (1550) the New Testament was delivered to deacons and the Bible and chalice with the bread to priests, each with a corresponding charge, but in the Ordinal attached to the Second BCP (1552) the chalice with the bread was omitted at the Ordination of priests, although the accompanying charge remained unchanged. In some modern rites the delivery of chalice and paten to priests has been restored (e.g. in the Book of Alternative Services of the Anglican Church in *Canada, 1985) or is allowed (e.g. by the Anglican Prayer Book of the Church of the Province of *Southern Africa, 1989).

St Thomas, De Articulis Fidei et Ecclesiae Sacramentis, 2 (in the Leonine edn. of his Omnia Opera, 42, 1979, p. 256, lines 348–52). Relevant section of Eugenius IV's decree is pr. in Denzinger and Hünermann (37th edn., 1991), p. 459 (no. 1326), with useful note, p. 453. 'Sacramentum Ordinis' is pr. in AAS 40 (1948), pp. 5–7. J. Morin, Commentarius de Sacris Ecclesiae Ordinationibus (Paris, 1655), esp. pt. 3, Exercitatio 7 (pp. 129–57, 'De Presbyteratus Materia et Forma'). F. Dalbus (pseud. of F. Portal), Les Ordinations anglicanes (Arras, 1894; orig. pr. in La Science catholique for 15 Dec. 1893, 15 Jan. 1894, and 15 April 1894) [by a tour de force argues that the suppression of the porrectio instrumentorum at the Reformation is the sole ground against the validity of Anglican Ordinations].

insufflation. The action of blowing or breathing upon a person or thing to symbolize the influence of the Holy Spirit. The *Vulgate uses the term of the Lord's breathing on the disciples (haec cum dixisset insufflavit, Jn. 20: 22). Its purpose is the expulsion of evil spirits. The RC Church still has a special rite of insufflation in connection with the consecration of chrism on *Maundy Thursday, and until recently also for that of the baptismal water. In the intention. The word is used in religious contexts in several senses.

*Orthodox rite and some other E. rites (e.g. the *Maronite) an insufflation is still found in all Baptisms, infant and adult.

(1) In moral theology, for an act of free will directed to the attainment of an end. Such intention may be 'actual', if one wills with conscious attention; 'virtual', if one continues to will in virtue of an antecedent decision, though at the moment not consciously aware of it; 'habitual', if all voluntary action has ceased but without the original decision being revoked; and 'interpretative', if a certain intention is ascribed to a person who has no opportunity to confirm or deny the imputation. The intention influences the morality of an action. A good intention makes a morally indifferent action good and increases the worth of an action good in itself, but does not make a bad action good. A bad intention, on the other hand, whilst making an indifferent action bad and worsening an action bad in itself, ruins even a good action.

(2) In the administration of the Sacraments, the purpose of doing what the Church does (quod facit ecclesia). If the right *form and the right *matter were alone needed, apart from any intention, Sacraments might occasionally be conferred by accident, e.g. in religious drama or in demonstrations or rehearsals. The requirement of such intention was laid down by the Council of *Trent (Sess. 7, can. 11). In the 16th and 17th cents. it was held by some RC theologians, e.g. by A. *Catharinus in his De Intentione Ministri (Rome, 1552), that the required intention existed if the minister intended to perform the customary rites, though not to confer the Sacraments of the Church, i.e. if he possessed the so-called 'exterior intention'. This opinion has also been defended by some Anglican scholars. Most modern theologians, however, agree in requiring the 'interior intention' of the minister for the *validity of the Sacrament. It was esp. on the grounds of defect of intention that *Leo XIII condemned *Anglican Ordinations (q.v.) by the bull '*Apostolicae Curae' (1896). The nature of the intention required from the recipient (as opposed to the minister) varies with the particular Sacrament. In the case of children under the age of reason and mentally deficient persons, clearly no intention can be necessary for the validity of such Sacraments as they are capable of receiving. The sacramental theology of the E. Church on the whole avoids all use of the concept of intention.

(3) The special object, spiritual or material, for which a prayer of intercession is made. Thus a 'Mass intention' is the particular end to which the celebrant prays that the fruits of the sacrifice may be applied, e.g. the repose of the soul of one who has died.

(4) In the Scholastic theories of knowledge, the term was sometimes used of the objects of knowledge in so far as they are present to the knowing consciousness. Thus, as contrasted with the real tree, which is the object of external perception, there was held to be an 'intentional tree' in the mind of the knower, and the conceptual tree was thus said to have an 'intentional existence' (ens or esse intentionale). This doctrine, taken up in the 19th cent. by F. *Brentano, was developed by E. Husserl, who maintained that every mental act was directed towards some entity, and that thus intentionality was the characteristic mark of consciousness.

A. Thouvenin in DTC 7 (pt. 2; 1923), cols. 2267–80. S. da Romallo and G. Rambaldi in EC 7 (1951), cols. 66–73, s.v. 'Intenzione'. H. J. Fischer in Dict. Sp. 7 (pt. 2; 1971), cols. 1838–58, s.v., with bibl.

intercession. Petitionary prayer on behalf of others. Such prayer, implicit or explicit, forms part of almost all Christian worship, and in particular of all the traditional forms of the Liturgy of the *Eucharist. In an extended sense, acc. to Catholic theology, intercession can also be made by offering on behalf of others *meritorious deeds performed or *indulgences obtained for the sake of some specified intention.

Intercontinental Church Society or 'Intercon'. See CCCS.

interdict. An ecclesiastical penalty in the RC Church, excluding the faithful from participation in spiritual things, but without loss of the Communion of the Church. In the past interdicts have been of various kinds: the 'personal' interdict was attached only to particular persons; the 'local' forbade sacred actions in particular places; the 'general' referred to a whole district and its population; and the 'partial' visualized only certain parts or inhabitants of a district. The chief effects of the 'general' and 'local' interdicts were the cessation of the administration of the Sacraments and all solemn services within the area concerned. Exceptions were, however, made for the Last Sacraments; for clerics not personally responsible for the interdict, who were allowed to perform all religious rites privately with doors locked and in a low voice; for one Mass in the cathedral or parish church; and for certain high feasts. In the 1983 Codex Iuris Canonici there is no mention of interdicts attached to places. An interdict now resembles *excommunication, but is less severe in its consequences; it forbids liturgical activities but does not affect governmental functions or personal income. A person placed under an interdict may not celebrate or receive the Sacraments or take any ministerial part in ceremonies of public worship (can. 1332).

Cases of interdicts are attested from the 6th cent. At first they were imposed only on the churches of a single city, but from the 9th cent. they were extended to dioceses, and from the 12th to whole countries. *Alexander III placed Scotland under an interdict for the expulsion of the Bp of St Andrews, and *Innocent III used this weapon in his struggles with Philip Augustus of France (1200) and *John of England (1208). With the decline of Papal influence in the later Middle Ages the interdict lost most of its force, and in modern times it is used very rarely. Modern examples are those imposed on the Convent of Marienthal near Strasbourg in 1921 and on the parish church of Barbentane in Provence in 1929.

A. Haas, Das Interdikt nach geltendem Recht mit einem geschichtlichen Ueberblick (1923). E. J. Coran, The Interdict (Washington, 1930). W. Richter, SJ, De Origine et Evolutione Interdicti usque ad aetatem Ivonis Carnotensis et Paschalis II (Textus et Documenta in usum Exercitationum et Praelectionum Academicarum, Series Theologica 12 and 13; Pontificia Universitas *Gregoriana, 1934). A. Auer, OSB, 'Eine verschollene Denkschrift über das grosse Interdikt des 14. Jahrhunderts', Hist. J. 46 (1926), pp. 532–49; H. Maisonneuve, 'L'Interdit dans le droit classique de l'Église', Mélanges d'histoire du moyen âge dédiés à la mémoire de Louis Halphen (1951), pp. 465–81. A. Boudinhon in CE 8 (1910), pp. 73–5, s.v.; E. Jombart in DDC 5 (1953), cols. 1464–75, s.v. See also the works of C. R. Cheney and W. Imkamp cited s.v. INNOCENT III and arts. of C. R. Cheney listed under JOHN, KING OF ENGLAND.

Inter-Faith dialogue. See THEOLOGY OF RELIGIONS.

Interim of Augsburg. See AUGSBURG, INTERIM OF.

Interim rite. The Order of Holy Communion in the C of E proposed in 1931 by A. Chandler, formerly Bp. of Bloemfontein, after the rejection of the proposed BCP of 1927–8. Its distinctive feature was the placing of the Prayer of Oblation immediately after the Consecration, followed by the *Lord's Prayer, i.e. the use of the prayers of the 1662 BCP in the sequence of the 1549 Book. This order had been used by Bp. J. *Overall in the 17th cent. and recently urged by W. H. *Frere. In the post-1928 period it was thought in some circles to represent the probable direction of any future Prayer Book revision, and it was hoped that if a sufficient number of priests undertook to use it until a formal revision was authorized, it might receive episcopal approval; hence, it became known as the 'Interim' rite. In spite of the criticism of G. *Dix, it passed into frequent and widespread use. The *Alternative Services, Holy Communion Rite (Series 1), authorized a use closely akin to the Interim rite, and the ASB allows most of its elements.

J. M. M. Dalby, 'Alternative Services: The Canon of Series 1', CQR 168 (1967), pp. 442–51, with refs.

International Bible Students' Association. A corporation established by C. T. *Russell to deal with the affairs of his followers, called Bible Students, outside the USA. It is registered in London and shares responsibility for the affairs of British *Jehovah's Witnesses (q.v.) with the Watch Tower Bible and Tract Societies of New York and Pennsylvania.

interstices. The spaces of time which, by canon law, must elapse between the conferment of different *Orders in the Christian ministry upon the same person. In the RC Church there has to be an interval of at least six months between the time when a man is made *deacon and when he is made *priest. No one is to be made deacon until he has received and exercised 'for a suitable period of time' the ministries of *acolyte and *lector; at least six months is to elapse between the time when he became an acolyte (CIC (1983), cans. 1031 §1 and 1035). In the C of E the 1969 Canons reaffirm the prohibition against conferring the diaconate and priesthood upon the same man on the same day, 'unless he have a faculty from the Archbishop of Canterbury' (Can. C 3. 7) and add that a 'deacon shall not be ordained to the priesthood for at least one year, unless the bishop shall find good cause to the contrary' (Can. C 3. 8).

J. M. Gannon, The Interstices Required for the Promotion to Orders (Catholic University of America, Canon Law Studies, 196; 1944).

inthronization. See ENTHRONIZATION.

intinction. In liturgical usage, the practice of absorbing some consecrated or unconsecrated wine into the Eucharistic bread before Communion. There seem to be three distinct forms. (1) In Communion of the sick the consecrated bread was moistened with unconsecrated wine to make consumption easier (cf. *Dionysius of Alexandria in *Eusebius, HE 6. 44); this may be called 'unsacramental intinction', as Communion is given in one kind. (2) It has been believed that the consecrated Host exercises a consecratory effect on the unconsecrated wine: a procedure based on this belief, is described in the Ordines Romani*. (3) To avoid possible irreverence in the administration of the chalice to the laity, the Host may be immersed in the chalice and administered with a communion spoon (λαβίς), as is still the practice in the E. Church, or the Host may be marked with consecrated wine (by means of a Host dipped in the chalice, or with the *fistula, or with the λαβίς); this process can also be used in *reservation (q.v.). This third form of intinction was forbidden by the Council of *Braga in 675, but this decision may have been effective only locally and there is later attestation for this form, e.g. at *Cluny in the 10th cent. All forms of intinction had virtually disappeared in the W. by *c.*1200. The third form (dipping the Host into the consecrated wine) has been sporadically revived in modern times in the Anglican Communion as a method both of reservation and of giving Communion to the sick. In the 1980s, in response to fears about the spread of the virus that causes AIDS, Communion by intinction was made available in some Anglican churches and the practice was recognised in a statement on 'Hygiene and the Chalice' issued by the Abps. of *Canterbury and *York in June 1989. In the RC Church intinction was authorized in 1965 as one of the three ways of receiving Communion in both kinds; its use in some areas has increased in recent years.

W. H. Freestone, The Sacrament Reserved (Alcuin Club Collections, 21; 1917), pp. 144–75. M. Andrieu, 'Immixtio et Consecratio', Rev.S.R. 2 (1922), pp. 428–46; 3 (1923), pp. 24–61, 149–82, 281–304, 433–71; 4 (1924), pp. 65–96, 265–95, 454–84. J. M. Hanssens, SJ, 'Le Cérémonial de la communion eucharistique dans les rites orientaux', Gregorianum, 41 (1960), pp. 30–62.

Introit. In the W. Church, the opening act of worship in the Mass. Originally it consisted of a whole Psalm, sung with antiphon and Gloria Patri. It was sung as the celebrant entered the church. In the Ordo Romanus Primus* (early 8th cent.) it is prescribed that the celebrant should stop the singing when he reached the altar; by the time of (*Mabillon's) tenth Ordo (13th cent.) the practice of singing a single verse of the Psalm was established. Acc. to the present (1970) RC rite the Introit may be sung or said as the celebrant approaches the sanctuary; if it is said only the antiphon need be recited, but if sung the Psalm, or at least part of it, is required, unless some other chant is substituted. The 1549 BCP provided for an entire Psalm, with Gloria Patri, but without antiphon, to be sung as an Introit. In subsequent revisions of the English Prayer Book the Introits have been omitted, though their use has been widely revived unofficially in the C of E since the middle of the 19th cent. and the ASB specifically states that at the entry of the ministers a 'Sentence may be used; and a Hymn, a Canticle, or a Psalm may be sung'.

The Introit is thought to be of later origin than the *Gradual, from which it differs in not being an integral part of the service; it was introduced to accompany the entrance procession. In *Gallican rites the Introit was called 'Antiphona ad praelegendum'; in the *Ambrosian, 'Ingressa'; in the *Mozarabic and others, 'Officium'. The title 'antiphona ad introitum' was restored in the RC Holy Week liturgy of 1955 and remains in the 1970 Missal.

Eng. tr. of *Sarum Introits in EH, nos. 657–733. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 7 (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 1212–20. Jungmann (1958 edn.), 1, pp. 414–29; Eng. tr., 1, pp. 320–33.

Invention of the Cross. Acc. to legend the three crosses on *Cavalry (of Christ and the two robbers) were found (Lat. inventae) by St *Helena, the mother of *Constantine, that of Christ being identified by a miracle. St *Ambrose, whose 'Oratio de Obitu Theodosii' (395) is the first work to connect the event with St Helena, is followed by many other Fathers such as St John *Chrysostom and *Paulinus of Nola. St *Jerome, however, who lived quite near the place, is silent on the matter. St *Cyril of Jerusalem, without mentioning St Helena, states that the Cross was found at Jerusalem in the time of Constantine (d. 337), and it has been suggested that this occurred during the excavations for the Emperor's basilica of the *Holy Sepulchre. The relic was preserved in that church in a silver receptacle, after a large part of the wood had been distributed among the churches throughout the world. The veneration of the Cross at Jerusalem is first described in the Pilgrimage of *Egeria. The 'Doctrine of *Addai' attributes a similar miraculous finding of the Cross to Protonice, described as the wife of the future Emp. Claudius (d. AD 54), but this legend is clearly based on the story of St Helena. In the Greek Church the Feast of the Finding of the Cross was originally kept on 14 Sept., now the Feast of the *Exaltation of the Cross (q.v.), together with the consecration of Constantine's two Jerusalem basilicas. The commemoration on 3 May, which seems to go back to the apocryphal treatise 'De Inventione Crucis Dominicae', is not found in the *Gregorian Sacramentary. It was probably first observed on this day in Gaul in the 7th cent. and thence came to Rome c.800. It was suppressed in 1961.

J. Straubinger, Die Kreuzauffindungslegende: Untersuchungen über ihre altchristlichen Fassungen mit besonderer Berücksichtigung der syrischen Texte (Forschungen zur christlichen Literatur- und Dogmengeschichte, 11, Heft 3; 1912). A. Frolow, La Relique de la Vraie Croix: Recherches sur le développement d'un culte (Archives de l'Orient, 7; 1961); id., Les Reliquaires de la Vraie Croix (ibid. 8; 1965). S. Borgehammar, How the Holy Cross was Found: From Event to Medieval Legend (Stockholm, 1991). J. W. Drijvers, Helena Augusta: The Mother of Constantine the Great and the Legend of her Finding of the True Cross (Brill's Studies in Intellectual History, 27; Leiden, 1991), pp. 79–188. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 3 (pt. 2; 1914), cols. 3131–9, s.v. 'Croix (Invention et exaltation de la vraie)'. On the Feast, cf. A. Bugnini in EC 4 (1950), cols. 960–3, s.v. 'Croce, VII'. See also bibl. to EXALTATION OF THE CROSS and other works cited under HELENA, ST.

Investiture Controversy. A term which is often applied to the long series of disputes between popes and emperors from the time of the future Emp. *Henry IV's withdrawal of obedience from *Gregory VII at Worms in 1076 to the Concordat of *Worms in 1122; it is also used of contemporary Papal disputes with the Anglo-Norman and French kings. The issue of investiture in the strict sense concerned the kings' right to confer upon bishops and abbots the *ring and *crosier that were their symbols of office. In the Empire the Investiture Controversy had three stages: the conflicts between Gregory and Henry between 1076 and Henry's establishing the antipope Clement III (Wibert of Ravenna) at Rome in 1084; the resulting Wibertine schism of 1084–1100; and the conflicts and disputes thereafter up to the Concordat of 1122. It is not clear when lay investiture was formally condemned by the Papacy. There is evidence that it was prohibited by Gregory VII in 1075, but the first clear prohibition which survives dates from 1078. In any event, it became the central issue only in the third stage of the controversy. *Urban II intensified the prohibition, and the effective ending of the schism in 1100 brought it decisively to the fore.

In England the matter became acute under St *Anselm, who tried to enforce Urban's decrees at the Council of Rome (1099) excommunicating all who gave or received lay investiture. He himself refused to do homage to Henry I (1100) or to consecrate bishops who had received lay investiture. In 1105 a compromise was reached at Bec and ratified in a Council at Westminster in 1107, acc. to which Henry was allowed to receive homage for temporalities before consecration in return for a complete renunciation of lay investiture.

In France a tacit understanding was apparently reached between Philip I and the Pope in the same year (1107). A formal settlement was at last reached in the Empire by the Concordat of *Worms (1122; q.v.), the provisions of which were reasserted by the First *Lateran Council (1123; cans. 8 and 9), the Emperor relinquishing the right to invest with ring and staff but continuing to bestow the temporalities, and in Germany receiving homage before consecration and in other parts of the Empire after six months' delay. In Germany he was also allowed some influence in elections.

Although the Papacy won a complete victory over the issue of lay investiture itself, lay rulers retained a varying degree of control over elections.

For text of the official docs., see bibls. to Popes (Gregory VII, Urban II, *Paschal II, and *Callistus II), Emperor (Henry IV), and contemporary monarchs concerned. Contemporary information is pr. in MGH, Libelli de Lite Imperatorum et Pontificum Saeculis XI et XII (3 vols., 1891–7). Eng. tr. of a selection of the relevant docs. in B. Tierney, The Crisis of Church and State 1050–1300 (Englewood Cliffs, NJ, 1964), pp. 33–95. E. Bernheim, Quellen zur Geschichte des Investiturstreits (Quellensammlung zur deutschen Geschichte; 2 Hefte, 1907); F.-J. Schmale (ed.), Quellen zum Investiturstreit (Ausgewählte Quellen zur deutschen Geschichte des Mittelalters, 12A–12B; 1978–84). A. Scharnagl, Der Begriff der Investitur in den Quellen und der Literatur des Investiturstreits (Kirchenrechtliche Abhandlungen, 56; 1908). P. Schmid, Der Begriff der kanonischen Wahl in den Anfängen des Investiturstreits (1926). G. Tellenbach, Libertas, Kirche und Weltordnung im Zeitalter des Investiturstreites (Forschungen zur Kirchen- und Geistesgeschichte, 7; 1936; Eng. tr., Oxford, 1940). R. Schieffer, Die Entstehung des päpstlichen Investiturverbots für den deutschen König (Schriften der MGH, 28; 1981). U.-R. Blumenthal, Der Investiturstreit (1982; Eng. tr., Philadelphia [1988]). I. S. Robinson, The Papacy 1073–1198: Continuity and Innovation (Cambridge, 1990). D. Whitelock, M. Brett, and C. N. L. Brooke (eds.), Councils & Synods with other Documents relating to the English Church, 1: A.D. 871–1204, pt. 2: 1066–1204 (Oxford, 1981), pp. 634–94. F. Barlow, The English Church 1066–1154 (1979), pp. 268–302. Z. N. Brooke, 'Lay Investiture and its Relation to the Conflict of Empire and Papacy', Proceedings of the British Academy, 25 (1939), pp. 217–47. A. Fliche in Fliche and Martin, 8 (1946), pp. 76–390 passim. C. Morris, The Papal Monarchy: The Western Church from 1050 to 1250 (Oxford History of the Christian Church, 1989), pp. 109–33 and 154–81, with bibl. pp. 596–601. See also bibl. s.v. WORMS, CONCORDAT OF.

invincible ignorance. A term in *moral theology denoting ignorance of a kind that cannot be removed by serious moral effort. It totally excuses from sin because, being involuntary, it can involve no intention of breaking the law of God. It is to be distinguished from 'vincible ignorance', which, though partly excusing from sin, is culpable in itself, apart from the action to which it leads, as it involves neglect to acquire information necessary to avoid the transgression. The term 'invincible ignorance' is frequently used, esp. by RC theologians, with reference to those who, because of their upbringing and environment, are unable to accept the teachings of the Church.

K. E. *Kirk, Ignorance, Faith and Conformity (1925). E. Mangenot in DTC 7 (pt. 1; 1922), cols. 731–40, s.v. 'Ignorance'; L. Simeone in EC 6 (1951), cols. 1606–12, s.v. 'Ignoranza', both with bibl.

Invitatory. In liturgical usage, an invitation to pray. One of the most notable examples is that which precedes the *Lord's Prayer immediately after the *Eucharistic Prayer in the Roman Mass ('Praeceptis salutaribus moniti'), represented in many modern Anglican liturgies by such a phrase as 'As our Saviour taught us, let us pray' (ASB). The Bidding Prayers (q.v.) are a form of Invitatory. The term is, however, used particularly of the Venite (AV Ps. 95; Vulg. Ps. 94), with its corresponding *antiphon, which in the *breviary stand at the beginning of the first *Office of the day. Before 1971 it invariably came at the beginning of *Mattins, but the breviary of that year orders that the Invitatory be said before *Lauds or before the *Office of Readings if either be the first Office of the day, and it provides Pss. 23, 66, or 99 (Vulg.) as alternatives. The antiphon (itself also sometimes termed the Invitatory) varies acc. to the season and is repeated several times in the course of the Psalm. The BCP retained the Venite at Morning Prayer, with the antiphon discarded ('without any Invitatory', 1549). See also VENITE.

J. Pascher, 'Das Invitatorium', Liturgisches Jahrbuch, 10 (1960), pp. 149–58. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in CE 8 (1910), pp. 89 f.; F. *Cabrol, OSB, in DACL 7 (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 1419–22, with bibl.

invocation of the saints. See SAINTS, DEVOTION TO THE.

IODG. See CIODG.

Iona. A small island of the Inner Hebrides, called in Gaelic Í Chaluim Cille, 'Í of St *Columba', variously spelt Hi, Hy or I; the modern form of the name derives from an error in copying *Adomnán's adjectival form 'Ioua Insula' in his Life of St Columba. The island was given to Columba by the local king soon after he came to Scotland in 563 and on it he founded a *Celtic monastery, which rapidly grew in importance. From here missionaries were sent to Scotland and N. England, and numerous dependent monasteries were founded in these lands and in Ireland. The monastery of Iona became famous for its learning and artistic achievement and was a popular centre for pilgrimage. From the 790s Iona was a frequent target of Viking attacks and in the mid-9th cent. Columba's relics were moved, partly to Kells in Ireland and partly to Dunkeld in central Scotland. Iona, however, was not abandoned, and there was still a flourishing Celtic religious community there in the 12th cent. In 1203 the monastery was reorganized under the *Benedictine rule, and at the same time an *Augustinian nunnery was founded. In 1499 the abbey was acquired by the Scottish Bishops of the Isles *in commendam and the church was used by them and their Protestant successors as de facto cathedral of the diocese until it fell into ruins in the 17th cent.

Excavations have revealed the probable site of St Columba's church and monastery in the vicinity of the present church, and also the monastic vallum and other earth and timber structures. The graveyard, known as Reilig Odhráin, was the burying place of the kings of Scotland from the 9th to the 11th cent. St Oran's chapel appears to be mostly 12th cent., but parts may be earlier. St Martin's cross exhibits 8th- or 9th-cent. carving, and there are fragments of other earlier crosses, of which one (St John's) has been reconstructed. Of the 13th-cent. abbey church (later used as the cathedral) only the N. transept and N. side of the choir remain; the greater part of the old building dates from the 15th-cent. rebuilding of the abbey. The ruined abbey church was restored and reroofed between 1902 and 1910. Rebuilding of the conventual buildings was carried out by the Iona Community between 1938 and 1966. The ruins of the nunnery are also preserved.

The Iona Community was founded in 1938 by G. F. *Macleod for the general purpose of expressing in social terms the theology of the *Incarnation and using the co-operative rebuilding of the Benedictine abbey as the symbol of its purpose. It was officially recognized by the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland in 1951. Its members, laymen and ministers, were originally drawn mainly from the Church of Scotland; they lived together on Iona for three months in the year in preparation for work in Scottish industrial areas and in the mission field. Nowadays the lay members, men and women, come as much from the Anglican, RC, and Nonconformist Churches as from the Church of Scotland, and the period of residence on Iona is much more flexible. The Community lays special stress on the discipline of devotional and economic witness, on spiritual healing and political activity; it has taken a leading part in the peace movement.

E. C. Trenholme, SSJE, The Story of Iona (1909), with bibl.; T. Hannan, Iona and Some of its Satellites (1928). A. Macquarrie, Iona through the Ages (Breacachadl Castle, 1983). Argyll: An Inventory of the Monuments, 4, Iona (Royal Commission on the Ancient and Historical Monuments of Scotland, 1982).

G. [F.] Macleod, We Shall Re-Build: The Work of the Iona Community on Mainland and Island [1944]; T. R. Morton, The Iona Community: Personal Impressions of the Early Years (Edinburgh, 1977); R. Ferguson, Chasing the Wild Geese (1988).

See also bibl. to ADOMNÁN, ST, and COLUMBA, ST.

iota. The Greek letter ι (corresponding to the Hebrew yod both in sound and as being the smallest letter of the alphabet), mentioned in Christ's saying that 'one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass away from the law' (Mt. 5: 18). The English 'jot', a transliteration of this Greek word (ἰῶτα), derives its meaning from this text.

Ireland, Christianity in. Christianity began to spread to Ireland through trade with Roman Gaul and Britain in the 4th cent. Whether there were deliberate missions is unclear. The first firm date is the statement in the Chronicle of Prosper Tiro for AD 431 that Pope *Celestine I sent *Palladius 'as their first bishop to the Irish believing in Christ'. The second 5th-cent. source, the writings of St *Patrick, though informative about the character of Patrick himself, provides no clear picture of the Church in Ireland. Until the 7th cent. relations between Ireland and the other *Celtic Churches (q.v.) were close.

During the 7th cent. the Irish Church was riven by controversies between conservatives and innovators. The search for answers to the questions raised by these disputes led to the cultivation of Biblical, computistical, patristic, and legal scholarship, so that in this period Irish schools attracted students from Francia and the recently converted English. After three generations of division over the calculation of the date of *Easter, the innovators won the argument for the Roman date throughout Ireland. During the same period the advocates of institutional change gave way to conservative interests. Until the 12th cent. the Irish Church retained a structure that lacked metropolitan jurisdiction and remained unaffected by the developments which in the 9th and 10th cents. elsewhere established the boundaries between pastoral and monastic Churches.

Some of the monastic foundations of the 6th and 7th cents. grew into great self-governing communities whose numerous clergy included many for whom even *minor orders were largely notional. Places such as *Armagh, Kildare, Cork, and Clonmacnoise became towns under the jurisdiction of the head of the church, often a layman, known as the heir or *coarb of the founder, or as the erenagh (Old Irish airchindech, 'chief'; Lat. princeps). Many such churches and their estates were controlled by ecclesiastical dynasties, who acted like secular magnates, and in some cases these were cadet branches of the secular ruling dynasties. These churches, which in the 7th cent. had supported a flourishing Latin culture, later cultivated a unique learned literature in the vernacular and were patrons of art in manuscript, stone, and metal. Irish scholars also achieved fame in the Carolingian empire, among them *Sedulius Scottus and Iohannes Scottus *Erigena, but there was no corresponding flow of ideas from the Continent into Ireland.

During the 9th and 10th cents. major Churches, as centres of wealth and population, were natural targets for Viking attacks but they suffered no permanent damage. The establishment of Viking towns, however, particularly *Dublin, opened an avenue for change. In the 11th cent. the Norse settlers became Christian, and their Churches sought links with the English Church. This drew to Ireland the attention of the reforming Abps. of *Canterbury, *Lanfranc and *Anselm, and there were native reformers such as Gilbert, Bp. of Limerick 1106–40, and St *Malachy. The main problems were that the ecclesiastical rulers had too much power, bishops too little, and the Church was not organized in territorial dioceses. Three national synods, at Cashel (1101), Rath Breasail (1111), and Kells-Mellifont (1152), established diocesan organization and absorbed Dublin into a national Church under the primacy of Armagh. Another aspect of reform was enthusiasm for the new religious orders; the *Cistercians in particular flourished in 12th-cent. Ireland. Many of the older churches had lost status, and though many adopted the Rule of St *Augustine, the 13th cent. saw a rapid decline, as hereditary coarbs and erenaghs now lived off estates that had once supported great churches. The new dioceses, inadequately endowed with assets taken from other churches, fared little better. The once great institutions of Clonmacnoise and Glendalough were too poor to survive as episcopal sees. The reforms were a disaster for Irish culture; nothing replaced the schools and learned cadres, no university emerged (though there was an attempt to establish one at Armagh), and learning became the preserve of secular families until the 17th cent. The reformers' moral programme, the imposition of clerical *celibacy and the enforcement of canonical marriage, largely failed.

The Anglo-Norman invasion of 1169, and the colonial occupation of much of eastern Ireland, gave rise to a divided Church. The second synod of Cashel (1172) marked the beginning of this division. The manorial settlement of the English colony produced arrangements for the support of a parish clergy different from those that continued to exist in Gaelic Ireland, and factional considerations influenced episcopal nominations. These divisions were deepened by the decline in royal power in Ireland in the 14th cent. In the 15th cent. the secular clergy were lax, secular control of churches was far advanced, pastoral care was poor, and the Cistercians were so reduced that only two houses observed the rule and wore the habit. An observer in 1515 noted that 'only the poor friars beggars'—mostly *Observants—preached the word of God.

Under *Henry VIII the majority of the clergy and laity in contact with the government gave nominal assent to the Irish Act of Supremacy 1537 and in 1560 the Church of Ireland was established by the Irish Parliament. The *Reformation, however, at first made little headway outside areas amenable to control from Dublin or recently settled from England or Scotland. As immigration increased in the early 17th cent., so did the strength of Protestantism, aided by the influx of English and Scottish clergy, the establishment in 1592 of *Trinity College, Dublin, and the promulgation in the first Irish Convocation of the Calvinist *Irish Articles of 1615. The moving spirit behind the Articles, J. *Ussher, successively Bp. of Meath and Abp. of Armagh, also elaborated a view of an independent Irish Church only lately corrupted by popery. At the same time, a revitalized Catholicism strengthened its hold on the indigenous population. By the later 16th cent. the religious orders had been suppressed, many dioceses were without bishops, or the bishops lived in exile. But colleges such as those in Paris (founded in 1578), Salamanca (1592), Bordeaux (1603), Louvain (1607), Prague (1620), and Rome (1625) trained novices from Ireland for service at home, while new orders, such as the *Jesuits, as well as the older orders (including the *Franciscans and *Dominicans) recruited from the Irish and were active among them. In 1618 a resident RC hierarchy again became a possibility, replacing for a time the *vicars apostolic who had been appointed since 1591. Thereafter, despite continuing dissensions between regular and secular clergy, between those of Gaelic and English origin, and over attitudes to the English sovereign, Catholicism has remained the religion of the majority in Ireland, increasingly linked with ethnicity and cultural identity.

The apparent links between Catholicism and rebellion in Ireland, demonstrated in the uprising of 1641, led to measures specifically directed against RCs. In 1653 the English law of 1585 was introduced in order to expel bishops and clergy; in 1657 the authority of the Pope was to be abjured. The Catholic revival under *James II, and his subsequent defeat in Ireland, prompted the renewal and extension of discriminatory measures, which after 1704 hit Protestant dissenters as well as RCs, and tried to confine political rights, office and ownership of land to members of the Church of Ireland. Except in the 1650s, 1673–4, and during the *Popish Plot and Jacobite panics, these inhibitions were enforced only intermittently; they caused irritation and inconvenience but neither prevented the practice nor arrested the growth of Catholicism. In 1731 there were perhaps 1,445 RC clergy in the country. After 1760 a Catholic Committee pressed for the removal of disabilities; some of these disappeared with the *Catholic Relief Acts in 1782, 1792, and 1793, but others survived until Catholic Emancipation in 1829.

Scottish settlers in east Ulster had spread *Presbyterianism during the 17th cent., and in 1690 they organized themselves under the Synod of Ulster as a Protestant Church alternative to the established Church of Ireland. In 1726 those who scrupled over subscription to the *Westminster Confession seceded into the Synod of Antrim and later split into *Burghers and *Anti-Burghers. The Presbyterians, like RCs, were subject to legal restrictions and could make common cause with the latter against the privileges of the Church of Ireland. Protestantism was further fragmented by groups of English Presbyterians, *Independents, *Baptists, and *Quakers, arriving from England during the 1650s and refusing to submit to the 1666 Act of Uniformity. Refugees from 17th-cent. France and in 1709 from the Rhineland introduced small but ethnically distinct communities of *Huguenots and Palatines, some of whom immediately conformed to the Church of Ireland.

Irish Protestants disagreed about whether evangelization should precede or follow conquest and anglicization. However, despite doubts as to whether the native Irish would respond to evangelism, by 1685 the Bible and the BCP were published in Irish. In the 18th cent. the Church of Ireland, with its 400–600 clergy, felt equally threatened by the RC majority and the Protestant dissenters concentrated mainly in Ulster and in the towns; little effort was made to convert either. Its leaders, aware that its position depended on legal privileges, formulated and defended the concept of a Protestant ascendency over property and power just as it was weakened in the 1780s.

The end of the 18th cent. was overshadowed by the rebellion of 1798, which deepened religious distrust. The Act of Union of 1800 confirmed the position of the Church of Ireland as the established Church and an integral part of the united Church of England and Ireland. It disappointed RCs because it did not bring Catholic Emancipation which remained a divisive issue until D. *O'Connell forced the government to concede it in 1829. O'Connell's success in mobilizing the RC masses was perceived as a threat by Protestants, both Anglicans and Dissenters, who closed ranks and supported the Union as a guarantee against RC supremacy. During the Great Famine of 1845–49, however, Protestant and RC clergy co-operated in providing relief. Emigration and other factors reduced the RC population from about 7 million in 1845 to 3.75 million in 1911, but Irish RC communities developed abroad, particularly in the *United States of America, and maintained links with home. Reforming bishops, such as James Warren Doyle (1786–1834, Bp. of Kildare and Leighlin from 1819) and Daniel Murray (1768–1852, Abp. of Dublin from 1823), revitalized Catholicism, the national Synod of Thurles in 1850 consolidated earlier reforms, and Paul Cullen (1803–78, Abp. of Dublin from 1850 and Cardinal from 1866) built a vigorous *Ultramontane Church on this basis. The increase in the number of priests and religious (both men and women), together with the sharp drop in population, favoured the emergence of a more disciplined and organized Church. Catherine Elizabeth McAuley (1778–1841) and Edmund Ignatius Rice (1762–1844) were among a number of charismatic people to found religious orders, which, together with religious orders from the Continent, provided RC schools, orphanages, hospitals, charitable works, and home missions. The foreign missionary enterprise of the religious orders and missionary societies constituted one of the most remarkable achievements of Irish RCs in the 19th and 20th cents.

The *Evangelical movement at the beginning of the 19th cent. renewed the spiritual life of the Church of Ireland and launched a campaign to convert RCs. Some success was achieved in the 1840s and 1850s but the 1861 census showed the relative numerical strength of the Churches almost unchanged. In 1869 W. E. *Gladstone's government disestablished the Church of Ireland, an action foreshadowed by the Church Temporalities Act 1833 which had reduced the number of Irish sees to ten. The General Synod then became the governing body of the Church. The BCP was revised in 1878, and again in 1924–6, and an Alternative Prayer Book was authorized in 1984.

The Presbyterian Church became theologically more conservative under the leadership of Henry Cooke (1788–1868) and after the formation of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in 1840. Evangelicalism was strong within the Church as evidenced by the revival of 1859, known as 'the year of grace'. Its vigorous missionary thrust was not confined to Ireland but extended to *India and *China. Presbyterians worked with RCs for tenant rights, but on religious, economic, and political grounds remained, like Protestants generally, attached to the Union.

Despite examples of pastoral care and intellectual vitality in all denominations, the intractable problem of integrating popular beliefs and practices into organized religion was not undertaken systematically until the devotional 'revolution' of the latter part of the 19th cent. With the decline of Irish language and culture some native practices disappeared within Catholicism to be replaced by modern Continental devotions.

After the partition of Ireland in 1922, the legislation of the Free State (later the Republic) reflected the ethos of the RC majority but it avoided discrimination against its small Protestant minority. The Constitution of 1938 was specifically Christian. While (in an article removed in 1972) it recognized the special position of the RC Church as guardian of the faith of the majority, it accorded full recognition to the Protestant Churches and the Jewish community. In Northern Ireland the RCs, who composed over a third of the population, were never reconciled to the partition and their discontent at discrimination was one of the causes of the conflict that erupted in 1968/9. Despite underlying distrust between the Churches, the violence and length of that conflict pushed them to co-operate in seeking a solution. The Second *Vatican Council (1962–5) promoted a more open and *ecumenical spirit among RCs and in 1970 the Irish School of Ecumenics was founded. Regular meetings take place between Church leaders and theologians at a national and local level. Reaction against ecumenism has been a potent factor in the strength of the Free Presbyterian Church, founded by the Revd Ian Paisley in 1951.

According to the 1991 censuses, 91.6 per cent of the population in the Republic professed to be RC, 2.34 per cent Church of Ireland, and 0.37 per cent Presbyterian; in Northern Ireland 38.4 per cent to be RC, 21.4 per cent Presbyterian, and 17.7 per cent Church of Ireland, but it has been widely suggested that these figures do not give a true picture. All Churches have suffered lapses in membership in recent years and are being challenged by secularizing influences. In the Republic referenda on abortion and *divorce in 1983 and 1986 provoked public controversy. However, Christianity is still a vital force in Ireland which has the highest percentage of practising Christians in the European community.

J. F. Kenney, The Sources for the Early History of Ireland, 1: Ecclesiastical (Records of Civilization [11]; New York, 1929; repr. 1966). K. [W.] Hughes, The Church in Early Irish Society (1966); P. J. Corish (ed.), A History of Irish Catholicism, 1, 3: id., The Christian Mission (Dublin, 1972); R. Sharpe, 'Some problems concerning the organization of the Church in early medieval Ireland', Peritia, 3 (1984), pp. 230–70; H. Löwe (ed.), Die Iren und Europa im früheren Mittelalter (Veröffentlichungen des Europa Zentrums Tübingen, Kulturwissenschaftliche Reihe, 2 vols., Stuttgart, 1982); P. Ní Chatháin and M. Richter (eds.), Irland und Europa: Die Kirche im Frühmittelalter (ibid., 1984); idd. (eds.), Irland und die Christenheit: Bibelstudien und Mission (ibid., 1987); M. Sheehy, When the Normans came to Ireland (Cork, 1975); A. O. Gwynn, SJ, The Irish Church in the Eleventh and Twelfth Centuries, ed. G. O'Brien (Dublin [1992]); J. A. Watt, The Church and Two Nations in Medieval Ireland (Cambridge Studies in Medieval Life and Thought, 3rd ser. 3; 1970); id., The Church in Medieval Ireland (Dublin, 1972); A. Cosgrove (ed.), Medieval Ireland 1169–1534 (A New History of Ireland under the Auspices of the Royal Irish Academy, 2; Oxford, 1987); P. J. Corish (ed.), A History of Irish Catholicism, 2, 3–4: G. [J.] Hand, The Church in the English Lordship 1216–1307, and A. [O]. Gwynn, SJ, Anglo-Irish Church Life: Fourteenth and Fifteenth Centuries (Dublin, 1968), and 2, 5: C. Mooney, OFM, The Church in Gaelic Ireland: Thirteenth to Fifteenth Centuries (ibid., 1969).

T. W. Moody and others (eds.), Early Modern Ireland 1534–1691 (A New History of Ireland, op. cit., 3; Oxford, 1976); B. Bradshaw, The Dissolution of the Religious Orders in Ireland under Henry VIII (Cambridge, 1974); R. D. Edwards, Church and State in Tudor Ireland: A History of the Penal Laws against Irish Catholics 1534–1603 (1935); T. S. Flynn, OP, The Irish Dominicans 1536–1641 (Dublin [1993]); L. McRedmond, To the Greater Glory: A History of the Irish Jesuits (ibid., 1991). A. Ford, The Protestant Reformation in Ireland, 1590–1641 (Studien zur interkulturellen Geschichte des Christentums, 34; Frankfurt am Main [1985]). B. Mac Cuarta, SJ (ed.), Ulster 1641: Aspects of the Rising (Belfast, 1993). T. C. Barnard, Cromwellian Ireland: English Government and Reform in Ireland 1649–1660 (Oxford Historical Monographs, 1975), pp. 90–182. R. B. Knox, James Ussher, Archbishop of Armagh (Cardiff, 1967). T. W. Moody and W. E. Vaughan (eds.), Eighteenth-Century Ireland (A New History of Ireland, op. cit. 4; 1986). P. Kilroy, Protestant dissent and controversy in Ireland 1660–1714 (Cork, 1994); S. J. Connolly, Religion, Law and Power: The Making of Protestant Ireland 1660–1760 (Oxford, 1992). N. Williams, I bPrionta i Leabhar: Na Protastúin agus Prós na Gaeilge 1567–1724 (Dublin, 1986). T. P. Power and K. Whelan (eds.), Endurance and Emergence: Catholics in Ireland in the Eighteenth Century (Dublin [1990]). T. Bartlett, The Fall and Rise of the Irish Nation: The Catholic Question 1690–1830 (ibid. [1992]). C. D. A. Leighton, Catholicism in a Protestant Kingdom: A Study of the Irish Ancien Régime (1994). D. Keogh, The French Disease: The Catholic Church and Irish Radicalism, 1790–1800 (Dublin [1993]). S. J. Connolly, Priests and People in Pre-Famine Ireland 1780–1845 (ibid., 1982). I. d'Alton, Protestant Society and Politics in Cork 1812–1824 (Cork, 1980). D. A. Kerr, Peel, Priests, and Politics: Sir Robert Peel's Administration and the Roman Catholic Church in Ireland, 1841–1846 (Oxford Historical Monographs, 1982); id., 'A Nation of Beggars'? Priests, People and Politics in Famine Ireland (Oxford, 1994). E. Larkin, The Making of the Roman Catholic Church in Ireland, 1850–1860 (Chapel Hill, NC [1980]); id., The Consolidation of the Roman Catholic Church in Ireland, 1860–1870 (Dublin [1987]); id., 'The Devotional Revolution in Ireland, 1850–75', American Historical Review, 77 (1972), pp. 625–52; id., The Roman Catholic Church and the Creation of the Modern Irish State 1878–1886 (Memoirs of the American Philosophical Society, 108; Philadelphia, 1975). D. Keogh, The Vatican, the Bishops, and Irish Politics 1918–1939 (Cambridge, 1986). J. H. Whyte, Church and State in Modern Ireland [from 1923] (Dublin, 1971; 2nd edn., 1980). M. Harris, The Catholic Church and the Foundation of the Northern Irish State (Cork, 1993); O. P. Rafferty, SJ, Northern Catholicism (Dublin, 1994). J. Fulton, The Tragedy of Belief: Division, Politics, and Religion in Ireland (Oxford, 1991). J. S. Reid, History of the Presbyterian Church in Ireland (3 vols., Edinburgh, 1834–53; rev. D. W. Killen, 3 vols., Belfast, 1867); R. F. G. Holmes, Our Irish Presbyterian Heritage (Belfast, 1985). J. I. McGuire and others (eds.), Towards a new history of the Church of Ireland (Dublin, 1994). A. Ford and others (eds.), As by Law Established: The Church of Ireland since the Reformation (ibid., 1995). R. B. McDowell, The Church of Ireland 1869–1969 (1975). J. Murray and others, 'The Church of Ireland: a critical bibliography, 1536–1992', Irish Historical Studies, 28 (1993), pp. 345–84. W. J. Sheils and D. Wood (eds.), The Churches, Ireland and the Irish: Papers read at the 1987 Summer Meeting and the 1988 Winter Meeting of the Ecclesiastical History Society (Studies in Church History, 25; 1989).

Ireland, John (1761–1842), Dean of *Westminster. Having entered Oriel College, Oxford, as a Bible clerk in 1779, he became Vicar of Croydon in 1793, and Dean of Westminster in 1816. He gave large sums to the University of Oxford for classical scholarships, and in his will he founded the chair of Exegesis of Holy Scripture (since 1947 confined to the NT) which goes by his name, and some exhibitions at Oriel College.

E. *Hawkins, An Inaugural Lecture upon the Foundation of Dean Ireland's Professorship, read before the University of Oxford, Nov. 2, 1847, with brief notices of the Founder (1848), esp. pp. 9–12, and Appendix, pp. 45–59, with refs. to obituary notices.

Irenaeus, St (*c.*130–*c.*200), Bp. of Lyons. Relatively little is known of his life, but as he heard *Polycarp as a boy, it is generally supposed that he was a native of Smyrna. He studied at *Rome, and later became a presbyter of Lyons, in which capacity he was commissioned to take letters to Pope Eleutherius at Rome, requesting toleration for the *Montanists of Asia Minor. There is no evidence, however, to show that Irenaeus himself sympathized with the sect. During his absence fierce persecution took place at Lyons (*c.*177), in which *Pothinus, the bishop, was among the martyrs; and on his return (*c.*178) Irenaeus succeeded to the see. In 190 he wrote to Pope *Victor on behalf of the *Quartodecimans of Asia Minor. Whether or not he met a martyr's death is uncertain. Feast day in the W., 28 June; in the E., 23 Aug.

Both in his life and in his thought, Irenaeus forms a link between the E. and W. His theological writing grew out of his work as a missionary and pastoral bishop in an era when *Gnosticism was a serious threat to the Church. His principal treatise, the 'Adversus omnes Haereses' (Ἔλεγχος καὶ Ἀνατροπὴ τῆς Ψευδωνύμου Γνώσεως), is a detailed attack on Gnosticism, and esp. on the system of *Valentinus. Part of it is preserved in Greek, but the whole text survives in a literal Latin version and sections of it are also extant in *Syriac and *Armenian. As sources Irenaeus appears to have drawn upon *Justin and *Theophilus of Antioch, and he was himself drawn upon regularly by subsequent heresiologists. In modern times a second work, 'The Demonstration of the Apostolic Preaching' (Εἰς Ἐπίδειξιν τοῦ Ἀποστολικοῦ Κηρύγματος), has been discovered in an Armenian translation. It is an apologetic work, notable for its lavish use of the OT.

Irenaeus is the first great Catholic theologian. Unlike *Clement of Alexandria, he opposed Gnosticism, not by setting up a rival Christian Gnosis, but by emphasizing the traditional elements in the Church, esp. the Episcopate, Scripture (in which he included not only the OT but also most of the Books now known as the NT), and the religious and theological tradition. His opposition to Gnosticism also led to an emphasis on Christian Monotheism, on the unity of Father and Son in the work of Revelation and Redemption, and on the reality of the Incarnation of Christ. He developed a doctrine of the 'recapitulation' (ἀνακεφαλαίωσις; Lat. recapitulatio), or summary, of human evolution in the Incarnate Christ, and thereby gave a positive value of its own to the manhood of Christ. He also laid great stress on the co-ordinate authority of all four Gospels. See also PFAFF FRAGMENTS.

The Adv. Haer. was ed. by *Erasmus (Basle, 1526). Later edns. by A. Stieren (Leipzig, 1848–53) and W. W. Harvey (Cambridge, 1857). Crit. text by A. Rousseau, OSB, and L. Doutreleau, SJ, and others (SC 100, 152 f., 210 f., 263 f., and 293 f.; 1965–82). The 'Demonstration' was first pub. by K. Ter-Mekerttschian and E. Ter-Minassiantz (TU 31, Heft 1; 1907); also, with Eng. tr. by K. Ter-Mekerttschian and S. G. Wilson in PO 12 (1919), pp. 653–731. Further Armenian frags. of the Adv. Haer. and the 'Demonstration', ed. C. Renoux, with Lat. tr., ibid. 39 (1978–9), pp. 1–164. Eng. tr. of Adv. Haer. by J. *Keble in LF (posthumous, 1872) and by A. Roberts and W. H. Rambaut in ANCL (2 vols., 1868–9); of chief passages in Adv. Haer. by F. R. M. Hitchcock in SPCK 'Early Christian Classics' (2 vols., 1916); of 'Demonstration' by J. A. *Robinson, with good notes, in SPCK 'Translations of Christian Literature' (1920) and J. P. Smith (ACW 16; 1953).

There is an immense modern lit. Studies in Eng. incl. F. R. M. Hitchcock, Irenaeus of Lugdunum (1914); J. Lawson, The Biblical Theology of St Irenaeus (1948); and D. Minns, OP, Irenaeus (1994; introductory). On Irenaeus' biblical text, W. *Sanday and C. H. *Turner, Novum Testamentum Sancti Irenaei (Oxford, 1923). On the Lat. vers. of Adv. Haer., S. Lundström, Studien zur lateinischen Irenäusübersetzung (Lund, 1943); id., Neue Studien zur lateinischen Irenäusübersetzung (ibid., 1948). F.-M.-M. Sagnard, OP, La Gnose valentinienne et le témoignage de Saint Irénée (1947). G. Wingren, Människan och Inkarnationen enligt Irenaeus (Lund, 1947; Eng. tr., Man and the Incarnation, 1959). A. Houssiau, La Christologie de Saint Irénée (Louvain, 1955). A. Benoit, Saint Irénée: Introduction à l'étude de sa théologie (1960). N. Brox, Offenbarung, Gnosis und gnostischer Mythos bei Irenäus von Lyon (Salzburger Patristische Studien, 1; 1966). A. Orbe, SJ, Antropología de San Ireneo (Biblioteca de Autores Cristianos, 1969); id., Parábolas evangélicas en San Ireneo (2 vols., ibid., 1972); id., Teología de San Ireneo: Comentario al Libro V del 'Adversus haereses' (3 vols., ibid., 1985–88); id., Espiritualidad de San Ireneo (Analecta Gregoriana, 256; 1989). R. Tremblay, La Manifestation et la Vision de Dieu selon saint Irénée de Lyon (Münsterische Beiträge zur Theologie, 41; 1978). Y. de Andia, Homo vivens: Incorruptibilité et divinisation de l'homme chez Irénée de Lyon (Études Augustiniennes, 1986). J. Fantino, Le théologie d'Irénée: Lecture des Écritures en response à l'exégèse gnostique. Un approche trinitaire (1994). CPG 1 (1983), pp. 110–18 (nos. 1306–21), incl. details of various frags. J. Quasten, Patrology, 1 (Utrecht, 1950), pp. 287–313; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 110–17 and 570–72. F. Vernet in DTC 7 (1923), cols. 2394–533, s.v., with full bibls. to date (esp. cols. 2407–10); L. Doutreleau, SJ, and L. Regnault, OSB, in Dict. Sp. 7 (pt. 2; 1971), cols. 1923–69, s.v.; A. Orbe in DPAC 2 (1984), cols. 1804–16; Eng. tr., Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 1 (1992), pp. 413–6, s.v.

Irish Articles. The 104 articles of faith adopted by the Irish Episcopal Church in 1615 at its first Convocation. More definitely *Calvinistic than the *Thirty-Nine Articles of the C of E (1562), which had never been accepted in Ireland, they were apparently compiled by J. *Ussher, then head of the faculty of theology at Dublin. They teach absolute predestination and perseverance, affirm that the Pope is antichrist, and make no mention of the threefold ministry or of the necessity of Episcopal Ordination. They remained the official statement of faith in the Church of Ireland down to 1635, when at a Convocation held under Strafford and his chaplain, J. *Bramhall, the Anglican Thirty-Nine Articles were adopted, apparently with the intention that they should replace those of 1615. Ussher, however, continued for a time to require subscription to both series, though ultimately the earlier ones became a dead letter. They seem to have exercised considerable influence on the text of the *Westminster Confession.

The text is in P. *Schaff, The Creeds of Christendom, 3 (1877), pp. 526–44. Cf. also ibid. 1, § 85, pp. 662–5.

irmos. See HEIRMOS.

Iron Crown, of Lombardy. A crown made for Theodelinda, widow of Authoris, King of Lombardy, and presented in 594 to the Duke of Turin, from whom it passed eventually to the recent royal house of Italy. It is of gold with an inner circlet of iron which is said to have been made from a nail of the true Cross. It is preserved in the cathedral church of Monza.

Irving, Edward (1792–1834), Scottish minister associated with the origins of the '*Catholic Apostolic Church' (q.v.). He was a native of Annan, Dumfriesshire, and educated at Edinburgh University. He was appointed master of a school at Haddington in 1810 and at Kirkcaldy in 1812. Having been licensed to preach in the Church of Scotland in 1815, in 1819 he became the assistant of T. *Chalmers at Glasgow, where he had a great influence among the poorer population. In 1822 he was appointed minister of the Caledonian chapel in Hatton Garden, London, where his magnetic personality soon drew large congregations. But his merciless criticism of society and personalities later lost its attraction, and Irving then turned to *millenarian ideas. He was greatly impressed by a work of the Spanish *Jesuit, Lacunza (1816), which he translated under the title The Coming of the Messiah in Glory and Majesty (1827). This work brought Irving into contact with the circle of H. *Drummond, who was devoted to eschatological speculations. In 1828 he lectured at Edinburgh on the Book of Revelation. In 1830 he was excommunicated by the London presbytery for his tract on The Orthodox and Catholic Doctrine of our Lord's Human Nature, in which he declared Christ's human nature to be sinful; but he rejected their decision and continued to minister. In 1831 disturbances of a revivalist character began to occur at the services in his church at Regent Square, from which he was finally removed in 1832. His followers now constituted themselves the 'Catholic Apostolic Church'. In 1833 he was expelled from the ministry of the Church of Scotland. After travelling for some time in Dumfriesshire he returned to London, but, surprisingly, was accorded only an inferior rank in the sect which he had helped to found, and he died soon afterwards.

His Collected Writings appeared in 5 vols. in 1864–5. Life by M. O. W. Oliphant (2 vols., 1862). A. L. Drummond, Edward Irving and his Circle (1938). C. G. Strachan, The Pentecostal Theology of Edward Irving (1973). A. Dallimore, The Life of Edward Irving, Fore-runner of the Charismatic Movement (Edinburgh and Carlisle, Pa., 1983). See also works cited under CATHOLIC APOSTOLIC CHURCH.

Isaac, OT *Patriarch. His story is told in Gen. 21–35. The divinely promised son of *Abraham and Sarah after a long childless marriage, he became the heir of the covenanted blessings (cf. Gen. 17: 19 and 21). To try Abraham's faith Yahweh demanded Isaac in sacrifice, but, satisfied with Abraham's perfect obedience, accepted at the last moment a ram instead (Gen. 22). After Sarah's death, Abraham procured a wife for Isaac from his own family, Rebecca, who became the mother of Esau and *Jacob (Gen. 24 and 25). On the likely dating of these traditions, see ABRAHAM.

In the NT Isaac is referred to in Gal. 4: 22–31, prefiguring Christians as children of promise. He is perhaps alluded to as a type of Christ in Rom. 8: 32. In Heb. the sacrifice of Isaac is seen as an example of faith and a type of the death and resurrection of Christ (11: 17–19). This theme was developed in the Fathers, who regard his intended sacrifice as a type of that of *Golgotha. Thus *Tertullian sees in Isaac carrying the wood the type of Christ carrying His Cross, and both St *Cyril of Alexandria and St *Augustine elaborate the similarities of the two sacrifices. In the Middle Ages the sacrifice of Isaac as a prefiguration of the Passion was a favourite topic of theologians. The important part which this conception has played in Christian art is shown by the paintings in the *catacombs, where the representation of the scene is used as a figure of the Eucharist.

See comm. on Gen., cited s.v. H. J. Schoeps, 'The Sacrifice of Isaac in Paul's Theology', Journal of Biblical Literature, 65 (1946), pp. 385–92; J. *Daniélou, SJ, 'La Typologie d'Isaac dans le christianisme primitif', Biblica, 28 (1947), pp. 363–93; D. Lerch, Isaaks Opferung christlich gedeutet (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, 12; 1950). N. A. Dahl, 'The Atonement—An Adequate Reward for the Akedah? (Ro 8: 32)', in E. E. Ellis and M. Wilcox (eds.), Neotestamentica et Semitica: Studies in Honour of Matthew Black (Edinburgh, 1969), pp. 15–29. J. Gribomont, OSB, in Dict. Sp. 7 (pt. 2; 1971), cols. 1987–2005; R. Martin-Achard in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 3 (1992), pp. 461–70, both s.v.

Isaac the Great, St (*c.*350–438), 10th *Catholicos of the *Armenian Church. He was the son of St *Nerses and a lineal descendant of St *Gregory the Illuminator. After studying at *Constantinople, he married, and then, after the early death of his wife, became a monk. He was appointed Catholicos of Armenia *c.*389. By gaining from Constantinople the recognition of the metropolitical rights of the Armenian Church, he terminated its long dependence on Caesarea in Cappadocia. He was also very active in fostering a national Armenian literature, translating in conjunction with St *Mesrob much of the Bible and many other Greek works. Tradition also ascribes to him the authorship of many Armenian hymns, as well as (apparently erroneously) the Armenian Liturgy. In 425 he was deposed from his office by the Persians, but allowed later, in view of strong popular support, to regain his see. Feast days ('St Sahak') in the Armenian Church, 9 Sept. and 25 Nov.

Three of Isaac's letters are preserved by *Moses of Chorene in his 'History of Armenia Major' (3. 57); further letters ed. J. Izmiveantz in his 'Book of Letters' (Tiflis, 1901; in Armenian). K. Sarkissian, The Council of Chalcedon and the Armenian Church (1965), pp. 88–147 passim. Bardenhewer, 5, pp. 195–7; Altaner and Stuiber (1966), pp. 350 f. S. Vailhé in CE 8 (1910), pp. 175 f., s.v.; I. Ortiz de Urbina, SJ, in EC 10 (1953), col. 1616, s.v. 'Sahak (Isaac) I'; A. Renoux, OSB, in Dict. Sp. 7 (pt. 2; 1971), cols. 2007–10, s.v. 'Isaac (3) le Grand'.

Isaac of Nineveh (d. *c.*700), also 'Isaac the Syrian', monastic writer. Little is known of his life: he came originally from Qatar, where he became a monk; *c.*676, in the monastery of Beth 'Abe (in Kurdistan) he was made Bp. of Nineveh by the *Catholicos of the *Church of the East, but shortly afterwards he retired from his see to live a life of solitude in Khuzistan, moving in old age to the monastery of Rabban Shabur. His writings, on ascetic subjects, belong to the end of his life; they were translated at an early date into Greek, Arabic, Georgian, and Ethiopic. A selection of 25 homilies was translated into Latin in the 15th cent. The Greek version of the 'First Part' of his collected writings (82 homilies), the work of two monks of St Saba, Patrikios and Abramios, was first published by Nicephorus Theotokes (Leipzig, 1770) under the title Τοῦ ὁσίου πατρὸς ἡμῶν Ἰσαὰκ . . . τὰ εὑρεθέντα ἀσκητικά (this edition includes some texts by two other Syriac authors, *Philoxenus and John of Dalyatha, wrongly attributed to Isaac). Extracts are included in the Russian Philocalia. In modern times Isaac continues to exert an influence on both *Athonite and *Coptic monasticism. Feast day in the E., 28 Jan.

Isaac of Nineveh is to be distinguished from Isaac the Great (previous entry) and from three other Syriac writers of the 5th/6th cent. who often go under the name of Isaac of Antioch, extracts of whose writings have been published by G. Bickell (2 vols., 1873–7) and P. Bedjan (1903).

The whole of the 'First Part' of Isaac's collected works was ed. by P. Bedjan, De Perfectione Religiosa (Paris, 1909). Eng. tr. by A. J. Wensinck (Amsterdam, 1923). Eng. tr. of the Gk. version, with many refs. to the Syriac, by 'The Holy Transfiguration Monastery' [D. Miller], The Ascetical Homilies of Saint Isaac the Syrian (1984). Lat. versions in J. P. Migne, PG 86 (1). 811–86 ('De Contemptu Mundi'). A complete MS of the 'Second Part' was discovered in the Bodleian Library by S. P. Brock in 1983; chapters 4–41, ed., with Eng. tr., by id. (CSCO 554–5, Scriptores Syri, 224–5; 1995); Ital. tr. of the rest by P. Bettiolo (1985; 2nd edn., 1990). I. B. Chabot, De S. Isaaci Ninivitae Vita, Scriptis et Doctrina (Paris, 1892). A. *Baumstark, Geschichte der syrischen Literatur (1922), pp. 223–5. E. Khalifé-Hachem in Dict. Sp. 7 (pt. 2; 1971), cols. 2041–54, s.v. (On the other Syriac Isaacs, R. Graffin, SJ, ibid., cols. 2010 f., s.v. 'Isaac d'Amid et Isaac d'Antioche'.)

Isaac of Stella (*c.*1100–*c.*1178). *Cistercian monk. Little is known for certain about his life. He was of English origin and by 1147 was abbot of Stella (some 12 miles NE of Poitiers), which had been founded in 1124 and recently become Cistercian. It seems likely that he studied in France before joining the Cistercians. Prob. in 1167, and perhaps because of his support for Thomas *Becket, who had fallen out of favour with the Cistercian authorities, Isaac left Stella to set up a monastery (Notre Dame des Châteliers) on the Île de Ré, a few miles off the French coast near La Rochelle. Fifty-five of his sermons survive and two treatises in the form of letters: De Anima, addressed to Alcher of *Clairvaux, and De Officio Missae, addressed to John, Bp. of Poitiers. He stands somewhat apart from other Cistercians of the 12th cent. in his positive attitude to the *Platonic tradition. Influenced by the so-called 'School of *Chartres' and the *Victorines, and still more deeply by St *Augustine, he developed, on the basis of his analysis of the human soul, an understanding of the soul's ascent to God whereby, through a purification of love, the intelligentia or mens attains union with God in an act of intuitive knowledge.

Works repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 194. 1689–896. Crit. edn. of his Sermons, with Fr. tr., by A. Hoste, OSB, and others (SC 130, 207, and 339; 1967–87). L. Bouyer [Cong. Orat.], La Spiritualité de Cîteaux (1955), pp. 195–232 (Eng. tr., 1958, pp. 161–89). B. McGinn, The Golden Chain: A Study in the Theological Anthropology of Isaac of Stella (Cistercian Studies Series, 15; Washington, DC, 1972). G. Raciti, OCR, in Dict. Sp. 7 (pt. 2; 1971), cols. 2011–38, s.v. 'Isaac de l'Étoile'.

Isabella I of Castile (1451–1504), 'the Catholic', Queen of Castile, León, and Aragon. The daughter of John II, King of Castile and León, in 1469 she married *Ferdinand, heir to the Crown of Aragon. On the death of Henry IV, her half-brother, in 1474, she successfully challenged the claims of Juana, Henry's daughter, to the throne. With Ferdinand she fought Portuguese support for Juana, who was backed by many important noble families in Extremadura and Andalusia. Once established on the throne, she and her husband initiated a series of reforms which strengthened royal jurisdiction, reorganized governmental and ecclesiastical institutions, gaining a number of concessions from the Papacy over royal patronage and the appointment of bishops, and they launched campaigns which restored the Kingdom of Granada and Lower Navarre to Castile. She also laid the basis for overseas expansion by annexing the Canary Islands and funding Christopher Columbus's explorations of a new route to the Far East, during which he landed on various islands in the Caribbean. A woman of strong religious principles and personal piety, she exercised a bracing influence at the Castilian court. She and Ferdinand, who were named the '*Catholic Kings' by *Alexander VI (an Aragonese Pope), are best known for their insistence on religious unity within their kingdoms at home and abroad. To this end they established the Spanish *Inquisition, expelled those subjects who professed *Judaism or *Islam (even converted Moors were to be expelled in 1609), and organized the evangelization of the American Indians.

W. H. Prescott, History of the Reign of Ferdinand and Isabella (3 vols., '1838' [1837] and many later edns.). Modern Lives by M. Ballesteros Gaibrois (Segovia, 1953), Tarsicio de Azcona, OFM Cap. (Madrid, 1964), and P. K. Liss (Oxford, 1992). O. Ferrara, L'Avènement d'Isabelle la Catholique (Fr. tr., 1958). Tarsicio de Azcona, OFM Cap., La elección y reforma del episcopado español en tiempo de los reyes católicos (1960). R. García y García de Castro, Virtudes de la Reina Católica (1961); M. I. del Val, Isabel la Católica, Princesa (1468–1474) (Instituto 'Isabel la Catolica' de Historia Ecclesiastica, Documentos, 9; Valladolid, 1974). See also bibl. to FERDINAND V.

Isaiah. The Hebrew prophet of the 8th cent. BC. He exercised influence at the court of the kings of Judah, and took a prominent part esp. in foreign politics. Called to the prophetic office in the year of King Uzziah's death (*c.*740; Is. 6: 1), he continued his prophetic work till the Assyrian invasion of Judah in 701 BC. Tradition relates his death by martyrdom in the reign of Manasseh (*c.*690–*c.*640).

In his teaching Isaiah followed *Amos and *Hosea in asserting the supremacy of *Yahweh, the God of Israel, and in emphasizing His moral demands on His worshippers. He laid special stress on the Divine holiness (ch. 6), giving to this conception a strong ethical content. From these beliefs much of his teaching on particular matters followed, e.g. his political counsels, urging Judah to keep out of foreign alliances and trust only in God; his confidence in the inviolability of *Jerusalem; and his insistence that sacrificial worship must be accompanied by spiritual effort in the participants. The names of his sons were symbolic (7: 3; 8: 3), indicating his conviction that a 'remnant' (or, perhaps, no more than a remnant) of Judah would be saved from the downfall which was awaiting those who relied on human assistance. His expectations for the future were chiefly centred on his belief in the permanence of God's choice of Jerusalem as His sanctuary on earth, and around these expectations gathered the fervent hopes of successive generations of Jews. From NT times onwards the so-called Messianic passages in the prophecies ascribed to Isaiah (esp. 9: 2–7 and 11: 1–9) have very frequently been referred by Christian writers to the historic Christ, but it is a matter of dispute how far these can be attributed to the prophet himself. See also the following entries.

Isaiah, Ascension of. An apocryphal work well known in the early Church. It divides naturally into two parts. The first part (chs. 1–5) describes the circumstances of Isaiah's martyrdom by being 'sawn asunder' (though the thread of the narrative is awkwardly interrupted in chs. 3 and 4 by the detailed description of a vision); the second part (chs. 6–11) describes Isaiah's ascent in ecstasy through the heavens and the revelations made to him there. The work is extant complete only in Ethiopic; but a series of fragments makes it certain that there were at one time complete *Coptic and Latin texts as well. There are also both Latin and Slavonic versions of chs. 6–11 only.

It is now generally agreed that the basis is a document describing Isaiah's martyrdom, prob. Jewish in origin and perhaps originally in *Hebrew or *Aramaic, into which a Christian editor has inserted a Christian apocalypse (3. 13–4. 22) and also made other minor additions and adaptations. There are striking parallels between this Christian section and parts of the Acts of *Peter. Whether or not it was the same editor who added chs. 6–11 it is impossible to say. But the evidence of the versions compels us to assume that a complete Greek text lies behind them and this cannot be later than AD 350. The date of the final editing of the work must therefore be earlier. R. H. *Charles put it very much earlier (*c.*150–200) and supposed that the three 'constituents' circulated independently even during the first century.

Edns. of Eth. text by A. *Dillmann (Leipzig, 1877), of Gk. frag. and Lat. texts by R. H. Charles (London, 1900; also with Eng. tr. of Eth. and Lat. tr. of Slavonic), and of Coptic by L. T. Lefort in Le Muséon, 51 (1938), pp. 24–32, and 52 (1939), pp. 7–10, and by P. Lacau, ibid. 59 (1946), pp. 453–67. Eng. tr. of Charles rev. by J. M. T. Barton in H. F. D. Sparks (ed.), The Apocryphal Old Testament (Oxford, 1984), pp. 775–812; Eng. tr. by M. A. Knibb in J. H. Charlesworth (ed.), The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha, 2 (1985), pp. 143–76. A. K. Helmbold, 'Gnostic Elements in the "Ascension of Isaiah" ', New Testament Studies, 18 (1972), pp. 222–7. M. Pesce (ed.), Isaia, il Diletto e la Chiesa: Visione ed esegesi profetica cristiano-primitiva nell'Ascensione di Isaia. Atti del Convegno di Roma, 9–10 aprile 1981 (Brescia, 1983); A. Acerbi, Serra Lignea: Studi sulla Fortuna della Ascensione di Isaia [1984]; id., L'Ascensione di Isaia: Cristologia e profetismo in Siria nei primi decenni del II Secolo (Milan, 1989). E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 3 (part 1; Edinburgh, 1986), pp. 335–41.

Isaiah, Book of. Traditionally the whole Book is ascribed to *Isaiah (q.v.), but critics are now generally agreed that everything after ch. 36, as well as considerable portions of the earlier chapters, have no real claim to be his.

The Book falls naturally into three divisions.

(1) Chs. 1–35. The sections which can be ascribed to Isaiah with most plausibility are the greater part of chs. 1–12, 16–22, and 28–32. Apart from the Prophet's inaugural vision (6) these prophecies are concerned chiefly with the political situation in Judah under Syrian pressure in the years 740–700 BC. The so-called Syro-Ephraimite War (735 BC) was the occasion of the famous *Immanuel Prophecy (cf. Matt. 1: 22 f.), and most scholars hold that 1: 2–9 reflects the circumstances of the invasion of Judah by Sennacherib of Assyria in 701 BC (cf. 2 Kgs. 18: 13–19: 34). The definitely non-Isaianic items in this part of the Book include the Ode against Babylon (13: 1–14: 23), the Pronouncement of World Judgement or so-called 'Isaiah Apocalypse' (24–7), and the Prophecies on the Downfall of Edom and the Blessedness of God's People (34 f.), all of which would seem to be of considerably later date than the age of Isaiah.

(2) Chs. 36–9. A section taken over from 2 Kgs. 18: 13–20: 19, with the addition of the 'Song of Hezekiah' (Is. 38: 10–20).

(3) Chs. 40–66. These chapters appear to be of a later date than the two previous sections and were known collectively to 19th-cent. critics as '*Deutero-Isaiah'. More recently scholars have subdivided the section, applying the title 'Deutero-Isaiah' to chs. 40–55 and attributing chs. 56–66, which seem to presuppose that the *Temple had been rebuilt, to a later author or authors dubbed '*Trito-Isaiah'.

The main theme of chs. 40–66 is Israel's redemption and her mission to the world. The purpose of chs. 40–55 is to encourage the Jewish exiles in Babylon; they are usually dated shortly before the release of the Jews by Cyrus in 537 BC. Chs. 56–66 are dated after 520 BC. They form less of a unity than 40–55, containing some oracles (e.g. 60–2) which continue Deutero-Isaiah's promises of a renewed Jerusalem but others (e.g. 58–9) which are strongly critical of post-exilic practices. 66: 1–2 even seems to be opposed to the rebuilding of the Temple. See also SERVANT SONGS.

The chief patristic comm. on Isaiah come from *Origen, St *Basil, St *Cyril of Alexandria, and St *Jerome. Of the older Eng. works the principal is that of R. *Lowth (London, 1778). More modern comm. incl. those of G. B. *Gray (on chs. 1–27; ICC, 1912), O. Procksch (KAT 9; 1930), O. Kaiser (on chs. 1–12; Das Alte Testament Deutsch, 17; 1960; 2nd edn., 1963; Eng. tr., 1972; on chs. 13–39, ibid. 18; 1973; Eng. tr., 1974), C. R. North (on chs. 40–55; Oxford, 1964), C. Westermann (on chs. 40–66; Das Alte Testament Deutsch, 19; 1966; Eng. tr., 1969), A. S. Herbert (Camb. Bib., NEB, 2 vols., 1973–5), H. Windberger (on chs. 1–39, Biblischer Kommentar, Altes Testament, 10; 3 vols., Neukirchen, 1972–80; 2nd edn. of vol. 1 (on chs. 1–12), 1980), R. N. Whybray (on chs. 40–66; New Cent. Bib., 1975), K. Elliger and H.-J. Hermisson (on chs. 40–55, Biblischer Kommentar, Altes Testament, 11; 2 vols., 1978 ff.), and R. E. Clements (on chs. 1–39; New Cent. Bib., 1980). J. Lindblom, Die Jesaja Apokalypse, Jes. 24–7 (Lunds Universitats Årsskrift, NF, Avd. I, Bd. 34, no. 3; 1938). C. R. North, The Suffering Servant in Deutero-Isaiah: An Historical and Critical Study (Oxford, 1948; 2nd edn., 1956). J. Vermeylen, Du Prophète Isaïe à l'apocalyptique (Études Bibliques, 2 vols., 1977–8). R. E. Clements, Isaiah and the Deliverance of Jerusalem (Journal for the Study of the Old Testament, Supplement Series, 13; Sheffield, 1980). H. G. M. Williamson, The Book Called Isaiah: Deutero-Isaiah's Role in Composition and Redaction (Oxford, 1994). A. Neubauer and S. R. *Driver, The Fifty-Third Chapter of Isaiah according to the Jewish Interpreters (2 vols., 1876–7; text and Eng. tr.). G. von *Rad, Theologie des Alten Testament, 2 (1960), pp. 158–85; 7th edn. (1980), pp. 155–81; Eng. tr. (1965), pp. 147–75. A. Feuillet in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 4 (1949), cols. 647–729, s.v. 'Isaïe', with bibl.; C. R. Seitz, W. R. Millar, and R. J. Clifford in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 3 (1992), pp. 472–507, s.v. See also bibl. to SERVANT SONGS.

Iscariot. See JUDAS ISCARIOT.

Isho'dad of Merv (9th cent.), Bp. of Hedatta in the *Church of the East. He wrote commentaries on the whole of both the OT and the NT, packed with quotations from earlier exegetes, e.g. *Theodore of Mopsuestia, *Ephraem Syrus ('Commentary on the *Diatessaron'), and many little-known Syriac authors. His works (all in Syriac) throw valuable light on the history of biblical interpretation.

OT Comm. ed. J. M. Vosté and C. van den Eynde (CSCO, Scriptores Syriaci, 67 [Gen.], 80 [Exod.-Deut.], 96 [Jos., Jgs., Sam., Kgs., Prov., Eccles., Ecclus., Song of Songs, Ruth and Job], 128 [Is. and Minor Prophets], 146 [Jer., Ezek., and Dan.] and 185 [Pss.], with Fr. tr., ibid. 75, 81, 97, 129, 147, and 186; 1950–81). NT Comm., ed., with Eng. tr., by M. D. Gibson, and introd. by J. R. *Harris (Horae Semiticae, 5–7, Cambridge, 1911 [Gospels]; and 10 and 11, 1913–16 [Acts and three Catholic Epistles, and Epistles of St Paul, respectively]). J. M. Vosté, OP, 'Mar Išo'dad de Merw sur les Psaumes', Biblica, 25 (1944), pp. 261–96. A. *Baumstark, Geschichte der syrischen Literatur (1922), p. 234.

Isidore, St (d. *c.*440), of Pelusium, ascetic and exegete. He was prob. a teacher in the Church of Pelusium before he retired to a monastery not far from the city on a hill on the eastern estuary of the Nile. He corresponded with *Cyril of Alexandria during the Third Council of *Ephesus (431). An admirer of the *Cappadocian Fathers and St John *Chrysostom, he led a life of rigorous asceticism, while still staying close to those in the world. Of his large correspondence, which contains much of doctrinal, exegetical, and moral interest, some 2,000 items have survived. Feast day in E., 4 Feb.

Editio princeps by J. Billius (Paris, 1585). Later edns. by C. Rittershaus (Heidelberg, 1605) and A. Schott (Antwerp, 1623); a combination of these two edns. was issued by A. Morel (Paris, 1638); repr., with notes from a work by J. Possinus (Rome, 1670), in J. P. Migne, PG 78. 103–1674. An edn. by P. Évieux is in preparation. R. Aigrain (ed.), Quarante-neuf Lettres de St Isidore de Péluse: Édition critique de l'ancienne version latine contenue dans deux manuscrits du Concile d'Éphèse (1911). H. A. Niemeyer, De Isidori Pelusiotae Vita, Scriptis et Doctrina Commentatio Historico-theologica (Halle, 1825; repr. in PG 78. 9–102). A. Schmid, OSB, Die Christologie Isidors von Pelusium (Paradosis, 2; Fribourg, 1948). P. Évieux, Isidore de Péluse (Théologie Historique, 99; 1995). Id., 'Isidore de Péluse. La numérotation des lettres dans la tradition manuscrite', Revue d'Histoire des Textes, 5 (1975), pp. 45–72. CPG 3 (1979), pp. 82–4 (nos. 5557 f.). Bardenhewer, 4, pp. 100–7; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 267 f. and 602. J. Quasten, Patrology, 3 (Utrecht and Westminster, Md., 1960), pp. 180–5. G. Bareille in DTC 8 (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 84–98; A. M. Ritter in Dict. Sp. 7 (pt. 2; 1971), cols. 2097–103, both s.v.

Isidore, St (*c.*560–636), 'Hispalensis', Bp. of Seville and Metropolitan of Baetica. His earlier life is obscure. His family, of the nobility of Cartagena, fled to Seville in the face of fighting between the Visigoths and the troops of the Byzantine Empire. He was educated either in a monastery or in the episcopal school in the city, under the supervision of his brother, St *Leander, who was a monk before becoming Bp. of Seville *c.*580. Isidore succeeded him as bishop *c.*600. As such he was much concerned with monastic discipline, clerical education, liturgical uniformity, and the conversion of the Jews. He enjoyed close relations with the devout and cultured King Sisebut (612–21) and his successors, and he used his ecclesiastical position to strengthen the unstable Visigothic monarchy with religious sanctions. It may be argued that he evolved the concept of a Spanish Church and united Hispano-Gothic State independent of external authority. He presided over the Second Council of Seville (619) and the important Fourth Council of *Toledo (633), and he is traditionally associated with the development of the Hispana Collection of conciliar acts. His influence did much to secure the general acceptance of the Filioque clause in the W. Acc. to his pupil, Braulio, Bp. of Saragossa, he restored traditions of learning in an increasingly ignorant Spain. He founded a line of clerical scholars in Spain and had a profound impact upon the culture and educational practice of W. medieval Europe. He was canonized in 1598 and in 1722 formally declared a '*Doctor of the Church'. Feast day, 4 April.

His works became a storehouse of knowledge freely utilized by innumerable medieval authors. The most important is the extremely popular 'Etymologiae' or 'Origines', an encyclopedia in 20 books, containing information on the *seven liberal arts and such subjects as medicine, agriculture, geography, architecture, the books and offices of the Church, and other theological matters. It is organized partly on the principle that etymologies usually give information on the things to which the words refer. Derivative and often fanciful, it is impressive overall, and a valuable source for the learning and thought of the time. The 'De Natura Rerum' expounds classical cosmology with Christian allegorical interpretations. The 'Sententiae' is a manual of Christian doctrine and practice which draws freely on St *Augustine and St *Gregory the Great; it is important for its emphasis on the duties of secular authorities. The 'De Ecclesiasticis Officiis' is a useful source for the *Mozarabic liturgy as well as for the duties and rights of the various orders in the Church, both clerical and lay. The 'Synonyma' combines material for spiritual meditation and exhortation with instruction in eloquence. The 'Chronica Maiora', extending from the Creation to AD 615, is largely derivative, but it has original information on the history of Spain. The otherwise jejune 'Historia Gothorum, Vandalorum et Suevorum' is also a primary source for Spanish history, and of interest for its political attitudes. The 'De Viris Illustribus' is a continuation of similar works by St *Jerome and *Gennadius, with special attention to authors of the Spanish and African Churches. Isidore also wrote the 'Differentiae' (on words); 'Proemia', 'De Ortu et Obitu Patrum', 'Liber Numerorum', 'De Nominibus Legis et Evangeliarum', 'De Variis Quaestionibus', all on biblical topics; the 'De Haeresibus', 'Contra Iudaeos', 'Regula Monastica', and some verse. Of the 14 letters attributed to him, only those to Braulio are certainly genuine. Many other works ascribed to him are forgeries or of doubtful authenticity. See also the following entry.

The best, and nearly complete, edn. of his works is that of F. Arevalo [SJ] (7 vols., Rome, 1797–1803), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 81–4. Further material from other sources in Suppl. 4 (1967), cols. 1801–66. Crit. edns. of his 'Etymologiae' by W. M. Lindsay (2 vols., Oxford, 1911); with Fr. tr., by J. André and others (Auteurs Latins du Moyen Âge, 1981 ff.); and, with Sp. tr., by J. Oroz Reta and M.-A. Marcos Casquero, with important introd. by M. C. Díaz y Díaz (Biblioteca de Autores Cristianos, 433–4; 1982–3); of 'Historia Gothorum' and 'Chronica Maiora' by T. *Mommsen in MGH, Auctores Antiquissimi, 11 (1894), pp. 241–506; of 'De Haeresibus' by A. C. Vega, OSA (Scriptores Ecclesiastici Hispano-Latini Veteris et Medii Aevi, fasc. 5; The Escurial, 1940); of 'De Variis Quaestionibus' by id. and A. E. Anspach (ibid. 6–9; 1940); of 'De Natura Rerum', with Fr. tr., by J. Fontaine (Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études Hispaniques, 28; 1960); of 'De Viris Illustribus' by C. Codoñer Merino (Theses et Studia Philologica Salmanticensia, 12; 1964); of 'Regula Monastica' and 'Sententiae', with Sp. tr., by J. Campos Ruiz and I. Roca Meliá, Reglas monásticas de la España visigoda (Biblioteca de Autores Cristianos: Santos Padres Españoles, 2; 1971), pp. 77–125 and 213–525, respectively; of 'De Ortu et Obitu Patrum' by C. Chaparro Gómez (Auteurs Latins du Moyen Âge, 1985); of 'De Ecclesiasticis Officiis' by C. M. Lawson (CCSL 93; 1989); and of 'De Differentiis', 1, with Sp. tr., by C. Codoñer [Merino] (Auteurs Latins du Moyen Âge, 1992). Eng. trs. of his 'Historia Gothorum' by G. Donini and G. B. Ford (Leiden, 1966) and by K. B. Wolf, Conquerors and Chronicles of Early Medieval Spain (Translated Texts for Historians, 9; Liverpool, 1990), pp. 81–110, and of his Letters by G. B. Ford (Catania, 1966; 2nd edn., Amsterdam, 1970).

E. Brehaut, An Encyclopedist of the Dark Ages, Isidore of Seville (Columbia University Studies in History, Economics and Public Law, 48, no. 1; New York, 1912), incl. Eng. tr. of extensive extracts of the 'Etymologiae'; C. H. Beeson, Isidor-Studien (Quellen und Untersuchungen zur lateinischen Philologie des Mittelalters, 4, Heft 2; 1913), incl. text of his Poems, pp. 135–66; Miscellanea Isidoriana: Homenaje a S. Isidoro de Sevilla en el XIII centenario de su muerte . . . Lo edita la provincia de Andalucia S.I. (Rome, 1936); J. Fontaine, Isidore de Séville et la Culture Classique dans l'Espagne Wisigothique (2 vols., 1959 + suppl., 1983); id., 'Théorie et Pratique du Style chez Isidore de Séville', VC 14 (1960), pp. 65–101; J. Madoz, 'San Isidoro de Sevilla. Semblanza de su personalidad literaria', Archivos Leoneses, 14 (1960), pp. 1–188; M. C. Díaz y Díaz (ed.), Isidoriana: Estudios sobre San Isidoro de Sevilla en el XIV centenario de su nacimiento (1961); H.-J. Diesner, Isidor von Sevilla und das westgotische Spanien (Abh. (Sächs.), 67, Heft 3; 1977); P. Cazier, Isidore de Séville et la naissance de l'Espagne Catholique (Théologie Historique, 96 [1994]). M. Reydellet, La Royauté dans la Littérature Latine de Sidoine Apollinaire à Isidore de Seville (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 243; 1981), pp. 505–97; J. Herrin, The Formation of Christendom (1987), esp. pp. 233–49. CPL (3rd edn., 1995), pp. 398–413 (nos. 1186–229a). Manitius, 1, pp. 52–70. J. Fontaine in Dict. Sp. 7 (pt. 2; 1971), cols. 2104–2116, s.v., with bibl.

Isidore Mercator. The pseudonym adopted by the author of the *False Decretals (q.v.), doubtless to suggest a connection (if not an identity) with St *Isidore of Seville.

Islam (i.e. 'submission', usually understood as submission to the will of God), the religion preached by Muhammad (prob. *c.*570–632), the adherent of which is called a Muslim. Islam is the religion of the majority of the population of the northern half of Africa, the Middle East, Pakistan, Bangladesh, Malaysia, *Indonesia, and Papua-New Guinea. There are substantial Muslim minorities in several European countries, Russia and the successor states of the former USSR in the Caucasus and Central Asia, *India, and *China.

Muslim doctrine is derived from the interpretation of the *Koran (or Qur'ān) and the 'Sunna', i.e. 'established practice', a body of tradition which records the actions and sayings of the Prophet and the first four 'Rightly Guided' caliphs. Muslim law or 'Sharia' derives from the reform by early jurists of existing legal practice in line with the Koran and Sunna. Islam contains Arabian, Jewish, Christian, Gnostic, and other elements, and the extent to which these were incorporated during the lifetime of the Prophet in Arabia or during the subsequent three centuries in the lands of the Arab conquests is a matter of scholarly debate. The central dogmas of Islam are the absolute unity of God (*Allah) and the prophethood of Muhammad. The chief Islamic practices are confession of the unity of God and the mission of Muhammad, ritual prayer practised five times a day, alms-giving, fasting during the month of Ramadan, and pilgrimage to Mecca. Among a wide variety of sects, two main branches stand out. Both the Sunnites and the Shiites accept the authority of the Sunna, but the Sunnites also recognize the possibility of appeal to the 'Ijma' (i.e. the consensus of believers) and an interpretative tradition which is regarded as having been closed since the 9th cent. and can no longer be added to. The Ijma is represented and interpreted by the 'Ulama' or religious scholars. The Shiites originally comprised those who recognized the sole right to the caliphate of Ali, the nephew and son-in-law of Muhammad (Shiite from Ar. 'Shia Ali', the party of Ali), and they came to believe that the Sunna was not sufficient but must be constantly reinterpreted by an authoritative spokesman of divine will, i.e. Ali and his descendants, the true 'Imam,' or by his representatives or 'Mujtahids'. The number of Imams may be reckoned as seven or twelve according to the sect, and some, including the followers of the Aga Khan, hold that the succession of Imams is perpetual and still operative today. Mysticism plays a large part in Islam, and the 'Sufis' aim, by spiritual and bodily ascesis, at achieving direct apprehension of God and ultimately total submerging of self in the Divine. Since the demise of the Abbasid caliphate in 1258, the Ulama and the Sufis have constituted the main sources of religious authority in Islam.

Islam is seen as the aboriginal religion, from which both Judaism and Christianity are deviations. At several periods of history God has sent prophets, the first of whom was *Adam, and the last Muhammad: *Abraham, *Moses and Jesus are all recognized. God made a covenant with Abraham, awarding his descendants through Hagar's son Ishmael (i.e. the Arabs) the status of a chosen people. Muhammad's mission was to lead the Arabs and, perhaps, all mankind, back to the aboriginal 'religion of Abraham'. In Muslim belief, Jesus, though born of a virgin, is created and not begotten; his crucifixion was only apparent (cf. *Docetism). In the E., Christian writers, e.g. St *John of Damascus, reacted promptly to the rise of Islam with anti-Muslim polemic, but others were conciliatory, e.g. Timothy I (780–823), Patriarch of the *Church of the East, author of so-called Parable of the Pearl, a Syriac apology for Christianity in the form of a debate with the Abbasid caliph al-Mahdi (775–85). W. scholars first took an interest in Islam and Arabic learning in 10th-cent. Spain, e.g. Gerbert of Aurillac (*Sylvester II), and in 11th- to 13th-cent. Spain and S. Italy, mathematical, astronomical, and medical texts were translated from Arabic. But it was not until the *Crusades that W. scholars took an interest in Islam itself. The translations of Islamic texts, sponsored by *Peter the Venerable and others, and the commentaries that they provoked constituted the principal source of informed knowledge of Islam. From the 12th cent., Islamic logic and metaphysics, e.g. the writings of *Avempace, *Averroes, and *Avicenna, exercised a profound influence on W. philosophers and theologians, e.g. R. *Bacon and St *Thomas Aquinas, and the universities of *Bologna, *Oxford, *Paris, Rome, and Salamanca all had chairs of Arabic. During the Renaissance, with the rise of the Ottoman empire and its expansion into Europe, this peaceable interest waned.

The Arab conquests of the 7th–8th cent. subjected large communities of Christians (and Jews) to Muslim rule. Unlike pagans, they were recognized as 'people of the book' and incorporated into the Muslim State as 'dhimmis', who in return for payment of the 'jizya', part tribute and part penal tax, were awarded protected status and permitted to retain their own religion and laws. The dhimmis have usually suffered a varying degree of fiscal, legal, and social oppression, and more rarely violent persecution. The survival of the E. Churches under Muslim rule attests to the success of this regime, and contrasts with the failure of medieval Christian Spain and Sicily to incorporate their subject communities of Muslims. Modern Arab states have usually treated Christian minorities with a tolerance predicated on the equality of all religions, but this is threatened by the recent upsurge of revivalist Islam and the return of sharia law, e.g. in Iran and *Sudan.

Christian missions have never had a significant impact upon Islam. In the 13th cent., the *Mendicant Orders organized missions to Islam, and St *Francis preached to the Ayyubid sultan al-Kamil in 1219. In modern times missionary activity has been resumed by both Protestant and RC bodies. See also THEOLOGY OF RELIGIONS.

M. G. S. Hodgson, The Venture of Islam (3 vols., Chicago and London [1974]); P. M. Holt and others (eds.), The Cambridge History of Islam (2 vols, Cambridge, 1970); A. Hourani, A History of the Arab Peoples (1991); I. M. Lapidus, A History of Islamic Societies (Cambridge, 1988). The Encyclopaedia of Islam (ed. M. T. Houtsma and others, 4 vols and suppl., Leiden, 1913–38; 2nd edn., ed. H. A. R. Gibb and others, 1960 ff.). R. Roolvink, Historical Atlas of the Muslim Peoples (Amsterdam, 1957); F. [C. R.] Robinson, Atlas of the Islamic World since 1500 (Oxford [1982]). M. Ruthven, Islam in the World (Harmondsworth, 1984); F. Rahman, Islam (1966; 2nd edn., Chicago, 1979); L. Gardet, L'Islam: Religion et communauté (1967). I. Goldziher, Muhammedanische Studien (2 vols., 1889–90; Eng. tr., 1967–71); J. Schacht, An Introduction to Islamic Law (Oxford, 1964); H. Laoust, Les Schismes dans l'Islam (Bibliothèque historique, 1965). A. Schimmel, The Mystical Dimensions of Islam (Chapel Hill, NC, 1975); G.-C. Anawati and L. Gardet, Mystique musulmane (Études musulmanes, 8; 1961); J. S. Trimingham, The Sufi Orders in Islam (Oxford, 1971). M. Cook, Muhammad (Past Masters; Oxford, 1983); W. M. Watt, Muhammad, Prophet and Statesman (1961). The Patr. Timothy's 'Parable of the Pearl' is pr. (facsimile of the Syriac text), with Eng. tr. and introd., by A. Mingana and J. R. *Harris in Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, 12 (1928), pp. 137–298. T. Andrae, Les Origines de l'Islam et le Christianisme, tr. J. Roche, from a series of arts. which appeared 1923–5 (Initiation à l'Islam, 8; 1955); R. Bell, The Origin of Islam in its Christian Environment (1926); H. Speyer, Die biblischen Erzählungen im Qoran (Gräfenhainichen, 1931; repr. Hildesheim, 1961). N. Daniel, Islam and the West: The Making of an Image (Edinburgh, 1960); id., The Arabs and Mediaeval Europe (1975; 2nd edn., 1979); R. W. Southern, Western Views of Islam in the Middle Ages (Cambridge, Mass., 1962). B. Z. Kedar, Crusade and Mission: European Approaches toward the Muslims (Princeton, NJ [1984]); A. Hourani, Islam in European Thought (Cambridge, 1991). A. S. Tritton, The Caliphs and their Non-Muslim Subjects (1930); B. Ye'or, Le Dhimmi: Profil de l'opprimé en Orient et en Afrique du Nord depuis la conquête arabe (1980: rev. Eng. tr. [1985]).

Israel. The Hebrew nation, thought of as descending from the Patriarch Israel (*Jacob). Acc. to Gen. 32: 28, the name Israel was bestowed upon Jacob by the mysterious divine stranger with whom he wrestled at Peniel; and it is frequently used of Jacob from this point in the narrative. The twelve tribes of Israel bore the names of the twelve sons of Jacob/Israel (cf. Gen. 49). In their history of the period of the Monarchy the biblical writers normally applied the word Israel (esp. in contrast to '*Judah') to the *ten northern tribes, i.e. to those which attached themselves to Jeroboam I on the death of *Solomon (c. 930 BC) and were carried away to Assyria two cents. later (*c.*721 BC). (The name is already found on the *Moabite Stone, *c.*850 BC). In a theological sense, the word Israel was used of the people of Yahweh as a whole (including the South as well as the North), esp. in their covenant-relation to their God. In the NT it was transferred to the Christian Church, considered as the 'Israel of God' (Gal. 6: 16) and spoken of as inheriting the privileges of the ancient Israel.

The modern Jewish State established in the Holy Land in 1948 bears the name Israel.

M. *Noth, Geschichte Israels (Göttingen, 1950; 2nd edn., 1954; Eng. tr., 2nd edn., 1960); J. Bright, A History of Israel (1960; 3rd edn., 1981); R. de Vaux, OP, Histoire ancienne d'Israel (Études Bibliques, 2 vols. only, out of 3 projected, 1971–3; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1978); S. Herrmann, Geschichte Israels in alttestamentlicher Zeit (Munich, 1973; 2nd edn., 1980; Eng. tr., 1975; 2nd edn., 1981). E. P. Sanders, Paul and Palestinian Judaism: A Comparison of Patterns of Religion (1977). N. P. Lemche and others in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 3 (1992), pp. 526–76, s.v. 'Israel, History of', with bibl.

Issy, Articles of (1695). The 34 articles drawn up at Issy (the summer residence of the Society of *Saint-Sulpice), near Paris, which condemned certain *Quietist teachings. The commission was assembled by J. B. *Bossuet in response to a request from Mme *Guyon (who wanted to be cleared of suspicion of heresy), supported by F. *Fénelon. Mme Guyon and Fénelon both submitted works which were examined by the commission. Thirty articles were drawn up, to which four others were added, with some minor concessions to Fénelon, by then nominated Abp. of Cambrai. The first articles stated undisputed points of doctrine. The crucial ones dealt with the Quietist conception of pure love, without concern for one's own salvation, with the nature of contemplation, and with passive, non-discursive prayer, directly inspired without recourse to reasoning. The articles were signed by Bossuet, Fénelon and Mme Guyon, but a prolonged literary feud between Bossuet and Fénelon culminated in the condemnation in 1699 of 23 propositions from Fénelon's Explication des Maximes des Saints sur la Vie Intérieure.

Text pr. among J. B. Bossuet's Œuvres, 27 (Versailles, 1817), pp. 12–22. E. Levesque, 'Les Conférences d'Issy sur les États d'Oraison. Bossuet et Fénelon', Revue Bossuet, 6 (1905), pp. 176–203, with 'Premières explications donneés par Fénelon de son dissentiment avec Bossuet', pp. 204–20. L. Cognet, Crépuscule des Mystiques (Tournai [1958]), pp. 221–302, esp. pp. 278–302. R. A. *Knox, Enthusiasm (1950), pp. 341 f. A. Largent in DTC 6 (1913), cols. 2146–50, s.v. 'Fénelon', with text of articles repr., cols. 2146–9. See also bibl. to BOSSUET, FÉNELON, GUYON, and QUIETISM.

Istanbul. See CONSTANTINOPLE.

Itala (Lat., 'Italian (version)'). A name sometimes given in the past, esp. by German scholars, to the *Old Latin (pre-*Vulgate) text of the Bible (q.v.). The term derives from a passage in St *Augustine (Doctr. Christ. 2. 22), where he commends the 'Itala' as the best 'interpretation' (i.e. version or recension) among those current in his day. In this its original context it probably refers to a European form of the Old Latin, though a variety of other explanations have been given (e.g. by F. C. *Burkitt, who equated it with the Vulgate).

F. C. Burkitt, The Old Latin and the Itala (Texts and Studies, ed. J. A. *Robinson, 4, no. 3; 1896), pp. 55–78; id., 'St Augustine's Bible and the Itala', JTS 11 (1910), pp. 258–68 and 447–58. L. Ziegler, Die lateinischen Bibelübersetzungen vor Hieronymus und die Itala des Augustinus (1879). B. M. Metzger, The Early Versions of the New Testament (Oxford, 1977), pp. 290–93. B. Botte, OSB, in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 4 (1949), cols. 777–82, s.v.

Italo-Greeks. The extant Greek communities descended from (1) Greek settlements in Sicily and S. Italy in Byzantine times, (2) later Greek colonies established in Italian seaports, and (3) Greek and Albanian refugees from the Muslim invasion. Their ecclesiastical status is *Uniat, their rite and usages being Byzantine with some Roman modifications. The abbey of *Grottaferrata is an Italo-Greek monastery, which, however, has its own rite.

M. Petta in NCE 7 (1967), pp. 747–51, s.v. 'Italo-Albanian Rite', with bibl.

Ite, missa est. The concluding formula of the Roman Mass. The word missa is the Low Latin form of missio, 'dismissal', and the meaning of the formula is 'Go, you are dismissed'. During the Middle Ages it became customary to add a blessing and to restrict the use of the Ite, missa est to Masses at which the Gloria in excelsis* was recited. In 1967 its use was restored at all Masses except those for the dead when the commendation followed immediately; since 1969 it has been omitted when any other liturgical function follows. Where used, it now follows the blessing.

T. Michels, OSB, Ite Missa Est. Deo Gratias (Per Hanc Lucis Viam, 8; Salzburg, 1929). F. Dölger, 'Zu den Zeremonien der Messliturgie. III. Ite missa est in kultur- und sprachgeschichtlicher Beleuchtung', Antike und Christentum, 6 (1940), pp. 81–132. B. Botte, OSB, 'Ite Missa Est', in id. and C. Mohrmann, L'Ordinaire de la Messe (Études liturgiques, 2; 1953), pp. 145–9; C. Mohrmann, 'Missa', VC 12 (1958), pp. 67–92. Jungmann (1958 edn.), 2, pp. 535–41 and 595–7; Eng. tr., 2, pp. 432–7.

Itinerarium. A brief office formerly included in the *Breviary and prescribed for recitation by clerics about to set out on a journey. The prayers and the use of the *Benedictus (Lk. 1: 68–79) suggest that it originated in a blessing of pilgrims setting out for the Holy Places in Palestine.

Ives, St (? 7th cent.). Ostensibly, a British bishop of Persian birth. Acc. to the account written by *Goscelin between 1087 and 1091, Ives came to Great Britain from Persia via Rome, and with three companions preached Christianity in Cambridgeshire. His cult began when his alleged bones were discovered at St Ives in that county in 1001. His tomb was reopened at the beginning of the 12th cent. He is commemorated on 24 Apr. and 10 June. The town of St Ives in Cornwall seems to be named after another saint (a maiden, also known as St Ia, Hia, or Iva) of whom the extant legends seem equally unhistorical. Her feast day is 1 Feb.

Goscelin's vita is pr. in AASS, Jun. 2 (1698), pp. 288–92, repr. in PL 155. 79–90, but the text is defective; his miracula, augmented in the reign of Henry I, are pr. by W. D. Macray, Chronicon abbatiae Rameseiensis (RS 83; 1886), pp. lix–lxxxiv. The MSS are Bodley 285, fols. 99–111, and Dublin, Trinity College MS 171 (B. 1. 16), pp. 230–50. G. H. Doble, 'Saint Ivo, Bishop and Confessor, Patron of the Town of St. Ives', Laudate, 12 (1934), pp. 149–56. C. Hole in DCB 3 (1882), pp. 324 f., s.v. 'Ivo, St'. On the Saint after whom St Ives in Cornwall is named, see AASS, Oct. 12 (1867), pp. 293–6, with refs.; G. H. Doble, Saint Euny . . . with St Ya and St Erc (Cornish Saints Series, 2; c.1924), pp. 18–23; L. Gougaud, OSB, Les Saints irlandais hors d'Irlande (Bibliothèque de la Revue d'Histoire ecclésiastique, 16; 1934), pp. 83 f. C. W. Boase in DCB 3 (1882), p. 23, s.v. 'Ilia'.

Ivo, St (c.1040–1115), Bp. of *Chartres (hence Carnotensis). Educated at Paris and (under *Lanfranc) at *Bec, he became prior of the *canons regular of St-Quentin at Beauvais by 1079 and Bp. of Chartres in 1090. His courageous opposition to the adulterous intentions of King Philip I led to his imprisonment in 1092. The most learned canonist of his age, his three treatises, the Collectio Tripartita, the Decretum (in 17 books), and esp. the Panormia (in 8 books), exercised a determining influence on the development of canon law. Special importance attaches to the principles of the interpretation of canon law, laid down in the 'Prologus' attached to the Decretum, and to his teaching on dispensation. A large collection of his letters has survived which throws much light on the ecclesiastical and religious issues of his age, as well as 25 of his sermons. In the *Investiture struggle, in which he took a prominent part, he advocated moderation. Feast day, 20 or 23 May.

The Panormia was first pr. [ed. S. Brant] at Basle, 1499; the Decretum, ed. J. Molin, at Louvain, 1561; the Collectio Tripartita has not been pub.; cf. A. Theiner, repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 161, cols. li–lxxxviii. Collected edn. of his other works by J. Fronteau, with brief Life (no pagination), Paris, 1647; repr., with further notes, in J. P. Migne, PL 161 and 162. Crit. edn. of his correspondence, with Fr. tr., by J. Leclercq, OSB, 1 (1090–8; Les Classiques de l'histoire de France au moyen âge, 1949 [no more pub.]). P. Fournier, 'Les Collections canoniques attribuées à Yves de Chartres', Bibliothèque de l'École des Chartes, 57 (1896), pp. 645–98; 58 (1897), pp. 26–77, 410–44, 624–76; P. Fournier and G. Le Bras, Histoire des collections canoniques en occident, 2 (1932), pp. 55–114. H. Hoffman, 'Ivo von Chartres und die Lösung des Investiturproblems', Deutsches Archiv, 15 (1959), pp. 393–440. R. Sprandel, Ivo von Chartres und seine Stellung in der Kirchengeschichte (Pariser Historische Studien, 1; Stuttgart, 1962), with full bibl. P. Landau, 'Die Rubriken und Inskriptionen von Ivos Panormie', Bulletin of Medieval Canon Law, NS 12 (1982), pp. 31–49; id., 'Das Dekret des Ivo von Chartres', Zeitschrift der Savigny-Stiftung für Rechtsgeschichte, Kanonistische Abteilung, 70 (1984), pp. 1–44. E. Amann and L. Guizard in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 3625–40, s.v. 'Yves de Chartres', with full refs. (but confuse him with the later Master Ivo of Chartres, the author of the gloss on the Psalms; cf. B. Smalley in EHR 50 (1935), pp. 680–6); C. Munier in Dict. Sp. 16 (1994), cols. 1551–64, s.v. 'Yves (1) de Chartres'.

Iznik. The modern name of the ancient *Nicaea, now little more than a village.

J

'J'. A symbol widely used by scholars who follow the 'documentary hypothesis' of the origins of the *Pentateuch; it denotes the Jahvistic (Yahwistic or Jehovistic) source. This consists largely of narrative, beginning with the story of *Adam and *Eve (Gen. 2: 4b ff.) and including, in conjunction with 'E' (q.v.), most of the famous stories of the Patriarchs and the Exodus. It is distinguished from the later sources, 'D' and 'P' (qq.v.), by its simple narrative style and *anthropomorphism (e.g. Gen. 3: 8), and from 'E' (and also from 'P') by its use of the divine name *Yahweh (*Jehovah; 'the LORD' in AV and RV) from the first, even before its revelation to Moses in Ex. 3: 14 f. Where this criterion is absent, 'J' cannot always be certainly distinguished from 'E', with which it may have been combined in one cycle of stories before the date of 'D' (7th cent. BC). It is commonly thought to embody the traditions current in the Southern Kingdom of Judah; it is usually dated under the early monarchy (perhaps 9th cent. BC).

For bibl. see PENTATEUCH.

Jabneh. See JAMNIA.

Jackson, Thomas (1579–1640), *Anglican theologian. He was educated at Queen's and Corpus Christi Colleges, Oxford, and resided at Oxford for several years studying and teaching theology. Presentation to the living of St Nicholas, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, in 1623 did not seriously interrupt his work at Oxford. In 1630 he became president of Corpus and in 1639 Dean of *Peterborough. Although originally of *Puritan sympathies, he soon became identified with the *High Church party of Richard Neile, Bp. of *Durham (later Abp. of *York) and of W. *Laud; his great learning and theological ability made him one of the most widely esteemed of Caroline divines down to the middle of the 19th cent. His principal work, Commentaries upon the Apostles' Creed, was arranged in twelve Books, of which nine had appeared before his death (1613–38). The first complete edition of all 12 books was in his Collected Works (3 vols., 1672–3). Jackson was also the author of several volumes of sermons and of a tract against the Puritans.

The last collected edn. of Jackson's works was issued at Oxford (12 vols., 1844). N. Tyacke, Anti-Calvinists: The Rise of English Arminianism c.1590–1640 (Oxford, 1987), esp. pp. 7, 65–7, 83 f., 120 f., 142–4, and 159 f.; S. Hutton, 'Thomas Jackson, Oxford Platonist, and William Twisse, Aristotelian', Journal of the History of Ideas, 39 (1978), pp. 635–52. E. T. Bradley in DNB 29 (1892), pp. 107 f.

Jacob, OT *Patriarch. The story of Jacob, the son of *Isaac and grandson of *Abraham, is told in Gen. 25–50. After depriving his brother Esau of his birthright by an elaborate ruse, he fled to his mother's brother, Laban, who lived at Haran in Mesopotamia. On the journey, at *Bethel, he received a vision of angels of God ascending and descending on a ladder reaching up to heaven, in which God promised him blessing and posterity (Gen. 28: 10–22). In Mesopotamia, Jacob served Laban for 20 years, married his two daughters, Leah and Rachel, and prospered greatly. On his way back to Canaan, at Peniel, by the brook Jabbok, he wrestled with a mysterious Divine stranger, who gave him the name of '*Israel' (Gen. 32). Towards the end of his life, during a period of famine, he received news that his favourite son, Joseph, whom he had supposed killed by wild beasts, had become a great man in Egypt, and at his invitation Jacob and all his family 'went down into Egypt' (Gen. 46; cf. Deut 26: 5). Jacob died in Egypt, but had made Joseph promise to take his body back to the burying-place of his ancestors (Gen. 50). The twelve tribes of Israel bore the names of the twelve sons of Jacob.

Acc. to legend, the stone of *Scone beneath the sovereign's coronation chair in *Westminster Abbey is that which served as Jacob's pillow at Bethel (Gen. 28: 11 and 18).

See comm. to GENESIS, cited s.v.

Jacob Baradaeus (*c.*500–78), after whom the nickname 'Jacobite' was given to the *Syrian Orthodox Church. He was born in Tella and educated at the monastery of Phesilta, near Nisibis. He spent 15 years in *Constantinople, where he was welcomed by the Emp. *Theodora. In about 542, when the *Monophysite king of the Ghassanids asked for a bishop, Jacob was secretly consecrated Bp. of *Edessa. He spent the rest of his life travelling around, clandestinely ordaining clergy and helping to establish a separate hierarchy; his disguise as a beggar gave rise to the epithet 'Baradaios' (from Syriac burd'ānā, 'of the saddle-cloth', sc. cloak). Several of his letters survive. An anaphora and a profession of faith are ascribed to him, prob. incorrectly. Feast day in the Syrian Orthodox Church, 31 July. See also SYRIAN ORTHODOX CHURCH.

Syriac Life in *John of Ephesus, 'Lives of the Eastern Saints', chs. 49–50, ed., with Eng. tr., by E. W. Brooks in PO 18 (1924), pp. 690–7, and 19 (1926), pp. 153–8 [the text in PO 19 (1926), pp. 228–68, is not authentic]. E. Honigmann, Évêques et évêchés monophysites d'Asie antérieure au VI^e siècle (CSCO 127; 1951), pp. 157–77. A. *Baumstark, Geschichte der syrischen Literatur (1922), pp. 174 f. D. D. Bundy, 'Jacob Baradaeus. The state of research, a review of sources and a new approach', Le Muséon, 91 (1978), pp. 45–86. E. Venables in DCB 3 (1882), pp. 328–32, s.v. 'Jacobus (15)'.

Jacob of Edessa (*c.*640–708), *Syrian Orthodox scholar and exegete. In 684 he became Bp. of *Edessa, but after less than five years he withdrew from his see owing to the refusal of his flock to accept certain reforms. Subsequently he lived in monasteries at Kaisum and Tell 'Ada. He was one of the most learned men of his time, and knew some Hebrew as well as Greek. He produced a revision of some books of the *Peshitta OT, using both the LXX and the *Syro-Hexapla. His own writings include a treatise on grammar, a continuation of *Eusebius' Chronicle down to AD 692, a 'Hexaemeron' (completed by *George, Bp. of the Arabians), and many scholia on the Bible. He also translated and annotated some of the works of *Severus of Antioch, including his hymns and his Ὁμιλίαι ἐπιθρόνιοι. Of his many letters on liturgical and other subjects, only a small proportion have survived. Feast day in the Syrian Orthodox Church, 31 May.

His principal writings (many still unpub.) are listed in A. *Baumstark, Geschichte der syrischen Literatur (1922), pp. 248–56, with notes of edns. to date. Crit. edn. of his 'Hexaemeron' by I. B. Chabot and A. Vaschalde (CSCO, Scriptores Syri, Series Secunda, 56; 1928; with Lat. tr. by A. Vaschalde, ibid., 1932); also of his tr. of hymns by Severus of Antioch and others, with Eng. tr., by E. W. Brooks in PO 6 (1911), pp. 5–179 (fasc. 1); 7 (1911), pp. 592–805 (fasc. 5); for edns. of his tr. of Severus' Ὁμιλίαι ἐπιθρόνιοι, see s.v. SEVERUS OF ANTIOCH. C. Kayser, Die Canones Jacob's von Edessa (Leipzig, 1886) [Ger. tr. and comm.], with introd. on his life and works, pp. 48–78. 'Discourse on the Myron' [or *Chrism], ed., with Eng. tr., by S. [P.] Brock in OC 63 (1979), pp. 20–36. I. Ortiz de Urbina, SJ, Patrologia Syriaca (2nd edn., Rome, 1965), pp. 177–83. E. Tisserant in DTC 8 (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 286–91, s.v.; F. Graffin, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 8 (1974), cols. 33–5, both s.v. 'Jacques d'Édesse'.

Jacob of Nisibis, St (d. 338), the 'Moses of Mesopotamia', Bp. of Nisibis. He was always a prominent figure in Syriac Church tradition, and in later times acquired a reputation for great learning, ability, and holiness; but beyond his presence at the Council of *Nicaea (325), where acc. to *Theodoret he took a leading part in opposing *Arius, little about him is beyond dispute, and Theodoret's account contains many anachronisms. He is still honoured, esp. as a theological doctor, by both *Syrians and *Armenians. His relics, saved from the oncoming Persians, finally reached Constantinople *c.*970. The Armenian translation of *Aphrahat's Demonstrations was wrongly ascribed to Jacob. Feast day, 15 July.

*Gennadius, De Viris Illustribus, 1 [PL 58, 1060 f.; ascribing to Jacob certain works of Aphrahat]. P. Peeters, SJ, 'La Légende de saint Jacques de Nisibe', Anal. Boll. 38 (1920), pp. 285–373. P. Krüger, 'Jakob von Nisibis in syrischer und armenischer Überlieferung', Muséon, 81 (1968), pp. 161–79. A. Vööbus, History of Asceticism in the Syrian Orient, 1 (CSCO 184; 1958), esp. pp. 141–3. D. Bundy, 'Jacob of Nisibis as a model for the episcopacy', Muséon, 104 (1991), pp. 235–49. E. Tisserant in DTC 8 (pt. 1; 1924), pp. 292–5, s.v. 'Jacques de Nisibe'; J.-M. Sauget in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 6 (1965), cols. 411 f., s.v. 'Giacomo, vescovo di Nisibi'.

Jacob of Sarug (or more properly Serugh) (*c.*451–521), Syriac ecclesiastical writer. After education at *Edessa, he was ordained to the priesthood, and during the severe sufferings of his countrymen at the hands of the Persians, did much to encourage his people. In 519 he became Bp. of Batnae, the chief town of Sarug in Osrhoene, but died shortly afterwards. His principal writing was a long series of metrical homilies, most of them on biblical themes and written in a dodecasyllabic metre, which earned him the title of 'The Flute of the Holy Spirit'. He was also the author of some prose homilies and several letters; some hymns and three anaphoras are ascribed to him. His doctrinal position has been a subject of dispute in modern times. Older scholars, such as J. S. *Assemani, considered him to be orthodox, but since the publication of his letters to the monks of the monastery of Mar-Bassus, near Apamea, most scholars (though not P. Peeters) have seen him as disapproving of all *Dyophysite Christology. Many of his homilies remain unpublished and only a few of his works have been translated. Feast day in the Syrian Orthodox Church, 29 Nov.

Homiliae Selectae, ed. P. Bedjan (5 vols., Paris, 1905–10; Syr. text only). Epp. ed. G. Olinder (CSCO, Scriptores Syri, 57; 1937). Verse homilies against the Jews ed., with Fr. tr., by M. Albert in PO 38 (1976–77), pp. 3–242; six prose homilies ed., with Fr. tr., by F. Rilliet, ibid. 43 (1986), pp. 513–663. S. Euringer, Die äthiopischen Anaphoren ... des hl. Jacobus von Sarug (Orientalia Christiana, 33, no. 1 (1934), pp. 79–122). 'Anaphora Syriaca Iacobi Sarugensis, prima, secunda, tertia' ed., with Eng. tr., by H. W. Codrington, in Anaphorae Syriacae, 2, fasc. 1 (Rome, 1951), pp. 1–83. Ital. tr. of his Mariological sermons, with introd. and comm., by C. Vona (Lateranum, NS 19, nos. 1–4; 1953). Fr. tr. of several of his homilies and other material in L'Orient Syrien, 2–12 (1957–67), passim. P. Peeters, SJ, 'Jacques de Saroug, appartient-il à la secte monophysite? [No!]', Anal. Boll. 66 (1948), pp. 134–98. T. Jansma, 'Die Christologie Jakobs von Serugh und ihre Abhängigkeit von der alexandrinischen Theologie und der Frömmigkeit Ephraems des Syrers', Muséon, 78 (1965), pp. 5–46. A. Vööbus, Handschriftliche Überlieferung der Mēmrē-Dichtung der Ja'qōb von Serūg (CSCO, Subsidia, 39, 40, 60, and 61; 1973–80). A. *Baumstark, Geschichte der syrischen Literatur (1922), pp. 148–58; I. Ortiz de Urbina, SJ, Patrologia Syriaca (2nd edn., Rome, 1965), pp. 104–9. E. Tisserant in DTC 8 (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 300–5; F. Graffin, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 8 (1974), cols. 56–60, both s.v. 'Jacques de Saroug'.

Jacob of Voragine. See JAMES OF VORAGINE.

Jacobins. A name given originally to the *Dominican friars in France, from the fact that their first house in the north of France was established at Paris in 1218 in the rue St-Jacques. In 1789 this house was acquired by the revolutionary political club which thence assumed the name Jacobins.

Jacobites. An alternative name for the *Syrian Orthodox (q.v.). It derives from *Jacob Baradaeus, who in the mid-6th cent. was instrumental in building up a separate (*Monophysite) hierarchy in Syria, alongside that of the official Church which accepted the *Chalcedonian teaching on the Person of Christ. The term first appears *c.*600 and remains in popular use in some quarters.

Jacobson, William (1803–84) Bp. of *Chester. After being brought up a Nonconformist, he was elected a scholar of Lincoln College, Oxford, in 1825 and held various other appointments in Oxford, until he became Regius Professor of Divinity in 1848. In 1865 he was appointed Bp. of Chester. One of the more learned patristic scholars of his day, he issued a scholarly edition of the *Apostolic Fathers (2 vols., 1838, and later edns.) based on a study of the MSS, in which against W. *Cureton he upheld the genuineness of the now generally acknowledged seven Epistles of St *Ignatius. He also published an edition of the writings of R. *Sanderson, Bp. of *Lincoln (6 vols., 1854). Theologically, from his undergraduate days onwards, he was an old-fashioned *High Churchman.

For a good sketch of him as 'The Single-Minded Bishop' see J. W. *Burgon, Lives of Twelve Good Men (1888), 2, pp. 238–303. W. Hunt in DNB 29 (1892), pp. 124 f.

Jacobus. See JACOB, and also JAMES.

Jacopone da Todi (Jacopo Benedetti) (*c.*1230–1306), *Franciscan poet. The relatively late date of the records raises some uncertainty about the facts of his life, but the following account seems probable. After studying law, perhaps at *Bologna, and living for some years a worldly life, he was converted on the death of his wife in 1268 and scandalized his friends by becoming a 'Christian Diogenes'. About 1278 he became a Franciscan lay-brother and in 1294 he and some of his brethren were granted permission by *Celestine V to live in a separate community, in order to observe the rule of the order in its original strictness. This decision, however, was reversed by *Boniface VIII on his accession in 1298, and Jacopone as one of the *Spirituals was imprisoned till 1303. He wrote many exquisite and deeply devotional poems (Laude) in Latin and in the Umbrian dialect. These have traditionally, but prob. mistakenly, been thought to include the Stabat Mater*. His outstanding austerities and the fame of his mystical poems would probably have induced his canonization but for his satirical attacks upon Boniface VIII. There is a local cultus at Todi. Feast day, 25 Dec.

Editio princeps of the 'Laude' by F. Bonaccorsi (Florence, 1490), repr., with introd., by G. Ferri (Rome, 1910). Improved edn., together with his short Latin treatise and a number of sayings taken down by his admirers, ed. F. Ageno (Florence, 1953). Crit. edn. of 'Laude' by F. Mancini (Scrittori d'Italia, 257; Bari, 1974). Eng. tr. by S. and E. Hughes (Classics of Western Spirituality, 1982). Italian text with an earlier Eng. tr. of a selection of the 'Laude' by Mrs T. Beck appended to E. *Underhill, Jacopone da Todi, Poet and Mystic (1919), pp. 249–501. R. Bettarini, Jacopone e il Laudario Urbinate (Florence [1969]). G. T. Peck, The Fool of God: Jacopone da Todi (University, Ala., 1980). The many other studies include A. d'Ancona, Jacopone da Todi, il Giullare di Dio del secolo XIII (Todi, 1914); M. Casella, 'Jacopone da Todi', Archivum Romanicum, 4 (1920), pp. 281–339, 429–85; N. Sapegno, Frate Jacopone (Turin, 1926); Iacopone e il suo tempo: Convegni del Centro di Studi sulla spiritualità medievale, 1, 13 15 ottobre 1957 (Todi, 1959); and E. Menstò (ed.), Atti del Convegno Storico Iacoponico in occasione del 750° anniversario della nascita di Iacopone da Todi, Todi, 29 30 novembre 1980 (Florence, 1981). Raby, pp. 429–39 and 484 (bibl.).

Jahweh. See TETRAGRAMMATON.

Jairus. A Galilaean 'ruler of the synagogue' (ἀρχισυνάγωγος) whose young daughter Christ restored to life (Mk. 5: 21–43).

James. The normal English form of Lat. Jacobus, Gk. Ἰάκωβος, representing the declinable form of the Hebrew name which is transliterated directly into English as 'Jacob'. In English versions of the Bible the form 'Jacob' is retained in the OT and in those passages of the NT which refer to the OT patriarch (Gk. Ἰακώβ; Lat. Jacob; indeclinable). See also following entries.

James, St, 'the Lord's brother' (Mk. 6: 3 and parallels). The natural interpretation of the NT evidence would imply that he was the son of the BVM and St *Joseph, but for other possibilities see BRETHREN OF THE LORD. From 1 Cor. 15: 7 it appears that he was granted a special appearance of the Lord after the Resurrection. From an early date he was, with St *Peter, a leader of the Church at Jerusalem (e.g. Gal. 1: 19), and from the time when Peter left Jerusalem after Herod's attempt to kill him (Acts 12), James appears as the principal authority, who presided at the council of Jerusalem recorded in Acts 15. Acc. to *Clement of Alexandria, as reported by *Eusebius (HE 2. 1), he was chosen 'bishop of Jerusalem'. On the basis of Gal. 1: 19 it has been argued that he was an Apostle, and he has been identified with the son of Alphaeus (see JAMES THE LESS); both Clement and *Hegesippus describe him as 'James the Just'. Acc. to Hegesippus (ap. Eusebius, HE 2. 23) he was put to death by the Sanhedrin in AD 62. Among Jewish Christians he was held in high repute, and elaborate stories of his sanctity are reported by Hegesippus. The (fictitious) 'Clementine Homilies' and 'Recognitions', prob. 3rd-cent. Judaistic writings, purport to be addressed to him, while the apocryphal Infancy Gospel known as the 'Book of James' is ascribed to him, as is also the Gnostic 'Apocryphal Epistle of James' (qq.v.). Feast day in E., 23 Oct.; also in the American BCP (1979). See also JAMES, APOCALYPSES OF; JAMES, BOOK OF; JAMES, EPISTLE OF ST; JAMES, LITURGY OF ST.

W. Patrick, James, the Lord's Brother (1906). W. Pratscher, Der Herrenbruder Jakobus und die Jakobustradition (Forschungen zur Religion und Literatur des Alten und Neuen Testaments, 139; 1987). See also bibl. to BRETHREN OF THE LORD.

James, St, 'the Great', Apostle. He was a son of Zebedee, elder brother of St *John, and with St *Peter and John he belonged to the privileged group of disciples who were present at the raising of Jairus' daughter (Mk. 5: 37), the *Transfiguration, and the Agony in *Gethsemane. James and John, acc. to Mk. 3: 17, were named '*Boanerges, that is Sons of Thunder' by the Lord, perhaps because of their ardent zeal (cf. Lk. 9: 54 and Mk. 10: 37). James was the first of the Twelve to suffer martyrdom, being beheaded by *Herod Agrippa I in AD 44 (Acts 12: 2).

Since the 7th cent. it has been alleged that before his martyrdom he preached in *Spain, but the tradition of the early Church, acc. to which the Apostles did not leave Jerusalem till after his death, as well as Rom. 15: 20 and 24, are against the authenticity of this story, which is now almost universally abandoned. Acc. to a Spanish tradition (not older than the 9th cent.), the body of St James was translated to Santiago de *Compostela (q.v.). In the Middle Ages St James was one of the most popular Spanish saints, whose patronage was invoked esp. against the Muslims. Feast day in E., 30 Apr.; in W., 25 July.

AASS, Jul. 6 (1729), pp. 5–124. Gk. text of his acta (prob. 8th cent.) ed. J. Ebersolt (Paris, 1902). On the origins of the Spanish cult of St James, R. A. Fletcher, Saint James's Catapult (Oxford, 1984), pp. 53–77.

James, St, 'the Less'. The title derives from the description of 'James the less' (Gk. ὁ μικρός) in Mk. 15: 40, but is commonly applied to James, the son of Alphaeus (Mk. 3: 18 etc.), one of the Twelve Apostles, who is thus identified with the James of Mk. 15: 40. There is, however, no sufficient reason for the identification, and the epithet is prob. attached to the Apostle only as a convenient way of distinguishing him from James 'the Great' (see previous entry). Unless (as is unlikely) the tradition which identifies the Apostle with *James, 'the Lord's brother' is correct, nothing further is known of him. Feast day of the Apostle in the E., 9 Oct.; in the W., with the Apostle St *Philip, formerly 1 May and still so in the BCP; in RC Church transferred to 11 May in 1955 and then to 3 May in 1969.

James, Apocalypses of. Two short *Gnostic works contained in Codex V of the *Nag Hammadi Library. They embody dialogues between Jesus and James, who is called 'the Just' and the Lord's 'brother'. The theme of the first is redemption, in the sense of the liberation of the Gnostic from the pains of earthly existence and his reunion with the primal ground of being; the second is largely concerned with a speech delivered by James in the context of his martyrdom.

Coptic text ed., with Ger. tr., by A. Böhlig and P. Labib, Koptisch-gnostische Apokalypsen aus Codex V von Nag Hammadi (Wissenschaftliche Zeitschrift der Martin-Luther Universität Halle-Wittenberg, Sonderband; 1963), pp. 27–85. Texts also ed., with Eng. trs. by W. R. Schoedel and C. W. Hedrick in D. M. Parrott (ed.), Nag Hammadi Codices V, 2–5 and VI (Nag Hammadi Studies, 11; Leiden, 1979), pp. 65–103 and 105–49 respectively. Eng. trs. also in J. M. Robinson (ed.), The Nag Hammadi Library in English (3rd edn., Leiden, 1988), pp. 260–76. Ger. tr. and introd. by W.-P. Funk in Schneemelcher, 1 (5th edn., 1987), pp. 253–75; Eng. tr., 1 (1991), pp. 313–41. W. Pratscher, Der Herrenbruder Jakobus und die Jakobustradition (Forschungen zur Religion und Literatur des Alten und Neuen Testaments, 139; 1987), pp. 162–72; C. Scholten, Martyrium und Sophiamythos im Gnostizismus nach den Texten von Nag Hammadi (Jahrbuch für Antike und Christentum, Ergänzungsband, 14; 1987), pp. 47–61 and 68–80.

James, Apocryphal Epistle of. A previously unknown work contained in Codex I of the *Nag Hammadi Library. It begins in the form of a letter, but soon passes over into a description of a final discourse delivered by Jesus to *Peter and *James (ostensibly the writer) '550 days after He had risen'. One of its major themes is the attitude to be adopted in the face of suffering (regarded as inevitable). The prominence of Peter and James and the sayings-traditions it contains suggest an origin in Jewish-Christian circles, and it was probably written about the middle of the 2nd cent., since it shows no dependence on canonical texts; some scholars, however, suggest an Egyptian origin and a later date. It has some affinities with *Gnostic writings, but cannot be attributed to any known Gnostic sect; some critics have denied that it is Gnostic at all.

Text ed., with Fr., Ger., and Eng. trs., and introd. by M. Malinine and others (Zurich and Stuttgart, 1968); also ed., with Eng. tr., by F. E. Williams in H. W. Attridge (ed.), Nag Hammadi Codex I (Nag Hammadi Studies, 22–23; Leiden, 1985), 1, pp. 13–53, with notes, 2, pp. 7–37; and with Ger. tr. and comm. by D. Kirchner (TU 136; 1989); Eng. tr. also in J. M. Robinson (ed.), The Nag Hammadi Library in English (3rd edn., Leiden, 1988), pp. 29–37. Ger. tr., with introd., by D. Kirchner in Schneemelcher, 1 (5th edn., 1987), pp. 234–44; Eng. tr., 1 (1991), pp. 285–99. C. Scholten, Martyrium und Sophiamythos im Gnostizismus nach den Texten von Nag Hammadi (Jahrbuch für Antike und Christentum, Ergänzungsband, 14; 1987), pp. 35–47.

James, Book of. An apocryphal *Infancy Gospel, apparently compiled by a Jewish Christian from a variety of sources, including the canonical Gospels of Mt. and Lk. Since the 16th cent. it has also been known as the '*Protevangelium'. It consists in the main of a highly embellished account of the events connected with Christ's birth, as related in Lk. 1 f. The Book, which professes to be by *James, the Lord's brother, was possibly known to *Justin Martyr, probably to *Clement of Alexandria, and certainly to *Origen; and seems to date from the 2nd cent. The oldest Greek MS is *Bodmer Papyrus V, and there are also versions in Latin, Syriac, Armenian, Slavonic, and other languages. Much of its contents were incorporated into later Infancy Gospels. In the Middle Ages its legends about the BVM became popular subjects with artists. It is here that the names of her parents, *Joachim and *Anne, occur for the first time.

Gk. text in C. *Tischendorf, Evangelia Apocrypha (2nd edn., 1876), pp. 1–50; also ed., with Fr. tr., by É. Amann, Le Protévangile de Jacques et ses remaniements latins (1910), and by É. de Strycker, SJ, La Forme la plus ancienne du Protévangile de Jacques (Subsidia Hagiographica, 33; 1961). Eng. tr. in J. K. Elliott, The Apocryphal New Testament (Oxford, 1993), pp. 48–67. H. R. Smid, Protevangelium Jacobi: A Commentary (Eng. tr., Apocrypha Novi Testamenti, 1; Assen, 1965). On the Lat. workings-over of the text, see also M. R. James, Latin Infancy Gospels (1927), who prints those found in MSS Hereford O.III.9 and Brit. Lib., Arundel 404. O. *Cullmann in Schneemelcher, 1 (5th edn., 1987), pp. 334–49; Eng. tr., 1 (1991), pp. 421–39 (incl. Eng. tr. of text). J. H. Charlesworth, The New Testament Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha: A Guide to Publications, with Excursuses on Apocalypses (Metuchen, NJ, and London, 1987), pp. 218–28.

James, Epistle of St. This NT Book, in the form of an Ep. of 'James, a servant of God and of the Lord Jesus Christ, to the twelve tribes of the Diaspora' (1: 1), stands first among the '*Catholic Epistles'. The writer opens by insisting on the joy which temptation brings, since by enduring it with prayer a man 'shall receive the crown of life' (1: 2–12); the sins into which he falls, however, are not to be imputed to God (1: 13–15). As the first-fruits of God's creatures (1: 18), we are to avoid wrath and meekly receive the Word (1: 19–21), not being mere hearers (1: 22 f.); the test of religion is its practical manifestations (1: 27). Subservience to the rich and despising the poor are fundamentally opposed to the Christian ethic (2: 1–13). To make profession of faith which does not issue in works is valueless (2: 14–26). Wisdom requires strict control of the tongue, which, though of Divine origin, may issue in great evil (3: 1–12); when wisdom comes from God it manifests itself in peaceableness (3: 13–18). The lustful, the proud, those who do not resist the devil, the censorious, and the presumptuous are never close to God (4: 1–17). The rich are warned of their fate (5: 1–6); patience is commended (5: 7–11); oaths are disallowed (5: 12); and *Unction is recommended for the sick (5: 13–15), together with mutual confession of sins (5: 16) and prayer (5: 17 f.). Finally, to convert a man from error is to save one's own soul (5: 19 f.).

The Epistle is written in a clear forceful style, using good Greek, and is almost entirely moral in content. Apart from two verses (1: 1 and 2: 1) there is nothing incontestably Christian in it and it has been argued by F. *Spitta that the work is a revision of a Jewish writing; but the similarities to the *Sermon on the Mount and other of the Lord's teachings suggest rather a Jewish-Christian writing.

The traditional view that the author was St *James the Lord's brother has to face the difficulty that the Epistle presupposes a good Greek culture; the suggestion that it is a translation from an original Aramaic is unlikely on stylistic grounds. Other arguments urged against the traditional authorship are the absence of reference in the *Muratorian fragment or any other 2nd-cent. writing, the doubts of *Origen and *Eusebius, and the extent to which it stands apart from the Judaizing controversy in the 1st cent. in which James was a central figure. None of these objections, however, is quite conclusive. There remain the close parallels with the speech of James recorded in Acts 15; and the most natural interpretation of 'James' (alone) in the opening verse is that it refers to the Lord's brother, though it is possible that the ascription to James may not be original. Even if the Epistle is not the work of St James, it seems likely that it was composed before AD 95. Some scholars, impressed by its primitive nature, argue for a very early date, c. AD 50. It is first mentioned by Origen and seems to have been widely known in the E. soon afterwards. In the W. it is not quoted before the middle of the 4th cent., but it was recognized as canonical at the Council of *Hippo of 393. It was translated into Syriac as part of the *Peshitta in the early 5th cent. In modern times the Epistle was disliked by M. *Luther ('a right strawy epistle') and has been little valued by orthodox *Protestants.

Modern comm. by J. B. Mayor (London, 1892; 3rd edn., with additions, 1913; with full bibl.), H. Windisch (Hb. NT, 4, Heft 2, 1911; on the Catholic Epistles, 3rd edn., with H. Preisker, 15, 1951, pp. 1–36), J. H. Ropes (ICC, 1916), M. *Dibelius (KEK 15, 7th edn., 1921; 11th edn. by H. Greeven, 1964; Eng. tr., Hermeneia, Philadelphia [1976]), F. Mussner (Herders Theologischer Kommentar zum Neuen Testament, 13, Fasz. 1; 1964), C. L. Mitton (London [1967]), E. M. Sidebottom (New Cent. Bib., Jas., Jude, and 2 Pet., 1967, pp. 1–64), J. Cantinat, CM, Les Épîtres de Saint Jacques et de Saint Jude (Sources Bibliques, 1973), pp. 9–263, S. [S. S. C.] Laws (Black's NT Comm., 1980), and R. P. Martin (Word Biblical Commentary, 48; Waco, Tex. [1988]); also F. J. A. *Hort (as far as Jas. 4: 7; posthumously pub., London, 1909). A. Meyer, Das Rätsel des Jacobusbriefes (Beihefte zur ZNTW, 10; 1930). S. [S. S. C.] Laws in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 3 (1992), pp. 621–8, s.v.

James, Liturgy of St. This ancient liturgy, extant in a Greek and a Syriac form, is traditionally ascribed to St *James, the Lord's brother and the first Bp. of *Jerusalem. It has many points of contact with the liturgy known to St *Cyril, Bp. of Jerusalem (d. 387), and contains an apparent reference to the discovery of the true cross at Jerusalem in AD 326. It came to be much used in the *Syriac-, *Armenian-, and *Georgian-speaking parts of the Church, as well as in Egypt and Ethiopia. Its use by the *Syrian Orthodox Church (which became a separate body after the Council of *Chalcedon in 451), as well as by the main Orthodox Churches, shows that it cannot be later than the middle of the 5th cent. By the latter it is now celebrated at Zante (and sometimes elsewhere) on 23 Oct. (acc. to the E. Church, the day of St James's death) and at Jerusalem on the Sunday after Christmas.

Text in Brightman, LEW, pp. 31–68 [Gk. text]; 69–110 [Syr. text]. Crit. text, with Lat. tr., ed. B. C. Mercier, OSB, in PO 26 (1950), pp. 119–256. Cf. also O. Heiming, OSB, 'Palimpsestbruchstücke der syrischen Version der Jakobusanaphora aus dem 8. Jahrhundert', OCP 16 (1950), pp. 190–200; A. Rücker, Die syrische Jakobusanaphora nach der Rezension der Je'qob(h) von Edessa (Liturgiegeschichtliche Quellen, 4; 1923). Eng. tr. in J. M. *Neale, The Liturgies of S. Mark, S. James, S. Clement, S. Chrysostom and the Church of Malabar (1859), pp. 31–65. Classic comm. by (1) Moses bar Kēphā (813–903), ed., with Eng. tr., by R. H. *Connolly and H. W. Codrington, Two Commentaries on the Jacobite Liturgy (1913), pp. 16–66 (in Syriac script); Eng. tr., pp. 24–90, and (2) Dionysius bar Salibi (d. 1171), ed., with Lat. tr., by H. Labourt (CSCO, Scriptores Syrici, 93; 1903). L. *Allatius, Συμμικτά ('Coloniae Agrippinae' [Amsterdam?] 1653), 1, pp. 176–203 ('Ep. i ad Bartodum Nihusium de Liturgia S. Iacobi'), an attempt to prove the Liturgy to be the work of St James the Apostle. A. Tarby, La Prière Eucharistique de l'Église de Jérusalem (Théologie historique, 17 [1972]), with bibl. L. Ligier, SJ, 'Célébration divine et Anamnèse dans la première partie de l'Anaphore ou Canon de la Messe Orientale', Gregorianum, 48 (1967), pp. 225–52, repr. in B. Botte and others, Eucharisties d'Orient et d'Occident: Semaine liturgique de l'Institut Saint-Serge, 2 (Lex Orandi, 47; 1970), pp. 139–78. J. R. K. Fenwick, The Anaphoras of St Basil and St James: An Investigation into their Common Origin (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 240; 1992). A. *Fortescue in CE 1 (1907), pp. 571–4, s.v. 'Antiochene Liturgy'; H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 7 (pt. 2; 1927), cols. 2116–21.

James I (1566–1625), King of England and VI of Scotland. The only son of Henry Stuart, Lord Darnley, and *Mary, Queen of Scots, on the abdication of his mother he became King of Scotland in 1567. He was educated mainly by George *Buchanan, who endeavoured to inculcate doctrines of constitutional monarchy. Undertaking the direction of government in 1578, he tried to build up the royal power amid strong rival factions of the Scottish nobility. In 1586 he entered an alliance with England, raising few objections to the execution of his mother. In 1589 he married Anne of Denmark (1574–1619). He generally supported the clergy against the nobility, but he resented the political influence of the Kirk. From 1598 he sought the restoration of episcopacy, in 1600 appointing three representatives of the Church in Parliament under the title of Bishops.

On the death of *Elizabeth I (1603), he succeeded to the English throne by right of his mother's descent from Henry VII, under the new style of King of Great Britain. Travelling immediately to London, he was met by the *Puritans, who presented the *Millenary Petition. James heard their case at the *Hampton Court Conference (1604), at which he offered a series of concessions in return, he hoped, for conformity and subscription. He also took the opportunity to express his complete opposition to *Presbyterianism, and upheld the connection between the *Divine Right of Kings and *Apostolic Succession. At the same time he authorized a new translation of the Bible (the *Authorized Version of 1611). He favoured lenient treatment of RCs and made peace with Spain in 1604, though the *Gunpowder Plot of 1605 inevitably provoked stricter laws against the *Recusants. During his reign the influence of the clergy at court increased dramatically; James appointed seven bishops to the Privy Council; in 1621 he chose John *Williams, Bp. of Lincoln, as Lord Keeper, the first cleric to hold the office since 1558; and he allowed the bishops to resume their traditional role as counsellors or intimates of the Crown. In Scotland, in 1610 he persuaded the Assembly of the Church to agree to the introduction of episcopacy. Three bishops were consecrated in England and he prob. hoped to extend the English rite to Scotland. In 1614 and 1615 he ordered that all persons in Scotland should receive the Holy Communion on Easter Day, and in 1616 called upon the Assembly of Aberdeen to pass the Five Articles, which (after James's visit to Scotland in 1617) were finally accepted at *Perth in 1618. He issued the 'Book of *Sports' (1618) approving lawful sport on Sundays.

James's attempts to negotiate a marriage treaty with Spain were frustrated by Parliament's refusal to repeal the laws against RCs, while he was equally unsuccessful in his attempts to mediate in Bohemia. He negotiated an alliance with France in 1624, but he was unable to disclose the terms of a treaty which promised relief to Catholics. Throughout his reign he quarrelled with his Parliaments over foreign policy and never saw that parliamentary control over finance made compromise necessary. Although renowned for his erudition, he failed to win sympathy because of his pedantry and high opinion of his own ability. His published works include Essays of a Prentice in the Divine Art of Poetry (1584), Poetical Exercises [1591], Daemonology (1597), Basilikon Doron* (1599), The True Law of Free Monarchies (anon. 1598; 1603), A Counter Blast to Tobacco (anon. 1604), Triplici Nodo, Triplex Cuneus; or an Apology for the Oath of Allegiance (anon. 1607), Declaratio pro Iure Regio (1615), The Peacemaker (anon. 1618) and Meditations on the Lord's Prayer (1619) and on Mt. 27: 27–9 (1620).

Collected edn. of his prose works to date pub. by James [Montague], Bp. of Winchester, in 1616. Repr. of his political works by C. H. McIlwain, 1918. Poems ed. J. Craigie (Scottish Text Society, 3rd ser. 22 and 26; 1955–8). R. Ashton (ed.), James I by his Contemporaries: An Account of his Career and Character as Seen by Some of his Contemporaries (1969). S. R. Gardiner, History of England from the Accession of James I to the Outbreak of the Civil War, vols. 1–5 (1883–4). D. H. Willson, King James VI and I (1956); W. McElwee, The Wisest Fool in Christendom: The Reign of King James I and VI (1958). D. Mathew, James I (1967). J. Wormald, 'James VI and I: Two Kings or One?', History, 68 (1983), pp. 187–209. K. Fincham, Prelate as Pastor: The Episcopate of James I (Oxford, 1990). S. R. Gardiner in DNB 29 (1892), pp. 161–81, s.v. 'James VI'.

James II (1633–1701), King of England and VII of Scotland, 1685–8. The second son of *Charles I, James fought in the Civil War as Duke of York, but after being captured escaped abroad, where he served with the French army. At the Restoration (1660), he was made Lord High Admiral and in 1662 issued 'Instructions' to the Navy which remained in force until the 19th cent. He married twice: first in 1660 Anne Hyde, who died a RC; by her he had two daughters, Mary and *Anne; and secondly in 1673 the RC Princess Mary Beatrice of Modena. About 1670 he was received into the RC Church. This step involved him in trouble both at Court and in Parliament, which tried to exclude him from the succession. The *Exclusion Bill was, however, rejected in 1680 by the Lords, many of whom believed in the hereditary *Divine Right. As High Commissioner in Scotland, James was careful to countenance the Episcopal Church of Scotland, and so encouraged Anglican loyalty in England. In 1685 he ascended the throne and openly professed his Roman allegiance. At the beginning of his reign he continued to support the C of E, but after quelling the Duke of Monmouth's Rebellion, he increasingly sought to improve the position of his co-religionists. In order to check Anglican criticism, he created the Court of Ecclesiastical Commission (see HIGH COMMISSION), which suspended H. *Compton, Bp. of London. He claimed the power to dispense from the provisions of the *Test Act of 1673 and appointed RCs to office in the state and armed forces. He also intruded RC dons into the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge. A collision with the hierarchy of the C of E was occasioned by his issuing two *Declarations of Indulgence in 1687 and 1688. In the second case he ordered the clergy to publish his Declaration of Liberty of Conscience from the pulpit. When W. *Sancroft, Abp. of *Canterbury, and six other bishops refused to carry out the order and presented a petition to the King, they were committed to the Tower and charged with publishing a seditious libel (see SEVEN BISHOPS, TRIAL OF). Their acquittal was marked by general rejoicing. Alarmed by the approaching invasion by William, Prince of Orange, James reversed most of his measures and promised once more to uphold the established rights of the C of E. But this did not stop William and the Whigs from deposing him. He fled to France. He later attempted to recover Ireland, but was eventually defeated at the Boyne in 1690. He returned to France. His exclusion gave rise to the *Nonjuring Schism and the longer-lived Jacobite movement. He died in 1701 after spending the last four years of his life in religious observance.

The principal authority, apart from the State Papers (of which the Calendar of the Domestic Series was ed. by E. K. Timings and others, 3 vols., 1970–2), is The Life of James the Second ... Collected out of Memoirs Writ with his own Hand [compiled at his son's command shortly after his death], ed. J. S. Clarke (2 vols., London, 1816). On this Life cf. L. von *Ranke, Englische Geschichte vornehmlich im sechszehnten und siebzehnten Jahrhundert, 7 (1868), pp. 137–54; Eng. tr., 6 (1875), pp. 29–45. Modern works include F. C. Turner, James II (1948) and J. [L.] Miller, James II: A Study in Kingship (Hove, 1978; London, 1989). W. A. Speck, Reluctant Revolutionaries: Englishmen and the Revolution of 1688 (Oxford, 1988). R. [A.] Beddard, A Kingdom without a King: The Journal of the Provisional Government in the Revolution of 1688 (ibid. [1988]); id. (ed.), The Revolutions of 1688 (ibid., 1991).

James Baradaeus. See JACOB BARADAEUS.

James the Deacon (7th cent.), companion of St *Paulinus, Bp. of *York. When Paulinus returned to Kent in 633, James was apparently the sole member of the mission to the N. left behind. Acc. of *Bede (HE 2. 16 and 20), he resided chiefly at a village near Catterick. On the restoration of Christianity in Northumbria, James took an active and successful part in spreading the Gospel and, skilful in music, he taught his converts the Gregorian chant. In 664 he was present, on St *Wilfrid's side, at the Synod of *Whitby. He survived until Bede's time.

James of Edessa. See JACOB OF EDESSA.

James of Nisibis, St. See JACOB OF NISIBIS, ST.

James of Sarug. See JACOB OF SARUG.

James of Voragine, more correctly called James of Varazze (*c.*1230–98), author of the '*Golden Legend'. Born in Genoa, he entered the *Dominican Order in 1244. He was twice Provincial of Lombardy (1267–77 and 1281–6) and in 1283, on the death of the Master, he became Vicar of the Order until the election of Munio of Zamora in 1285. In 1285 and 1288 he undertook diplomatic missions for the Pope. In 1290 he appears to have had some involvement in the Papal deposition of Munio of Zamara, but the story that he was threatened with assassination by some of the brethren is prob. apocryphal. In 1292 he reluctantly became Abp. of Genoa. His cult was ratified in 1816. Feast day, 13 July.

Besides the 'Golden Legend', he wrote a chronicle of Genoa, part of which is of value for local history, and a series of sermons, incl. the Mariale, in which the material is arranged alphabetically under the various attributes and titles of the BVM.

Early pr. edns. of his Sermons include 'Sermones de Tempore', Strasburg, not later than 1473; 'Sermones de Sanctis', Cologne, *c.*1478; 'Sermones Quadragesimales', Brixen, 1483; and 'Mariale', Hamburg, 1491; frequent later edns. 'Chronicon Genuense', pr. by L. A. *Muratori, Rerum Italicarum Scriptores, 9 (Milan, 1726), cols. 2–56; modern edn. by G. Monleone (R. Istituto Storico Italiano per il Medio Evo. Fonti per la storia d'Italia [84–6]; 1941). E. C. Richardson, Materials for a Life of Jacopo da Varagine (New York, 1935). G. Airaldi, Jacopo da Varagine, tra santi e mercanti (Milan [1988]). A. Boureau, 'Le prêcheur et les marchands. Ordre divin et désordres du siècle dans la Chronique de Gênes de Jacques de Voragine (1297)', Médiévales, 4 (1983), pp. 102–22. E. Colledge, OSA, 'James of Voragine's "Legenda sancti Augustini" and its Sources', Augustiniana, 35 (1985), pp. 281–314. Kaeppeli, 2 (1975), pp. 348–69. P. Raffin in Dict. Sp. 8 (1974), cols. 62–4, s.v. 'Jacques de Voragine'. See also bibl. to GOLDEN LEGEND.

James, William (1842–1910), American *Pragmatist philosopher. The son of a *Swedenborgian theologian and brother of the novelist Henry James, he was Professor successively of Psychology (1887–97) and Philosophy (1897–1907) at Harvard University. He held that we have a 'right to believe in' the existence of God (because it makes us 'better off'), but no scientific certainty of the validity of that belief. In his *Gifford Lectures, The Varieties of Religious Experience (1902), he drew the now familiar distinction between 'once-born' and 'twice-born' religious types, and made a scientific analysis of conversion. The cases he quotes have been widely criticized on the ground that they are too predominantly morbid, irrational, and Protestant, but the book remains a classic, and has stimulated much fruitful study of the psychology of religion. His other writings include his Principles of Psychology (2 vols., 1890), an epoch-making contribution to its subject; The Will to Believe and Other Essays (1897); and Pragmatism (1907).

Collected Essays and Reviews ed. R. B. Perry (1920); Letters ed. H. James, son (1920); Selected Unpublished Correspondence 1885–1910 ed. F. J. D. Scott (Columbus, Oh. [1986]). Works also ed. F. H. Burkhardt and others (19 vols. Cambridge, Mass., and London, 1975–88). R. B. Perry, The Thought and Character of William James (2 vols. [1936]). Other studies by G. W. Allen (London, 1967; a biography), G. E. Myers (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1986), G. Bird (London, 1986), and D. W. Bjork (New York, 1988). A. J. Ayer, The Origins of Pragmatism (1968), pp. 183–336. R. B. Perry in Dict. Amer. Biog. 9 (1932), pp. 590–600.

Jamnia (or Jabneh). A city *c.*13 miles S. of Joppa. After the fall of *Jerusalem (AD 70), an assembly of religious teachers was established at Jamnia; this body was regarded as to some extent replacing the *Sanhedrin, though it did not possess the same representative character or national authority. It appears that one of the subjects discussed among the rabbis was the status of certain biblical books (e.g. Eccles. and Song of Songs) which some said did not 'defile the hands'—a phrase taken by many scholars to refer to their canonicity (cf. *Mishnah, Yadaim, 3.5). The suggestion that a particular synod of Jamnia, held *c.*100 AD, finally settled the limits of the OT Canon, was made by H. E. *Ryle; though it has had a wide currency, there is no evidence to substantiate it.

F. M. Abel, OP, Géographie de la Palestine, 2 (1938), pp. 352 f., with refs. H. E. Ryle, The Canon of the Old Testament (1892), pp. 171 f. J. P. Lewis, 'What do we mean by Jabneh?', Journal of Bible and Religion, 32 (1964), pp. 125–32; S. Z. Leiman, The Canonization of Hebrew Scripture: The Talmudic and Midrashic Evidence (Transactions of the Connecticut Academy of Arts and Sciences, 47; 1976), pp. 120–4. J. P. Lewis in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 3 (1992), pp. 634–7, with bibl.

Jane Frances de Chantal, St (1572–1641), foundress of the Order of the *Visitation. Her father, Bénigne Frémyot, held a legal position in Dijon. In 1592 she married the Baron Christophe de Chantal, and on his death in 1601 she took a vow of chastity. St *Francis de Sales became her spiritual director in 1604 and with his help she founded the first house of the Visitation in Annecy in 1610; it was intended for women unable to endure the severe ascetic life of other religious orders. On leaving her family she had to overcome the protests of her 14-year-old son and was often criticized on this account. She spent the remainder of her life organizing the new order and founding houses in various parts of France. She cared for the poor and sick (esp. in the plague epidemic of 1628–9). At her death there were 86 houses in existence. She was beatified in 1751 and canonized in 1767. Feast day 12 Dec. (formerly 21 Aug.).

Sainte J. F. Frémyot de Chantal: Sa vie et ses œuvres. Mémoires sur la vie et les vertus de sainte Jeanne-Françoise Frémyot de Chantal . . . par la mère Françoise-Madeleine de Chaugy (8 vols., 1874–9), with Life forming vol. 1; Eng. tr. of vol. 2 as Exhortations, Conferences, Instructions and Retreat (Clifton, 1888). Modern edn. of the deposition which she made in 1627 for the beatification of St Francis de Sales by I. van Houtryve, OSB (Namur [1960]); Eng. tr. by E. [C. V.] Stopp (London, 1986). Crit. edn. of her correspondence by M.-P. Burns, VSM (6 vols., Paris, 1986 ff.) [L. V.] E. Bougaud, Histoire de Sainte Chantal et des origines de la Visitation (2 vols., 1861; Eng. tr., St Chantal and the Foundation of the Visitation, 2 vols., New York, 1895). A Gazier, Jeanne de Chantal et Angélique Arnauld d'après leur correspondance, 1620–1641 (1915). Other Lives by H. *Bremond ('Les Saints', 1912) and E. [C. V.] Stopp (London, 1962). R. Devos in Dict. Sp. 8 (1974), cols. 859–69, s.v. 'Jeanne-François de Chantal', with extensive bibl.

Jannes and Jambres. Two reputed Egyptian magicians who imitated the miracles performed by *Moses before Pharaoh (Ex. 7 ff.). Though their names do not occur in the OT, they are mentioned in the NT at 2 Tim. 3: 8. There are many references to them in other literature of the early Christian period, Jewish as well as Christian, while *Origen (Comm. in Mt. 27. 9) refers to an apocryphal 'Book of Jannes and Jambres', of which, however, only small fragments survive.

J. A. *Fabricius, Codex Pseudepigraphus Veteris Testamenti, 1 (Hamburg and Leipzig, 1713), pp. 813–25, and 2 (Hamburg, 1723), pp. 105–11. M. R. James, 'A Fragment of the "Penitence of Jannes and Jambres" ', JTS 2 (1901), pp. 572–7, with text, pp. 573 f. A. Pietersma and R. T. Lutz in J. H. Charlesworth (ed.), The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha, 2 (1985), pp. 427–42, incl. Eng. tr. of fragments of the 'Book of Jannes and Jambres'. E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 3 (pt. 2; Edinburgh, 1987), pp. 781–3.

Jansen, Cornelius Otto (1585–1638) (Jansenius), the author of the Augustinus* (q.v.). He is to be distinguished from his uncle, Cornelius Jansen the Elder (1510–76), who was Bp. of Ghent from 1564 (confirmed by *Pius V, 1568). After two years in the Collège du Faucon at Louvain, he migrated in 1604 to Paris. Here he met *Saint-Cyran, with whom, at Bayonne and Champré, he spent the years 1612–17 in unremitting study. In these years, as his later correspondence with Saint-Cyran reveals, he conceived an elaborate plan of concerted action against the theologians of the *Counter-Reformation. In 1617 he became the director of a newly founded college at Louvain, and in 1626–7 defended at Madrid the cause of the University of Louvain against the aspersions of the *Jesuits. In 1628 he began to write the Augustinus, for which purpose he read the whole of St *Augustine's writings ten times and the anti-Pelagian writings thirty; but it was not published till 1640, after his death. In 1636 he was consecrated Bp. of Ypres. See also following entry.

J. Orcibal, Correspondance de Jansénius ('Les Origines du jansénisme', 1; Bibliothèque de la RHE 25; 1947). Id., Jansénius d'Ypres (1585 1638) (Études Augustiniennes, 1989). E. J. M. van Eijl (ed.), L'Image de C. Jansénius jusqu'à la fin du XVIII^e siècle: Actes du Colloque, Louvain, 7–9 novembre 1985 (Bibliotheca Ephemeridum Theologicarum Lovaniensium, 79; 1987). H. de *Lubac, SJ, Augustinisme et théologie moderne (Théologie, 63; 1965), pp. 49–112; Eng. tr. (1969), pp. 34–96. J. Carreyre in DTC 8 (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 319–30 (Life, with bibl.) and 330–448 (full analysis of the Augustinus). See also bibls. to AUGUSTINUS and JANSENISM.

Jansenism. Dogmatically, Jansenism is summed up in five propositions, derived in substance from the Augustinus* (1640) of C. O. *Jansen, and condemned as heretical by the *Sorbonne (1649) and *Innocent X (1653). The sense of these propositions is (1) that without a special *grace from God the performance of His commandments is impossible to men, and (2) that the operation of grace is irresistible; and hence, that man is the victim of either a natural or a supernatural determinism, limited only by not being violently coercive. This theological pessimism was expressed in the general harshness and moral rigorism of the movement.

The first generation of French Jansenists were all disciples of *Saint-Cyran (Duvergier), Jansen's friend and collaborator. This party of 'Cyranists', which included the convent of *Port-Royal, was already in existence in 1638. After Saint-Cyran's death in 1643, Antoine *Arnauld succeeded him as its leader, and in De la fréquente communion (1643), La Théologie morale des Jésuites (1643), and two Apologies pour M. Jansénius (1644–5) defined the directions of the movement. These were (1) the defence of St *Augustine's theology of grace, as interpreted by Jansen, against *Molinism; (2) a rigorist tendency in all matters of ecclesiastical discipline; (3) hostility to *Probabilism. The unifying characteristic of the movement was antagonism to the *Jesuits. (2) and (3) remained unchanged throughout the whole history of Jansenism, and were exhibited in all its principal monuments, from the Lettres provinciales (1656–7) of *Pascal onwards.

In 1653 five propositions were condemned by Innocent X in the bull '*Cum Occasione' as summarizing the Jansenist position. The supporters of the movement sought to evade the condemnation by their distinction of 'fact' (fait) and 'law' (droit). The five propositions were admitted to be heretical, but in 'fact' they were declared unrepresentative of Jansen's doctrine, which the Jansenists held to be a fair presentation of the teaching of St Augustine. After this distinction had been disallowed by *Alexander VII (1656), attempts were made to compel the Jansenists to sign a formulary embodying the Papal anathema. In 1668 they were persuaded into a qualified submission, but the movement continued to gain sympathizers, particularly among the *Oratorians and *Maurists. P. *Quesnel's Réflexions morales (1693), in which some tenets of Jansenism were reaffirmed, was condemned in the bull '*Unigenitus' (1713). The bull was not accepted by the Jansenists, who consequently had to face sporadic persecution in France during much of the 18th cent. In their opposition to the Jesuits, however, they found support among the *Gallican members of the Parlements who in 1762 took steps to have the Jesuits expelled from France. In the Netherlands, where many prominent Jansenist clerics took refuge, Jansenism was tolerated or encouraged by successive *Vicars Apostolic, and in 1723 the Dutch Jansenists nominated for themselves a schismatic Bishop of Utrecht (see OLD CATHOLICS). In Tuscany, chiefly owing to the anti-Papal policy of the Grand Duke Leopold, Jansenism became so strong that the local Synod of *Pistoia (1786) promulgated one of the most comprehensive statements of Jansenist positions that exist. After Napoleon's *Concordat of 1801, French Jansenism survived only as the secret conviction of a few Catholics and as the guiding spirit of a few pious institutions.

The principal primary docs. concerning Jansenism and the opposition to it are ed. by L. Ceyssens, OFM, lately in conjunction with S. de Munter, OFM: those covering the period 1640–3 (Bibliothèque de la RHE 31; 1957); 1644–53 (Bibliothèque de l'Institut historique Belge de Rome, 9–10; 1961–2); 1654–60 (ibid. 12–13; 1963–5); 1661–72 (Bibliothèque de la RHE 45; 1968); 1673–6 (Bibliothèque de l'Institut historique Belge de Rome, 17; 1968); 1677–9 (Bibliothèque de la RHE, 59; 1974); and 1680–82 (Bibliothèque de l'Institut historique Belge de Rome, 19; 1974). The 'Five Propositions' are conveniently pr. in Denzinger and Hünermann (37th edn., 1991), pp. 614 f. (nos. 2001–5); Eng. tr. in Bettenson (2nd edn., 1963), pp. 379 f.

There has been an immense lit. from the outbreak of the controversy onwards. Modern studies incl. A. Gazier, Histoire générale du mouvement janséniste (2 vols., 1922); E. Préclin, Les Jansénistes du XVIII^e siècle et la constitution civile du clergé (1928); L. Ceyssens, OFM, Jansenistica: Studien in verband met Geschiedenis van het Jansenisme (4 vols., Malines, 1950–62); id., Jansenistica Minora (1–10, Malines, 1951–68; 11–12, Amsterdam, 1973–5); cf., for details of arts. by Ceyssens, bibl. in Antonianum, 53 (1978), pp. 194–266 and in J. van Bavel and M. Schrama (eds.), Jansénius et le Jansénisme dans les Pay-Bas: Mélanges Lucien Ceyssens (Bibliotheca Ephemeridum Theologicarum Lovaniensium, 56; 1982), pp. 9 f., incl. his important art. 'L'Authenticité des cinq propositions condamnées de Jansenius', Antonianum, 55 (1980), pp. 368–424; P. de Leturia, SJ, and others, Nuove ricerche storiche sul giansenismo (Analecta Gregoriana, 71; 1954); L. Cognet, Le Jansénisme (1961). J. Orcibal and A. Barnes, Les Origines du jansénisme (6 vols., 1947 ff.). J. Orcibal, 'Qu'est-ce le Jansénisme?', Cahiers de l'Association Internationale des Études françaises, nos. 3–5 (1953), pp. 39–53. A. Adam, Du mysticisme à la révolte: Les Jansénistes du XVII^e siècle (1968). A. Sedgwick, Jansenism in Seventeenth-Century France (Charlottesville, Va., 1977). J. Carreyre, Le Jansénisme durant la régence, 1715–23 (Bibliothèque de la RHE, 2–4; 1929–33). D. [K.] Van Kley, The Jansenists and the Expulsion of the Jesuits from France 1757–1765 (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1975); id., The Damiens Affairs and the Unravelling of the Ancien Régime 1750–1770 (Princeton, NJ [1984]), passim. A. C. Jemolo, Il giansenismo in Italia prima della rivoluzione (Bari, 1928). É. Appolis, Les Jansénistes espagnols (Bordeaux [1966]). B. Neveu, L'Erreur et son Juge: Remarques sur les censures doctrinales à l'époque moderne (Istituto Italiano per gli Studi Filosofici, Serie Studi, 19: Naples, 1993), esp. 505–746. Bremond, 4. List of Jansenist works in L. Patouillet (ed.), Dictionnaire des livres jansénistes (4 vols., Antwerp, 1752). L. Willaert, SJ, Bibliotheca Janseniana Belgica: Répertoire des imprimés concernant les controverses théologiques en relation avec le jansénisme dans les Pays-Bas catholiques et le Pays de Liège aux XVII^e et XVIII^e siècles (Bibliothèque de la Faculté de Philosophie et Lettres de Namur, 4, 5, 12; 1949–51). J. Carreyre in DTC 8 (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 318–529, s.v.; J. Gres-Gayer in NCE 18 (1989), pp. 207–10, s.v. See also bibl. to PORT-ROYAL.

Januarius, St, Bp. of Benevento, patron saint of Naples. Several late and mainly legendary accounts of his martyrdom survive, but beyond the fact of his death in the neighbourhood of Naples, perhaps at Pozzuoli in the *Diocletianic persecution, nothing is known of him. His fame rests on the alleged 'liquefaction' of his blood, preserved in a small glass phial, which is believed to take place on some eighteen occasions every year. A vast crowd gathers in the cathedral at Naples to witness the ceremony. Formerly a body of poor and aged women, the zie di San Gennaro ('aunts of St Januarius'), played a semi-official part in the event. Feast day in E., 21 Apr.; in W., 19 Sept.

List of 'Acta' in BHL 1 (1898–9), nos. 4115–40. P. Franchi de' Cavalieri, 'San Gennaro, vescovo e martire', Note agiografiche, fasc. 4 (ST 24; 1912), pp. 79–102 (with edn. of Gk. text, pp. 105–14). A further Gk. text ed., with Fr. tr., by F. van Ommeslaeghe, SJ, in Anal. Boll. 102 (1984), pp. 135–55. G. B. Alfano and A. Amitrano, Il miracolo di S. Gennaro: Documentazione storica e scientifica (2nd edn., Naples [1950]). H. Thurston, SJ, 'The Blood-Miracles of Naples', The Month, 149 (1927), pp. 44–55, 123–35, 236–47, and id., 'The "Miracle" of St Januarius', ibid. 155 (1930), pp. 119–29. H. *Delehaye, SJ, 'Hagiographie napolitaine', Anal. Boll. 59 (1941), pp. 1–33, esp. pp. 1–13. H. Thurston, SJ, in CE 8 (1910), pp. 295–7, s.v.; E. Josi, C. Testore, and P. Toschi in EC 6 (1951), cols. 9–16, s.v. 'Gennaro', with bibl.

Janus. The pseudonym over which J. J. I. von *Döllinger, with J. N. Huber and J. *Friedrich, issued a series of letters in the Augsburg Allgemeine Zeitung early in 1869, attacking the Papal Syllabus Errorum* of 1864 as tending to obscurantism and tyranny. The purpose of the letters was to promote anti-*Ultramontane tendencies in view of the forthcoming *Vatican Council. See also QUIRINUS.

The letters were issued in book form in the same year, both in the original and in an Eng. tr.

Japan, Christianity in. St *Francis Xavier first brought Christianity to Japan in 1549, and he and his successors gained many converts. In 1587, under the suspicion that the missions were merely preparing the way for a coming conquest of the country, Christianity was proscribed, but still made progress down to 1596. From 1596 to 1598 persecution raged and in 1597 claimed 26 Japanese converts, who suffered martyrdom by crucifixion at Nagasaki (canonized in 1862; feast day, 6 Feb.). It broke out again in 1613, and by 1640 many thousands, both Japanese and foreigners, had suffered for their faith. Then all foreigners were excluded from Japan under pain of death. Their exclusion continued in force, together with the proscription of Christianity, down to 1859, when a treaty between the Japanese Government and France partially removed the former restriction, allowing also liberty of worship to foreigners, though complete toleration for all was not conceded till 1890. In 1859 RC missions re-entered the country and shortly afterwards (1865) discovered that thousands of Christians, in small local communities, had, though without priests or education, secretly kept and handed on their faith through the two centuries of persecution.

In 1859 some American (Anglican) missionaries arrived, and in 1861–3 the Presbyterians. In 1861 came a mission, sent by the Russian Orthodox Church, under Fr. (later Abp.) Nicolai Kassatkin (canonized by the Orthodox in 1977 and second only to Xavier as the apostle of Japan), who founded a communion whose numbers were exceeded only by that of the Roman obedience. Missions of other denominations followed. Though temporarily hindered by the persecution of 1867–73, in which many thousands of Christians were exiled, work went steadily forward in the later years of the 19th cent. The RCs set up a Vicariate-Apostolic in 1866 and a hierarchy in 1891. In 1877 the various Presbyterian bodies at work in Japan began an amalgamation which was completed in 1891, while the American Episcopalian missions united with missions from the Churches of England and Canada to form the 'Nippon Sei Ko Kwai' (Holy Catholic Church of Japan) (1887). At first conversions were aided not only by the thirst of younger Japanese for W. education, but through desire to enter the civilization of the W. By 1890, however, a reaction towards national self-reliance had set in. This was symbolized by the Imperial Rescript on Education (1890) and confirmed by the defeat of Russia in the Russo-Japanese War (1905). Events from 1931 onwards intensified the nationalist spirit, reinforcing the State religion of Shinto. Christianity was often attacked as incompatible with the loyalty of Japanese subjects. During this period the writings of T. *Kagawa on the social implications of Christianity became well known in the W.

The outbreak of war with the USA and Great Britain in Dec. 1941 led to the removal of all European bishops (some of whom suffered harsh imprisonment) and clergy, and the government endeavoured to force all non-RC Christians into a single Protestant Church, the United Church of Christ in Japan (the 'Kyodan'). Some Anglicans joined under duress, while others refused. After the defeat of Japan in 1945, State-Shintoism was disestablished and freedom of religion was granted. In this new atmosphere, Christianity enjoyed a brief resurgence of popularity, assisted by financial and relief aid from Churches in N.

America. The Anglicans, *Lutherans, and several other groups withdrew from the 'Kyodan', but it remained the largest Protestant body in Japan. The 'Nippon Sei Ko Kwai' was reconstituted under a Japanese episcopate.

Indigenous expressions of Christianity in Japan include the 'Mukyokai' or Non-Church Movement, founded by K. Uchimura (1861–1930). In 1990 Christians numbered about 1 per cent of the total Japanese population, but the influence of Christianity on that section of society which is educated and well-informed is wider than this figure might suggest. S. Endo (1923–96), a RC novelist, was a prominent literary figure.

O. Cary, A History of Christianity in Japan (2 vols. [1909]); R. H. Drummond, A History of Christianity in Japan (Grand Rapids, Mich. [1971]). C. R. Boxer, The Christian Century in Japan, 1549 1650 (1951). J. F. Schütte, SJ, Introductio ad historiam Societatis Jesu in Japonia 1549–1650 (Rome, 1968). A. C. Ross, A Vision Bretrayed: The Jesuits in Japan and China 1542–1742 (Edinburgh [1994]), pp. 1–117. G. Elison, Deus Destroyed: The Image of Christianity in Early Modern Japan (Cambridge, Mass., 1973). N. S. Fujita, Japan's Encounter with Christianity: The Catholic Mission in pre-modern Japan (New York [1991]). H. St G. Tucker, The History of the Episcopal Church in Japan (Hale Lectures, 1937; 1938 [Anglican]). C. W. Iglehart, A Century of Protestant Christianity in Japan (Rutland, Va., and Tokyo, 1959). A. Lande, Meiji Protestantism in History and Historiography: A Comparative Study of Japanese and Western Interpretation of Early Protestantism in Japan (Studien zur interkulturellen Geschichte des Christentums, 58; 1989). J. M. Oe, 'The Conflict of Church Views in Japan during Wartime 1940–1945: The Church Unification Problem of the Anglican Church in Japan (The Nippon Sei Ko Kwai)', Anglican and Episcopal History, 58 (1989), pp. 448–97. R. Lee, Stranger in the Land: A Study of the Church in Japan (World Studies of Churches in Mission, 1967). J. M. Phillips, From the Rising of the Sun: Christians and Society in Contemporary Japan (New York [1981]). R. A. Moore (ed.), Culture and Religion in Japanese-American Relations: Essays on Uchimura Kanzō, 1861–1930 (Ann Arbor, Mich., 1981). Latourette, 3, pp. 322–35; 6, pp. 370–411; and 7, pp. 379–400, with bibl. refs.; K. S. Latourette, Christianity in a Revolutionary Age, 3 (1961), pp. 450–7; 5 (1963), pp. 424–42.

Jarrow. See WEARMOUTH AND JARROW.

Jaspers, Karl (1883–1969), German philosopher. His early interests were in medicine and psychiatry. In 1913 he became Privatdozent, and in 1921 Professor of Philosophy, at Heidelberg, where he remained until forced for political reasons to resign in 1937. He was reinstated in 1945, but moved to Basle, where he was Professor of Philosophy from 1948 to 1961.

Under the influence of S. *Kierkegaard, F. W. *Nietzsche and Protestant theology he developed a Christian *Existentialism, akin to (but not directly influenced by) the teaching of G. Marcel, in an endeavour to interpret the crisis in post-1918 Germany in secular philosophy and culture. Jaspers put religion and philosophy in contrast, and stressed the limits of science, notably in its ability to reach the self. This self is the ground of all existence and esp. characterized by the need for self-communication. Later Jaspers criticized R. *Bultmann on the grounds that his attempts at *demythologization presupposed that science had a total world-view, while he himself held that myths are rather particular signs or ciphers by which alone finite being can be brought into relationship with Transcendence. He repudiated the exclusive claims of Christ, whom he regarded as one cipher among many, though in his last works he seems to have accorded Him a special position. His writings include Die geistige Situation der Zeit (1931; Eng. tr. as Man in the Modern Age, 1933), Philosophie (3 vols., 1932; Eng. tr., 3 vols., Chicago, 1969–71), Der philosophische Glaube (1948; Eng. tr. as The Perennial Scope of Philosophy, 1950), Vom Ursprung und Ziel der Geschichte (1949; Eng. tr. as The Origin and Goal of History, 1953), and Der philosophische Glaube angesichts der Offenbarung (1962; Eng. tr. as Philosophical Faith and Revelation, 1967).

Festschriften for his 70th birthday, K. Piper (ed.), Offener Horizont (Munich, 1953), with bibl. to date, pp. 449–59, and for his 80th birthday, id. (ed.), Karl Jaspers Werk und Wirkung (ibid., 1963), with bibl. pp. 173–216. P. A. Schilpp (ed.), The Philosophy of Karl Jaspers (New York, 1957; 2nd edn., La Salle, Ill., 1981), incl. a 'Philosophical Autobiography' by Jaspers, tr. into Eng., pp. 5–94. M. Dufrenne and P. Ricœur, Karl Jaspers et la philosophie de l'existence (1947); X. Tilliette, Karl Jaspers: Théorie de la vérité métaphysique des chiffres, foi philosophique (Théologie, 44 [1960]); W. Schneiders, Karl Jaspers in der Kritik (1965); G. Simon, Die Achse der Weltgeschichte nach Jaspers (Analecta Gregoriana, 147; 1965); L. H. Ehrlich, Karl Jaspers: Philosophy as Faith (Amherst, Mass., 1975) (2nd edn. has additional section on M. *Heidegger interpolated between pp. 75 and 76); A. M. Olson, Transcendence and Hermeneutics: An Interpretation of the Philosophy of Karl Jaspers (Studies in Philosophy and Religion, 2; 1979); E. Young-Bruehl, Freedom and Karl Jasper's Philosophy (New Haven, Conn., and London [1981]). J. Salaquarda in TRE 16 (1987), pp. 539–45, with bibl.

Jassy, Synod of (1642). Next to the Synod of *Jerusalem (1672), that of Jassy (in Moldavia: i.e. the modern *Romania) is the most important Council in the history of the Orthodox Church since the fall of Constantinople. Meeting as it did in the border country between the Ottoman Empire and Russia, it included representatives of both the Greek and the Slav Orthodox Churches. Its chief work, besides condemning the Calvinist teachings of Cyril *Lucar, was to ratify the Orthodox Confession of Peter *Mogila, Metropolitan of Kiev, who was present at the Synod. Before approval was secured, however, Meletius Syrigos, one of the two delegates of the Patriarchate of *Constantinople, made extensive alterations in Mogila's original text, aimed at lessening its markedly Latin and Scholastic character; but even in its revised form the Confession remains strongly influenced by RC theology.

Acts of the Synod in I. N. Karmires, Τὰ δογματικὰ καὶ συμβολικὰ Μνημεῖα τῆς Ὀρθοδόξου Καθολικῆς Ἐκκλησίας, 2 (1953), pp. 575–82. [J. C.] S. Runciman, The Great Church in Captivity (Cambridge, 1968), pp. 342–7. See also bibl. to MOGILA, PETER.

Jean-Baptiste Marie Vianney, St. See CURÉ D'ARS, THE.

Jeanne d'Arc, St. See JOAN OF ARC, ST.

Jeanne Françoise Frémyot de Chantal. See JANE FRANCES DE CHANTAL, ST.

Jebb, John (1775–1833), Bp. of Limerick. A native of Drogheda, he entered *Trinity College, Dublin, in 1791. After ordination as deacon in 1799 he held curacies in *Ireland and became Rector of Abington, Co. Limerick, in 1809. In 1820 he published his Essay on Sacred Literat- ure, which made his name as an author. In 1822 he was appointed Bp. of Limerick.

A lifelong friend of Alexander *Knox, he anticipated certain of the leading doctrinal emphases of the *Oxford Movement, e.g. he laid stress on the unbroken continuity of the Church and on the via media of the C of E. His tract on the 'Peculiar Character of the Church of England' provided the starting-point for the exchange of letters between J. H. *Newman and the Abbé J. N. Jager which shaped Newman's Lectures on the Prophetical Office of the Church (1837). Jebb's concern for spirituality is seen in his Piety without Asceticism (1830).

He is to be distinguished from John Jebb (1736–86), a Fellow of Peterhouse, Cambridge, who in 1771 advocated the abolition of clerical subscription to the *Thirty-Nine Articles at graduation and in his later life gave up his ecclesiastical preferments and practised as a physician.

Jebb's tract on the 'Peculiar Character of the Church of England' was first pub. (with no title) as an appendix to his Sermons (1815), pp. 357–98, and subsequently issued separately. C. Forster (ed.), Thirty Years' Correspondence, between John Jebb . . . and Alexander Knox (2 vols., 1834). Life by id., incl. selection of his letters (2 vols., London, 1836). L. Allen (ed.), John Henry Newman and the Abbé Jager: A controversy on Scripture and Tradition (1834–1836) (1975), passim (see index). A. Gordon in DNB 29 (1892), pp. 259–61.

Jehoshaphat, the Valley of. On the basis of Joel 3: 2 and 12 (the only OT refs.), the traditional scene of the Lord's Coming Judgement. The name is perhaps to be connected with King Jehoshaphat (1 Kgs. 15: 24, 22: 41–50) or some other historic person, but is prob. artificial, since 'Jehoshaphat' means 'Yahweh has judged'. Since the 4th cent. AD (*Eusebius, *Bordeaux Pilgrim, *Jerome) the name has been in current use among Jews, Christians, and Muslims for the valley separating *Jerusalem on the E. from the Mount of *Olives and traversed by the brook *Cedron, though the valley is not so described in the NT or by *Josephus.

H. Vincent, OP, and F. M. Abel, OP, Jérusalem: Recherches de topographie, d'archéologie et d'histoire, 2, Jérusalem nouvelle (1926), pp. 849–52. G. M. Perrella, CM, 'La valle di Giosafat e il giudizio universale', Divus Thomas (Piacenza), 36 (1933), pp. 45–50.

Jehovah. A form of the Hebrew Divine Name (more properly '*Yahweh', q.v.), which was popularized at the Renaissance. See TETRAGRAMMATON.

Jehovah's Witnesses. The popular name given since 1931 to the Watch Tower Bible and Tract Society which traces its origins in the 1870s to the *Adventist doctrines of the American lay preacher C. T. *Russell (q.v.). His main claim was that Jesus Christ, a perfect man, had returned invisibly to earth in 1878 in order to prepare for the Kingdom of God which was expected to materialize after the Battle of Armageddon in 1914. The overriding responsibility of believers was to study the Bible and to warn as many people as possible about the impending 'end time' so that they might survive on earth, in turn, a First Judgement, Christ's millennial reign on earth, and a Second Judgement. Only a 'small flock' of 144,000 people drawn from the whole of human history were to expect eternal life in heaven.

Schisms and reinterpretations of prophecy were frequent among Russell's followers until his successor, J. F. *Rutherford (q.v.), turned them, after the First World War, into a '*theocratic' organization demanding from its members exclusive commitment, rigid adherence to 'the Truth', and strict indifference to the world. Rutherford's uncompromising criticism of all political ideologies gave rise to frequent clashes with governments in many countries; it may also have helped to bring about more liberal legislation in regard to conscientious objection and the free exercise of religion. Nathan H. Knorr, who succeeded him in 1942, directed Jehovah's Witnesses progressively away from confrontation with the world and towards missionary activity at home and abroad. Their governance became less oligarchic and more bureaucratic under the presidency of Frederick W. Franz (1977–92).

The most visible hallmarks of Jehovah's Witnesses are their Kingdom Halls, their door-to-door ministry, the public sale of their magazines The Watchtower (1879 ff.) and Awake! (1946 ff.), and their vast assemblies held in public stadia. They are also distinctive in their taboo against blood transfusions, their practice of Baptism by complete *immersion, their own translations of the Bible, their refusal to honour symbols of nationhood, and their reluctance to mix with non-members. They have *c.*4 million members in more than 200 countries. Growth in membership is now higher in developing countries than in the advanced industrial societies, but they retain an American ethos and are still governed from the USA. The organization had about 129,000 active members in the UK in 1994.

T. White, A People for His Name: A History of Jehovah's Witnesses and an Evaluation (New York, etc. [1967]); A. Rogerson, Millions now Living will Never Die: A Study of Jehovah's Witnesses (1969); J. A. Beckford, The Trumpet of Prophecy: A Sociological Study of Jehovah's Witnesses (Oxford [1975]); J. M. Penton, Apocalypse Delayed: The Story of Jehovah's Witnesses (Toronto and London [1985]). J. Bergman, Jehovah's Witnesses and Kindred Groups: A Historical Compendium and Bibliography (New York and London, 1984).

Jeremiah (7th cent. BC), prophet of Judah. He was a native of Anathoth, nr. *Jerusalem, and probably belonged to the family of Abiathar, the high priest whom King *Solomon had deprived of his priestly functions. He was born *c.*650, and received his vocation to the prophetic office *c.*626 (Jer. 1: 1–19). Although he seems to have played no prominent role in public affairs during the first years of his ministry, he probably approved Josiah's reform (2 Kgs. 22: 1–23: 30), but without taking part in it. The death of Josiah at Megiddo (*c.*608) caused a change in the people and its rulers, under Jehoiakim (*c.*607–*c.*597), who reversed the religious reforms of Josiah, and from now on Jeremiah proclaimed the destruction of Jerusalem and the *Temple. After the battle of Carchemish (*c.*606) the prophet counselled submission to the Babylonians, but the king resisted, and Judah did not give in until after Jehoiakim's death *c.*597. Under the new king, Zedekiah, however, Judah continued to side with Egypt against Babylon, despising the warnings of the prophet, who, during the siege of Jerusalem, was first imprisoned and then thrown into a pit from which he was rescued by the Ethiopian eunuch Ebed-melech (38: 7–13). After the final destruction of the city (*c.*586) Jeremiah was left free to live in Judah, but after the assassination of the governor, Gedaliah, the Jews forced him to flee with them into Egypt, where he continued to reproach his countrymen for their idolatry (ch. 44). There is no record of his death in Scripture; acc. to a tradition mentioned by *Tertullian he was stoned to death by the Jews (cf. Heb. 11: 37). The same tradition is found, together with many colourful details, in the 'Rest of the Words of Baruch' (see BARUCH, III AND IV).

The Book of Jeremiah presents him as the most personal and sensitive of the OT prophets, conscious throughout of a close union with God. His prophetic office, which entailed the denunciation of the sins of Judah and the proclamation of their punishment, was in tragic conflict with his love for his people, which led him to intercede repeatedly on his nation's behalf.

Jeremiah's sufferings, caused by the ingratitude and misunderstanding of his people, his prophecy of the destruction of Jerusalem and his weeping over the doomed city, have traditionally been interpreted as figures of the life of Christ, and the W. Church has used the Book, together with the Book of *Lamentations ascribed to him, in her Offices for Passiontide.

For bibl., see foll. entry.

Jeremiah, Book of. The Jewish tradition, which ascribes it to *Jeremiah (q.v.), is ancient and unanimous, and is supported by frequent NT quotations. Many modern critics ascribe a great part of the Book to editors. The promises of restitution and the giving of a New Covenant (chs. 30 and 31) so closely resemble *Deutero-Isaiah that they are frequently attributed to ('deuteronomistic') scribes of the exilic or early post-exilic age; such scribes may also be responsible for the extensive narrative material, which is close to (in some places excerpted from) *Kings, though some scholars ascribe this to Jeremiah's amanuensis *Baruch. The so-called Oracles to the Nations are also often denied to Jeremiah, esp. the prophecy against Babylon (chs. 50 and 51), which contradicts the policy of submission consistently advocated by the prophet in other parts of the Book. The greatest critical problem raised by the Book, however, is the striking difference between the *Septuagint and the *Massoretic texts. The former is about one-eighth shorter than the latter, and in the Septuagint the Oracles against the Nations do not come at the end, but follow 25: 14. This divergence has been explained in many different ways; but most modern critics believe that the order of the Greek is original. The different order of the two texts may, however, arise from the amalgamation of two collections of prophecies, which were combined in two different ways, a theory which would also explain the chronological confusion noticeable throughout the Book. In ch. 36 the prophet himself tells us something of its origin. The prophecies, he says, were written down in the fourth year of Jehoiakim by Baruch, read to the king and burned by him, and then written again with additional material. These prophecies are usually believed to form the kernel of the Book, to which other material was added later, either by Jeremiah himself or by his disciples.

The prophecies generally held to be authentic relate to the ruin of Judah and Jerusalem, to the victories of Nebuchadnezzar, and to the captivity; and the prophet's chief object was the preparation of the Judaean people for receiving the lesson of the Exile. Emphatic in his scorn of idols (e.g. 2: 27 f.; 10: 1–5; 11: 10–13), he extols the transcendence of Yahweh, the ruler of the nations (10: 10; 25: 15 ff.), who are to Him as clay to the potter (18: 5–10). He is the God of justice and goodness, who condemns His people because they have abandoned righteousness (e.g. 7: 4–15). This sense of Divine justice causes Jeremiah's astonishment at seeing the wicked prosper (12: 1 f.), and here is raised for the first time in the OT the problem of the good fortune of sinners and the sufferings of the just. In face of the hostility of the official representatives of the religion of Judah, Jeremiah emphasizes the interior cult of the righteousness of the heart and of the observance of the moral law (22: 3), and has hard words for a purely external cult (6: 20; 7: 21 f.), though he assigns a place to a true ritual worship in Messianic times (17: 26; 31: 14) and insists on the importance of the Sabbath (17: 19–27). He denounces the universality of sin, which reigns in Judah from the highest to the lowest, among young and old, men and women (2: 29–37; 5: 1), and destroys almost all hope of salvation (5: 20–9). But (according to the present form of the Book) in the midst of this world of despair the prophet proclaims hope for the future (chs. 30 and 31). The most striking characteristic of Jer. is the New Covenant (31: 31–4) which God will make with His people, writing His Law in their hearts, and in which the Gentiles, too, will participate (16: 19–21) under the rule of the Messianic King, of the seed of David (23: 5–8; 33: 14–26). The Book of Jeremiah has had a great influence on the formation of exilic and post-exilic Jewish piety, and is one of the most striking adumbrations of the religion of the NT.

Modern comm. incl. B. *Duhm (KHC 11; 1901), W. Rudolph (HAT, 1. 12; 1947), J. Steinmann (Lectio Divina, 9; Paris, 1952), A. Weiser (Das Alte Testament Deutsch, 20/21; 1952; 6th edn., 1969), J. Bright (Anchor Bible [1965]), E. W. Nicholson (Camb. Bib., NEB, 2 vols., 1973–5), R. P. Carroll (London, 1986), W. McKane (ICC, 1986 ff.) and D. R. Jones (New Cent. Bib., 1992). J. Skinner, Prophecy and Religion: Studies in the Life of Jeremiah (1922). G. A. *Smith, Jeremiah (Baird Lecture for 1922 [1923]). W. F. Lofthouse, Jeremiah and the New Covenant (1925). A. C. Welch, Jeremiah: His Time and his Work (1928). V. Herntrich, Jeremia der Prophet und sein Volk (1938). S. [O. P.] *Mowinckel, Zur Komposition des Buches Jeremia (Skrifter utgit av Videnskapsselskapet i Kristiania, 2, historisk-filosofisk Klasse, 1913, no. 5). P. Volz, Studien zum Text des Jeremia (Beiträge zur Wissenschaft vom Alten Testament, 25; 1920). H. H. Rowley, 'The Book of Jeremiah and the Book of Deuteronomy', in Studies in Old Testament Prophecy Presented to Professor Theodore H. Robinson (1950), pp. 157–74, repr. in From Moses to Qumran (1963), pp. 187–208; id., 'The Early Prophecies of Jeremiah in their Setting', Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, 45 (1963), pp. 198–234, repr. in Men of God (1963), pp. 133–68, with extensive refs. E. W. Nicholson, Preaching to the Exiles: A Study in the Prose Tradition of the Book of Jeremiah (1970). R. P. Carroll, From Chaos to Covenant: Uses of Prophecy in the Book of Jeremiah (1981). S. Herrmann in TRE 16 (1987), pp. 568–86, s.v. 'Jeremia/Jeremiahbuch', with extensive bibl.; J. R. Lundbom in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 3 (1992), pp. 706–21, s.v.

Jeremiah, Lamentations of. See LAMENTATIONS OF JEREMIAH.

Jeremy, Epistle of, or Letter of Jeremiah. A short item in the OT *Apocrypha. In what purports to be a letter (cf. Jer. 29: 1–23), the Prophet *Jeremiah (q.v.) declaims to the exiles whom Nebuchadnezzar transported to Babylon (*c.*597 and *c.*586 BC) against the folly of idol-worship. The traditional view that it was written in Hebrew has had its modern defenders; but most scholars hold that the Book was composed in Greek, in which alone it survives. It prob. dates from the 3rd or 2nd cent. BC. In most Greek MSS it is a separate item, and so appears in some modern English Bibles; but in a few MSS, as well as in the *Vulgate (and in the AV and RV), it appears at the conclusion of the Book of *Baruch (Bar. 6).

C. J. Ball in R. H. *Charles (ed.), The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, 1 (Oxford, 1913), pp. 596–611; J. C. Dancy, The Shorter Books of the Apocrypha (Camb. Bib., NEB, 1972), pp. 197–209; C. A. Moore, Daniel, Esther and Jeremiah: The Additions (Anchor Bible, 44; 1977), pp. 317–58. W. Naumann, Untersuchungen über den apokryphen Jeremiasbrief (Beihefte zur ZATW, 25; 1913). H. St J. Thackeray, Some Aspects of the Greek Old Testament (Arthur Davis Memorial Lecture, 1927), pp. 54–64. Eissfeldt, pp. 594 f. E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 3 (pt. 2; Edinburgh, 1987), pp. 743–5, with bibl. See also bibl. to BARUCH, BOOK OF.

Jericho. A town of Palestine, near the Jordan, NE of *Jerusalem. Its miraculous capture by Joshua is narrated in Josh. 6. A later city on the site, in a very fertile valley, was favoured by *Herod the Great and visited by Christ (Mk. 10: 46, Lk. 19: 1, etc.).

K. M. Kenyon and T. A. Holland, Excavations at Jericho (5 vols., 1960–83). Popular account by K. M. Kenyon, Digging up Jericho (1957). J. R. Bartlett, Jericho (Cities of the Biblical World; Guildford, 1982). K. M. Kenyon and others in E. Stern and others (eds.), The New Encyclopedia of Archaeology in the Holy Land, 2 (Jerusalem and New York [1993]), pp. 674–97, s.v.

Jerome. Eng. form of Lat. 'Hieronymus'. The form 'Hierome' is sometimes found in older (e.g. 17th-cent.) English.

Jerome, St (*c.*345–420), Eusebius Hieronymus, biblical scholar. (The date of Jerome's birth at Strido, near *Aquileia, has been the subject of dispute: *Prosper of Aquitaine says that he was 90 when he died, implying that he was born in 330; though a chronology based on Prosper's statement has recently found some support (P. Hamblenne and J. N. D. Kelly), most scholars argue for a later date.) Jerome studied at *Rome, where he was baptized, and then travelled in Gaul before devoting himself to an ascetic life with friends at *Aquileia. About 374 he set out for Palestine. He delayed in *Antioch, where he heard the lectures of *Apollinarius of Laodicea until self-accused in a dream of preferring pagan literature to religious ('Ciceronianus es, non Christianus'). He then settled as a hermit at Chalcis in the Syrian desert for four or five years, and while there learnt Hebrew. On his return to Antioch he was ordained priest by *Paulinus, next spent some time in *Constantinople, and from 382 to 385 was back in Rome, where he acted as secretary to Pope *Damasus and successfully preached asceticism (see MELANIA; PAULA). After Damasus' death he visited Antioch, Egypt, and Palestine, and in 386 finally settled at *Bethlehem, where he ruled a newly founded men's monastery and devoted the rest of his life to study.

Jerome's writings issued from a scholarship unsurpassed in the early Church. His greatest achievement was his translation of most of the Bible into Latin from the original tongues, to which he had been orig. prompted by Damasus (see VULGATE). He also wrote many biblical commentaries, in which he brought a wide range of linguistic and topographical material to bear on the interpretation of the sacred text. Further, he anticipated the Reformers in advocating the acceptance by the Church of the Hebrew *Canon of Scripture, thereby excluding those Books which came to be called the *Apocrypha. In addition to his biblical work, he translated and continued *Eusebius' 'Chronicle'; compiled a 'De Viris Illustribus', a bibliography of ecclesiastical writers; and translated into Latin works by *Origen and *Didymus. His correspondence is of great interest and historical importance. His passionate nature also led him to throw himself into many controversies and to attack *Arianism, *Pelagianism, and *Origenism (the last of which had led to a bitter quarrel with his friend *Rufinus of Aquileia who had remained faithful to Origen). In some of his letters to friends and in his tracts against *Helvidius and *Jovinian, he advocated extreme asceticism.

Since the 13th cent. he has often been depicted in art with a red hat, on the supposition that Damasus created him a cardinal. He is also often represented with a lion at his feet. Feast day, 30 Sept. See also PSALTER.

Jerome himself gives a list of his writings prior to AD 392 in his De Viris Illustribus, 135. Earliest collected edn. by *Erasmus (9 vols., Basle, 1516). The best collected edn. is that of D. *Vallarsi (11 vols., Verona, 1734–42), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 22–30. A modern edn. in CCSL 72–80 etc., 1958 ff., is in progress. Separate works include Letters, ed. J. Hilberg (CSEL 54–6; 1910–18) and, with Fr. tr., by J. Labourt (Collection des Universités de France; 8 vols., 1949–63); and Comm. on Mt. ed., with Fr. tr., by É. Bonnard (SC 242 and 259; 1977–9). Eng. trs. of Liber Quaestionum Hebraicarum in Genesim by C. T. R. Haward (Oxford Early Christian Studies, 1995), of De Viris Illustribus by E. C. Richardson (NPNCF, 2nd ser. 3, 1892, pp. 359–84), and of Letters and other select works by W. H. Fremantle and others (ibid. 6, 1893). 'Select Letters' ed., with Eng. tr., by F. A. Wright (Loeb, 1933). Further Eng. tr. of Letters, by C. C. Mierow, with notes by T. C. Lawler (ACW 33, etc.; 1963 ff.). B. Lambert, OSB, Bibliotheca Hieronymiana Manuscripta: La Tradition manuscrite des œuvres de saint Jérôme (4 vols., Instrumenta Patristica, 4; 1969–72).

Extended studies by G. Grützmacher (3 vols., Leipzig, 1901–8) and F. Cavallera, SJ (SSL 1 and 2; 1922; all pub.). Other studies by O. Zöckler (Gotha, 1865), P. Monceaux (Paris, 1932; Eng. tr. of pt. 1, 1933), A. Penna (Turin and Rome [1949]), P. Antin, OSB (Paris, 1951), J. Steinmann (ibid., 1958; Eng. tr., 1959), M. Testard (ibid., 1969), and J. N. D. Kelly (London, 1975). Miscellanea Geronimiana: Scritti varii pubblicati nel XV centenario dalla morte di San Girolamo (Rome, 1930). F. X. Murphy, CSSR (ed.), A Monument to Saint Jerome: Essays on some Aspects of his Life, Works and Influence (1952). Y. Bodin, Saint Jérôme et l'Église (Théologie historique, 6; 1966). P. Antin, OSB, Recueil sur saint Jérôme (Collection Latomus, 95; 1968). Y.-M. Duval, Le Livre de Jonas dans la Littérature Chrétienne grecque et latine: Sources et influences du Commentaire sur Jonas de saint Jérôme (2 vols., Études Augustiniennes, 1973); P. Jay, L'Exégèse de saint Jérôme d'après son 'Commentaire sur Isaïe' (ibid., 1985). Y.-M. Duval (ed.), Jérôme entre l'Occident et l'Orient . . .: Actes du Colloque de Chantilly (ibid., 1988). S. Rebenich, Hieronymus und sein Kreis (Historia, Einzelschriften, 72; 1992). P. Hamblenne, 'La longévité de Jérôme: Prosper avait-il raison?', Latomus, 28 (1969), pp. 1081–119; P. Jay, 'Sur la date de naissance de Saint Jérôme', Revue des Études latines, 51 (1973), pp. 262–80. H. F. D. Sparks, 'Jerome as Biblical Scholar', in P. R. Ackroyd and C. F. Evans (eds.), The Cambridge History of the Bible, 1 (Cambridge, 1970), pp. 510–41. Bardenhewer, 3, pp. 605–54; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 394–404 and 632–4. W. H. Fremantle in DCB 3 (1882), pp. 29–50, s.v. 'Hieronymus (4)'; J. Forget in DTC 8 (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 894–983; F. Cavallera, SJ, in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 4 (1949), cols. 889–97, s.v.; J. Gribomont, OSB, in Dict. Sp. 8 (1974), cols. 901–18, s.v.; H. Hagendahl and J. H. Waszink in RAC 15 (1991), cols. 117–39, s.v. 'Hieronymus'. See also bibl. to VULGATE.

Jerome Emiliani, St (1481–1537), the founder of the *Somaschi. A native of *Venice, after service in the army he was ordained priest in 1518, and devoted himself for the rest of his life to work among the poor and afflicted, establishing orphanages, hospitals, and houses for fallen women. To foster this work he founded in 1532 a society, with its mother-house at the village of Somasca, between Milan and Bergamo. He was canonized in 1767 and made the patron saint of orphans and abandoned children by *Pius XI in 1928. Feast day, 8 Feb. (formerly 20 July).

Life by A. Tortora (Milan, 1620), repr. in AASS, Feb. 2 (1658), pp. 220–74. G. Landini, S. Girolamo Miani dalle testimonianze processuali, dai biografi, dai documenti editi e inediti fino ad oggi (1947). S. Raviolo, San Girolamo Emiliani (1947). S. Raiteri in Dict. Sp. 8 (1974), cols. 929–35, s.v. 'Jérôme (9) Miani', with bibl. col. 932. See also bibl. to SOMASCHI.

Jerome of Prague (*c.*1370–1416), Bohemian Reformer and friend of J. *Huss. Very little is known of his early life. He was prob. a native of Prague, where he studied and came under the influence of Huss and of the *Wycliffite philosophy. Encouraged by Huss to visit the European centres of learning, after taking his degree at Prague he made his way (1398) to *Oxford. Here he studied the theological writings of Wycliffe, esp. his 'Dialogus' and 'Trialogus', and brought them back to *Paris and Prague (*c.*1402). Acc. to his own testimony he was in *Jerusalem in 1403; he was in Paris again in 1404, at Heidelberg in 1405 and Cologne in 1406. In all these universities his exaggerated *Realism aroused much opposition. On his return to Prague in 1407 he took an active part in the religious controversies and became a leader of the nationalist university students. Wishing to gain also the neighbouring countries to Wycliffe's ideas, he had a discussion with King Sigismund of Hungary at Ofen in 1410 on the vices of the clergy. Being declared suspect of heresy, he fled to Moravia, but in 1412 he was back at Prague, where he violently attacked the bull of *John XXIII proclaiming an Indulgence for the crusade against Ladislaus of Naples. In 1413 he accompanied Grand Duke Witold of Cracow to Russia and Lithuania, and aroused suspicion by showing himself favourable to heterodox rites. In 1415 he followed Huss to *Constance. He escaped when he realized his danger, but was brought back to the Council in chains. After Huss's death (6 July), which led to a schism in Bohemia, the Council wished to avoid a second execution and applied pressure to obtain a retractation from Jerome. On 11 Sept. 1415 he consented to read a document anathematizing the teaching of Wycliffe and Huss and accepting the authority of the Papacy and the Council. The sincerity of this abjuration, however, soon became suspect, and the trial was resumed in May 1416. Jerome defended himself with great eloquence, but in the last part of his speech he took back his abjuration, proclaimed the innocence and sanctity of Huss, and his own adherence to the teaching of Wycliffe on all points except *transubstantiation, which he accepted. After a last attempt to obtain his submission he was condemned to the stake, where he died with great courage, reciting hymns to the BVM.

The principal sources are the acts of the Council of Constance, and works dealing with Huss (q.v.). Processus Iudiciarius contra Jeronimum de Praga habitus Viennae A. 1410–1412, ed. L. Klicman (Česká Akademie Císaře Františka Josefa pro Vědy, Slovesnost a Umění v Praze, Historický Archiv, 12; Prague, 1898). F. Šmahel, Jeroným Pražský (Prague, 1966), summarized [in Germ.] in Historica, 13 (Prague, 1966), pp. 81–111. R. R. Betts, 'Jerome of Prague', University of Birmingham Historical Journal, 1 (1947), pp. 51–91; P. P. Bernard, 'Jerome of Prague, Austria and the Hussites', Church History, 27 (1958), pp. 3–22. BRUO 3 (1959), pp. 1512 f., s.v. 'Prague, Jerome of'.

Jerusalem. Referred to in the Egyptian Execration Texts (mid-19th cent. BC) as 'Rushalimum' and again in the *Tell el-Amarna Tablets (14th cent. BC) as 'Urusalim' (then subject to Egypt), the city became the capital of Judah, the site of its religious sanctuary (the *Temple, q.v.), and as such the 'Holy City'. The town, with its highest point *c.*2,680 ft. above sea-level, controls the north–south route along the hilly backbone of the country, though it stands apart from the coastal route connecting Egypt with Syria and Mesopotamia. The earliest Jerusalem lies to the south of the present Old City, on the eastern of the two ridges running south from the present walls. To the east, the *Cedron valley bounds both the Old City and the original site. The latter is separated from the western ridge by the Tyropoeon valley, now largely silted up. The Hinnom Valley (see GEHENNA) bounds the Old City and the western ridge on the west and curves round to the east to join the Cedron.

Archaeological evidence indicates the existence of habitation on the eastern portion of the site (Ophel) as early as *c.*3000 BC. In pre-Israelite times the inhabitants of the township seem to have been of mixed race. Ezek. 16: 3 appears to imply that they included Amorites and Hittites, while elsewhere (e.g. Josh. 15: 63) they are called 'Jebusites'. About 1000 BC the Jebusite stronghold known as 'Zion' was captured by *David, who refortified it as his own city (the 'City of David') and made Jerusalem, which had previously belonged to the territory of neither the northern nor the southern tribes, the capital of the United Monarchy. *Solomon, his successor, built the Temple some 950 ft. to the north of the original north wall, and enlarged the city by fortifying the intervening space. Settlement gradually extended on to the western ridge and by the 7th cent. BC, if not earlier, a substantial area there was walled. About 700 BC Jerusalem was threatened by attack from the Assyrians (2 Kgs. 18 f.). Among the measures taken by Hezekiah to counter this attack was the cutting of the 'Siloam Tunnel' through solid rock a distance of some 1,700 ft. to carry the water of the spring Gihon from the exposed east flank of the town to a rock-cut cistern on the west side. About 597 BC, and again *c.*586 BC, it was captured and devastated by Nebuchadnezzar, and many of its inhabitants were deported to Babylon (2 Kgs. 24 f.).

The return from exile was followed, after some years, by the rebuilding of the Temple, in 520–515 BC (the 'Second Temple'). The walls of the city were not restored until the time of *Nehemiah (*c.*444 BC). After the Exile the Jews were an ecclesiastically governed state under the suzerainty first of Persia and then of the Greeks, the Ptolemies, and the Seleucids. This period ended with the *Maccabaean wars of the 2nd cent. BC, during which the Temple was profaned under *Antiochus Epiphanes (167 BC). After the rededication of the Temple in 164 BC, there followed a revival of Jewish national glory under a short dynasty of priest-kings. During this period the city was extended on to the northern end of the western ridge. The Maccabaean period ended with the Roman conquest by Pompey (63 BC), after which the country was ruled directly or indirectly from Rome. The Temple was extensively renovated by *Herod the Great, who ruled as a vassal of Rome from 37 to 4 BC. The turbulence of the people and the misgovernment of Roman procurators and local rulers combined to produce the rebellion of AD 66, which was followed by a four-year siege, and, on the fall of Jerusalem in 70, the extermination or removal of most of the population and the destruction of the city, incl. the Temple. A small and scattered population survived, however, until Hadrian, after the Jewish revolt in his reign, refounded the place as a Gentile city under the name of *Aelia Capitolina (AD 135).

The Christian history of the city begins with the short ministry of the Lord, culminating in His Crucifixion and Resurrection. There the Apostles lived and taught for some time after *Pentecost, and after they had scattered farther afield they met in Jerusalem with the 'elders' of the Church for the first Christian council (Acts 15; c. AD 49). St *James, 'the Lord's brother', presided over the local Church after the dispersion of the Twelve, and it seems likely that the kinsmen of the Lord exercised some measure of leadership among the neighbouring Christian community until the foundation of Aelia Capitolina and the banishment at that time of all Jews from the region. From that date the local Church was purely Gentile in composition.

It was not until the visit of St *Helena (c. AD 326), the mother of *Constantine, and the beginning of the fashion of venerating the holy places set by her visit, that the Christian see became of any importance. Until the 5th cent. the see was suffragan to *Caesarea. But at the Council of *Chalcedon (451) the bishopric (see JUVENAL) was granted patriarchal dignity. The see never attained, however, to the prestige of the other patriarchates, and when the Crusaders held the city in the 12th cent. the (E.) patriarch lived in *Constantinople. Though for some periods afterwards the patriarchs came back to Jerusalem, they have been permanently settled there only since 1845; since the first half of the 16th cent. the patriarch has always been a Greek, although the great majority of the faithful were and are Arabs. A Latin patriarchate was in existence from 1099 till 1291, and nominally till 1374, and was again constituted in 1847. There is also a (Gregorian) *Armenian patriarchate, and the *Melchite Patr. of Antioch adds the title of Jerusalem to his others.

The Christian centre of Jerusalem is the Church of the Resurrection, commonly known outside the country as the Church of the *Holy Sepulchre. The site of the Temple was long in Muslim hands, and is occupied mostly by the *Dome of the Rock. There are numerous other holy places within and outside the city. Where both Orthodox and Latins claim that their particular site is the genuine scene of the mystery commemorated, the Easterns have usually the more ancient tradition, the Latin sites generally having been established at earliest in Crusading times.

The present city covers only part of that of NT times. During the reign of Herod Agrippa (AD 40–4) the whole of the western ridge was enclosed, with a wall joining the southern tip of the original city on the eastern ridge, and to the north the walls were advanced by c. half a mile. When Aelia Capitolina was built on the ruins of Jerusalem, the whole of the area to the south, including the entire original city, was left outside the walls, while the north wall of Aelia followed that of Herod the Great. The walls of the Old City now follow approximately those of Aelia Capitolina. The traditional sites of *Calvary and the Holy Sepulchre lie in the area outside the walls of the town of Herod the Great, but inside those of Herod Agrippa built some 14 years after the date of the Crucifixion, and are therefore within the present Old City. The alternative site to the north of the present wall (see GORDON'S CALVARY) can no longer be accepted. The walls of the present city date from the 16th cent., though much of the work done in the Frankish rebuilding (*c.*1230) still remains.

L. H. Vincent, OP, and F. M. Abel, OP, Jérusalem: Recherches de topographie, d'archéologie et d'histoire (2 vols. bound in 4, 1912–26); J. Simons, SJ, Jerusalem in the Old Testament: Researches and Theories (Leiden, 1952); L. H. Vincent, OP, and A. M. Steve, OP, Jérusalem de l'Ancien Testament: Recherches d'archéologie et d'histoire (3 parts in 2 vols. + 2 vols. of plates, 1954–6). K. M. Kenyon, Digging up Jerusalem (1974); Y. Yadin (ed.), Jerusalem Revealed: Archaeology in the Holy City 1968–1974 (Jerusalem, 1975); N. Avigad, Discovering Jerusalem (Oxford, 1984; tr. from Heb. pub. at Jerusalem, 1980). F. E. Peters, Jerusalem: The Holy City in the Eyes of Chroniclers, Visitors, Pilgrims, and Prophets from the Days of Abraham to the Beginnings of Modern Times (Princeton, NJ [1985]), with Eng. tr. of texts. G. A. *Smith, Jerusalem: The Topography, Economics and History from the Earliest Times to A.D. 70 (2 vols., 1907–8). J. Jeremias, Jerusalem zur Zeit Jesu (4 parts, 1923–37; 3rd edn., 1962; Eng. tr., 1969). J. [D.] Wilkinson, Jerusalem as Jesus knew it: Archaeology as Evidence ([1978; popular]); id., Jerusalem Pilgrims before the Crusades (Warminster [1977]), with convenient Eng. tr. of texts. E. D. Hunt, Holy Land Pilgrimages in the Later Roman Empire, A.D. 312–460 (Oxford, 1982). H. Busse and G. Kretschmar, Jerusalemer Heiligtumstraditionen im altkirchlicher und frühislamischer Zeit (Abhandlungen des Deutschen Palästinavereins [8]; Wiesbaden, 1987). P. W. L. Walker, Holy City, Holy Places? Christian Attitudes to Jerusalem and the Holy Land in the Fourth Century (Oxford Early Christian Studies, 1990). On modern Jerusalem, K. Prag, Jerusalem (Blue Guide, 1989). On the Greek Patriarchate, M. *Le Quien, OP, Oriens Christianus, 3 (1740), pp. 101–528; C. Papadopoulos, Ἱστορία τῆς Ἐκκλησίας Ἱεροσολύμων (1910); T. Dowling, The Orthodox Greek Patriarchate of Jerusalem (1913). J. D. Purvis, Jerusalem, the Holy City: A Bibliography (2 vols., Metuchen, NJ, and London, 1988–91). L. H. Vincent in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 4 (1949), cols. 898–966, s.v.; P. J. King in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 3 (1992), pp. 747–66, s.v.; B. Mazar and others in E. Stern and others (eds.), The New Encyclopedia of Archaeological Excavations in the Holy Land, 2 (Jerusalem and New York [1993]), pp. 698–804, s.v. There are also continuing series of technical reports on excavations undertaken since 1960.

Jerusalem, Anglican Bishopric in. In 1841 a bishopric was set up in *Jerusalem by the joint efforts of England and Prussia to serve the Anglicans and Protestants of Syria, Chaldaea, Egypt, and *Ethiopia. The scheme, which provided that the bishop was to be nominated by England and Prussia alternately, excited opposition both among *Lutherans, who disliked any semblance of episcopal order, and *High Church Anglicans, who objected to a virtual union with a Protestant body, without guarantees for the preservation of Church order or doctrine. The first holder of the see was M. S. *Alexander (q.v.), a Christian convert from orthodox Judaism. Estrangement between the two communities increased as the numbers of Germans living in Palestine grew, and the scheme finally collapsed in 1886, when the Anglicans required that the bishop should always be consecrated acc. to the Anglican rite and should assent to the *Thirty-Nine Articles. Since then the see has been maintained by the Anglicans alone. It was an archbishopric from 1957 to 1976, when the Episcopal Church of Jerusalem and the Middle East was established. Besides serving the spiritual needs of Anglicans in the area, it does missionary work and is a valued point of contact for Anglicanism with the E. Churches and, to a lesser degree, with the Latin Churches in the E.

[H. Abeken, anon.], Das evangelische Bisthum in Jerusalem: Geschichtliche Darlegung mit Urkunden (Berlin, 1842). Eng. tr. of this work, with additions, in W. H. Hechler (ed.), The Jerusalem Bishopric (1883). K. Schmidt-Clausen, Vorweggenommene Einheit: Die Gründung des Bistums Jerusalem im Jahre 1841 (Arbeiten zur Geschichte und Theologie des Luthertums, 15; 1965). P. J. Welch, 'Anglican Churchmen and the Establishment of the Jerusalem Bishopric', JEH 8 (1957), pp. 193–204, with refs. S. L. Ollard in DECH, pp. 298 f., s.v.

Jerusalem, Knights of St John in. See HOSPITALLERS.

Jerusalem, Synod of (1672). The most important modern Council in the *Orthodox Church, held in the Basilica of the Nativity at *Bethlehem (hence sometimes known as the 'Synod of Bethlehem'). It was convened by *Dositheus (q.v.), Patr. of Jerusalem, and sought to repudiate the movement fostered by Cyril *Lucar towards accommodation with *Calvinism. Along with the Synod of *Jassy (1642) it marked the closest approximation of E. Orthodoxy, of which it desired to be fully representative, to *Tridentine Catholicism. It decreed, inter alia, that the Church is equally infallible with Scripture; that predestination depends on foreknowledge and takes account of works; that God cannot be the cause of evil; that the Church has a part in the mediatorial office of Christ; that justification is through faith working by love; that natural virtue is to be distinguished from that of the regenerate; that souls which have fallen from grace may be purified in Hades after death, so as to be fit for the final vision of God; that there are seven sacraments; that *receptionism, or the doctrine that the beneficial operation of the sacrament depends upon the faith of the recipient, is to be condemned; that Baptism is an effectual sign of grace; that in the Eucharist the elements are transubstantiated (though doubt has been sometimes expressed as to whether the philosophical implications of μετουσιοῦσθαι are the same as those of transubstantiari); and that 2 Esdras, Tobit, Judith, Wisdom, Ecclus., the Song of the Three Children, Susanna, Bel and the Dragon, and 1–3 Maccabees are all to be regarded as canonical.

Acta first pr. by the *Maurist, M. Foucqueret, OSB, Synodus Bethleemitica adversus Calvinistas Haereticos (Paris, 1676); repr. in Hardouin, 9, cols. 179–274; also in E. J. Kimmel (ed.), Monumenta Fidei Ecclesiae Orientalis (Jena, 1850), 1, pp. 325–487, and in I. N. Karmires, Τὰ δογματικὰ καὶ συμβολικὰ Μνημεῖα τῆς Ὀρθοδόξου Καθολικῆς Ἐκκλησίας, 2 (Athens, 1953), pp. 694–773. Eng. tr., with tr. of Cyril Lucar's Confession of 1631 in an appendix, by J. N. W. B. Robertson, The Acts and Decrees of the Synod of Jerusalem (1899). [J. C.] S. Runciman, The Great Church in Captivity (Cambridge, 1968), bk. 2, ch. 9, esp. pp. 351 f. See also further works cited s.v. DOSITHEUS.

Jesse window. A window whose design is based on the descent of Jesus from the royal line of *David, in most cases taking the form of a tree springing from Jesse, the father of David, and ending in Jesus or the Virgin and Holy Child, with the intermediary descendants placed on scrolls of foliage branching out of each other. Examples of the window are to be seen at the cathedrals of *Wells and *Chartres, St George's, Hanover Square (a 16th-cent. window from Antwerp), and in *Dorchester Abbey, near Oxford, where the tree forms the mullions.

A. Watson, The Early Iconography of the Tree of Jesse (1934); C. Woodforde, 'A Group of Fourteenth Century Windows showing the Tree of Jesse', Journal of the British Society of Master Glass Painters, 6 (1937), pp. 184–90; H. T. Kirby, 'The "Jesse Tree" motif in Stained Glass. A comparative study of some English examples', The Connoisseur, 141 (1958), pp. 77–82; id., 'The "Jesse Tree" motif in stained glass: a comparative study of some English examples—Part 2', The Connoisseur Year Book, 1959 [1958], pp. 85–90.

Jesu, Dulcis Memoria. The celebrated late 12th-cent. poem, very familiar through the translations of sections of it in the English hymns 'Jesu, the very thought of Thee With sweetness fills my breast' (by E. *Caswall) and 'Jesu! the very thought is sweet! In that dear name all heart-joys meet' (by J. M. *Neale). The intense mysticism and honeyed beauty of its language are unsurpassed in medieval devotional literature, though the complete poem (168 lines) suffers from a certain monotony in ideas. It has traditionally (but certainly wrongly) been ascribed to St *Bernard of Clairvaux. A. *Wilmart has shown that it is prob. the work of an English Cistercian. Sections of it have been used as a *Sequence and an *Office Hymn for the Feast of the Holy *Name. It is sometimes known as the 'Rosy Sequence' or as the 'Joyful' (or 'Jubilee') 'Rhythm'.

The best edn. of the Lat. text is that in A. Wilmart, OSB, Le 'Jubilus' dit de Saint Bernard (Storia e Letteratura, 2; Rome, 1944), pp. 183–97. Convenient text also in Oxford Book of Medieval Latin Verse (new edn. by F. J. E. Raby, 1959), no. 233, pp. 347–53. H. Lausberg, Der Hymnus 'Jesu dulcis memoria' (Hymnologische und hagiographische Studien, 1; Munich, 1967 [an exhaustive study]). E. *Gilson, 'Sur le Iesu Dulcis Memoria', Speculum, 3 (1928), pp. 322–34. J. Szövérffy, Die Annalen der lateinischen Hymnendichtung, 2 (1965), pp. 79–83.

Jesuits. The Society of Jesus, founded by St *Ignatius Loyola (q.v.) with nine companions, was approved by *Paul III in the bull '*Regimini militantis ecclesiae' in 1540. The constitutions of the Society, constructed by Ignatius and his secretary, Juan de Polanco, were officially approved by the membership in 1558. Beyond securing the spiritual benefit of its members, the more immediate aim of the Society was through its various ministries to labour 'for the propagation of the faith' and the promotion of Christian piety, esp. through the '*Spiritual Exercises' written by Ignatius. The most characteristic institutions of the Society, however, were the humanist schools, not foreseen at the beginning but founded in great numbers everywhere in the world after the first opened in Messina in 1548. Among the most important schools of the first generation were the Roman College (*Gregorianum) and the German College in Rome, where several decades later the Jesuits undertook the direction of the *English College. Contrary to what is often said, the Society was not founded to oppose the *Reformation, but by 1550 it began under St Peter *Canisius to be intensely engaged with the situation in Germany, and then with similar situations elsewhere. None the less, the Society flourished during its first century esp. in the Iberian and Italian peninsulas.

Peculiar to the Jesuits is a special vow to travel for ministry anywhere in the world that the Pope may order, an indication of the missionary aim that motivated Ignatius and his companions from the beginning. Hardly had the Society been approved when St *Francis Xavier established it in *India and *Japan and Manuel de Nóbrega in *Brazil. Several other features pointing to a missionary and strongly ministerial character also distinguish Jesuits from other religious orders: they are bound by vows not to accept any position in the hierarchy except under direct constraint by the Pope; they have no distinctive habit; are exempt from the obligation to chant or recite the *Office in choir. At an early stage careful provision was made for the spiritual and intellectual formation of those entering the Order and for their extended probation after admission. Superiors hold office for limited periods, usually six years. Supreme authority is vested in a General Congregation representative of the members; this body has to be summoned on the death of a General to elect his successor and if a lesser Congregation, drawn from the delegates of the provinces sent at intervals to report to the General, requires him to summon it. For routine administration authority is concentrated in the General, who is elected for life.

Often with their schools as their basis of operation, the Jesuits engaged extensively in preaching, adult education through series of lectures on Scripture, giving the 'Spiritual Exercises', the hearing of confessions, and in 'missions' (an early form of religious 'revival') to remote parts of the countryside that might last several weeks. They were esp. noted for promoting more frequent reception of the Eucharist. They taught catechism, which they often set to tunes, and used children to teach other children. Jesuits also founded orphanages, half-way houses for reformed prostitutes, and other 'works of mercy', which they then turned over to confraternities under autonomous lay management. At Ignatius's death the Society had about a thousand members. During the first hundred years it included, besides those already mentioned, D. *Laínez (the second General), St Francis *Borgia, St *Aloysius Gonzaga, St Robert *Bellarmine, C. *Aquaviva, F. *Suárez, and M. Ricci. By 1600 the Order numbered over 8,500 members in 23 provinces, grouped in four assistancies, whose heads resided with the General. Under Aquaviva (General, 1581–1615) the Order achieved an organization of high efficiency, with an elaborate code, the Ratio Studiorum, to govern its work in education. At the beginning of the 17th cent. the Society appeared secure both in Europe and the mission field. In 1623 a province was formed in England, where St Edmund *Campion and R. *Parsons had been sent in 1580 to work alongside the seminary priests among the *recusants. In the prevailing situation they could readily be represented as especially obnoxious, not least because they had an effective organization behind them, and there was some hostility towards them even among a few English RCs. In France they made little progress because of the Wars of Religion and the influence of *Gallicanism, but they were protected by *Henry IV, who chose a Jesuit as his confessor, starting a tradition which lasted for nearly two centuries in France and spread to other courts. In Flanders the Jesuits made a large contribution to the establishment of Catholic reform, and the Jesuit J. *Bollandus inaugurated the publication of critical editions of lives of the saints (see ACTA SANCTORUM).

In the later 17th cent. the Jesuits met with serious opposition within the RC Church. The debate on the question of free will and grace which *Paul V tried to close by ending the 'Congregatio *De Auxiliis' was reopened on a new foundation by C. O. *Jansen in a work so learned that few immediately grasped its full implications. His followers attacked the Jesuits for their lax casuistry, and not long afterwards the Jesuits also came under attack on the question of *accommodation in the Chinese Rites controversy. A combination of the opponents of the Jesuits, led by the Parlement of Paris, compelled Louis XV to withdraw his protection and expel them from France in 1764. In 1759, under the influence of the Marquis de Pombal, the Society was banished from *Portugal, and in 1767, by order of the Count of Aranda, chief minister of Charles III, 5,000 Jesuits were deported from Spain and its Empire. In 1773 Pope *Clement XIV gave way to the demands of France, Spain, Portugal, and many of the Italian states, and issued the brief '*Dominus ac Redemptor' suppressing the Society.

The suppression did not mean that the Society was extinguished. In Austria and Germany Jesuits were allowed to teach, and they were protected by both Frederick II of Prussia and the Empress Catherine of Russia. In White Russia, indeed, a noviciate was opened in 1780. They also survived and were able to retain their possessions in England, where the government took no action and the local RC bishops were deterred from enforcing the brief by fears of the penalties of *praemunire. In 1794 they established their school at *Stonyhurst (q.v.). The mission in Maryland, USA (founded in 1634), continued almost unaffected. Elsewhere they gradually managed to re-establish themselves, and in 1814 the Society was formally restored by *Pius VII in the bull 'Sollicitudo omnium ecclesiarum'.

At present the Society is to be found in most countries of the world, and in 1990 had some 24,500 members. Jesuits are responsible for numerous institutions in Rome (including the Vatican Radio Station) and for schools and academic centres in many parts of the world, as well as for supplying priests in hundreds of parishes. They also edit a number of periodicals, incl. Gregorianum, Analecta Bollandiana, Biblica, Études, Civiltà Cattolica, The Heythrop Journal, Theological Studies, and The Month.

D. Bartoli, SJ, Dell'istoria della Compagnia de Giesu (5 vols., Genoa and Rome, 1656–73). J. Cretineau-Joly, SJ, Histoire religieuse, politique et littéraire de la Compagnie de Jésus (6 vols., 1844–6). W. V. Bangert, SJ, A History of the Society of Jesus (St Louis, 1972; 2nd edn., 1986). J. Brodrick, SJ, The Origin of the Jesuits (1940); id., The Progress of the Jesuits, 1556–79 (1946). W. V. Bangert, SJ, and T. M. McCoog, SJ, Jerome Nadal, SJ, 1507–1580: Tracking the First Generation of Jesuits (Chicago [1992]); J. W. O'Malley, The First Jesuits (Cambridge, Mass., and London, 1993). Convenient Eng. tr. of The Constitutions of the Society of Jesus, with comm. and introd., by G. E. Ganss, SJ (St Louis, 1970). Further comm. on them by A. M. de Aldama, SJ (6 vols., Rome, 1973–89; Eng. tr., St Louis, Mo., 1989 ff.). M. Sievernich, SJ, and G. Switek, SJ (eds.), Ignatianisch: Eigenart und Methode der Gesellschaft Jesu (Freiburg, etc., 1990). J. de Guibert, SJ, La Spiritualité de la Compagnie de Jésus (posthumous; Bibliotheca Instituti Historici S.I., 4; Rome, 1953; Eng. tr., Chicago, 1964). J.-F. Gilmont, SJ, Les écrits spirituels des premiers Jésuites: Inventaire commenté (Subsidia ad historiam S.I., 3; Rome, 1961). G. Codina Mir, SJ, Aux Sources de la Pédagogie des Jésuites: Le 'Modus Parisiensis' (Bibliotheca Instituti Historici S.I., 28; Rome, 1968). A. Scaglione, The Liberal Arts and the Jesuit College System (Amsterdam and Philadelphia, 1986). A. L. Martin, The Jesuit Mind: The Mentality of an Elite in Early Modern France (Ithaca, NY, and London, 1988). Valuable account of the suppression of the Society in Pastor, 38 ('1951' [1952]), based on unpub. sources placed at the author's disposal by the Society. Augustin de Backer, SJ, Aloys de Backer, SJ, and A. Carayon, SJ, Bibliothèque de la Compagnie de Jésus (ed. C. Sommervogel, SJ, 10 vols., 1890–9, with 2 suppl. vols. by E. M. Rivière, SJ, 1911–13); L. Polgár, SJ, Bibliographie sur l'histoire de la Compagnie de Jésus 1901–1980 (6 vols., Rome, 1981–90). L. Koch, SJ, Jesuiten-Lexikon: Die Gesellschaft Jesu einst und jetzt (1934). Monumenta Historica Societatis Jesu (Madrid, 1894 ff., and Rome, 1925 ff.); Archivum Historicum Societatis Jesu (Rome, 1932 ff.).

H. Foley, SJ, Records of the English Province of the Society of Jesus (7 vols. bound in 8, 1877–83). M. V. Hay, The Jesuits and the Popish Plot (1934). E. F. Sutcliffe, SJ, Bibliography of the English Province of the Society of Jesus, 1773–1953 (1957). T. Hughes, SJ, The History of the Society of Jesus in North America (3 vols. bound in 4, 1907–17). H. Fouqueray, SJ, Histoire de la Compagnie de Jésus en France des origines à la suppression, 1528–1762 (5 vols., 1910–25). A. Astráin, SJ, Historia de la Compañía de Jesús en la Asistencia de España (7 vols., 1902–25). L. Frias, SJ, Historia de la Compañía de Jesús en su Asistencia moderna de España (2 vols., 1923–44). F. Rodrigues, SJ, História da Companhia de Jesus na Assistência de Portugal (4 vols. in 7 parts, 1931–50). P. Tacchi Venturi, SJ, Storia della Compagnia di Gesù in Italia [1534–1556] (2 vols. in 4, 1910–51), cont. as vols. 3 and 4 by M. Scaduto, SJ, L'epoca di Giacomo Lainez (2 vols., 1964–74). B. Duhr, SJ, Geschichte der Jesuiten in den Ländern deutscher Zunge (4 vols. bound in 5, 1907–28). J. A. Otto, Gründung der neuen Jesuitenmission durch General Pater Johann Philipp Roothaan (1939). See also bibls. under separate countries. Heimbucher, 2, pp. 130–340 and 666 f. X. Le Bachelet and others in DTC 8 (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 1012–1108; J. F. Broderick in NCE 7 (1967), pp. 898–909, s.v.; A. Derville, SJ, and others, in Dict. Sp. 8 (1974), cols. 958–1065, s.v.; also pub. separately, with introd. by A. Guillermou, as Les Jésuites: Spiritualité et activités. Jalons d'une histoire (1974). See also works cited under IGNATIUS LOYOLA, ST.

Jesus. The Gk. form (Ἰησοῦς) of the Heb. Joshua (יֵשׁוּעַ; lit. 'Yahweh saves'), who is thus referred to in the NT at Heb. 4: 8 (AV). By Divine command (Lk. 1: 31, Mt. 1: 21) the name was bestowed on the Infant Christ, the Saviour of mankind.

Jesus, Name of. See NAME OF JESUS.

Jesus, Sayings of. See SAYINGS OF JESUS.

Jesus Christ. Jesus of *Nazareth is called by His followers '*Christ', χριστός, translating the Hebrew מָשִׁיחַ, i.e. (God's) *Messiah or anointed one (Mt. 1: 16). His historical existence was not doubted by early Roman sources (*Pliny, *Tacitus, *Suetonius), by *Josephus, or later by the *Talmud, and the modern so-called 'Christ-myth' theory (that Jesus never lived) has convinced few. Jesus was apparently born shortly before the death in 4 BC of *Herod the Great and was executed in or around AD 30 after condemnation by Pontius *Pilate (for discussion of dates, see CHRONOLOGY, BIBLICAL).

The Gospel of St *Mark (c. AD 70) reports His *Baptism by *John the Baptist in the river *Jordan, His *Temptation in the desert, and a ministry of preaching, teaching, and healing in *Galilee and *Judaea. The narrative centres on a *Transfiguration. Jesus chose twelve disciples (*Apostles) and attracted other supporters, including women. Crowds gathered, but the religious leadership was hostile and finally handed him over to Pilate for trial and *crucifixion. He was buried but the tomb was found empty, and a 'young man' in white (Mk. 16: 5) told the women that He had been raised. Mark's narrative is generally followed in the Gospels of St *Matthew and St *Luke but substantially expanded, notably by their birth and infancy stories, a considerable body of teaching from Jesus and a little from the Baptist, a few new incidents, and their varying accounts of *Resurrection appearances, including in Matthew a command to 'disciple all nations', baptizing them into the three-fold name, and in Luke-Acts the *Ascension.

The author of St *John's Gospel evidently had access to an alternative narrative tradition which gave greater prominence to Jesus' activity in Judaea and probably included a collection of 'signs'. He omits the *Synoptists' accounts of the institution of the *Eucharist at the Last Supper, but includes a Eucharistic section in his discourse on the bread of life (6: 51–8). He makes no mention of a Transfiguration, presumably because his whole story reveals the glory of Jesus. Similarly, the Synoptic accounts of the temptations, *exorcisms, and agony in *Gethsemane, all highly important in Mark's portrayal of Jesus' struggle against evil, find no place in John's representation of Jesus as the man from heaven who is barely touched by human weakness and pain. However, even John is clear that Jesus was a human being, whose mother *Mary and *brethren (7: 3) were known (Mk. 6: 3 and Mt. 13: 56 include sisters), and who suffered an ignominious death on a cross outside *Jerusalem. He tells of other disciples unknown to the Synoptics, including the mysterious '*beloved disciple' for whom he claims eye-witness testimony (19: 35; 21: 24).

Little is known of Jesus' early life. His 'presumed father' (Lk. 3: 23) *Joseph does not appear during the ministry and was perhaps dead by that time. Jesus was brought up in Nazareth, a builder or carpenter by trade (τέκτων, Mk. 6: 3), perhaps like his father (Mt. 13: 55). The birth narratives are partly modelled on Scripture, but Matthew and Luke are in both artistry and theology far superior to the later apocryphal *Infancy Gospels. Matthew uses scriptural quotations, typology, symbol, and in his *genealogy a numerical pattern, to establish the messianic identity of Jesus as son of David and son of God. Jesus is also called son of Abraham (Mt. 1: 1). *Moses typology in Mt. 2 and 4 prepares the reader for Jesus declaring God's will to His people. Luke's much longer prelude roots God's saving intervention on behalf of both *Gentiles and His people Israel in biblical tradition, and so affirms the Church's legitimacy and reinforces its identity as God's multiracial people (Acts 2: 9–11) in the long-awaited age of the *Holy Spirit. Its story about the birth of John underlines his theological relationship to Jesus.

Most scholars accept the arguments of *Form Criticism that the traditions from and about Jesus reached the evangelists already soaked in theological reflection about His meaning and significance. All four presentations of the Baptist reflect his importance for the Churches, but they show his importance for Jesus too. It is widely agreed that He acknowledged John's calling (cf. Mt. 11: 7–14; Mk. 11: 30) and was baptized by Him. Their ministries perhaps overlapped (Jn. 3: 22–6; 4: 1), and some of Jesus' first followers apparently came from John (Jn. 1: 35; Acts 18: 25). But He saw differences between His own and John's message and activity. Both included the note of Divine judgement in their *eschatological proclamation (cf. Mt. 10: 15; 11: 20–4), but in His certainty of the nearness of God's rule, Jesus stressed the positive side of what this meant for the poor, hungry, and suffering, and the lost sheep of the house of Israel.

The forms of this preaching and teaching can be analysed by the historian more easily than its content, and widely different accounts are to be found in the writings of equally skilled and responsible scholars. Jesus' remembered words consist largely of *parables and aphorisms. He used this-worldly realities to confront His hearers with the moral and religious challenge of God. He proclaimed and exemplified the will of God with prophetic and more than prophetic authority. Unlike the scribes this charismatic teacher and healer did not derive His authority from the law of Moses. While taking its validity for granted He acted and spoke with an immediacy grounded in His consciousness of an intimate relationship with God. This relationship is reflected in His addressing God as Father, *Abba, an intimacy He communicated in teaching His disciples how to pray.

Debates about the interpretation of the *Sabbath laws were not unusual among Jewish religious teachers of the day, but Jesus' extraordinary powers provoked controversy when He healed someone on the sabbath. His clear sense of God's will and the intention of the law led Him to criticize the traditions of scribal interpretation and perhaps to sit lightly to the laws on purity. Conversely, His prohibition of *divorce, based on the dictum that the end-time would be like the primal time of creation, was stricter than *Deuteronomy (24: 1–4). In both areas Jesus' teaching was later appealed to in support of divergent Christian practice, but it seems that He was less concerned to legislate for the contemporary or future covenant people than to confront individuals most urgently and directly with the challenge and opportunity of the present moment. As the record of God's revealed will and promise, the law of Moses provided a natural point of reference for any religious proclamation in the culture, but Jesus' teaching was not based on this, as was that of the scribes.

The most important symbol by which He expressed His religious meaning was God's rule or kingship, מַלְכוּת, translated ἡ βασιλεία τοῦ θεοῦ and in English often 'the *Kingdom of God'. It is scarcely possible to define this. It was and still is best spoken of in parables, i.e. open-ended metaphors, stories, and riddles, which engage their hearers and draw them into thought, contemplation, and action. Jesus spoke of the 'coming' of God's rule, and assumed it could and should be 'entered', perhaps already here and now, as it made its presence felt in Jesus' powerful activity in liberating those subject to demons (Mt. 12: 22–9). Modern historical study has elucidated the background of this phrase and in doing so has perhaps been unduly influenced by *apocalyptic literature where it seldom appears. Jesus did not write an apocalypse, and the apocalyptic strand in the Gospels, esp. the echo of Dan. 7: 13 in a few of the '*Son of Man' passages, may have been developed by disciples 'searching the scriptures' in order to understand what they believed had begun to happen. There is also a possibility that early Christian *prophets speaking in Jesus' name (cf. Rev. 22: 16) may have attributed this material to Him. It is unsafe to make it the key to any reconstruction. The limited, fragmentary, and indirect nature of the evidence, and the symbolic nature of any talk of God, combine to subvert attempts to say exactly how Jesus understood the coming of God's rule, or precisely what kind of eschatological transformation He envisaged, and even whether He thought such precision necessary or appropriate. There is no reason to doubt that we have in the Gospel tradition several authentic fragments of His teaching (albeit in Greek translation), but their original context and meaning can be reconstructed only in quite general terms.

Jesus' deeds and words expressed God's providence, universal and unbounded love, judgement, and forgiveness. The symbol of sovereignty is accordingly qualified by that of fatherhood in Jesus' speaking of God. Both are prominent in the *Lord's Prayer. His healings and exorcisms expressed a compassion that corresponded to what His stories and illustrations implied about the character of God. Attempts to represent the inner unity of this theological, moral, and utopian vision must take account of the disciples' fuller knowledge of the outcome of Jesus' ministry. Their hopes of its future consummation and their present needs may have influenced their memories and structured their accounts of what happened. Thus many critical historians have assumed a symbolic heightening of the *miraculous, and have supposed that such details as Jesus' Divine status and foreknowledge, the sacrificial interpretations of His death, and the fulfilment of Scripture, may at least partly reflect subsequent convictions (cf. 1 Cor. 15: 3–5).

Some historians begin their reconstructions with the well-attested details which are unlikely to stem from Christian experience. Other material may then be found to cohere with this critically assured minimum, or (if apparently incompatible with it) may provisionally be assigned to the developing post-resurrection faith of the disciples. This approach highlights Jesus' Baptism, betrayal, and execution, which caused embarrassment to His followers, and also looks for what might help explain but does not quite correspond to their post-resurrection belief. It is also appropriate to look for correlations between Jesus' activity and its outcome in His execution on a political charge as 'the king of the Jews'. Thus the potentially political implications of 'the Kingdom of God' have since the 18th cent. occasionally been taken to suggest that He was a political national messiah, but the evidence that Jesus Himself intended His phrase in an anti-Roman sense is negligible. References to the redemption of Israel (Lk. 24: 21) and the restoration of the kingdom to Israel (Acts 1: 6) are probably later formulations. The request of *James and John at Mk. 10: 25–40 is evidence of a misunderstanding which Jesus repudiated. If Jn. 6: 15 is right that the crowd wished to make Him king, it is also clear that Jesus rejected the idea.

The crucifixion is not easily connected with religious hostility to Jesus' healing and teaching, but a political motivation can accommodate the strongly attested claim that the *Sadducean high-priestly leaders and their associates in Jerusalem (not the *Pharisees or the Jewish people in general) were responsible for handing Jesus over to the Roman authorities for trial and execution on 14 or 15 Nisan, i.e. around the time of *Passover. Jesus attracted crowds, and fears that enthusiasm might lead to Roman intervention (Jn. 11: 48) could explain His arrest regardless of His preaching. He was perhaps considered a destabilizing factor and removed as a precautionary measure. His arrest was facilitated by 'one of the twelve', *Judas Iscariot, whose motives remain unclear. It seems that Jesus' arrival in Jerusalem for the feast of the Passover was heralded by other pilgrims, and it is possible that the decision to arrest Him was precipitated by the disturbance in the *Temple precincts even though this did not lead to His immediate arrest by the Roman soldiers stationed in the nearby Antonia (cf. Acts 21). The fact that His followers were not captured and executed with Him (contrast the uprising of Judas the Galilean in AD 6) suggests that the movement was not perceived as a serious political threat. This view corresponds to the general tenor of Jesus' teaching. It had social and political implications, but Jesus expected God to inaugurate His rule and so is unlikely to have mobilized any latent opposition to Rome.

The overturning of the tables in the Temple perhaps symbolized its destruction (cf. Mk. 13: 2), but there is insufficient evidence to justify interpreting this in terms of Jewish hopes for restoration. Neither that nor the notion that Jesus was a *Zealot does justice to the different kinds of material found in the earliest strata of the Synoptic tradition. The utopian vision of the *Beatitudes (Lk. 6: 20 f.) and other sayings is complemented by the moral dimensions of Jesus' parables and aphorisms. Conclusions about what Jesus meant by the coming of God's rule should not be drawn directly from very different contemporary literature but depend on sifting the Gospel tradition as a whole and considering the phrase in the light of all that is known of 1st-cent. Palestine, its languages, politics, economics, and religion. The history of the Gospel tradition is uncertain and can be construed in various ways to support different possible understandings of Jesus' ministry and passion. Any theory must make sense of what followed, or at least be compatible with it. Here the religious character of the source material is itself part of the evidence, as it reflects the continuing history of Jesus' influence. If the disciples totally misunderstood or misrepresented Him, then historical research has little to work on. If not, even their religious interpretations may be expected to throw light on the historical reality. When due allowance has been made for the evangelists' post-resurrection perspective, their theological portraits probably take us closer to the historical reality of Jesus than speculative reconstructions which have little textual basis.

The relationship between the evangelists' portraits, accepted as normative by the Christian Church, and the traditions available to the evangelists, have been clarified by *Redaction Criticism and can be illustrated at many points. Mark highlights the reality of the cross and the certainty of vindication to show his contemporaries that their sufferings are meaningful. Luke transmits Jesus' teaching about wealth and possessions, mission and persecution, to communicate the grace of His challenge in fresh circumstances. Matthew both preserves and refocuses the close relationship which Jesus maintained between eschatology and ethics: the Son of Man will declare God's judgement on workers of lawlessness. The dawning of God's rule and its righteousness in Jesus makes doing God's will both urgent and possible, command and gift. Matthew schematizes Jesus' uncompromising statements on anger, lust, divorce, *oaths, retaliation, and hatred of enemies (5: 21–48). He is teaching his contemporaries to 'observe all that Jesus commanded' (28: 20). John's conviction that in handing on and interpreting the memory of Jesus believers may be guided by the *Paraclete (16: 13; 14: 26) has allowed him to exercize an astonishing freedom to recast in christological discourses the tradition of what Jesus taught. He has made explicit what Christians find implied in the historical mission and message, life, and death of Jesus: that He is the decisive and saving revelation of God (1: 18; 14: 9, and passim).

How exactly Jesus understood what the evangelists have interpreted in these ways is uncertain but His powerful works placed the one who proclaimed the coming of God's rule at the centre of what was already beginning to happen (Mt. 12: 28; Lk. 11: 20). He evidently understood Himself to be playing a decisive role in God's saving work, and it became clear that this would involve suffering. His consciousness of mission or status did not need to be made explicit. The ambiguous phrase 'the Son of Man' was apparently sufficient self-reference for one whose actions and passion finally revealed His significance. *Christological claims followed at once. His execution on a political charge and the inscription over His cross may have helped crystallize the disciples' growing conviction that He was, or was designated to become, the Christ. But the decisive factor was what they believed had followed His death. They described it as exaltation (cf. Ps. 110: 1; Is. 52: 13) and resurrection (cf. Dan. 12: 2), and understood it to signify His vindication by God (cf. Phil. 2: 9). Their experience of the Spirit convinced even doubters that the new age had indeed dawned, and that Jesus was living Lord and Messiah (cf. Acts 2: 36).

The messianic claim gives unity to the NT witness. All the canonical writers presuppose that their exalted Lord is the One who was crucified under Pontius Pilate (cf. 1 Tim. 6: 13). Denials of His real humanity were met with a conviction that the Son sent by God and vindicated by God was the crucified man from Nazareth (1 Jn. 4: 2), and that He is central for humanity's relationship to God. The later *credal affirmations refer to a man in history. However little they can be confirmed by historical scrutiny, the man himself is a proper subject for historical inquiry. It is a sound instinct which makes believers reluctant to distinguish too sharply between the historical and religious claims that the Gospels have fused. But theology cannot avoid the risks of an enquiry which may erode its claims. The commitment of modern theology to the search for historical as well as religious truths by whatever methods are currently available has enabled it to meet on their own ground attacks on Christian faith disguised as objective enquiry. It has also made possible a clearer perception of the real humanity of Jesus Christ, whom Christians acknowledge as their Lord and their God.

There is a huge literature, both critical and devotional, from all periods. Modern scholarly works include G. Bornkamm, Jesus von Nazareth (1956; 3rd edn., 1959; Eng. tr. 1960); P. Winter, On the Trial of Jesus (Studia Judaica, 1; Berlin, 1961; 2nd edn., 1974); F. Hahn, Christologische Hoheitstitel (Forschungen zur Religion und Literatur des Alten und Neuen Testaments, 83; Göttingen, 1963; Eng. tr., The Titles of Jesus in Christology, 1969); C. K. Barrett, Jesus and the Gospel Tradition (1967); M. Hengel, Nachfolge und Charisma: Eine exegetisch-religionsgeschichtliche Studie zu Mt. 8, 21 f. und Jesu Ruf in die Nachfolge (Beiheft zur ZNTW, 34; 1968; Eng. tr., The Charismatic Leader and His Followers, Edinburgh, 1981); id., Der Sohn Gottes (Tübingen, 1975; Eng. tr., 1976); J. Jeremias, Neutestamentliche Theologie, 1: Die Verkündigung Jesu (Gütersloh, 1971; Eng. tr., 1971); G. Vermes, Jesus the Jew (1973); E. [C. F. A.] *Schillebeeckx, OP, Jezus, het verhaal van een levende (1974; Eng. tr., Jesus, 1979); B. F. Meyer, The Aims of Jesus (1979); A. E. Harvey, Jesus and the Constraints of History (Bampton Lectures, 1980; 1982); E. P. Sanders, Jesus and Judaism (1985); id., The Historical figure of Jesus (1993); P. Fredriksen, From Jesus to Christ: The Origins of the New Testament Images of Jesus (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1988); J. D. Crossan, The Historical Jesus: The Life of a Mediterranean Jewish Peasant (San Francisco [1991], Edinburgh, 1993); R. Schnackenburg, Die Person Jesu Christi im Spiegel der vier Evangelien (Herders Theologischer Kommentar zum Neuen Testament, Supplementband 4; 1993; Eng. tr., Jesus in the Gospels, Louisville, Ky. [1995]). See also HISTORICAL JESUS, QUEST OF THE, and MESSIANIC SECRET; also bibl. to CHRISTOLOGY, LAST SUPPER, MESSIAH, MIRACLE, PARABLE, RESURRECTION OF CHRIST, SON OF MAN, and VIRGIN BIRTH; and to the individual Gospels.

Jesus Movement (or Jesus Revolution). A popular term of the late 1960s and early 1970s for the amorphous movement of relatively spontaneous groupings, normally fervent, *evangelical, and *fundamentalist, which emerged in the youth culture of the period, beginning in California. The 'Jesus people', who combined much of the unconventional life-style of that culture with ethical rigorism and often *millenarian expectations, widely distrusted the established Churches; many adopted *Pentecostal practices and teaching. The 'Children of God' (later called the 'Family of Love'), a sect which emerged from the movement, has won adherents in Europe as well as in the USA.

R. M. Enroth, E. E. Ericson, and C. B. Peters, The Story of the Jesus People (Grand Rapids and Exeter, 1972). On the 'Children of God', R. Wallis, Salvation and Protest (1979), pp. 53–90.

Jesus Prayer. The prayer 'Lord Jesus Christ, Son of God, have mercy upon me' (sometimes 'a sinner' is added at the end, or the prayer may be said in the plural, 'us' instead of 'me'). The continual repetition of this prayer is specially recommended in Byzantine *Hesychasm, and its recitation is sometimes associated with a certain 'physical method': head bowed, eyes fixed on the place of the heart, careful control of the breathing. To assist the repetition, a rosary or *komvoschinion is frequently employed. The full text of the Jesus Prayer is first found in a work of the 6th–7th cent., the Life of the Abba Philemon; Greek spiritual writers of earlier date, such as *Diadochus of Photike and *Nilus the Ascetic, speak of the invocation or 'remembrance' of the Name of Jesus, without specifying exactly what form this invocation took. The 'physical method' seems to be considerably later than the Prayer as such; it is first described in a text attributed to St *Simeon the New Theologian, 'The Method of Sacred Prayer and Attention' (perhaps by Nicephorus of Mount Athos, 14th cent.). The Jesus Prayer is widely practised in the Orthodox Church today; but the use of the 'physical method' is now generally discouraged and it is very little followed.

'Un Moine de l'Église d'Orient' [L. Gillet], 'La Prière de Jésus', Irénikon, 20 (1947), pp. 249–73, 381–421; id., 'Sur l'usage de la Prière de Jésus', ibid. 25 (1952), pp. 371–82; also issued separately as La Prière de Jésus (3rd edn., Chevetogne, 1959; Eng. tr., New York etc. [1967]; rev. edn., 1987). I. Hausherr, SJ, Noms du Christ et voies d'oraison (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 157; Rome, 1960; Eng. tr., Cistercian Studies Series, 44; Kalamazoo, Mich., 1978). Id., La Méthode d'oraison hésychaste (Orientalia Christiana, 9, pt. 2; fasc. 36 of the series; Rome, 1927). B. Krivocheine, 'Date du texte traditionnel de la "Prière de Jésus" ', Messager de l'Exarchat du Patriarche russe en Europe occidentale, 7–8 (1951), pp. 55–9. K. [T. R.] Ware, 'The Jesus Prayer in St Diadochus of Photice', in Aksum-Thyateira: A Festschrift for Archbishop Methodios of Thyateira and Great Britain, ed. G. D. Dragas (1985), pp. 557–68. P. Adnès in Dict. Sp. 8 (1974), cols. 1126–50, s.v.

Jeu, Books of. The title of two Gnostic treatises mentioned in the Pistis Sophia which are ascribed to *Enoch. They have been identified with the first two treatises in the Bruce codex (see GNOSTICISM).

Text ed. by C. Schmidt, Gnostische Schriften in Koptischer Sprache aus dem Codex Brucianus (TU 8, Hefte 1–2; 1892), pp. 38–141, with Ger. tr. pp. 142–225. Coptic text repr., with Eng. tr. and notes by V. MacDermot, The Books of Jeu and the Untitled Text in the Bruce Codex (Nag Hammadi Studies, 13; Leiden, 1978), pp. 1–211. See also bibl. to GNOSTICISM.

Jeunesse Ouvrière Chrétienne. See JOCISTS.

Jew, the Wandering. See WANDERING JEW, THE.

Jewel, John (1522–71), Bp. of *Salisbury. Educated at Merton and Corpus Christi Colleges, Oxford, he was elected in 1542 a Fellow of Corpus. After 1547, largely through the influence of *Peter Martyr, he became one of the intellectual leaders of the Reforming party. Under *Mary, Jewel signed a set of anti-Protestant articles (1554), but notwithstanding he was forced to flee to Frankfurt (1555), where he opposed J. *Knox and the advanced *Calvinists. A little later he joined Martyr at Strasbourg and travelled with him to Zurich. On the accession of *Elizabeth I he returned to England, and in 1560 was consecrated Bp. of Salisbury. From now onwards he became a strong supporter of the Anglican settlement, opposing both RCs and Puritans, and taking his stand on the Fathers of the first six centuries. In 1562 he published his celebrated treatise in defence of the C of E, the Apologia Ecclesiae Anglicanae, which established itself at once as the best defence of the Anglican claims. It endeavoured to prove that a general Reformation had been necessary, that reform by such a body as the Council of *Trent was impossible, and that local Churches had the right to legislate through provincial synods. In the prolonged and bitter controversy that followed with Thomas Harding (1516–72), who defended the Papacy, the lines which the Roman controversy was to take in the 17th cent. were mainly determined; and under *James I, Abp. R. *Bancroft gave official approval to Jewel's teaching. Jewel, who administered his diocese with a vigour unusual in the Elizabethan Church, made several visitations, preached frequently, and built the library of Salisbury Cathedral. Among a number of poor boys whom Jewel maintained and prepared for the university was R. *Hooker, whose Ecclesiastical Polity owed much to his patron's teaching.

Collected Works ed. under the direction of R. Bancroft, London, fol., 1609, with memoir [by D. Featly] (no pagination; 2nd edn., 1611). Modern edns. by J. Ayre (*Parker Society, 4 vols., 1845–50), with memoir in vol. 4, pp. v–xxx; and R. W. Jelf (8 vols., Oxford, 1848). The principal authority is the official Life, sponsored by Abp. M. *Parker, by Jewel's friend Laurence Humphrey (in Latin; London, 1573); it is the basis of all subsequent memoirs. More modern Life by C. W. Le Bas (London, 1835). W. M. Southgate, John Jewel and the Problem of Doctrinal Authority (Cambridge, Mass., 1962); J. E. Booty, John Jewel as Apologist of the Church of England (CHS, 1963). BRUO, 1501–1540, pp. 317 f. M. *Creighton in DNB 29 (1892), pp. 378–82.

Jewish People. See JUDAISM.

Jews, Christian attitudes to. Christianity shares much common ground with Judaism. Jesus Christ was Himself a Jew, as were the earliest members of the Church. St *Paul's practice of not requiring Gentile converts to Christianity to be circumcised and observe the whole Jewish law, and his argument that their new covenant relationship with God was based on faith in Christ, not on works of the law, laid the foundation for the separation of Gentile Christianity from Judaism. For himself, however, the Jews were still God's chosen people; some of them had rejected Christ, but, he trusted, they would not finally be rejected (Rom. 9–11). The persecution of Jewish Christians and their expulsion from the synagogue caused much bitterness, which is reflected in Mt. 23 and Jn. 5–8. All four Gospels show a tendency to exonerate the Roman power that crucified Jesus by shifting more blame on to the Jewish authorities (e.g. Mk. 15: 11, Jn. 11: 49–53) and even the crowd (Mt. 27: 25). Isolated texts such as these and 1 Thess. 2: 14–6 can be explained by the polemical situation, but when they became a part of Christian Scripture they fuelled anti-Judaism over many centuries. The supercessionist theology found in discussions of the two covenants (Gal. 3–4, 2 Cor. 3, Heb. 8), and the assumption that the Church is the true Israel (Mt. 21: 43) have also contributed to the history of denigration. From the early 2nd cent. onwards Christian writers and preachers put forward an aggressively negative image of the Jews, calling them God-killers, children of the Devil, and enemies of mankind. At the same time a positive appreciation of Judaism, which existed in various parts of the Church, whether under the influence of Jewish ancestry, devotion to the OT, or direct influence of Jews, was vigorously suppressed. The surviving homilies attacking Judaism or Judaizing include several by *Origen and a famous series delivered by St John *Chrysostom in *Antioch in 387. Polemical treatises Adversus Judaeos became virtually a distinct genre of Christian literature. Successive ecclesiastical councils legislated to end social and religious contacts with Jews, except for the purpose of converting them. The political triumph of the Church in the Roman Empire led to the introduction of a similar tendency in imperial legislation, and although at first the laws protected the ancient rights and dignities of the Jews, these were gradually undermined: the Jewish Patriarchate was abolished, no new synagogues were to be built, Jews were excluded from government service and the army, and they were not to make converts or own Christian slaves. The legislation of the Church and State seems to have been intended to isolate Jews and prevent them from enjoying any power or influence over Christians. Nevertheless, while the use of vitriolic language becomes increasingly pronounced, and local acts of violence by Christians against Jews become more common, measures aimed at the forcible extinction of Judaism are rare in the first six centuries. This contrasts with the treatment of pagan cults and indeed of Christian heresy, and may be connected in part with the concept of a 'witnessing people' first enunciated by St *Augustine: the Jews are to be preserved, albeit in a state of subjection, so as to testify to their own wickedness and to the Christian truth, until they finally accept Christ at the Second Coming.

In the early 7th cent. the baptism of all Jews was decreed in several countries (Spain in 613, the Byzantine Empire and France, 632), and although these decrees did not lead to the permanent elimination of Judaism in these lands, the position of Jews under Christian rule became increasingly circumscribed. From the time of the first *Crusade onwards, there were violent attacks on Jews, often under the influence of Christian preachers, and in some places entire communities were massacred. There were some, including St *Bernard of Clairvaux, who protested against this attitude, but they were lone voices. The Fourth *Lateran Council (1215) imposed the wearing of distinctive clothing so that Jews could be distinguished from Christians. Excluded from society and demonified, the Jews became the victims of false accusations, e.g. of desecrating the Host, murdering children for ritual purposes, or poisoning the water supply. These charges often led to violence, despite the repeated protests of Popes and other leading Churchmen. Massacres were succeeded by expulsions, notably from England (1290), France (1394, after a series of temporary banishments), Spain (1492), and Portugal (1496). By 1500 most of Europe was free of Jews, and those who remained lived under severe restrictions, which were reinforced and extended during the *Counter-Reformation. (The physical segregation of Jews in a *ghetto was first instituted in Rome by Pope *Paul IV in 1556.) Nor were conditions much better in Protestant lands. M. *Luther, after professing sympathy for the Jews at first, turned against them when he found that his conciliatory stance did not win widespread conversions, and he influenced Protestant rulers to expel them or implement the medieval restrictions.

The subjugation of the Jews was accompanied by efforts to convert them. In many places they were compelled to listen to sermons in church and were subject to various pressures to change their faith, including in some instances the threat of death. Coercion made insincere converts, and the forcible baptism of whole populations, as happened, for example, in Spain in 1391 and again in 1492, and in Portugal five years later, gave rise to well-founded fears of crypto-Judaism. Converts and their descendants were subjected to discriminatory measures and the scrutiny of the *Inquisition, in 1478 established in Spain in a new form more directly focused against Jews and extended subsequently to Portugal and their overseas possessions. Many were publicly *burnt.

From the 18th cent., under the influence of the *Enlightenment, efforts were made to improve the condition of the Jews and to reintegrate them into European society. While some Christian voices were heard on the side of reform, Churchmen on the whole were more vocal on the side of reaction. In 1775 Pope *Pius VI renewed and extended the restrictive legislation: Jews were even forbidden to ride in carriages or erect tombstones. Meanwhile new missions arose directed specifically at Jews, and sometimes promoted by converts from Judaism. The most notable among these missionary bodies was the 'London Society for Promoting Christianity among the Jews' (founded in 1809), later known as the '*Church's Ministry among the Jews'. Antisemitism, an anti-Jewish political movement originating in the last quarter of the 19th cent., exploited many of the traditional Christian arguments and counted on Christian support (both RC and Protestant). The Berlin court chaplain, Adolph Stöcker (1835–1909), was among its leading proponents, and it was favoured, in various forms, by Christian movements in Austria, Germany (see GERMAN-CHRISTIANS), France, and elsewhere; many prominent Christians, however, opposed it.

After the *Holocaust a new era began. In 1947 a conference was convened at Seelisberg in Switzerland under the auspices of the newly formed International Conference of Christians and Jews. It issued a list of 'ten points' aimed at eradicating anti-Judaism from Christian teaching. The *World Council of Churches at its inaugural meeting in 1948 acknowledged a connection between Christian anti-Judaism and antisemitism, which it declared to be 'irreconcilable with the practice of the Christian faith and a sin against God and man'. In 1965 the Second *Vatican Council promulgated a declaration on the Jewish people (§ 4 in the Declaration on the Relationship of the Church to Non-Christian Religions, Nostra Aetate) which, while it reasserts some of the traditional rebukes, firmly states that 'the Church, mindful of the patrimony she shares with the Jews, ... decries hatred, persecutions, displays of antisemitism, directed against Jews at any time and by anyone'. In most of the main Churches serious attention is now being paid to fostering contacts and co-operation, and even religious dialogue, between Christians and Jews, to healing the wounds of the past, to revising those teachings which are recognized to have been harmful, and to facing up to the theological questions raised by this new approach.

R. R. Ruether, Faith and Fratricide: The Theological Roots of Anti-Semitism (New York [1974]); J. G. Gager, The Origins of Anti-Semitism: Attitudes Toward Judaism in Pagan and Christian Antiquity (New York and Oxford, 1983). M. Simon, Verus Israel: Étude sur les relations entre Chrétiens et Juifs dans l'Empire Romain (135–425) (Bibliothèque des Écoles françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 166; 1948; 2nd edn., 1964; Eng. tr., Oxford, 1986). R. L. Wilken, Judaism and the Early Christian Mind: A Study of Cyril of Alexandria's Exegesis and Theology (Yale Publications in Religion, 15; New Haven, Conn., and London, 1971); id., John Chrysostom and the Jews (Berkeley and Los Angeles, Calif., and London [1983]). A. Linder, The Jews in Roman Imperial Legislation (Detroit and Jerusalem, 1987 [primary texts, in Eng. tr., with comm.]). B. Blumenkranz, Juifs et Chrétiens dans le monde occidental 430–1096 (École Pratique des Hautes Études-Sorbonne, Section 6ᵉ: Études Juives, 2; Paris and The Hague, 1960) id., Les auteurs chrétiens latin du moyen âge sur les juifs et le judaïsme (ibid. 4; 1963). J. [W.] Parkes, The Conflict of the Church and the Synagogue (1934); H. Schreckenberg, Die christlichen Adversus-Judaeos-Texte und ihr literarisches und historisches Umfeld (1.–11. Jh.) (Europäische Hochschulschriften, Reihe 23, Bd. 172; Frankfurt-am-Main, 1982; 2nd edn., 1990); id., Die christlichen Adversus-Judaeos-Texte (11.–13. Jh.) (ibid. 335; 1988; 2nd edn., 1991); A. Lukyn Williams, Adversus Judaeos: A Bird's-Eye View of Christian Apologiae until the Renaissance (Cambridge, 1935). S. Grayzel, The Church and the Jews in the XIIIth Century: A Study of their Relations during the Years 1198–1254, based on the Papal Letters and Conciliar Decrees of the Period (Philadelphia, 1933; rev. edn., New York, 1966). H. A. Oberman, Wurzeln des Antisemitismus: Christenangst und Judenplage im Zeitalter von Humanismus und Reformation (1981; Eng. tr., Philadelphia [1984]).

M. Hay, The Foot of Pride: The Pressure of Christendom on the People of Israel for 1900 Years (Boston, 1950). L. Poliakov, Histoire de l'antisémitisme (4 vols. [1955–1977]; Eng. tr., Oxford, 1974–85). J. Isaac, L'Enseignement du mépris: Verité historique et mythes théologiques (1962; Eng. tr., The Teaching of Contempt, New York [1964]). F. Heer, Gottes Erste Liebe. 2000 Jahre Judentum und Christentum (Munich [1967]; Eng. tr., God's First Love: Christians and Jews over two thousand years [1970]). S. Rappaport, Jew and Gentile: The Philo-Semitic Aspect (New York [1980]). A. R. Eckardt, Christianity and The Children of Israel (Morningside Heights, NY, 1948). A. Gilbert, The Vatican Council and the Jews (Cleveland and New York [1968]). H. Croner (ed.), Stepping Stones to Further Jewish–Christian Relations ...: Christian documents (New Malden, Surrey, 1977). The Theology of the Churches and the Jewish People: Statements by the World Council of Churches and its Member Churches, with commentary by A. Brockway and others (Geneva [1988]). C. Klein, Theologie und Anti-Judaismus (Munich, 1975; Eng. tr., 1978); C. Thoma, Christliche Theologie des Judentums (Aschaffenburg, 1978; Eng. tr., New York [1980]). P. van Buren, A Theology of Jewish Christian Reality (New York, 1980 ff.). E. Fleischner, Judaism in German Christian Theology since 1956 (Metuchen, NJ, 1975).

Jiménez de Cisneros, Francisco. See XIMÉNEZ DE CISNEROS, FRANCISCO.

Joachim, St. The husband of St *Anne and the father of the BVM. He is first mentioned in the '*Protevangelium of James' (2nd cent.), where the birth of the Virgin, promised by an angel to her aged and childless parents, is recorded. Apart from this passage, he is rarely referred to in Christian tradition till much later times—in the E. seldom before the 7th cent., and in the W. not till the Middle Ages. In later medieval times he became a frequent subject for the religious artist. He has been commemorated on many different dates: from 1913 to 1969 his feast day in the RC Church was assigned to 16 Aug.; it was then joined with St Anne on 26 July; in E., 9 Sept. (with St Anne).

É. Amann, Le Protévangile de Jacques et ses remaniements latins (1910), pp. 45–51. On his reputed tomb at Jerusalem, see L. Cré, 'Tombeau de St Joachim et de Ste Anne', R. Bibl. 2 (1893), pp. 245–74, and H. Vincent, OP, 'La Crypte de sainte Anne à Jérusalem', ibid. 13 (1904), pp. 228–41. B. Kraft in L.Th.K. (2nd edn.), 5 (1960), col. 973, s.v. See also other works cited under JAMES, BOOK OF.

Joachim of Fiore (*c.*1135–1202), biblical exegete and *mystic. Two contemporary biographical fragments were expanded and embellished with legends in the two 17th-cent. Lives upon which the account in the Acta Sanctorum was based. Born in Celico, Calabria, as a young man he went on a pilgrimage to the Holy Land, where he may have had the first of three experiences of spiritual illumination, the latter two, at Easter and Pentecost, being recorded in his own writings. He became a monk in the *Benedictine, later *Cistercian, monastery of Corazzo. Elected abbot against his will in 1177, he later relinquished this office to lead a more contemplative life, finally receiving Papal permission in 1196 to establish his own congregation in the Sila mountains. Three Popes encouraged his writing and in a testamentary letter he required his successors to submit his works to the Holy See. When the Fourth *Lateran Council (1215) condemned his Trinitarian doctrine, his reputation for sanctity was safeguarded. *Dante placed him in Paradise—di spirito prophetico dotato.

The central doctrine of his three chief works, 'Liber de Concordia Novi ac Veteris Testamenti', 'Expositio in Apocalypsim', and 'Psalterium decem Chordarum', is a Trinitarian conception of the whole of history, viewed in three great periods ('status'). The first, characterized by the 'Ordo conjugatorum', was the Age of the Father in which mankind lived under the Law until the end of the OT dispensation; the second, characterized by the 'Ordo clericorum', is that of the Son, lived under Grace and covering the NT dispensation which Joachim calculated as forty-two generations of about thirty years each; the third, that of the 'Ordo monachorum' or 'contemplantium', is the Age of the Spirit, to be lived in the liberty of the 'Spiritualis Intellectus' proceeding from the Old and New Testaments. This age would see the rise of new religious orders to convert the whole world and usher in the 'Ecclesia Spiritualis'. Joachim never advanced his doctrine of the third age to a point of danger to ecclesiastical authority, but his expectations concerning history had a far-reaching influence in the following centuries among groups who carried his ideas to revolutionary conclusions, notably certain *Franciscans and *Fraticelli. The Franciscan Gerard of Borgo San Donnino in 1254 claimed to complete Joachim's pattern of threes by proclaiming the Eternal Gospel (excerpts from Joachim's works) which superseded the OT and NT. His views received Papal condemnation in 1255 and in 1263 the provincial Council of Arles condemned the doctrine of Joachim himself. But Joachim's vision continued to captivate the imagination of many throughout the later medieval and Renaissance period.

His three chief works, mentioned above, pub. Venice 1519 and 1527, are available in photographic repr.; the first four books of the Liber de Concordia Novi ac Veteris Testamenti also ed. E. R. Daniel (Transactions of the American Philosophical Society, 73, pt. 8; 1983). There are modern edns. of his Tractatus super Quatuor Evangelia by E. Buonaiuti (Fonti per la Storia d'Italia, 67; 1930); of his Expositio de Articulis Fidei by id. (ibid. 78; 1936); of Adversus Iudaeos by A. Frugoni (ibid. 95; 1957); of his Liber Figurarum by L. Tondelli (2 vols., Turin [1940]; 2nd edn., ibid., 1953, vol. 1, ed. L. Tondelli, vol. 2, ed. L. Tondelli, M. [E.] Reeves, and B. [M.] Hirsch-Reich); and of his De Vita Sancti Benedicti by C. Baraut, OSB, Analecta Sacra Tarraconensia, 24 (1951), pp. 33–122. AASS, Mai. 7 (1688), pp. 89–143. H. Grundmann, Studien über Joachim von Floris (Beiträge zur Kulturgeschichte des Mittelalters und der Renaissance, 32; 1927); id., Neue Forschungen über Joachim von Fiore (Münstersche Forschungen, 1; 1950). E. Buonaiuti, Gioacchino da Fiore: I tempi, la vita, il messaggio (1931). A. Crocco, Gioacchino da Fiore (Naples, 1960). M. [E.] Reeves, The Influence of Prophecy in the Later Middle Ages: A Study in Joachimism (Oxford, 1969; repr., with additional bibl., Notre Dame, Ind., and London, 1993). Id. and B. [M.] Hirsch-Reich, The Figurae of Joachim of Fiore (Oxford, 1972). D. C. West (ed.), Joachim of Fiore in Christian Thought (2 vols., New York [1975]). H. Mottu, La Manifestation de l'Esprit selon Joachim de Fiore (Université de Genève thesis; Neuchâtel and Paris, 1977). H. de *Lubac, SJ, La Postérité spirituelle de Joachim de Flore (2 vols. [1979–81]). Storia e Messaggio in Gioacchino da Fiore: Atti del I Congresso Internazionale di Studi Gioachimiti . . . 19–23 settembre 1979 (Fiore, 1980); A. Crocco (ed.), L'Età dello spirito e la fine dei tempi in Gioacchino da Fiore e nel Gioachimismo medievale: Atti del II Congresso Internazionale di Studi Gioachimiti . . . 6–9 settembre 1984 (2 vols., ibid., 1986); G. L. Potestà (ed.), Il Profetismo gioachimita tra Quattrocento et Cinquecento: Atti del III Congresso Internazionale di Studi Gioachimiti . . . 17–21 settembre 1989 (Genoa, 1991). B. McGinn, The Calabrian Abbot: Joachim of Fiore in the History of Western Thought (1985); M. [E.] Reeves and W. Gould, Joachim of Fiore and the Myth of the Eternal Evangel in the Nineteenth Century (Oxford, 1987). M. W. Bloomfield, 'Recent Scholarship on Joachim of Fiore and his Influence', in Prophecy and Millenarianism: Essays in Honour of Marjorie Reeves, ed. A. Williams (1980), pp. 21–52.

Joan, Pope. The legend of a female Pope first appears in the (13th-cent.) *Dominican chronicler Jean de Mailly, and was repeated in various versions by historical writers of the following centuries. The gist of the story is that about the year 1100 (later forms say after St *Leo IV, d. 855) a woman in male disguise, after a distinguished career as a scholar, succeeded to the chair of St Peter. After reigning more than two years she gave birth to a child during a procession to the *Lateran and died immediately afterwards. There is no evidence whatever to substantiate the tale, but it was widely believed in the Middle Ages. Today it is rejected as an invention by all serious scholars. J. J. I. von *Döllinger explained it as an ancient Roman folk-tale.

J. J. I. von Döllinger, Die Papst-Fabeln des Mittelalters (1863), pp. 1–45 (Eng. tr., 1871, pp. 1–67); E. Vacandard, Études de critique et d'histoire religieuse, 4th ser. (1923), pp. 15–39 (La Papesse Jeanne); C. A. Patrides, Premises and Motifs in Renaissance Thought and Literature (Princeton, NJ [1982]), pp. 152–81 ('A palpable hieroglyphick': The Fable of Pope Joan), with refs. See also BLONDEL, DAVID.

Joan of Arc, St (1412–31), called 'La Pucelle', the 'Maid of Orléans'. The setting of her life was the Hundred Years War and the civil war within France between the great houses of Orléans and Burgundy. The daughter of a peasant, she was born and brought up in Domrémy, Champagne. A pious child, she experienced in 1425 the first of her supernatural visitations, which she described as a voice accompanied by a blaze of light. Gradually her 'voices' increased and she was able to identify St *Michael, St *Catherine, St *Margaret, and others, who revealed to Joan her mission to save France. She was unsuccessful in a first attempt in 1428 to persuade the French commander at Vaucouleurs of the genuineness of her visions; but after a second attempt in 1429 she was sent to the as yet uncon-secrated King (Charles VII), who was convinced when she apparently recognized him in disguise. Joan then gave the King a secret sign, which she never revealed. After close examination of her case by a body of Charles's theologians at Poitiers, it was decided to allow her to lead an expedition to Orléans. Clad in a suit of white armour and bearing a banner with a symbol of the Trinity and the words 'Jesus, Maria', she inspired Charles's troops and the city was relieved. After a short campaign in the Loire valley, she persuaded Charles VII to proceed to *Reims for his coronation, which took place on 17 July 1429, with Joan at his side. The relief of Orléans and the crowning of the Dauphin were notable victories for the Valois cause. After six months of military inactivity fresh campaigns took place in the spring of 1430 in which she was less successful. She was taken prisoner by Burgundian troops near Compiègne on 24 May 1430, sold to the English by the Duke of Burgundy on 21 Nov. 1430, and appeared before the court of the Bp. of Beauvais (Pierre Cauchon) at Rouen on 21 Feb. 1431 on charges of witchcraft and heresy. After further examination in her cell, a summary of her statements was compiled. The judges of the *inquisitorial court declared her visions 'false and diabolical' and the summary was also denounced by the University of *Paris. After some form of recantation on 23 May, she resumed male attire, which she had agreed to abandon, and on 29 May was condemned as a relapsed heretic and on 30 May burnt at Rouen. Her death did not bring about the end of the Hundred Years War, and her personal heroism, rather than her political and military achievement, has been a source of inspiration to later generations. A revision of her trial by an appellate court appointed by Pope *Callistus III in 1456 declared her to have been unjustly condemned. Canonized on 9 May 1920 by *Benedict XV as a holy maiden, she is the second patron of France. Feast day, 30 May.

J. Quicherat (ed.), Procès de condamnation et de réhabilitation de Jeanne d'Arc (Société de l'histoire de France; 5 vols., 1841–9); P. Champion (ed.), Procès de condamnation de Jeanne d'Arc (2 vols., 1920–1), with introd., Fr. tr., and notes; P. Tisset and Y. Lanhers (eds.), Procès de Jeanne d'Arc (Société de l'histoire de France; 3 vols., 1960–71); P. Duparc (ed.), Procès en nullité de la condamnation de Jeanne d'Arc (ibid. 5 vols., 1977–88). Eng. tr. of docs. of the trial by W. P. Barrett, The Trial of Joan of Arc (1931). P. Doncœur, SJ, and Y. Lanhers (eds.), Documents et recherches relatives à Jeanne la Pucelle (5 vols., 1952–61). Studies incl. those by A. Lang (London, 1908), G. Hanotaux (Paris, 1911), A. Fabre (ibid., 1912), V. Sackville-West (London, 1936), J. Calmette (Paris, 1946), R. Pernoud (ibid., 1954; Eng. tr., 1961), and other works of this author, [J.] E. [M.] Lucie-Smith (London, 1976), M. [S.] Warner (ibid., 1981), and A. L. Barstow (Studies in Women and Religion, 17; Lewiston, NY, etc. [1986]).

Joasaph, St. See JOSAPHAT, ST.

Job, Book of. The main portion of the Book, which is in poetical form, is preceded by a prose Prologue (1 and 2) and is followed by a prose Epilogue (42: 7–17). Discussions between Job and his three 'friends', Eliphaz, Bildad, and Zophar, appear in three cycles (3–14, 15–21, 22–31), culminating in an appeal to the Almighty. There follow the speeches of Elihu (32–7), which are sometimes regarded as an intrusion since they add nothing to the arguments of the friends and interrupt the connection of chs. 31 and 38. The Divine reply and Job's acceptance of it are recorded in chs. 38–42: 6.

The Book stands in the *Wisdom tradition of ancient *Israel. Its main subject is the perennial problem of innocent suffering. Job rejects the traditional view that suffering is the result of sin, for he has no doubt of his innocence. Although no final solution to the problem is offered, apart from the emphasis on the omnipotence of God in 38–42: 6, the Book none the less offers the most thorough treatment of the subject in the OT. Already in the NT (Jas. 5: 11) the patience of Job has become proverbial. Owing to the universal nature of its subject-matter, the Book has enjoyed wide appeal in almost every period. While there is no scholarly consensus about the date of its composition, many critics favour a date in the region of 400 BC.

Modern comm. incl. those of S. R. *Driver and G. B. *Gray (ICC, 1921), E. P. Dhorme, OP (Études Bibliques, 1926; Eng. tr., 1967), G. Hölscher (HAT, Reihe 1, Bd. 17; 1937; 2nd edn., 1952), A. Weiser (Das Alte Testament Deutsch, 13; 1951; 4th edn., 1963), N. H. Tur-Sinai ([in English] Jerusalem, 1957), G. Fohrer (KAT 16; 1963), F. Horst (Biblischer Kommentar, Altes Testament, 16 [on 1–19]; 1968), M. H. Pope (Anchor Bible, 15 [1965]; 3rd edn. [1973]), H. H. Rowley (New Cent. Bibl., 1970), R. Gordis (Mareshet Series, 2; New York, 1978), N. C. Habel (Old Testament Library, 1985), and D. J. A. Clines (Word Biblical Comm. 17 [on 1–20]; Dallas [1989]), with full bibl. G. Richter, Textstudien zum Buche Hiob (Beiträge zur Wissenschaft vom Alten und Neuen Testament, Folge 3, 7; 1927). Id., Studien zu Hiob: Der Aufbau des Hiobbuches, dargestellt an den Gattungen des Rechtslebens (Theologische Arbeiten, 11 [1959]). W. B. Stevenson, The Poem of Job: A Literary Study with a New Translation (Schweich Lectures, 1943; 1947). Id., Critical Notes on the Hebrew Text of the Poem of Job (Aberdeen, 1951). C. Westermann, Der Aufbau der Buches Hiob (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, 23; Tübingen, 1956; 2nd edn., Stuttgart, 1977; Eng. tr., Philadelphia [1981]). N. H. Snaith, The Book of Job: Its Origin and Purpose (Studies in Biblical Theology, 2nd ser. 11; 1968). R. Polzin and D. Robertson (eds.), Studies in the Book of Job (Semeia, 7; Missoula, Mont., 1977). R. Girard, La Route antique des hommes pervers (1985; Eng. tr., Job, the Victim of his People, 1987). J. H. Eaton, Job (Old Testament Guides, Sheffield [1985]). H. W. *Robinson, The Cross of Job (1916), repr. in id., The Cross in the Old Testament (1955), pp. 10–54. J. Barr, 'The Book of Job and its Modern Interpreters', Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, 54 (1971–2), pp. 28–46. Soggin, pp. 449–57. J. L. Crenshaw in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 3 (1992), pp. 858–68, s.v.

Jocists. The organized association of factory workers in the RC Church known as the Jeunesse Ouvrière Chrétienne (JOC), or in English-speaking countries as 'Young Christian Workers'. Building on the ideals of Leo XIII's Rerum Novarum, the movement grew out of the groups gathered by J.-L. *Cardijn in and around Brussels after the 1914–18 war and received Papal approbation in 1925. It spread to France in 1926 and gradually expanded worldwide. It encourages young factory workers to develop their self-awareness and to take responsibility for the evangelization of their fellow workers. Corresponding associations have been created for agricultural workers (JAC: Jeunesse Agricole Chrétienne) and sailors (JMC: Jeunesse Maritime Chrétienne). Recently tensions have developed within the movement due to conflicting analyses of contemporary society.

M. A. Walckiers, Sources inédites relatives aux débuts de la J.O.C. 1919–1925 (Centre Interuniversitaire d'Histoire Contemporaine, Cahiers 61; Louvain, 1970); M. Launay and others in G. Cholvy (ed.), Mouvements de Jeunesse Chrétiens et Juifs (1985), pp. 223–99; J. Debès and É. Poulat, L'appel de la JOC (1926–1928) (1986). Useful pamphlet by G. W. O. Addleshaw, Jocism: An Account of the Continental Youth Movement, La Jeunesse Ouvrière Chrétienne (1939). See also bibl. to CARDIJN, J. L.

Joel, Book of. One of the twelve *Minor Prophets of the OT. Wide differences exist among scholars about the origin, purpose, and date of the Book, and about 'Joel, the son of Pethuel', nothing is known at all. The prophecy, for the most part written in poetic form, has two sections. The first (1: 1–2: 17) tells of a plague of locusts and its results, and draws against this background a picture of the approaching Day of the Lord with its call to repentance. The rest of the Book (2: 18–3: 21) foretells the future outpouring of the Spirit on all flesh, the final salvation of Judah, and the destruction of foreign nations, all subjects of the kind more fully developed in the Apocalyptic literature. The passage predicting the outpouring of the Spirit of God and its effects (2: 28–32) is cited in Acts 2: 17–21 as foreshadowing the gift of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost.

Comm. by J. A. Bewer (ICC on Mic., Zeph., Nah., Hab., Obad., and Joel, 1912; sep. pagination), H. W. Wolff (on Joel and Amos, Dodekapropheton, 2, Biblischer Kommentar, Altes Testament, 14/2; Neukirchen, 1969, pp. 1–104; Eng. tr., Philadelphia [1977], pp. 1–86), W. Rudolph (KAT 13/2 on Joel, Amos, Obad., and Jon., 1971, pp. 35–92), and J. D. Watts (Camb. Bib., NEB, on Joel, Obad., Jon., Nah., Hab., and Zeph., 1975, pp. 12–50). A. S. Kapelrud, Joel Studies (Uppsala Universitets Årsskrift, 1948, no. 4; 1948). J. M. Myers, 'Some Considerations bearing on the Date of Joel', ZATW 74 (1962), pp. 177–95. W. Prinsloo, The Theology of Joel (Beihefte zur ZATW, 163; 1985). Eissfeldt, pp. 391–5, with additions, p. 760. J. Jeremias in TRE 17 (1988), pp. 91–7, s.v. 'Joel/Joelbuch', with extensive bibl.

Johannine Comma, also known as the 'Three Witnesses'. An interpolation in the text of 1 Jn. 5: 7 f., that is, the words in italics in the following passage from the AV: 'For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost, and these Three are One. And there are three that bear witness in earth, the Spirit, and the Water, and the Blood, and these three agree in one.' They occur in Latin MSS from about AD 800 onwards and so became established in the official Latin text of the Bible, but they are found in no Greek MS before the 12th cent., are certainly not part of the original Epistle, and are omitted from the RV and other scholarly modern translations. The origin of the interpolation is obscure. Traces of a mystical interpretation of the phrase about the Spirit, the Water, and the Blood, applying it to the Trinity, are to be found in *Cyprian and *Augustine; but the earliest evidence for the insertion of a gloss in the text of the Epistle comes from a MS of *Priscillianist provenance discovered by G. Schepss at Würzburg in 1885. Later the insertion is found in quotations in African authors. It would thus seem to have originated in N. Africa or Spain and to have found its way into the Latin Bibles used in those districts (both *Old Latin and *Vulgate), possibly under the stress of *Arian persecution.

K. Künstle, Das Comma Ioanneum auf seine Herkunft untersucht (1905); E. Riggenbach, Das Comma Johanneum (Beiträge zur Förderung christlicher Theologie, 31, Heft 4; 1928; posthumous). T. A. Marazuela, 'Nuevo estudio sobre el "Comma Ioanneum" ', Biblica, 28 (1947), pp. 83–112, 216–35; 29 (1948), pp. 52–76. W. Thiele, 'Beobachtungen zum Comma Iohanneum (1 Joh 5 7 f.)', ZNTW 50 (1959), pp. 61–73. B. M. Metzger, The Text of the New Testament (Oxford, 1964; 3rd edn., 1992), pp. 101 f. See also commentaries on 1 Jn., esp. A. E. Brooke, The Johannine Epistles (ICC, 1912), pp. 154–65.

John, St, Apostle. Acc. to tradition, the author of the Fourth Gospel, the Book of Revelation, and three of the Catholic Epistles. He was the son of Zebedee (Mt. 4: 21), and, together with his brother St *James and St *Peter, he belonged to the inner group of disciples who were present at the raising of Jairus's daughter (Mk. 5: 37), the *Transfiguration (Mt. 17: 1), and the Agony in the Garden (Mt. 26: 37). The Lord designated him and his brother Boanerges, which acc. to Mk (3: 17) means 'sons of thunder'. This would fit the impetuous character apparent at Mk. 9: 38 and Lk. 9: 54; but the etymology is obsure. In any case, they were also generous, willing to drink with Christ the cup of suffering (Mt. 20: 22). In Acts John is several times mentioned with Peter (3: 1 and 11), with whom he is imprisoned and appears before the Sanhedrin (4: 1–21). Later he is sent to Samaria with Peter, to transmit the Holy Spirit to the new converts (8: 14 f.). He was present also at the Apostles' council at *Jerusalem (Gal. 2: 9).

In the Fourth Gospel John is never mentioned by name, but tradition identifies him with the anonymous disciple to whom St *John the Baptist shows the Lamb of God (1: 35–40) and with the disciple 'whom Jesus loved', who reclined on His bosom at the Last Supper (13: 23), to whom He entrusted His Mother at the foot of the Cross (19: 26), who ran with Peter to the tomb on the morning of the Resurrection (20: 2–8), and who recognized the Risen Lord at the Sea of Tiberias (21: 7). The words of the Lord recorded on this last occasion were interpreted as meaning that he would not die. This traditional identification of the '*beloved disciple' with John, the son of Zebedee, has been contested in modern times; and the idea has been put forward, notably by H. Delff, W. *Bousset, and H. B. *Swete, that he was not one of the Twelve, but a Jerusalem disciple. Defenders of the traditional view have argued: (1) that, just as the John of the Synoptics and Acts is always shown in close association with Peter, so also is the 'beloved disciple' of the Fourth Gospel; and (2) that the consistent omission in the Fourth Gospel of so important a disciple as John is inexplicable except on the assumption that he is referred to under some other designation.

Acc. to tradition, John later went to Asia Minor and settled at *Ephesus. Under *Domitian he was exiled to *Patmos, where he wrote the Book of Revelation (Rev. 1: 9), and under Nerva returned to Ephesus and there wrote the Gospel and Epistles in his old age. Against this Mk. 10: 39 has sometimes been urged by critics as a 'vaticinium ex eventu', implying that John suffered martyrdom with James (cf. Acts 12: 2). Support for this theory is claimed in an alleged passage from *Papias, referred to by writers of the 5th and the 9th cents., mentioning the death of John and James at the hands of the Jews, and also in a notice of their death in several *martyrologies. But the evidence is both flimsy and imprecise, and is wholly inconclusive.

Both the question of the identity of the 'beloved disciple' and that of the date of St John's death have played a considerable part in the controversy over the authorship of the Gospel according to St John. Feast day in E., 26 Sept. (also 8 May); in W., 27 Dec. Acc. to later Latin legend, St John was ordered by Domitian to be thrown into a cauldron of boiling oil 'before the Latin Gate', i.e. the gate leading southwards from Rome to Latium, and came out unharmed. This event was long commemorated in his feast 'ante portam Latinam' on 6 May.

The principal discussions occur in comm. and studies on the Gospel acc. to St John (q.v.), though Bousset's speculations are included in his comm. on Rev. Modern discussion of the various problems by F.-M. Braun, OP, Jean le théologien et son évangile dans l'Église ancienne (Études Bibliques, 1959), pp. 301–92 and 407–11, with extensive refs. R. A. Culpepper, John, the Son of Zebedee: The Life of a Legend (Studies on Personalities of the New Testament; Columba, SC [1994]). H. B. Swete, 'The Disciple whom Jesus Loved', JTS 17 (1916), pp. 371–4; id., 'John of Ephesus', ibid., pp. 375–8; J. N. Sanders, 'Who was the Disciple whom Jesus Loved?', in F. L. Cross (ed.), Studies in the Fourth Gospel (1957), pp. 72–82; id., 'St John on Patmos', New Testament Studies, 9 (1963), pp. 75–85. H. D. Saffrey, 'Le témoignage des Pères sur le martyre de S. Jean Évangéliste', RSPT 69 (1985), pp. 265–72. On the church dedicated to St John at Ephesus, Die Johanneskirche (Forschungen in Ephesos, Band 4, Heft 3; Vienna, 1951). D. Mollat, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 8 (1974), cols. 192–247, s.v. 'Jean l'Evangéliste (saint)'. See also comm. to JOHN, EPISTLES OF ST., and REVELATION, BOOK OF, cited s.vv.

John, Acts of. A Greek apocryphal treatise, not later than the early 3rd cent., describing events in the life of the Apostle St *John. Large parts of it have come down to us in a number of scattered MSS, all incomplete. A fragment, discovered by M. R. James in 1886, contains an extended account of Christ's passion in highly *Docetic language, and a hymn which at a much later date was used by the *Priscillianists; it is commonly known in modern times as the 'Hymn of Jesus' and was set to music by Gustav Holst (d. 1934). A long account of the death of St John has also survived. As the events described are mainly connected with *Ephesus, it is likely that the treatise is of Ephesian provenance. It was known to *Clement of Alexandria, and apparently also to the author of *Monarchian Prologues to the Gospels. It was ascribed, esp. in later times, to a certain *Leucius.

Refs. in *Eusebius, HE 3. 25. 6, *Epiphanius, Haer. 47. 1, and *Philaster, Haer. 88. Crit. edn., with full introd. and comm., by E. Junod and J.-D.Kaestli (CC, Series Apocrypha, 1–2; 1983). Eng. tr. by J. K. Elliott, The Apocryphal New Testament (Oxford, 1993), pp. 303–49; Ger. tr. and introd. by K. Schäferdiek in Schneemelcher (5th edn.), 2 (1989), pp. 138–93; Eng. tr., 2 [1992], pp. 152–212. The Acta Ioannis, attributed to a certain Prochorus and pub. by T. *Zahn (Erlangen, 1880), are a later (5th-cent.) orthodox revision of the orig. Gnostic Acts; on this work see E. Junod and J.-D. Kaestli, op. cit., pp. 718–49, and A. de Santos Otero in Schneemelcher, 2 (5th edn.), pp. 385–91; Eng. tr., 2 [1992], pp. 429–35.

John, Apocryphon of. A Coptic document known from a Berlin MS since 1896, but first pub. in 1955. It was at first claimed as the source of *Irenaeus' account of the 'Barbelognostics' (Adv. Haer. 1. 29), with which it has parallels; but there are also differences. Three further copies were found at *Nag Hammadi, one of them closely parallel to the Berlin text, the others presenting a longer version. It takes the form of a dialogue between Christ and St *John, the son of Zebedee, but there are indications that the dialogue form is part of a secondary Christianization. The text was clearly popular in some circles, and is important (1) as a document of early *Gnosticism, (2) for the insights which it may afford into the development of Gnostic literature, and (3) as a possible source for some *Valentinian ideas (unless, as Simone Pétrement argues, it is dependent on Valentinianism).

Berlin text, with Ger. tr., ed. W. C. Till, Die gnostischen Schriften des koptischen Papyrus Berolinensis 8502 (TU 60; 1955), pp. 78–193, with introd., pp. 33–51; 2nd edn. by H.-M. Schenke (1972), with additional material, pp. 325, 327–9. Eng. tr. of the Berlin text in W. Foerster (ed.), Gnosis, 1 (Oxford, 1972), pp. 105–20. The Nag Hammadi texts were ed., with Ger. tr., by M. Krause and P. Labib, Die Drei Versionen des Apokryphon des Johannes im Koptischen Museum zu Alt-Kairo (Abhandlungen des Deutschen Archäologischen Instituts Kairo, Koptische Reihe, 1; Wiesbaden, 1962). Eng. tr. of long recension by F. Wisse in J. M. Robinson (ed.), The Nag Hammadi Library in English (3rd edn., Leiden, 1988), pp. 104–23. H.-C. Puech in Schneemelcher, 1 (1959), pp. 229–43; Eng. tr. (1963), pp. 314–31. S. Pétrement, Le Dieu séparé: Les origines du gnosticisme (1984), pp. 529–72; Eng. tr. (1991), pp. 387–419. CPG 1 (1983), pp. 75 f (no. 1180).

John, Epistles of St. There are three '*Catholic Epistles' which tradition ascribes to St *John, the Apostle and author of the Fourth Gospel. The longest and most important of them is the First. It is reckoned by *Eusebius among the 'homologoumena' and is attested by *Papias, *Polycarp, the *Muratorian Canon, and *Irenaeus. Modern scholars who defend the Apostolic authorship of the Gospel commonly also admit that of this Epistle. Among the great majority who reject the Apostolic authorship of the Gospel, opinion is divided. Some, e.g. A. *Harnack, attribute both the Gospel and the First Epistle to the same author; others, e.g. C. H. *Dodd, distinguish their authors. The other two Epistles are intimately connected with each other. They were, however, not generally admitted as authentic in antiquity. Eusebius placed them among the 'antilegomena' and St *Jerome reports that many attributed them to one 'John the Elder' because of their opening words (see JOHN THE PRESBYTER). They are not contained in the Syriac (*Peshitta) Version, and not a few modern critics assign them to a different author from that of the First Epistle. The Second Epistle is addressed to 'the elect lady and her children', which words are generally believed to refer not to a person but to a church; the Third to a Christian named Gaius.

The First Epistle reflects many of the themes of the Fourth Gospel: God is light, life, and love, manifested in the sending of Jesus, the Son of God, the *Messiah. Jesus Christ is the Saviour of the world (4: 14), through whom we possess eternal life (5: 12 f.), receive expiation and cleansing from our sins (1: 7) and become children of God (3: 1 f. and 5: 1). The writer stresses the continuity of Christian tradition and experience from the beginning (1: 1 ff.), and at some points is closer to the emphases of the earlier tradition than the Fourth Gospel, esp. in some eschatological statements. There is strong polemic against 'false brethren' who have broken away from the writer's community (2: 19); they are denounced for denying that Jesus Christ 'has come in the flesh', i.e. is truly incarnate (4: 2), for flouting the demands of righteousness and love, and belonging to 'the world' and the devil (4: 5 and 3: 8 f.). Their claim to inspiration is false; they are seen as embodying the *antichrist (2: 18). In making this sharp distinction between the children of God and the children of the devil or the godless world, the writer uses language suggesting not just a moral *dualism but an ultimate dualism incompatible with the biblical doctrine of *creation by one God; but it is unlikely that he intends to go so far. Similarly he urges the ideal of sinless perfection in language suggesting that Christians cannot, and presumably therefore do not, sin (3: 7–10). This is balanced by equally emphatic statements that we do sin, and need and receive forgiveness. Both points are important, although the writer fails to harmonize them. Some scholars therefore infer that there must be two sources or even writers; a third has been suggested for the passage which distinguishes mortal and unforgivable sins from less serious ones (5: 16 f.). Others ascribe the awkwardness to the necessity of attacking contradictory positions of the heretics themselves, who, like some later *Gnostics, combined an arrogant claim to spiritual perfection with a practical disregard of moral standards.

The Second Epistle insists esp. on the necessity of professing the right doctrine (2 Jn. 9) and of avoiding communion with the teachers of error (vv. 10, 11), and the Third on hospitality, reprimanding one Diotrephes for evading the practice of this virtue. The teaching of all three Epistles centres in the love of one's neighbour, for our love of God is best proved by the practice of fraternal charity.

On 1 Jn. 5: 7 f. see JOHANNINE COMMA.

Patristic comm. incl. the 'Adumbrationes' of *Clement of Alexandria (i.e. Lat. tr. of part of Clement's 'Hypotyposeis' made by *Cassiodorus *c.*540) and the 'Decem Tractatus' of St *Augustine. The more important modern comm. on the Epp. are those of B. F. *Westcott (London, 1883), A. E. Brooke (ICC, 1912), H. Windisch (Hb. NT 4, Heft 2; 1911, on the Catholic Epistles; 3rd edn. by H. Preisker, 15, 1951, pp. 106–44 and 166–72), J. Chaine (Études bibliques, 1939, on the Catholic Epistles, pp. 97–260), C. H. Dodd (Moff. Comm., 1946), R. Schnackenburg (Herders Theologischer Kommentar zum Neuen Testament, 13, Fasz. 3; 1953; 3rd edn., 1965), R. R. Williams (on 1–3 John and James, Cambridge, 1965, pp. 3–72), R. *Bultmann (KEK 14; 1967; Eng. tr., Hermeneia; Philadelphia [1973]), J. L. Houlden (Black's NT Comm., 1973), R. E. Brown, SS (Anchor Bible, 30; 1982), S. S. Smalley (Word Biblical Comm. 51; Waco, Tex. [1984]), G. Strecker (KEK 14; 1989) and F. Vouga (Hb. NT 15, Heft 3; 1990). M. Hengel, The Johannine Question (1989), esp. pp. 24–73. R. Law, The Tests of Life: A Study of the First Epistle of St John (Edinburgh, 1909). C. H. Dodd, 'The First Epistle of St John and the Fourth Gospel', Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, 21 (1937), pp. 129–56. J. C. O'Neill, The Puzzle of 1 John: A New Examination of Origins (1966). A. Harnack, Über den dritten Johannesbrief (TU 15, Heft 3; 1897). J. Lieu, The Second and Third Epistles of John: History and Background (Edinburgh, 1986). R. Leconte in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 4 (1949), cols. 797–815, s.v. 'Jean (Épîtres de saint)'; R. Kysar in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 3 (1992), pp. 900–12, s.v.

John, Gospel of St. The tradition that the Fourth Gospel was written by St *John the Apostle goes back to at least the end of the 2nd cent., when it is attested by St *Irenaeus (Adv. Haer. 3. 1. 1.). Irenaeus was acquainted with, and perhaps derived his information from St *Polycarp. Polycarp (quoted in *Eusebius, HE 5. 20. 6), may, however, have been referring to another John, sc. *John the Presbyter, whom many, esp. in the first half of the 20th cent., have supposed to be the true author. The Gospel was already in existence early in the 2nd cent., as is indicated by the reflection of its ideals in Polycarp and St *Ignatius of Antioch and has been confirmed by the discovery of the '*Rylands St John' papyrus. Apostolic authorship would account for the close acquaintance with Palestine and esp. *Jerusalem shown in some passages and for the precise details often given of time and place (e.g. 1: 29, 35, 39; 4: 6 etc.). But it has been recognized since *Clement of Alexandria that the Gospel as a whole is not a plain account of the Lord's *miracles and popular teaching, but a deeply meditated representation of His Person and doctrine. To most modern scholars direct apostolic authorship has therefore seemed unlikely; and only a few (e.g. J. A. T. *Robinson) would favour a date before c. AD 80 or 90. Good sources or historical traditions at many points are probable, and in any case the author emphatically claims to be witnessing to what 'we' have seen (1: 14; cf. 19: 35, 21: 24, and see JOHN, ST, for the relationship of 'the *beloved disciple' to the author).

Questions arise from a comparison of the Fourth Gospel with the 'Synoptics' from which it differs widely in content, style, and outlook. For example, the Lord's ministry extends over three *Passovers, and alternates between Jerusalem and *Galilee; the expulsion of the money-changers from the *Temple is placed not at the close but at the beginning of His ministry; the Crucifixion is evidently dated on Nisan 14, not 15; and the *Last Supper is not the Passover Meal. Further, there is no mention of certain important events, e.g. the *Transfiguration and the institution of the *Eucharist, nor yet (unless by implication) of the *Baptism of Christ. There are no exorcisms, no *parables of the familiar kind, and only two occurrences of the phrase '*Kingdom of God'. On the other hand, John includes some events—most conspicuously the Raising of *Lazarus—about which the Synoptists say nothing; and there are extended discourses and dialogues on clearly defined themes with a characteristic style and vocabulary. Above all, Jesus speaks openly and frequently of His unique Sonship to God and His saving mission, whereas in the Synoptics such explicit claims are comparatively rare, and even then are sometimes accompanied by injunctions to secrecy. But there are also many points of similarity, and the main outline of the story is the same. Jesus is preceded by St *John (not here called 'the Baptist'), although their ministries overlap and his witness to the Lord is given unambiguously; Jesus has a ministry of teaching and miracles, at least part of which is in Galilee. He visits Jerusalem and is rejected by its leaders, who plot and encompass His Crucifixion; He is buried, and the tomb is found empty on the first day of the week, and the Risen Christ reveals Himself alive to His disciples.

What liberties the author of the Fourth Gospel has taken in rewriting the traditions he received is disputed, but there is general agreement that he is largely responsible for their shape and wording. For him the significance of the events is paramount, but 19: 35 indicates that the historicity of the death of Jesus is fundamental. There are a few similarities with the Synoptics (esp. Mark) in wording as well as substance, but it is uncertain whether he was familiar with one or more of them. He perhaps drew not on the Synoptic Gospels themselves, but on parallel traditions and sources. In either case, he supplemented and corrected his material, but was concerned chiefly to interpret it. For all its theological profundity, the Gospel has simplicity and directness; narratives and characters are often vivid.

The structure is clear: (1) the Prologue (1: 1–18), in which Jesus is presented as the eternal Word (*Logos, q.v.) of God; (2) the public ministry (1: 19–12: 50); (3) private teaching and prayer to the Father at the Last Supper (13–17); and (4) narrative of the Crucifixion and Resurrection (18–21). Although John has often been described as a 'seamless robe' (though with 'loose threads'), there are indications of dislocation (e.g. 14: 31 looks like an end to the Farewell Discourses) and some scholars have argued that the Gospel was composed in a number of stages, with one or more redactors; that the Prologue was taken over from an existing hymn and perhaps added at a later stage in the composition; and that a collection of 'signs' existed earlier. Ch. 21 (in which the 'beloved disciple' is claimed to be the author, 21: 24) is commonly assumed to be an appendix, probably added to allay anxiety after the death of the beloved disciple. 20: 31 seems to be the original ending of the Gospel, stating its purpose ('that ye may believe [or go on believing] that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye may have life in his name'). The aim is probably to strengthen the faith of Christians rather than to win belief from outsiders. The so-called '*pericope adulterae' (7: 53–8: 11; q.v.) cannot have been part of the original text.

The central teaching of the Gospel is Christological. Jesus is the eternal Son of God, pre-existent before *Abraham (8: 58), and indeed before the world (17: 5). The Son has been given everything that the Father has, including authority to give life and to execute judgement (5: 21–7); no one comes to the Father except through Him (14: 6), and He can say 'whoever has seen me has seen the Father' (14: 9). The 'Word' was made flesh, and His Divine nature is unequivocally affirmed (1: 1; 1: 14). The Jews accuse Him of blasphemy (5: 18), but Jesus stresses His total dependence on the Father and obedience in all that He says and does (5: 19; 5: 30). His deeds and words are regularly rejected or misunderstood by His opponents, or 'the world', but to those who accept and believe they are the revelation of God. Although the chief stress is on Jesus' Divine origin and status, His humanity is presupposed and affirmed, perhaps in conscious opposition to *Docetists (e.g. 4: 6). Many scholars have nevertheless detected docetic tendencies in the evangelist's own apparent reluctance to concede that Jesus could ever be ignorant (6: 6; 11: 42) or subject to temptation (12: 27, esp. if punctuated as in modern translations).

The Lord's message and mission for the salvation of all humanity (3: 16) are expounded in terms of 'light' and 'life'. Light is related to knowing, in contrast with darkness, ignorance, and sin (3: 19). In view of this moral dualism, it is not surprising that the Gospel had early popularity among the *Gnostics, esp. the 2nd-cent. Valentinians. But it also stresses 'life', i.e. eternal life, as promised in the Jewish and Christian traditions to whose who will be raised 'at the last day' (6: 39–40), in John most characteristically depicted as life that begins immediately through believing in Jesus (5: 24). The Christian teaching that salvation is dependent on the death (and resurrection) of Christ is spelt out clearly (e.g. 10: 15). Special emphasis is put on the gift of the *Holy Spirit, consequent upon these events (16: 7 ff.).

The response required from disciples is threefold: to believe in Jesus as the Son of God sent by the Father in order to bring them into God's family and fellowship as His children; to practise in that fellowship the same love that Christ has shown them; and to witness to this faith and love that others may be brought in. If they do this, they will be sound branches of the 'vine' that is Christ (15: 1; 15: 5), and sheep of the flock of which Christ is the 'good shepherd' (10: 14); and they will enjoy the same unity which the Son enjoys with the Father (17: 22).

Ancient Gk. comm. incl. those of the Gnostic *Heracleon (fragmentary), *Origen (only 8 out of 32 books survive), *Chrysostom, *Theodore of Mopsuestia (many Gk. frags. and complete in Syr.), *Cyril of Alexandria, *Theophylact and *Euthymius Zigabenus; the most important Lat. work is St *Augustine's collection of Tractates on the Gospel. *Rupert of Deutz and *Nicholas of Lyre were notable among medieval commentators. Several of the Reformers wrote comm., notably J. *Calvin. RC commentators include T. de V. *Cajetan and J. *Maldonatus. Later comm. incl. those by B. F. *Westcott (Speaker's Commentary, 1881; Gk. text, 2 vols., London, 1908), A. F. *Loisy (Paris, 1903), T. *Zahn (in his own Kommentar zum Neuen Testament, 4; 1908), J. *Wellhausen (Berlin, 1908), W. Bauer (Hb. NT, 1912; 3rd edn., 1933), M. J. *Lagrange, OP (Études Bibliques, 1924), J. H. *Bernard (2 vols., ICC, 1928), A. *Schlatter (Tübingen, 1930), E. C. *Hoskyns (ed. F. N. Davey, 2 vols., London, 1940), R. *Bultmann (KEK, Abt. 2, 11th edn.; 1941; Eng. tr. of 1964 edn., with additions, Oxford, 1971), H. Strathmann (Das Neue Testament Deutsch, 4, 1951; 2nd edn., 1955), C. K. Barrett (London, 1955; 2nd edn., 1978), R. Schnackenburg (Herders theologischer Kommentar zum Neuen Testament, 4; 3 vols., 1965–75, with additional vol., 1984; Eng. tr., 3 vols., 1968–82), R. E. Brown, SS (2 vols., New York, 1966–70; London, 1971), J. N. Sanders (ed. B. A. Mastin, Black's NT Comm., 1968), J. C. Fenton (New Clar. Bib., 1970), B. Lindars, SSF (New Cent. Bib., 1972), E. Haencken, posthumously ed. U. Busse (Tübingen, 1980; Eng. tr., Hermeneia, 2 vols., Philadelphia [1984]), J. Becker (2 vols., Göttingen, 1979–81), G. R. Beasley-Murray (Word Biblical Comm. 36; Waco, Tex. [1987]), and D. A. Carson (Leicester and Grand Rapids, Mich., 1991).

Modern research begins with K. G. Bretschneider, Probabilia de Evangelii et Epistolarum Joannis, Apostoli, Indole et Origine (Leipzig, 1820), which questioned the historicity of John. Turning-points have been marked by the work of F. C. *Baur, 'Ueber die Composition und der Charakter des johanneischen Evangeliums', Theologische Jahrbücher, 3 (1844), pp. 1–191, 397–475, 615–700, of which the substance was incorporated in his Kritische Untersuchungen über die kanonischen Evangelien (1847), pp. 79–389, and the comm. of Bultmann cited above. Later works incl. J. N. Sanders, The Fourth Gospel in the Early Church (1943); C. H. Dodd, The Interpretation of the Fourth Gospel (Cambridge, 1953); id., Historical Tradition in the Fourth Gospel (ibid., 1963); F. M. Braun, OP, Jean le théologien et son évangile dans l'Église ancienne (3 vols., Études Bibliques, 1959–66); M. F. Wiles, The Spiritual Gospel: The Interpretation of the Fourth Gospel in the Early Church (Cambridge, 1960); E. Käsemann, Jesu letzter Wille nach Johannes 17 (Tübingen, 1966; Eng. tr., The Testament of Jesus, 1968); J. L. Martyn, History and Theology in the Fourth Gospel (New York, etc. [1968]); R. A. Culpepper, Anatomy of the Fourth Gospel: A Study in Literary Design (Philadelphia [1983]); M. Hengel, The Johannine Question (1989), pp. 1–23 and 74–135; D. Rensberger, Johannine Faith and Liberating Community (Philadelphia, 1988; in UK, Overcoming the World: Politics and Community in the Gospel of John, 1989 [from a *Liberationalist angle]). A collection of papers, tr. into Eng. where necessary, ed. J. Ashton, The Interpretation of John (Issues in Religion and Theology, 9; 1986). Id., Understanding the Fourth Gospel (Oxford, 1991), with admirable survey of modern research, pp. 9–111, revising the earlier perspective of W. F. Howard, The Fourth Gospel in Recent Criticism and Interpretation (1931; rev. C. K. Barrett, 1955). E. Malatesta, SJ, St John's Gospel 1920–1965: A Cumulative and Classified Bibliography of Books and Periodical Literature on the Fourth Gospel (Analecta Biblica, 32; Rome, 1967); H. Thyen, 'Aus der Literatur zum Johannesevangelium', Theologische Rundschau, 39 (1974), pp. 1–69, 222–52, and 289–330. R. Kysar, 'The Fourth Gospel. A Report on Recent Research', Aufstieg und Niedergang der römischen Welt, 2. 25. 3, ed. W. Haase (1985), pp. 2389–480. Id. in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 3 (1992), pp. 912–31.

John XII (d. 964), Pope from 955. Octavian was the son of the Roman patrician, Alberic the younger, who, after the death of his mother, Marozia, had become the absolute ruler of Rome and obliged the noblemen of the city to make his son Pope on the death of Agapetus II. Octavian, who took the name of John XII, thus became Pope at the early age of 18. The main cause of the troubles of his pontificate was his decision to call in Otto I from Germany to help him against the rulers of N. Italy, King Berengar II and his son Adalbert. Otto arrived in Rome in 962 and on 2 Feb. was crowned Roman Emperor by John, who also sanctioned the erection of the archbishopric of Magdeburg and of the bishopric of Merseburg. The Emperor, who had been given an ornamental copy of the '*Donation of Constantine', on 13 Feb. issued the 'Privilegium Ottonis' or 'Ottonianum' recognizing the Papal territories (including the Carolingian donations) in central Italy. He then left Rome, ostensibly to conquer and defend them, but in fact demanded allegiance to himself. John then engineered a revolt against the imperial troops in Rome and sought assistance both from Berengar and the Byzantines. Amid mutual accusations of betrayal, Otto returned to Rome and on 6 Dec. 963 presided over a synod which deposed the Pope for immoral life and elected in his place a layman (Leo VIII), who received all the orders within two days. Otto also issued a revised form of the 'Ottonianum' with additional clauses (based on a forged version of the concessions made to Lothar I in 824) requiring, among other things, that a newly elected pope should take an oath of fealty to the emperor before consecration. After Otto's departure, John returned to Rome and in Feb. 964 deprived Leo VIII in a synod of his own, but was killed soon afterwards. His successor, Benedict V, was in turn expelled by Otto the following June and Leo VIII reinstated.

'Epistolae et Privilegia' in J. P. Migne, PL 133. 1013–41. P. Jaffé, Regesta Pontificum Romanorum, 1 (2nd edn. by W. Wattenbach, Leipzig, 1885), pp. 463–7. LP (Duchesne), 2, pp. 246–9. W. Ullmann, 'The Origin of the Ottonianum', Cambridge Historical Journal, 11 (1953–5), pp. 114–28. H. Zimmermann, 'Prozess und Abstzung Papst Johannes XII. im Jahre 963. Quellen und Urteile', Österreichisches Archiv für Kirchenrecht, 12 (1961), pp. 207–30. Id., Das dunkle Jahrhundert [1971], pp. 134–56. H. Wolter, Die Synoden im Reichsgebiet und in Reichsitalien von 916 bis 1056 (1988), pp. 69–86. L. *Duchesne, Les Premiers Temps de l'état pontifical (2nd edn., 1904), pp. 337–51. Mann, 4 (1910), pp. 241–72. Fliche and Martin, 7 (1940), pp. 44–55, with refs. E. Amann in DTC 8 (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 619–26, s.v. 'Jean XII', with further refs. to sources.

John XXI (d. 1277), Pope from 1276. Peter of Spain (Petrus Hispanus) was born at Lisbon, prob. not later than *c.*1205, studied arts and theology at *Paris, and taught medicine at Siena. By 1250 he was Dean of Lisbon and Archdeacon of Vermoin in the diocese of Braga; in 1272 he became court-physician to Pope *Gregory X at Viterbo. In 1273 he was elected Abp. of Braga and created Cardinal Bp. of Frascati; in this capacity he attended the Second Council of *Lyons (1274). After the death of Hadrian V he was elected Pope on 15 Sept. 1276, taking the title 'John XXI', although no John XX had existed. During his brief pontificate he was active to preserve the union with the Greek Church achieved at Lyons. His bull 'Relatio nimis implacida' of 18 Jan. 1277 required the Bp. of Paris to report to him those who were teaching errors prejudicial to the faith. On 7 Mar. 1277 Bp. Stephen Tempier condemned 219 errors, some associated with the teachings of St *Thomas Aquinas, others with the supposed influence of *Averroism on masters of arts at Paris, such as *Siger of Brabant and Boethius of Dacia (fl. 1270–80). On 28 Apr. 1277 the bull 'Flumen aquae vivae' called for a further report on the errors of the Parisian masters. On 20 May 1277 the Pope died from injuries sustained when the roof collapsed in an apartment constructed for his use at Viterbo. It is unlikely that he had any responsibility for the details of the 1277 condemnations; his intellectual achievements were considerable and the influence of his writings enduring.

Peter of Spain's Tractatus, or Summulae logicales, was prob. composed in N. Spain in the early 1230s. It survives in more than 300 manuscripts and *c.*200 editions printed between 1474 and 1639, being the most influential of all medieval manuals of logic. He also composed other logical works and was among the first to comment on *Aristotle's De anima, De sensu et sensato, De morte et vita, De longitudine et brevitate vitae, and Historia animalium. His Thesaurus pauperum, a manual of medicine, enjoyed a large circulation with other medical writings. His chief theological work was an Expositio librorum beati Dionysii.

Crit. edn. of his Tractatus by L. M. de Rijk (Philosophical Texts and Studies, 22; Assen, 1972), with introd. and bibl. Part also ed., with Eng. tr., by J. P. Mullally (Publications in Mediaeval Studies, 8; Notre Dame, Ind., 1945). Eng. tr. of other logical works from Copulata omnium tractatuum Petri Hispani (Cologne, 1489) and Textus et Copulata . . . (ibid., 1494) by id., Tractatus syncategorematum and selected anonymous Treatises (Mediaeval Philosophical Texts in Translation, 13; Milwaukee, Wis., 1964). Further Eng. tr. of his De Compositione and De Negatione, with 'semi-critical' edn. of text, by J. Spruyt (Aristarium, Supplementa, 5; Nijmegen, 1989). Obras filosóficas, ed. M. [A.] Alonso, SJ (Consejo Superior de Investigaciones Cientificas, Serie A, 1, 3, and 4; 1941–52; 2nd edn. of vol. 1, 1961). Expositio librorum beati Dionysii, ed. id. (Lisbon, 1957). Obras Médicas, ed. M. H. da Rocha Pereira (Acta Universitatis Conimbrigensis, 1973). Le Registre de Jean XXI, ed. E. Cadier [appended to the Register of Gregory X] (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 2nd ser. 12, fasc. 3; 1898; with tables, 1960). The bull 'Relatio nimis implacida' is pr. in the Chartularium Universitatis Parisiensis, ed. H. Denifle, OP, and E. Chatelain, 1 (Paris, 1899), pp. 541 f. (no. 471); condemned propositions, ibid., pp. 543–58 (no. 473); 'Flumen aquae vivae' pr. in A. Callebaut, OFM, 'Jean Pecham, O.F.M., et l'Augustinisme', Archivum Franciscanum Historicum, 18 (1925), pp. 459 f. R. Stapper, Papst Johannes XXI. (Münster, 1898). M. *Grabmann, Handschriftliche Forschungen und Funde zu den philosophischen Schriften des Petrus Hispanus, des späteren Papstes Johannes XXI. (†1277) (Sb. (Bayr.), 1936, Heft 9; repr. id., Gesammelte Akademieabhandlungen, 2 (Veröffent-lichungen des Grabmann-Institutes, NF 25, Heft 2; 1979), pp. 1123–254). R. Hissette, Enquête sur les 219 articles condamnés à Paris le 7 mars 1277 (Philosophes médiévaux, 22; 1977). P. Glorieux in Catholicisme, 6 (1967), cols. 488 f., s.v. 'Jean XXI'.

John XXII (1249–1334), Pope from 1316. Jacques Duèse, a native of Cahors, after studying law at Paris and other French universities, was appointed Bp. of Fréjus by *Boniface VIII in 1300, Bp. of *Avignon in 1310, and Card. Bp. of Porto in 1312. Elected Pope in 1316 as the candidate of Robert of Anjou, he set out deliberately to transfer the Papacy to Avignon, on the quasi-imperial principle of 'ubi papa, ibi Roma'. Since the current Bp. of Avignon was his nephew (Jacques de Via), John was able easily to promote him cardinal and take over the episcopal palace himself. He worked hard to make Avignon a centre of culture, gathering artists and craftsmen as well as scholars such as the canonist Johannes Andreae (*c.*1270–1348), *Marsiglio of Padua, and *Petrarch. His reign was filled with theological and political conflicts. Almost at once he became involved in the difficulties threatening to split the *Franciscan Order (q.v.) and in 1317 dissolved the party of the *Spirituals, whose doctrines he denounced as heretical. He soon afterwards condemned the thesis, held by the bulk of the Franciscans, that the poverty of Christ and His Apostles was absolute. His decision won the assent of the majority of the order, but several of the more fanatical Franciscans fled to Louis of Bavaria, who gave them his support. In 1324 the Pope declared Louis a heretic and the quarrel became the occasion of a violent literary feud in which *William of Ockham and John of Jandun (d. 1328) took part. The literary conflict culminated in Marsiglio of Padua's 'Defensor Pacis' (anathematized by John in 1327), which upheld the absolute supremacy of the Emperor over the Pope, as one who may be elected, censured, and deposed at the Imperial pleasure. In 1328 Louis seized Rome and had himself crowned Roman Emperor, appointing a Spiritual Franciscan as Antipope under the name of Nicholas V on the ground that John had deposed himself by his absence from the Roman Church. Nicholas submitted to John two years later, but Louis was never reconciled.

John was an expert canonist, but at best an amateur theologian. In 1317 he promulgated the Clementines, the last official book of the Corpus Iuris Canonici, but a collection of his own decrees later achieved similar status as the Extravagantes Johannis XXII*. He insisted that as sovereign he could not be held to the ruling of previous Popes, notably Nicholas III (1277–80) in the controversy over apostolic poverty, but he became confused by his own declarations that he must adhere to scriptural authority in matters of faith and by his opponents' arguments that Papal infallibility reduced the competence of subsequent Popes. The charges of heresy levelled against him were strengthened by his involvement in the theological dispute on the *Beatific Vision. He opposed the general opinion and denied its enjoyment to the souls of the blessed before the Last Judgement, a doctrine which met with strong resistance from the Masters of the University of Paris, and one which he renounced on his deathbed as a personal opinion. His successor, *Benedict XII, adopted the more generally accepted view, which he defined in 1336.

John was a very capable administrator. He reorganized the Curia, establishing the *Rota Romana in 1331 as the tribunal of the Papal court, put Papal finances on a sound footing by some unpopular taxation, exerted firm supervision of the French clergy to counteract its '*Gallican' tendencies, although his numerous *provisions and nominations were as unpopular as his taxation, and he redefined many dioceses, esp. in Asia, where he established a new province at Sultaniyah with six Armenian suffragan bishops. He also introduced the universal observance of Trinity Sunday in 1334. The authorship of the famous prayer Anima Christi, used and popularized by St *Ignatius Loyola, has been assigned to him.

S. Riezler (ed.), Vatikanische Akten zur deutschen Geschichte in der Zeit Kaiser Ludwigs des Bayern (1891), pp. 1–577. G. Mollat (ed.), Jean XXII (1316–1334): Lettres communes (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 3rd ser. 1 bis, 16 vols. bound in 13; 1904–47). A. Coulon (ed.), Lettres secrètes et curiales du Pape Jean XXII ... relatives à la France (ibid. 1; 5 fascs. [to 1324]; 1906–13). A. Fayen (ed.), Lettres de Jean XXII [concerning the Low Countries] (Analecta Vaticano-Belgica publiés par l'Institut historique Belge de Rome, 2–3; 1908–12). A. L. Tăutu (ed.), Acta Ioannis XXII (Pontificia Commissio ad redigendum Codicem Iuris Canonici Orientalis, Fontes, 3rd ser. vol. 6, tom. 2; Rome, 1952). J. Tarrant (ed.), Extrauagantes Iohannis XXII (Monumenta Iuris Canonici, Series B, vol. 6; Vatican City, 1983). M. Dykmans, SJ (ed.), Les Sermons de Jean XXII sur la Vision Béatifique (Miscellanea Historiae Pontificiae, 34; Rome, 1973). É. *Baluze, Vitae Paparum Avenionensium, ed. G. Mollat, 1 (1916), pp. 107–94. V. Verlaque, Jean XXII, sa vie et ses œuvres d'après des documents inédits (1883). N. Valois, 'Jean Duèse, pape sous le nom de Jean XXII', Histoire littéraire de la France, 34 (1914), pp. 391–630. H. Otto, 'Zur italienischen Politik Johanns XXII', Quellen und Forschungen aus italienischen Archiven und Bibliotheken, 14 (1911), pp. 140–265, with texts. A. Esch, Die Ehedispense Johanns XXII und ihre Beziehung zur Politik (Historische Studien, 183; 1929). G. Tabacco, La Casa di Francia nell'azione politica di Papa Giovanni XXII (Istituto Storico Italiano per il Medio Evo. Studi Storici, fascs. 1–4; 1953). H. O. Schwöbel, Die diplomatische Kampf zwischen Ludwig dem Bayern und der römischen Kurie im Rahmen des kanonischen Absolutionsprozesses 1330–1346 (Quellen und Studien zur Verfassungsgeschichte des Deutschen Reiches im Mittelalter und Neuzeit, 10; Weimar, 1968). L. Caillet, La Papauté d'Avignon et l'Église de France: La politique bénéficiale du Pape Jean XXII en France (1316–1334) [1975]. B. Tierney, Origins of Papal Infallibility 1150–1350 (Studies in the History of the Christian Church, 6; Leiden, 1972), pp. 171–204 ('John XXII and the Franciscans'); J. L. Heft, SM, 'Nicholas III (1277–1280) and John XXII (1316–1334): Popes in Contradiction?', Archivum Historiae Pontificiae, 21 (1983), pp. 245–57; id., John XXII and Papal Teaching Authority (Texts and Studies in Religion, 27; Lewiston, NY, etc. [1986]); T. Turley, 'John XXII and the Franciscans: A Reappraisal' in J. R. Sweeney and S. Chodorow (eds.), Popes, Teachers and Canon Law in the Middle Ages (Ithaca, NY, and London, 1989), pp. 74–88. G. Mollat, Les Papes d'Avignon (10th edn. [1965]), pp. 39–71, with detailed bibl.; Eng. tr. of earlier edn. (1963), pp. 9–25. D. L. Douie in NCE 7 (1967), pp. 1014 f., s.v.; C. A. Lückerath in TRE 17 (1988), pp. 109–12, s.v. 'Johannes XXII', with bibl.

John XXIII (d. 1419), Antipope to both *Benedict XIII and Gregory XII from 1410 to 1415. Baldassare Cossa was the descendant of a noble but impoverished Neapolitan family. After a military career during which he is said to have engaged in piracy, he studied law at *Bologna and entered the service of the *Curia. Boniface IX, who appreciated his administrative and military talents, created him cardinal in 1402, and made him legate of Romandiola in 1403 and of Bologna in 1409. He was crowned Pope in 1410, but the validity of his election has been contested as being simoniacal. Of the three Popes then existing he had the largest number of supporters, esp. after Ladislaus of Naples, defeated at Roccasecca on 19 May 1411, transferred his allegiance from Gregory XII to John. In 1412 he called a synod at Rome which was very poorly attended and soon dissolved. In 1413, at the persuasion of King Sigismund, he convoked a General Council to end the W. Schism, which met at *Constance in 1414. Though he promised to cede his claims to the Papacy if Gregory XII and Benedict XIII would do the same, his sincerity was suspected, and he actually fled soon afterwards, so as to deprive the Council of its authority, under the pretext that he enjoyed no liberty. After being brought back by force he was imprisoned and deposed (1415), accepting his fate with unexpected meekness. He was held a prisoner in Germany for three years, but was set free in 1419, when he recognized *Martin V, who made him Card. Bp. of Tusculum. He died soon afterwards.

J. Schwerdfeger, Papst Johann XXIII und die Wahl Sigismunds zum römischen König, 1410 (1895). E. J. Kitts, Pope John the Twenty-Third and Master John Hus of Bohemia (1910). H. Finke, 'Zur Charakteristik des Hauptanklägers Johanns XXIII auf dem Konstanzer Konzil', Miscellanea Francesco Ehrle, 3 (ST 39; 1924), pp. 157–63. H. G. Peter, Die Informationen Papst Johanns XXIII. und dessen Flucht von Konstanz bis Schaffhausen (Freiburg, 1926). H. Diener, 'Rubrizellen zu Kanzleiregistern Johanns XXIII. und Martins V.', Quellen und Forschungen aus italienischen Archiven und Bibliotheken, 39 (1959), pp. 117–72. L. Waldmüller, 'Materialien zur Geschichte Johannes' XXIII. (1410–1414)', Annuarium Historiae Conciliorum, 7 (1975), pp. 229–37. W. Brandmüller, 'Infeliciter electus fuit in Papam. Zur Wahl Johannes' XXIII', in D. Berg and H.-W. Goetz (eds.), Ecclesia et Regnum: Beiträge zur Geschichte von Kirche, Recht und Staat im Mittelalter. Festschrift für Franz-Joseph Schmale zu seinem 65. Geburtstag (1989), pp. 309–22, repr. in Brandmüller, Papst und Konzil im Grossen Schisma (1990), pp. 71–84. G. Mollat in DTC 8 (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 641–4, s.v. 'Jean XXIII', with refs. to sources; id. in NCE 7 (1967), pp. 1020 f. See also bibl. to CONSTANCE, COUNCIL OF.

John XXIII (1881–1963), Pope from 1958. Angelo Giuseppe Roncalli was the third of thirteen children born to a peasant family at Sotto il Monte near Bergamo. From the seminary at Bergamo he won a scholarship to the San Apollinare college in Rome, where he was ordained priest in 1904. At this time he began the spiritual diary which he kept throughout his life (pub. in 1964; Eng. tr., The Journal of a Soul, 1965). He was secretary to Count Giacomo Radini-Tedeschi from the time of the latter's appointment as Bp. of Bergamo in 1905 until his death in 1914. In his spare time he engaged in study of the history of the diocese and in 1909 embarked on his main scholarly work, Gli atti della visita apostolica di S. Carlo Borromeo a Bergamo (1575) (5 vols., 1936–58). His research in the *Ambrosian Library brought him into touch with A. Ratti (later Pope *Pius XI).

During the First World War he served as a hospital orderly and then as an army chaplain. In 1921 he was summoned to Rome as director of the Society for the Propagation of the Faith in Italy; under him the Society was reorganized and brought by Pius XI under the Congregation of the *Propaganda. In 1925 Roncalli was consecrated titular Bp. of Areopolis and sent as *Vicar Apostolic to *Bulgaria. In 1934 he was translated to the titular see of Mesembria and appointed Apostolic Delegate to Turkey and Greece. During his time in the Balkans he established good relations with the Orthodox, visiting the *Oecumenical Patriarch of Constantinople in 1939. In the Second World War he organized relief supplies to German-occupied Greece, as well as assisting Jews in Istanbul. At the end of 1944, after the German retreat from France, he was sent as Papal Nuncio to Paris. Here he dealt tactfully with the problem of the numerous French bishops accused of having collaborated with the Vichy regime; in the face of delays he pressed for the speedy return of German prisoners-of-war (meanwhile arranging study for the ordinands among them); and he won some concessions from the French goverment over the financing of Church schools. He showed sympathy with the motives (if not all the actions) of the worker priests (who were restricted after his departure). In 1953 he was created a cardinal. When he left France, he expected to have to work in the *Curia, but on the death of the Patr. of *Venice later in 1953, Roncalli succeeded him, glad to be returning to pastoral work.

In 1958, on the death of *Pius XII, he was elected Pope at the age of 77. He caused surprise by taking the name of John, long discredited because of the antipope *John XXIII. Among his first acts was the creation on 15 Dec. 1958 of 23 new cardinals, including G. B. Montini (later Pope *Paul VI), and the number of cardinals soon exceeded the level of 70 laid down by *Sixtus V. In 1959 he proposed to the cardinals three undertakings: a diocesan synod for Rome, an oecumenical council for the Church, and a revision of the code of *canon law. The synod was held in Rome in 1960 and dealt with local problems of Rome. The council, soon to be known as the Second Vatican Council, is the most important event of his pontificate. He attributed the calling of it to the inspiration of the Holy Spirit and gave it the task of renewing (aggiornamento) the religious life of the Church; it was to express the substance of its faith in new language and bring up to date its discipline and organization, with the ultimate goal of the unity of all Christians. To realize his ecumenical aim he set up the Secretariat for Promoting Christian Unity in 1960 and invited to the Council observers from other Churches. He opened and closed the first session of the Council, once intervening to give encouragement to those in favour of change. (For details of the legislation and significance of the Council, see VATICAN COUNCIL, SECOND). Other reforms of his pontificate included permission for the use of the vernacular in the Byzantine liturgy of the *Melchites (5 April 1960), approval of a new code of rubrics for the *Missal and *Breviary (25 July 1960), the insertion of the name of St *Joseph in the Canon of the Mass (13 Nov. 1962), and the creation of a pontifical commission to revise the code of canon law (28 Mar. 1963). He renewed the social teaching of the Church in '*Mater and Magistra' (1961) and in '*Pacem in Terris' (1963) he encouraged the end of colonialism and improvements in the position of women, as well as pleading for abandonment of the arms race. In the Cuban missile crisis of 1962 he publicly urged caution on the leaders of the United States and the Soviet Union. In 1960 he welcomed G. F. *Fisher, the first Abp. of Canterbury to be received at the Vatican since the Reformation, and in 1961 the RC Church was for the first time represented at an assembly of the *World Council of Churches. Throughout his pontificate there was a feeling that there was a desire in the RC Church to soften the obstacles to reunion with other Christian bodies, while he also sought to improve relations with Judaism by removing from the Good Friday liturgy the passages which caused most offence. He was mourned by those within and beyond the RC Church, and proceedings for his beatification were initiated by Paul VI.

The official acts of his pontificate are pr. in AAS. Acta also ed. D. Bertetto, SDB (Bibliotheca Theologica Salesiana, 2nd ser.; Zurich, 1964). John XXIII's Souvenirs d'un nonce: Cahiers de France (1944–1953) ed. L. Capovilla (Rome, 1963; Eng. tr., 1966); Il giornale dell'anima e altri scritti di pietà ed. id. (ibid., 1964; Eng. tr., 1965); Lettere ai familiari ed. id. (ibid., 1968; Eng. tr., 1970). Quindici letture also ed. id. (3rd edn., 1970), with detailed chronology of his life and other material in appendices. Correspondence with the future Pope Paul VI, 1925–1962, ed. id. (Brescia, 1982). His Life of Radini-Tedeschi, orig. pub. at Bergamo in 1916, was tr. into Eng. from 3rd edn., Rome, 1963, in 1970. The many studies include those of E. Balducci (Florence, 1964; Eng. tr., 1965), E. E. Y. Hales (London, 1965), M. Trevor (ibid., 1967), B. R. Bonnot (New York [1979]), and P. Hebblethwaite (London, 1984), with bibl. and refs. F. Della Salda, Obbedienza e Pace: Il vescovo A. G. Roncalli tra Sofia e Roma 1925–1934 (Genoa, 1989); V. Branca and S. Rosso-Mazzinghi (eds.), Angelo Giuseppe Roncalli dal Patriarcato di Venezia alla Cattedra di San Pietro (Florence, 1984); M. Manzo, Papa Giovanni vescovo a Roma [1991]. R. Trisco in NCE 7 (1967), pp. 1015–20, s.v.

John of Antioch (d. 441), Bp. of *Antioch from 429. The leader of the moderate Easterns in the *Nestorian controversy, he gave active support to his friend, Nestorius, in his dispute with *Cyril of Alexandria. In 431 he failed to arrive at the Council of *Ephesus in time for its opening meeting (22 June); and Cyril, suspecting him (probably wrongly) of employing Fabian tactics to aid his friend, refused to wait and proceeded to condemn Nestorius forthwith. When John eventually reached Ephesus a few days later, he held a counter-council which condemned Cyril and vindicated Nestorius. In 433 he became reconciled with Cyril on the basis of a theological formula devised as a compromise; but John thereby lost many supporters in his own patriarchate. Some of his letters are extant.

His letters are mostly pr. in ACO 1; for details see CPG 3 (1979), pp. 219–31 (nos. 6301–60). D. Stiernon in DPAC 2 (1984), cols. 1541–3, s.v. 'Giovanni di Antiochia'; Eng. tr. in Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 1 (1992), p. 444, s.v. See also bibl. to CYRIL OF ALEXANDRIA and to EPHESUS, COUNCIL OF (431).

John of Apamea (flourished early 5th cent.), Syriac spiritual writer, also known as John the Solitary. His writings include a 'Dialogue on the Soul' and a number of letters and tractates. There is some uncertainty about his identity and date; some of his works have been wrongly attributed to John of Lycopolis (d. 394).

Dialogue on the Soul, ed., under the name of John of Lycopolis, by S. Dedering (Leipzig, etc., 1936); Fr. tr. by I. Hausherr, SJ (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 120; Rome, 1939). L. G. Rignell (ed.), Briefe von Johannes dem Einsiedler (Lund, 1941); id. (ed.), Drei Traktate von Johannes dem Einsiedler (Lunds Universitets Årsskrift, NF, Avd. I, Bd. 54, no. 4; 1960), both with Ger. tr. Further texts ed. W. Strothmann, Johannes von Apamea (Patristische Texte und Studien, 11; 1972); Fr. tr. by R. Lavenant, SJ (SC 311; 1984). S. [P.] Brock, 'John the Solitary, On Prayer', JTS NS 30 (1979), pp. 84–101, incl. text and Eng. tr. A. de Halleux, 'La Christologie de Jean le Solitaire', Le Muséon, 94 (1981), pp. 5–36. B. Bradley in Dict. Sp. 8 (1974), cols. 764–72, s.v. 'Jean le Solitaire (d'Apamée)'.

John of Ávila, St (1499/1500–69), 'Apostle of Andalusia'. Born at Almodóvar del Campo (Ciudad Real), he first studied law at Salamanca (1513–17) and then, from 1520 to 1526, arts at Alcalá and the biblically based theology fostered there. Ordained in 1526, his plan to go to *Mexico as a missionary failed, partly prob. because of difficulties arising from his Jewish paternal ancestry, and partly because Alonso de Manrique (Abp. of Seville and Inquisitor General) wanted to keep him in Spain. His apostolate of preaching throughout Andalusia soon began and continued until prolonged ill-health obliged him to remain at Montilla (from 1554). In 1531 he was denounced to the Seville *Inquisition on various charges, including illuminism and undue religious partisanship on behalf of the poor. A prisoner for a year (1532–3), he was released with a warning to 'moderate his language' in his future preaching.

His concern with the need to improve the quality of the parish clergy and the pastoral care they gave, and to instruct lay people in the Christian faith, led him to establish at least 15 colleges or schools for the laity and two for the clergy. His preoccupation with the pastoral and spiritual shortcomings of the clergy later found expression in the two Memoriales (1551 and 1561) written for Pedro Guerrero, Abp. of Granada, a participant in the Council of *Trent; also in his Advertencias for the provincial synod of Toledo (1565). His many disciples and admirers included St *Peter of Alcántara, St Francis *Borgia, and *Luis of Granada. He conducted a wide correspondence with those seeking spiritual guidance: St *Teresa of Ávila obtained his judgement on her Life in his last months. He had high hopes of the *Jesuits, encouraging several of his followers to enter the Society, though he never did so himself (partly because of the prejudice against those with Jewish backgrounds which he believed to exist in the Society).

His one major spiritual treatise ('Audi, filia'), though originally written, in the mid-1530s, for a young aristocratic nun, in its developed form expounds the way of perfection for all Christian people. As also in his spiritual letters, he here urges confident trust in God and meditation on the sufferings and merits of Christ, through which man finds pardon. The centrality of this theme helps to explain why, even after making revisions, he more than once delayed publication. An unauthorized version (Alcalá, 1556) was one of the many spiritual works banned by the Valdés Index of 1559. It was prob. at this point that, reportedly, he destroyed much other MS material. The definitive version of his treatise appeared posthumously in 1574 and was printed several times until 1604, though little thereafter. His works were appreciated in different quarters, including the English *recusants of the early 17th cent. and at *Port-Royal, where Robert Arnauld d'Andilly translated them into French (1673). Attempts to secure his beatification in the 1730s were unsuccessful; he was beatified in 1894 and canonized in 1970. Feast day, 10 May.

Crit. edn. of his works by L. Sala Balust, rev. by F. Martín Hernández (Biblioteca de Autores Cristianos, 6 vols., 1970–1), with biographical introd., 1, pp. 3–389. Escritos sacerdotales (incl. Memoriales for the Council of Trent), ed. J. Esquerda Bifet (ibid., 1969); and Audi, filia, ed. L. Sala Balust (Espirituales Españoles, Series A, Textos, 10; 1963). Eng. tr. of selected letters by the *Benedictines of Stanbrook Abbey (1904); Fr. tr. of letters of direction, with introd., by J. M. de Buck (Museum Lessianum, Section Ascétique et Mystique, 25; 1927). Early Life by his disciple, Luis of Granada (1588); also ed. L. Sala Balust (Espirituales Españoles, Series A, Textos, 14; 1964). C. M. Abad, SJ, 'El proceso de la Inquisición contra el Beato Juan de Ávila', Miscelánea Comillas, 6 (1946), pp. 95–167; M. Ruiz Jurado, SJ, 'San Juan de Ávila y la Compañía de Jesús', Archivum Historicum Societatis Iesu, 40 (1971), pp. 153–72. There is a specialist review Maestro Avila (Montilla, 1946 ff.).

John the Baptist, St, the 'Forerunner of Christ'. Acc. to Lk. (1: 5–25), he was the son of *Zachariah, a priest of the *Temple, and of *Elizabeth, a kinswoman of the BVM, to whom he was born in old age. His birth had been foretold by an angel (1: 13–20), who had instructed Zachariah that he should be called John. On the fulfilment of this injunction his father uttered the *Benedictus (q.v.). All the Gospels record his appearance c. AD 27 as a mission preacher on the banks of the *Jordan demanding repentance and baptism from his hearers in view of the approach of the *Kingdom of God. His dress and diet (locusts and wild honey) were reminiscent of the OT prophets, though some of his preaching foreshadowed that of Christ. Large crowds were attracted to him and among those who submitted to his baptism was the Lord Himself. Later his denunciation of *Herod Antipas for his marriage led to his imprisonment and subsequent beheading (Mt. 14: 1–12). His influence 20 years later is attested in Acts (18: 25, 19: 1–7). He is highly revered by the *Mandaeans (q.v.), who may possibly have some remote connection with his original disciples.

Outside the NT, John is also mentioned by *Josephus (Antiq. 18. 5. 2) in a passage of which there is no good reason to doubt the authenticity. Though there are differences in detail, his account and that in the NT are not incompatible. The place of his imprisonment and death are given as the fortress of Machaerus by the Dead Sea. He was believed to have been buried at Sebaste (Samaria), where his tomb was honoured in the 4th cent. On its desecration under *Julian the Apostate (*c.*362) his relics appear to have been scattered, numerous churches claiming to possess them.

Acc. to tradition (*Origen, *Ambrose, *Jerome, and *Leo the Great), John the Baptist was endowed with prenatal grace at the time of the *Visitation of the BVM (Lk. 1: 41). Consequently the Feast of his Nativity, originally celebrated in connection with the *Epiphany but from c. the late 4th cent. fixed on 24 June (six months before *Christmas), is regarded as of greater solemnity than that of his death ('Decollation'), observed on 29 Aug. from c. the 5th cent. The liturgy for the feast of his Nativity has retained certain affinities with that of Christmas, but because of its date the feast has become linked with certain customs connected with the summer solstice. The early importance of his cult is testified by his place in the *Canon of the Mass and formerly in the *Confiteor.

In art, at first depicted only in connection with the Baptism of the Lord, he is later represented as an ascetic preacher wearing camel hair and carrying a staff and scroll saying 'Ecce Agnus Dei' (cf. Jn. 1: 29); he often bears a book or dish with a lamb on it. In Orthodox *icons he often appears with the wings of an angel (Mk. 1: 2 describes him as ἄγγελος, i.e. messenger).

C. H. Kraeling, John the Baptist (New York, 1951). C. H. H. Scobie, John the Baptist (1964). J. *Daniélou, SJ, Jean-Baptiste témoin de l'Agneau (1964). W. Wink, John the Baptist in the Gospel Tradition (Society for New Testament Studies. Monographs Series, 7; 1968). J. Ernst, Johannes der Täufer: Interpretation—Geschichte—Wirkungsgeschichte (Beihefte zur ZNTW, 53; 1989). E. Malatesta, SJ, and R. Marichal, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 8 (1974), cols. 175–92, s.v. 'Jean le Baptiste'; P. W. Hollenbach in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 3 (1992), pp. 887–99, s.v.

John Baptist de La Salle, St (1651–1719), founder of the Institute of the Brothers of Christian Schools. Born at *Reims of noble family, he received the tonsure in 1662 and was installed as Canon of Reims in 1667. After studying at the seminary of *Saint-Sulpice from 1670 to 1672, he was ordained priest in 1678. In 1679 he assisted in the opening of two free schools in Reims, where he soon became interested in fostering religious principles in the teachers. The original group, which he had taken into his own house in 1681, having resisted his attempt to enforce a semi-monastic discipline, soon left him; but in 1682 others came forward. Resigning his canonry in 1683, he distributed his fortune to the poor (1684) and devoted himself to the training of his new community. In 1688 he took charge of the free school in the parish of Saint-Sulpice, founded by J.-J. *Olier. In 1699 he opened in Paris the first Sunday Schools giving technical and religious instruction to the sons of artisans; and he was also asked by *James II to educate the Irish boys at his court in exile. In subsequent years schools were started in other parts of France and beyond. In 1690 he finally decided against including priests in the Institute and in 1694 he drew up the first rule. Although as a result of local disagreements, the Bps. of Paris (in 1702) and Rouen (in 1712) imposed superiors from outside the Institute on houses in their dioceses, de La Salle in fact retained personal control until 1717.

Apart from his spiritual importance, de La Salle is significant as a pioneer in educational practice. First in the field for training colleges for teachers, as distinct from ecclesiastical seminaries, he popularized the teaching of the vernacular in French schools and the use of the simultaneous method. His boarding school at Saint-Yon (est. 1705) has been considered the prototype of modern secondary educational institutions. His works include Conduite des écoles chrétiennes (1720; Eng. tr., 1935) and three sets of meditations for Sundays, the principal feasts and for use in *retreats (*c.*1729; Eng. tr. of all three, 1953). He was canonized in 1900. Feast day, 7 Apr. (formerly 15 May).

Crit. edn. of his Lettres by Félix-Paul [P. Vandamme], FSC (Paris [1954]). His other works are repr. in Cahiers Lasalliens, 12–25 (Rome [1962–5]). Crit. edn. of his Explication de la méthode d'oraison by M. Campos, FSC, and M. Sauvage, FSC (ibid. 50; 1989). Eng. tr. of Letters and Documents by W. J. Battersby (London, 1952) and of Letters by C. Malloy, FSC, ed. A. Loes, FSC (Romeoville, Ill., 1988). Lives by J.-B. Blain (2 vols., Rouen, 1733; Eng. tr., 3 vols., Romeoville, Ill. [1982–6]), W. J. Battersby (London, 1957), and S. Gallego (2 vols., Biblioteca de Autores Cristianos, 1986, with Sp. tr. of selected works in vol. 2). W. J.

Battersby, De La Salle: A Pioneer of Modern Education (1949); id., De La Salle: Saint and Spiritual Writer (1950); Y. Poutet, Le XVIIe siècle et les origines lasalliennes (2 vols., Rennes, 1970); O. Würth, FSC, La pédagogie de Jean-Baptiste de La Salle (Lasallianum, 15; Rome, 1972; adapted Eng. tr., Romeoville, Ill., 1988); M. A. Campos, FSC, L'Itinéraire évangélique de saint Jean-Baptiste de La Salle et le recours à l'Écriture dans ses Méditations pour le Temps de la Retraite (Cahiers Lasalliens, 45–6; 1974); based on vol. 1 of this work is E. Bannon, FSC, De La Salle: A Founder as Pilgrim (1988); M. Sauvage and M. Campos, Jean Baptiste de La Salle: Annoncer l'Évangile aux pauvres (Bibliothèque de Spiritualité, 11 [1977]; Eng. tr., Romeoville, Ill. [1981]). G. Rigault, Histoire générale de l'Institut des Frères des Écoles chrétiennes (9 vols., 1937–53); W. J. Battersby, History of the Institute of the Brothers of the Christian Schools (2 vols. in 3 [1960–3]). A. Hermans, FSC, and M. Sauvage, FSC, in Dict. Sp. 8 (1974), cols. 802–21, s.v. 'Jean-Baptiste (5) de La Salle'.

John Baptist Mary Vianney, St. See CURÉ D'ARS, THE.

John of Beverley, St (d. 721), Bp. of *York. A monk of St *Hilda's double-abbey at Whitby and a diligent scholar and teacher, he was consecrated Bp. of *Hexham *c.*687. In 705 he was translated to the see of York, then being claimed by *Wilfrid. Before his death he retired to the abbey at Inderawood, afterwards *Beverley, of which he had himself been the founder. The reputation he acquired for sanctity during his lifetime increased after his death, and in the Middle Ages he enjoyed a widespread cultus in England, and many miracles were attributed to his prayers. Henry V ascribed the victory of Agincourt (1415) to his intercession and in 1416 ordered his feast to be kept throughout England. Feast days, 7 May (death) and 25 Oct. (translation of relics).

The chief authority for his life is *Bede, HE 4 and 5. A Life by Folcard, based on Bede, in J. Raine, The Historians of the Church of York and its Archbishops, 1 (Rolls Series, 1879), pp. 239–91. W. Hunt in DNB 29 (1892), pp. 435 f.

John Bosco, St. See BOSCO, ST JOHN.

John Capistran, St. See GIOVANNI CAPISTRANO, ST.

John Capreolus. See CAPREOLUS, JOHN.

John Chrysostom, St. See CHRYSOSTOM, ST JOHN.

John Climacus, St (*c.*570–*c.*649), ascetic and writer on the spiritual life, so called after his famous 'Ladder' (Κλίμαξ). He was also known as σχολαστικός, but is not to be confused with *John Scholasticus, Patr. of Constantinople (q.v.). He arrived at Mt *Sinai as a novice when he was 16; after his profession he spent some years as an *anchorite and was later Abbot of Sinai. His celebrated 'Ladder of Paradise' or 'Ladder of Divine Ascent' treats of the monastic virtues and vices, the anchoritic and coenobitic life, and the nature of complete dispassionateness (ἀπάθεια), which is upheld as the ideal of Christian perfection. There are 30 'steps of the ladder' (i.e. 30 chapters) to correspond with the age of Christ at His Baptism. Feast day, in W., 30 Mar.; in E., 4th Sunday in Lent (also 30 Mar.).

There is no critical text. Ed. M. Rader, SJ (Paris, 1633); repr., with additional material, in J. P. Migne, PG 88, 585–1248; another edn. from MS on Mt *Athos by the hermit Sophronios (Constantinople, 1883); text based on Migne, with Ital. tr., by P. Trevisan (Corona Patrum Salesiana, Series Graeca, 8–9; Turin, 1941); further edn., based mainly on a 14th-cent. MS from Stavronikita (Cod. 895.30), with modern Gk. tr., by Archimandrite Ignatios (Oropos, 1978). Medieval Lat. trs. by Ambrogio *Traversari and others; a Sp. tr. of one of these Lat. texts of John Climacus was destined to be the first book to be pr. in the New World (Mexico, 1532). Eng. trs. by L. Moore (London, 1959) and by C. Luibheid and N. Russell (Classics of Western Spirituality, 1982), with important introd. by K. [T. R.] Ware, pp. 1–70. W. Völker, Scala Paradisi: Eine Studie zu Johannes Climacus und zugleich eine Vorstudie zu Symeon dem neuen Theologen (Wiesbaden, 1968), with refs. J. R. Martin, The Illustration of the Heavenly Ladder of John Climacus (Studies in Manuscript Illumination, 5; Princeton, NJ, 1954). L. Petit in DTC 8 (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 690–3, s.v. 'Jean 30. Jean Climaque'; G. Couilleau in Dict. Sp. 8 (1974), cols. 369–89, s.v. 'Jean 60. Jean Climaque (saint)'.

John of the Cross (1), St (1542–91), mystical Doctor and joint founder of the Discalced *Carmelites. The son of a poor family, he entered the Carmelite monastery of Medina del Campo in 1563, studied theology at Salamanca (1564–8), and was ordained priest in 1567. Dissatisfied with the prevalent laxity of his order, he considered becoming a *Carthusian, but was dissuaded by St *Teresa. Then with her aid he brought her Reform to include friars. He was Master of the Discalced Carmelite College at Alcalá de Henares (1571–2) and from 1572 to 1577 confessor of the Convent of the Incarnation at Ávila, where St Teresa had returned as prioress in 1571. After the anti-Reformist General Chapter of the Calced Carmelites (i.e. of the Mitigated Observance) held in Italy at Piacenza in 1575, he was seized at the order of the Visitor General, taken to Toledo, and imprisoned in their monastery there (Dec. 1577). After nine months of great hardships he escaped to a convent in Toledo and thence to the monastery of El Calvario, in Andalusia. The separation between the Calced and Discalced Carmelites was soon to be effected (1579–80). From 1579 to 1582 John was rector of the college which he established at Baeza; in 1582 he went to Granada as prior. From 1588 he was prior at Segovia. Having incurred the hostility of Nicolás Doria, Vicar General of the Discalced Carmelites, inter alia by resisting his wish to impose the observance of additional detailed rules on the Discalced Nuns, he was banished to the province of Andalusia, in mid-1591, and after severe illness and great suffering died at Úbeda at the end of the year. He was beatified in 1675, canonized in 1726, and declared a '*Doctor of the Church' in 1926. Feast day, 14 Dec. (formerly, 24 Nov.).

The writings of John of the Cross possess the paradoxical character of works in which the imagination and sensitivity of a poet are combined with the intellectual activity of a theologian trained in *Thomist philosophy. They seek to capture and communicate the mystic's apprehension of a living and loving Being which is found essentially beyond the reach of feeling, imagination, and understanding; it can ultimately be known in itself only as these modes give way to the response of pure love. His extensive treatises on the mystical life consist of commentaries which he gradually built up on three of his poems, which are among the greatest in Spanish. His longest poem ('¿Adónde te escondiste, Amado?') was largely composed during his imprisonment (1578); the Spiritual Canticle treatise, which he began soon after his escape, expounds its rich imagery in terms of the *purgative, illuminative, and unitive ways. Deeply influenced by the mystical exegesis of the Song of Solomon, it is less systematic than the Ascent of Mount Carmel and the Dark Night of the Soul (a single, unfinished treatise based on the poem 'En una noche oscura'), written soon afterwards. This deals with the purgation of the soul through the 'night of the senses' and the 'night of the spirit'. These nights have an active and passive aspect: actively the soul detaches itself from dependence on things of the senses (incl. all sensible devotion) and adheres in pure faith to God alone; passively, God acts to fit it for the transforming Union with Himself, described in the Living Flame (written *c.1583–4), which expounds the poem '¡Oh llama de amor viva!'. Both nights, esp. in their passive aspects, are often accompanied by intense suffering. Though presented in schematic form, they are best thought of not as consecutive phases but as complementary parts of one single process, the purifying of the soul for transformation and participation in God. John's general debt to the N. European mystical tradition of the preceding centuries is suggested by the important similarities that exist between the Cloud of Unknowing (which he almost certainly did not know) and the more developed analyses of John himself. Together with Teresa, to whose spiritual experience he seems to have owed more than a little of his own understanding of the spiritual life, John of the Cross brought into being a uniquely comprehensive and analytical account of the successive stages of purgation, illumination and union through which the soul passes in the course of its approach to God. The accounts of this progress given by these two Carmelites are commonly regarded as possessing unique authority.

Crit. edns. of his collected works are those of Silverio de Santa Teresa, OCD (Biblioteca Mística Carmelitana, vols. 10–14, Burgos, 1929–31) and Lucinio del SS. Sacramento, OCD (Biblioteca de Autores Cristianos, 1946, with Life by Crisógono de Jesús, OCD, pp. 3–488; 4th edn., with Life rev. by Matías del Niño Jesús, OCD, 1960; 11th edn. rev., but without Life, 1982). Eng. trs. of his works by E. A. Peers (3 vols., London, 1934–5; 2nd edn. with additional material, 3 vols., 1953) and K. Kavanaugh, OCD, and O. Rodríguez, OCD (ibid., 1966). Lives by Bruno de Jésus-Marie, OCD, Saint Jean de la Croix (1929; rev., 1961; Eng. tr., 1932), and Crisógono de Jesús, OCD (see above; Eng. tr. of 3rd edn., 1958). E. A. Peers, Handbook to the Life and Times of St Teresa and St John of the Cross (1954). Crisógono de Jesús, OCD, San Juan de la Cruz: su obra científica y su obra literaria (2 vols., 1929). J. Baruzi, Saint Jean de la Croix et le problème de l'expérience mystique (1924; 2nd edn., 1931), with bibl. D. Alonso, La poesía de San Juan de la Cruz (1942; 4th edn., 1966). Efrén de la Madre de Dios, OCD, San Juan de la Cruz y el misterio de la Santísima Trinidad en la vida espiritual (1947), with bibl. J. Vilnet, Bible et mystique chez saint Jean de la Croix (Bruges, 1949). M. Milner, Poésie et vie mystique chez saint Jean de la Croix (1951). H. Sanson, L'Esprit humain selon saint Jean de la Croix (1953). The Mediaeval Mystical Tradition and St John of the Cross by a Benedictine of Stanbrook Abbey (1954). G. Morel, Le Sens de l'existence selon saint Jean de la Croix (3 vols., 1960–1). E. W. T. Dicken, The Crucible of Love: A Study of the Mysticism of St Teresa of Jesus and St John of the Cross (1963). J. Orcibal, Saint Jean de la Croix et les mystiques rhéno-flamands (Bruges, 1966). F. Ruiz Salvador, OCD, Introducción a San Juan de la Cruz: El escritor, los escritos, el sistema (Biblioteca de Autores Cristianos, 1968). G. Brenan, St John of the Cross: His Life and Poetry (Cambridge, 1973). C. P. Thompson, The Poet and the Mystic: A Study of the Cántico Espiritual de San Juan de la Cruz (Oxford, 1977; Sp. tr., with additional material, 1985). A. Cugno, Saint Jean de la Croix (1979; Eng. tr., 1982). D. B. Tillyer, Union with God: The Teaching of St John of the Cross (1984). L. López Baralt, San Juan de la Cruz y el Islam (Mexico City, 1985). O. Steggink, O. Carm. (ed.), Juan de la Cruz, Espíritu de Llama: Estudios con ocasión del cuarto centenario de su muerte (1591–1991) (Vacare Deo 10, Studies in Spirituality, Suppl. 1; Kampen, 1991). Other studies include those of B. Frost (London, 1937) and E. A. Peers (ibid., 1943). Id., Studies of the Spanish Mystics, 1 (1927; 2nd edn., 1951), pp. 227–88. R. [D.] Williams, The Wound of Knowledge: Christian Spirituality from the New Testament to St John of the Cross (1979), pp. 159–79. J. L. Astigarraga and others, Concordancias de los escritos de San Juan de la Cruz (Rome, 1990). Pourrat, 3, pp. 269–308. B. Zimmerman, OCD, in CE 8 (1910), pp. 480 f., s.v.; Lucien-Marie de Saint-Joseph in Dict. Sp. 8 (1974), cols. 408–47, s.v. 'Jean de la Croix'. 'Bibliographia carmelitana annualis', Carmelus (Rome, 1954 ff.). Archivum bibliographicum carmelitanum (Rome, 1956 ff.).

John of the Cross (2) (*c.*1505–*c.*1560), *Dominican spiritual writer. Born at Talavera in Spain, he became acquainted with the work of the Dominican reformer, J. Hurtado de Mendoza, and entered the recently founded Dominican priory at Atocha, in Madrid, making his profession in 1525. He studied at Salamanca and in 1538 he was sent with a group of other Spanish friars to help reform the Dominican Order in *Portugal; he spent the rest of his life there, and became known for his educational work. He was closely associated with *Luis of Granada. His main work was a 'Dialogue on the Necessity of Vocal Prayer' (Dialogo sobre la Necesidad de la Oracion Vocal, 1555). Against the prevalent spirituality of *recollection, he argues that the spiritual life consists in the serious, deliberate practice of the virtues and not in interior devotional fervour. He was much influenced by G. *Savonarola. He also published some Spanish translations of Latin works and wrote a Chronicle of the Dominican Order, published posthumously in 1567.

He is sometimes confused with a Dominican namesake, also from Talavera, who studied in Valladolid (1583) and published an Epitome de Statu Religionis (1613) and Directorium Conscientiae (1620).

Modern edn. of the 'Dialogue' in M. Cano, D. de Soto, and Juan de la Cruz, OP, Tratados Espirituales, ed. V. Beltrán de Heredia, OP (Biblioteca de Autores Cristianos, 221; Madrid, 1962), pp. 187–512. M. Andrés Martín, Los Recogidos: Nueva visión de la mística española (1500–1700) (Publicaciones de la Fundacion Universitaria Española, Monografias, 13; 1975 [1976]), pp. 419–27. Quétif and Échard, 2, pp. 174 f. R. Hernandez, OP, in Dict. Sp. 8 (1974), cols. 407 f., s.v. 'Jean 68, Jean de la Croix'.

John of Dalyatha (8th cent), writer on the spiritual life. He is almost certainly to be identified with John of Saba, i.e. 'John the Elder'. A member of the *Church of the East, he was born in N. Iraq and lived as a monk in various monasteries in the Qardu mountains (NW Iraq); for a time he was a hermit in the nearby mountains of Dalyatha, living off vine branches (dalyāthā). He belonged to monastic circles misguidedly accused of *Messalianism and *Sabellianism; owing to this circumstance his writings were condemned by the Catholicos Timothy I in 786. Some 25 Discourses, 50 letters, and a set of 'Kephalaia on Knowledge' survive. Several of his works were translated from Syriac into Arabic and Greek (in the latter four of his Discourses have been published among the works of *Isaac of Nineveh, and his Letter 15 is attributed to *Dorotheus of Gaza).

Letters ed., with Fr. tr., by R. Beulay, OCD, in PO 39 (1978–9), pp. 253–538; an edn. of the Discourses by B. Colless is in preparation. R. Beulay, L'Enseignement Spirituel de Jean de Dalyatha (Théologie Historique, 83 [1990]). B. Colless, 'The Mysticism of John Saba', OCP 39 (1973), pp. 83–102. R. Beulay in Dict. Sp. 8 (1974), cols. 449–52, s.v. 'Jean 71: Jean de Dalyatha'.

John of Damascus, St (c.655–c.750), Greek theologian and '*Doctor of the Church'. Little is known of his life, and such sources as exist are in considerable conflict. Born of a rich Christian family of *Damascus, like his father, he held a position of importance at the court of the Caliph. He resigned his office c.725 and became a monk at the monastery of St *Sabas near *Jerusalem, where he became a priest. He was a strong defender of *images in the *Iconoclastic Controversy, writing three discourses on the subject between 726 and 730.

His most important work, the 'Fount of Wisdom' (Πηγὴ γνώσεως), was written at the suggestion of his former fellow-monk, *Cosmas Melodus, Bp. of Maïuma. It is divided into three parts, dealing with philosophy ('Dialectica'), heresies, and the Orthodox faith ('De Fide Orthodoxa'), the most important of the three. For his philosophical doctrines he is indebted to *Aristotle, though he also borrowed from *Plato through *Maximus the Confessor, whereas the book of heresies is for the most part a reproduction of the 'Anakephalaiosis', attributed to St *Epiphanius. The 'De Fide Orthodoxa' is a comprehensive presentation of the teaching of the Greek Fathers on the main Christian doctrines, esp. the Trinity, Creation, and the Incarnation; the Sacraments, Mariology, images, and other subjects are also treated, but less systematically. In his demonstration of the existence and unity of God he adduces the metaphysical arguments from the contingency of creatures and the order of the universe. His Trinitarian theology sums up the doctrine esp. of the *Cappadocian Fathers and develops the conception of περιχώρησις ('*circumincession') in order to express the inner-Trinitarian relations. His angelology reproduces that of St *Gregory of Nazianzus, his favourite Father, and of *Dionysius the Pseudo-Areopagite. His treatment of the Incarnation is a representative synthesis of Greek theological thought, finding its end in the restoration of fallen man to his former state. He teaches that in the *Hypostatic Union the Word served as 'hypostasis' ('Person') to the humanity which He took; hence he adopted the *Enhypostasia of *Leontius of Byzantium, which he interprets along the lines of the '*communicatio idiomatum'. He saw in the interpenetration of the two natures in Christ the formation of '*theandric activities', a term he takes over from Dionysius, interpreting it in an orthodox sense. A corollary of his Christological doctrine was his fully developed Mariology. He teaches the Divine maternity of Mary, her exemption from all stain of sin, and her assumption into heaven. In the doctrine of the Eucharist he insists that the bread and wine are really changed into the Body and Blood of Christ, regarding the physical appearance of the elements after the consecration as a mere concession to human weakness.

His other great work, the 'Sacra Parallela', preserved only in fragments, is a vast compilation of scriptural and patristic texts on the Christian moral and ascetical life. It received its name from the parallel treatment of virtues and vices in its third part. He also wrote a comprehensive commentary on the Pauline Epp. and several homilies of a strongly dogmatic bent, e.g. on the Transfiguration, on Holy Saturday, and on the death of the BVM. Besides his prose works he composed a number of poems which form part of the Greek Liturgy, though not all of those attributed to him are authentic. Some of these have found their way into modern English hymnbooks, e.g. 'Come, ye faithful, raise the strain' and 'The Day of Resurrection! Earth, tell it out abroad' (both in J. M. *Neale's renderings). The Life of *Barlaam and Joasaph (q.v.), traditionally ascribed to the Damascene, is prob. not his work.

John of Damascus exercised a considerable influence on later theology. 'De Fide Orthodoxa', in the inadequate translation of *Burgundio of Pisa, was known to *Peter Lombard and St *Thomas Aquinas, and his authority was invoked in favour of the Latin doctrine of the *Double Procession of the Holy Spirit by the Unionist Greek theologians of the later 13th cent. and by Card. *Bessarion at the Council of *Florence. All through the Middle Ages his works were used by the Greeks and esp. by the Slavs, though they were never commented on nor did they lead to the formation of a school as did those of Peter Lombard and St *Thomas Aquinas in the W. In modern times they have retained their influence in the formation of E. theologians, though supplemented by later W. writers (RC and Protestant). John of Damascus, whose cult developed soon after his death, was declared a Doctor of the Church by *Leo XIII in 1890. Feast day, in the Greek Church, 4 Dec.; in the W., 4 Dec. (formerly, 27 Mar.).

Earliest collected edn. by M. *Le Quien, OP (2 vols. fol., Paris, 1712, with important prolegomena and dissertations); repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 94–6, with additions from A. *Gallandi, A. *Mai, and others. Crit. text ed., under the auspices of the Byzantinisches Institut der Abtei Scheyern, by B. Kotter, OSB (Patristische Texte und Studien, 7, 12, 17, 22, 29; 1969–88). Homilies on the Nativity and Dormition of the BVM ed., with Fr. tr., by P. Voulet, SJ (SC 80; 1961). B. Kotter, OSB, Die Überlieferung der Pege Gnoseos des hl. Johannes von Damaskos (Studia Patristica et Byzantina, 5; 1959). The Latin tr. of the 'Dialectica' by R. *Grosseteste ed. O. A. Colligan, OFM (Franciscan Institute Publications, Text Series, 6; 1953) and that of the 'De Fide Orthodoxa' by Burgundio of Pisa, together with the slightly earlier, partial, tr. made in Hungary by Cerbanus, ed. E. M. Buytaert, OFM (ibid. 8; 1955). Eng. tr. of 'De Fide Orthodoxa' by S. D. F. Salmond (NPNCF, 2nd ser. 9, 1899); also of the 'Fount of Wisdom' by F. H. Chase (Fathers of the Church, 37; 1958), and of 'De Imaginibus' by D. Anderson (Crestwood, NY, 1980). Arabic Life by Michael of Antioch (1085; ed. by C. Bacha, Harisa (Lebanon), 1912; Ger. tr. by G. Graf in Der Katholik, 93 (1913), pp. 164–190, 320–31); this Arabic Life was tr. into Gk. by Patr. John VIII of Jerusalem. On the details of John's life see M. Jugie, AA, 'La Vie de saint Jean Damascène', EO 23 (1924), pp. 137–61; id., 'Une Nouvelle Vie et un nouvel écrit de saint Jean Damascène', ibid. 28 (1929), pp. 35–41. J. Nasrallah, Saint Jean de Damas: Son Époque, sa vie, son œuvre ('Les Souvenirs chrétiens de Damas', 2; Paris, 1950). On the Sacra Parallela, F. *Loofs, Studien über die dem Johannes von Damaskus zugeschriebenen Parallelen (1892); K. *Holl, Die Sacra Parallela des Johannes Damascenus (TU 16, Heft 1; 1896); id., Fragmenta vornicänischer Kirchenväter aus den Sacra Parallela (ibid. 20, Heft 2; 1899). J. Bilz, Die Trinitätslehre des hl. Johannes von Damaskus (Forschungen zur christlichen Literatur- und Dogmengeschichte 9, Heft 3; 1909). B. Studer, OSB, Die theologische Arbeitsweise des Johannes von Damaskus (Studia Patristica et Byzantina, 2; 1956); K. Rozemond, La Christologie de Saint Jean Damascène (ibid. 8; 1959); G. Richter, Die Dialektik des Johannes von Damaskos (ibid. 10; 1964). D. J. Sahas, John of Damascus on Islam: The 'Heresy of the Ishmaelites' (Leiden, 1972). CPG 3 (1979), pp. 511–36 (nos. 8040–127). Beck, pp. 476–86; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 526–32 and 661 f. M. Jugie, AA, in DTC 8 (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 693–751, s.v. 'Jean 31: Jean Damascène (Saint)'; B. Kotter in NCE 7 (1967), pp. 1047–9, s.v.; B. Stuber, OSB, in Dict. Sp. 8 (1974), cols. 452–66, s.v. 'Jean 72: Jean Damascène'. See also bibl. to ICONOCLASTIC CONTROVERSY.

John of Ephesus (*c.*507–86), *Syrian Orthodox historian. Born near Amid in Mesopotamia, he was sent by *Justinian I in 542 to convert the pagans in the region of Ephesus, of which he was later consecrated bishop by *Jacob Baradaeus. His Ecclesiastical History, of which only the third part survives complete, covers the period 571–85. His Lives of Eastern Saints consists of 58 short accounts of contemporary hermits and others. Both works are in Syriac.

The Third Part of his Ecclesiastical History, ed. E. W. Brooks (CSCO 105; 1935, with Lat. tr., ibid. 106; 1936); frags. of First and Second Part, ed. id. in Incerti Auctoris Chronicon Pseudo-Dionysianum vulgo dictum, ed. I. B. Chabot, 2 (CSCO 104; 1933), pp. 402–20. Eng. tr. of Third Part by R. Payne Smith (Oxford, 1860). Lives of Eastern Saints, ed., with Eng. tr., by E. W. Brooks in PO 17 (1923), pp. 1–307; 18 (1924), pp. 513–698; and 20 (1926), pp. 153–285. S. A. Harvey, Asceticism and Society in Crisis: John of Ephesus and the Lives of the Eastern Saints (Berkeley, Calif., etc. [1990]). I. Ortiz de Urbina, SJ, Patrologia Syriaca (2nd edn., Rome, 1965), pp. 166 f. D. Stiernon, AA, in Dict. Sp. 8 (1974), cols. 484–6, s.v. 'Jean 85: Jean d'Ephèse'.

John, King of England (1167–1216), King from 1199. He was the youngest son of Henry II and Eleanor of Aquitaine. He was early nicknamed Lackland because he had not been provided like his brothers with an apanage of land by his father, though he was Henry's favourite and richly endowed with castles and rents. In 1177 he was made 'King of Ireland', which he was sent to govern in 1185. Alienating the Irish by his insolence and misrule, he was recalled after a few months. In 1189 he took part in the conspiracy of his brother Richard and the King of France against his father, whose death was hastened by this treachery. After his accession (1189) Richard I confirmed him in his possessions, which were increased by his marriage to Isabella of Gloucester. During Richard's absence on the Third *Crusade John expelled his chancellor, William Longchamp, and intrigued with the King of France against Richard. After Richard's return (1194) the brothers were reconciled; John assisted the King against Philip of France; and Richard named John as his successor. On his accession (1199) John was recognized by England and Normandy, and in 1202 defeated Anjou and Brittany, who urged the claims of his nephew Arthur (whom John murdered in 1203). During the following years he lost most of his possessions in France, and with the death of Abp. *Hubert of Canterbury in 1205 he was deprived of the only counsellor able to exercise on his acts a measure of restraint. The election of a new archbishop involved him in a quarrel with the chapter of *Canterbury, and when *Innocent III appointed Stephen *Langton (1207) John refused to recognize him. In 1208 England was placed under an *interdict and in 1209 John was excommunicated. Unsure of his barons, threatened with deposition by the Pope and with invasion from France, in 1213 John made his submission to the Pope, promised full reconciliation and restitution, and placed England and Ireland under the suzerainty of Innocent and his successors. The last years of his reign were troubled by renewed war with France in which he was defeated in 1214. In 1215 the barons obtained the famous grant of Magna Carta, but soon afterwards John regretted his action and civil war broke out, France intervening on the side of the barons. John died during the struggle, leaving his kingdom in confusion.

Recent historians have taken a less critical view of John than some 19th-cent. writers or some chroniclers of his own time. He was profligate and could be ruthless, violent, treacherous, grasping, and arbitrary; but he was not wholly unsympathetic towards the Church and possessed considerable skill as a strategist, politician, administrator, and judge. However, he failed to manage his magnates, was an indifferent military tactician, and above all lacked judgement in a crisis.

The principal modern studies are S. Painter, The Reign of King John (Baltimore, 1949), and W. L. Warren, King John (1961; 2nd edn., 1978). See also [F.] M. Powicke, The Loss of Normandy, 1189–1204 (2nd edn., Manchester, 1961); J. C. Holt, The Northerners: A Study in the Reign of King John (Oxford, 1961); id., King John (Historical Association Pamphlet G 53; 1963), repr. in id., Magna Carta and Medieval Government (1985), pp. 85–109, with other relevant material; id., Magna Carta (Cambridge, 1965); and C. R. Cheney, Innocent III and England (Päpste und Papsttum, 9; Stuttgart, 1976). On the interdict, see also id., 'King John and the Papal Interdict', Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, 31 (1948), pp. 295–317; id., 'King John's Reaction to the Interdict on England', Transactions of the Royal Historical Society, 4th ser. 31 (1949), pp. 129–50; id., 'A Recent View of the General Interdict on England, 1208–1214', in G. J. Cuming (ed.), Studies in Church History, 3 (1966), pp. 159–68; all repr. in id., The Papacy and England 12th–14th Centuries (1982), nos. 9–11. A. L. Poole, From Domesday Book to Magna Carta (Oxford History of England, 3; 1951; 2nd edn. 1955), esp. pp. 425–86.

John Eudes, St. See EUDES, ST JOHN.

John the Faster, St (d. 595), John IV, Patriarch of *Constantinople from 582. His renown as an ascetic won him the title of 'Faster' (ὁ νηστευτής, 'jejunator'). Though personally unambitious, he had great influence at court, and was jealous of the (by then) traditional claims of the patriarchate of Constantinople to be second in honour after Rome. When in 588 he assumed the challenging title of 'Oecumenical [οἰκουμενικός, "Universal"] Patriarch' (a style which had earlier been applied to his predecessors by *Justinian), Pope Pelagius II, and later St *Gregory the Great, protested, the latter interpreting the description as a claim to be sole bishop and source of the episcopate. Their objections, however, did not prevent John from bequeathing the description to his successors. Attributed to him is a manual for confessors, commonly known as his 'Penitential' (Ἀκολουθία καὶ τάξις ἐπὶ ἐξομολογουμένων), but it is of much later date, and not earlier than the 9th cent. The only surviving work with any claim to be genuine appears to be a sermon on 'Repentance, Self-control and Virginity', largely based on St *Chrysostom. Feast day in E., 2 Sept.

V. Grumel, AA (ed.), Les Regestes des Actes du Patriarcat de Constantinople, 1, fasc. 1 (2nd edn., 1972), pp. 193–201 (nos. 264–72). J. P. Migne, PG 88. 1887–978. E. Herman, SJ, 'Il più antico penitenziale greco', OCP 19 (1953), pp. 71–127. Beck, pp. 423–5. R. Janin, AA, in DTC 8 (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 828 f., s.v. 'Jean IV le Jeûneur'; D. Stiernon, AA, in Dict. Sp. 8 (1974), cols. 586–9, s.v. 'Jean 129: Jean le Jeûneur'.

John of Fidanza. See BONAVENTURE, ST.

John Fisher, St. See FISHER, ST JOHN.

John of Gaza. See BARSANUPHIUS, ST.

John of God, St (1495–1550), founder of the 'Order of Charity for the Service of the Sick', or '*Brothers Hospitallers' (q.v.). He was born in *Portugal and, after a pious upbringing, joined a company of foot soldiers and forsook the practice of religion. At the age of about 40 he changed his mode of life in an attempt to atone for his past waywardness. He hoped for martyrdom in Morocco; but, this being denied him, he returned to the south of *Spain and spread the faith by hawking tracts and pictures until in 1538 he was converted to a life of great sanctity by St *John of Ávila. At first his excesses of penitence and devotion caused him to be treated as a lunatic, but a further interview with John of Ávila directed his energies to the care of the sick and poor. After his death his order gradually took shape. He was canonized in 1690 and in 1886 declared by *Leo XIII the heavenly patron of all hospitals and sick folk. He is also often regarded as the patron of printers and booksellers. Feast day, 8 Mar.

Life, written within 20 years of his death, by Francis de Castro, Rector of the Hospital of St John at Granada, pub. at Granada, 1585; Lat. tr., 1623; excerpts (Lat.) in AASS, Mar. 1 (1668), pp. 814–35; excerpts from early 17th-cent. Life, ibid., pp. 835–58. M. Gomez-Moreno, Primicias históricas de San Juan de Dios (1950). Modern studies incl. those of I. M. Magnin (Lille, 1887; Eng. tr., 1936), N. McMahon, OSJD (Dublin, 1952), J. Cruset (Barcelona, 1958), and J. C. Cousson, OH (Paris, 1973). G. Russotto, FBF, San Giovanni di Dio e il suo Ordine Ospedaliero, 1 (1969), pp. 11–99. Id. in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 6 (Rome, 1965), cols. 740–8, s.v. 'Giovanni di Dio'; T. J. Munn in NCE 7 (1967), p. 1052, s.v.

John the Grammarian (fl. *c.*515), theologian. Little is known of his life, except that he came from Caesarea (either in Palestine or Cappadocia) and was a grammarian, i.e., a schoolmaster. He is one of the earliest representatives of *Neo-Chalcedonianism. Of his works there survive fragments of a defence of the *Chalcedonian Definition in *Severus of Antioch's spirited response to it, several works against the *Monophysites and against the *Manichees, and a few other fragments.

Works ed. M. Richard and M. Aubineau (CCSG 1; 1977), with introd.

John Gualbert, St (d. 1073), founder of the *Vallumbrosan Order (q.v.). After generously pardoning on a *Good Friday the murderer of one of his relatives, he entered the *Benedictine monastery of San Miniato, near Florence. Disturbed by a *simoniacal election there, he withdrew *c.*1036 and finally settled *c.1040 at Vallombrosa, where he collected around him a body of monks who followed a strict observance of the Benedictine Rule under the conditions of a semi-eremetical existence. He made provision for conversi, whose labours freed the monks from manual labour. In the later part of his life, John Gualbert took a prominent part in assisting the Papacy in its struggles against simony; he was a particularly strong opponent of the simoniacal Bp. of Florence, Peter Mezzabarba (1061–8). Feast day, 12 July.

The earliest authority is the Life by Andrew of Strumi, who became Abbot of Vallombrosa in 1085 (d. 1097), pr. in AASS, Jul. 3 (1723), pp. 343–65; also ed. F. Baethgen in MGH, Scriptores, 30 (pt. 2; 1934), pp. 1080–104, with introd. pp. 1076–8. Life by St Atto, later Bp. of Pistoia (d. 22 May 1153), also pr. in AASS, loc. cit., pp. 365–82. Third Life (12th cent.) first pr. by R. Davidsohn, Forschungen zur älteren Geschichte von Florenz, 1 (Berlin, 1896), pp. 55–60, with introd. pp. 50–4; also ed. F. Baethgen, op. cit., pp. 1104–10, with introd. pp. 1078 f. Further sources in BHL, pp. 651 f. (nos. 4397–406), and Novum Supplementum (1986), pp. 488 f. D. de Franchi, Historia del Patriarcha S. Giovan Gualberto (Florence, 1640). Modern Lives (in Italian) by A. Salvini (Alba, 1943; 3rd edn., Bari, 1961), and E. Lucchesi (Florence, 1959). B. Quilici, 'Giovanni Gualberto e la sua riforma monastica', Archivio Storico Italiano, 99, Disp. 1–2 (1941), pp. 113–32, Disp. 3–4 (for 1941; 1942), pp. 27–62; 100, Disp. 1–2 (for 1942; 1943), pp. 45–99. G. Spinelli and G. Rossi, Alle origini di Vallombrosa: Giovanni Gualberto nella società dell'XI secolo (Milan, 1984), incl. Ital. tr. of 1st and 3rd of primary lives mentioned above. A. *Wilmart, OSB, 'Le Manuel des prières de saint Jean Gualbert', R. Bén. 48 (1936), pp. 259–99. R. Volpini in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 6 (Rome, 1966), cols. 1012–29, with extensive bibl.; N. R. Vasaturo in DIP 4 (1977), cols. 1273–6, both s.v. 'Giovanni Gualberto'.

John Lateran, Church of St. See LATERAN BASILICA.

John Malalas (*c.*490–*c.*575), i.e. 'John Rhetor', Byzantine chronicler. He has sometimes been identified with *John Scholasticus, Patr. of *Constantinople (d. 577; q.v.), but it is more likely that he was a civil servant, based first in Antioch and later in Constantinople. His 'Chronography' (Χρονογραφία) in 18 Books covers the period from Creation, Book 10 beginning with the birth of Christ; it survives to 563, but originally extended to 565 or perhaps 574. It is possible that all or part of Book 18, on *Justinian I, may be by a different author. Written in the 'vulgar' Greek of the time, it preserves valuable information, both secular and ecclesiastical; it was widely used by later Greek and Syriac writers and was translated into Slavonic.

'Chronicle' (Gk. text preserved only in Bod. Barocc. gr. 182 and a few frags.), ed. L. Dindorf, in C.S.H. Byz., 1831; repr. J. P. Migne, PG 97. 9–790. Crit. text of Bks. 9–12, ed. A. Schenk Graf von Stauffenberg, Die römische Kaisergeschichte bei Malalas (1931), with important comm. Eng. tr. by E. Jeffreys and others (Byzantina Australiensia, 4; Melbourne, 1986). Idd. (eds.), Studies in John Malalas (ibid. 6; Sydney, 1990). CPG 3 (1979), pp. 400 f. (no. 7511). H. Hunger, Die hochsprachliche profane Literatur der Byzantiner, 1 (Byzantinisches Handbuch, Teil 5; Munich, 1978), pp. 319–26.

John Mark, St. See MARK, ST.

John of Matha, St (d. 1213), founder of the *Trinitarian Order. Practically all that is known of him is that he was a native of Provence, founded his Order for the redemption of captives, and died at Rome on 17 Dec. 1213. The abundant details in the older biographies are based on spurious records fabricated in the 15th and 16th cents. Feast day, 8 Feb.

Uncritical Lives include those of G. Gonzales de Ávila (Madrid, 1630), J. M. Prat, SJ (Paris, 1846), and le Père Calixte de la Providence, Trinitarian (ibid., 1867). Much early material is also pr. in Antoninus ab Assumptione, Trinitarian, Monumenta Ordinis Excalceatorum SS. Trinitatis Redemptionis Captivorum ad Provinciam S.P.N. Ioannis de Matha Spectantia (Rome, 1915). G. Antignani, Vita di Giovanni de Matha e repercussioni della sua opera nei tempi (Sienna, 1982). J. Pujana, OST, in Dict. Sp. 15 (1991), cols. 1261–7, s.v. 'Trinitaires'. See also other works under TRINITARIANS.

John Moschus. See MOSCHUS, JOHN.

John of Nepomuk, St (*c.*1340–93), Bohemian martyr. As Vicar General of the Archdiocese of Prague, John resisted the attempts of Wenceslas IV to suppress an abbey in order to create a see for one of his favourites and to interfere with clerical prerogatives. By the King's orders he was drowned in the Vltava (Moldau) in consequence; but his recovered body became the centre of a widespread cultus during the *Counter-Reformation and this spread throughout Central Europe after he was canonized in 1729. Tradition credits him with having incensed the monarch by refusing to betray the Queen by breaking the *seal of the confessional. The details of his life are shrouded in obscurity, and some have held that two Johns suffered martyrdom in similar circumstances at the hands of Wenceslas. Feast day, 16 May.

Life by B. Balbin, SJ (written in 1670), in AASS, Mai. 3 (1680), pp. 668–80. Acts of the Process of his Canonization, pub. Verona, 1725. J. T. A. Berghauer, Proto-martyr Poenitentiae eiusque Sigilli Custos semper Fidelis Divus Joannes Nepomucenus (Augsburg, 1736). A. H. Wratislaw, The Life, Legend, and Canonization of St John Nepomucen (1873). J. Pekař, Z duchovních dějin českých (Prague, 1941), pp. 141–77; J. V. Polc and V. Ryneš, Svatý Jan Nepomucký (2 vols., Rome, 1972). P. de Vooght, 'Jean de Pomuk', RHE 48 (1953), pp. 777–95.

John of Parma, Bl (1209–89), *Franciscan Minister General. He taught logic for several years at Parma, where he took the Franciscan habit, probably in 1233, and was later sent to *Paris to continue his studies. A popular teacher and preacher, he was elected Minister General of his order in 1247, and as such he endeavoured to restore its asceticism and discipline to the original standards of St *Francis, while realizing the need to adapt to the times. In pursuit of this aim he carried out visitations throughout Europe, journeying to France, England, Spain, and Greece, and working, but without success, for the reunion of East and West. Although he himself lived very simply, he did not impose his austerity on others, and it seems that it was his *Joachimist sympathies, rather than his views on poverty, that made him enemies and led to accusations of heresy in Rome. Under pressure from the Pope, he resigned his office in 1257, but his nomination of St *Bonaventure as his successor shows that the gap between the two wings of the order was not yet unbridgeable. On the examination of his doctrine he narrowly escaped condemnation and retired into the hermitage of Greccio, where for 32 years he led a solitary life of penance and contemplation. In 1289 he was sent once more on an embassy to Greece on matters of reunion, but died on his way at Camerino. He left no substantial body of writings. Many miracles were reported at his tomb, but owing to his Joachimite views his cultus was not confirmed until 1777. Feast day, 20 Mar.

A contemporary account is provided by Salimbene of Parma, Chronica (ed. F. Bernini, 1, Bari, 1942, pp. 429–67). Lives by F. Camerini (Ravenna, 1730) and I. Affò (Parma, 1777). René de Nantes, 'Quelques pages d'histoire franciscaine', Études franciscaines, 15 (1906): 6, 'Le Bienheureux Jean de Parme', pp. 148–67, and 7, 'Le B. Jean de Parme et le joachimisme', pp. 277–300. R. B. Brooke, Early Franciscan Government: Elias to Bonaventure (Cambridge, 1959), pp. 255–72. D. Burr, Olivi and Franciscan Poverty: The Origins of the Usus Pauper Controversy (Philadelphia [1989]), pp. 8, 17 f., 23 f., 26 f., 30, 149 f. E. d'Alençon, OFM, in DTC 8 (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 794–6, s.v. 'Jean de Parme'.

John and Paul, Sts. Two Roman martyrs of the 4th cent. of whom virtually nothing further is known. Their 'Acta', whose trustworthiness, however, is doubtful, testify to their having served Constantia, daughter of the Emp. *Constantine, and been instrumental in the conversion to Christianity of one of his generals, and having been finally martyred by the Emp. *Julian for their firm adherence to the Christian faith. A cult of these saints existed from the latter half of the 4th cent. and their names stand in the Roman *Canon of the Mass. A Council at *Oxford in 1222 made the hearing of Mass by all the faithful of England obligatory on their feast day, 26 June.

V. L. Kennedy, CSB, The Saints of the Canon of the Mass (Rome, 1938), pp. 131–7. P. F. de' Cavalieri, Note Agiografiche, 2 (ST 9; 1902), pp. 53–65, and 5 (ibid. 27; 1915), pp. 41–62. On the Acts, H. Grégoire and P. Orgels, 'S. Gallicanus, consul et martyr dans la passion des SS. Jean et Paul, et sa vision "constantinienne" du Crucifié', Académie Royale de Belgique, Bulletin de la Classe des Lettres et des Sciences Morales et Politiques, 5th ser. 42 (1956), pp. 125–46. G. De Sanctis, CP, I santi Giovanni e Paolo: Martiri celimontani (1962; much criticized). For their reputed house on the Celian Hill, see also P. Germano di S. Stanislao, La casa celimontana dei SS. Martiri Giovanni e Paolo (1894); A. Prandi, Il complesso monumentale della Basilica Celimontana dei SS. Giovanni e Paolo nuovamente restaurato per la munificenza del Cardinale Titolare Francesco Spellman (1953; Eng. tr., Rome, 1958); C. Pietri, Roma Christiana: Recherches sur l'Église de Rome . . . (311–440) (Bibliothèque des Écoles françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 224; 1976), 1, pp. 481–90; and bibl. to ROME, CHURCHES OF.

John Paul I (1912–78), Pope from 26 Aug. to 28 Sept. 1978. Albino Luciani was born at Forno di Canali, near Belluno, SW of *Venice, the son of a labourer who did seasonal work in Switzerland and Germany. Ordained priest in 1935, he taught at the seminary in Belluno at the same time as doing pastoral work; in 1947 he became pro-chancellor of the diocese and later chancellor. Meanwhile he continued his studies at the *Gregorianum with a thesis on *L'origine dell'anima umana secondo Antonio Rosmini (1950). In 1958 *John XXIII ordained him Bp. of Vittorio Veneto. He took part in the Second *Vatican Council, but was not conspicuous. In 1969 *Paul VI nominated him Patriarch of Venice and in 1973 created him a cardinal. At Venice he acted as host to five ecumenical conferences, including the *Anglican–Roman Catholic International Commission which produced an Agreed Statement on *Authority in 1976.

He was elected Pope with surprising swiftness; the *conclave lasted only one day. Though he was little known outside Italy, it appears that the majority of cardinals were anxious for a new style of Pope, without curial connections but with pastoral experience, and his election was welcomed as that of 'God's candidate'. His choice of name reflects his devotion to his two immediate predecessors and his intention to carry on their work. His desire for simplicity was reflected in the ceremony marking the beginning of his Papacy. Instead of the traditional coronation with the *tiara, he inaugurated his 'pastoral ministry as supreme pastor' by receiving the pallium. After 33 days as Pope, he died of a heart attack while reading personal papers in bed. Vatican ineptitude allowed the spread of rumours of foul play, though the evidence adduced was totally unconvincing. His death was a profound disappointment to the millions of people who had been drawn to him by the warmth of his personality.

The official docs. of his pontificate are pr. in AAS 70 (1978), pp. 677–776 and 797–903. Letters addressed to various individuals, some fictional and some historical, originally pub. in the newspaper Messaggero di Sant'Antonio, were collected as Illustrissimi (1976; Eng. tr., 1978). Other Scritti e Discorsi, ed. A. Cattabiani (Padua [1979]). D. A. Yallop, In God's Name (1984); P. Cornwell, A Thief in the Night: The Death of Pope John Paul I (1989) [both claiming that he was murdered]. J. N. D. Kelly, The Oxford Dictionary of Popes (1986), pp. 325 f.

John Paul II (1920–), Pope from 1978. Karol Wojtyla, the son of a Polish soldier, was born in the industrial town of Wadowice, not far from Cracow. His family was poor. In 1938 he entered the Jagiellonian University at Cracow. During the German occupation of *Poland he worked in a quarry and then in a chemical factory. Recognizing a vocation to the priesthood in 1942, he began studying theology; he completed his studies at the seminary in Cracow after the end of the Second World War and was ordained in 1946. He then went to the Angelicum (the *Dominican University) in Rome. On his return to Cracow he served as a parish priest and university chaplain, and lectured on ethics and moral theology. Under a pseudonym he published plays and poetry. In 1958 *Pius XII nominated him titular Bp. of Ombi and auxiliary to the Administrator Apostolic of Cracow; in 1964 *Paul VI appointed him Abp. of Cracow and in 1967 made him a cardinal. When the Second *Vatican Council was announced, he became a member of the Preparatory Commission and he attended all four Sessions of the Council. He also served on various post-Conciliar Commissions and from 1971 was a permanent member of the Council of the Roman Synod of Bishops. He became known in the W. through his lectures in America and elsewhere, assisted by his outstanding linguistic skill. Together with Cardinal Wyszinski, the Primate, he was a leading figure in the Church's struggle against the Communist Government in Poland.

When he was elected Pope on the death of *John Paul I in 1978, he was the first Slav to hold that office and the first non-Italian since *Hadrian VI (1522–3). He began his pontificate with a simple ceremony of inauguration. Early in 1979 he went to *Mexico to open the Latin American Bishops' Conference at Puebla. On that occasion he set the pattern for his later foreign visits, kissing the ground of the country and celebrating Mass in front of vast crowds. Later in 1979 he visited Poland (where dramatic scenes of welcome were tolerated by the Government), *Ireland, the *United States of America, and Turkey. An attempt to assassinate him in Rome on 13 May 1981 did not for long delay further travel. In 1982 he was the first Pope to visit Britain and he subsequently visited over 100 countries in Europe, Africa, N. and S. America, and Asia.

In Mexico at the beginning of his pontificate John Paul II appeared cautious in his approach to *Liberation Theology and insisted that politics was the business of the laity. While he continued to condemn the use of violence, his commitment to the pursuit of human rights and human dignity was made clear in his first encyclical, Redemptor hominis (1979), which called for a reordering of social and economic structures; it was reiterated in Dives in misericordia (1980), Laborem exercens (1981), and Sollicitudo rei socialis (1987), the first encyclical addressed to non-RCs. His encyclical Slavorum apostoli (1985) appealed to a religion and culture common to both E. and W. Europe as a source for ending divisions in that continent. He is credited with a crucial role in the collapse of Communism which spread from Poland. On 1 Dec. 1989 he received Mikhail Gorbachev, President of the USSR, at the Vatican, and later in that month the *Uniat Church was restored in the Soviet Union. The Pope warned the E. not to capitulate to the materialism of the W. and was again critical of Capitalism as well as Communism in Centesimus Annus (1991), the encyclical marking the centenary of Rerum Novarum*. At Epiphany 1991 he launched a 'Decade of Evangelization', adopted in other Churches as a 'Decade of Evangelism'.

The pontificate has been marked by a concern for orthodoxy. John Paul II consistently declined to make any concessions in the Church's attitude to such issues as *contraception, abortion, and homosexuality. The traditional teaching on these matters, as well as on the dangers of admitting relativist interpretations of doctrine, was notably upheld in the encyclical Veritatis Splendor (1993). In 1982 he designated the conservative *Opus Dei as the first *personal prelature. In the Church's spiritual life he stressed the importance of traditional discipline, the Eucharist, and the place of the BVM. He performed an unprecedentedly large number of *beatifications and *canonizations, including the beatification of *Duns Scotus (1993). In 1985 he convened a second Extraordinary Synod of Bishops to assess the impact of the Second Vatican Council and to prevent divergent interpretations of it. The Synod suggested a universal *Catechism of the Catholic Church which was issued in 1992. During his pontificate the teaching of various theologians was held suspect and in 1979 H. *Küng had his licence to teach as a Catholic theologian withdrawn. Ten years later a new profession of faith and oath of fidelity was introduced for Church officials and the Congregation of the Doctrine of the Faith issued an Instruction on the vocation of theologians dealing with the relationship of the theologian to the teaching authority of the Church. At the other end of the spectrum the traditionalist Abp. M. Lefebvre, who refused to accept the changes brought about by the Second Vatican Council, in June 1988 led his followers into schism when he consecrated four bishops without the Pope's approval.

Visiting the *World Council of Churches in June 1984 John Paul II spoke of the *ecumenical movement as irreversible, though he rejected intercommunion as a mean for attaining unity of faith. He especially promoted good relations with the *Orthodox. For the first time in modern history the Pope and the *Oecumenical Patriarch attended each other's liturgies in Istanbul in 1979 and issued a call for dialogue leading to full communion. The re-emergence of Catholicism in E. Europe in the late 1980s led, however, to new disputes concerning Church property and RC proselytization in traditionally Orthodox regions. Despite the Pope's prayer with Abp. R. Runcie at *Canterbury in 1982, relations with the C of E also suffered setbacks. While the 1991 Vatican response to the Final Report of the *Anglican–Roman Catholic International Commission called for further clarification on various issues, the Pope had written to the Abp. of Canterbury in 1986 warning of the danger to reunion of the ordination of *women to the priesthood in the Anglican Communion. A 'Directory for the Application of Principles and Norms on Ecumenism', issued in 1993, encouraged, but defined current limits to, RC participation in ecumenical activity. John Paul II also sought good relations with other world religions, esp. *Islam and *Judaism. On 13 Apr. 1986 he joined the Chief Rabbi at prayer in a Roman synagogue, and on 16 Oct. 1986 he led the representatives of 12 world religions in a day of prayer for peace at *Assisi. In 1993 the Vatican formally recognized the State of Israel.

John Paul II reorganized the *Curia by his Apostolic Constitution Pastor Bonus (1988), confirming new regulations in 1992, and he continued to internationalize both the Curia and the Cardinals. He promulgated the new Codex Iuris Canonici* in 1983 and the first ever Codex for the Uniat Churches in 1990. In 1984 he concluded a revision of the *Lateran Treaty, conceding separation of Church and State in Italy and allowing that Rome should no longer be regarded as a 'sacred city'. Full diplomatic relations were established with Britain in 1982, with the USA in 1984, and with Mexico in 1992.

There are Eng. trs. of his Collected Poems (1982) and of his best-known play, The Jeweller's Shop (1980). Official docs. are pr. in the AAS for the years of his pontificate. The many studies incl. G. H. Williams, The Mind of John Paul II: Origins of his Thought and Action (New York, 1981); C. de Montclos, Les Voyages de Jean-Paul II: Dimensions sociales et politiques [1990]); M. Walsh, John Paul II (1994); and T. Szulc, Pope John Paul II: The Biography (New York and London [1995]). G. H. Williams in NCE 18 (1989), pp. 221–33, with bibl.

John Philoponus (*c.*490–*c.*570), philosopher and *Monophysite theologian. Philoponus means literally 'lover of work', but it is not certain whether the nickname directly reflected his personal character or whether he belonged to a group of lay workers so designated. A Christian from childhood, Philoponus lived in *Alexandria and was a pupil there of the *Neoplatonist philosopher Ammonius. As a philosopher he is remembered chiefly for his rejection of Aristotelian science, though in other respects he was deeply indebted to *Aristotle. His philosophical works include many commentaries on Aristotle and the De Aeternitate Mundi, an attack on the pagan Neoplatonist *Proclus. His most important theological works (which belong to his latter years) include the De Opificio Mundi, a commentary on the *Hexaemeron (much influenced by St *Basil the Great), and the Διαιτητής ('The Arbiter'). His Christology was close to that of *Severus of Antioch, and his trinitarian theology was condemned as *tritheist at the Sixth Oecumenical Council of *Constantinople (680–1).

Various theological works (incl. the Διαιτητής) preserved in Syriac, ed., with Lat. tr., by A. Sanda (Beirut, 1930). 'Les fragments trithéites de Jean Philopon', ed. A. Van Roey in Orientalia Lovaniensia Periodica, 11 (1980), pp. 135–63, with further refs. De Opificio Mundi, ed. G. Reichardt (Teub., 1897); De Aeternitate Mundi, ed. H. Rabe (ibid., 1899). Comm. on Aristotle are pr. in Commentaria in Aristotelum Graeca, vols. 13–17 (Berlin, 1887–1909). Ger. tr. of selected works by W. Böhm (Munich, etc., 1967). R. [R. K.] Sorabji (ed.), Philoponus and the Rejection of Aristotelian Science (Ithaca, NY, 1987), with bibl. H.-D. Saffrey [OP], 'Le chrétien Jean Philopon et la survivance de l'école d'Alexandrie au VIᵉ siècle', Revue des Études grecques, 67 (1954), pp. 396–410. K. Verrycken, 'The Development of Philiponus' Thought and its Chronology', in R. [R. K.] Sorabji (ed.), Aristotle Transformed (1990), pp. 233–74. CPG 3 (1979), pp. 366–70 (nos. 7260–82). T. Hainthaler in A. Grillmeier, Jesus der Christus im Glauben der kirche, 2/4 (1990), pp. 109–49; Eng. tr. (1996), pp. 107–46. G. Bardy in DTC 8 (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 831–9, s.v. 'Jean Philopon'; R. R. K. Sorabji in TRE 17 (1988), pp. 144–50, s.v. 'Johannes Philoponus'.

John the Presbyter. The term 'the Presbyter' ('elder', Gr. πρεσβύτερος) is applied to himself by the author of 2 and 3 Jn., while a 'John the Presbyter' is referred to by *Papias (*Eusebius, HE 3. 39. 4); but the inference to be drawn from these data is disputed. (1) Some think that Papias's evidence points to the existence at *Ephesus of a second John besides the Apostle (the son of Zebedee), and ascribe to him the Canonical Gospel of Jn. and the three Johannine Epistles; this was the view of B. H. *Streeter, for whom 2 and 3 Jn. were 'the author's signature' to the Gospel and First Epistle. Among those who have held this view, some (J. H. *Bernard) identify the '*beloved disciple' of the Gospel (Jn. 13: 23, 20: 2, 21: 15–23) with the Apostle; others (W. *Sanday, H. B. *Swete) equate him with the Presbyter. (2) Acc. to others, e.g. J. *Moffatt, merely the last two Epistles and possibly the Apocalypse (Rev.) are to be attributed to 'John the Presbyter'; the ascription of 2 and 3 Jn. to him was a view already known to *Jerome (De vir. illustr. 9. 18). (3) But the common view of Christian tradition, i.e. that 'the Presbyter' was a local designation for the Apostle himself (cf. e.g. 1 Pet. 5: 1, where St *Peter is apparently termed a presbyter), still has its advocates.

See bibl. to JOHN, GOSPEL OF ST.

John the Prophet. See BARSANUPHIUS, ST.

John of Ragusa (*c.*1395–1443), *Dominican theologian. John Stojković was a native of Ragusa who entered the Dominican Order at an early age, and in 1420 became master of theology at Paris. In 1422 he was appointed one of the university's representatives at the Council of Pavia and in 1431 *Martin V sent him to the Council of *Basle as Papal theologian, where he preached the opening sermon. From 1435 to 1437 he acted as legate of the Council to Constantinople in order to gain the Greeks for union with Rome, and the sending of an embassy by John Palaeologus was largely due to his influence. In 1438 he seems to have been made Bp. of Ardijsek and in 1440 cardinal by Felix V, though some authors have asserted that he remained faithful to the allegiance of *Eugenius IV, from whom he received the bishopric of Argos. Several of his writings have been printed, among them a treatise 'De Communione sub utraque Specie' against the *Hussites, a history of the Council of Basle and an unfinished history of the negotiations for union with the Greeks. While he was in Constantinople he assembled an important collection of Greek MSS, which were bequeathed to the Dominican house at Basle; MSS from this collection were used as printer's copy by *Erasmus for the first edition of the NT, as well as providing readings for editions of various Fathers.

He is not to be confounded with Cardinal Giovanni Dominici (*c.*1356–1419), another Dominican, also known as 'John of Ragusa', who was appointed Abp. of Ragusa before 26 Mar. 1408 and took a prominent part at the Council of *Constance (q.v.).

Several of his writings are contained in the Conciliar collections of Basle. A. Krchňák, De Vita et operibus Ioannis de Ragusio (Lateranum, NS 26, 3–4; 1960). B. Duda, OFM, Joannis Stojković de Ragusio, O.P. (†1443) Doctrina de Cognoscibilitate Ecclesiae (Studia Antoniana, 9; 1958). R. W. Hunt, 'Greek Manuscripts in the Bodleian Library from the Collection of John Stojković of Ragusa', in F. L. Cross (ed.), Studia Patristica, 7 (TU 92; 1966), pp. 75–82, with refs.

On Giovanni Dominici, Kaeppeli, 2 (1975), pp. 406–13, with bibl.

John of Ruysbroeck. See RUYSBROECK, JAN VAN.

John of Saba. See JOHN OF DALYATHA.

John of St Thomas (1589–1644), Spanish *Dominican theologian. John Poinsot was born in Lisbon, and acquired his BA at Coimbra in 1605. He then began his theological studies, moving, prob. in 1606, to Louvain, where he came under the influence of the Dominican Thomas de Torres. In 1609 he entered the Dominican order in Madrid, taking the name 'John of St Thomas', to express his devotion to the teaching of St *Thomas Aquinas. In 1625 he was sent to teach in Alcalá, where he remained until 1643, when he became confessor to Philip IV. He became a Master of Theology in 1633. His major works are the Cursus Philosophicus (1631–5) and the Cursus Theologicus, a commentary on the 'Summa Theologiae' of St Thomas (1637–67), of which only the first three volumes were published during his lifetime. As against the modified Thomism of the *Jesuit theologians, F. *Suárez and G. *Vázquez, John's system claimed to follow exactly the principles of St Thomas, in that it paid heed not only to Aquinas' conclusions, but also to his arguments; however, there is also a perceptible influence from contemporary, more spiritual interests in some of his writing.

Modern edns. of his Cursus Philosophicus by B. Reiser, OSB (3 vols., Turin, 1930–7); of his Cursus Theologicus (10 vols., Paris, 1883–6) and by the Benedictines of *Solesmes (Paris, etc., 5 vols. only pub., 1931–62), with major biographical material in vol. 1, pp. i–cviii. Material on Semiotics (from the Cursus Philosophicus), repr., with Eng. tr., ed. J. N. Deely (Berkeley, Calif., etc., 1985). Separate Eng. trs. of parts of his Cursus Philosophicus by Y. R. Simon and others, The Material Logic of John of St Thomas (Chicago, 1955), and of parts of his Cursus Theologicus by D. Hughes, OP, The Gifts of the Holy Spirit (London and New York, '1950' [1951]). T. Trapiello, OP, Juan de Santo Tomás y sus obras (Oviedo, 1889). V. Beltrán de Heredia, 'La enseñanza de S. Tomás en la Universidad de Alcalá', La Ciencia tomista, 14 (1916, 2), pp. 267–97. M. B. Lavaud, OP, 'Jean de Saint Thomas', Vie Spirituelle, 14 (1926), pp. 387–415. La Ciencia tomista, 69 (1945), is devoted to John of St Thomas. J. Paquin, 'La Lumière de gloire selon Jean de Saint-Thomas', Sciences Ecclésiastiques, 3 (1950), pp. 5–66. J. M. Ramírez in DTC 8 (1924), cols. 803–8; D. Hughes, OP, in NCE 7 (1967), pp. 1070 f.

John of Salisbury (*c.*1115–80), medieval humanist. A native of *Salisbury, he studied at *Paris under *Abelard, *William of Conches, and *Gilbert de la Porrée. From 1147 he was a member of the household of *Theobald, Abp. of Canterbury, serving him especially in his relations with the Papal curia, which he frequently visited. On Theobald's death, he entered the service of his successor, Thomas *Becket. He supported Becket in his quarrel with Henry II; he was present at Canterbury on the fatal 29 Dec. 1170. In 1176 he became Bp. of Chartres, where he remained for the rest of his life.

His chief writings are the 'Policraticus, sive de nugis curialium et vestigiis philosophorum', a survey of the courtly life of his time with a discussion of political problems, and the 'Metalogicon', a defence of the study of grammar, rhetoric, and especially logic. Both these works were composed mainly during a period in which he fell into disfavour with Henry II and were finished in 1159. Many of his letters, most related to the affairs of the Abps. whom he served, survive and are an important historical source for the contest between Henry and Becket. He also wrote (*c.*1164–7) a historical work known as the 'Historia Pontificalis' covering the years 1148–51, which deals chiefly with the affairs of the Papal court. John was an accomplished Latinist and man of letters, and one of the leaders of the literary renaissance of the 12th cent. He had an extensive knowledge of Latin classical writers on which he drew freely in his writings. One of the earliest medieval writers to be acquainted with the whole of *Aristotle's 'Organon', he was well versed in the logical questions which formed the staple of the discussion of philosophical problems in his day, but he cannot be termed an original philosopher.

Works ed. J. A. Giles (5 vols., Oxford, 1848); repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 199. 1–1040. Crit. edns. of his Policraticus by C. C. J. *Webb (2 vols., Oxford, 1909) and by K. S. B. Keats-Rohan (CCCM 118 etc.; 1993 ff); of his Metalogicon by C. C. J. Webb (Oxford, 1929) and by J. B. Hall (CCCM 98; 1991); of his Historia Pontificalis by R. L. Poole (Oxford, 1927) and, with Eng. tr., by M. Chibnall (London, 1956; repr., with corrections, Oxford, 1986); and of his Letters, with Eng. tr., by W. J. Millor, SJ, H. E. Butler, and C. N. L. Brooke (2 vols., London and Oxford, 1955–79; vol. 1, repr., with corrections, 1986). Eng. tr. of Policraticus, 4–6, with selections from 7 and 8, by J. Dickinson (New York, 1927), of 1–3, with selections from 7 and 8, by J. B. Pike (Minneapolis, 1938); and of Metalogicon by D. D. McGarry (Berkeley and Los Angeles, Calif., 1955). C. C. J. Webb, John of Salisbury ('Great Medieval Churchmen', 1932); H. Liebeschütz, Mediaeval Humanism in the Life and Writings of John of Salisbury (Studies of the Warburg Institute, 17; 1950); G. Miczka, Das Bild der Kirche bei Johannes von Salisbury (Bonner Historische Forschungen, 34; 1970); M. Kerner, Johannes von Salisbury und die logische Struktur seines Policraticus (1977); K. Guth, Johannes von Salisbury (Münchener Theologische Studien, I. Historische Abteilung, 20; 1978); M. Wilks (ed.), The World of John of Salisbury (Studies in Church History, Subsidia, 3; 1984). B. Smalley, The Becket Conflict and the Schools (Oxford, 1973), pp. 87–108. R. L.

Poole in DNB 29 (1892), pp. 439–46; N. M. Haring in NCE 7 (1967), pp. 1071 f., s.v.

John Scholasticus (d. 577), John III, Patriarch of *Constantinople from 565. In his early years he was a lawyer (σχολαστικός) at *Antioch, where he made a famous collection ('Synagoge') of Canons. Later, after he had become patriarch, he re-edited and enriched it from the 'Novellae' of *Justinian, and the work became one of the primary sources for subsequent E. canon law (see NOMOCANON). He is also said to have written a 'Catechetical Oration' on the Trinity. He is not to be confounded with *John Climacus, also known as 'John Scholasticus', and is prob. distinct from *John Malalas (q.v.).

'Synagoge', ed., with Lat. tr., by G. E. Heimbach, Ἀνέκδοτα, 2 (Leipzig, 1840), pp. 202–34. Crit. edn. by V. N. Beneševič (Abh. (Bayr.), NF 14; 1937). E. *Schwartz, Die Kanonessammlung von Johannes Scholastikos (Sb. (Bayr.), 1933, Heft 6). P. van den Ven, 'L'Accession de Jean le Scolastique au siège patriarcal de Constantinople en 565', Byzantion, 35 (1965), pp. 320–52. CPG 3 (1979), pp. 410 f. (nos. 7550 f.). L. Petit in DTC 8 (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 829–31, s.v. 'Jean 77: Jean le Scolastique'; E. Herman in DDC 6 (1957), cols. 118–20, s.v. 'Jean III le Scolastique'.

John the Scot. See ERIGENA.

John the Solitary. See JOHN OF APAMEA.

John of Wesel (John Rucherat or Ruchrat) (*c.*1400–81), ecclesiastical reformer. A native of Oberwesel am Rhein, he was educated at Erfurt University, where he was rector in 1456–7. Later he became canon at Worms (1460), professor at Basle (1461), and cathedral-preacher (Domprediger) at Worms (1463). Charged with preaching *Hussite doctrines on the Church and Sacraments, he was deposed by Reinhard, Bp. of Worms, from his preaching office in 1477 and in 1479 tried by the *Inquisition. After a public recantation at Worms on 21 Feb. 1479, he was sentenced to lifelong confinement in the *Augustinian monastery at Mainz, where he died some two years later. Several of his writings, many of them still unpublished, survive, among them a 'Commentary on the Sentences' (from his Erfurt period), a treatise against *indulgences (1475), and a work on the *Immaculate Conception. He rejected *Original Sin, *transubstantiation, compulsory fasting, indulgences, and Extreme *Unction, and held that Scripture alone was the final authority in faith.

Modern edn. of his 'De Indulgentiis' in G. A. Benrath (ed.), Reformtheologen des 15. Jahrhunderts (Texte zur Kirchen- und Theologiegeschichte, 7; Gütersloh, 1968), pp. 39–60. C. Ullmann, Johann Wesel, ein Vorgänger Luthers (1834). N. Paulus, 'Johann von Wesel über Busssacrament und Ablass', ZKT 24 (1900), pp. 644–56; id., 'Die verloren geglaubten philosophischen Schriften des Johann von Wesel', ibid. 27 (1903), pp. 601 f. G. Ritter, Studien zur Spätscholastik, 3, 'Neue Quellenstücke zur Theologie des Johann von Wesel' (Sb. (Heid.), Jahr. 1926/7, Abhandlung 5). G. A. Benrath in TRE 17 (1988), pp. 150–3, s.v. 'Johann Rucherat von Wessel'.

Johnson, John (1662–1725), English theologian. Educated at Magdalene and Corpus Christi Colleges, Cambridge, he became Vicar of Boughton-under-Blean in 1687, of St John's, Margate, in 1697, and of Cranbrook, Kent, in 1710. He wrote several works, the theology of which has considerable affinities with that of the *Nonjurors, among whom he had close personal friends. His best-known treatise is his Unbloody Sacrifice and Altar, Unvailed and Supported, in which the Nature of the Eucharist is explained according to the Sentiments of the Christian Church in the Four First Centuries (1714–18), in which he affirmed that the sacrifice is 'proper', 'expiatory', and 'propitiatory', and described the elements after the Consecration as the 'Sacramental' or 'Eucharistical body and blood' of the Lord. He held, however, that Christ was present in the elements in power and effect rather than in actuality. He also wrote The Clergy-Man's Vade Mecum: or, an Account of the Antient and Present Church of England (1706) and The Propitiatory Oblation in the Holy Eucharist (1710).

The Unbloody Sacrifice was repr. in LACT, 1847. Posthumous Life by T. *Brett prefixed (pp. i–lvi) to three posthumous tracts by Johnson, namely (1) 'The Primitive Communicant', (2) 'A Sermon . . . on Numb. xi. 29', and (3) 'An Explanation of Daniel's Prophecy of the LXX Weeks' (1748). W. J. Grisbrooke, Anglican Liturgies of the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Centuries (Alcuin Club Collections, 40; 1958), pp. 71–88. J. H. Overton in DNB 30 (1892), p. 906.

Johnson, Samuel (1709–84), author, lexicographer, and conversationalist. A serious Anglican, he ascribes his conversion as a young man to reading W. *Law's Serious Call, and, although unlike Law he was never a *Nonjuror, he was a strong *High Churchman, regular and sincere in his religious duties, and very generous to his friends and to the poor. He sometimes caused surprise by his marked tolerance of RCism, but, though he was on friendly terms with individuals, he was at no pains to conceal his dislike of Presbyterianism and Nonconformity.

Besides his famous Dictionary of the English Language (2 vols., 1755), his works include The Vanity of Human Wishes (1749); The Prince of Abissinia [Rasselas] (1759); A Journey to the Western Islands of Scotland (1775), The Lives of the English Poets (3 vols., 1779–81), and the twice-weekly essays entitled the Rambler, which appeared from 1750 to 1752 and earned him the title of 'the Great Moralist'. He also wrote many sermons for friends.

The American preacher and author, Samuel Johnson (1822–82), author of 'City of God, how broad and far' (EH 375) and other hymns, is not to be confused with the lexicographer.

Collected Works ed. by his friend and executor, Sir John Hawkins and others (13 vols., London, 1787–9), with Life as vol. 1. Crit. edn. of his Works by E. L. McAdam, Jun., D. and M. Hyde, and others (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1958 ff.: 'The Yale Edition'). Letters, ed. B. Redford (6 vols., Princeton, NJ, 1992–4). His prayers and private devotions were first pub. as Prayers and Meditations ed. G. Strahan (1785); they are incl. in vol. 1 of the Yale edn. of Johnson's Works. A collection of his Sermons was pub. under the name of John Taylor (2 vols., 1788–9). The classic biography is that of James Boswell (2 vols., London, 1791; standard edn. by G. B. Hill (6 vols., London, 1887; rev. by L. F. Powell, 6 vols., Oxford, 1934–50, with revisions to vols. 5 and 6, 1964). Biographical sources in A. L. Reade, Johnsonian Gleanings (11 vols., privately pr., 1909–52). Modern Lives by W. J. Bate (London, 1978) and R. DeMaria (Oxford, 1993). J. L. Clifford, Young Samuel Johnson (1955). J. Gray, Johnson's Sermons: A Study (Oxford, 1972). Other works on his religious or moral thought by R. Voitle (Cambridge, Mass., 1961), M. J. Quinlan (Madison, Wis., 1964), C. F. Chapin (Ann Arbor, Mich., 1968), P. K. Alkon (Evanston, Ill., 1967), R. B. Schwartz (Madison, Wis., 1975),

C. E. Pierce (London, 1983), and J. C. D. Clark (Cambridge, 1994). G. M. Ditchfield, 'Dr. Johnson and the Dissenters', Bulletin of the John Rylands University Library of Manchester, 68 (1986), pp. 373–409. Introd. by P. Rogers, Johnson (Past Masters, Oxford, 1993). J. L. Clifford, Johnsonian Studies, 1887–1950: A Survey and Bibliography (1951).

Joinville, Jean de (*c.*1224–1319), French historian. Seneschal of Champagne from 1233, Joinville accompanied St *Louis IX to Egypt and Palestine on the Sixth *Crusade in 1248. In this disastrous venture both he and the King were taken prisoner. In 1254 they returned to France, and Joinville spent most of the rest of his life on his estates, except when in attendance at court. He declined to accompany the King on the Crusade of 1270. In 1282 he was one of the chief witnesses for Louis's canonization and was present at the exhumation of his body in 1298. During the next ten years he wrote his famous Life of the King, Le Livre des saintes paroles et des bonnes actions de St Louis, at the request of Queen Jeanne. It is the work of an old man, garrulous and discursive, but it gives a charming account of its hero, contains an illuminating picture of the Crusade of 1248, and is full of accurate observations. A 'Credo' which he drew up at Acre in 1252 while on the Crusade epitomizes his religious faith.

His History of St Louis was first pub. at Poitiers in 1547. Crit. edn. of his Works by N. de Wailly (Paris, 1867; rev. 1874); Eng. tr. by R. Hague (London, 1955). History of St Louis also ed. N. L. Corbett (Sherbrooke, Quebec, 1977); Eng. trs. of the History by J. Evans (Newtown, 1937; London, 1938), with good introd., and by M. R. B. Shaw (Joinville & Villehardouin: Chronicles of the Crusades, Penguin Classics, 1963, pp. 163–353). L. J. Friedman, Text and Iconography for Joinville's Credo (Mediaeval Academy of America, Publication 68; 1958), incl. text. A. Firmin-Didot, Études sur la vie et les travaux de Jean Sire de Joinville (2 pts., Paris, 1870); H. F. Delaborde, Jean de Joinville et les seigneurs de Joinville (1894). G. P[aris], 'Jean, Sire de Joinville', Histoire littéraire de la France, 32 (1898), pp. 291–459.

Jonah, Book of. This Book, which is included among the twelve *Minor Prophets, is unlike the other prophetical books in being almost entirely in narrative form. It describes Yahweh's call to Jonah to go to Nineveh, the Assyrian capital, to preach repentance, his disobedience, his attempted escape by sea to Tarshish, his punishment of being thrown overboard and swallowed by a great fish, his deliverance after three days and nights, and the final success of his mission (chs. 1, 3, 4). The psalm in ch. 2 is widely held by modern critics to be independent of the rest of the Book. If the aim of the Book is primarily didactic, seeking to stress God's care for Gentiles and Jews alike, then this fact, together with considerations of language, style, and theology suggest that it was written in the post-exilic period, at a time when *Judaism was in danger of becoming narrowly exclusive. In the Gospels Christ refers more than once to the 'sign of Jonah' (Mt. 12: 39, 16: 4, Lk. 11: 29), which is interpreted in Mt. 12: 40 as a prophecy of his resurrection.

Comm. by J. A. Bewer (ICC on Hag., Zech., Mal., and Jon., 1912; sep. pagination), W. Rudolf (KAT 13/2 on Joel, Amos, Obad., and Jon., 1971, pp. 321–71), and J. Limburg (Old Testament Library, 1993). H. Schmidt, Jona: Eine Untersuchung zur vergleichenden Religionsgeschichte (Forschungen zur Religion und Literatur des Alten und Neuen Testaments, 9; 1907). A. R. Johnson, 'Jonah II. 3–10: A Study in Cultic Phantasy', in H. H. Rowley (ed.), Studies in Old Testament Prophecy presented to Professor Theodore H. Robinson (1950), pp. 82–102. U. Steffen, Das Mysterium von Tod und Auferstehung: Formen und Wandlungen des Jona-Motivs (Göttingen [1963]). R. E. Clements, 'The Purpose of the Book of Jonah', in Congress Volume, Edinburgh 1974 (Supplements to Vetus Testamentum, 28; 1975), pp. 16–28. T. E. Fretheim, The Message of Jonah: A Theological Commentary (Minneapolis [1977]). J. Blenkinsopp, A History of Prophecy in Israel (1984), pp. 268–73. R. A. Edwards, The Sign of Jonah in the Theology of the Evangelists and Q (Studies in Biblical Theology, 2nd ser. 18; 1971). J. Jeremias in TWNT 3 (1938), pp. 410–13 (Eng. tr., 1965, pp. 406–10), s.v. Ἰωνᾶς; H.-J. Zobel in TRE 17 (1988), pp. 229–34, s.v. 'Jona/Jonabuch', with extensive bibl.

Jonas, Justus (1493–1555), orig. 'Jodocus Koch', German reformer. Educated at the universities of Erfurt and *Wittenberg, in 1518 he was appointed professor of law at Erfurt and canon of the church of St Severus. In 1519 he was elected rector of the university, where he introduced Greek and Hebrew into the curriculum. A great admirer of *Erasmus and M. *Luther, he accompanied the latter to *Worms in 1521. From 1523 until 1533 he was dean of the theology faculty at Wittenberg and he took a prominent part in the Protestant cause, notably at the *Marburg Conference (1529), the Diet of *Augsburg (1530), and in reform at Halle (1541). His greatest service to the Reformation movement was his translation of the writings of Luther and *Melanchthon from German into Latin and the other way round. He also left an extensive correspondence and several Church Orders (including one for Halle, 1543). In 1546 he preached Luther's funeral sermon. After the outbreak of the Schmalkaldic war he was for a time a fugitive, but in 1553 was appointed superintendent at Eisfeld, where he remained till his death.

Briefwechsel, ed. G. Kawerau (2 vols., Halle, 1884–5, photographically repr., Hildesheim, 1964); suppl. by W. Delius in Archiv für Reformationsgeschichte, 42 (1951), pp. 136–45. Id., Justus Jonas (Gütersloh, 1952). M. E. Lehmann, Justus Jonas, loyal reformer (Minneapolis, 1963). P. Kalkoff, Humanismus und Reformation in Erfurt (1926). E. Kleineidam in P. G. Bietenholz and T. B. Deutscher (eds.), Contemporaries of Erasmus, 2 [1986], pp. 244–6, s.v.; H.-G. Leder in TRE 17 (1988), pp. 234–6, s.v.

Jones, Griffith (1683–1761), the founder of the Welsh circulating schools. Of Nonconformist parentage, he was received into the C of E, ordained in 1708, and became rector of Llanddowror in 1716. He set himself to further social and religious reforms and to this end made successful preaching tours. In 1730 he began to found his 'circulating schools' for adults and children, with travelling teachers who instructed their pupils in reading the Welsh Bible. Largely through help from England, e.g. from the *SPCK, the scheme rapidly developed, so that at his death over 3,000 of these greatly valued institutions were in existence. Jones published annually Welsh Piety, an account of the work and progress of his schools. He was also the author of a large number of writings in Welsh.

Lives by D. Jones (London and Bangor, 1902), F. A. Cavenagh (Cardiff, 1930), and T. Kelly (ibid., 1950). J. McLeish, Evangelical Religion and Popular Education: A Modern Interpretation (1969), esp. pp. 5–40. R. Williams in DNB 30 (1892), pp. 102 f., s.v.

Jones, Inigo (1573–1652), the first British classical architect. He was born in London, the son of a Welsh cloth-maker. Little is known of his early life, but *c.*1600 and again in 1613–14 he visited Italy. Here he studied the work of the great Italian classical architect Andrea Palladio (d. 1580) in his native Vicenza and elsewhere; Jones's annotated copy of Palladio's seminal book, I Quattro Libri . . . (1570), is in Worcester College, Oxford. He began work as a general impresario and designer of masques, often in collaboration with Ben Jonson, with whom he had a famous quarrel. By *c.*1608 he knew enough about architecture to make a design for the W. front of *St Paul's cathedral which is close to the engravings for a projected façade of the Gesù in Rome, the mother church of the *Jesuits. In 1613 he was granted the reversion of the Royal Surveyorship and his architectural career assumed a new importance. The first classical buildings in England were his Banqueting House, Whitehall (1619–22), and the Queen's House, Greenwich (1616–35). His importance as a designer of churches lies in his use of classical forms based on the ancient temple, in contrast to the contemporary Gothic style. His ecclesiastical work included the Queen's Chapel at St James's Palace, built for *Charles I's Catholic Queen *Henrietta Maria (begun in 1623), St Paul's, Covent Garden (begun in 1631, rebuilt to his design in 1795), and the huge classical portico added to the W. front of Old St Paul's (1634–42), destroyed in the Great Fire of 1666. The Civil War effectively ended his career. As with C. *Wren, there are many doubtful attributions, including the porch of St Mary the Virgin, Oxford, which was probably designed by Nicholas Stone (1637). Many of Jones's books and drawings are in Worcester College, Oxford, and other drawings are in the Royal Institute of British Architects, London.

J. Summerson, Inigo Jones (Harmondsworth, 1966). S. Orgel and R. Strong, Inigo Jones: The Theatre of the Stuart Court, including the Complete Designs for Productions at Court (2 vols., 1973); J. [F.] Harris and G. Higgott, Inigo Jones: Complete Architectural Drawings (New York, 1989). J. [F.] Harris and A. A. Tait, Catalogue of the Drawings by Inigo Jones . . . at Worcester College, Oxford (Oxford, 1979), pp. 1–29. DNB 30 (1892), pp. 111–19; H. Colvin, A Biographical Dictionary of British Architects 1600–1840 (1978), pp. 467–74, s.v.

Jones, Rufus Matthew (1863–1948), American *Quaker. Educated at Haverford College and in Europe, he was principal of Oak Grove Seminary from 1889 to 1893 and professor of philosophy at Haverford College from 1904 to 1934. Among his many works are: A Dynamic Faith (1901), Social Law in the Spiritual World (1904), Studies in Mystical Religion (1909), Spiritual Reformers in the 16th and 17th Centuries (1914), The Later Periods of Quakerism (1921), The Faith and Practice of the Quakers (1927), New Studies in Mystical Religion (1927), and George Fox, Seeker and Friend (1930).

H. E. *Fosdick (ed.), Rufus Jones Speaks to Our Times: An Anthology (New York, 1951; London, 1953). H. H. Brinton (ed.), Children of Light: In Honor of Rufus M. Jones (New York, 1938), with introd. by H. H. Brinton, pp. ix–xii, and list of Jones's Works, pp. 407–11. E. G. Vining, Friend of Life: The Biography of Rufus M. Jones (Philadelphia, 1958; London, 1959).

Jones, William, 'of Nayland' (1726–1800), Anglican divine. A native of Lowick in Northants, he was educated at Charterhouse and at University College, Oxford, where with his friend G. *Horne he studied the writings of J. *Hutchinson. Having been ordained in 1751 he held several curacies, and became rector of Pluckley, Kent, in 1765. In 1777 he accepted the perpetual curacy of Nayland, Suffolk, whence his traditional epithet. He endeavoured to keep alive the High Church traditions of the *Nonjurors. His best-known work, The Catholic Doctrine of the Trinity (1756), sought to prove from scriptural texts that the Trinitarian dogma is contained in the Bible. In his later work on the same subject, A Short Way to Truth (1792), he attempts to find arguments for the doctrine of the Trinity in nature, e.g. in the three primary colours, the three dimensions, and other groups of three. In 1792 he assisted in the formation of a 'Society for the Reformation of Principles', designed to counteract the influence of the French Revolution. His sound and solid piety finds expression in The Scholar armed against the Errors of the Time (1792).

The Theological, Philosophical and Miscellaneous Works of the Rev. William Jones [ed. W. *Stevens] (12 vols., London, 1801), with short account of his life and writings by the editor, 1, pp. i–lv. Further Sermons (Sermons on Various Subjects and Occasions), ed. W. H. Walker [grandson] (2 vols., London, 1830). W. H. Teale, Lives of English Divines (1866), pp. 345–419. J. H. Overton in DNB 30 (1892), pp. 177 f.; S. L. Ollard in DECH, p. 303.

Jordan, River. Formed from the waters of four streams which converge in the upper part of the plain of Lake Huleh, the Jordan expands into the now much-reduced Lake Huleh (poss. the 'Waters of Merom' of Josh. 11: 5), flows through a narrow gorge and then forms a delta at the head of the Sea of *Galilee (q.v.). Emerging from the south of the lake, it meanders for some 200 miles before it eventually enters the *Dead Sea (65 miles distant). The fault which contains it extends from northern Syria to Ezion-geber on the eastern arm of the *Red Sea.

Flowing through a steep infertile valley in the centre of biblical Palestine, the Jordan was a natural barrier between the settled and the nomadic populations of the area. By their passage of the Jordan, when its waters were miraculously divided, the *Hebrews first entered the Promised Land (Josh. 3: 16; cf. the crossing of the Red Sea, Exod. 14); it was the scene of Elijah's ascent to Heaven (2 Kgs. 2: 11); in its waters Naaman the Syrian was cleansed (2 Kgs. 5: 14) after he had contrasted it unfavourably with the rivers of his own land. In NT times St *John the Baptist preached on its banks and the Lord Himself was among those baptized in its waters (Mt. 3: 13). From these associations it became an emblem of the achievement of purity (esp. in Baptism) and of the last hindrance to final blessedness, and as such features in numerous *hymns and *spirituals.

W. Libbey and F. E. Hoskins, The Jordan Valley and Petra (2 vols., 1905); N. Glueck, The River Jordan (Philadelphia and London, 1946; rev. edn., New York and London, 1968). M. *Noth, 'Der Jordan in der alten Geschichte Palästinas', Zeitschrift des Deutschen Palästina-Vereins, 72 (1956), pp. 123–48. G. A. *Smith, The Historical Geography of the Holy Land (25th edn., 1931), pp. 405–96. [A.] D. Baly, The Geography of the Bible (2nd edn. [1974]), esp. pp. 191–202.

Josaphat, St, also Joasaph. In medieval legend, the son of an Indian king, Abenner, who was converted to Christianity by the hermit Barlaam. The name 'Josaphat' appears to be a corruption of 'Bodisatva' (Bodhisattva), a title of the Buddha. He is commemorated in the *Roman Martyrology on 27 Nov. See also BARLAAM AND JOASAPH, STS.

Josaphat, St (1580 or 1584–1623), Abp. of Polotsk, the first saint of the E. Church to be formally canonized after process in the Congregation of *Rites, in 1867. John Kunsevich became a monk at Vilna in 1604. In 1617 he was consecrated Bp. of Vitebsk with right of succession to Polotsk, to which he succeeded a few months later. He did much to restore the ecclesiastical life of the eparchy, in which there was still much unrest following the Union of *Brest-Litovsk. He was killed by a rival faction. Feast day, now 12 Nov.

Docs. of his beatification and canonization ed. A. G. Welykij, OSBM (Analecta Ordinis S. Basili Magni, 2nd ser., sectio 3, vols. 1–3; Rome, 1952–67). Miscellanea in honorem S. Josaphat (ibid., 2nd ser., sectio 2, vol. 6; 1967). Life by A. Guépin, OSB (2 vols., Paris, 1874). Further study by E. Unger-Dreiling (Vienna [1960]).

Joseph, St, the spouse of the BVM. He figures prominently in the two Infancy narratives of the Gospels—in Mt. 1–2 and to a less extent in Lk. 1–2. Both state that Mary was 'betrothed' to him at the time of the Lord's birth, but both emphasize her virginity. He was a pious Jew of Davidic descent (Mt. 1: 19 f., Lk: 2: 4) but of humble situation, and acc. to Mt. 13: 55 a carpenter (τέκτων). Christ grew up in his household at Nazareth for at least 12 years (Lk. 2: 42, 51). Afterwards Joseph is mentioned only once by name in the NT (Lk. 4: 22; cf. Mt. 13: 55, Mk: 6: 3), but he is often referred to in later traditions. In the 'Book of *James' he is said to have been very old at the time of his marriage to Mary; and as a pattern of holiness he is the subject of various legends. The special veneration of St Joseph seems to have originated in the E., where the apocryphal 'History of Joseph the Carpenter' (4th–7th cents.) enjoyed considerable popularity. It developed comparatively late in the W. Church, though a commemoration is mentioned in the Irish Félire of St *Oengus, dated to the 9th cent. Among the earliest promoters of his cult are St *Bernardino of Siena and John *Gerson in the 15th cent., who laid its theological foundations by drawing out the implications of his office as foster-father of Jesus, and whose teaching found liturgical expression in the introduction of his feast (19 Mar.) into the Roman Calendar in 1479. The devotion was popularized esp. by St *Teresa of Ávila and St *Francis de Sales. In 1714 *Clement XI composed a special office for his feast, and in 1729 *Benedict XIII inserted his name in the Litany of the Saints. He was declared 'Patron of the Universal Church' by *Pius IX in 1870, when his principal feast (apart from 19 Mar.) became his 'Patronage', since 1914 celebrated on the 3rd Wednesday after Easter. This feast was suppressed in 1955, when the feast of St Joseph the Worker on 1 May was promulgated by *Pius XII. In 1969 this latter observance ceased to be obligatory. His pre-eminent sanctity, which places him next to the BVM among the saints, was confirmed by *Leo XIII in his encyclical 'Quanquam pluries' of 1889. In 1962 the name of St Joseph was added to the list of saints in the *Communicantes in the *Canon of the Roman Mass (now the First Eucharistic Prayer). St Joseph is invoked as the patron of a good death; the month of March and each Wednesday used to be dedicated to him. He is usually represented with the Child Jesus and a lily or staff. Feast day in E., the first Sunday after Christmas.

A. H. Lépicier, Tractatus de S. Joseph (Paris [1908]). 'C.A.', 'Le Développement historique du culte de S. Joseph', R. Bén. 14 (1897), pp. 104–14, 145–55, and 203–9. J. Seitz, Die Verehrung des hl. Joseph in ihrer geschichtlichen Entwickelung bis zum Konzil von Trient (1908). U. Holzmeister, SJ, De Sancto Ioseph Quaestiones Biblicae (Scripta Pontificii Instituti Biblici; Rome, 1945). F. L. Filas, SJ, The Man nearest to Christ: Nature and Historic Development of the Devotion to St Joseph (Milwaukee, 1944; London, 1947), with Eng. tr. of principal Papal docs. to date. The proceedings of a series of symposia on St Joseph are pr. in the Cahiers de Joséphologie, pub. by the Centre de Recherches et de Documentation, Oratoire Saint-Joseph, Montreal, 1953 ff.: Saint Joseph durant les quinze premiers siècles de l'Église (Cahiers, 19; 1971); Saint Joseph à l'Époque de la Renaissance (1450–1600) (Cahiers, 25; 1977); Saint Joseph au XVIIᵉ siècle (Cahiers, 29; 1981); and *Présence de Saint Joseph au XVII*ᵉ siècle (Cahiers, 35; 1987). Bibl. by A. Trottier, CSB, in Cahiers de Joséphologie, 1 (1953), pp. 55–117, 247–95; 2 (1954), pp. 77–140, 227–64; and 3 (1955), pp. 51–117. P. Grelot and others in Dict. Sp. 8 (1974), cols. 1289–323, s.v. 'Joseph (2)'.

Joseph of Arimathaea, St. The 'councillor' (βουλευτής, Lk. 23: 50) who after the Crucifixion requested from Pilate the body of Christ and gave it burial the same day (Mt. 27: 60, Mk. 15: 46, Lk. 23: 53; cf. Jn. 19: 42, etc.). He is described as a 'good and a just man' (ἀνὴρ ἀγαθὸς καὶ δίκαιος; Lk. 23: 50) and as a disciple, 'but secretly for fear of the Jews' (Jn. 19: 38). Acc. to the apocryphal 'Gospel of *Nicodemus' he played an important part in the foundation of the first Christian community at Lydda. In the 'De Antiquitate Glastoniensis Ecclesie', written by *William of Malmesbury between 1129 and 1139, occurs the earliest mention of the story that St Joseph came to England with the Holy Grail and built the first church in the country at *Glastonbury, but the passage relating this incident was added to the book at least a century later. Feast day in E., and the American BCP (1979), 31 July; in W., 17 Mar.

E. von Dobschütz, 'Joseph von Arimathia', ZKG 23 (1902), pp. 1–17; T. Kluge, 'Die apokryphe Erzählung des Joseph von Aramathäa über den Bau der ersten christlichen Kirche in Lydda', Oriens Christianus, NS 4 (1914), pp. 24–38. See also comm. to Gospels, ad locc. For works on the legend connecting St Joseph with Glastonbury, see bibl. to GLASTONBURY.

Joseph Calasanctius, St (1557–1648), founder of the *Piarists. José de Calasanz was born in Peralta de la Sal in NW Spain. He studied law and theology in the universities of Lérida, Valencia, and Alcalá, was ordained priest in 1583, and held various administrative and pastoral positions in Spain. In 1592 he went to Rome, where he lived for some years in the *Colonna Palazzo. Though he had originally intended to seek a well-endowed benefice in Spain, he was deeply moved by the terrible conditions of the children in the poorer parts of Rome and decided to devote the rest of his life to their Christian education. In 1597 he opened in Rome what L. von *Pastor claims was the first free public school in Europe. To give permanence to the work, which grew rapidly, he established a religious order, the Piarists, whose members took a fourth vow dedicating themselves to the education of children; it was recognized by Pope *Paul V in 1617 and approved by Gregory XV in 1621. In Calasanctius's schools, which were known as 'Pious Schools', children were taught reading, writing, arithmetic, and grammar, as well as Christian doctrine, and Catholic, Protestant, and Jewish children were admitted on equal terms. He was especially concerned about scientific education and sent some of the masters to study in the schools of *Galileo and T. *Campanella. He set out his pedagogical principles in his voluminous correspondence and in the Constitutions of his order, which during his lifetime spread through Italy, Moravia, and Poland. In 1643, however, he was arraigned before the *Holy Office and deposed from his office. He was canonized in 1767 and declared Patron of Christian Schools in 1948. Feast day, 25 (formerly 27) Aug.

Letters, ed. L. Picanyol, Sch. P., and C. Vilá-Palá, Sch. P. (10 vols., Rome, 1950–88), with introd., vol. 1, pp. ix–xliv. Obra [pedagógica], ed. G. Sántha, Sch. P. (Biblioteca de Autores Cristianos, 159; Madrid, 1956; 2nd edn., 1984); anthology ed. V. Faubell (Salamanca, 1988). C. Bau, Biografía crítica de S. José de Calasanzio (Madrid, 1949); S. Giner Guerri, Sch. P., San José de Calasanz: Maestro y Fundador (Biblioteca de Autores Cristianos, maior 41; 1992). G. Giovannozzi, Il Calasanzio e l'opera sua (Florence, 1930); C. Vilá Palá, Fuentes immediatas de la pedagogiá calasancia (Madrid, 1960); J. Santha, Ensayos críticos sobre S. José de Calasanz y las Escuelas Pías (Salamanca, 1976). G. Cianfrocca and G. Ausenda in DIP 4 (1977), cols. 1343–51, s.v. 'Giuseppe Calasanzio', with extensive bibl.

Joseph of Cupertino, St (1603–63), *Franciscan friar. Joseph Desa was the son of a poor carpenter in Cupertino in the Kingdom of Naples. In his youth he became a *Capuchin lay brother. When the Capuchins dismissed him on account of his awkwardness, the *Conventual Franciscans at La Grotella, nr. Cupertino, accepted him as a tertiary. He became a cleric in 1625 and was ordained priest in 1628, despite doing poorly in his studies. During the rest of his life he experienced *ecstasies which were remarkable for the phenonema of levitation which accompanied them. Since these caused wonder and curiosity among the people, his superiors tried to keep him from public view, especially after he was denounced to the *Inquisition. He spent the last ten years of his life in seclusion in out-of-the way Capuchin convents and at the Conventual friary at Osimo where he died. A meeting with him is said to have been decisive in converting the Lutheran Duke John Frederick of Brunswick to Catholicism. He was canonized in 1767. Feast day, 18 Sept., suppressed in 1969.

[A. Pastrovicchi, OFMC], Compendio della Vita, Virtù, e Miracoli del B. Giuseppe da Copertino (1753; adapted Eng. tr., 1918); Lat. tr., with introd. and other material, in AASS, Sept. 5 (1755), pp. 992–1060. G. Parisciani, OMFC, San Giuseppe da Copertino (1603–1663) alla luce dei nuovi documenti (Osimo, Ancona [1964]), with extensive refs. Id. and G. Galleazi (eds.), S. Giuseppe da Copertino tra storia ed attualità (Ricerche Francescane, Padua, 1984). A. *Butler, Lives of the Saints, ed. H. Thurston, SJ, and D. Attwater, 3 (1956), pp. 587–91.

Joseph the Hymnographer, St (*c.*810–86), one of the most voluminous of the Greek hymn-writers. Around 830 he left his native Sicily when it was invaded by the Arabs for the monastic life at Thessalonica. Some time later he went on to *Constantinople, which he left for *Rome during the *Iconoclastic persecution (841). Captured by pirates, he was for several years a slave in Crete, but eventually escaped and *c.*850 established a monastery at Constantinople. He suffered a further exile in the Chersonese for his defence of the icons and yet another in the company of Photius. He is reputed to have composed 1,000 canons, over 200 being contained in the Menaion under the acrostic of his name. A large part of the Octoechos* has also been attributed to him, but this is more probably the work of Joseph of Thessalonica (also 'Joseph of the Studium'), the brother of *Theodore Studites. Feast day in the E. Church, 3 Apr.

Text of canons in J. P. Migne, PG 105. 983–1426, with introds. and Gk. Life by John the Deacon, cols. 925–82; cf. also Anal. Boll. 65 (1947), pp. 134–8. AASS, Apr. 1 (1675), pp. 266–76, and Bollettino della Badia greca di Grottaferrata, 11 (1948), pp. 87–98, 177–92. C. van de Vorst, 'Note sur S. Joseph l'Hymnographe', Anal. Boll. 38 (1920), pp. 148–54. M. E. Colonna, 'Biografie di Giuseppe Innografo', Università di Napoli, Annali della Facoltà di Lettere e Filosofia, 3 (for 1953; 1954), pp. 105–12. E. I. Tomadakes, Ἰωσὴφ ὁ Ὑμνογράφος. Βίος καὶ ἔργον (1971, with summary in Ital.). D. Stiernon, AA, in Dict. Sp. 8 (1974), cols. 1349–54, s.v. 'Joseph (10)'.

Joseph of Volokolamsk, St (1439/40–1515), Russian saint and monastic founder. After some years of monastic life he instituted a strict reform and founded the celebrated monastery of Volokolamsk, not far from Moscow. Unlike *Nil Sorsky, he welcomed gifts of money and land, and created a large community with a rigorous life of obedience, work and lengthy liturgical services. He aimed at educating 'learned monks' for high office in the Church, and his followers collaborated in the 16th-cent. expansion of the Muscovite state, founding urban monasteries and making possible the later subservience of monks to government. His activist, rigorous teaching won the day for a time against the contemplative ideal of Sorsky.

Eng. tr. of his monastic rule by D. M. Goldfrank (Cistercian Studies Series, 36; 1983). T. Špidlík, SJ, Joseph de Volokolamsk: Un Chapitre de la Spiritualité Russe (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 146; 1956). M. Szeftel, 'Joseph Volotsky's Political Ideas in a New Historical Perspective', Jahrbucher für Geschichte Osteuropas, NF 13 (1965), pp. 19–29. H.-D. Döpmann, Die Einfluss der Kirche und moskowitische Staatsidee: Staats- und Gesellschaftsdenken bei Josif Volockij, Nil Sorskij und Vassian Patrikeev (1967). T. Špidlík, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 8 (1974), cols. 1408–11, s.v. 'Joseph (30)'.

Josephinism. The principles which actuated the ecclesiastical reforms of Joseph II, Holy Roman Emperor from 1765 to 1790. They included religious toleration, the right of the State to regulate ecclesiastical affairs and to reform ecclesiastical abuses, irrespective of Rome, and the restriction of the rights and powers of the Pope within spiritual limits, as laid down by *Febronius. They issued in the Toleration Edict of 1781, which granted all religious bodies the right to practise their beliefs unhindered, the suppression of certain religious orders, the transference of monasteries from the jurisdiction of the Pope to that of the diocesan bishops, and the requirement of civil consent for the publication of any Papal bull, brief, or other document. A similar policy was introduced into Tuscany, under the direction of his brother Leopold, the Grand Duke, who was assisted by Scipione de' *Ricci, Bp. of Pistoia. Josephinism completely collapsed with the Emperor's death.

Docs. in F. Maass, Der Josephinismus (Fontes rerum Austriacarum, Abt. 2, 71–5; 1951–61). There is an immense lit. Modern works incl. F. Valjavec, Der Josephinismus: Zur geistigen Entwicklung Österreichs im achtzehnten und neunzehnten Jahrhundert (2nd edn., Munich, 1945); E. Winter, Der Josefinismus: Die Geschichte des österreichischen Reformkatholizismus, 1740–1848 (1962); F. Maass, Der Frühjosephinismus (Vienna, etc., 1969). Studies in Eng. incl. S. K. Padover, The Revolutionary Emperor Joseph II (1934; 2nd edn., 1967), and Sr. Mary C. Goodwin, The Papal Conflict with Josephinism (New York, 1938). G. Mollat in DTC 8 (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 1543–7; F. Maass in L.Th.K. (2nd edn.), 5 (1960), cols. 1137–9; id. in NCE 7 (1967), pp. 1118 f., all with bibl. See also bibl. to FEBRONIANISM.

Josephus, Flavius (*c.*37–c. 100), Jewish historian. He was a native of Palestine of priestly descent who received a thorough education based on study of the Jewish Law. Having lived for three years in the desert as the disciple of the hermit Bannos, he became a *Pharisee. In 64 he went to Rome to plead for the release of some of his fellow-Jews, and after enlisting the sympathies of the Emp. *Nero's wife, Poppea, returned to Palestine. In 66 he took a leading part in the Jewish war. In 67 he was besieged in Jotopata, but escaped death and was taken prisoner by Vespasian, whose favour he won by prophesying that he would become emperor. On the fulfilment of the prophecy in 69 Josephus was set at liberty and took the name of 'Flavius'. During the siege of *Jerusalem (70) he acted as interpreter to Titus, with whom he returned to Rome, as his surrender had earned him the hostility of the Jews. In Rome he was highly honoured by Vespasian as well as by his successors, Titus and *Domitian, and received the Roman citizenship and a pension which enabled him to devote himself entirely to literary work. In 77–8 he published his 'Jewish War' (Περὶ τοῦ Ἰουδαϊκοῦ πολέμου), probably written originally in Aramaic. It opens with a historical summary of the events from the time of *Antiochus Epiphanes to the outbreak of the war. The latter part is largely an eye-witness account, though supplemented by borrowings from other authors. Though the introduction promises an impartial treatment of the subject, the work is written from the standpoint of a Jew trying to gain the sympathy of the Roman public and therefore omits or minimizes all that might offend Roman susceptibilities, such as the activities of the *Zealots and the importance of the Messianic hope. He brought out *c.*94 his second great work, the 'Antiquities of the Jews' (Ἰουδαϊκὴ Ἀρχαιολογία), the 20 books of which trace the history of the Jews from the creation of the world to the beginning of the Jewish war. Down to *c.*400 BC Josephus mainly reproduces the Bible narratives; later he uses many other sources, among them Dionysius of Halicarnassus and Nicolaus of Damascus, as well as apocryphal books. The famous reference to Christ in 18. 3. 3, calling Him 'a wise man, if indeed one should call him a man', is in its present form not authentic. The most generally accepted opinion is that Josephus mentioned the Lord, as he refers to Him later on in a passage on St James, but that the original 'Testimonium Flavianum' was recast by a Christian writer at an early date, certainly before the time of *Eusebius, who already knew it in its present form (HE 1. 11. 7 f.). There are also two further works extant, an autobiography and 'Contra Apionem', in the latter of which he presents a skilfully planned, well written, and clever apology for Judaism.

The works of Josephus were highly appreciated by the Fathers, e.g. *Jerome, whom they furnished with a wealth of material for their apologetics.

Editio princeps of the Gk. text of his works, with Lat. tr. [ed. A. P. Arlenius], Basle, 1544. Best crit. edn. is that of B. Niese (6 vols. and index, Berlin, 1887–95); also ed. S. A. Naber (Teub., 6 vols., 1888–96). Edn. based on Niese and Naber, with modern Eng. tr., by H. St J. Thackeray and others (Loeb, 9 vols., 1926–65). Older Eng. tr. by W. *Whiston (2 vols., London, 1737) frequently repr.; rev. by A. R. Shilleto, with topographical notes by C. W. Wilson (Bohn's Standard Library, 5 vols., 1889–90). Eng. tr. of Jewish War by G. A. Williamson (Penguin Classics, 1959). N. Bentwich, Josephus (Philadelphia, 1914). R. Laqueur, Der jüdische Historiker Flavius Josephus (1920). H. St J. Thackeray, Josephus, the Man and the Historian (Hilda Stich Stoock Lectures; New York, 1929). R. J. H. Shutt, Studies in Josephus (1961). G. A. Williamson, The World of Josephus (1964). T. Rajak, Josephus: The Historian and his Society (1983). S. Zeitlin, Josephus on Jesus (Philadelphia, 1931). A. *Schlatter, Die Theologie des Judentums nach dem Bericht des Josephus (Beiträge zur Förderung christlicher Theologie, 2. Reihe, 26; 1932). E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 1 (Edinburgh, 1973), pp. 43–63 and 428–41, with refs. to earlier discussions of the 'Testimonium Flavianum'. Aufstieg und Niedergang der römischen Welt, 2. 21, ed. W. Haase (pt. 2; 1984), pp. 763–1217. L. H. Feldman and G. Hata (eds.), Josephus, Judaism, and Christianity (Leiden, 1987). K. H. Rengstorf (ed.), A Complete Concordance to Flavius Josephus (4 vols. + Suppl., Leiden, 1968–83). L. H. Feldman, Josephus and Modern Scholarship (1937–1980) (Berlin and New York, 1984); id., Josephus: A Supplementary Bibliography (New York and London, 1986). H. St J. Thackeray in HDB, Extra Vol. (1904), pp. 461–73; L. H. Feldman in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 3 (1992), pp. 981–98, s.v.

Joshua, Book of. The first of the 'historical books' in the OT and, acc. to the Hebrew division, the first of the 'Former Prophets'. It traces the history of the Israelites from the death of *Moses to the death of his successor, Joshua, and gives an account of the entry into and conquest of Palestine, its partition among the twelve tribes, and Joshua's last speeches. Among the better-known incidents in the Book are the hiding of the spies in *Jericho by Rahab the harlot (2), the miraculous crossing of the *Jordan commemorated by the twelve stones representing the twelve tribes of Israel (3 f.), the Fall of Jericho (6), and the standing still of the sun on Gibeon (10). Chs. 12–21 record in detail the divison of Palestine among the twelve tribes.

Though some of the sources of Joshua may date from the 9th cent. BC or even earlier, the Book prob. did not reach its present form before the 6th cent. or later. Many scholars have held that its compilers made use of the same set of literary sources which have been recognized in the *Pentateuch, and in consequence have classed Joshua with the five Books of the Law in what is termed the '*Hexateuch'. Other critics reckon Joshua as the second Book in the series Deuteronomy–2 Kings known as the '*Deuteronomistic History'. The Book affords an interesting example of the way in which the compilers' religious beliefs have influenced the historical record, e.g. in the description of the speedy and complete conquest of Canaan in the post-Exodus period which is at variance with the account at the beginning of the Book of *Judges.

Comm. by M. *Noth (HAT, Reihe 1, Bd. 7, 1938; 2nd edn., 1953), H. W. Hertzberg (Das Alte Testament Deutsch, 9, on Jos., Jgs. and Ruth, 1953; 2nd edn., 1959, pp. 7–140), J. Gray (New Cent. Bib. on Jos., Jgs., and Ruth, 1967, pp. 1–200; 2nd edn., 1986, pp. 1–183), J. A. Soggin (Neuchâtel, 1970; Eng. tr., 1972), J. M. Miller and G. M. Tucker (Cam. Bib., NEB, 1974), R. G. Boling (Anchor Bible, 1982), and T. C. Butler (Word Biblical Comm., 7; Waco, Tex. [1983]). J. Garstang, Joshua-Judges (1931), pp. 3–260. M. Weippert, Die Landnahme der israelitischen Stämme (Forschungen zur Religion und Literatur des Alten und Neuen Testaments, 92; 1967; Eng. tr., The Settlement of the Israelite Tribes in Palestine, Studies in Biblical Theology, 2nd ser. 21; 1971). N. K. Gottwald, The Tribes of Yahweh: A Sociology of the Religion of Liberated Israel, 1250–1050 B.C.E. (Maryknoll, NY, 1979; London, 1980), passim. Soggin, pp. 187–97, with further bibl. R. G. Boling in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 3 (1992), pp. 1002–15, s.v.

Jovian (*c.*332–64), Roman Emperor from June 363 to Feb. 364. He was born at Singidunum in Moesia. On the Emp. *Julian's fatal expedition against the Persians he was captain of his bodyguard; and when, after Julian's death (26 June 363), Sallust, the Prefect of the East, had declined to receive the purple at the hands of the army, Jovian was chosen. He was forced to conclude a humiliating peace with Sapor II, King of the Persians, abandoning Nisibis and the other territories conquered under *Diocletian in 298, and the Christian kingdom of *Armenia. In the theological disputes he supported orthodoxy and on his way back to the W. he received St *Athanasius, who presented a Confession of Faith at *Edessa and prob. accompanied the Emperor to *Antioch. Before reaching *Constantinople, Jovian died suddenly one night (17 Feb. 364) at Dadastana, apparently through overeating or suffocation. His support of orthodoxy made him for Catholics a welcome successor to Julian; and in *Syriac literature he even became the subject of a Christian romance.

The chief source is Ammianus Marcellinus, 25. 5–10. Further information will be found in the Church historians, *Socrates (HE 3. 22–6), *Sozomen (HE 6. 3–6), and *Theodoret (HE 4. 1–4). J. *Wordsworth in DCB 3 (1882), pp. 461–5; O. Seeck in PW 9 (pt. 2; 1916), cols. 2006–11; s.v. 'Jovianus'.

Jovinian (d. *c.*405), an unorthodox monk, condemned by synods at Rome (under *Siricius) and at Milan (under St *Ambrose in 393). He denied that virginity as such was a higher state than marriage, and that abstinence as such was better than thankful eating. He also attacked the tendency to associate differences of reward in heaven with different earthly states (virgins, widows, wives; monks, priests, laymen), and shared the disbelief of *Helvidius in the perpetual virginity of *Mary. *Jerome (Adversus Jovinianum, 1–2, AD 393) and *Augustine (in De bono conjugali and De sancta virginitate, AD 401) both wrote against him.

Jovinian's own writings are lost. W. Haller, Jovinianus (TU 17, no. 2; 1897; a comprehensive study). F. Valli, Gioviniano: Esame delle fonti e dei frammenti (Pubblicazioni dell'Università di Urbino. Serie di Lettere e Filosofia, 2; 1953). J. N. D. Kelly, Jerome (1975), pp. 180–7. A. Rayez, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 8 (1974), cols. 1469 f., s.v.

Jowett, Benjamin (1817–93), Master of Balliol College, Oxford. Educated at St Paul's School London, in 1836 Jowett entered Balliol, where he was elected a Fellow while still an undergraduate. He held a succession of college offices, finally becoming Master (1870). He was ordained priest in 1845. In 1855 he succeeded T. *Gaisford as Regius Professor of Greek.

In strong contrast with his early colleague, W. G. *Ward, Jowett distrusted logic and, under the influence of Greek studies and German philosophy (esp. G. W. F. *Hegel), became a keen theological liberal. His theological views were first elaborated in his Commentaries on the Epp. of St Paul (Thess., Gal., and Rom.; 2 vols., 1855). The work contained a personal and subjective exposition of the Atonement which he redrafted in a 2nd edition (1859) to meet objections, but without modifying it. His essay on 'The Interpretation of Scripture' in Essays and Reviews (1860, q.v.) was one of the most debated items in the book; and henceforth Jowett's orthodoxy remained under grave suspicion and he ceased to write on theological subjects. His most important work was his translation of *Plato (4 vols., 1871; 3rd edn., 5 vols., 1892); this, together with his translation of *Aristotle's Politics (2 vols., 1885), made these works widely available to non-classical students. To the end of his life he continued to take an active part in academic affairs, instituting reforms in the interests of poorer students, and he secured for his college a unique place in the University.

E. Abbott and L. Campbell, The Life and Letters of Benjamin Jowett (2 vols., 1897); L. A. Tollemache, Benjamin Jowett (1895); G. Faber, Jowett (1957; 2nd edn., 1958). A Selection of Jowett's Letters to Florence *Nightingale, 1860–93, was ed. [E.] V. Quinn and J. [M.] Prest, Dear Miss Nightingale (Oxford, 1987). P. [B.] Hinchliff, Benjamin Jowett and the Christian Religion (ibid., 1987); id., God and History: Aspects of British Theology 1875–1914 (ibid., 1992), pp. 50–72. E. Abbott in DNB, Suppl. 3 (1901), pp. 49–56.

Joyful Mysteries, the five. The first chaplet of the *rosary (q.v.), consisting of (1) the *Annunciation, (2) the *Visitation, (3) the Nativity of Christ, (4) the *Presentation of Christ in the Temple, and (5) the Finding of the Child Jesus in the Temple.

jube (pron. as two syllables). The rood loft dividing the nave of a church from the choir. The name is said to derive from the words 'Jube, domine, benedicere' ('Pray, sir, a blessing'), pronounced by the *deacon before the reading of the Gospel, which took place on the rood loft in medieval times.

Jubilate (Lat., 'O be joyful'). The first word of Ps. 100, to which it thus gives the name. It is provided as an alternative to the *Benedictus at Morning Prayer in the BCP. The rubric requires its use only when the Benedictus occurs elsewhere in the service, though it is apparently permitted on other days. It was first inserted in 1552, probably owing to the dislike of the extreme Reformers for the traditional *canticles (so also Pss. 98 and 67 at Evening Prayer). The ASB provides it as an alternative to the *Venite.

Jubilee, Year of. (1) Acc. to the *Mosaic legislation (Lev. 25), a year occurring once every fifty years, when Jewish slaves regained their freedom and land reverted to its former owners. Just as the *sabbatical year occurred every seven years, the jubilee year occurred after seven sabbatical years. It is questionable how far the law was actually observed in OT times. (2) In the RC Church, a 'year of remission' or '*Holy Year' (q.v.) in which a special *indulgence is granted to Catholics who visit *Rome and fulfil certain conditions.

(1) R. North, SJ, Sociology of the Biblical Jubilee (Analecta Biblica, 4; Rome, 1954). R. de Vaux, OP, Les Institutions de l'Ancien Testament, 1 (1958), pp. 267–70; Eng. tr., 2nd edn., (1965), pp. 175–7. A. van Selms in The Interpreter's Dictionary of the Bible, ed. K. Crim and others, Suppl. vol. (Nashville [1976]), pp. 496–8, s.v.; C. J. H. Wright in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 3 (1992), pp. 1025–30.

Jubilees, Book of. An apocryphal Jewish work, also called 'The Little Genesis'. It purports to have been delivered by God to *Moses on Mt. *Sinai. It reinterprets the contents of Gen. 1–Exod. 12 (or, acc. to some scholars, Gen. 1–Exod. 15: 22 or Exod. 16), which are here arranged in 49 periods, each of 49 years' length, the whole forming a Jubilee of Jubilees (cf. Lev. 25: 8–13). Its purpose appears to be to show that the Law, with its prescriptions about feasts, the Sabbath, offerings, abstinence from blood and fornication (which for the writer includes intermarriage with the Gentiles), dated from patriarchal times. The original Hebrew text survives only in fragments found at *Qumran; until their discovery the work was known only from an Ethiopic translation of the whole and incomplete versions in Latin and Syriac. The fact that the surviving Hebrew fragments are from at least 12 different MSS and that they were found in three different caves indicates that the Book enjoyed considerable popularity among the Qumran community; some scholars indeed have argued that it is the work of a member of that sect. The Book, which certainly appears to stem from priestly circles, is generally dated to the 2nd cent. BC.

Ethiopic text first pub. by A. *Dillmann (Kiel, 1859); Lat. frags. ed. A. M. Ceriani, Monumenta Sacra et Profana, 1, part 1 (Milan, 1861), pp. 15–54; Syriac frag., 2 (ibid., 1863), pp. ix f. Crit. edn. of Ethiopic text by J. C. VanderKam (CSCO 510, Scriptores Aethiopici, 87, with Eng. tr., CSCO 511, Scriptores Aethiopici, 88; 1989). Further Syriac frags. ed., with comm., by E. Tisserant, in R. Bibl. 30 (1921), pp. 55–86 and 206–32. Eng. trs., with introd., by R. H. *Charles in id. (ed.), The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, 2 (Oxford, 1913), pp. 1–82; rev. by C. Rabin in H. F. D. Sparks (ed.), The Apocryphal Old Testament (1984), pp. 1–139, and by O. S. Wintermute in J. H. Charlesworth (ed.), The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha, 2 (1985), pp. 35–142. Ger. and Fr. trs., with comm., by K. Berger (Jüdische Schriften aus hellenistisch-römischer Zeit, Band 2, Lieferung 3; 1981) and by A. Caquot in A. Dupont-Sommer and M. Philonenko (eds.), La Bible: Écrits intertestamentaires [1987], pp. 627–810. M. Testuz, Les Idées religieuses du Livre des Jubilés (1960), with bibl.; G. L. Davenport, The Eschatology of the Book of Jubilees (Studia Post-Biblica, 20; Leiden, 1971); J. C. VanderKam, Textual and Historical Studies in the Book of Jubilees (Harvard Semitic Monographs, 14; Missoula, Mont., 1977); E. Schwarz, Identität durch Abgrenzung: Abgrenzungsprozesse in Israel im 2. vorchristlichen Jahrhundert und ihre traditionsgeschichtlichen Voraussetzungen. Zugleich ein Beitrag zur Erforschung des Jubiläenbuches (Europäische Hochschulschriften, Reihe 23, Band 162; Frankfurt, 1982); J. C. Endres, SJ, Biblical Interpretation in the Book of Jubilees (Catholic Biblical Quarterly Monograph Series, 18; Washington, DC, 1987). E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 3 (pt. 1; Edinburgh, 1986), pp. 308–18. J. C. VanderKam in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 3 (1992), pp. 1030–2, s.v.

Judaea. The term used in Christ's time to describe the territory corresponding broadly to that covered by the kingdom of *Judah before the *Babylonian captivity. It designated the most southern of the three districts, Galilee, Samaria, and Judaea, into which Palestine, west of the *Jordan, was divided; but in a wider sense it could be used to include the whole of Palestine (e.g. Lk. 23: 5, RV; 'Jewry' AV).

Judah. The tribe of Judah was the most powerful of the twelve tribes of *Israel. Possibly its earliest history is represented in the story of Judah, the fourth son of *Jacob (Gen. 29: 35 and ch. 38). Already in the reigns of *David and *Solomon (*c.*1000 BC) it was the predominant tribe. After Solomon's death (*c.*930 BC), Judah, with Benjamin, formed a separate kingdom (known as the kingdom of Judah) which outlasted that of the northern tribes, and in general maintained a purer religious faith. It came to an end with the *Babylonian captivity (*c.*586 BC). In NT times the area was known as *Judaea.

Judaism. The faith and practice of the Jewish people. The word, Greek in origin (Ἰουδαϊσμός), and familiar from the NT (Gal. 1: 13 f., AV: 'the Jews' religion'), first occurs in 2 Macc. (2: 21, 8: 1, and 14: 38). It is ultimately derived from the name of *Judah, the biblical Southern Kingdom which came to an end with the *Babylonian captivity. In modern scholarship the term is used for the faith and practice of the Jews from that time to the present day. In a wider sense, however, Judaism may be said to go back to the *Patriarchs many centuries earlier (see also ISRAEL).

An accurate assessment of the number of Jews in the world today is impossible to achieve, both for want of reliable statistics and because of serious problems of definition. According to widely accepted estimates (which include many people having little if any attachment to traditional beliefs and practices), there are about 13 million Jews, half of whom live in N. and S. America and about a quarter each in Europe and Asia (mainly in Israel). Israel, established in 1948 as a Jewish state (although without any official State religion) is the only country in the world where Jews constitute more than a small element in the population (here well over 80 per cent).

The history of Judaism may be divided into three main phases:

(1) Until AD 70 Jewish religious life and thought were focused on the *Temple in Jerusalem, with its hereditary priesthood and its daily rituals and annual celebrations involving animal and vegetable offerings. By the end of this period various sects had arisen (e.g. the *Sadducees, *Pharisees, and *Essenes), some of them profoundly critical of the Temple and its priestly establishment, and the ever-spreading *diaspora meant that pilgrimage to Jerusalem was beyond the aspirations of many Jews. The local *synagogue became the place for public gatherings for purposes of scriptural study and religious teaching, and possibly also (particularly in the diaspora) for worship. The Judaism of this period betrays some influence of the Persian and Hellenistic environment. It is the period in which the later books of the Hebrew Bible were written and the whole was edited. It was also translated into Greek (see SEPTUAGINT). The large surviving literature also includes the *Pseudepigrapha, the *Dead Sea Scrolls, and the writings of *Philo.

(2) After the destruction of the Temple by the Romans in AD 70, we lose sight of the sects, and the sacrificial form of worship ceased. Gradually, religious—and to a large extent secular—authority was concentrated in the hands of *rabbis, a new style of leadership with distinct but interrelated centres in the Holy Land and Babylonia. Rabbinic Judaism gradually spread to most parts of the Jewish world, and it remained the most characteristic form of Judaism until the 19th cent. Its classical written text is the *Talmud, but the rabbinic literature includes also the *Midrashim, various medieval biblical commentaries (e.g. the writings of *Rashi), and works of *Halachah (of which the last and most authoritative was the Shulhan Arukh or 'Spread Table' of Joseph Caro, first pub. in 1565). Rabbinic Judaism, as a form of Jewish 'orthodoxy', was largely shaped by its reaction to successive challenges from (among others) *Gnosticism, early Christianity, *Karaism, mystical theosophy or *Kabbala, and *Aristotelian rationalism (of which the outstanding Jewish exponent was *Maimonides).

(3) From the beginning of the *Enlightenment in 17th-cent. Europe, with the accompanying social and political changes, rabbinic orthodoxy found it increasingly difficult to resist challenges emanating from the contemporary situation, whether these took the form of religious enthusiasm (as in the case of the Messianic movement led by Shabbetai Zvi, which was halted only by his conversion to *Islam in 1667) or of rationalism and critical scholarship. The medieval political structures which had supported the rabbis and upheld their power were weakened, and very gradually the way was opened to religious pluralism, which has now again become characteristic of Judaism, at least in W. Europe and America. The first dramatic breakthrough was the success of Hasidism, a revivalist movement which swept through E. European Jewry in the period 1730–1830, subverting the authority of the rabbis in every region except Lithuania. In W. Europe various modernist movements emerged in the course of the 19th cent., laying the foundations for the best-known religious denominations in W. Judaism today: Liberalism, Reform, Conservatism, and Orthodoxy (sometimes termed 'neo-Orthodoxy' or 'moderate Orthodoxy' to distinguish it from the various forms of traditional Judaism which are still strong in Israel and elsewhere). All these modernist movements share a strong attachment to biblical and rabbinic tradition (and in the case of Conservatism and Orthodoxy a particular loyalty to rabbinic Halachah), but in many ways they have made crucial compromises with the modern world, notably in the areas of rabbinic jurisdiction, liturgical reform, and general lifestyle.

Contemporary Judaism is strongly marked by the events of the past 100 years or so, and most notably the rise of political antisemitism in Europe, the Russian pogroms and subsequent mass emigration of Jews from the Russian Empire, the emergence of various forms of Jewish nationalism, the racial persecution of the Jews in Nazi Germany, the *Holocaust, the creation of the State of Israel in 1948, and the protracted conflict between Israel and the countries of the Arab League.

Theology is less central to Judaism than to Christianity, but there is a broad acceptance (seriously challenged only in recent times) of the idea of a single, unique, incorporeal God, who created the world, acts in it, and will eventually redeem it, and who revealed His will in the *Torah and elsewhere. The form and authority of revelation constitute a major problem in contemporary Judaism, broadly dividing the 'progressive' trends (Liberalism, Reform, Conservatism) from Orthodoxy and the traditionalist camp. A non-personal conception of God was advanced by M. M. Kaplan (1881–1983), the founder of the American movement known as Reconstructionism. Other outstanding theologians in the modern period include L. Baeck (1873–1956), M. *Buber, F. Rosenzweig (1886–1929), I. Maybaum (1897–1976), and A. J. Heschel (1907–72).

Jewish worship traditionally consists of readings from the Torah, Prophets, Psalms, hymns, and set prayers. Of the many liturgical rites current in the Middle Ages, two are dominant today: the Sephardic (or Spanish and Portuguese) and Ashkenazic (or German and Polish). Movements for liturgical reform originating in the 19th cent. have resulted (particularly in the 'progressive' movements) in considerable revision, and in the introduction of vernacular languages into the synagogue.

The influence of Judaism upon Christianity has been considerable, particularly in the early Church. The Jewish tradition of Hebrew language study and biblical commentary has been exploited freely by Christian scholars of all ages. Jewish religious thinkers (such as Philo, *Avicebron, Maimonides, B. *Spinoza, and Buber) have also influenced the Christian intellectual tradition.

See also JEWS, CHRISTIAN ATTITUDES TO.

General surveys incl. L. Baeck, Das Wesen des Judentums (1905; Eng. tr., The Essence of Judaism, 1936); L. Finkelstein (ed.), The Jews: Their History, Culture and Religion (2 vols., New York [1949]; 3rd edn., ibid., 1960; London, 1961); I. Epstein, Judaism: A Historical Presentation (Harmondsworth, 1959); L. Jacobs, Principles of the Jewish Faith (1964); id., A Jewish Theology (1973); P. R. Mendes-Flohr and J. Reinharz (eds.), The Jew in the Modern World: A Documentary History (New York and Oxford, 1980); N. [R. M.] de Lange, Atlas of the Jewish World (Oxford [1984]); id., Judaism (ibid., 1986).

Works on Jewish history and particular aspects of Judaism incl. C. Roth, A Short History of the Jewish People 1600 B.C.–A.D. 1935 (1936; enlarged edn., 1969), and other works of this author; S. W. Baron, A Social and Religious History of the Jews (3 vols., New York, 1937; 2nd edn., on a larger scale, 1952 ff. [18 vols., covering the period to 1650, by 1983]); The Cambridge History of Judaism, ed. W. D. Davies and L. Finkelstein (1984 ff.). G. F. Moore, Judaism in the First Centuries of the Christian Era: The Age of the Tannaim (3 vols., Cambridge, Mass., 1927–30). E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ (rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 3 vols. in 4 parts, Edinburgh, 1973–87). S. Safrai and M. Stern (eds.), The Jewish People in the First Century (Compendia Rerum Iudaicarum ad Novum Testamentum, 1; 2 vols., Assen, 1974–6). E. P. Sanders, Judaism: Practice and Belief 63 BCE–66 CE (1992). M. Hadas-Lebel, Jérusalem contre Rome [1990]. F. Rosenzweig, Der Stern der Erlösung (Frankfurt, 1921; 2nd edn., 1930; Eng. tr., The Star of Redemption, 1971). J. Guttmann, Die Philosophie des Judentums (Munich, 1933; rev. Eng. tr. [1964]). C. G. Montefiore and H. Loewe (eds.), A Rabbinic Anthology (1938; repr., with introd. by R. Loewe, New York, 1974). S. T. Katz (ed.), Jewish Philosophers (Jerusalem and New York [1975]). M. M. Kaplan, The Religion of Ethical Nationhood: Judaism's Contribution to World Peace (New York [1970]). G. G. Scholem, Major Trends in Jewish Mysticism (Hilda Stich Stroock Lectures, 1938; Jerusalem, 1941; 2nd edn., New York, 1946; 3rd edn., London, 1955); id., Sabbatai Sevi: The Mystical Messiah 1626–1676 (1973; rev. Eng. tr. of work pub. in Hebrew at Tel Aviv in 1957). A. Z. Idelsohn, Jewish Liturgy and its Development (New York [1932]); S. C. Reif, Judaism and Hebrew Prayer: New perspectives on Jewish liturgical history (Cambridge, 1993). Representative forms of worship incl. the Authorized Daily Service Book of the United Hebrew Congregations of the British Empire, ed. S. Singer (1890; 3rd edn., rev. by E. Cashdan, ed. I. Jacobovits, 1990), also ed., with comm. by J. H. Hertz (2 vols., 1946), and Forms of Prayer for Jewish Worship, ed. by the Assembly of Rabbis of the Reform Synagogues of Great Britain, 7th edn., vol. 1: Daily, Sabbath, and Occasional Prayers (1977).

Periodical Jewish publications incl. Jewish Quarterly Review (Philadelphia, 1888 ff.), Revue des Études juives (Paris, 1880 ff.), Hebrew Union College Annual (Cincinnati, 1924 ff.), Jewish Social Studies (New York, 1939 ff.), and Journal of Jewish Studies (London, 1948–74; Oxford, 1975 ff.); and for bibl., Kirjath Sepher (Jerusalem, 1924 ff.). The chief reference works are The Jewish Encyclopedia, ed. I. Singer (12 vols., New York and London, 1901–6), the Encyclopædia Judaica, ed. J. Klatzkin and others (10 vols., Berlin, 1928–34; incomplete), and C. Roth (ed.) Encyclopaedia Judaica (16 vols., Jerusalem [1972]).

Judaizers. In the early Church a section of Jewish Christians who regarded the OT Levitical laws as still binding on all Christians. They tried to enforce on the faithful such practices as *circumcision and the distinction between clean and unclean meats. Their initial success brought upon them the strong opposition of St *Paul, much of whose writing was concerned with refuting their errors.

Judas Iscariot. The Apostle who betrayed Christ to the Jewish authorities (Mk. 14: 10 f. and 43 f., etc.). The Gospels leave his motive uncertain, as the hint given in Jn. 12: 6 is not supported by the other three. His death is recorded in three places—in Mt. 27: 3–5, in Acts 1: 16–20, and in *Papias—but only the account in Mt. is unequivocal in seeing it as *suicide. He has been regarded with universal abhorrence in the Christian Church, though he was venerated in the *Gnostic sect of the *Cainites. If, as is usually thought, the epithet 'Iscariot' signifies 'man of Kerioth' (a place in S. Palestine), it would seem likely that Judas came from *Judaea, whereas nearly all the other Apostles were Galilaeans.

There is a vast literature; besides comm. on the Gospels and Acts, see A. Spiteri, Die Frage der Judaskommunion neu untersucht (Theologische Studien der Oesterr. Leo-Gesellschaft, 23; 1918); D. Haugg, Judas Iskarioth in den neutestamentlichen Berichten (1930); and H.-J. Klauck, Judas—ein Jünger des Herrn (Quaestiones Disputatae, 111 [1987]), with bibl. P. F. Baum, 'The Mediaeval Legend of Judas Iscariot', Publications of the Modern Language Association of America, NS 24 (1916), pp. 481–632, with extensive refs. W. Klassen in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 3 (1992), pp. 1091–6, s.v.

Judas Maccabaeus (d. 161 BC), leader of the Jews in the revolt against the Seleucid king of Syria. The third son of the priest, Mattathias (d. 166), who nominated him to succeed him as captain of the hosts, he won a series of spectacular victories against the Syrians in the years 166–164. In 164 he purified the *Temple and restored its worship, and in 163, partly because of dynastic troubles of the Syrians, was able to obtain full religious liberty from Antiochus V Eupator (164–162). After defeating the Idumaeans and the Ammonites, he eventually overcame the opposition of the Hellenizing party among the Jews in a battle near Beth-horon in 161. He asserted political independence by entering into negotiations with Rome to aid him against the Seleucid kings of Syria. Although his mission was diplomatically successful, before the results were known he was defeated by the Syrian general, Bacchides, and killed in a battle near Eleasa. His career is recounted in the Books of *Maccabees (q.v.).

B. Bar-Kochva, Judas Maccabaeus: The Jewish Struggle against the Seleucids (Cambridge, 1989). [O.] Wolff in PW 9 (pt. 2; 1916), cols. 2461–4, s.v. 'Judas Makkabaios'. See also works cited under MACCABEES (family) and MACCABEES, BOOKS OF.

Jude, St, *Apostle. In the lists of the Apostles at Lk. 6: 16 and Acts 1: 13 he is referred to as 'Judas of James' and in Jn. 14: 22 as 'Judas not Iscariot'. (Many identify him with *Thaddaeus or Lebbaeus who is mentioned in the lists of Apostles at Mt. 10: 3 and Mk. 3: 18.) The description 'of James' in Lk. 6: 16 and Acts 1: 13 is most naturally interpreted as 'son of James' (RV), but the Apostle has generally been identified, at least in the W., with Jude the 'brother of *James' (Jude 1), one of the '*brethren of the Lord', and the author of the Ep. of Jude (q.v.). The apocryphal 'Passion of *Simon and Jude' describes the preaching and martyrdom of the two Apostles in Persia, and in the W. Church the two saints are commemorated together. In modern times St Jude has become a popular saint in the RC Church and is much invoked in circumstances of special difficulty. Feast day in E., 19 June; in W., with St Simon, 28 Oct.

Jude's descendants are mentioned by *Eusebius, HE 3. 19 f. and 3. 32, citing *Hegesippus. O. *Cullmann, 'Le Douzième Apôtre', RHPR 42 (1962), pp. 133–40. R. [J.] Bauckham, Jude and the Relatives of Jesus in the Early Church (Edinburgh, 1990), pp. 1–133 passim. On the 'Passion of St Simon and St Jude' see R. A. *Lipsius, Die apokryphen Apostelgeschichten und Apostellegenden, 2 (pt. 2; 1884), pp. 142–200. J. van Hecke, SJ, in AASS, Oct. 12 (1867), pp. 437–49. R. Sinker in DCA 1 (1875), pp. 891–3, s.v. 'Jude the Apostle, St., Legend and Festival of'. See also introd. to comm. on JUDE, EPISTLE OF ST, cited s.v., and bibl. to BRETHREN OF THE LORD.

Jude, Epistle of St. One of the '*Catholic Epistles' of the NT. It purports to be written by 'Jude . . . brother of James', who is identified by *Origen, St *Jerome, and others as the *Apostle, 'Judas of James', of Lk. 6: 16 and Acts 1: 13. The aim of the Epistle was to combat the spread of dangerous doctrines through false teachers 'having not the Spirit', whose immoral life it denounces. It was recognized as canonical by the *Muratorian Canon, *Clement of Alexandria, and *Tertullian, though *Eusebius puts it among the 'Antilegomena'. The doubts were due chiefly to vv. 9 and 14; the former seems to reproduce a passage from the apocryphal 'Assumption of *Moses', while the latter definitely quotes *Enoch (1 Enoch 1.9). The date is uncertain, perhaps before the destruction of *Jerusalem, which is not mentioned among the calamities enumerated in vv. 5–7. The striking similarities between the Ep. of Jude and 2 Peter are most probably due to the use made of it by the latter.

Modern comm. by C. *Bigg (ICC, with 1–2 Pet., 1901, pp. 305–44), J. B. Mayor (London, 1907), J. N. D. Kelly (Black's NT Comm. on 1 and 2 Pet. and Jude, 1969, pp. 223–94), R. J. Bauckham (Word Biblical Comm. 50, with 1 Pet., Waco, Tex. [1983], pp. 1–127), H. Paulsen (KEK 12/2, with 2 Pet., 1992, pp. 41–87), and J. H. Neyrey (Anchor Bible, 37 C on Jud. and 2 Pet., 1993, pp. 21–105). A. Albin, Judasbrevet: Traditionen, Texten, Tolkningen (Stockholm, 1962), with extensive bibl. R. [J.] Bauckham, Jude and the Relatives of Jesus in the Early Church (Edinburgh, 1990), pp. 134–314. J. D. Charles, Literary Strategy in the Epistle of Jude (Scranton, Pa., London, and Toronto [1993]). R. J. Bauckham in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 3 (1992), pp. 1098–103, s.v.

Judgement, General (Particular). See GENERAL (PARTICULAR) JUDGEMENT.

Judges, Book of. The Book traces the history of the Israelites from Joshua's death to the beginning of the monarchy, describing incidents connected with the conquest of Palestine, and woven round the names of several leaders ('judges') who ruled the country before the time of Saul. It professes at the outset (1: 1) to be a sequel to the Book of Joshua (q.v.), but in fact covers the same period. Its account of the entry of the Israelites into *Canaan, which depicts the settlement as gradual and spread over many years, is prob. more accurate than that in Joshua, which claims for Israel the credit of a swift and thorough victory.

After an introductory section describing the attempts of the Israelites to secure a footing at *Hebron, Debir, and *Bethel (1: 2–2: 5), the exploits of the judges are described in turn. Of these the most notable are Ehud (3: 12–30); Deborah, the prophetess (4, 5); Gideon, also called Jerubbaal (6–8); Abimelech (9); Jephthah (11, 12); and *Samson (13–16). Less prominent figures (sometimes the 'minor judges') are listed in 10: 1–5 and 12: 8–15. The compiler of the Book has supplied a framework which enabled a continuous historical narrative to be constructed out of what were probably really separate and unrelated histories of the individual judges, and has used it to illustrate his philosophy of history (2: 11–19), which saw a regular sequence of sin, punishment, penitence, and deliverance. The concluding chapters of the Book (17–21) contain incidents relating to the period, but outside this framework.

Some scholars maintain that some of the *Pentateuchal sources are identifiable in Judges and consequently have classed it as the last Book in the '*Heptateuch'. But most reckon Judges as the third Book in the series Deuteronomy–2 Kings known as the '*Deuteronomistic History'. In either case the Book throws valuable light on the pre-monarchical period, esp. on the beliefs of the early Israelites and the relation of their faith to the already existing religion in Canaan. There has been much debate about the social organization of Israel in the period portrayed in the Book, notably whether it was a tightly structured confederacy or merely a loose association of tribes.

Comm. by G. F. Moore (ICC, 1895), H. W. Hertzberg (Das Alte Testament Deutsch, 9, on Jos., Jgs., and Ruth, 1953; 2nd edn., 1959, pp. 141–256), J. Gray (New Cent. Bib., on Jos., Jgs., and Ruth, 1967, pp. 1–13 and 202–396; 2nd edn., 1986, pp. 1–38 and 185–364), R. G. Boling (Anchor Bible [1975]), and J. A. Soggin (Eng. tr. by J. S. Bowden, Old Testament Library, 1981; 2nd edn., 1987). J. Garstang, Joshua-Judges (1931), pp. 3–115, 263–343. W. Richter, Traditionsgeschichtliche Untersuchungen zum Richterbuch (Bonner biblische Beiträge, 18; 1963); id., Die Bearbeitungen des 'Retterbuches' in der deuteronomischen Epoche (ibid. 21; 1964). B. G. Webb, The Book of Judges: An Integrated Reading (Journal for the Study of the Old Testament, Suppl. Series, 46 [1987]). A. Malamat, 'The Period of the Judges', in B. Mazar (ed.), The World History of the Jewish People, 3 (Tel Aviv, 1971), pp. 129–63. Brief introd. by A. D. H. Mayes, Judges (Old Testament Guides, Sheffield, 1985). R. G. Boling in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 3 (1992), pp. 1107–17.

Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. A Court of Appeal constituted in 1833 to regularize the extensive jurisdiction of the King in Council. Until the Reformation the final appeal in English ecclesiastical causes was to Rome. Under *Henry VIII, in 1533 the Ecclesiastical Appeals Act 1532 abolished appeals to Rome, and in 1534 the final appeal was transferred by the *Submission of the Clergy Act 1533 to the King in Chancery, although the jurisdiction was actually exercised by a Commission of Delegates, later known as the Court of *Delegates. By the Privy Council Appeals Act 1832 this jurisdiction was transferred to the Privy Council, and then the Judicial Committee Act 1833 constituted a Judicial Committee to hear these and other appeals. It consists of at least three senior serving or retired English or Commonwealth judges, who sit unrobed. Initially it determined appeals from both the Court of the Arches (now the *Arches Court of Canterbury) and the Chancery Court of *York, and gained much notoriety through a series of ritual and doctrinal cases brought before it in the 19th cent., of which the *Gorham case was the most celebrated. Under the *Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction Measure 1963 it ceased to have any jurisdiction in cases of discipline, but it continues to hear faculty appeals not involving doctrine, ritual, or ceremonial. It also hears appeals against schemes proposed under the Cathedrals Measure 1976 and the Pastoral Measure 1983. See also LINCOLN JUDGEMENT.

Judith, Book of. OT Apocryphal Book. The Book relates how Nebuchadnezzar, 'who reigned over the Assyrians in Nineveh' (1: 1), failed to gain the support of certain nations, including the Jews, in his conflict with Arphaxad, King of the Medes, and determined to punish them by his general Holofernes (1: 1–2: 13). At first the Jews decide to resist (2: 14–4: 15). But when their city Bethulia is besieged and deprived of its water supply, they weaken through the persuasions of Ozias (5–7). Judith, a young and beautiful widow of great piety, upbraids Ozias and promises to deliver her people. (The name 'Judith' means 'Jewess', and she appears to personify faithful and resistant Israel.) She makes her way to the camp of Holofernes, who is captivated by her charms (10–12), and, having enticed him into a state of drunkenness, seizes a sword, cuts off his head and carries it back in a bag to Bethulia (13). The head is publicly displayed (14), the Israelites are encouraged to advance, and the Assyrians flee in panic (15). The narrative concludes with Judith's hymn of thanksgiving (16), perhaps the oldest part of the Book.

The whole Book is wildly unhistorical and was prob. never intended to be read as history. Its orig. language was Heb., but it now exists only in Gk. and other versions dependent upon Gk. texts. It prob. dates from the Maccabaean period, though some modern scholars have connected it with the time of Artaxerxes Ochus (359–338), chiefly because a Cappadocian named Holofernes fought in his armies. In the Christian Church it was known to *Clement of Rome, *Clement of Alexandria, and *Origen. In the Roman Breviary, part of the 'Hymn of Judith' (16:

2-3, 15-19) is now recited at *Lauds on Wednesdays in the first week of the monthly cycle.

Crit. edn. of the Gk. text by R. Hanhart (Septuaginta. Vetus Testamentum Graecum auctoritate Academiae Scientiarum Gottingensis editum, 8.4; Göttingen, 1979). Gk. text, with Eng. tr. and comm. by M. S. Enslin, ed. S. Zeitlin (Dropsie University Jewish Apocryphal Literature, 7; Leiden, 1972). Eng. tr., with comm., by A. E. Cowley in R. H. *Charles (ed.), The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, 1 (Oxford, 1913), pp. 242-67, and J. C. Dancy, The Shorter Books of the Apocrypha (Camb. Bib., NEB, 1972), pp. 67-131. E. Haag, Studien zum Buche Judith: Seine theologische Bedeutung und literarische Eigenart (Trierer theologische Studien, 16; 1963). A. M. Dubarle, OP, Judith: Formes et sens des diverses traditions (Analecta Biblica, 24; 2 vols., Rome, 1966). G. Brunner, Der Nabuchodonosor des Buches Judith (1940; 2nd edn., 1959). G. W. E. Nickelsburg, Jewish Literature Between the Bible and the Mishnah (Philadelphia [1981]), pp. 105-9, with bibl. p. 158. E. *Schürer, A History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 3 (pt. 1; 1986), pp. 216-22. Eissfeldt, pp. 585-7. See also bibl. to APOCRYPHA.

Judson, Adoniram (1788-1850), American *Baptist missionary to *Burma. He was born at Malden, Mass., and educated at Brown University (1804-7). In 1808 he entered the Andover Theological Seminary, and in 1810 went to England to confer with the *LMS and to seek for co-operation with the American Board of Foreign Missions in the East. Having been ordained a *Congregational minister in 1812, he sailed for Calcutta. On reaching Serampore, Judson became a Baptist. After permission to continue in the territories of the East India Company was refused, he went to Mauritius, and in 1813 to Rangoon, where he began to translate the Bible into Burmese. During the war with England in 1824-5 he was imprisoned. In 1829 he transferred the seat of the mission to Moulmein, but travelled also among the Karens, a tribe living farther north, where he met with great success. In 1842 he began work on a Burmese dictionary, which was eventually completed in 1849. He died soon afterwards on a voyage undertaken to recover his broken health. His first wife, Ann Hasseltine (d. 1826), and his second wife, Sarah Boardman, gave him notable assistance in his work and are remembered on their own account.

Lives by F. Wayland (London, 2 vols., 1853), L. Bonar (ibid., 1871) and Edward Judson (son; ibid., 1883). Modern sketch by B. R. Pearn (ibid., 1962). W. H. Allison in Dict. Amer. Biog. 10 (1933), pp. 234 f.

Julian (*c.*386-454), *Pelagian theologian, briefly Bp. of Eclanum, in Apulia. Born in Apulia of Christian parents, he married before he was ordained. In 416 he became Bp. of Eclanum. On his refusal to subscribe, in 417, the condemnation of Pelagianism published by *Zosimus, he was deprived of his see and banished. He travelled widely in search of protection or toleration, appealing in turn to *Theodore of Mopsuestia, *Nestorius, Sixtus III, and others; but was repeatedly condemned in various local councils, and repeatedly exiled by the civil powers. He is believed to have died in Sicily. His only uncontested works, besides three letters, are four books 'Ad Turbantium' and eight 'Ad Florum'; considerable portions of these are preserved in St *Augustine's replies. They belong to the period 418-26. In them Julian appears to have possessed keen dialectical ability, as well as philosophical insight. His account of the worth and powers of human nature is coherent, and his indictment of Augustine's doctrine of the total depravity of fallen man (which he held to be a consequence of the *Manichaean errors of Augustine's youth), although couched in rather scurrilous terms, is powerful; but his conception of human self-sufficiency is not easily reconciled with the Christian doctrine of man's sinfulness. During the 20th century various exegetical works have been ascribed to him, as well as a Latin translation of Theodore of Mopsuestia's commentary on the Psalms.

Works, incl. those recently ascribed to him, ed. L. de Coninck (CCSL 88 and 88 A; 1977). A. Bruckner, Julian von Eclanum, sein Leben und seine Lehre (TU 15. 3; 1897); id., Die vier Bücher Julians von Aeclanum an Turbantius (1910). G. Morin, 'Un Ouvrage restitué à Julien d'Éclane', R. Bén. 30 (1913), pp. 1-24; A. Vaccari, SJ, Un commento a Giobbe di Giuliano di Eclano (1915). G. Bouwman, SVD, Des Julian von Aeculanum Kommentar zu den Propheten Osee, Joel und Amos: Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte der Exegese (Analecta Biblica, 9; 1958). H. I. Marrou, 'La Canonisation de Julien d'Éclane', Hist. J. 77 (1958), pp. 434-7, repr. in id., Patristique et Humanisme (Patristica Sorbonensia, 9 [1976]), pp. 373-7. F. Refoulé, OP, 'Julien d'Éclane, théologien et philosophe', Rech. S.R. 52 (1964), pp. 42-84, 233-47. Y.-M. Duval, 'Julien d'Éclane et Rufin d'Aquilée. Du Concile de Rimini à la répression pélagienne. L'intervention impériale en matière religieuse', Revue des Études Augustiniennes, 24 (1978), pp. 243-71. CPL (3rd edn., 1955), pp. 262-4 (nos. 773-7a). V. Grossi in Quasten (cont.), Patrology, 4 (1986), pp. 487-92.

Julian (d. after 518), Bp. of Halicarnassus in Caria. On the accession of the Emp. Justin I (518), he was deposed from his see because of his refusal to accept the Christological teaching of the Council of *Chalcedon (see MONOPHYSITISM) and took refuge in *Alexandria. His friendship with *Severus of Antioch was brought to an end by the *Aphthartodocetic controversy in which Julian upheld the incorruptibility of the body of Christ. Fragments of his works can be recovered from Severus' polemic against him. The Commentary on Job formerly ascribed to him appears to be the work of an unknown *Arian author of the 4th cent., dubbed *Julian the 'Arian'.

The standard work is R. Draguet, Julien d'Halicarnasse et sa controverse avec Sévère d'Antioche sur l'incorruptibilité du corps du Christ (Louvain, 1924; with frags. in Syr. and Gk. retranslated, also full bibl.). Id., 'Pièces de polémique antijulianiste', Muséon, 44 (1931), pp. 255-317 (text and Lat. tr.), and 54 (1941), pp. 59-89 (text and Fr. tr.). Severus' works against Julian ed., with Fr. tr., R. Hespel (CSCO 244-5, 295-6, 301-2, and 318-19; 1964-71). M. Jugie, AA, 'Julien d'Halicarnasse et Sévère d'Antioche', ÉO 24 (1925), pp. 129-62, 257-85. Altaner and Stuiber (1978), p. 507. R. Draguet in DTC 8 (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 1931-40; M. Simonetti in DPAC 2 (1984), cols. 1603 f., s.v. 'Giuliano di Alicarnasso'; Eng. tr. in Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 1 (1992), p. 458, s.v.

Julian, St (*c.*644-90), Abp. of Toledo. Born into a converted Jewish family, he was educated at the episcopal school of Toledo. Though initially attracted to the monastic life, he was ordained as a secular priest and in 680 consecrated Bp. of Toledo. During his episcopate he consolidated the position of Toledo as the most important metropolitan see in Spain; he revived the tradition of holding national councils in the Visigothic capital, presiding over four Councils of Toledo between 681 and 688, and asserted the right of Spanish bishops to independent judgement on matters of theological debate. His insistence on choosing his own terms for the rejection of *Monothelitism after the Third Council of *Constantinople (680–81) earned him a reproof from Pope Benedict II and placed a temporary strain on relations between Spain and Rome. As a bishop he was renowned for his almsgiving, sense of justice, and concern for the liturgy. His extant theological works include the Apologeticum de tribus capitulis, a defence of his Christology (in particular his use of the phrases voluntas genuit voluntatem of the relation of the Father to the Son and 'three substances in Christ' of the body, soul, and divinity of Christ) against the criticism of Pope Benedict; the De comprobatione sextae aetatis, a refutation of the Jewish belief that Christ has not yet come; the Antikeimena, a series of solutions to apparent contradictions in the Bible; and the Prognosticum futuri saeculi, a treatment of the *Last Things which was to prove popular during the Middle Ages. In all these he displays a vigorous and economical style, combined with impressive mastery of patristic sources. His other works include an account of a military expedition undertaken by the Visigothic king Wamba (Historia Wambae regis) and a eulogy of his predecessor, St *Ildefonsus. Feast day, 8 Mar.

Works ed. Card. F. de Lorenzana, Abp. of Toledo, in Sanctorum Patrum Toletanorum quotquot extant Opera, 2 (Madrid, 1785), pp. 1–384; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 96. 453–808. Crit. edns. of major writings apart from the Antikeimena, by J. N. Hillgarth and others (CCSL 115; 1976), with valuable introd.; of Elogium Ildefonsi by J. Madoz, SJ, in Estudios Eclesiásticos, 26 (1952), pp. 468–71; and of an Ars grammatica traditionally ascribed to Julian by M. A. H. Maestre Yenes (Toledo, 1973). Analysis of possible 'Julianic' recension of the *Hispana Collection by G. Martínez Díez, SJ, La Colección Canónica Hispana, 1 (Monumenta Hispaniae Sacra, serie canónica, 1; 1966), pp. 218–38. The main source for his biography is a 7th-cent. Life by his successor, Felix of Toledo, pr. in J. P. Migne, PL 96. 445–52. J. Madoz, SJ, 'San Julián de Toledo', Estudios Eclesiásticos, 26 (1952), pp. 39–69. F. X. Murphy, CSSR, 'Julian of Toledo and the Condemnation of Monothelitism in Spain', Mélanges Joseph de Ghellinck, 1 (Gembloux, 1951), pp. 361–73; id., 'Julian of Toledo and the Fall of the Visigothic Kingdom in Spain', Speculum, 27 (1952), pp. 1–27. J. N. Hillgarth, 'St. Julian of Toledo in the Middle Ages', Journal of the Warburg and Courtauld Institutes, 21 (1958), pp. 7–26 (repr. in id., Visigothic Spain, Byzantium and the Irish (1988), no. 4); id., 'Las fuentes de San Julián de Toledo', Anales Toledanos, 3 (1971), pp. 97–118. J. Campos, 'El "De comprobatione sextae aetatis libri tres" de Julián de Toledo', Helmantica, 18 (1967), pp. 297–340. U. Dominguez del Val, Estudios sobre literatura latina hispano-cristiana, 1: 1955–1971 (Corpus Patristicum Hispanum, 2; Madrid, 1986), pp. 362–9. A. Robles Sierra in Dict. Sp. 8 (1974), cols. 1600–2, s.v., with further bibl.

Julian the Apostate (332–63), 'Flavius Claudius Julianus', Roman Emperor from 361. He was born at *Constantinople, the nephew of *Constantine the Great (Emp. 311–37) and cousin of Constantius II (Emp. 337–61). In 337, after the murder of all his near male relations except his half-brother Gallus, Julian, a very precocious child, was entrusted to the care of a eunuch, Mardonius, and *Eusebius of Nicomedia. Already possessing strong pagan leanings, he was banished with Gallus in 345 to the remote fortress of Macellum in Cappadocia, where efforts were made to bring him under Christian influences. In 351, when Gallus was made Caesar, Julian became free to leave Cappadocia. He went first to Constantinople and then to Nicomedia, where before long he was won to *Neoplatonism, mainly through the influence of the Sophist, Maximus of Ephesus. After Gallus' execution (end of 354), Julian was held captive at Milan; but in 355 he gained permission to visit the schools at Athens, where he was initiated into the Eleusinian mysteries. Among his fellow-students at Athens was St *Gregory of Nazianzus. On 6 Nov. 355 he was presented to the army as Caesar. He soon justified his nomination by his successes in a difficult military situation, in Aug. 357 inflicting a decisive defeat on the Alamanni at Strasbourg. He also carried through some drastic administrative reforms in Gaul. When Constantius, jealous of Julian's popularity, sought to take over the flower of Julian's army for his Persian campaigns, the soldiers resisted and proclaimed Julian Emperor (360). Civil war was prevented only by Constantius' death in Nov. 361.

Now that he was sole Emperor, Julian embarked on an ambitious programme for reform. With regard to the Church, his policy was to degrade Christianity and promote paganism by every means short of open persecution. He sought to re-establish the heathen worship throughout the empire; ordered all instruction in the Imperial schools to be completely paganized; retracted the legal and financial privileges accorded to the Christians by his predecessors; published polemical treatises against Christian doctrine; and even inflicted barbarous sentences on persons guilty only of Christian faith and practice. He also attempted to weaken the Church internally by allowing all exiled Bishops to return to their sees with a view to creating dissensions. At the same time he attempted to reform the morals and elevate the theology of paganism, himself giving (it must be allowed) a conspicuous example of austerity and purpose.

Having spent the winter of 361–2 at Constantinople, in May 362 he set out for *Antioch in preparation for a campaign against the Persians. In Asia Minor and Syria his strict discipline and strong anti-Christian policy made him very unpopular. In March 363 he set out for Mesopotamia. On 26 June 363 he was struck by an arrow and died the same night. The well-known story that he died with the words 'Vicisti Galilaee' ('Thou hast conquered, Galilean!') is a late embellishment of a passage in Theodoret (HE 3. 25).

Julian was an extensive author. His chief writings are (1) a set of eight Orations, including two panegyrics on Constantius, two on true and false cynicism, and theosophical orations on King Helios and on the Mother of the Gods; (2) a set of letters, more than 80 of which have come down under Julian's name (some perhaps spurious); (3) 'Symposium' or 'Caesares', a satire on the vices of past Emperors; (4) 'Misopogon' (the 'Beard Hater'), a satire written at Antioch on the licentiousness of the inhabitants; (5) some epigrams. Unique interest attaches to (6) his 'Adversus Christianos', written during the Persian campaign. Though no MS of this last survives, nearly the whole text can be recovered from *Cyril of Alexandria's refutation of the work.

Collected edns. by E. Spanheim (Leipzig, 1696), F. C. Hertlein (2 vols., Teub., 1875–6), W. C. Wright (with Eng. tr., 3 vols., Loeb, 1913–23), and crit. edn., incorporating six new letters discovered by A. Papadopoulos-Kerameus at Halki in 1884, by J.

Bidez, G. Rochefort, and C. Lacombrade (Collection Guillaume Budé, 2 vols. in 4, 1924–64, with Fr. tr.). His work against the Christians, reconstructed from Cyril of Alexandria (not included in edns. of Hertlein or Bidez, etc.), ed. C. J. Neumann (Scriptorum Graecorum qui Christianam impugnaverunt religionem quae supersunt, fasc. 3; Leipzig, 1880).

The chief ancient authority for his life is Ammianus Marcellinus (Hist. 15. 8–25). Other pagan sources are Libanius, Eunapius, and Claudius Mamertinus. Christian writers (naturally all very hostile) incl., besides the Church Historians and Chroniclers, some poems of St *Ephraem Syrus, two invectives of St Gregory of Nazianzus, and St Cyril of Alexandria's reply already mentioned. Convenient Eng. tr. of a panegyric by Claudius Mamertinus and a homily and hymns against Julian by St John *Chrysostom and Ephraem Syrus respectively, ed., with introd. and bibl., by S. N. C. Lieu (Translated Texts for Historians, 2; Liverpool, 1986; 2nd edn., 1989).

The study of J. Bidez, La Vie de l'empereur Julien (Collection des Études anciennes publiée sous le patronage de l'Association Guillaume Budé, 1930), supersedes all earlier works. Other studies by P. Allard (3 vols., Paris, 1900–3), G. Ricciotti (Milan, 1946; Eng. tr., Milwaukee [1960]), R. Browning (London, 1975), and G. W. Bowersock (ibid., 1978). P. Athanassiadi-Fowden, Julian and Hellenism: An Intellectual Biography (Oxford, 1981). R. Braun and J. Richer (eds.), L'Empereur Julien: De l'histoire à la legende (2 vols., 1978). W. J. Malley, SJ, Hellenism and Christianity: The Conflict between Hellenic and Christian Wisdom in the Contra Galilaeos of Julian the Apostate and the Contra Julianum of St Cyril of Alexandria (Analecta Gregoriana, 210; Rome, 1978). B. de Gaiffier, SJ, '"Sub Iuliano Apostata" dans le Martyrologe Romain', Anal. Boll. 74 (1956), pp. 5–49. There are also full accounts by J. *Wordsworth in DCB 3 (1882), pp. 483–525; A. *Harnack in PRE (3rd edn.), 9 (1900), pp. 609–19; and E. von Borries in PW 10 (pt. 1; 1917), cols. 26–91, all s.v.

Julian the 'Arian' (4th cent.), theologian. Many passages in the *catenae ascribed to 'Julian', and attributed by an older generation of scholars to *Julian, Bp. of Halicarnassus, are now thought to come from the 4th cent. and betray a loosely Arian provenance. In 1973 D. Hagedorn published a reconstructed text of a commentary on Job which he ascribed to Julian 'the Arian'. Hagedorn also argued that this Julian may be the compiler of the Apostolic Constitutions and be responsible for the long recension of the letters of St *Ignatius of Antioch.

D. Hagedorn, Der Hiobkommentar des Arianers Julian (Patristische Texte und Studien, 14; 1973). CPG 2 (1974), p. 10 (no. 2075), with refs. to earlier lit.

Julian of Norwich (*c.*1342–after 1416), English spiritual writer. Little is known of her life, except that by 1394 she was an *anchoress, prob. at St Julian's church, *Norwich. Acc. to her own account, in May 1373 she received a revelation, consisting of 15 'showings' (and one more 'showing' the day after). Her book, commonly known in modern times as Showings or Revelation(s) of Divine Love, survives in two recensions. The first draft (the Short Text) was prob. written soon after 1373, but it was not until 1393 at the earliest that she completed the Long Text, in which she expounds an original and competent theological vision of life, on the basis of the revelation and her reflections upon it. She freed herself from conventional 'contemplative' notions and came to see that the content of the revelation was identical with that of the faith, and must therefore contain doctrine applicable to all Christians. The kernel of her message is God's love, but she does not shrink from the speculative problems posed by sin and evil. She develops a twofold understanding of human life in terms of 'substance', which is inseparably united with God, and 'sensuality', which is the life we perceive ourselves to be living in this world, and which is characterized in varying degrees by an inability to see God's love clearly. 'Substance' and 'sensuality' are united in Christ by the Incarnation, and esp. by the Passion and Resurrection. Julian finds in the Passion the key to the understanding of all that is wrong with this world, as somehow part of God's purpose in creating human beings in whom 'sensuality' can become capable of union with God. Her doctrine is essentially one of the coherence of creation and redemption in the *predestination of the elect in Christ; it is exemplified, for instance, in her uniquely unsentimental use of the fairly common medieval idea of Christ as mother, which she sees at work in human motherhood and in the way in which Divine providence allows people to get hurt, while protecting them from ultimate harm. No literary sources have been certainly identified, but it is clear that Julian was theologically well informed. Feast day in parts of the Anglican Communion, 8 May.

Crit. edn. of both texts by E. Colledge, OSA, and J. Walsh, SJ (Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, Studies and Texts, 35; Toronto, 1978). The Long Text is also conveniently ed., on the basis of one MS, for the use of students, by M. Glasscoe (Exeter Medieval English Texts, 1976). Modern trs. by C. Wolters (Penguin Classics, 1966) and E. Colledge, OSA, and J. Walsh, SJ (Classics of Western Spirituality, 1978). P. Molinari, SJ, Julian of Norwich (1958). W. Riehle, Studien zur englischen Mystik des Mittelalters (Anglistische Forschungen, 120; 1977; Eng. tr., 1981). J. P. H. Clark, 'Fiducia in Julian of Norwich', Downside Review, 99 (1981), pp. 97–108, 214–29; id., 'Predestination in Christ according to Julian of Norwich', ibid. 100 (1982), pp. 79–91; id., 'Nature, Grace and the Trinity in Julian of Norwich', ibid., pp. 203–20; R. Bradley, 'Christ the Teacher in Julian's Showings. The Biblical and Patristic Traditions', in M. Glasscoe (ed.) The Medieval Mystical Tradition in England: Papers Read at Dartington Hall, July 1982 (Exeter, 1982), pp. 127–42. B. Pelphrey, Love was his Meaning: The Theology and Mysticism of Julian of Norwich (Salzburg Studies in English Literature, Elizabethan & Renaissance Studies, 92: 4; Salzburg, 1982). M. A. Palliser, OP, Christ, our Mother of Mercy: Divine Mercy and Compassion in the Theology of the Shewings of Julian of Norwich (Berlin and New York, 1992). S. [C. ff.] Tugwell, OP, Ways of Imperfection (1984), pp. 187–207. V. M. Lagorio and R. Bradley, The 14th-Century English Mystics: A Comprehensive Annotated Bibliography (New York and London, 1981), pp. 105–26. E. Colledge, OSA, and J. Walsh, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 8 (1974), cols. 1605–11, s.v. 'Julienne de Norwich'.

Juliana of Liège, Bl (*c.*1192–1258), champion of the Feast of *Corpus Christi. Born at Retinnes, near Liège, and bereft of her parents, she was placed in the *Augustinian convent of Mont Cornillon, near Liège, where she made rapid spiritual progress and experienced visions. Once professed (1206), she devoted all her energies to securing the establishment of a Feast of Corpus Christi. In 1230 she became superior; but meeting with great opposition in the convent, she was forced to leave and took refuge in the city of Liège. Here, through the intervention of a recluse at St Martin's church, she won to her cause John of Lausanne, one of the canons, who secured in turn the warm interest of James Pantaléon, then Archdeacon of Liège and later Pope Urban IV. The Bp. of Liège having obtained her restoration for a brief space, the feast was formally proclaimed in 1246, to be observed in the diocese of Liège for the next year. But the Bishop died (16 Oct. 1246) before the year was up; the feast was not repeated in Juliana's lifetime; and she herself was again exiled and passed the last years of her life first in a monastery near Namur and later as a recluse at Fosses. The real reward of her efforts was the institution of the Feast of Corpus Christi after her death by Urban IV in 1264. Her cultus was confirmed in 1869. Feast day, 5 Apr.

Latin tr. of contemporary Fr. Life (1258–62) in AASS, Apr. 1 (1675), pp. 443–75. Later Lives by U. Berlière, OSB (anon., Namur, 1884), G. Simenon (Brussels, 1946), and J. Coenen ('Heiligen van onzen Stam', Bruges, 1946). E. Denis, La Vraie Histoire de sainte Julienne de Liège et l'institution de la Fête-Dieu (Tournai, 1935). F. Baix and C. Lambot, OSB, La Dévotion à l'eucharistie et VII^e centenaire de la Fête-Dieu (Namur, 1946), passim. E. W. McDonnell, The Beguines and Beghards in Medieval Culture (New Brunswick, NJ, 1954), esp. pp. 299–309. A. Piolanti in EC 6 (1951), cols. 736–8, with bibl. See also other works cited s.v. CORPUS CHRISTI.

Jülicher, Adolf (1857–1938), NT scholar. Born at Falkenberg, he received a pastoral appointment at Rummelsburg near Berlin in 1882. From 1889 to 1923 he was professor of theology at Marburg. His two principal writings were Die Gleichnisreden Jesu (2 vols., 1888–9), in which he insisted that the Lord's *Parables must be understood as real similes and not as allegories, and Die Einleitung in das Neue Testament (1894; Eng. tr., 1904), a careful critical introduction to the NT writings. He also made extensive studies in the *Old Latin versions of the NT (Itala, 1: 'Matthäus-Evangelium', 1938). His other writings included Paulus und Jesus (1907), Hat Jesus gelebt? (1910), and an edition of St *Vincent of Lérins' Commonitorium (1895).

Autobiography in E. Stange (ed.), Die Religionswissenschaft der Gegenwart, 4 (1928), pp. 159–200. Festgabe für A. Jülicher, hrsg. von R. *Bultmann und H. von Soden (1927). H.-J. Klauck, 'Adolf Jülicher—Leben, Werk und Wirkung', in G. Schwaiger (ed.), Historische Kritik in der Theologie (Studien zur Theologie und Geistesgeschichte des Neunzehnten Jahrhunderts, 32; 1980), pp. 99–150. N. van Bohemen, OFM, in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 4 (1949), cols. 1414–17, s.v.

Julius I, St (d. 352), Pope from 337. In the *Arian struggle he was a strong supporter of orthodoxy and one of the chief influences leading to its ultimate triumph. He gave shelter to *Marcellus of Ancyra at Rome after his condemnation at the Council of *Constantinople (336), and later to *Athanasius after his escape from *Alexandria in 339. In 342–3 he convoked the Council of *Sardica, which consolidated the W. against Arianism and pronounced Athanasius the rightful occupant of his see. Through the appellate jurisdiction allowed by can. 3 (Gk.) of the Council to Julius as Bp. of Rome, his name has secured notoriety in connection with the rise of the Papal claims. Two of Julius' letters, which survive in Greek, are evidence of his remarkable statesmanship. His pontificate was marked by the building of two new churches in Rome, S. Maria in Trastevere and the Basilica Julia (now the Church of the Twelve Apostles). Feast day, 12 Apr.

The two letters mentioned are preserved in Athanasius, Apologia c. Arianos, 21–35 and 52 f. Other (spurious) Epp. attributed to him are by *Apollinarian writers; texts in H. *Lietzmann, Apollinarius von Laodicea und seine Schule, 1 (1904), pp. 185–93, 193–203, 256–62, 283–6, 292 f., 307–10, 310–18, 318. Material on Julius collected in J. P. Migne, PL 8. 857–944, and Suppl. by A. Hamman, OFM, 1 (1958), cols. 191 f. C. Pietri, Roma Christiana: Recherches sur l'Église de Rome … de Miltiade à Sixte III (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 224; 1976), pp. 187–237. J. Barmby in DCB 3 (1882), pp. 526–32; J. P. Kirsch in CE 8 (1910), p. 561; J. Chapin in NCE 8 (1967), pp. 51 f.

Julius II (1443–1513), Pope from 1503. Giuliano della Rovere was the descendant of an impoverished noble family of Albissola, nr. Savona. He lived for some time at a house of Conventual *Franciscans under the supervision of his uncle, Francesco della Rovere. On the latter's accession to the Papacy as *Sixtus IV in 1471 he was created cardinal and loaded with benefices, holding several bishoprics and abbacies *in commendam. He took part in many political missions, and under Innocent VIII, whose election he had secured by means of bribery, continued to play a leading role in Papal affairs. When in 1492 his personal enemy, Rodrigo Borgia, was elected as *Alexander VI he fled to Charles VIII of France, and even after a formal reconciliation with the Pope in 1498 continued to live in hiding, mostly in N. Italy. After Alexander's death in 1503 he returned to Rome, and after the short reign of Pius III was himself elected Pope in the same year, having promised the cardinals to continue the war against the Turks, to call a General Council within two years, and to follow their advice in all matters of importance. These undertakings, however, which would have seriously limited the Papal power, he did not carry into effect. The principal achievement of his pontificate was the restoration and enlargement of the temporal power, which was to safeguard Papal independence in times to come. To assist in this aim he drove Cesare *Borgia from Italy in 1504. In 1506 he conducted an expedition against Perugia and *Bologna, both of which submitted to his sovereignty, and in 1509 he joined the League of Cambrai against *Venice, which had frequently resisted Papal claims. After the city had been defeated with the help of France he turned against the latter and, in 1511, founded the Holy League, including England, Spain, Venice, and Switzerland, for the purpose of defeating it. Louis XII replied by calling a Council to depose the Pope at Pisa in 1511. After Julius had deprived the rebellious cardinals who attended the Council of their dignity it retired to Milan, where Julius was declared suspended in 1512. At the same time the Pope called a Council at the Lateran and won the Emp. Maximilian over to his side. The *Pragmatic Sanction was condemned and France thus remained isolated. The death of Julius on 20–21 Feb. 1513, however, ended the conflict.

Though Julius II was chiefly a statesman and a military leader, he initiated certain important ecclesiastical reforms. His constitution 'De fratrum nostrorum' (1503) declared null and void every pontifical election brought about by simony. He was a patron of Renaissance art and recognized the genius of *Raphael, *Michelangelo, and Bramante. In 1506 he laid the cornerstone of the Basilica of *St Peter. Among the many immortal works inspired by his generosity are Michelangelo's statue of Moses in San Pietro in Vincoli, the paintings in the *Sistine Chapel, and Raphael's frescoes in the Vatican. His indulgence for the rebuilding of St Peter's was the occasion later of M.

*Luther's 95 Theses. His warlike character was scathingly attacked by *Erasmus in his Moriae Encomium ('Praise of Folly').

E. Rodocanachi, Le Pontificat de Jules II (1928); I. Cloulas, Jules II: Le Pape Terrible [1990]; C. Shaw, Julius II: The Warrior Pope (Oxford, 1993). F. Seneca, Venezia e Papa Giulio II (Padua, 1962). W. Ullmann, 'Julius II and the Schismatic Cardinals', in D. Baker (ed.), Schism, Heresy and Religious Protest (Studies in Church History, 9; 1972), pp. 177–93. L. Partridge and R. Starn, A Renaissance Likeness: Art and Culture in Raphael's Julius II (Berkeley, Calif., and London, 1980). Pastor, 6 (1923), pp. 185–607. G. Mollat in DTC 7 (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 1918–20, s.v. 'Jules II'; G. B. Picotti in EC 6 (1951), cols. 750–8, s.v. 'Giulio II'; D. R. Campbell in NCE 8 (1967), pp. 52–4, s.v.

Julius III (1487–1555), Pope from 1550. Giovanni Maria Ciocchi del Monte studied jurisprudence at Perugia and Siena, was made Abp. of Siponto in 1511, and under *Clement VII and *Paul III held administrative posts in Rome and the Papal states. He was taken as a hostage by the Imperial forces after the sack of Rome in 1527. In 1545 he opened the Council of *Trent as its first president and Papal legate, and had an important share in its transference to Bologna in 1547. Elected Pope in 1550 after a long and stormy conclave, in 1551 he commanded the Council to resume its sessions, but had to suspend it in the next year owing to political difficulties. During his pontificate he did much for the *Jesuits, confirming the order and endowing it with new privileges. On the death of *Edward VI in 1553, he sent Cardinal R. *Pole to England with far-reaching faculties. During the last three years of his life, however, Julius III more and more lost interest in the reform of the Church. His love of the arts—he was a protector of *Michelangelo—and of pomp, as well as his nepotism, range him with the typical Renaissance Popes.

The principal source is A. Massarelli, Diaria, 5–7 (ed. S. Merkle, Concilii Tridentini Diariorum, 2, Freiburg i.B., 1911, pp. 1–249). V. Schweitzer, Zur Geschichte der Reform unter Julius III (Görres-Gesellschaft, 3; 1907). C. Erdmann, 'Die Wiedereröffnung des Trienter Konzils durch Julius III', Quellen und Forschungen aus italienischen Archiven und Bibliotheken, 20 (1928–9), pp. 238–317. H. Jedin, 'Analekten zur Reformtätigkeit der Päpste Julius' III. und Pauls IV.', RQ 42 (1934), pp. 305–32; 43 (1935), pp. 87–156. G. De Leva, 'La elezione di Papa Giulio III', Rivista Storica Italiana, 1 (1884), pp. 22–38. Pastor, 13 (1924). Fliche and Martin, 18 (1948), pp. 105–45, with refs. G. Mollat in DTC 8 (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 1920 f., s.v.; G. B. Picotti in EC 6 (1951), cols. 758–605, s.v. 'Giulio III'. See also works cited under TRENT, COUNCIL OF.

Julius Africanus, Sextus (*c.*180–*c.*250), Christian writer. Acc. to *Suidas, he was born in Libya, but the facts of his life are unclear. He may originally have been a Jew. He enjoyed close relations with the royal house of *Edessa. He went on a successful embassy from *Emmaus to the Emp. Heliogabalus (218–22) which led to the township being rebuilt as Nicopolis. Under the Emp. Alexander Severus (222–35) he played a significant part in planning the new public library at the Pantheon at Rome. He also had connections with *Origen. Despite a later tradition (Dionysius bar-Salibi) that he was ordained, it is likely that he remained a layman.

His chief work was a 'History of the World' (Χρονογραφίαι) to AD 217 in five Books, of which fragments are preserved in *Eusebius' 'Chronicle', *George Syncellus, and other writers. He held that the world would last for 6,000 years from the Creation and that the Birth of Christ, which he antedated in relation to his own times by three years, took place in the year 5500. His 'Embroidered Girdles' (Κεστοί) is an encyclopaedic work in 24 Books, dedicated to Alexander Severus, on natural history, medicine, military science, magic, and miscellaneous subjects. This, too, survives only in fragments. He was also the author of two letters, one to Origen contesting the genuineness of the story of *Susanna and the other to a certain Aristides on the *genealogies of Christ in Matthew and Luke, both epistles showing good critical powers.

Frags. collected by M. J. *Routh, Reliquiae Sacrae (2nd edn., 1844), 2, pp. 238–309; repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 10. 63–94. New edn. of Epp. by W. Reichardt in TU 34. 3 (1909); of frags. of Κεστοί, with Fr. tr., by J.-R. Vieillefond (Publications de l'Institut Français de Florence, 1ère Série, no. 20; 1970). His 'Ep. to Origen' will be found in all edns. of Origen. Both it, and Origen's reply, are ed., with Fr. tr. and introd., by N. de Lange (SC 302, 1983, pp. 469–578). H. Gelzer, Sextus Iulius Africanus und die byzantinische Chronographie (2 vols., 1880–98); F. Granger, 'Julius Africanus and the Library of the Pantheon', JTS 34 (1933), pp. 157–66. H. Chantraine, 'Der metrologische Traktat des Sextus Iulius Africanus, seine Zugehörigkeit zu den Κεστοί und seine Authentizität', Hermes, 105 (1977), pp. 422–41. F. C. R. Thee, Julius Africanus and the Early Christian View of Magic (Hermeneutische Untersuchungen zur Theologie, 19; 1984), incl. Eng. tr. of frags. of Κεστοί. E Amann in DTC 8 (1924), cols. 1921–5, s.v. with bibl.; and W. Kroll and J. Sickenberger in PW 10 (1919), cols. 116–25. See also bibl. to GEORGE SYNCELLUS.

Jumièges (Lat. Gemeticum), *Benedictine abbey on the Lower Seine 17 miles W. of Rouen. Founded *c.*654 by St *Philibert (q.v.), it rapidly developed in size and influence, sending missionaries to England and Ireland. In 841 it was plundered by the Normans and ten years later almost completely destroyed. After restoration and a second destruction, it rose to become one of the chief cultural centres in N. Europe, and through the patronage of *William the Conqueror, under whom the partly surviving abbey church was built (1040–67), it became the richest monastery in Normandy, continuing to prosper through most of the Middle Ages. Despoiled in 1562 by the *Huguenots, it was restored in 1573, and in the 17th cent. became linked to the *Maurist reform. Benedictine life finally came to an end in 1790, after which the buildings were largely destroyed. Since 1918 its imposing ruins have been under State protection.

J. Loth (ed.), Histoire de l'abbaye royale de Saint-Pierre de Jumièges par un religieux bénédictin de la congrégation de Saint-Maur (3 vols., Rouen, 1882–5). R. Martin du Gard, L'Abbaye de Jumièges: Étude archéologique des ruines (Montdidier, 1909). J. J. Vernier (ed.), Chartes de l'abbaye de Jumièges (v. 825 à 1204), conservées aux archives de la Seine-Inférieure (2 vols., Rouen, 1916). Jumièges: Congrès Scientifique du XIIIe Centenaire (2 vols., ibid., 1955). L. Musset, Normandie romane, 2 (La Pierre-qui-Vire, 1974; 2nd edn., 1985), pp. 59–126, with summary in Eng., pp. 296–8. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 8 (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 412–20, s.v., with bibl. L. M. Cottineau, OSB, Répertoire topo-bibliographique des abbayes et prieurés (Mâcon, 1935), cols. 1496–9, s.v., for detailed refs.

Jumpers. A nickname of the Welsh *Calvinistic Methodists, from their former custom of 'leaping for joy' at their meetings.

Jung Codex. The title given to Codex I of the *Nag Hammadi papyri which was acquired in 1952 by the Jung Institute for Analytical Psychology at Zurich. It is now with the other codices in Cairo.

Jurieu, Pierre (1637–1713), French *Calvinist controversialist. A grandson of the Reformed theologian Pierre *du Moulin, he was born at Mer, in the diocese of Blois, where his father was minister. He studied at Saumur, then at Sedan, where he obtained his doctorate in theology in 1658. He then travelled, possibly to Holland, certainly to England. He is said to have received Anglican orders, but this is uncertain. He was ordained minister at Mer, prob. in 1661. In 1674 he was appointed professor of theology and Hebrew at Sedan. His Traité de la dévotion (1675; Eng. tr., 1692) had a huge circulation. His many works of controversy are energetic and not always orthodox. The important Traité de la puissance de l'Église (1677) uses juridical arguments to vindicate the Calvinist view of authority in the Church. From this date he also espouses a pluralist ecclesiology. His anonymous Politique du clergé (1681; Eng. tr., 1681), suggesting that the primary loyalty of the French Catholic clergy was to Rome not France, put him in danger. On the suppression of the Academy at Sedan in 1681 he became minister in the Walloon church at Rotterdam, where he remained for the rest of his life. He continued to publish works against his French Catholic adversaries, notably J.-B. *Bossuet, A. *Arnauld, and P. *Nicole. A tireless worker for all aspects of the Calvinist cause, and confidant of William of Orange, he dominated the growing French refugee community in the Netherlands. The revocation of the Edict of *Nantes (1685) led him to write L'Accomplissement des prophéties (1686; Eng. tr., 1687) predicting the Divine reinstatement of the Calvinist Church in France for 1689. His famous Lettres pastorales, published fortnightly from 1686 to 1689, record the sufferings and constancy of the oppressed Protestants in France, urging them to witness publicly to their faith. The work also includes an important theory of political authority, to justify the 1689 revolution in England. From the later 1680s he was increasingly involved in internecine quarrels, opposing toleration and 'liberal theology'. His critics included P. *Bayle.

There is much primary material in J. G. de Chaufepié, Nouveau Dictionnaire historique et critique, 3 (Amsterdam, 1753), 1/J, pp. 57–82, s.v. F. R. J. Knetsch, Pierre Jurieu: Theoloog en Politikus der Refuge (Kampen, 1967); R. J. Howells, Pierre Jurieu: Antinomian Radical (Durham Modern Language Series, FM 2; Durham, 1983). E. Labrousse, 'Note sur Pierre Jurieu', RHPR 58 (1978), pp. 277–97. R. Struman, 'La Perpétuité de la foi dans la controverse Bossuet–Jurieu, 1686–1691', RHE 37 (1941), pp. 145–89. G. H. Dodge, The Political Theory of the Huguenots of the Dispersion, with special Reference to the Thought and Influence of Pierre Jurieu (New York and London, 1947). E. Kaeppler, 'Bibliographie chronologique des œuvres de Pierre Jurieu (1637–1713)', Bulletin de la Société de l'Histoire du Protestantisme Français, 84, 6th ser. 8 (1935), pp. 391–440; F. R. J. Knetsch, 'Un contributo alla bibliografia di Pierre Jurieu (1637–1713)', Rivista di Storia e Letteratura Religiosa, 9 (1973), pp. 457–76.

jus devolutum. In the Church of *Scotland, the right devolving on a *Presbytery to elect a minister to a vacant charge when the congregation, after nine months, has failed to make an appointment. It is only rarely exercised, as an extension of time, if requested, can be granted to the congregation concerned.

justification. In dogmatic theology, the event or process by which man is made or declared to be righteous in the sight of God. Despite the suggestion of the etymological form of the Latin verb justificare (justum facere, 'to make righteous'), it is widely held that in the NT (and esp. in St *Paul) the Greek δικαίωσις and its cognates reflect Hebrew usage, and are thus to be understood as legal metaphors signifying 'vindication' or 'declaring to be righteous'. St *Augustine, however, interpreted the Latin term iustificatio to mean 'making righteous', thus establishing a tradition which remained unchallenged until the end of the Middle Ages. At the time of the *Reformation, controversy surrounded both the meaning of the term, as well as the means by which justification comes about. In classical *Protestant theology, 'justification' was interpreted as God 'declaring man to be righteous' (thus recovering the sense of the original Hebrew term), to be distinguished from sanctification, in which man is 'made righteous'. The Council of Trent defined justification in strongly transformational terms, rejecting the Protestant understanding of the concept. In both *Lutheranism and *Calvinism, justification is an act of God, effected without man's co-operation (an idea expressed in formulae such as sola fide ('by faith alone') and sola gratia ('by grace alone)). According to the Council of Trent, justification requires man's co-operation with God. A further difference of importance concerns the formal cause of justification, which Protestants held to be the imputed rightousness of Christ, and Trent defined as the inherent or imparted righteousness of Christ. Much Anglican theology has followed the Calvinist tradition on this point, though classical High Anglicanism of the 17th and 18th cents., while affirming that man is justified by grace through faith, insisted that he must also labour for salvation, doing the good works prepared by God for him to walk in. Recent ecumenical disussions have suggested that many of these distinctions are verbal rather than substantial, with the result that a degree of consensus on the doctrine has emerged, for instance in the Agreed Statement of the Second *Anglican–Roman Catholic International Commission (1987). However, the biblical roots of the doctrine have been challenged by some NT scholars whose interpretation of Pauline theology, and the function of justification language within it, have cast doubts upon traditional (esp. Lutheran) accounts.

The subject is treated in all major works of dogmatic theology and in comm. on the Pauline Epp. (esp. Rom. and Gal.). The classic study of the Protestant doctrine is A. *Ritschl, Die christliche Lehre von der Rechtfertigung und Versöhnung, 1 (Bonn, 1870; Eng. tr., Edinburgh, 1872). J. H. *Newman, Lectures on Justification (1838; 3rd edn., 1874). J. Buchanan, The Doctrine of Justification (Edinburgh, 1867). H. Rückert, Die Rechtfertigungslehre auf dem Tridentinischen Konzil (Arbeiten zur Kirchengeschichte, 3; 1925). H. *Küng, Rechtfertigung: Die Lehre Karl Barths und eine katholische Besinnung (Einsiedeln, 1957; Eng. tr. of 4th edn., 1964, repr. with additional material, 1981). J. Baur, Salus Christiana: Die Rechtfertigungslehre in der Geschichte des christlichen Heilsverständnisses, 1 (Gütersloh, 1968; all pub.). J. A. Ziesler, The Meaning of Righteousness in Paul (Society for New Testament Studies, Monograph Series, 20; Cambridge, 1972). J. [H. P.] Reumann, 'Righteousness' in the New Testament: 'Justi- fication' in the United States Lutheran–Roman Catholic Dialogue, with responses by J. A. Fitzmyer, SJ, and J. D. Quinn (Philadelphia, 1982). P. Toon, Justification and Sanctification (1983). A. E. McGrath, Iustitia Dei: A History of the Christian Doctrine of Justification (2 vols., Cambridge, 1986). Salvation and the Church: An Agreed Statement by the Second Anglican Roman Catholic International Commission (1987). J. D. G. Dunn, 'The Justice of God. A renewed perspective on justification by faith', JTS NS 43 (1992), pp. 1–22. J. Rivière in DTC 8 (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 2042–227, s.v.; G. Quell and G. Schrenk in TWNT 2 (1935), pp. 176–229 (Eng. tr., 2 (1964), pp. 174–225), s.v. δίκη; G. Klein and others in RGG (3rd edn.), 5 (1961), cols. 825–46, s.v. 'Rechtfertigung'; M. D. Crossan and P. de Letter, SJ, in NCE 8 (1967), pp. 77–92, s.v.

Justin Martyr, St (*c.*100–*c.*165), early Christian *Apologist. He was born of pagan parents at Flavia Neapolis ('Nablus'), the ancient Shechem in *Samaria. He was converted from pagan philosophy to Christianity *c.*130, though whether the account of his search through various philosophies (Dial. 2) is historically accurate, is disputed. He continued as a philosopher (wearing the pallium), now teaching Christianity, first at *Ephesus, where he engaged in his Disputation with Trypho the Jew (*c.*135), and later at *Rome, where he opened a Christian school, having *Tatian (q.v.) as one of his pupils. Here he wrote his 'First Apology' (*c.*155), addressed to the Emp. Antoninus Pius and his adopted sons (*Marcus Aurelius and Lucius Verus), and soon afterwards issued his 'Dialogue with Trypho'. His 'Second Apology', addressed to the Roman Senate, was apparently written shortly after the accession of Marcus Aurelius (161). He and some of his disciples were denounced as Christians *c.*165 (acc. to Tatian, by the Cynic philosopher Crescens); and on refusing to sacrifice they were scourged and beheaded. The authentic record of their martyrdom ('Martyrium S. Iustini et Sociorum'), based on an official court report, survives. Feast day in the E., 1 June; in the W., formerly 14 April; since 1969, 1 June.

Justin is the most outstanding of the 'Apologists', i.e. of those writers (mainly in the 2nd cent.) who, in the face of persecution by the Roman authorities, wrote defences (ἀπολογίαι) of Christianity. Their first concern was to rebut charges of *atheism and immorality ('Thyestian feasts, Oedipodean intercourse') and the underlying charge of sedition. But they went further and argued that Christianity was a true philosophy, in comparison with which other philosophies were either false, or (as Justin himself argued) shadows of the truth fulfilled in Christ. In support of this argument Justin developed his doctrine of the 'generative' or 'germinative' Word (λόγος σπερματικός), who had sown the seed of truth in all men and who had become incarnate in Christ, to teach men the whole truth and to redeem them from the power of the demons. Justin also used his doctrine of the Logos to explain why Christians, while remaining *monotheists, worshipped Jesus Christ, regarding Him as an incarnation of the Logos, 'in second place' to God.

This teaching is expounded in his two 'Apologies' and in the 'Dialogue with Trypho'. The later chapters of the 'First Apology' give a brief account of the ceremonies of *Baptism and the *Eucharist. The 'Dialogue' argues that the fulfilment of the prophecies in Christ proves the transitoriness of the Old Covenant and the vocation of the Gentiles to take the place of Israel, and uses Middle Platonic ideas to interpret OT theophanies as manifestations of the Logos. Justin also taught a form of *Millenarianism.

A large number of other works have circulated from early times under Justin's name, all of them spurious. One group belongs to the late 2nd and 3rd cents. and consists of an 'Address to the Greeks', an 'Exhortation to the Greeks,' and a work 'On the Monarchy of God'. Another group is probably all the work of a single author of the Aristotelian school (4th–5th cent.). Yet another pseudo-Justinian work—the 'Expositio Rectae Fidei'—is by *Theodoret.

Of the earlier edns. of Justin, the best is that of P. *Maran, OSB (Paris, 1742). The only complete modern crit. edn. is that of J. C. T. Otto (2 vols., Jena, 1842-3; 3rd edn. in 5 vols., 1876–81). J. P. Migne, PG 6 (1857). Apologies, ed. with notes by A. W. F. Blunt (1911), by M. Marcovich (Patristische Texte und Studien, 38; 1994), and, with Fr. tr., by C. Munier (Paradosis, 38; 1994). Eng. tr. in ANCL (1867); also of 'Dialogue with Trypho', by A. L. Williams (Translations of Christian Literature, 1930), with useful introd. Comm. on 'Dialogue with Trypho', 1–9, by J. C. M. van Winden, An Early Christian Philosopher (Philosophia Patrum, 1; Leiden, 1971). Modern edn. of Pseudo-Justin's 'Address to Greeks', 'Exhortation to the Greeks' and 'On the Monarchy of God' by M. Marcovich (Patristische Texte und Studien, 32; 1990).

E. R. Goodenough, The Theology of Justin Martyr (1923); P. Prigent, Justin et l'Ancien Testament (Études Bibliques, 1964); N. Hyldahl, Philosophie und Christentum: Eine Interpretation der Einleitung zum Dialog Justins (Acta Theologica Danica, 9; Copenhagen, 1966); A. J. Bellinzoni, The Sayings of Jesus in the Writings of Justin Martyr (Supplements to Novum Testamentum, 17; Leiden, 1967); L. W. Barnard, Justin Martyr: His Life and Thought (Cambridge, 1967); E. F. Osborn, Justin Martyr (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, 47; 1973); R. Joly, Christianisme et Philosophie: Études sur Justin et les Apologistes grecs du deuxième siècle (Université Libre de Bruxelles, Faculté de Philosophie et Lettres, 52; 1973). O. Skarsaune, The Proof from Prophecy: A Study in Justin Martyr's Proof-Text Tradition: Text-Type, Provenance, Theological Profile (Supplements to Novum Testamentum, 56; 1987). B. *Capelle, OSB, 'Le Rescrit d'Hadrien et S. Justin', R. Bén. 39 (1927), pp. 365–8. W. Schmid, 'Die Textüberlieferung der Apologie des Justin', ZNTW 40 (1941), pp. 87–138. C. Andresen, 'Justin und der mittlere Platonismus', ibid. 44 (1952–3), pp. 157–95; R. Holte, 'Logos Spermatikos. Christianity and Ancient Philosophy according to St. Justin's Apologies', Studia Theologica, 12 (1958), pp. 109–68; J. H. Waszink, 'Bemerkungen zu Justins Lehre vom Logos Spermatikos', in Mullus: Festschrift Theodore Klauser (Jahrbuch für Antike und Christentum, Ergänzungsband 1; 1964), pp. 380–90. H. Chadwick, 'Justin Martyr's Defence of Christianity', Bulletin of the John Rylands Library, 47 (1965), pp. 275–97. CPG 1 (1983), pp. 29–35 (nos. 1073–89). J. Quasten, Patrology, 1 (Utrecht, 1950), pp. 196–219. Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 65–71 and 554 f. H. S. *Holland in DCB 3 (1882), pp. 560–87, s.v. 'Justinus (2) Martyr, St.'; G. Bardy in DTC 8 (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 2228–77, s.v. 'Justin'; C. Kannengiesser, SJ, and A. Solignac, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 8 (1974), cols. 1640–7, s.v., with extensive bibl.

Justina, St. See CYPRIAN, ST, OF ANTIOCH.

Justinian I (*c.*483–565), Roman Emperor from 527. He was the most energetic of the early Byzantine Emperors, making it his aim to restore the political and religious unity of the empire in E. and W. He reconquered N. Africa from the Vandals and Italy from the Goths. A great builder, he erected many *basilicas at *Constantinople (including *Sancta Sophia), *Ravenna, and elsewhere; and a sound juridical basis for the empire was established by his new legal Code (see following entry). As the champion of orthodoxy he persecuted the *Montanists, whom he almost exterminated, closed the celebrated ancient philosophical schools at Athens in 529, and forced many pagans to accept Baptism. His unsuccessful efforts to reconcile the *Monophysites issued not only in his condemnation of the memory, as well as some alleged doctrines, of *Origen (see ORIGENISM), but also in the *Three Chapters controversy (which led to the Second Council of *Constantinople, 533), in the humiliation of Pope *Vigilius, and in a schism in the W.

C. Diehl, Justinian et la civilisation byzantine au VI^e siècle (1901); J. B. Bury, History of the Later Roman Empire, 2 (1923); P. N. Ure, Justinian and his Age (Pelican Book, A 217; 1951); A. H. M. Jones, The Later Roman Empire, 1 (Oxford, 1964), pp. 269–302; J. W. Barker, Justinian and the Later Roman Empire (Madison, Wis., and London, 1966). W. Schubart, Justinian und Theodora [1943]; R. Browning, Justinian and Theodora (1971; rev. edn., 1987). G. G. Archi (ed.), L'Imperatore Giustiniano: Storia e Mito. Giornate di Studi a Ravenna, 14–16 ottobre 1976 (Circolo Toscano di Diritto Romano e Storia del Diretto, 5; Milan, 1978). A. Cameron, Procopius and the Sixth Century (1985), passim. A. Knecht, Die Religionspolitik Kaiser Justinians I (1896). E. K. Chrysos, Ἡ Ἐκκλησιαστικὴ Πολιτικὴ τοῦ Ἰουστινιανοῦ (Analecta Vlatadon, 3; 1969), with summary in Ger. A. Grillmeier, SJ, Jesus der Christus im Glauben der Kirche, 2 (pt. 2; Freiburg etc, 1989), pp. 331–498; Eng. tr. (1995), pp. 315–475. Krumbacher (2nd edn.), pp. 57 f., 928–41; Bardenhewer, 5, pp. 20–4. J. Bryce in DCB 3 (1882), pp. 538–59; M. Jugie, AA, in DTC 8 (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 2277–90, s.v.; H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 8 (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 507–604, s.v.; P. Gray in TRE 17 (1988), pp. 478–86, s.v., with full bibl.

Justinian, Code of. This revision, enlargement, and rearrangement of the *Theodosian Code (q.v.) was published by *Justinian (q.v.) in 529. It survives only in a revised edition embodying later constitutions which dates from 534. It was supplemented by further constitutions known as 'Novellae' and also by the 'Digest' (533), a comprehensive set of passages from juristic textbooks and commentaries of the classical period, and the 'Institutes of Justinian' (533), a revised and modified edition of those of Gaius with extracts from similar works. Together the Code, Novellae, Digest, and Institutes constituted the so-called Corpus Juris Civilis; this became the authoritative and ordered statement of Roman law which was gradually accepted, subject to local variations, throughout W. Europe (to a lesser extent than elsewhere in England), until it was superseded by modern codes which are still partly based on it. The sixth 'Novella' provides the classic formulation of the Byzantine theory concerning the relationship between Church and State. A distinction is drawn between the imperial authority (imperium) and the priesthood (sacerdotium), the former being concerned with human affairs and the latter with things divine; the two are regarded as closely interdependent, but, at least in theory, neither is subordinated to the other. The Code much influenced the development of *canon law in the W., esp. in the later Middle Ages.

Standard edns. of the Code by P. Krueger (Berlin, 1877); of the Digest by T. *Mommsen (2 vols., ibid., 1870); of the Institutes by P. Krueger (ibid., 1869); and of the Novellae by R. Schoell and G. Kroll (ibid., 1895). The text of the Institutes was repr., with Eng. tr., by J. B. Moyle (2 vols., Oxford, 1883); that of the Digest, with Eng. tr. ed. A. Watson (4 vols., Philadelphia [1985]). R. Mayr, Vocabularium Codicis Justiniani (2 vols., Prague, 1923–5). P. Collinet, Études historiques sur le droit de Justinien (5 vols., 1912–53); H. S. Alivisatos, Die kirchliche Gesetzgebung des Kaisers Justinian I (Neue Studien zur Geschichte der Theologie und der Kirche, 17; 1913). A. A. Schiller, Roman Law: Mechanisms of Development (The Hague, Paris, and New York [1978]), pp. 37–9. W. Ullmann, Law and Politics in the Middle Ages (1975), pp. 53–69. G. Mollat in DDC 4 (1949), cols. 644–81, s.v. 'Corpus Juris Civilis', with bibl.

Justus, St (d. *c.*627), Abp. of *Canterbury. He was sent to England in 601 in Pope *Gregory's second band of missionaries. When *Ethelbert created a second Kentish see at *Rochester in 604, St *Augustine appointed Justus its first bishop. In the pagan reaction under Eadbald he fled, with *Mellitus, Bp. of London, to Gaul, but came back when the Kentish Church again received royal protection. On the death of Mellitus (624), Justus succeeded him at Canterbury, where he consecrated St *Paulinus for mission work in Northumbria. He was buried at St Augustine's Abbey, Canterbury. Feast day, 10 Nov.

The main source is *Bede, HE 1. 29, 2. 3–9 and 2. 18; comm. by J. M. Wallace-Hadrill (Oxford, 1988), pp. 43, 64 f., and 82. There is an 11th-cent. Life by *Goscelin, mainly based on Bede, pr. by H. *Delehaye, SJ, in AASS, Nov. 4 (1925), pp. 535–7, with comm., pp. 532–5. W. *Stubbs in DCB 3 (1882), pp. 592 f., s.v. 'Justus (22)'.

Juvenal (d. 458), Bp. of *Jerusalem from *c.*422. Nothing is known of his early life. His chief ambition seems to have been to make Jerusalem into a '*Patriarchal see' at the expense of the metropolitical see of *Caesarea and the 'Patriarchal see' of *Antioch. For this purpose he sided with *Cyril, Bp. of Alexandria, against *Nestorius at the Council of *Ephesus in 431, asserting that the Bp. of Antioch (John) 'ought to have obeyed the apostolic see of Jerusalem, by which the throne of Antioch should be corrected and judged'. But Cyril, though glad of his support, refused to further his claims. In the *Eutychian controversy he figured as the chief supporter of *Dioscorus, the successor of Cyril, in his violent proceedings at the *Latrocinium of Ephesus (449). But when two years later Dioscorus was tried at the Council of *Chalcedon, Juvenal went over to the winning side and voted for his condemnation. As a reward, perhaps, he secured the Council's recognition of Jerusalem as a Patriarchal see with jurisdiction over the whole of Palestine. On his return he was faced by a revolt organized by the monks who favoured Dioscorus, and only the action of the Imperial government enabled him to regain his see. In parts of the E. he is revered as a saint; feast day, 2 July.

S. Vaillé, AA, 'Formation du patriarcat de Jérusalem', ÉO 13 (1910), pp. 325–36. F. M. Abel, OP, 'Saint Cyrille d'Alexandrie dans ses rapports avec la Palestine', in Kyrilliana, 444–1944 (Cairo, 1947), pp. 214–20. E. Honigmann, 'Juvenal of Jerusalem', Dumbarton Oaks Papers, 5 (1950), pp. 209–79. E. Venables in DCB 3 (1882), pp. 595–8, s.v. 'Juvenalis (2)'; P. T. Camelot, OP, in L.Th.K. (2nd edn.), 5 (1960), cols. 1231 f.

Juvencus, Caius Vettius Aquilinus (early 4th cent.), Christian Latin poet. He was a Spanish presbyter of noble descent, who wrote *c.*330 a Life of Christ in some 3,200 lines of hexameter verse, based mainly on Matthew, supplemented by the infancy narratives from Luke and some of the early chapters of John; it emphasized the transitoriness of the created universe and contrasted it with the glory and eternity of the Christian hope. The author's purpose was evidently to provide Christian readers with religious poetry to take the place of the popular pagan works. In its execution his work shows at every turn the influence of the study of *Virgil.

Works in J. P. Migne, PL 19. 9–388; crit. edns. of his Libri Evangeliorum IIII by C. Marold (Teub., 1886) and J. Huemer (CSEL 24; 1891). K. Marold, 'Ueber das Evangelienbuch des Juvencus in seinem Verhältniss zum Bibeltext', Zeitschrift für wissenschaftliche Theologie, 33 (1890), pp. 329–41. N. Hansson, Textkritisches zu Juvencus (Lund, 1950). J.-M. Poinsotte, Juvencus et Israël: La représentation des Juifs dans le premier poème latin chrétien (Publications de l'Université de Rouen [1979]). A. di Berardino in Quasten (cont.), Patrology, 4 (1986), pp. 265–9.

Juxon, William (1582–1663), Abp. of *Canterbury. He was educated at St John's College, Oxford, where he studied law, and in 1609 became Vicar of St Giles, Oxford. In 1621 he succeeded his friend, W. *Laud, as president of St John's College, and actively assisted him in his revision of the university statutes. In 1633 he succeeded him as Bp. of London. Though known to be a *High Churchman, he had a reputation for tolerance, and this fact, combined with his integrity and generosity, led him to be trusted by Churchmen of all types. After Laud's imprisonment, he became the regular adviser of *Charles I, whom he attended at his execution (1649). A little later he was deprived of his bishopric; but otherwise he was practically unmolested under the Commonwealth. At the Restoration he was the obvious choice for the see of Canterbury, but survived for only three years.

T. A. Mason, Serving God and Mammon: William Juxon, 1582–1663 (Newark, Del., and London [1985]). W. H. *Hutton in DNB 30 (1892), pp. 233–7.

K

Kabbala (Rabbinic Heb. קַבָּלָה, qabbālāh, 'tradition'). A system of Jewish *theosophy which, by the use of an esoteric method of interpretation of the OT, including cyphers, was believed to reveal to its initiates hidden doctrines, e.g. the creation of the world by means of emanations from the Divine Being. It was a development of tendencies akin to *Gnosticism, and reached the height of its influence in the later Middle Ages and at the Renaissance. A Christian form of it also had considerable vogue in the 15th–16th cents., its Christian exponents such as J. *Reuchlin and *Paracelsus professing to deduce by its means such doctrines as the Trinity, the Atonement, and the Divinity of Christ.

The Zohar tr. into Eng. by H. Sperling, M. Simon, and P. P. Levertoff (5 vols., 1931–4). Extensive extracts ed. F. Lachower and I. Tishby, tr. D. Goldstein, The Wisdom of the Zohar (3 vols., Oxford, 1989), with introd. by I. Tishby, 1, pp. 1–126. Shorter selection tr. by D. C. Matt (Classics of Western Spirituality, 1983). Other material tr. by R. C. Keiner, The Early Kabbalah, ed. with introd., by J. Dan (ibid. [1986]). G. G. Scholem, Major Trends in Jewish Mysticism (Jerusalem, 1941; 2nd edn., New York, 1946; 3rd edn., London, 1955); id., Zur Kabbala und ihre Symbolik (Zurich, 1960; Eng. tr., 1965); id., Ursprung und Anfänge der Kabbala (Studia Judaica, 3; 1962; Eng. tr., Princeton, NJ [1987]); id., Kabbalah (Jerusalem [1974]); M. Idel, Kabbalah: New Perspectives (New Haven, Conn., and London [1988]). J. L. Blau, The Christian Interpretation of the Cabala in the Renaissance (New York, 1944); F. Secret, Les Kabbalistes chrétiens de la Renaissance (1964). G. G. Scholem, Bibliographia Kabbalistica (Berlin, 1933; additions in Kirjath Sepher, Jerusalem, 1933 ff.). Id. in Encyclopaedia Judaica, 10 (Jerusalem, 1971), cols. 489–653, s.v. 'Kabbalah'; R. Goetschel and O. Betz in TRE 17 (1988), cols. 487–509, s.v., both with bibl.

Kaftan, Julius Wilhelm Martin (1848–1926), Protestant theologian. A native of Schleswig, he became professor of systematic theology at Basle in 1881 and of apologetics and the philosophy of religion at Berlin in 1883. He sought to reinterpret the *Ritschlian soteriology so as to allow an adequate place for personal experience in religion. Believing that St Paul's system of theology was the outcome of reflection on his vision of Christ on the Damascus road, he held that the Atonement must be understood by mystical and ethical categories, and that there was no place in the doctrine of Christ's work for any notion of satisfaction or of the reconciliation of God with man (as contrasted with that of man with God). His writings include Das Wesen der christlichen Religion (1881), Die Wahrheit der christlichen Religion (1888), and a Dogmatik (1897 and many later editions). Among his later works were Kant, der Philosoph des Protestantismus (1905) and Jesus und Paulus (1907).

His elder brother, Theodor Kaftan (1847–1932), who was General Superintendent for Schleswig from 1886 to 1917, was also a theologian of some influence, who held similar beliefs.

J. W. M. Kaftan, Neutestamentliche Theologie (1927; from his remains). Short autobiog. in E. Stange (ed.), Die Religionswissenschaft der Gegenwart in Selbstdarstellungen, 4 (1928), pp. 201–31. Notice by A. Titius in Zeitschrift für Theologie und Kirche, NF 8 (1927), pp. 1–20. W. Göbell in TRE 17 (1988), pp. 518–21, s.v.

On Theodor Kaftan, Erlebnisse und Beobachtungen . . . von ihm selbst erzählt (Kiel, 1924; 2nd edn., Gütersloh, 1931). W. Göbell, loc. cit., pp. 521–3, s.v.

Kagawa, Toyohiko (1888–1960), Japanese Christian social reformer. He came of a wealthy family and received his early education in a Buddhist monastery. After conversion to Christianity and disinheritance by his family, he studied at the *Presbyterian seminary at Kobe from 1905 to 1908. Here he became acutely conscious of Christian responsibility in the face of existing social evils and spent several years among the poor in the bad slums of Shinkawa. In 1914 he went to Princeton, USA, to study modern social techniques, and after returning to Japan in 1917 devoted himself entirely to the improvement of social conditions. In 1921 he founded the first Labour Union and the first Peasant Union in the country; in 1923 he organized relief work after the Yokohama earthquake; in 1928 he founded the National Anti-War League; and in 1930 he established the Kingdom of God Movement to promote conversions to Christianity. In 1940 he was imprisoned for a time as a pacifist. After the War he became a leader in the movement for democracy in Japan. He expounded his ideals in innumerable writings, incl. The Religion of Jesus (Eng. tr., 1931), New Life through God (Eng. tr., 1932), and Brotherhood Economics (Rauschenbusch Lectures, 1937).

There is a biog. introd. by E. M. Hinder and H. F. Topping in J. F. Gressitt's tr. into Eng. of Kagawa's Love the Law of Life (1930), pp. 1–37. W. Axling, Kagawa (1932; 8th edn. rev., 1946). C. J. Davey, Kagawa of Japan (1960). G. B. Bikle, The New Jerusalem: Aspects of Utopianism in the Thought of Kagawa Toyohiko (Association for Asian Studies, Monograph, 20; Tucson, Ariz. [1976]).

Kähler, Martin (1835–1912), *Lutheran theologian. He was born at Neuhausen in E. Prussia, the son of a pastor. Apart from three years teaching at the University of Bonn (1864–7), his professional academic life was spent at Halle, where he became professor of systematic theology and NT in 1879. His principal work was a major book on dogmatics, Die Wissenschaft der christlichen Lehre (1883), which took the doctrine of *justification as its central theme. He is, however, chiefly remembered for a pamphlet entitled Der sogenannte historische Jesus und der geschichtliche, biblische Christus (1892; extended 1896), in which he attacked the 19th cent. attempts to reconstruct the Jesus of history. Such attempts were, he claimed, just as much exercises in human speculation as the dogmatic Christological theories against which their authors were reacting. The real Christ is the Christ of the Bible, and He is the Christ of the *kerygma, rather than of doctrine or of historical research. However, Kähler was not indifferent to the historical question. He claimed that the impression of the Lord in the NT is realistic, and that poetic imagination could not have produced a convincing picture of a unique sinless person. His negative view of the '*historical Jesus' was taken up by K. *Barth and R. *Bultmann in their *dialectical theology. He also contributed a number of important articles to PRE (3rd edn.).

The orig. 1892 Der sogenannte historische Jesus und der geschichtliche, biblische Christus consisted of a single lecture in 2 parts given to a clergy conference. This was incorporated, as the 2nd of 4 chs., in the much enlarged 2nd edn. (1896). The 1st edn., with some extracts from the 2nd edn., ed. E. Wolf (Munich, 1953); 2nd edn. ed. id. (ibid., 1956). The So-Called Historical Jesus and the Historic, Biblical Christ, ed. C. E. Braaten (Philadelphia, 1964) comprises an Eng. tr. of the 1892 edn. (pp. 42–97) and of the 1st ch. of the 1896 edn. (pp. 100–148), with a useful introd. by the ed. (pp. 1–38). Further works of Kähler ed. by his son, E. Kähler: Geschichte der protestantischen Dogmatik im 19. Jahrhundert (Munich, 1962), with list of his works, pp. 292–307, and Aufsätze zur Bibelfrage (ibid., 1967). A. Kähler (daughter, ed.), Theologe und Christ: Erinnerungen und Bekenntnisse von Martin Kähler (1926), incl. text of Kähler's autobiog. for the years 1835–67, pp. 1–234. H.-G. Link, Geschichte Jesu und Bild Christi: Die Entwicklung der Christologie Martin Kählers in Auseinandersetzung mit der Leben-Jesu-Theologie und der Ritschl-Schule (Neukirchen, 1975). D. L. Deegan, 'Martin Kähler: Kerygma and Gospel History', Scottish Journal of Theology, 16 (1963), pp. 50–67. C. E. Braaten, 'Martin Kähler on the Historic, Biblical Christ', in id. and R. A. Harrisville (eds.), The Historical Jesus and the Kerygmatic Christ (Nashville, 1964), pp. 79–105. H.-J. Kraus in TRE 17 (1988), pp. 511–15, s.v.

Kaiserswerth. The band of Protestant *deaconesses in this Rhineland town was begun by T. Fliedner in 1836 to meet the need of the reformed Churches for an organization of women devoted to the care of the sick and the education of neglected children, on the same lines as the corresponding institutes in the RC Church. The house at Kaiserswerth trains three kinds of deaconesses, who devote themselves either to the care of the sick and the poor, or to teaching, or to parish work. Candidates must be unmarried or widows and undertake to remain in the institute for five years, and are governed by a clergyman who is assisted by a woman superior. The Kaiserswerth deaconesses not only supply numerous charitable institutions in Germany with workers, but also have branches in other places, e.g. at *Jerusalem, *Alexandria, and Cairo. See also DEACONESS.

J. Disselhoff, Das Diakonissen-Mutterhaus zu Kaiserswerth a. Rhein und seine Töchterhäuser (rev. edn., 1903; Eng. tr., 1883).

kamelavchion (Gk. καμηλαύχιον, καλυμμαύχιον). The black cylindrical hat worn by monks and clergy in the E. Church. In the Greek Church, secular clergy in major orders have a projecting brim round the top of the kamelavchion. In the Russian Church there is no brim, but the diameter at the top is slightly greater than at the bottom. See also CAMELAUCUM and EPANOKAMELAVCHION.

Kant, Immanuel (1724–1804), German philosopher. He was born and died at Königsberg in E. Prussia and never went beyond the confines of the province. In early life he was attracted to the study of mathematics and physics, and retained interest in the natural sciences throughout his life. After some years as a private tutor, he became a Privatdozent at Königsberg University in 1755, and in 1770 Professor of Logic, holding the post until his death. His dissertation De Mundi Sensibilis et Intelligibilis Forma et Principiis (1770) marks an important stage in his development, but it was not until after another eleven years (during which Kant wrote practically nothing) that he expounded his epoch-making 'Critical Philosophy' in Der Kritik der reinen Vernunft (1781). Its treatment of the problems of speculative philosophy was carried further in his Prolegomena zu einer jeden künftigen Metaphysik (1783), and esp. in the second (and in essentials final) edition of the Kritik der reinen Vernunft (1787). The Kritik der praktischen Vernunft (1788) and the Kritik der Urtheilskraft (1790) applied the principles of the earlier Kritiken to the problems of morals and to those of teleology and aesthetics respectively. In 1792 the divergence of Kant's teaching from orthodox *Lutheranism brought him into difficulties with the Prussian government. He was not prevented, however, from completing the publication of his Religion innerhalb der Grenzen der blossen Vernunft in 1793, the last of his large-scale works. His later writings include a monograph, Zum ewigen Frieden (1795). In his last years, as shown by his MSS (pub. in their fullest form by E. Adickes as Kant's Opus Postumum, 1920), Kant moved towards a position more akin to that of B. *Spinoza.

It would seem that Kant's main object was to discover a definitive rationale for the admitted validity of mathematics and natural science (esp. the *Newtonian physics). This meant finding a way out of the deadlock arising from the co-existence, on the one hand, of Continental 'rationalism' (R. *Descartes, B. Spinoza, G. W. *Leibniz, and C. *Wolff), and, on the other, of British empiricism (J. *Locke, G. *Berkeley, D. *Hume). He felt that there could be only one solution, namely that it was the understanding (Verstand) which prescribed to nature her laws. The validity of the causal law ('every event has a cause') rests not on some constraining principle in the external world of nature, but in the fact that consciousness is so constituted that it cannot but so interpret the empirical data which it receives. Knowledge is thus the result of a synthesis between an intellectual act (through the twelve 'categories') and what is presented to the mind from without. The latter is received by the understanding under the two 'forms of perception' (Anschauungsformen) of space and time.

In holding that all knowledge required an ingredient derived from nature, Kant cut at the root of traditional metaphysics, with its claim to provide knowledge of subjects which wholly transcended nature. For being thus constituted the human mind could have no knowledge of the three central 'Ideas' (Ideen) of Metaphysics: God, Freedom, and Immortality. The three traditional proofs of God's existence (*Ontological, *Cosmological, and *Teleological) were all invalidated.

But while insisting that Natural Theology was an illusion, Kant believed that the validity of the Ideas could be established in another way. The stern voice of conscience in man assures him of truths which reason is impotent to establish. Kant summarized this belief in his dictum: 'I had to remove knowledge to make room for faith.' The sense of duty assures us of Freedom. And correlative with this belief in Freedom are those in Immortality and in a Divine Being, since the maladjustment of virtue and happiness in the present world requires a righteous God who will vindicate the claims of justice, and another world for His operation.

In his treatise on Religion (1793) Kant elaborated his ethical doctrines in relation to the traditional theology of Lutheranism. Its four sections treat of: (1) the existence of radical evil in human nature; (2) the conflict of the good and evil principles; (3) the victory of the good principle and the foundation of a Kingdom of God on earth; and (4) religion and priestcraft. Despite his constant use of accustomed theological terminology, his presentation of religion did not transcend the limits of morality, and he expressly defined religion as the recognition of all our duties as Divine commands. The moral law had no purpose beyond itself. There was no place for mystical experience, no need for a personal redeemer and no place (as in traditional Christianity) for the historical as such. Kant once expressed the view that as a man advanced in moral perception he found the practice of prayer increasingly unprofitable. *Miracles, if they ever happened, could have no religious significance.

Kant made no attempt to round off his beliefs into a system. This task was soon undertaken by others, who constructed on a Kantian basis a series of grandly conceived systems. J. G. *Fichte, F. W. J. von *Schelling, and G. W. F. *Hegel (*Absolute Idealism) were all directly inspired by and looked back to Kant. In the latter part of the 19th cent. there arose in Germany a widespread and diversified philosophical movement seeking inspiration in a more literal interpretation of Kant. In Great Britain a similar, but independent, movement drew its inspiration from Kant and Hegel conjointly, its leading members being T. H. *Green, F. H. *Bradley, and B. *Bosanquet, and this in turn had a marked influence on Anglican theology (C. C. J. *Webb, W. *Temple, A. E. *Taylor). The moralism of Kant and his critique of metaphysics have made him congenial to some Protestant theologians. RC philosophical theologians tend to see in Kant esp. the critic of the (scholastic) proofs of God's existence and hence to be very critical of him.

Collected edn. of Kant's Werke by G. Hartenstein (1867–9). The best crit. edn. is that of the Berlin Academy (1910 ff.; still unfinished). Most of the individual writings are obtainable in convenient form, with introds. and notes, in the Philosophische Bibliothek (pub. F. Meiner, Leipzig). His more important writings exist in Eng. tr. The best version of the Critique of Pure Reason is by N. K. Smith (1929). From the vast lit., the following is a small selection: E. *Caird, The Critical Philosophy of Immanuel Kant (2 vols., 1889); H. A. Prichard, Kant's Theory of Knowledge (1909); E. Cassirer, Kants Leben und Lehre (1918; Eng. tr., New Haven, Conn., and London [1981]); N. K. Smith, A Commentary to Kant's 'Critique of Pure Reason' (1918); A. C. Ewing, Kant's Treatment of Causality (1924); C. C. J. Webb, Kant's Philosophy of Religion (1926); F. E. England, Kant's Conception of God, with a translation of the 'Nova Dilucidatio' (1929); A. D. *Lindsay, Kant (1934); H. J. Paton, Kant's Metaphysic of Experience (2 vols., 1936); H. J. de Vleeschauer, La Déduction transcendentale dans l'œuvre de Kant (3 vols., 1934–7); id., L'Évolution de la pensée kantienne (1939; Eng. tr., 1962); A. C. Ewing, A Short Commentary on Kant's Critique of Pure Reason (1938); H. J. Paton, The Categorical Imperative: A Study in Kant's Moral Philosophy [1947]; S. Körner, Kant (Harmondsworth, 1955); L. W. Beck, A Commentary on Kant's Critique of Practical Reason (Chicago, 1960); G. Rabel, Kant (Oxford, 1963); J. [F.] Bennett, Kant's Analytic (Cambridge, 1966); id., Kant's Dialectic (ibid., 1974); K. Ward, The Development of Kant's View of Ethics (Oxford, 1972); R. S. C. Walker, Kant (The Arguments of the Philosophers, 1978); B. M. G. Reardon, Kant as Philosophical Theologian (1988); G. Buchdahl, Kant and the Dynamics of Reason: Essays on the Structure of Kant's Philosophy (Oxford, 1992). Überweg, 3, pp. 488–620, with bibl. pp. 709–58; F. Copleston, SJ, A History of Philosophy, 6 (1960), pp. 180–439, with bibl., pp. 466–71. E. *Troeltsch in HERE 7 (1914), pp. 653–9, s.v.; P. Charles, SJ, in DTC 8 (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 2297–331, s.v. 'Kant et le kantisme' (on theological aspects of Kant's writings); W. H. Walsh in P. Edwards (ed.), The Encyclopedia of Philosophy, 4 (1967), pp. 305–24, s.v.

Karaites (Heb. קָרָא, 'to read'). A Jewish sect, dating from the 8th cent. AD, which rejects rabbinical tradition and the *Talmud, and bases its teaching solely on the Scriptures. It survives mainly in Russia and Israel, and probably numbers *c.*13,000 members.

The leading authority is S. A. Poznański (1864–1921), whose works are listed in the Livre d'hommage à la mémoire du Dr Samuel Poznański (1927), pp. xxix–xxxix. Z. Ankori, Karaites in Byzantium (New York, 1959). S. Hofman in Encyclopaedia Judaica, 10 (Jerusalem, 1972), cols. 761–85, with bibl.

Karlstadt. See CARLSTADT. katavasia (Gk. καταβασία, from καταβαίνω, 'go down'). In the E. Church, the concluding stanza of an ode of the *canon, so called because originally the two choirs of singers at this point came down from their stalls and joined in the middle of the church (a custom maintained by some monasteries in Lent). On feast days there is a katavasia at the end of each ode; on ordinary weekdays, after the 3rd, 6th, 8th, and 9th odes only.

kathisma (Gk. κάθισμα, from καθῆσθαι, 'to be seated'). A term in the E. Church applied to (1) each of the twenty sections into which the Byzantine Psalter is divided; (2) a brief liturgical hymn sung during *Orthros at the end of each kathisma of the Psalter.

Kattenbusch, Ferdinand (1851–1935), historian of the Creeds and theologian. A pupil of A. *Ritschl, he became professor of systematic theology at Giessen (1878), Göttingen (1904), and Halle (1906). His principal work, Das apostolische Symbol (1, 1894; 2, 1900), was an erudite treatise built on the researches of C. P. *Caspari, which brought together a vast body of literary material on the history of the *Apostles' Creed. He also contributed to the history of the Reformation confessions and, in his later years, concerned himself with systematic theology.

Autobiog. in E. Stange (ed.), Die Religionswissenschaft der Gegenwart, 5 (1929), pp. 85–121. O. Ritschl, 'Ferdinand Kattenbusch als Persönlichkeit, Forscher und Denker', Theologische Studien und Kritiken, 107 (1936), pp. 289–311.

Keble, John (1792–1866), *Tractarian leader and author of *The Christian Year (q.v.). He was the son of John Keble, Vicar of Coln St Aldwyn, a priest of the High Church school. Born at Fairford, after a brilliant career at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, he was elected in 1811 at the age of 19 to one of the much-coveted Fellowships of Oriel. In 1815 he was ordained deacon and in 1816 priest. In 1817 he became a tutor at Oriel, but resigned in 1823 to assist his father in his country cure in the Cotswolds.

There he composed the poems which, at the insistence of close friends, he published in 1827 as The Christian Year. In 1831 he was elected professor of poetry at Oxford in succession to H. H. *Milman. With many of his friends there and elsewhere (J. H. *Newman, I. *Williams, R. H. *Froude, E. B. *Pusey, W. *Palmer of Worcester College, J. B. *Mozley, H. J. *Rose), he became increasingly conscious of the dangers threatening the C of E from the reforming and liberal movements, and on 14 July 1833 preached before the University an assize sermon on *National Apostasy (q.v.), directed esp. against the proposed suppression of ten Irish bishoprics. From now on he took a leading part in the Oxford Movement. He co-operated with Newman in the issue of the Tracts for the Times, to which he himself contributed nos. 4, 13, 40, 52, 54, 57, 60, and 89. No. 4, which bore the title 'Adherence to the Apostolical Succession the Safest Course', was a brief but forceful appeal to the clergy to take a high view of their privileges and duties. In 1836 he issued a learned edition of R. *Hooker's Works and in 1838, with Newman and Pusey, he became one of the editors of the '*Library of the Fathers', to which he himself contributed the translation of St *Irenaeus (pub. posthumously, 1872). His publication, with Newman, of the Remains (1838–9) of their close friend R. H. Froude (q.v.) provoked a storm. His tract no. 89, 'On the Mysticism attributed to the Early Fathers of the Church' (1840–1), a defence of Alexandrian theology and religious 'reserve', also met with a very hostile reception. After the cessation of the Tracts, he continued the close friend and adviser of Newman until Newman's secession in 1845.

After 1845 Keble remained the firm associate of Pusey and co-operated with him in keeping the High Church movement steadily attached to the C of E. In 1857 he published two pamphlets against the Divorce Act, as well as a treatise On Eucharistical Adoration, defending the doctrine of the *Real Presence from its attack in the G. A. *Denison case. In 1863 he issued a Life of T. *Wilson, Bp. of Sodor and Man (d. 1755). His later poetry included contributions to the Lyra Apostolica (1836), an English rendering of the Psalter (1839) and Lyra Innocentium (1846).

Meanwhile, since 1836, Keble had been Vicar of Hursley, near Winchester. He was never offered (and never wished for) preferment, remaining at Hursley, a devoted parish priest, for the rest of his life. He died at Bournemouth on 29 Mar. 1866. His beauty of character impressed all who came into contact with him, and his advice on spiritual matters, always given with great diffidence, was widely sought after. In 1870 Keble College, Oxford, was founded in his memory, with E. S. *Talbot as the first warden. Feast day in parts of the Anglican Communion, 29 Mar.

A set of Letters of Spiritual Counsel and Guidance (Oxford, 1870) was ed. by R. J. Wilson. Memoir, with many extracts from letters, by Sir J. T. Coleridge (ibid., 1869). C. M. *Yonge, Musings over the 'Christian Year' and 'Lyra Innocentium', together with a few Gleanings of Recollections of the Rev. John Keble, gathered by several friends (1871). Lives by W. Lock (London, 1893); E. F. L. Wood, later Lord Halifax (ibid., 1909); K. Ingram (ibid., 1933); and G. Battiscombe (ibid., 1963). B. W. Martin, John Keble: Priest, Professor and Poet [1976]. W. J. A. M. Beek, John Keble's Literary and Religious Contribution to the Oxford Movement (Nijmegen, 1959). R. W. *Church, The Oxford Movement (1890), ch. 2. S. L. Ollard in DECH (3rd edn.), pp. 314–16.

Kedron. See CEDRON.

Keith, George (*c.*1638–1716), 'Christian *Quaker'. Born in Aberdeenshire, he was educated for the *Presbyterian ministry at Marischal College, but in 1663 became a Quaker, and apparently exercised considerable influence on R. *Barclay. After several imprisonments for preaching, in 1684 he emigrated to America, having secured appointment as Surveyor General of the colony of E. Jersey. He was censorious of much that he considered lax in the discipline and teaching of the American Quakers and their belief in the 'sufficiency of the light within'. When disowned by them, he gathered around him followers whom he called 'Christian Quakers'. He returned to England late in 1693 and engaged in much controversy. In 1700 he conformed to the C of E; and, after ordination, he conducted from 1702 to 1704 a successful mission in America as one of the first missionaries sent out by the *SPG. In 1705 he became rector of Edburton in W. Sussex. His many writings include The Benefit, Advantage and Glory of Silent Meetings (1670), The Deism of William Penn and his Brethren (1699), and The Standard of the Quakers examined (1702), the last directed against Barclay.

E. W. Kirby, George Keith, 1638–1716 (The American Historical Association, New York and London, 1942), with full bibl. A. Gordon in DNB 30 (1892), pp. 318–21, s.v., with further refs.

Kells, Book of. A finely ornamented Latin MS of the Gospels, so named from the monastery of Kells (Ceanannus Mór) in Co. Meath, where it was long thought to have been written; it was certainly at Kells from the 12th (and very probably from the early 11th) to the mid-17th cent., when it was given to *Trinity College, Dublin (A. 1.6(58)). Acc. to tradition, it belonged to St *Columba (d. 597), but it really dates from *c.*800. It is now a matter of debate whether it was written at Kells or brought there (complete or incomplete) from *Iona or elsewhere. Some scholars hold that it may have been written and decorated in the North of England (perhaps at *Lindisfarne) or even in east Scotland.

Facsimile, partly in colour, with introds. by E. H. Alton and P. Meyer (3 vols., Berne, 1950–1). Sir Edward Sullivan, The Book of Kells (1914; with 24 coloured plates). Partial reproduction in colour, with study of the MS by F. Henry (London, 1974). T. J. Brown, 'Northumbria and the Book of Kells', Anglo-Saxon England, 1 (1972), pp. 219–46. J. J. G. Alexander, Insular Manuscripts, 6th to the 9th Century (A Survey of Manuscripts Illuminated in the British Isles, 1; 1978), pp. 71–6 (no. 52, ills. 231–60).

Kempe, John (*c.*1380–1454), Abp. of *Canterbury. He first became prominent in the ecclesiastical courts and by 1414 he was *Dean of the Arches. He filled in turn the sees of *Rochester (1419), *Chichester (1421), London (1421), *York (1425), and Canterbury (1452). He was a prominent member of the Council of Regency for *Henry VI, in which he was a supporter of H. *Beaufort. During the years following 1430 he was a strong but ineffectual advocate of a policy of peace with France. In 1439 he was made a cardinal. In his later years he espoused the Lancastrian cause, and checked the Kentish rebellion of 1450; but he died before the struggle was far advanced. He was far more a politician than a Churchman, and took little interest in the care of his dioceses.

W. F. *Hook, Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury, 5 (1867), pp. 188–267. W. Ullmann, 'Eugenius IV, Cardinal Kemp, and Archbishop Chichele', in J. A. Watt and others (eds.), Medieval Studies Presented to Aubrey Gwynn, S.J. (Dublin, 1961), pp. 359–83. T. F. Tout in DNB 30 (1892), pp. 384–8, s.v. 'Kemp, John' [date of death erroneously given as 1447]; BRUO 2 (1958), pp. 1031–2.

Kempe, Margery (*c.*1373–after 1438), author of the Book of Margery Kempe. Born at Lynn, Norfolk, the daughter of John Burnham (d. 1413), who was several times Mayor of Lynn, *c.*1393 she married John Kempe (d. prob. 1431), burgess of Lynn, by whom she had 14 children. After she had received several visions following a period of madness, she and her husband went on a pilgrimage to *Canterbury. Her fervent denunciation of all pleasure aroused stiff opposition and the first taunts of *Lollardy, which later developed into formal accusations. In 1413 Margery and John took vows of chastity before Philip *Repington, Bp. of *Lincoln. She publicly rebuked Abp. *Arundel for the behaviour of his followers. In 1413 she went on a pilgrimage to the Holy Land. On her return she was prob. encouraged by *Julian of Norwich. She visited *Compostela in 1417 and *Norway and Danzig in 1433.

The Book of Margery Kempe, which is almost the sole source of information about the author, describes her travels and mystical experiences. She was endowed with the gift of tears and seems to have been favoured with singular signs of Christ's love, whereby for long periods she enjoyed consciousness of close communion with Him and developed a strong compassion for the sins of the world. Only one MS of the Book is known to exist. It was at one time in the possession of the *Carthusian house at Mount Grace, and from at least 1754 in the Butler-Bowden family; in 1980 it was acquired by the British Library and is now Add. MS 61823. Unrepresentative selections, prob. from another MS, were published by W. de Worde (prob. 1501).

Crit. edn. by S. B. Meech and H. E. Allen (EETS, orig. ser. 212; 1940. The projected 2nd vol. of introd. and other material was never pub.). Modern versions by W. Butler-Bowdon (London, 1936) and B. A. Windeatt (Penguin Classics, 1985), with bibl. K. Cholmeley, Margery Kempe: Genius and Mystic (1947); M. [S. F.] Thornton, Margery Kempe: An Example in the English Pastoral Tradition (1960); L. Collis, The Apprentice Saint (1964); C. W. Atkinson, Mystic and Pilgrim: The Book and the World of Margery Kempe (1983); J. C. Hirsh, The Revelations of Margery Kempe: Paramystical Practices in Late Medieval England (Leiden, etc., 1989). [M.] D. *Knowles, The English Mystical Tradition (1961), pp. 138–50. Id. in Dict. Sp. 8 (1974), cols. 1696–8, s.v.

Kempis, Thomas à. See THOMAS À KEMPIS.

Ken, Thomas (1637–1711), Bp. of *Bath and Wells. He was educated at Winchester and Hart Hall, Oxford, and in 1657 became a Fellow of New College, Oxford. After several pastoral cures he taught at Winchester College from 1672. Here he wrote a manual of devotion for boys and possibly his two famous morning and evening hymns, 'Awake, my soul, and with the sun' and 'Glory to Thee, my God, this night' (EH 257 and 267). In 1679 *Charles II appointed him chaplain to Princess Mary at The Hague, where he braved the anger of William of Orange in a matrimonial case. In 1683 as chaplain to Charles II he refused the use of his house to the royal mistress, Nell Gwyn. The King respected his boldness and, in 1684, conferred on him the bishopric of Bath and Wells, and it was Ken who gave the King absolution on his deathbed. Ken was one of the *Seven Bishops who refused to read the *Declaration of Indulgence at the command of *James II, but he declined to take the oath to William. Deposition from his see followed, and Ken then allied himself with the *Nonjurors. For the rest of his life he lived in retirement, refusing the offer of reinstatement on the death of Kidder (1703), who had held the see since his deposition. He opposed, however, the consecration of further nonjuring bishops. He lived an ascetic life as a celibate, and, true to the Laudian tradition, he wrote in his will: 'I die in the Holy Catholic and Apostolic Faith, professed by the whole Church, before the disunion of East and West: more particularly I die in the Communion of the Church of England, as it stand distinguished from all Papal and Puritan Innovations.' His Exposition on the Church Catechism; or, The Practice of Divine Love (1685) is a classic expression of Laudian doctrine. Feast day in ASB, 20 Mar.; in American BCP (1979), 21 Mar.

[Poetical] Works ed. W. Hawkins (4 vols., London, 1721); Prose Works ed. J. T. Round (ibid., 1838), with Life by W. Hawkins (orig. pub., London, 1713), repr., pp. 1–23. Other Lives by W. L. Bowles (2 vols. bound in 1, London, 1830), J. L. Anderson (anon., London, 1851), E. H. Plumptre (2 vols., ibid., 1888; 2nd edn. 1890), F. A. Clarke ('Leaders of Religion', London, 1896), and H. A. L. Rice (London, 1958). E. Marston, Thomas Ken and Izaak Walton (1908), pp. 3–78. [F.] J. Hoyles, The Edges of Augustanism: The Aesthetics of Spirituality in Thomas Ken, John Byrom and William Law (International Archives of the History of Ideas, 53; The Hague, 1972), pp. 9–77 and 151–3. W. Hunt in DNB 30 (1892), pp. 399–404.

Kenites. An obscure Semitic clan which belonged to the S. of Palestine and is listed among the pre-Israelite inhabitants of the land in Gen. 15: 19. It had several associations with the Hebrews, esp. with the tribe of *Judah: *Moses' father-in-law was a Kenite (Jgs. 1: 16), Jael the Kenite is responsible for the death of Sisera, the enemy of Israel (Jgs. 4–5), and the *Rechabites were apparently of Kenite origin. It has sometimes been held that the Kenites exercised an important influence on the shaping of Hebrew religion (the 'Kenite hypothesis' of the origins of Yahwism). Num. 24: 21 f. associates them with the name 'Cain'.

Kennett, White (1660–1728), Bp. of *Peterborough. Educated at *Westminster and at St Edmund Hall, Oxford, he was successively vicar of Ambrosden, Oxon (1685), tutor and vice-principal of St Edmund Hall (*c.*1690), Archdeacon of Huntingdon (1701), and Dean (1707) and Bp. (1718) of Peterborough. He was an active supporter of the Revolution of 1689, became a leading Low Churchman, and in the *Bangorian Controversy opposed the proceedings against B. *Hoadly. He was, however, a close friend of G. *Hickes, the *Nonjuror, whom he encouraged in the preparation of his Thesaurus. A keen antiquary, he was the author of a long list of works, including sermons. Among them were Parochial Antiquities (1695; a history of Ambrosden, etc.), Ecclesiastical Synods and Parliamentary Convocations (1701), Compleat History of England (1706), and Register and Chronicle, Ecclesiastical and Civil (1728). Kennett urged that in every collegiate church a dignity should be reserved for a student of its antiquities, and founded an Antiquarian and Historical Library for the use of his cathedral.

Many of Kennett's valuable unpub. collections are preserved in the British Library. Anonymous Life [by W. Newton] (London, 1730). Modern Life by G. V. Bennett (Thirlwall Prize Essay for 1955; CHS, 1957). T. Cooper in DNB 31 (1892), pp. 2–6.

Kennicott, Benjamin (1718–83), biblical scholar and Hebraist. By the generosity of friends he was enabled to enter Wadham College, Oxford, in 1744, where, while still an undergraduate, he published two dissertations. From 1747 to 1771 he was a Fellow of Exeter College, from 1767 to 1783 Radcliffe Librarian, and from 1770 till his death Canon of Christ Church. His life-work was the critical study of the Hebrew text of the OT, in which he was assisted by collations of MSS from many parts of Europe. His wife, whom he married in 1771, gave him considerable help in his researches. Their fruits were collected in his Vetus Testamentum Hebraicum cum variis lectionibus (2 vols., 1776–80), a work which established the important negative conclusion that the variants in the Heb. MSS of the OT are so slight as to be of minimal importance for establishing the correct text.

W. McKane, 'Benjamin Kennicott: An Eighteenth-Century Researcher', JTS NS 28 (1977), pp. 445–64. W. Michels in Dict. Bibl. 3 (1903), cols. 1887–9, s.v.

kenotic theories. Certain theories which are concerned to explain the condescension involved in the Incarnation. The title comes from the Greek verb (κενόω) in Phil. 2: 7, translated in the RV 'emptied himself'. A number of 19th-cent. *Lutheran theologians held that the Divine Son abandoned His attributes of deity, such as omnipotence, omniscience, and cosmic sovereignty, in order to become man. A more moderate theory, defended by C. *Gore, maintained that, within the sphere of the Incarnation, the deity so restrained its activity as to allow the existence in the Lord of a limited and genuinely human consciousness. The term κένωσις was used in patristic theology to describe the action of the Son in the Incarnation, but implied no special theory. Traditional orthodoxy has generally admitted a self-emptying of the Lord's deity only in the sense that, while remaining unimpaired, it accepted union with a physically and emotionally limited humanity.

The early exponents of the modern theory were G. Thomasius (Beiträge zur kirchlichen Christologie, 1845, and Christi Person und Werke, 1853) and W. F. Gess (Die Lehre von der Person Christi, 1854). Gore's modified form of this appears in his *Bampton Lectures and, more fully, in his essay 'The Consciousness of Our Lord in His Mortal Life', in Dissertations on Subjects connected with the Incarnation (1895), pp. 69–226. D. G. Dawe, 'A Fresh Look at the Kenotic Christologies', Scottish Journal of Theology, 15 (1962), pp. 337–49, with further refs. Imp. arts. by F. *Loofs in PRE (3rd edn.), 10 (1901), pp. 246–63 and in HERE 7 (1914), pp. 680–7; and esp. the valuable study by P. Henry, SJ, in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 5 (1957), cols. 7–161, s.v. 'Kenose', with bibl. G. W. H. Lampe (ed.), Patristic Greek Lexicon (1961), pp. 744–6, s.v. 'κένωσις'. See also works cited under CHRISTOLOGY and comm. on PHILIPPIANS, cited s.v.

Kensit, John (1853–1902), Protestant propagandist. An early supporter of the more extreme type of Protestantism, he started the City Protestant bookshop in Paternoster Row in 1885 and later used the Churchman's Magazine for the propagation of his opinions. In 1890 he became secretary of the newly-founded 'Protestant Truth Society' and from that date took an increasingly violent and individualist stand against what he believed to be Romanizing tendencies in the C of E. From 1898 to 1902 he organized resistance to the growth of 'ritualism' in the dioceses of London (e.g. at St Ethelburga's, Bishopsgate) and Liverpool, causing considerable friction and disturbance wherever he went. At the general election of 1900 he unsuccessfully contested Brighton as an Independent Conservative.

J. C. Wilcox, John Kensit: Reformer and Martyr [c.1903]. M. Wellings, 'The First Protestant Martyr of the Twentieth Century: the Life and Significance of John Kensit (1853–1902)', in D. Wood (ed.), Martyrs and Martyrologies (Studies in Church History, 30; Oxford, 1993), pp. 347–58.

Kent, Maid of. See BARTON, ELIZABETH.

Kentigern, St (d. c.612), also known as St Mungo, missionary in Scotland. A 12th-cent. Life, only partly reliable, states that he was a grandson of a British prince in S. Scotland and brought up by St Serf in a monastic school at Culross on the Firth of Forth; later he became bishop of the Britons of Strathclyde and founded the Church of Glasgow; after being driven out by persecution he preached in Wales (where he is credited with the foundation of *St Asaph) and later in Cumbria, but eventually returned to Strathclyde and was buried in Glasgow, where his reputed tomb stands in the cathedral. The only known facts are his connection with Strathclyde and the approximate date of his death. Feast day, 13 Jan.

Life by Jocelin, monk of Furness (c.1180) and a fragment of an anonymous Life (c.1150), ed. A. P. *Forbes, Lives of S. Ninian and S. Kentigern (Historians of Scotland, 5; 1874), pp. 159–252, with Eng. tr. pp. 27–133. J. MacQueen, 'Yvain, Ewen and Owein ap Urien', Transactions of the Dumfriesshire and Galloway Natural History and Antiquarian Society, 3rd ser. 33 (for 1954–5; 1956), pp. 107–31; K. H. Jackson, 'The Sources for the Life of St Kentigern', in N. K. Chadwick and others, Studies in the Early British Church (Cambridge, 1958), pp. 273–357; D. McRoberts, 'The Death of St Kentigern of Glasgow', Innes Review, 24 (1973), pp. 43–50; A. Macquarrie, 'The Career of Saint Kentigern of Glasgow: Vitae, Lectiones, and Glimpses of Fact', ibid., 37 (1986), pp. 3–24.

Kenya, Christianity in. A few African converts were made during the two centuries of Portuguese domination of the E. African coast, but no lasting Church was established, although a number of both Portuguese and African Christians died for their faith in a Muslim uprising in Mombasa in 1631. Modern Christianity dates from 1844, when Johann Ludwig Krapf of the *CMS settled at Rabai, near Mombasa, but little progress was made by missionaries in this predominantly Muslim area until the 1870s, when attention was drawn to the E. African slave trade and a settlement for freed slaves was established at Freretown, Mombasa. This eventually prospered and the first Kenyans were ordained in 1885. The Uganda Railway, begun in 1896, gave access to the cool, densely populated central highland and RC and Protestant missionaries quickly increased in number. In 1902 work began in W. Kenya. The principal RC missionary societies were the *Holy Ghost Fathers, *Consolata Fathers, and *Mill Hill Fathers; the principal Protestant ones were the CMS, the Church of *Scotland Mission, and the American African Inland Mission.

The Kikuyu of Central Kenya were deeply suspicious of the missions which they saw as allies of the White settlers who were taking their land. Missionaries found themselves caught between the settlers who disparaged them for being 'pro-native' and African politicians who judged them weak in defence of African rights. J. H. *Oldham of the International Missionary Council helped to defeat attempts of the settlers to introduce forced labour, and W. E. Owen, Archdeacon of Kavirondo, fought civil rights cases on behalf of Africans. Bitter controversy broke out in 1929 over the attempt by some Protestant missions, led by J. W. Arthur of the Church of Scotland Mission, to get the practice of clitoridectomy among the Kikuyu outlawed. Many Kikuyu left the mission churches and schools on this account and started their own free of missionary control. When anger over land alienation erupted into the Mau Mau uprising in 1952, some Christians, esp. those influenced by the East African Revival Movement, refused to take the secret Mau Mau oath. A number died for this refusal and are commemorated in the Anglican Cathedral at Murang'a.

The years following political independence in 1964 saw a huge influx into the Churches. The RC and Anglican are by far the largest, but the African Inland Church and the *Seventh-day Adventists are also strong, while independent Church movements have continued to grow and multiply. They include the Mario Legio, the largest breakaway Church from RCism in Africa. By 1980 over 70 per cent of the population claimed to be Christian.

D. B. Barrett and others (eds.), Kenya Churches Handbook: The Development of Kenyan Christianity, 1498 1973 (Kisumu, Kenya [1973]), with extensive bibl. Other general works include H. R. A. Philp, A New Day in Kenya (1936 [surveys position of various Churches]); R. Oliver, The Missionary Factor in East Africa (1952), passim; G. S. P. Freeman-Grenville, 'The Coast, 1498–1840', in R. Oliver and G. Mathew (eds.), History of East Africa, 1 (Oxford, 1963), pp. 129–68, passim; A. J. Temu, British Protestant Missions (1972); R. W. Strayer, The Making of Mission Communities in East Africa: Anglicans and Africans in Colonial Kenya, 1875 1935 (1978); D. Sandgren, Christianity and the Kikuyu (New York [1989]). G. S. P. Freeman-Grenville, The Mombasa Rising against the Portuguese, 1631, from sworn evidence (Fontes Historiae Africanae, 1980), incl. text and Eng. tr. of the processus of the martyrs of Mombasa. E. Stock, The History of the Church Missionary Society, 1 (1899), pp. 458–62; 2 (1899), pp. 124–36, 427–34; 3 (1899), pp. 82–93, 406–9, 731–5; 4 (1916), pp. 75–82, and 409–24; G. Hewitt, The Problems of Success: A History of the Church Missionary Society 1910-1942, 1 (1971), pp. 121–73. R. Macpherson, The Presbyterian Church in Kenya (Nairobi, 1970). F. B. Welbourn and B. A. Ogot, A Place to Feel at Home: A Study of Two Independent Churches in Western Kenya (1966 [on the Church of Christ in Africa and the African Israel Church Nineveh]). E. N. Wanyoike [grandson], An African Pastor: The Life and Work of the Rev. Wanyoike Kamawe 1888–1970 (Nairobi, 1974). Scattered references in A. Hastings, The Church in Africa 1450–1950 (Oxford History of the Christian Church, 1994) (see index).

Kepler, Johann (1571–1630), German astronomer. He was educated at *Tübingen, where he received instruction in *Copernican principles, and in 1594 was appointed professor of mathematics at Graz. In 1600 he went to Prague, to Tycho Brahe, and there he became court astronomer in 1601. In 1613 he took part in the Diet of Ratisbon, where he defended the Gregorian reform of the calendar against the many attacks of his fellow-Protestants. He was led to his discovery of the three laws of planetary motion, to which his fame is chiefly due, in part by *Neoplatonist mystical doctrines and also by the observations of Tycho Brahe (1545–1601). His understanding of nature was in many respects pantheistic, though he accepted the traditional authority of the Bible. He held the world to be an order expressing the being of God Himself, particularly in the relations between the sun, the image of God the Father, and the planets. The appearance of a new star in 1604–5 caused him to propose in his De Jesu Christi Servatoris Nostri Vero Anno Natalitio (1606) and later writings a new theory concerning the star of the *Magi, which he tried to explain by the unusual conjunction of Mars, Saturn, and Jupiter in the sign of the Taurus, calculated by him for the beginning of the year 6 BC.

Works ed. C. Frisch (8 vols., Frankfurt, 1858–71), also ed. W. von Dyck, M. Caspar, and others (22 vols., Munich. 1937 ff.). M. Caspar, Johann Kepler (Stuttgart, 1948; Eng. tr., 1959); C. Baumgardt, Johannes Kepler: Life and Letters (1952). Johann Kepler, 1571-1630: A Tercentenary Commemoration of his Life and Work. A Series of Papers prepared under the Auspices of the History of Science Society (Baltimore, 1931); A. and P. Beer (eds.), Kepler: Four Hundred Years. Proceedings of Conferences held in honour of Johannes Kepler (Vistas in Astronomy, 18; Oxford, etc., 1975), with papers on his religious and philosophical beliefs, pp. 317–96. J. Hübner, Die Theologie Johannes Keplers zwischen Orthodoxie und Naturwissenschaft (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, 50; 1975). J. V. Field, Kepler's Geometric Cosmology (1988). Popular presentation by A. Koestler, The Sleepwalkers (1959), pp. 225–422, pub. separately as The Watershed: A Biography of Johannes Kepler (1961). M. Caspar (ed.), Bibliographia Kepleriana (Munich, 1936; 2nd edn., 1968), with continuation by M. List in A. and P. Beer, op. cit., pp. 955–1010.

kerygma (Gk. κήρυγμα, 'preaching'). The element of proclamation in Christian apologetic, as contrasted with '*didache' or its instructional aspects.

Kerygma Petri. See PETER, PREACHING OF.

Keswick Convention. An annual gathering of Evangelical Christians for prayer, Bible study, and addresses. It began at Keswick in 1875 with the aim of 'the promotion of Practical Holiness'. Its motto is 'All One in Christ Jesus'. The meeting is for a week every year, and it attracts visitors from many countries.

C. F. Harford (ed.), The Keswick Convention [1907]; S. Barabas, So Great Salvation: The History and Message of the Keswick Convention (1952); J. C. Pollock, The Keswick Story: The Authorized History of the Keswick Convention (1964). The Convention also publishes an annual report, Keswick Week.

Kethubim (Heb. כְּתוּבִים, 'writings'). The Jewish name for the third and last division of the OT, more commonly known to Christian scholars as the '*Hagiographa' (q.v.).

Ketteler, Wilhelm Emmanuel von (1811–77), Bp. of Mainz from 1850 and a pioneering figure in modern Catholic social thought. His interest in social questions is reflected in his Die Arbeiterfrage und das Christenthum (1864), though his most important pronouncement was made in a sermon preached at the episcopal conference at Fulda in 1869, in which he drew out the contradictions between economic liberalism and Christian principles. At the First *Vatican Council (1869–70) he opposed the definition of Papal infallibility on the ground that its promulgation was 'inopportune'; he returned to Germany before the voting took place, but subsequently accepted the Council's decrees (Aug. 1870). He also opposed the *Kulturkampf, championing the freedom of the RC Church in Germany from state control.

Sämtliche Werke und Briefe, ed. E. Iserloh and others (Mainz, 1977 ff.). Eng. tr. by R. J. Ederer of six sermons, Die grossen socialen Fragen der Gegenwart (pub. Mainz, 1849; ed. E. Deuerlein, 1948), as The Social Teaching of Wilhelm Emmanuel von Ketteler (Washington, DC [1981]). Lives by O. Pfülf (3 vols., Mainz, 1899), F. Vigener (Munich, 1924), and L. Lenhart (3 vols., Mainz [1966–8]). E. Fastenrath, Bischof Ketteler und die Kirche (Beiträge zur neueren Geschichte der katholischen Theologie, 13; Essen [1971]). A. M. Birke, Bischof Ketteler und der deutsche Liberalismus (Veröffentlichungen der Kommission für Zeitgeschichte bei der Katholischen Akademie in Bayern, Reihe B, Bd. 9; 1971). K. J. Rivinus, Bischof Wilhelm Emmanuel von Ketteler und die Infallibilität des Papstes (Europäische Hochschulschriften, Reihe 23, Bd. 48; 1976). Series of studies by E. Iserloh (Abhandlungen der Geistes- und Sozialwissenschaftlichen Klasse der Akademie der Wissenschaften und der Literatur, Mainz, 1975, no. 3; 1978, no. 7; and 1987, no. 8). L. Lenhart in NCE 8 (1967), pp. 170 f.; E. Iserloh in TRE 18 (1989), pp. 109–13, both s.v.

Kettlewell, John (1653–95), devotional writer and *Nonjuror. He was educated at St Edmund Hall, Oxford, and in 1675 became a Fellow of Lincoln College, where he was tutor from 1677 to 1684. He was ordained in 1678 and about the same time wrote his first book, The Measures of Christian Obedience, which, however, was not published till 1681. It had a great success and led to his appointment as vicar of Coleshill, Warwickshire, in 1682. In 1687 he wrote a popular devotional work, The Practical Believer, which was widely read. During the revolution of 1689 he preached against rebellion under any pretext, an attitude which resulted in his being deprived of his living in 1690. He spent his remaining years in retirement in London, writing devotional books and controversial tracts. His Companion for the Persecuted (1693) was esteemed as a book of comfort among his Nonjuring fellow-sufferers. His advocacy of a relief fund for the deprived clergy came to nothing owing to the opposition of the government.

Complete Works (2 vols., 1719). [F. Lee,] Memoirs of the Life of Mr. John Kettlewell (1718; repr. in his works); T. T. *Carter (ed.), The Life and Times of John Kettlewell (1895). W. D. Macray in DNB 31 (1892), pp. 80–2.

Kevin, St (d. 618), also named 'Coemgen', Abbot of Glendalough, Co. Wicklow. The sources for his life are late and untrustworthy. Acc. to these, he was born in Leinster of royal descent, given the name of Kevin (i.e. 'fair-begotten') at his baptism, and educated by St *Petrock during the latter's stay in Ireland. For a time he later established his permanent foundation at Glendalough, the parent of several other monasteries and destined to become, with its seven churches, one of the chief centres of pilgrimage in Ireland. Feast day, 3 June.

Three Irish Lives pr. by C. Plummer in Bethada Naem nÉrenn (1922), 1, pp. 125–67; Eng. tr., 2, pp. 121–61. One of the Latin Lives is contained in C. Plummer, Vitae Sanctorum Hiberniae, 1 (1910), pp. 234–57, the other in W. W. Heist (ed.), Vitae Sanctorum Hiberniae ex Codice olim Salmanticensi (Subsidia Hagiographica, 28; 1965), pp. 361–5. L. Price, 'Glendalough: St Kevin's road', in J. Ryan, SJ (ed.), Essays and Studies presented to Professor Eoin MacNeill (Dublin, 1940), pp. 244–71. P. Grosjean, SJ, 'Notes d'hagiographie celtique', 13: 'Relations mutuelles des Vies latines de S. Cáemgen de Glenn Dá Locha', Anal. Boll. 63 (1945), pp. 122–9; and 20: 'Les Vies latines de S. Cáemgen et de S. Patrice du manuscrit 121 des Bollandistes', ibid. 70 (1952), pp. 313–15.

Khomiakov, Alexis Stepanovich (1804–60), Russian philosophical theologian. He was born at Moscow into a family which fled with him from the city in 1812, when their house was burnt by the French. Later he studied literature and mathematics at the University of Moscow. After two attempts at a military career (1822 and 1828), he abandoned it for the study of art. After marriage in 1836 he found his vocation in the service of 'true Russia' and became with Ivan Kireevsky one of the founders of the Slavophile movement, which he sought to build up on Orthodox Christianity. He attacked the scholastic rationalism ('Aristotelianism') of W. philosophy and was esp. critical of German Idealism (F. W. J. von *Schelling and G. W. F. *Hegel), then influential in Russia. Over against the RC ('unity without freedom') and Protestant ('freedom without unity') conceptions of the Church, Khomiakov saw in the Orthodox Church an organic society of which Christ was the Head and the Holy Spirit the Soul and whose essence was 'freedom in the spirit at one with itself'. Of this Church the essential quality was inward holiness, and those who partook of it could be saved even though not in external communion with it. Here, as in other dogmatic matters, Khomiakov's liberal and independent attitude came under ecclesiastical suspicion during his own lifetime; but since his death, and in particular during the 20th cent., his conception of the Church (often summed up in the term '*sobornost') has exercised considerable influence on Orthodox ecclesiology, Greek as well as Russian. His writings were largely occasional. From 1856 until his death he collaborated in the Russkaia Beseda, a review newly founded to further Slavophile ideals. A number of essays and polemical writings which originally appeared in French were reissued by his son Dmitri Alexeevich Khomiakov, as L'Église latine et le protestantisme au point de vue de l'Église d'Orient (Lausanne, 1872). Khomiakov also cultivated close relations with some English theologians, notably (from 1844) W. *Palmer ('of Magdalen'), with whom he stayed on a visit to Oxford in 1847.

Collected edn. of his works by his son, D. A. Khomiakov (8 vols., Moscow, 1900). His correspondence with Palmer, and an Eng. tr. of his essay, 'The Church is One', are pr. in W. J. Birkbeck (ed.), Russia and the English Church during the Last Fifty Years, 1 (1895). Eng. tr. of another of his essays in A. Schmemann (ed.), Ultimate Questions: An Anthology of Modern Russian Religious Thought (New York, 1965), pp. 29–69. Life by V. Z. Zavitnevitch (2 vols., Kiev, 1902–13); study by N. *Berdyaev (Moscow, 1912). G. Samarine, Préface aux œuvres théologiques de A. S. Khomiakov (Unam Sanctam, 7; 1939). A. Gratieux, A. S. Khomiakov et le mouvement slavophile (2 vols., ibid., 5 and 6; 1939). P. Baron, Un Théologien laïc orthodoxe russe au XIX^e siècle, Alexis Stépanovitch Khomiakov (1804 1860) (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 127; 1940). E. C. Suttner, Offenbarung, Gnade und Kirche bei A. S. Chomjakov (Das östliche Christentum, NF 20; 1967). A. Walicki, The Slavophile Controversy (Oxford, 1975; Eng. tr. of a work pub. Warsaw, 1964), pp. 179–237.

Kiddush (Heb. קִדּוּשׁ, 'sanctification'). The Jewish ceremony of the sanctification of the *Sabbath or other holy day. The rite is thought to go back to pre-Christian times. On Friday afternoon the household assembles for the evening meal and, at the beginning of the Sabbath, the head fills a cup of wine and water and says over it the Kiddush or 'Blessing' of the day. The same custom is observed on the eves of festivals, when the Kiddush makes reference to the festival as well as to the Sabbath. It has been argued that the custom was observed also by *chaburoth, and that Christ's blessing of the cup at the *Last Supper was the Kiddush of the Passover. This theory is defended by alleged reminiscences of the idea and phraseology of the Kiddush in Eucharistic prayers, quoted or described in early Christian writings, e.g. the Didache, *Ignatius, and *Justin. This theory presupposes the *Synoptic synchronism of the Last Supper with the Passover meal. Other scholars, preferring the Johannine dating of the Last Supper 24 hours before the Passover, hold that the blessing over the cup was the ordinary Jewish *berakah at the end of a chaburah meal.

J. Elbogen, 'Eingang und Ausgang des Sabbats nach Talmudischen Quellen', in Festschrift zu Israel Lewy's siebzigstem Geburtstag (Breslau, 1911), pp. 173–87. Text and Eng. tr. of Kiddush rite in The Authorised Daily Prayer Book of the United Hebrew Congregations of the Commonwealth, tr. by S. Singer, 3rd edn., rev. E. Cashdan, ed. I. Jakobovits (1990), pp. 275–6 (Sabbath evening), 427–8 (Sabbath morning), 633–6 (festival evenings), 695–6 (festival mornings). A. Rothkoff in Encyclopaedia Judaica, 10 (Jerusalem, 1972), pp. 974–7, s.v.

The identification of the Last Supper with the Kiddush ceremony, orig. suggested by F. *Spitta, was first defended by G. H. Box, 'The Jewish Antecedents of the Eucharist', JTS 3 (1901–2), pp. 357–69. W. O. E. Oesterley, The Jewish Background of the Christian Liturgy (1925), esp. pp. 79–81 and 167–77; H. *Lietzmann, Messe und Herrenmahl (1926), pp. 202–10; Eng. tr. (Leiden, 1979), pp. 165–71; F. Gavin, The Jewish Antecedents of the Christian Sacraments (1928), esp. pp. 64–9; cf., however, J. Jeremias, Die Abendmahlsworte Jesu (1935), pp. 18–21; 3rd edn. (1960), pp. 20–3; Eng. tr. (1966), pp. 26–9.

Kidron. See CEDRON.

Kierkegaard, Søren Aabye (1813–55), Danish philosopher. The son of a wealthy hosier who was a devout *Lutheran, he spent practically his whole life at Copenhagen. After a secluded and unhappy childhood his university years were given over partly to idleness and amusements, partly to an inborn melancholy. He passed his theological examination in 1840, and in the following year became engaged to Regina Olsen; but, feeling marriage to be impossible, he broke off the engagement shortly afterwards. In the twelve years from 1843, the year of the publication of his first book, Enten-Eller ('Either-Or'), till his death, he produced the series of works which were to place him in the first rank of modern philosophical writers, though his influence was hampered for a long time by the fact of his writing in Danish. In 1846 he was subjected to a long and cruel attack by the comic Copenhagen paper, Den Corsaren, and in 1854 he launched his great assault on the Established Church, criticizing it because it had sought to accommodate the Christian revelation to human desires.

He was one of the most personal of thinkers, and his successive publications mark the development of his thought from the aesthetic to the religious and soon to the definitely Christian point of view. He was reared in the atmosphere of *Hegelian dialectics—the only philosophy then taught in Denmark; he attacked this interpretation of Christianity as 'the system', esp. in the Philosophiske Smuler (1844; Eng. tr., 'Philosophical Fragments') and Afsluttende uvidenskabelig Efterskrift (1846; 'Concluding Unscientific Postscript'). He opposed to it his own powerful '*Existential' dialectics, pointing out with uncompromising vigour, though often in abstruse terminology, the dialectics involved in the position of man 'existing before God'. The whole complex of sin and redemption was described with profound psychological insight in Begrebet Angest (1844; Eng. tr., 'The Concept of Dread') and Sygdommen til Döden (1849; Eng. tr., 'Sickness unto Death'). His thought, though deeply original and in its ascetic tendencies showing a marked leaning to Catholic ideals, reflects at many points its Lutheran ancestry, e.g. in its opposition of faith to reason and the stress laid on the relation of the individual soul with God almost to the exclusion of the idea of a Christian community. His often-repeated statement, 'truth is subjectivity', though it should not be understood in the sense of a shallow individualism, links up truth with the existing subject instead of with its object, and so, in the last resort, makes its communication to other subjects impossible. Kierkegaard draws the theological consequences from this position by denying the possibility of an objective system of doctrinal truths.

As contrasted with his philosophical writings, his properly religious books, e.g. the Christelige Taler (1850; Eng. tr., 'Christian Discourses') and Indövelse i Christendom (1850; Eng. tr., 'Training in Christianity'), have aroused less interest, but they are in many respects of great devotional value and show a profound understanding of the redemptive work of Christ and the meaning of the Cross. His total influence on contemporary thought is very considerable. Both the *Dialectical Theology of K. *Barth and his followers and the Existential philosophy, esp. as expounded by M. *Heidegger, owe their inspiration to him.

Collected edn. of Samlede Værker by A. B. Drachmann, J. L. Heiberg, and H. O. Lange (15 vols., Copenhagen, 1901–36; ed. P. P. Rohde, 20 vols., ibid., 1962–4); of his 'Papirer' by P. A. Heiberg, V. Kuhr, and E. Torsting (11 vols. in 19 parts, ibid., 1909–48, repr., with additional material ed. N. Thulstrup, 16 vols., ibid., 1968–78). Breve og Aktstykker vedrørende Søren Kierkegaard, ed. N. Thulstrup (2 vols., Copenhagen, 1953–4). Eng. tr. of Kierkegaard's Writings, ed. H. V. Hong (Princeton, NJ, 1978 ff.). Earlier trs. of many individual works by W. Lowrie, A. Dru, D. F. Swenson, and L. Swenson; details of those pub. before 1955 in bibl. by J. Himmelstrup, listed below, pp. 38–43 (nos. 1286–516a). Selection from his Journals tr. and ed. A. Dru (London and Princeton, NJ, 1938); Journals for 1853–5 ed. and tr. R. G. Smith (1965). Life by W. Lowrie (Princeton, NJ, and London, 1938); shorter Life by id. (ibid., 1942); biog. study by J. Thompson (London, 1974). Modern studies include E. Hirsch, Kierkegaard Studien (2 vols., 1933); J. Wahl, Études kierkegaardiennes (1938; with bibl.); J. Hohlenberg, Søren Kierkegaard (Copenhagen, 1940; Eng. tr., 1954); R. Thomte, Kierkegaard's Philosophy of Religion (Princeton, NJ, and London, 1948); H. Diem, Die Existenzdialektik von Sören Kierkegaard (Zollikon, 1950; Eng. tr., 1959); J. Collins, The Mind of Kierkegaard (Chicago, 1953; London, 1954); T. H. Croxall, Kierkegaard Commentary (1956); L. Dupré, Kierkegaards Theologie (Theologische Bibliotheek, 1958; Eng. tr., 1963); P. Rohde, Søren Kierkegaard (Hamburg, 1959; Eng. tr., 1963); N. Thulstrup, Kierkegaards Forhold til Hegel (1967; Eng. tr., Princeton, NJ, 1980); P. Sponheim, Kierkegaard on Christ and Christian Coherence (1968); N. Viallaneix, Écoute, Kierkegaard: Essai sur la communication de la parole (2 vols., 1979); J. W. Elrod, Kierkegaard and Christendom (Princeton, NJ [1981]); A. Hannay, Kierkegaard (Arguments of the Philosophers, 1982); B. H. Kirmmse, Kierkegaard in Golden Age Denmark (Indiana Series in the Philosophy of Religion, Bloomington and Indianapolis [1990]); M. J. Ferreira, Transforming Vision: Imagination and Will in Kierkegaardian Faith (Oxford, 1991); G. Pattison, Kierkegaard: The Aesthetic and the Religious (1992); D. R. Law, Kierkegaard as Negative Theologian (Oxford Theological Monographs, 1993). Good introd. by P. Gardiner, Kierkegaard (Past Masters, Oxford and New York, 1988). Series of studies [largely in Eng.] in Bibliotheca Kierkegaardiana, ed. N. and M. M. Thulstrup (16 vols., Copenhagen, 1978–88). J. Himmelstrup, Søren Kierkegaard International Bibliography (Copenhagen, 1962); A. Jørgensen, Søren Kierkegaard-litteratur 1961–1970 (Aarhus, 1971); id., Søren Kierkegaard-litteratur 1971–1980 (ibid., 1983). H. Schröer in TRE 18 (1989), pp. 138–55, s.v.

Kikuyu. The village in *Kenya where a Missionary Conference of Anglicans, Presbyterians, and other Protestants was held in June 1913, under the leadership of the Bps. of Mombasa (W. G. Peel) and Uganda (J. J. Willis). A federation of the constituent Churches was proposed, on the basis of common acceptance of the *Apostles' and *Nicene Creeds and the recognition of common membership between the Churches in the federation, carrying with it the right of receiving Communion in any of them. Strong opposition was raised by F. *Weston, Bp. of Zanzibar, who appealed to the Abp. of *Canterbury. The latter gave his 'opinion' that Nonconformists in these areas might be admitted to Communion in Anglican churches, but that Anglicans should not seek Communion at the hands of Nonconformist ministers.

J. J. Willis, The Kikuyu Conference (1914); [R. T. *Davidson,] Abp. of Canterbury, Kikuyu (1915); H. M. Smith, Frank [Weston], Bp. of Zanzibar (1926), ch. 8.

Kilham, Alexander (1762–98), founder of the '*Methodist New Connexion'. The son of *Methodist parents, he was admitted a preacher in 1785. After J. *Wesley's death in 1791, he became leader of the radical wing of the movement and advocated complete separation from the Established Church and lay representation in all Church courts. In several pamphlets, of which the most notorious was The Progress of Liberty (1795), he expounded his views with vigour, and even violence, and in 1797 was in consequence expelled by the Methodist Conference. In 1798 he founded the New Connexion, but died later in the same year.

Autobiog., ed. J. Grundell and R. Hall (Nottingham [*c.*1799]). Anon. Life [by J. Blackwell], based on materials supplied by his widow and daughter (London, 1838). Shorter Life by W. J. Townsend (ibid. [1890]). A. Gordon in DNB 31 (1892), pp. 102 f.

Kilian, St (d. *c.*689), 'Apostle of Franconia'. A native of *Ireland, Kilian was probably already a bishop when he went as a missionary to the Franks and established his headquarters at Würzburg. Acc. to the most ancient account, he converted the local ruler, Duke Gozbert, and much of the population of E. Franconia and Thuringia, before he was put to death in the duke's absence through the enmity of his wife. His feast day, 8 July, is that of the solemn translation of his remains in 752 to the cathedral of Würzburg, of which he is the patron saint. Despite the fame of the early medieval library of Würzburg in Kilian's day, no books from his lifetime are extant.

His Acta and Passio, pr. in AASS, Jul. 2 (1721), pp. 612–18. Modern crit. edn. of Passio Kiliani Martyris by W. Levison in MGH, Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, 5 (1910), pp. 711–28 (text, pp. 722–8). A. Bigelmair, 'Die Passio des heiligen Kilian und seine Gefährten', in Herbipolis Jubilans: 1200 Jahre Bistum Würzburg. Festschrift zur Säkularfeier der Erhebung der Kiliansreliquien (Würzburg, 1952), pp. 1–25. B. Bischoff and J. Hofmann, Libri Sancti Kyliani: Die Würzburger Schreibschule und die Dombibliothek im VIII. und IX. Jahrhundert (Quellen und Forschungen zur Geschichte des Bistums und Hochstifts Würzburg, 6; 1952). J. Dienemann, Der Kunst des heiligen Kilian im 8. und 9. Jahrhundert (ibid. 10, 1955); cf. A. Gwynn, SJ, 'New Light on St Kilian', Irish Ecclesiastical Record, 6th ser. 83 (1957), pp. 1–16. A. Wendehorst, 'Die Iren und die Christianisierung Mainfrankens', in H. Löwe (ed.), Die Iren und Europa im früheren Mittelalter, 1 (Stuttgart, 1982), pp. 319–29, with bibl.

Kilwardby, Robert (d. 1279), Abp. of *Canterbury. A master of arts in the University of Paris, he made his reputation by commentaries on the grammatical works of Priscian and Donatus and the logic and ethics of *Aristotle. Returning to England, he entered the *Dominican Order and studied theology at Oxford. He was elected provincial prior for England in 1261. He was consecrated Abp. of Canterbury in 1273, on the nomination of Pope *Gregory X, and was assiduous in visitations and in works of charity. In 1277 he visited Oxford and in conjunction with the masters of the University he issued a condemnation of 30 propositions in grammar, logic, and natural philosophy. The condemnations concerning natural philosophy were chiefly directed against certain views maintained by *Thomas Aquinas, notably those connected with the doctrine of the unity of form, a view which seemed to Kilwardby irreconcilable with the Christian faith. In 1278 he was made a cardinal and translated to the see of Porto in Italy. He died at Viterbo.

Kilwardby wrote the 'De ortu scientiarum', a classification of knowledge, largely based on Aristotle. He also wrote an important commentary on the 'Sentences' of *Peter Lombard, and treatises on relation, time, imagination, and conscience. He was responsible for organizing large-scale indexes of patristic writings, mainly of St *Augustine. For this purpose the texts were divided into sections and provided with summaries, an arrangement which has left traces in modern editions.

Kilwardby's In Donati Artem Maiorem III, ed. L. Schmücker (Brixen, 1984). De ortu scientiarum, ed. A. G. Judy, OP (Auctores Britannici Medii Aevi, 4; London and Toronto, 1976), with extensive bibl. F. Stegmüller, 'Les Questions du Commentaire des Sentences de Robert Kilwardby', RTAM 6 (1934), pp. 55–79, 215–28, with text of the questions; the quaestio De natura theologiae [the prologue of the Commentary], ed. id. (Opuscula et Textus, series scholastica, 17; Münster, 1935); Quaestiones on the Sentences, ed. E. Gössmann and others (Bayerische Akademie der Wissenschaften Veröffentlichungen der Kommission für die Herausgabe ungedruckter Texte aus der mittelalterlichen Geisteswelt, 10, 12, 13, 16, 17, and 19; Munich, 1982–95). De natura relationis, ed. L. Schmücker (Lenggries and Schloss Hohenburg, 1980). De tempore and De spiritu fantastico, ed. P. O. Lewry, OP (Auctores Britannici Medii Aevi, 9; 1987; Eng. tr. and introd. by A. Broadie, ibid. 9 (2) [1993]). M.-D. Chenu, OP, 'Le "De Conscientia" de R. Kilwardby, O.P., † 1279', RSPT 16 (1927), pp. 318–26, with text of questions. D. A. Callus, OP, 'The "Tabulae Super Originalia Patrum" of Robert Kilwardby, O.P.', in Studia Mediaevalia in Honorem Admodum Reverendi Patris Raymundi Josephi Martin . . . LXXum Natalem Diem Agentis (Bruges [1949]), pp. 243–70. The Injunctions of Archbishop Kilwardby 1276 [on his Visitation of the University of Oxford], ed. H. W. G[arrod], privately pr. (Oxford, 1929). H.-F. Dondaine, OP, 'Le "De 43 Quaestionibus" de Robert Kilwardby', Archivum Fratrum Praedicatorum, 47 (1977), pp. 5–50, incl. text. F. *Ehrle, SJ, 'Ein Schreiben des Erzbischofs von Canterbury Robert Kilwardby zur Rechtfertigung seiner Lehrverurtheilung von 18. März 1277', Archiv für Literatur- und Kirchengeschichte des Mittelalters, 5 (1889), pp. 607–32, with text. E. M. F. Sommer-Seckendorff, Studies in the Life of Robert Kilwardby, O.P. (Dissertationes Historicae, 8; Rome, 1937), with bibl. Kaeppeli, 3 (1980), pp. 320–5, s.v. 'Robertus Kilwardby'; BRUO 2 (1958), pp. 1051–2. M. D. Chenu, OP, in DTC 8 (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 2354–6, s.v.; J. A. Weisheipl, OP, in NCE 12 (1967), p. 533, s.v. 'Robert Kilwardby'.

Kimbangu, Simon (*c.*1889–1951), Church founder. A member of the *Baptist Church of Lower *Zaire, he was baptized in 1915. After temporary employment as a catechist, he experienced a visionary calling while in Kinshasa and returned to his village home at Nkamba; here his healing ministry soon drew vast crowds. The British Baptist missionaries were unsupportive; RC missionaries and Belgian colonial officials wholly opposed. Kimbangu was arrested six months after beginning his ministry, was tried on a charge of sedition and sentenced to death but, on the appeal of the Baptist authorities to the King of the Belgians, the sentence was commuted to life imprisonment. He died, in prison, in Oct. 1951. Many of his followers, including a number of Baptist deacons, were arrested and deported to other parts of the Congo. This dispersal contributed to the spread of the movement which continued underground in various forms until the 1950s when a legal Church (Église de Jésus-Christ sur la Terre par le prophète Simon Kimbangu) was established, led by Kimbangu's son, Joseph Diangienda. Its ritual centre remains in Nkamba to which Kimbangu's body was translated in 1960, the year of political independence of the Belgian Congo (now Zaire). It claims some millions of members and was admitted to the *World Council of Churches in 1969.

M.-L. Martin, Kirche ohne Weisse (Basle [1971]; Eng. tr., Kimbangu: An African Prophet and his Church, Oxford [1975]); W. Ustorf, Afrikanische Initiative: Das aktive Leiden des Propheten Simon Kimbangu (Studien zur interkulturellen Geschichte des Christentums, 5; Berne, 1975). J. Chomé, La Passion de Simon Kimbangu (Brussels [1959]). P. Raymaekers, 'Histoire de Simon Kimbangu, prophète, d'après les écrivains Nfinangani et Nzungu (1921)', Archives de Sociologie des Religions, 31 (1971), pp. 15–42; C. Irvine, 'The Birth of the Kimbanguist Movement in the Bas-Zaire 1921', Journal of Religion in Africa, 6 (1974), pp. 23–76, with docs.; H. Desroche and P. Raymaekers, 'Départ d'une prophète, arrivée d'une église. Textes et recherches sur la mort de Simon Kimbangu et sur sa survivance', Archives de Sciences Sociales des Religions, 42 (1976), pp. 117–62. D. J. Mackay, 'Simon Kimbangu and the B.M.S. tradition', Journal of Religion in Africa, 17 (1987), pp. 113–71. See also bibl. to ZAIRE, CHRISTIANITY IN.

Kindred and Affinity, Table of. This Table, published by Abp. M. *Parker in 1563 and printed by custom at the end of the BCP, is based on the degrees of intermarriage prohibited in Lev. 18. It follows J. *Calvin's interpretation, namely that marriage is forbidden between any two persons related more nearly than, or as nearly as, any pair mentioned in Lev. 18, in contrast with M. *Luther's view, favoured by *Henry VIII, that only those marriages are forbidden by God's law which are expresssly named in Lev. 18. The intention of the Table was to set out clearly the marriages forbidden by Divine law and therefore incapable of being allowed by dispensation. Can. 99 of 1604 gave the 1563 Table canonical authority in the C of E, and although it judged such marriages to be 'incestuous and unlawful, and consequently . . . dissolved as void from the beginning', at law they were voidable only, until the Marriage Act 1835 ('Lord *Lyndhurst's Act') brought the State law more nearly into line with that of the Church. In 1946 Can. 99 was amended by canon to allow marriage with a deceased wife's sister (on the ground that Calvin's interpretation of Lev. 18 was no longer upheld by modern scholarship), and also with an aunt by marriage or a niece by marriage, thus incidentally bringing the law of the Church into conformity with that of the State (see DECEASED WIFE'S SISTER'S MARRIAGE ACT 1907). Canon B31 of 1969 added an adopted son or daughter to the Table, and specified that the terms 'brother' and 'sister' included brothers and sisters of the half-blood.

Kindred and Affinity as Impediments to Marriage, being the Report of a Commission appointed by his Grace the Archbishop of Canterbury (1940).

King, Edward (1829–1910), Bp. of *Lincoln. He was successively assistant curate of Wheatley, Oxon (1855), chaplain of Cuddesdon Theological College (1858), principal of Cuddesdon (1863), Regius professor of pastoral theology at Oxford (1873), and Bp. of Lincoln (1885). A man of personal holiness, he is most remembered for his teaching on the pastoral duties and spiritual life of the clergy exemplified in his fatherly care for individuals, both as priest and bishop. In his moral and pastoral theology he was much influenced by the work of the German *Jesuit theologian Johann Michael Sailer (d. 1832). He was a Tractarian *High Churchman, and a friend of E. B. *Pusey and H. P. *Liddon. In 1888 a 'ritual prosecution' was brought against him by the *Church Association, and in 1890 decided in the court of the Abp. of Canterbury (E. W. *Benson) substantially in his favour (see LINCOLN JUDGEMENT). Feast day in ASB, 8 Mar.

Collections of his devotional works include his Spiritual Letters, ed. B. W. Randolph (1910), The Love and Wisdom of God: . . . Sermons, ed. id. (1910); Sermons and Addresses, ed. id. (1911), and Pastoral Lectures [delivered in 1874], ed. E. Graham (1932). Life by G. W. E. Russell (London, 1912). B. W. Randolph and J. W. Townroe, The Mind and Work of Bishop King (1918); Lord Elton, Edward King and our Times (1958); J. A. Newton, Search for a Saint: Edward King (1977); [D.] G. Rowell, The Vision Glorious: Themes and Personalities of the Catholic Revival in Anglicanism (Oxford, 1983), pp. 141–57. [W.] O. Chadwick, The Spirit of the Oxford Movement (Cambridge, 1990), pp. 256–306. G. W. E. Russell in DNB, 1901–1911, pp. 397–400.

King, Martin Luther (1929–68), Black *Baptist minister and champion of civil rights in the USA. The son of a Baptist pastor, he was born in Atlanta and educated at Morehouse College and Boston University. In 1954 he became pastor of a church in Montgomery, Alabama. Here he became involved in the struggle over segregation and in 1955 he organized a boycott of buses by Blacks which lasted more than a year; it inspired opposition to discrimination which resulted in an order of the Supreme Court imposing desegregation on Alabama buses. In 1959 he resigned from his pastorship in Montgomery and, though co-pastor with his father of a church in Atlanta from 1960 until his death, he devoted himself mainly to the civil rights movement. In 1963 he was arrested in the course of a major confrontation between his supporters and the police in Birmingham, Alabama, but in the following year a Civil Rights Bill was passed. Also in 1964 King was awarded a Nobel Peace Prize. He organized further demonstrations in Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, and elsewhere; throughout he adhered to principles of non-violence. He was much influenced by the thinking of Gandhi, but he went further in believing that the reconciliation of the Black to the White population was as important as that of the Whites to the Blacks. He aroused the opposition of both races and was assassinated in 1968. In 1986 the third Monday in January was made a federal holiday in the USA in commemoration of his birthday (actually 15 Jan.). His writings include Stride toward Freedom (1958), Why We Can't Wait (1964) and Where Do We Go From Here: Chaos or Community? (1967).

His books and various other writings collected as A Testament of Hope, ed. J. M. Washington (San Francisco, etc. [1986]). D. L. Lewis, Martin Luther King: A Critical Biography (New York and London, 1970; 2nd edn., with rev. title, Urbana, Ill., 1979); S. B. Oates, Let the Trumpet Sound: The Life of Martin Luther King Jr. (New York and London, 1982). W. R. Witherspoon, Martin Luther King, Jr. ...: To the Mountaintop (New York, 1985). R. D. Abernathy, And the Walls Came Tumbling Down (San Francisco, 1989). D. J. Garrow, Protest at Selma: Martin Luther King, Jr., and the Voting Rights Act of 1965 (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1978); id., Bearing the Cross: Martin Luther King, Jr., and the Southern Leadership Conference (New York [1986]). C. Carson and others, A Guide to Research on Martin Luther King, Jr., and the Modern Black Freedom Struggle (Stanford University Libraries, Occasional Publications in Bibliography Series, 1; Stanford, Calif., 1989).

King, William (1650–1729), Abp. of *Dublin. Born in Antrim of Scottish parents, he was educated at *Trinity College, Dublin. He was ordained in 1674 and became Chancellor (1679–89) and Dean (1689–91) of St Patrick's Cathedral in Dublin. During this time he conducted extensive controversies with both RCs and *Presbyterians. As a supporter of William III, he was imprisoned by the Jacobites, but in 1691 he was appointed Bp. of Derry and in 1703 Abp. of Dublin. In these offices, while continuing to oppose Presbyterianism, he energetically promoted the spiritual and temporal welfare of the Church of Ireland. He was passed over for the primacy on account of his Whig sympathies. He showed himself a convinced patriot, resisting all attempts to introduce Englishmen into high office. He was hampered in later years by ill health and, to some extent, by his duties as Lord Justice.

His writings include controversial pieces, a large correspondence which is of value for our knowledge of Ireland in his time, and his most important work, De Origine Mali (1702; Eng. tr., 1731), which attempts to reconcile the existence of evil, and esp. moral evil, with the conception of an omnipotent and beneficent deity; P. *Bayle and G. W. *Leibniz issued rejoinders.

C. S. King (ed.), A Great Archbishop of Dublin (1906), incl. text of his autobiog. and correspondence. Diary kept during his imprisonment in 1689 ed. H. J. Lawlor in the Journal of the Royal Society of Antiquaries of Ireland, 33 for 1903 (1904), pp. 119–52, 255–83, 389–411. Royal Commission on Historical Manuscripts Report on the Lyons Collection of his Correspondence (3 vols., London, 1987). Study by H. J. Lawlor in Peplographia Dublinensis (London, 1902), pp. 101–42. R. Dunlop in DNB 31 (1892), pp. 163–7.

King James Version. A title used, esp. in America, for the English translation of the Bible commonly known in England as the *Authorized Version (1611).

King's Book. The name commonly given to A Necessary Doctrine and Erudition for any Christian Man, put forth by *Henry VIII in the summer of 1543 after it had been presented to *Convocation earlier in the year. It was based upon the *Bishops' Book of 1537, but except for the facts that the King's supremacy was more strongly asserted and the statements on *purgatory further weakened, its theology was a reaction in a Catholic direction. *Transubstantiation was more clearly defined, some additional articles on Free Will, Good Works, etc., were added, and fuller treatment was given to such subjects as Justification. It was provided with a preface, apparently written by Henry VIII himself, and a preliminary article on Faith, probably the work of T. *Cranmer. In 1544 a free translation into Latin appeared, entitled Pia et Catholica Christiani Hominis Institutio.

The King's Book, ed. T. A. *Lacey (1932). Earlier edn. by C. *Lloyd (Oxford, 1825 and 1856).

King's Books. See VALOR ECCLESIASTICUS.

King's College, London. The College was incorporated in 1829 to provide an education on Anglican principles. It was designed as a counterweight to the undenominational University College, London, established by charter in 1827 (then the only English college of University status for Nonconformists, who were still excluded from Oxford and Cambridge). In 1836 a charter established the 'University of London' as a body empowered to grant degrees, for which members of King's College could apply. The opening of the theological department in 1846 was soon followed by a fierce controversy involving the removal of F. D. *Maurice from his position as professor in 1853. By the King's College, London (Transfer) Act, 1908, the greater part of the College was placed within the legal framework of the reconstituted (teaching) University of London, while the theological department gained a separate identity. In 1980 under a new royal charter the College as a whole recovered a legal existence separate from the University and the theological department was reintegrated into the new College structure as its Faculty of Theology and Religious Studies. Until the late 1970s the 'Associateship of King's College' (AKC) was an academic qualification often taken by non-graduate ordinands of the C of E.

F. J. C. Hearnshaw, History of King's College, London, 1828–1928 (1929); G. Huelin, King's College London 1828–1978 (1978). Much historical information is to be found in the Calendar of King's College, pub. annually.

King's Confession. The very Protestant statement of belief drawn up by John Craig (*c.*1512–1600) in 1581 when it was feared that Popery might be revived in Scotland through the recent arrival of the Duke of Lennox from France. Its formal title was 'A Short and General Confession of the True Christian Faith and Religion according to God's Word and Acts of our Parliaments', but as it was signed by the King (*James [VI of Scotland]) and his household, it was commonly known as the 'King's Confession'. All parish clergy (and from 1585 also all graduates) were required to sign it. It was reaffirmed in 1590 and 1595, and was the basis of the '*National Covenant' of 1638. It was also known as the 'Negative Confession', since it denied all religion and doctrine not in accord with the *Scottish Confession of 1560. See also COVENANTERS.

Text (Latin and Scots) in P. *Schaff, A History of the Creeds of Christendom, 3 (1877), pp. 480–5; also in G. D. Henderson (ed.), Scots Confession, 1560 (Confessio Scoticana) and Negative Confession, 1581 (Confessio Negativa) (Edinburgh, 1937), pp. 101–11. See further bibl. s.v. COVENANTERS.

King's evil, touching for the. The tradition that there existed some virtue in the royal touch for healing the 'King's evil', or scrofula, can be traced back to the 11th cent. In France general curative powers were attributed to Robert II (996–1031) and there is evidence that touching for scrofula was regarded as hereditary in the Capetians from the time of Philip I (1060–1108). In England his early biographer records various healings by *Edward the Confessor (1042–66) and *Goscelin in his Life of St Edith (written in 1080) uses the term 'morbus regis'. The custom of touching for the King's evil was practised under Henry I (1100–35) and Henry II (1154–89) and is found again during the reign of Henry VII (1485–1509). *James I encouraged it as proof of his *Divine Right, and it has been estimated that *Charles II touched in all as many as 100,000 persons. Queen *Anne was the last sovereign to perform it, among those whom she touched being the infant Samuel *Johnson. There was often printed a form of service for the touching in editions of the BCP between the reign of *Charles I and 1719.

M. Bloch, Les Rois thaumaturges (1924; Eng. tr., 1973 [requires revision on the early period]). K. [V.] Thomas, Religion and the Decline of Magic (1971), esp. pp. 192–8, 200–4. F. Barlow, 'The King's Evil', EHR 95 (1980), pp. 3–27.

Kingdom of God. The conception of the Kingdom of God (or in Mt. the 'Kingdom of Heaven') is a central element in the teaching of Jesus Christ and has formed the core of attempts to reconstruct what He taught. Its origins lie in the OT, where the kingship of God is acknowledged (Pss. 97, 99, etc.). God's reign was expected to bring with it order and justice, thereby manifesting God's purpose for creation. When political reality conflicted with such convictions, and particularly when the Jews lacked political autonomy, the Kingdom became linked with ideas about the future manifestation of Divine sovereignty in history. Though references to the phrase are not frequent in the inter-testamental period (e.g. *Testaments of the Twelve Patriarchs, Dan. 5: 10–13, and the Assumption of *Moses, 7–10), the coming of God's reign was seen as one of the events which would herald the end of the present world order; this, it was thought, would involve the overthrow of powers opposed to God and the transfer of power to Israel or to God's agent, the *Messiah. In some later rabbinic texts the coming of the Kingdom of God was identified with obedience to the commands of God (Sifra on Lev. 20: 26).

Acc. to Mk. (1: 15), the ministry of Jesus began with the proclamation of the imminence of the Kingdom. Occasionally the Gospels suggest that it may be already present, e.g. Lk. 17: 21. This is particularly the case in the accounts of the *exorcisms which the Lord performed (Lk. 11: 20; Mt. 12: 28). Entry into the Kingdom is a present possibility, but it demands patterns of behaviour which contrast with the current perceptions of the nature of human dominion (Mk. 10: 13–27). There is, however, little explicit teaching on the nature of the Kingdom. Throughout the Synoptic Gospels, Jesus uses *parables to illustrate the meaning of God's Kingdom, its novelty, and its demands. There are hints that He may have expected its arrival within a generation (Mk. 9: 1). According to the Synoptic Gospels, the rejection of the message of the Kingdom by the religio-political establishment in Jerusalem is linked with judgement on the city and its *Temple (Mk. 13; Mt. 24–5, and Lk. 21). The journey to Jerusalem, the triumphal entry and the incident in the Temple have sometimes been taken to suggest that there may have been a political component in Jesus' understanding of the Kingdom of God as well as in the reasons for his arrest and execution. See JESUS CHRIST.

There has been much discussion about the nature of Jesus' expectation of the Kingdom of God. Some, such as J. *Weiss and A. *Schweitzer, rejected the liberal or *Ritschlian view that the coming of the Kingdom would evolve gradually in history; instead they argued that Jesus expected a cataclysmic irruption into the present world order. Others (notably C. H. *Dodd) argued that He thought the Kingdom of God was a present reality which He had already inaugurated. The eschatological view has exercised a profound influence on NT scholarship, but the practical ethics of the *Sermon on the Mount suggest that an exclusively eschatological focus fails to do justice to the teaching of Jesus on the Kingdom. The evidence of the Gospels does not allow certainty about whether Jesus thought of Himself as the Messiah, but the early Christian conviction about His messianic dignity has roots in His preaching of the Kingdom.

In Jn. the Kingdom is replaced by references to '*eternal life' (the close link between the concepts is evident in 3: 3–5), and elsewhere in the NT there are few references to the Kingdom (Rom. 14: 17; 1 Cor. 4: 20; and Col. 1: 13). Nevertheless, anticipation of the future coming of the Kingdom was an important element in early Christian thought, and throughout the NT and early patristic period it was expected to take place in this world. By the 3rd cent. belief in the imminence of the *Parousia had begun to fade, and St *Augustine was articulating earlier trends when he argued that the Kingdom of God was a supernatural entity whose presence could be only dimly perceived in the time between the first and second comings of Christ. His interpretation set the pattern of discussion of eschatology in the W. Church in the following centuries. *Joachim of Fiore's interpretation of Rev. opened again the possibility of a visible establishment of the Kingdom of God in this world and his writings exercised great influence on radical religious groups in the Middle Ages. Much modern political theology has also refused to accept the view that the Kingdom is utterly transcendent and has sought to find a place for human endeavour in its establishment. Though it is indebted to G. W. F. *Hegel and Karl Marx, it has echoes in the early eschatological tradition of Christianity. See also ESCHATOLOGY, LIBERATION THEOLOGY, MILLENARIANISM, and PAROUSIA.

There are discussions of the passages in biblical Books in the various comm. listed s.vv. The works of Weiss, Schweitzer, and Dodd are listed in the entries, s.vv. G. Lundström, Gude Rike i Jesu Förkunnelse (Lund, 1947; Eng. tr., with continuation, The Kingdom of God in the Teaching of Jesus: A History of Interpretation from the Last Decades of the Nineteenth Century to the Present Day, 1963); N. Perrin, The Kingdom of God in the Teaching of Jesus (1963); W. Willis (ed.), The Kingdom of God in 20th-century Interpretation (Peabody, Mass. [1987]); C. Rowland, Radical Christianity (Cambridge, 1988); B. E. Daley, SJ, The Hope of the Early Church: A Handbook of Patristic Eschatology (ibid., 1991), passim; R. S. Barbour (ed.), The Kingdom of God and Human Society (Edinburgh, 1993). See also other works cited under ESCHATOLOGY.

Kings, Books of. These two Books, which record the history of the Hebrew monarchy from the accession of *Solomon (*c.*970 BC) to the Fall of *Jerusalem (*c.*586 BC), are structurally a continuation of the Books of *Samuel. The division into two books is not original, but comes from the Greek translators, who also grouped them with the Books of Samuel and designated all four as the 'Books of the Reigns'. In the MS tradition of the *Vulgate there are two Books, namely Samuel and Kings. In some quarters, however, the division into four persisted and this method of designation (1–4 Regum) came to be printed in the headlines of the Clementine edition of the Vulgate (and survives in some RC translations); hence, in the AV, the headings 'The First (Second) Book of the Kings, commonly called The Third (Fourth) Book of the Kings'.

The narrative opens with an account of the events leading up to the accession of Solomon (1 Kgs. 1–2). The reign of Solomon, esp. the building of the Temple, is described with great fullness (3–11). The history of the two separate kingdoms of Judah and Israel, formed from the partition of Solomon's domains at his death, then follows on a carefully arranged plan, the events of each reign being fitted into a standard framework which allowed the events of the two kingdoms to be treated alternately. This plan is adopted down to the fall of the kingdom of Israel to Assyria *c.*721 BC (2 Kgs. 17), after which the narrative is concerned solely with Judah (2 Kgs. 18–25). Of the later kings, the writer paid special attention to Josiah, whose reforming work he commended.

The author's main interest is religious throughout. This is seen from the way in which events and reigns of religious significance are described in great detail, whereas those of the highest political importance are often passed over very cursorily. Modern critics have come to see close affinities between the theological outlook of the author and that reflected in the Book of *Deuteronomy, and many of them regard Kings as the last two Books in the so-called '*Deuteronomistic History' (q.v.). The author of the Books evidently had access to several sound historical sources. Some of these are cited in the text, e.g. the 'Acts of Solomon' (1 Kgs. 11: 41), the 'Chronicles of the Kings of Israel' (1 Kgs. 14: 19 etc.) and 'of Judah' (1 Kgs. 15: 7 etc.), and the probability is that there were others not named, such as official court records and collections of stories centred on the activities of the Prophets *Elijah and Elisha.

Comm. by J. A. Montgomery (posthumous, ed. H. S. Gehman, ICC, 1951), J. Gray (London, 1964; 2nd edn., 1970). M. *Noth ([to 1 Kgs. 16] Biblischer Kommentar, Altes Testament, 9; 1964–8), M. Rehm (2 vols., Würzburg [1979–82]), G. H. Jones (New Cent. Bib., 2 vols., 1984), S. J. De Vries (on 1 Kgs., Word Biblical Comm. 12; Waco, Tex. [1985]), T. R. Hobbs (on 2 Kgs., ibid. 13 [1985]), and M. Cogan and H. Tadmor (on 2 Kgs., Anchor Bible, 1988). C. F. *Burney, Notes on the Hebrew Text of the Books of Kings (1903). G. von *Rad, 'Die deuteronomistische Geschichtstheologie in den Königsbüchern', Forschungen zur Religion und Literatur des Alten und Neuen Testaments, NF 40 (1947), pp. 52–64, repr. in Gesammelte Studien zum Alten Testament (1958), pp. 189–204; Eng. tr., The Problem of the Hexateuch and Other Essays (1966), pp. 205–21. A. Jepsen, Die Quellen des Königsbuches (Halle/Saale, 1953). J. Begrich, Die Chronologie der Könige von Israel und Juda und die Quellen des Rahmens der Königsbücher (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, 3; 1929); E. R. Thiele, The Mysterious Numbers of the Hebrew Kings (Chicago, 1951; Exeter, 1966); K. T. Andersen, 'Die Chronologie der Könige von Israel und Juda', Studia Theologica, 23 (1969), pp. 69–112, with refs. B. Halpern, The First Historians: The Hebrew Bible and History (San Francisco and London [1988]), esp. pp. 144–80 and 207–65.

Kingship of Christ, Feast of the. See CHRIST THE KING, FEAST OF.

Kingsley, Charles (1819–75), Anglican divine, social reformer, and novelist. Born at Holne in Devonshire, he was educated locally, at *King's College, London (1836–8), and at Magdalene College, Cambridge (1838–42). In 1842 he was ordained to the curacy of Eversley, Hants, where he became vicar in 1844 and spent most of the rest of his life. From 1860 to 1869 he was Regius Professor of Modern History at Cambridge (a post for which he came to recognize that he was ill-qualified; it required only a short period of residence each year). Later he held canonries at *Chester (1869–73) and *Westminster (1873–5).

Kingsley, who fell under the influence of F. D. *Maurice and T. *Carlyle, became keenly interested in the movement for social reform. He was a leading spirit in the *Christian Socialist Movement (q.v.), but he looked to the extension of the co-operative principle and educational and sanitary reform rather than radical political change for the amelioration of the condition of the people. He was at first the principal pamphleteer and spokesman of the group and under the pseudonym 'Parson Lot' contributed to Politics for the People (1848) and The Christian Socialist (1850–1). He was strongly averse to all forms of asceticism (monasticism; clerical celibacy; non-smoking) and as such was a critic of *Tractarian ideals. He soon came to be regarded as a leading exponent of 'muscular Christianity'.

The Saint's Tragedy (1848; preface by F. D. Maurice), written in dramatic form, developed out of a Life of St *Elizabeth of Hungary, begun in 1842 as a critique of asceticism. His principal novels were Yeast (1850; orig. pub. by 'Parson Lot' in Fraser's Magazine, 1848), Alton Locke (1850), Hypatia (1853; on the factions in the Church of *Alexandria in the early 5th cent.), Westward Ho! (1855), The Heroes (1856), Two Years Ago (1857), and Hereward the Wake (1866). An ill-considered jibe at J. H. Newman in 1863 ('Truth for its own sake has never been a virtue of the Roman clergy. Father Newman informs us that it need not and on the whole ought not to be') led to the publication of the latter's Apologia (q.v.) in 1864. To this period his popular children's book, The Water-Babies (1863), also belongs.

The novelist Henry Kingsley (1830–76), the author of Ravenshoe (1862), was a younger brother.

Collected Works (28 vols., 1880–5; 19 vols., 1901–3). Life by his widow (2 vols., 1877; abridgements, 1879, 1883). Other studies by M. F. Thorp (Princeton, NJ, 1937), U. C. Pope-Hennessy (London, 1948), R. B. Martin (ibid., 1959), S. Chitty, The Beast and the Monk (ibid., 1974), and B. Colloms (ibid., 1975). S. Harris, Charles Kingsley: A Reference Guide (Boston [1981]). L. Stephen in DNB 31 (1892), pp. 175–81.

Kirk. The Scottish equivalent of 'Church'. Although the Church of Scotland has ceased to be officially designated 'The Kirk' since the *Westminster Assembly (1645–8), the term is retained in the name of its lowest court, the *Kirk session, and popularly the old Presbyterian Establishment is still occasionally called 'the Auld Kirk'.

Kirk, Kenneth Escott (1886–1954), Bp. of *Oxford. Educated at St John's College, Oxford, he was ordained deacon in 1912 and priest in 1913. He was Chaplain to the Forces (1914–19), Fellow and chaplain of Trinity College, Oxford (1922–33), and Regius professor of moral and pastoral theology (1932–7). In 1937 he became Bp. of Oxford. He was widely recognized as the most outstanding of Anglican writers on moral theology in his day. His principal writings include Some Principles of Moral Theology (1920), Ignorance, Faith, and Conformity (1925), Conscience and its Problems (1927), and The Vision of God (1931; the *Bampton Lectures for 1928). Kirk also published a commentary on Romans (Clarendon Bible, 1937) and edited Personal Ethics (1934), The Study of Theology (1939), and The Apostolic Ministry (1946).

Collected addresses and papers, Beauty and Bands, ed. E. W. Kemp (1955). E. W. Kemp, The Life and Letters of Kenneth Escott Kirk (1959). Id. in DNB, 1951–1960, pp. 589–91.

Kirk session (also known simply as the session). The lowest court in the Church of *Scotland and other Presbyterian Churches. It consists of the minister and elders of a local congregation. Its main duties are to supervise and control the congregation and to keep the Communion roll up to date.

Kiss of Peace (also Pax). The mutual greeting of the faithful in the Eucharistic Liturgy, as a sign of their love and union. It is first mentioned by St *Justin Martyr (2nd cent.) and is probably a usage of the Apostolic period (cf. Rom. 16: 16, 1 Pet. 5: 14, etc.). In the *Byzantine, *Gallican, and *Mozarabic rites the Peace is given before or after the offering of the Oblations, a position suggested by Mt. 5: 23 f.; in the Roman rite it is given later in the service, namely, shortly before the Communion. Traces of the former position are also found in the *Ambrosian rite. Originally an actual kiss, the form of the Peace has been modified in all rites. In the W. the traditional practice was for the person giving the Peace to place his hands on the shoulders of the recipient, who in turn placed his hands on the elbows of the giver, each bowing their heads towards each other, but in recent years hand-shaking has become more common outside monastic houses. In 1969 the official English RC rendering of 'osculum pacis' was given as the 'sign of peace', but no special manner of giving it was laid down. It was, however, no longer to be passed from the celebrant to the deacon, the deacon to the subdeacon and finally to the people, but the celebrant now gives the sign of peace to any ministers present and the people give it among themselves independently. The Peace was formerly omitted on *Maundy Thursday, *Good Friday, *Holy Saturday, and in Masses for the Dead, but is now permitted on these occasions and indeed prescribed in the *Paschal Vigil Service. Its use was confined to *High Mass but prescribed for all Masses in 1969. Modern Anglican liturgies provide for an (optional) exchange of 'a sign of peace' (ASB) or mutual greetings, normally before the offertory. In E. Orthodox practice a Kiss of Peace is exchanged by the whole congregation at the end of Easter Mattins (which forms part of the midnight vigil; see PASCHAL VIGIL SERVICE). In the *Church of the East it is given at the end of the evening office. See also PAX BREDE.

Jungmann (1958 edn.), 2, pp. 399–413; Eng. tr., pp. 321–32, with refs. H. Thurston, SJ, in CE 8 (1910), pp. 663–5, s.v.; F. *Cabrol, OSB, in DACL 2 (1910), cols. 117–30, s.v. 'Baiser'.

Kittel, Gerhard (1888–1948), German Protestant theologian. The younger son of the OT scholar Rudolf Kittel, he studied at Leipzig, *Tübingen, Berlin, and Kiel. After an appointment at Leipzig in 1917, he became professor at Greifswald in 1922, at Tübingen in 1926, at Vienna in 1939, and again at Tübingen in 1943. His most important scholarly work was the Theologisches Wörterbuch zum Neuen Testament (9 vols., 1933–73 + register and supplement, 1978–9; Eng. tr., 10 vols., 1964–76), on which he worked from 1928 until his death, editing the first four volumes and contributing a number of articles. The purpose of this massive dictionary was to show the meanings which Greek words took on in the language of the NT. Most of the contributors belonged to the '*Biblical Theology' movement and the work was influential in popularizing this outlook, but subsequent work by J. Barr and others suggests that the articles, though assembling valuable material, were often tendentious, and their linguistic conclusions untenable. Kittel's early work on the relationship of primitive Christianity to Palestinian Judaism led on to consideration of the status of the Jews in contemporary Germany. His writings on this subject (notably Die Judenfrage, 1933, and Die historischen Voraussetzungen der jüdischen Rassenmischung, 1939) lent scholarly support to Nazi anti-Semitism and in 1945 he was arrested and dismissed from his university post by the French authorities. He remains a controversial figure.

List of his works by G. Friedrich and G. Reyher in TLZ 74 (1949), pp. 171–5. J. Barr, The Semantics of Biblical Language (Oxford, 1961), pp. 206–62. L. Siegele-Wenschkewitz, Neutestamentliche Wissenschaft vor der Judenfrage: Gerhard Kittels theologische Arbeit im Wandel deutscher Geschichte (Munich, 1980).

R. P. Ericksen, Theologians under Hitler (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1985), pp. 28–78. J. S. Vos, 'Antijudaismus/Antisemitismus im Theologischen Wörterbuch zum Neuen Testament', Nederlandse Theologisch Tijdschrift, 38 (1984), pp. 89–110. G. and J. Friedrich in TRE 19 (1990), pp. 221–5, s.v., with bibl.

Klopstock, Friedrich Gottlieb (1724–1803), German poet. The son of a lawyer, he was born at Quedlinburg and studied at Schulpforta (1739–45), at Jena (1745–6), and Leipzig (1746–8). He completed *c.*1746 the first section of an epic in prose inspired by a translation (1732) by J. Bodmer (1698–1783) of J. Milton's Paradise Lost. At Leipzig he began to transpose it into hexameters and in 1748 issued part of it in the Bremer Beiträge as the first three cantos of Der Messias (completed 1773); though published anonymously, its authorship was soon known. In 1751 he was offered a pension by King Frederick V of Denmark to enable him to complete Der Messias. He resided at Copenhagen until 1770, when he retired to Hamburg. In 1789 he was visited by S. T. *Coleridge and W. *Wordsworth.

Der Messias, a poem of nearly 20,000 lines distributed in 20 cantos, is concerned with the Passion and 40 days after the Resurrection. It not only describes events on earth, but introduces hosts of angels and devils, even the Trinity itself appearing, giving to every event and action its deeper significance. In the opening portions its bold suggestion of intensity and infinity raised reflective German poetry to a new level, but later the theme became wearisome. From a literary point of view the work is important as the first modern German epic. His other poetry included two volumes of Geistliche Lieder (1758 and 1769), as well as religious drama, some of it in verse. He devoted the last years of his life to philology.

Crit. edn. of his Werke und Briefe by H. Gronemeyer and others ('Hamburger Ausgabe', Berlin and New York, 1974 ff., with bibl. and further subsidiary material in Abteilung Addenda, 1975 ff.), Eng. tr. of Der Messias [by J. Collyer], 2 vols., London, 1763. Classic Life by F. Muncker (Stuttgart, 1888). E. Bailly, Étude sur la vie et les œuvres de Frédéric Gottlieb Klopstock (Lyons thesis; Paris, 1888); K. Kindt, Klopstock (Berlin, 1941). K. Hilliard, Philosophy, Letters, and the Fine Arts in Klopstock's Thought (Bithell Series of Dissertations, 12; 1987). M. Freivogel, Klopstock der heilige Dichter (Basler Studien zur deutschen Sprache und Literatur, 15; 1954); G. Kaiser, Klopstock: Religion und Dichtung (Gütersloh, 1963); A. Bogaert, Klopstock: La Religion dans la Messiade (Germanica, 6; Paris, 1965). K. Hurlebusch in TRE 19 (1990), pp. 271–5, s.v.

Klosterneuburg, a celebrated monastery of *canons regular of St Augustine, nr. Vienna. It was founded not later than 1108 by Margrave Leopold III and his consort, Agnes, for secular canons, and was given to the *Augustinian Canons in 1133. As it became very rich, it was frequently raided in times of war and civil strife, e.g. during the *Hussite wars, in the Reformation period, and in the wars against the Turks. It possesses great art treasures, e.g. the famous 'Verdun Altar' and precious stained glass dating from the 13th to the 15th cents., as well as a large library with important MSS and *incunabula. Its present buildings date from the finest period of the Austrian Baroque. In modern times Klosterneuburg has become noted for its active support of the *Liturgical Movement, fostered esp. by Pius Parsch, the editor of several liturgical periodicals.

There is a considerable lit., of which the chief items to date are listed by F. Röhrig in L.Th.K. (2nd edn.), 6 (1961), cols. 349 f., s.v. Id., Klosterneuburg (Wiener Geschichtsbücher, 11 [1972]). Catalogue of MSS. ed. H. Pfeiffer and B. Černík (1, Vienna, 1922; 2, Klosterneuburg, 1931); also by A. Haidinger (Österreichische Akademie der Wissenschaften, philosophisch-historische Klasse, Denkschriften, 168, 225, etc.; 1983 ff.). Useful introd. by O. L. Kapsner, OSB, Monastic Manuscript Microfilm Project: Progress Report, 4 (Saint John's University, Collegeville, Minn., 1968), pp. 1–4. Catalogue of the 'Kunst-Sammlungen', ed. by the Director of the Kunst-historisches Museum at Vienna (1937 ff.; pt. 1 at Klosterneuburg; pts. 3 ff. at Vienna). Jahrbuch des Stiftes Klosterneuburg (9 vols., Klosterneuburg, 1908–20; NF, 1961 ff.).

kneelers. See GENUFLECTENTES.

Kneeling, Declaration on. See BLACK RUBRIC.

Knights Hospitaller; Knights of Malta; and Knights of Rhodes. See HOSPITALLERS.

Knights Templar. See TEMPLARS.

Knowles, David (1896–1974), monastic historian. Michael Clive Knowles was educated at *Downside and became a monk there in 1914, taking the name David. He read classics at *Cambridge (1919–22) and studied theology in Rome (1922–3). It was only in 1929 that he began research into monastic history. He planned a new monastic community which would return to a more primitive, contemplative observance, abandoning the school-teaching functions of *Benedictine houses in England; the project was forbidden by Rome (1934) and in 1939 Knowles left the community; though formally reconciled in 1952 he lived apart from it for the rest of his life. From 1944 he was a Fellow of Peterhouse, Cambridge; he was Professor of Medieval History (1947–54) and then Regius Professor of Modern History (1954–63). His principal work was The Monastic Order in England, 943–1216 (1940; 2nd edn., 940 1210, 1963), with its sequel, The Religious Orders in England (3 vols., 1948–59); these volumes provide a magisterial survey of the subject up to the *dissolution of the monasteries, combining insight with critical judgement, and deep scholarship with superb English style. His other works include The Episcopal Colleagues of Archbishop Thomas Becket (Ford Lectures, 1949; 1951), The English Mystical Tradition (1961), The Evolution of Medieval Thought (1962; rev. edn., 1988) which was based on lectures which inspired a group of younger scholars, and From Pachomius to Ignatius: A Study in the Constitutional History of the Religious Orders (1966). In his last years he was known as a conservative RC theologian.

Some of his essays were collected and presented to him in The Historian and Character and other Essays (Cambridge, 1963), with bibl. to 1962, pp. 363–73; bibl. from 1963 by A. Stacpoole, OSB, in Ampleforth Journal, 80, pt. 3 (1975), pp. 48–55; 81, pt. 1 (1976), p. 40. Memoir by A. Morey, OSB (London, 1979). C. [N. L.] Brooke and others, David Knowles Remembered (Cambridge, 1991). C. N. L. Brooke, 'David Knowles', Proceedings of the British Academy, 61 (1975), pp. 439–77; id. in DNB, 1971–1980, pp. 474 f.

Knox, Alexander (1757–1831), Irish Anglican theological writer. He was a descendant of J. *Knox. In much of his teaching he anticipated the *Oxford Movement. Thus he affirmed that the C of E was not a 'protestant' Church, but a reformed branch of the Church Catholic, and he stressed the need for adherence to the *Apostolic Succession, the BCP, and the *Thirty-Nine Articles. He stressed the importance of the mystical tradition in Christianity and saw the liturgy as encouraging inward religion. From his friend, J. *Wesley, he learnt the value of frequent communion and for many years worked in harmony with Bp. J. *Jebb, whose Thirty Years' Correspondence gives a valuable picture of him.

His writings were collected as The Remains of Alexander Knox, by J. J. Hornby (4 vols., 1834–7). Y. Brilioth, The Anglican Revival: Studies in the Oxford Movement (1925), pp. 45–55 and 331–3. J. H. Overton in DNB 31 (1892), pp. 304 f., with further refs.

Knox, Edmund Arbuthnott (1847–1937), Bp. of Manchester. Educated at Corpus Christi College, Oxford, he held a Fellowship at Merton from 1869 to 1884, and after various parochial charges became (suffragan) Bp. of *Coventry in 1894. From 1903 to 1921 he was Bp. of Manchester. He was one of the most prominent *Evangelicals of his generation, a great preacher (esp. famed were his missions on the Blackpool sands), and a strong advocate of Church schools. His writings include Sacrifice or Sacrament? (1914), a defence of the Protestant doctrine of the Lord's Supper, and On What Authority? (1922), attacking the liberal school of Biblical critics. After his retirement he continued to take an active part in ecclesiastical affairs and vigorously opposed the Revised Prayer Book (rejected 1927 and 1928). He was also the author of an interesting study, The Tractarian Movement, 1833–1845 (1933).

E. A. Knox, Reminiscences of an Octogenarian, 1847–1934 (1935). L. W. Grensted in DNB, 1931–1940, pp. 516 f.

Knox, John (*c.*1513–72), Scottish Reformer. He was born at Haddington, educated at Glasgow and possibly St Andrews, received minor orders, perhaps even the priesthood, and set up as a notary in his native town. Having given up his profession he became a private tutor *c.*1544, and soon afterwards, under the influence of the reforming G. *Wishart, embraced the principles of the Reformation. In 1547 he became preacher at St Andrews; at the capture of the castle by the French galleys he was taken prisoner and sent to France, but released in 1549, when he came to England. In 1551 he was made chaplain to *Edward VI and as such assisted in the final stages of the revision of the Second Prayer Book; he appears to have been chiefly responsible for the *Black Rubric. In 1553 he went as a preacher to Bucks, but on *Mary's accession fled to the Continent. He met J. *Calvin at Geneva, and in 1554 was for a short time pastor of the English refugees at Frankfurt, but was expelled after a dispute over ceremonial in community worship. In 1555 he returned to Scotland. Here his preaching and writing met with great success, but the continuing persecution of Protestants led him in 1556 to accept a call to the English church at Geneva, where he published several tracts concerning the situation in Scotland, among them The First Blast of the Trumpet against the Monstrous Regiment of Women (1558), a violent diatribe against Mary of Guise and Mary Tudor, asserting that government by a woman is contrary to the law of nature and to Divine ordinance. This pamphlet, which appeared shortly before the accession of *Elizabeth, earned him the hostility of the English Queen, who refused to let him pass through England on his way back to Scotland in 1559.

Becoming leader of the Reforming party, he devoted himself to preaching and to procuring money and troops from England. After the death of Mary of Guise (1560), he drew up the *Scottish Confession (q.v.) and brought into being a commission which abolished the authority of the Pope, 'idolatry', and the Mass, the celebration of and attendance at which was forbidden under pain of death. The *First Book of Discipline (q.v.) was largely his work. Also in 1560, his only theological work was published at Geneva: An Answer to a great number of blasphemous cavillations written by an Anabaptist, and adversary to God's eternal Predestination, in which he defended the *supralapsarian form of *predestination. After *Mary Stuart's return to Scotland (1561), Knox came into repeated conflicts with the Queen over the question of having Mass celebrated for her as well as over the worldliness of her court, on both of which subjects he preached violent sermons. The 'Book of *Common Order' (1556–64), the Scottish service book, was largely his work. In 1567 he preached daily against the Queen, and after her abdication preached the sermon at the coronation of *James and became closely connected with the regent, the earl of Moray. After the murder of Moray in 1570 Knox's political power diminished, and it was only after his death that his cause finally triumphed. Outspoken in his hatred of Catholicism, Knox easily made enemies; yet, fearless and straightforward, he wielded an enormous influence. His principal work is the History of the Reformation of Religion within the Realm of Scotland. An early (unfinished) edition was issued by T. Vautrollier in 1587 and immediately seized and suppressed. The first complete edition appeared in 1644.

His works were ed. by D. Laing (6 vols., Edinburgh, 1846–64). Modern edns. of his History of the Reformation in Scotland by W. C. Dickinson (2 vols., London, 1949), and of The First Blast of the Trumpet and some other political writings by M. A. Breslow (Washington, DC, London, and Toronto [1985]). Lives by T. McCrie (Edinburgh, 1812), P. Hume Brown (2 vols., London, 1895), E. Muir (ibid., 1929), G. MacGregor (ibid., 1958), and J. Ridley (Oxford, 1968). J. S. McEwen, The Faith of John Knox (Croal Lectures for 1960; 1961). R. G. Kyle, The Mind of John Knox (Lawrence, Kan., 1984). Id., 'John Knox's Concept of Divine Providence and its Influence on his Thought', Albion, 18 (1986), pp. 395–410. I. Hazlett, 'A Working Bibliography of Writings by John Knox', in R. V. Schnucker (ed.), Calviniana: Ideas and Influence of John Calvin (Sixteenth Century Essays and Studies, 10; Kirksville, Mo. [1988]), pp. 185–93. Æ. Mackay in DNB 31 (1892), pp. 308–28.

Knox, Ronald Arbuthnott (1888–1957), Catholic apologist and translator of the Bible. The son of E. A. *Knox, he had a brilliant career at Eton and Balliol College, Oxford, and was soon a leading personality in the extreme Anglo-Catholic movement. In 1912 he became Fellow and Chaplain of Trinity College, Oxford. He became widely known in ecclesiastical circles through his attack on Foundations in a satirical poem in the style of J. *Dryden, 'Absolute and Abitofhell', originally pub. in the Oxford Magazine, 28 Nov. 1912. In 1917 he was received into the RC Church at Farnborough Abbey; in 1918 he published A Spiritual Aeneid (autobiographical); and in 1919 he was ordained to the RC priesthood. After teaching for some years at St Edmund's College, Ware, he became chaplain to the RC undergraduates at Oxford in 1926. In 1939 he resigned this appointment to devote himself to a translation of the Bible. Working from the Latin *Vulgate text, he sought to put the Bible into timeless English, and his version has considerable literary merit. The NT was completed in 1945 and the OT in 1949; the whole Bible in one volume was issued in 1955. After some hesitations, the edition was authorized by the RC hierarchy for public use in church. Knox's other writings include Some Loose Stones (1913), On Englishing the Bible (1949), Enthusiasm (1950), and many books of popular apologetic and fiction, esp. detective stories.

Life by E. Waugh (London, 1959). T. Corbishley, SJ, Ronald Knox the Priest (1964); R. Speaight, Ronald Knox the Writer (1966). C. Hollis in DNB, 1951–1960, pp. 595–7.

Koch, Johann. See COCCEIUS, JOHANNES.

Kohler, Christian and Hieronymus. See BRÜGGLERS.

Kolbe, St Maximilian (1894–1941), martyr. Raymond Kolbe was born at Zduńska Wola, near Łódź, studied at Lvov and later Cracow, and in 1910 joined the *Franciscans, taking the name of Maximilian. He continued his studies in Rome, and there in 1917 founded his Marian Militia Immaculatae to oppose the encroachment of secularism in modern society. In poor health, he returned to Cracow in 1919 to teach Church history in a seminary. In 1922 he set up a magazine, Rycerz Niepokalanej (Knights of the Immaculate) to promote Christian teaching, and also a friary at Grodno to assist in the enterprise; in 1927 this community moved to a site near Teresin (W. of Warsaw), and the new friary was called Niepokalanów ('City of the Immaculate'). Another community was established in Japan, but Kolbe was recalled to Niepokalanów in 1936. His publishing continued after the German occupation of Poland in 1939 and Kolbe was arrested and sent to Auschwitz in 1941. Soon he volunteered to take the place of a young man chosen for death by starvation in reprisal for an attempted escape. After surviving a fortnight, Kolbe was killed by a lethal injection. He was beatified in 1971 and canonized in 1982. Feast day, 14 August.

Most of the literature is in Polish. D. Dewar, Saint of Auschwitz: The story of Maksymilian Kolbe (1982). E. Piacenti, OFM Conv, in DIP 5 (1978), cols. 362–7, s.v., with extensive bibl.; D. H. Farmer, The Oxford Dictionary of Saints (3rd edn., 1992), pp. 283 f.

kollyva (Gk. κόλλυβα). In the E. Church, a cake made of grains of wheat or rice, spices, dried fruit, and pomegranate seeds, and usually covered with sugar; this is blessed during memorial services for the departed and distributed to those present.

Komenský, Jan Amos. See COMENIUS, J. A.

komvoschinion (Gk. κομβοσχοίνιον; Slavonic, vervitsa or tchotki). In the E. Church, a knotted cord of wool or other material (less commonly, a string of beads), corresponding to the W. *rosary, although differing in structure. It is often used when reciting the *Jesus Prayer.

Konkordienformel. See CONCORD, FORMULA AND BOOK OF.

kontakion. See CONTAKION.

Koran (Arab. Qur'ān, 'recitation'). The sacred book of *Islam, which Muhammad claimed had been revealed to him as the very Word of God, through the mediation of the archangel *Gabriel. It is made up of short passages revealed at intervals throughout Muhammad's prophetic career; although committed to writing during his life, the present text dates from the recension of the Caliph Uthman (643–56), as does also its arrangement in 114 sections (sūras), placed roughly in decreasing order of length, irrespective of date of revelation. It lays strong stress on God's unity and omnipotence, and on the rewards and punishments of the life to come, but it also embodies the basic principles of Islamic law, ethics, and institutions, and some homiletic material based on Jewish and Christian sources, esp. the *Haggadah and the NT apocrypha.

The first Eng. tr. direct from the Arabic was that of G. Sale (London, 1734). That of R. Bell (2 vols., Edinburgh, 1937–9; rev. edn. by W. M. Watt, 1970) and the Fr. tr. of R. Blachère (2 vols., Paris, 1949–51) are representative of the European scholarly approach; that of N. J. Dawood (Penguin Classics, 1956) is based on traditional Muslim scholarship; A. J. Arberry, The Koran Interpreted (2 vols., 1955), seeks rather to give an impression of the literary form. R. Bell, Introduction to the Qur'ān (1953). R. Blachère, Introduction au Coran (1947; 2nd edn., 1959). J. Burton, The Collection of the Qur'ān (Cambridge, 1977). A. Rippin (ed.), Approaches to the History of the Interpretation of the Qur'ān (Oxford, 1988). T. Noeldeke, Geschichte des Qorāns (1860; 2nd edn. by F. Schwally and others, 3 vols., 1909–38).

Korea, Christianity in. The first Korean Christians were converted in *Japan at the end of the 16th cent.; they were prisoners captured during the Japanese invasions of Korea in 1592–98. The second introduction of Christianity was from *China. Korean envoys to Beijing (Peking) had contact with the *Jesuit missionaries there and Korean scholars obtained books on Christianity translated into Chinese. A Korean was baptized in Beijing in 1784. Although the Confucian rulers of the Korean kingdom opposed the spread of a foreign religion, by the end of the 18th cent. the Christian community numbered several thousand. In 1831 the Congregation of *Propaganda created an apostolic *vicariate in Korea. The first European missionaries, of the Société des Missions Étrangères de Paris, arrived in 1835. Korean Christians were subjected to waves of persecution, the most severe being in 1866–9, when more than 2,000 were killed; 103 of those martyred in 1839–46 and 1866–7 were canonized by Pope *John Paul II on his visit to South Korea in 1984. In 1876 the first Korean Protestant converts were baptized in Manchuria by Scottish missionaries. In the 1880s, following treaties between Korea and the W. powers, freedom of religion was granted. From 1884 a large number of Protestant missionaries began work in Korea, mainly American *Presbyterians and *Methodists. An Anglican bishop arrived from England in 1890. Protestant missionaries founded many educational and medical institutions. Presbyterians, who adopted the principles of self-support advocated by the Chinese missionary John L. Nevius, became the largest Christian body. The National Christian Council (later the National Council of Churches in Korea) was founded in 1924. In the RC Church the first Korean bishop was appointed in 1942 and a hierarchy established in 1962.

After the annexation of Korea by Japan in 1910, many Protestants supported the Korean nationalist movement. In the 1930s there was conflict with the government when some Christians refused to participate in Shinto ceremonies. After the defeat of Japan in the Second World War, Korea was divided at the 38th degree of latitude. In 1948 the Republic of Korea was inaugurated in the South and the (Communist) Democratic People's Republic of Korea in the North. In N. Korea the state attempted to eradicate religious institutions and many Christians migrated south. During the Korean War (1950–53) many Christians in N. Korea were killed; little is known about those who remain there.

In S. Korea Christianity is vigorous but fragmented. As a result of extensive evangelistic work, Church membership has grown rapidly since the 1950s. Among Protestants many schisms have occurred, and there are now more than a hundred indigenous sects and denominations. The Holy Spirit Association for the Unification of World Christianity (the 'Moonies'), founded in 1954 by Sun Myung Moon, has spread to many other countries. The Full Gospel Central Church in Seoul claims to be the largest single Christian congregation in the world. Christians, who numbered 12.7 million in 1989, comprise about 30 per cent of the population of S. Korea. More than half of them belong to indigenous denominations not connected with the National Council of Churches. The largest Protestant bodies are the Presbyterians and Methodist Churches; a fifth of the Christians are RC.

A. D. Clark, A History of the Church in Korea (Seoul, 1961; rev. edn., 1971); S. H. Moffett, The Christians of Korea (New York [1962]). J. H. Grayson, Early Buddhism and Christianity in Korea: A Study of the Emplantation of Religion (Studies in the History of Religion, 47; Leiden, 1985), pp. 70–129 and 133–43; id., Korea: A Religious History (Oxford, 1989), esp. pp. 176–84 and 194–212, with bibl., pp. 299–301. C. Dallet, Histoire de l'Église de Corée (2 vols., 1874; on the RC Church). W. E. Biernatzki, SJ, and others, Korean Catholicism in the 1970s (Maryknoll, NY [1975]). L. G. Paik, The History of Protestant Missions in Korea 1832–1910 (P'yongyang, Korea, 1927; 4th edn., Seoul, 1987). E. N. Hunt, Protestant Pioneers in Korea (American Society of Missiology Series, 1; Maryknoll, NY [1980]). R. E. Shearer, Wildfire: Church Growth in Korea (Grand Rapids, Mich. [1966]; mainly Presbyterian, but covers other non-RC denominations). D. N. Clark, Christianity in Modern Korea (Asia Agenda Report, 5; Lanham, Md. [1986]).

Koridethi Codex. A MS of the Gospels, dating prob. from the 9th cent.; it is written in rough *uncials and is known to textual critics as Θ. It is now at Tiflis, but it formerly belonged to the monastery of Koridethi, near the Caspian Sea. Its text of Mk., which differs widely from that of this Gospel in the other uncial MSS and is akin to that of two groups of *minuscules (those designated by the numbers 1–118–131–209 and 13–69–124–346), was named by B. H. *Streeter the '*Caesarean Text' (q.v.), in the belief that it represented the text of the Gospel current at *Caesarea in Palestine in the 3rd cent.

The MS, found in the church of Sts Kerykos and Julitta at Koridethi, was first pub. (in facsimiles) by the Imperial Moscow Archaeological Society at Moscow, 1907; later ed. by G. Beermann and C. R. Gregory, Leipzig, 1913, with a study of the history of the MS based on its many marginal notes in Gk. and Georgian. K. *Lake and R. P. Blake, 'The Text of the Gospels and the Koridethi Codex', HTR 16 (1923), pp. 267–86; B. H. Streeter, The Four Gospels (1924), esp. ch. 4. B. M. Metzger, Manuscripts of the Greek Bible (New York and Oxford, 1981), pp. 100 f.

Kornthal, NW. of Stuttgart, *Pietist settlement. It was founded in 1819 as a centre of Pietist life in opposition to the increasing rationalism of the contemporary *Lutheran state Church. Its members accepted the *Augsburg Confession with a few alterations, but their teaching was coloured by belief in the speedy coming of the *Millennium. Inspired by *Moravian influence, their daily life was strictly regulated down to matters of food and clothing, and they were exempted by the civil power from taking the oath and from military service. Their principal achievements were educational institutions for boys, girls, and neglected children, and missionary work on the lines of the '*Innere Mission'. At the beginning of 1988 the membership of the community was 1,166.

J. Hesse, Korntal einst und jetzt (Stuttgart, 1910). F. Grünzweig, Die evangelische Brüdergemeinde Korntal: Weg, Wesen und Werk (Metzingen, Württemberg, 1958). J. Trautwein in TRE 19 (1990), pp. 640–5, s.v. See also bibl. to PIETISM.

Kraus, Franz Xaver (1840–1901), ecclesiastical historian. After studying at several German universities, he was ordained priest in 1864, and in 1872 became professor-extraordinary of the history of Christian art at the university of Strasbourg. In 1878 he was appointed professor of Church history at Freiburg, where he filled a number of important civil offices and came into repute as a scholar of great learning. His political theories, which upheld the rights of the State against interference from the Church, led the government to support his candidature for the episcopate, but opposition from the ecclesiastical authorities prevented the appointment being made. Some of his books also gave offence to his religious superiors through their political teaching. He remained in communion with the RC Church, however, till his death. The most considerable of his numerous works was his Geschichte der christlichen Kunst (2 vols., 1896–1900; the last section of the work was completed after his death by Joseph Sauer in 1908). His other writings include Roma sotterranea (1873), Real-Encyklopædie der christlichen Altertümer (2 vols., 1882–6), and Die christlichen Inschriften der Rheinlande (2 vols., 1890–4). In 1904 a 'Krausgesellschaft' was formed to further his supposed ecclesiastico-political doctrines.

Two collections of Essays were pub. (Berlin, 1896–1901). A selection of Essays, ed., with comm., by C. Weber (Bibliothek des deutschen historischen Instituts in Rom, 57; Tübingen, 1983). Diaries ed. H. Schiel (Cologne, 1957), with extensive bibl. Correspondence with Anton Stöck ed. id. (Quellen und Abhandlungen zur Mittelrheinischer Kirchengeschichte, 21; Mainz, 1974). Lives by K. Braig (Freiburg i.B., 1902) and E. Hauviller (Colmar, 1904). Notice by K. Künstle in RHE 3 (1902), pp. 431–41. O. Köhler, 'Franz Xaver Kraus (1840–1901)', in H. Fries and G. Schwaiger (eds.), Katholische Theologen Deutschlands im 19. Jahrhundert, 3

(Munich [1975]), pp. 241–75. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 8 (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 854–73 (with full bibl. of Kraus's works, but scornful of him as a scholar). H. Schiel in L.Th.K. (2nd edn.), 6 (1961), col. 595, s.v.

Krüdener, Barbara Juliana Freifrau von (1764–1824), *Pietist. After deserting her Russian husband and forming a liaison with a young French officer at Paris—during which period of her life she wrote a novel, Valérie (2 vols., 1803)—she was suddenly converted during a sojourn at Riga in the summer of 1804. She became an ardent devotee of the German Pietistic Movement, and in 1815 exercised great influence on the Tsar Alexander I, proclaiming that Napoleon was the Apollyon of Rev. 9: 11 and thus winning the Tsar's support for the idea of the *Holy Alliance.

C. Eynard, Vie de Madame de Krudener (2 vols., 1849). H. von Redern, Zwei Welten: Das Leben von Juliane von Krüdener (1927); A. Hermant, Madame de Krüdener, l'amie du Tsar Alexandre (1934). E. J. Knapton, The Lady of the Holy Alliance: The Life of Julie de Krüdener (New York, 1939), with full bibl. F. Ley, Madame de Krüdener et son temps, 1764–1824 [1961], also with bibl.

Kuenen, Abraham (1828–91), Dutch OT scholar. Appointed professor at Leiden in 1855, he became one of the most prominent advocates of liberal theological thought in the Netherlands. At first he was a follower of H. G. A. *Ewald, under whose influence he wrote his Historisch-Kritisch Onderzoek (3 vols., 1861–5; 2nd edn., 1885–93; tr. in part into Eng. by J. W. *Colenso [1865], by whom Kuenen was much influenced); but he later came to hold the current opinion that the priestly code (P) was the latest element in the Pentateuch. His later views were embodied in his book De Godsdienst van Israel (1869–70; Eng. tr., The Religion of Israel, 1874–5) and in De Profeten en de Profetie onder Israël (1875; Eng. tr., The Prophets and Prophecy in Israel, 1877). He delivered the *Hibbert Lectures in 1882 on National Religion and Universal Religion.

K. Budde (ed. and tr.), Gesammelte Abhandlungen zur biblischen Wissenschaft (1894; with full bibl. of Kuenen's writings, compiled by W. C. van Manen). P. B. Dirksen and A. van der Kooij (eds.), Abraham Kuenen (1828–1891): His Major Contributions to the Study of the Old Testament (Oudtestamentische Studiën, 29; Leiden etc., 1993). J. Hahn in TRE 20 (1990), pp. 129–31, s.v.

Kulturkampf. The repressive political movement in Germany in the 1870s against the RC Church. It was mainly inspired by Bismarck, who feared that the influence of Catholicism would endanger the unity of the German Empire.

In its earlier years the conflict was very bitter, provoked chiefly by the anti-Catholic legislation. In 1871 Bismarck suppressed the Catholic department of the Prussian Ministry of Public Worship, and in 1872 appointed P. L. A. *Falk Minister of Public Worship, under whose aegis the *Jesuits were expelled, education was brought under the control of the state, and the famous '*May Laws' (1873) were passed. The opposition to this legislation was very strong, and several Catholic bishops, including Cardinal M. H. von Ledóchowski of Gnesen-Posen and K. Martin of Paderborn, were imprisoned. The German embassy at the Vatican was also recalled, and owing to the condemnatory tenor of the encyclical 'Quod nunquam' (7 Feb. 1875) the RC Church was deprived of all financial assistance from the state. Further, the religious orders were ordered to leave the country.

Bismarck, however, had misunderstood the extent and strength of the opposition, and gradually became convinced that a *concordat with the Vatican was the better solution. He also hoped by a change of tactics to gain the aid of the Catholic Church in the fight against Social Democracy. Hence at the end of the '70s the previous policy was reversed and peace was made with the new Pope, *Leo XIII. By 1887 most of the anti-Catholic laws, with the exception of that expelling the Jesuits, had been nullified. The Kulturkampf had the undesigned effect of creating in some measure a religious revival inside Germany. It certainly strengthened the hold of Roman Catholicism on the German people in the latter years of the 19th cent. See also CENTRE PARTY.

A. Constabel (ed.), Die Vorgeschichte des Kulturkampfes: Quellenveröffentlichung aus dem Deutschen Zentralarchiv (1956). Substantial works incl. J. B. Kissling, Geschichte des Kulturkampfs im Deutschen Reich (3 vols., 1911–16); G. Goyau, Bismarck et l'Église: Le Culturkampf, 1870–1878 (4 vols., 1911–13); G. Franz, Kulturkampf: Staat und katholische Kirche in Mitteleuropa von der Säkularisation bis zum Abschluss des Preussischen Kulturkampfes (Munich [1954]); and E. Schmidt-Volkmar, Der Kulturkampf in Deutschland 1871–1890 (Göttingen, 1962). M. L. Anderson, Windhorst (Oxford, 1981), pp. 130–200 passim; id., 'The Kulturkampf and the Course of German History', Central Church History, 19 (1986), pp. 82–115, with further refs. L. Gall, Bismarck: Der weisse Revolutionär (Frankfurt am Main, 1980), esp. pp. 459–502; Eng. tr., 2 (1986), pp. 1–39. H. W. L. Freudenthal in NCE 7 (1967), pp. 267–9; G. Besier in TRE 20 (1990), cols. 209–30, both, s.v., with bibl. See also works cited under FALK, P. L. A.

Küng, Hans (1928–), RC theologian. Born in Switzerland, he studied in Rome and Paris. In 1957 he published his doctoral dissertation on *justification, Rechtfertigung: die Lehre Karl Barths und eine katholische Besinnung (Eng. tr., 1964), and in 1960 he was appointed Professor of Fundamental Theology at Tübingen. His active involvement in the preparations for the Second *Vatican Council and his presence there as a peritus appointed by Pope *John XXIII brought him to the centre of the conflict between reformers and traditionalists in the RC Church. In 1963 he became the first Professor of Dogmatic and Fundamental Theology at Tübingen and director of the newly-established Institute for Ecumenical Research. Disappointed with the progress of the Vatican Council, he became increasingly critical of the Church and outspoken in his protests against Papal encyclicals (notably those on priestly *celibacy in 1967 and on *contraception in 1968). This criticism found expression in his books Die Kirche (1967; Eng. tr., The Church, 1967) and Unfehlbar? (1970; Eng. tr., Infallible?, 1971), a trenchant criticism of modern Papal claims and the Papacy's exercise of authority, which precipitated wide controversy. Christus sein (1974; Eng. tr., On Being a Christian, 1977) and Existiert Gott? (1978; Eng. tr., Does God Exist?, 1980), which are less concerned with ecclesiastical structure, though no less controversial, won an unusually wide readership in Germany and beyond. In 1979 his missio canonica (authority to teach as a Catholic theologian) was withdrawn, but he retained his post in the University of Tübingen. In recent years he has turned his attention to the relationship between Christianity and other faiths, and produced a stream of books, often in dialogue with representatives of these religions. They include Christentum und Weltreligionen (1984; Eng. tr., Christianity and the World Religions, 1987), Christentum und Chinesische Religionen, with Julia Ching (1988; Eng. tr., Christianity and Chinese Religions, New York, 1989; London, 1993), and Das Judentum (1991; Eng. tr., Judaism, 1992).

N. Greinacher and H. Haag (eds.), Der Fall Küng: Eine Dokumentation (Munich and Zurich [1980]). H. Häring and K.-J. Kuschel (eds.), Hans Küng: Weg und Werk (Munich [1978]; Eng. tr., 1979), with list of his works to date. R. [A.] Nowell, A Passion for Truth. Hans Küng: A Biography (1981). E. Huovinen, Idea Christi: Idealistinen ajattelumuoto ja kristologia Hans Küngin teologiassa (Suomalaisen teologisen kirjallisuusseuran julkaisuja, 111; Helsinki, 1978; Ger. tr., Arbeiten zur Geschichte und Theologie des Luthertums, NF 6 [1985]). K.-J. Kuschel and H. Häring (eds.), Hans Küng: Neue Horizonte des Glaubens und Denkens (Munich and Zurich [1993]; Eng. tr., 1993), with select bibl.

Kuyper, Abraham (1837–1920), Dutch *Calvinist theologian and politician. Having studied theology at *Leiden, where he was influenced by the rationalistic modernism of his professors, J. H. Scholten and L. W. E. Rawenhof, he became a minister at Beesd. The example of the simple piety of his parishioners here was largely responsible for his conversion to traditional orthodox Calvinism. After further ministries in Utrecht and Amsterdam, he moved into politics. A member of the Second Chamber of Parliament (1874–8), in 1879 he founded the Anti-Revolutionary Party with the intention of transforming the orthodox Calvinist sector of the population into a political force, and to this end he also founded the Free University in Amsterdam (1880), where he held a chair until 1901. In 1886 he led a secession from the Dutch Reformed Church (Hervormde Kerk), uniting his followers with Churches which had already seceded in 1834, to form the Reformed Churches (Gereformeerde Gemeente). In 1898 he was invited to the USA where he gave the Stone Lectures, published in England in 1932 under the title Calvinism. These set out his view of Calvinism as a way of life satisfying all contemporary needs and emphasized the notion of 'common grace'. He reached the height of his political influence during his period as Minister-President (1901–5) but encountered problems both at home by his use of parliamentary legislation to crush a national rail strike and abroad by his fervent support of the Boers in their struggle against the British in South Africa. Following the defeat of his government in 1905 he spent his last years leading his party, from 1913 as a member of the Upper Chamber, and continuing his editorship of De Standaard, the anti-revolutionary newspaper he had founded in 1872.

Kuyper was the author of a large number of writings. J. C. Rullmann, Kuyper-Bibliografie (vol. 1, The Hague, vols. 2 3, Kampen, 1923–40). Lives by P. Kasteel (Kampen, 1938) and F. Vandenberg, He called my name (Grand Rapids, 1960). S. J. Ridderbos, De theologische cultuurbeschouwing van Abraham Kuyper (Kampen, 1947); C. Augustijn and others (eds.), Abraham Kuyper: zijn volksdeel, zijn invloed (Delft [1987]). S. van der Linde in RGG (3rd edn.), 4 (1960), cols. 191 f, s.v.

Kyriale. The Latin liturgical book containing the musical chant for the *Ordinary of the Mass. It is so named from its opening part, the *Kyrie. As a separate book it seems to owe its existence to printers who sought to satisfy the convenience of choirs wanting the fixed parts of the Mass in a different book from that containing the variable parts such as the *Gradual. *Pius X issued an authoritative revision known as the Kyriale Vaticanum, with the music for 18 different plain-chant Masses. The name 'Graduale' is occasionally used to cover the Kyriale as well as the Gradual in its proper sense.

Kyrie Eleison (Gk. Κύριε ἐλέησον, 'Lord, have mercy'). A brief prayer for Divine mercy which from an early date has been used in the liturgical worship of the Church. The use of the words in non-Christian cultus is also attested (cf. *Epictetus, Diss. 2. 7). In Christian worship their use in the latter part of the 4th cent. is recorded in the Apostolic Constitutions* (8. 6), where they appear as the response of the people to the petitions made by the deacon; *Egeria (Peregrinatio, 24. 5) also reports that at Jerusalem they were used as a response in a litany at Vespers. In the W., it was long thought that the litany which replaced the general intercession in the Mass towards the end of the 5th cent. contained the response 'Kyrie eleison', but it has been questioned whether the so-called '*Deprecatio Gelasii' in fact included these words. The Council of *Vaison in 529, however, ordered that the Kyrie should be said in France as it was in the Holy See and throughout Italy and the provinces of the East (can. 3). Soon afterwards the Rule of St *Benedict (chs. 9 and 17) records the use of the Kyrie in the Office. Under Gregory the Great (590–604) various changes in the Mass were made: on many days in the year the customary invocations were to be omitted and only the response 'Kyrie eleison' was to be sung; in a letter of 598 Gregory mentions that at Rome the 'Kyrie eleison' is supplemented by a similar prayer, 'Christe eleison' ('Christ, have mercy'), not found in the East; and the whole seems soon to have been placed in what became its traditional position near the beginning of the Mass. What is commonly known as the ninefold Kyrie (that is, 'Kyrie eleison' recited three times, followed by 'Christe eleison' recited three times, and 'Kyrie eleison' three times) occurs in the Ordo Romanus of St Amand (Ordo Romanus IV; 8th–9th cent.); it became the traditional pattern in the Roman Mass. The three groups were sometimes later conceived as directed to the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit respectively. Elaborate musical settings were devised, and these led to the development of 'farced' Kyries, in which additional words were inserted.

In the Eucharistic Rite of the BCP of 1549, the ninefold Kyrie survived in an English translation ('Lord have mercy upon us'), but in 1552 the Ten *Commandments were substituted. From the middle of the 19th cent. use of the Kyrie both in Greek and English came to be adopted unofficially in many quarters and it is permitted in the ASB and other modern Anglican liturgies. The use of the Kyrie in an English form at *Mattins, *Evensong and in the *Litany has been continuous since 1549.

In the present RC Eucharistic Rite a sixfold Kyrie, usually in the vernacular (each of the three petitions, 'Lord have mercy', 'Christ have mercy', and 'Lord have mercy', being said by the celebrant or sung by the choir and repeated by the people as a response) forms one of the penitential acts at the beginning of Mass, and the Kyrie may also be used as the people's response in the Prayer of the Faithful.

E. *Bishop, Liturgica Historica (1918), ch. 6, pp. 116–36. B. *Capelle, 'Le Kyrie de la messe et le pape Gélase', R. Bén. 46 (1934), pp. 126–44; repr. in Travaux Liturgiques, 2 (Louvain, 1962), pp. 116–34. C. Callewaert, 'Les Étapes de l'histoire du Kyrie', RHE 38 (1942), pp. 20–45. A. Chavasse, 'L'Oraison "super sindonem" dans la liturgie romaine', R. Bén. 70 (1960), pp. 313–23. P. De Clerck, La 'Prière Universelle' dans les liturgies latines anciennes (Liturgiewissenschaftliche Quellen und Forschungen, 62; 1977), pp. 166–87 and 282–95. Texts of 'farced' Kyries, ed. C. Blume, SJ, and H. M. Bannister, Tropen des Missales im Mittelalter, 1 (AHMA 47; 1905). M. Landwehr-Melnicki, Das einstimmige Kyrie des Lateinischen Mittelalters (Forschungsbeiträge zur Musikwissenschaft, 1; 1955). Jungmann (1958 edn.), 1, pp. 429–46; Eng. tr., 1, pp. 333–46.

L

Labadists. A Protestant sect named after Jean de Labadie (1610–74), its founder, who had been a *Jesuit from 1625 to 1639, had joined the Reformed Church at Montauban in 1650, and after preaching at various places on the Continent, esp. in the Netherlands, settled temporarily in 1670 at Herford in Westphalia with about 55 followers. On being forced to leave Herford in 1672, he moved first to Bremen and later to Altona, where he died. His followers held extreme *Pietist views. They believed that the Bible could be understood only by the immediate inspiration of the Holy Spirit, rarely celebrated the Eucharist, and held that marriage with an unregenerate person was not binding; and they were organized on a communistic basis. They survived de Labadie's death by some 50 years.

H. van Berkum, De Labadie en de Labadisten (2 pts., Sneek, 1851). T. J. Saxby, The Quest for the New Jerusalem, Jean de Labadie and the Labadists, 1610 1744 (International Archives of the History of Ideas, 115; 1987). A. *Ritschl, Geschichte des Pietismus, 1 (1880), pp. 194–268. Entry 'd'après une étude de Michel de Certeau' in Dict. Sp. 9 (1976), cols. 1–7; D. Nauta in Biografisch Lexicon voor de Geschiedenis van het Nederlandse Protestantisme, 2 (Kampen, 1983), pp. 293–7, with bibl. by F. H. Danner, ibid., pp. 297–302, both s.v. 'Labadie, Jean de'.

labarum. The military standard adopted by the Emp. *Constantine after his vision. In form it seems to have been an adaptation of the Roman cavalry standard, with the pagan emblems replaced by a Christian monogram, i.e. the two Greek letters X and P (the first two of ΧΡΙΣΤΟΣ, 'Christ') intersecting. It was at first the banner of only the W. Empire, but after Licinius' defeat at the battle of Chrysopolis (324) it was adopted by the E. as well. The name is probably an incorrect form of laureum, a Latin word used by the Roman soldiery for a standard (vexillum).

For the extensive modern literature, with discussion, see N. H. Baynes, Constantine the Great and the Christian Church (1929), pp. 60–5. H. Grégoire, 'L'Étymologie du "Labarum" ', Byzantion, 4 (1929), pp. 477–82. J. J. Hatt, 'La Vision de Constantin au sanctuaire de Grand et l'origine celtique du labarum', Latomus, 9 (1950), pp. 427–36. R. Egger, Das Labarum, die Kaiserstandarte der Spätantike (Sb. (Wien), 234, Heft 1; 1960; repr. in id., Römische Antike und frühes Christentum, ed. A. Betz and G. Moro, 2 (Klagenfurt, 1963), pp. 325–44).

Labbe, Philippe (1607–67), Church historian. In 1623 he joined the *Jesuits. A prolific writer and compiler, he published over 80 works, of which the most important was his collection of the Church Councils under the title Sacrosancta Concilia ad Regiam Editionem exacta. Before his death vols. 1–8 and 12–15 had been printed, but they were not published until 1671–3. The outstanding volumes were completed by his fellow-Jesuit, G. Cossart. This collection, the most extensive of its age, was later incorporated into the Concilia of J. D. *Mansi.

H. *Quentin, OSB, J. D. Mansi et les grandes collections conciliaires (1900), pp. 29–33 and 182 f. Sommervogel, 4 (1893), cols. 1295–328; 9 (1900), cols. 561–3.

Laberthonnière, Lucien (1860–1932), RC *Modernist theologian. In 1886 he was ordained priest as an *Oratorian. He taught at the Collège at Juilly (1887) and at the École Massillon at Paris (1896), and in 1900 became rector of the Collège at Juilly. From 1905 to 1913 he edited the Annales de philosophie chrétienne. He joined with M. *Blondel in a vigorous attack on C. Maurras and the *Action Française. In theology he developed a pragmatic view of religious truth, called moral dogmatism, which he expounded in Essais de philosophie religieuse (1903) and Le Réalisme chrétien et l'idéalisme grec (1904). Both works were put on the *Index in 1906, and in 1913 he was prohibited from all further publication. His writings exercised considerable influence on G. *Tyrrell.

There is a list of his pub. work in P. Beillevert, Cong. Orat. (ed.), Laberthonnière: L'homme et l'œuvre . . . Textes et communications [1972], pp. 243–73. Several works were pub. after his death by L. Canet, his literary executor (8 vols., 1935–55); the first three vols. were put on the Index. Other posthumously pub. works incl. Correspondance philosophique of Blondel and Laberthonnière, ed. C. Tresmontant [1961]; two further vols. of correspondence and other material ed. M.-T. Perrin: Laberthonnière et ses amis (Théologie Historique, 33 [1975]) and Dossier Laberthonnière (Textes, Dossiers, Documents, 8 [1983]); also a series of articles from Annales de philosophie chrétienne was repr., with other material, ed. M.-M. d'Hendecourt, as Dogme et Théologie (Recherches et Synthèses, Section de Dogme, 6 [1977]). Id., Essai sur la philosophie du Père Laberthonnière (1947); A. Ngindu Mushete, Le Problème de la connaissance religieuse d'après Lucien Laberthonnière (Recherches Africaines de Théologie, 7; Kinshasa [1978]); M.-T. Perrin, La Jeunesse de Laberthonnière (Le Point Théologique, 34 [1980]). A. R. Vidler, A Variety of Catholic Modernists (Sarum Lectures 1968–9; Cambridge, 1970), pp. 82–90. P. Beillevert in Dict. Sp. 9 (1976), cols. 9–16, with bibl.

Labre, St Benedict Joseph (1748–83), pilgrim and mendicant saint. Born at Amettes near Béthune, he showed pious dispositions from childhood and was strongly drawn to one of the religious orders. After vain attempts to be received by the *Trappists and the *Carthusians, he was rejected by all as unsuitable to community life and found his vocation in a life of solitude and pilgrimage. He visited most of the leading sanctuaries of Europe (some many times), among them *Loreto, *Assisi, and *Einsiedeln. Everywhere he begged his food, giving away the alms offered him and spending much of his time in churches. For his last few years he lived at Rome, except for an annual pilgrimage to Loreto. Here he became a familiar figure in the city, known from his devotion to the Quarant' Ore as the 'Saint of the *Forty Hours'. Exhausted by his austerities, he died outside his favourite church, Sta Maria dei Monti, in Holy Week 1783. A local cultus soon developed; and he was pronounced Venerable by *Pius IX in 1859 and canonized by *Leo XIII in 1881. Feast day, 16 Apr.

G. L. Marconi (his confessor), Ragguaglio della vita del servo di Dio, Benedetto Labre Francese (1783; abridged Eng. version, 1786).

F. Gaguère, Le Saint Pauvre de Jésus-Christ, Benoît-Joseph Labre (Avignon, 1936). Other modern Lives by A. de La Gorce (Paris, 1933; Eng. tr., 1952), J. Riverain (ibid., 1948), and P. Doyère, OSB (ibid., 1964). Y.-M. Hilaire (ed.), Benoît Labre: Errance et sainteté, Histoire d'un culte 1783–1983 (1984), with bibl.

Lacey, Thomas Alexander (1853–1931), Anglican divine. Educated at Balliol College, Oxford, he was ordained in 1876 and after holding various scholastic and parochial appointments became Canon of *Worcester in 1918. Imbued with a sympathetic understanding of modern problems, he became known as an effective apologist for the *Anglo-Catholic presentation of the Christian faith. Throughout his life he was devoted to the cause of reunion. He took an active part at Rome in 1896, when a Papal commission was examining the validity of *Anglican Ordinations, supplying, in conjunction with his friend Fr. F. W. Puller, SSJE, much of the material from the Anglican side. His most important writings were De Hierarchia Anglicana Dissertatio Apologetica (1895; in conjunction with E. Denny); A Roman Diary and other Documents relating to the Papal Enquiry into English Ordinations, MDCCCXCVI (1910); Marriage in Church and State (1912; revised by R. C. Mortimer, 1947); and Unity and Schism (1917). He was joint editor of the English Hymnal* and translated for it many Latin hymns.

Wayfarer's Essays [collection of Lacey's papers ed., with short memoir (pp. v–xi) and list of his books (pp. xiii f.), by A. Wilson] (1934). C. B. Mortlock in DNB, 1931–1940, pp. 519 f., s.v.

Lachmann, Karl (1793–1851), philologist and textual critic. From 1825 to 1827 he was extraordinary, and from 1827 until his death ordinary, professor of classical and German philology at Berlin. Besides editions of classical authors, he issued two editions of the Greek NT, the smaller in 1831 and a fuller one in 2 vols., 1842–50. He applied to the biblical text the same methods of textual criticism in evaluating variant readings which he had previously used on works of Lucretius. Using the oldest Greek manuscripts and the testimony of the Fathers, he aimed at presenting the text, not as it was originally composed—this he thought an impossible task—but as it circulated in E. Christendom at the end of the 4th cent.; though his modus operandi, partly conditioned by this limited aim, suffered from being over-mechanical, he gave the impetus to the later work of C. *Tischendorf and B. F. *Westcott and F. J. A. *Hort. Lachmann was also the first scholar to put the *Marcan hypothesis on a sound footing; he did this in an article in the Theologische Studien und Kritiken for 1835.

K. Lachmann, 'Rechenschaft über seine Ausgabe des Neuen Testaments', Theologische Studien und Kritiken, 3 (1830), pp. 817–45; id., 'De Ordine Narrationum in Evangeliis Synopticis', ibid. 8 (1835), pp. 570–90. A. Leitzmann, Briefe Karl Lachmanns (Abh. (Berl.), 1942, no. 8). Life by M. Hertz (Berlin, 1851). A. Rüegg, Die neutestamentliche Textkritik seit Lachmann (Zurich, 1892). S. Timpanaro, Jun., 'La genesi del "Metodo del Lachmann"', Studi Italiani di Filologia Classica, NS 31 (1959), pp. 182–228; 32 (1960), pp. 38–63. N. H. Palmer, 'Lachmann's Argument', New Testament Studies, 13 (1967), pp. 368–78. B. M. Metzger, The Text of the New Testament (3rd edn., Oxford, 1992), pp. 124–6.

Lacordaire, Henri-Dominique (1802–61), French *Dominican preacher. He was born at Recey-sur-Ource and, after losing his faith at an early age, became a disciple of J.-J. *Rousseau. He studied law at Dijon and *Paris and speedily made a reputation as an orator at the Paris bar. In 1824 he was converted, entered the seminary at Issy, and was ordained priest at *Saint Sulpice in 1827. In the next year he was appointed chaplain to the Convent of the *Visitation in Paris. In 1830 he became a contributor to F. de *Lamennais's periodical L'Avenir, but severed connection with it on its condemnation by *Gregory XVI in 1832. He replied to Lamennais's Paroles d'un croyant (1834) with Considérations sur le système philosophique de M. de La Mennais (1834). In 1835–6 he gave the first two series of his famous Conferences at *Notre-Dame which drew a vast concourse, largely from the intelligentsia. His political liberalism and *ultramontane theology aroused distrust, however, and at the height of his influence he retired to Rome. Here in 1839, with the encouragement of P. *Guéranger, then engaged in restoring the *Benedictine Order in France, Lacordaire entered the Dominican Order with the intention of re-establishing it in France, having earlier in the year published his Mémoire pour le rétablissement en France de l'Ordre des Frères Prêcheurs. After his return to Paris in 1841 he resumed his Conferences, and preached also in other cities (Bordeaux, Nancy, etc.). In 1843 he established at Nancy the first Dominican House in France since the suppression of the Order in 1790. He maintained his political interests and in 1848 was elected deputy for Marseilles in the National Assembly; in the same year, with A. F. *Ozanam he founded the journal L'Ère nouvelle. From 1850 to 1854 and again from 1858 to 1861 he was Provincial of the newly-founded French Dominican province. In 1852 he founded the teaching *Third Order, of which he became Vicar General in 1854, at the same time taking charge of the college at Sorèze in the S. of France. In 1860 he was elected a member of the Academy. If hardly a profound theologian or philosopher, he was fully conversant with the religious needs of his time. His most influential work was his Conférences de Notre-Dame de Paris (4 vols., 1844–51), directed esp. to unbelievers. His other writings include Vie de Saint Dominique (1841), which may have some historical value, Sainte Marie-Madeleine (1860), which has none (both books have inspired passages), and his Notice sur le rétablissement en France de l'Ordre des Frères Prêcheurs (an autobiographical work, posthumously ed. by C. R. F. *Montalembert as Le Testament, 1870).

Edns. of his works incl. those in 6 vols., Paris, 1857–61; 9 vols., ibid., 1872; and 4 vols., ibid., 1912. Among the numerous collections of his correspondence, listed in detail by H. D. Noble, OP, cited below, those of most general interest are his Lettres à jeunes gens, ed. H. Perreyve [1862]; (Eng. tr., 1902), and his correspondence with Montalembert, 1830–1861, ed. L. Le Guillou and A. Duval [OP] (Paris, 1989). Modern edns., with introds. by A. Duval, of his Lettres à un jeune homme sur la vie chrétienne (1988), and of his Vie de Saint Dominique (1989). Eng. tr. of his Mémoire pour le rétablissement en France de l'Ordre des Frères Prêcheurs, ed. S. [C. ff.] Tugwell, OP (Dominican Sources, 2; Oak Park, Ill., and Dublin, 1983). G. Ledos, Morceaux choisis et bibliographie de Lacordaire [1923]. Primary Lives by C. R. F. Montalembert (Paris, 1862; Eng. tr., 1863), B. Chocarne, OP (Paris, 1866; Eng. tr., Dublin [1868]), and [J. T.] Foisset (2 vols., Paris, 1870). P. Fesch, Lacordaire Journaliste (1830–1848) (1897); J. Favre, Lacordaire orateur: Sa formation et la chronologie de ses œuvres (1906); P. Baron, OP, La Jeunesse de Lacordaire (1961); J. Cabanis, Lacor- daire et quelques autres: Politique et religion [1982], passim; B. Bonvin [OP], Lacordaire, Jandel: La restauration de l'Ordre dominicain en France après la Révolution écartelée entre deux visions du monde (1989), with text of Mémoire Jandel. G. Bedouelle [OP] (ed.), Lacordaire, son pays, ses amis et la liberté des ordres religieux en France (1991). A. Duval, OP, 'Lacordaire et Buchez. Idéalisme révolutionnaire et réveil religieux en 1839', RSPT 45 (1961), pp. 422–55; id., 'Le rapport du P. Lacordaire au Chapitre de la Province de France (septembre 1854)', Archivum Fratrum Praedicatorum, 31 (1961), pp. 326–64; id., 'Les premiers entretiens du Père Lacordaire et de l'abbé Jandel sur la restauration dominicaine en France (31 oct. 1839)', ibid. 36 (1966), pp. 493–542; id., 'Lacordaire et Monseigneur de Quelen 1836–1838', ibid. 56 (1986), pp. 381–428; 57 (1987), pp. 291–340; id., 'Lacordaire: La Vie de Saint Dominique', ibid. 59 (1989), pp. 267–96. In Eng. there is a popular Life by L. C. Sheppard (London and New York, 1964). P. Spencer, Politics of Belief in Nineteenth Century France (1954), pp. 17–115. H. D. Noble in DTC 8 (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 2394–424, s.v., with detailed bibl.

Lactantius (*c.*250–*c.*325), Christian apologist. A pupil of *Arnobius, Lucius Caelius Firmianus Lactantius was appointed by *Diocletian as a teacher of rhetoric at Nicomedia. He is generally thought to have been a convert to Christianity, but the date of his conversion is disputed; he had certainly lost his post at the time when persecution broke out in 303. Later the Emp. *Constantine made him tutor to his son Crispus. His main surviving works are 'Divinae Institutiones' (first version 305–11), a treatise which sought to commend the truth of Christianity to men of letters and thereby for the first time set out in Latin a systematic account of the Christian attitude to life; 'De Opificio Dei', an attempt to prove the existence of God from the marvels of the human body; 'De Ira Dei', which deals with God's punishment of human crime; and 'De Mortibus Persecutorum', which describes with a wealth of lurid detail the horrible deaths of the persecutors of the Church. The authenticity of the last-mentioned treatise, though formerly contested, is now generally admitted. A charming poem 'De Ave *Phoenice', ascribed to him by St *Gregory of Tours, may well be his work. In his prose style Lactantius was deliberately Ciceronian; in his theology he was concerned to maintain the unity of God in the face of contemporary polytheism.

*Jerome, De Viris Illustribus, 80. Lactantius' theological writings have been constantly reissued since the 15th cent. Editio princeps of 'Divinae Institutiones', 'De Ira Dei' and 'De Opificio Dei' pub. Subiaco, 1465 (the second dated printed book issued in Italy). The text of J. B. le Brun and N. Lenglet du Fresnoy (2 vols., Paris, 1748) is repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 6 and 7. Crit. text ed. S. Brandt and G. Laubmann (CSEL 19 and 27; 1890–7); also, of 'Divinae Institutiones', by P. Monat (Book 1, SC 326; 1986), 2 (SC 337; 1987), 4 (SC 377; 1992), 5 (SC 204–5; 1973); of 'Epitome' by M. Perrin (SC 335; 1987); of 'De Opificio Dei' by id. (SC 213–4; 1974); of 'De Ira Dei' by C. Ingremeau (SC 289; 1982); and of 'De Mortibus Persecutorum' by J. Moreau (SC 39, 2 vols., 1954; rev. by J. Rougé, 39bis, forthcoming, and by J. L. Creed (with Eng. tr., Oxford Early Christian Texts, 1984). Eng. trs. of his works by W. Fletcher (ANCL 21–2; 1871) and M. F. McDonald, OP (Fathers of the Church, 49 and 54; 1964–5).

R. Pichon, Lactance: Études sur le mouvement philosophique et religieux sous le règne de Constantin (1901). J. Stevenson, 'The Life and Literary Activity of Lactantius', in K. Aland and F. L. Cross (eds.), Studia Patristica, 1 (TU 63; 1957), pp. 661–77. A. Wlosok, Laktanz und die philosophische Gnosis (Abh. (Heid.), 1960, Abh. 2). J. Speigl, 'Zum Kirchenbegriff des Laktanz', RQ 65 (1970), pp. 15–28. E. Heck, Die dualistischen Zusätze und die Kaiseranreden bei Lactantius: Untersuchungen zur Textgeschichte der Divinae institutiones und der Schrift De opificio dei (Abh. (Heid.), 1972, Abh. 2). E. Messmer, Laktanz und die Dichtung (Diss., Munich, 1974). J. Fontaine and M. Perrin (eds.), Lactance et son temps (1978); M. Perrin, L'Homme antique et Chrétien: L'Anthropologie de Lactance, 250–325 (Théologie historique, 59 [1981]). P. Monat, Lactance et la Bible: Une propédeutique latine à la lecture de la Bible dans l'Occident constantinien (2 vols., Études Augustiniennes, 1982). J. Quasten, Patrology, 2 (Utrecht, 1953), pp. 392–410. É. Amann in DTC 8 (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 2425–44, s.v. 'Lactance'.

On 'De Ave Phoenice', see bibl. to PHOENIX.

lacticinia. Milk and foods such as cheese or butter, made from milk, which (as well as meat and eggs) were often forbidden on fast days in the early and medieval Church, and this is still the rule for all fast days in the E. Church.

Ladislaus (in Hungarian, László), St (1040–95), King of Hungary. He was elected by the nobles in 1077; but the first years of his reign were troubled by the conspiracies of Solomon, son of a former king and rival claimant to the throne, who was finally defeated in 1089. In the *Investiture struggle between the German Emperor and the Pope he took the side of *Gregory VII and Victor III, and he laboured incessantly to spread the Christian faith among his subjects, esp. in Croatia and Dalmatia, which he annexed in 1091. He built many churches, obtained the canonization of *Stephen I and his son Emeric, and promulgated a series of laws on religious and civil matters at the Synod of Szabolcs (1092). However, when *Urban II refused to acknowledge his suzerainty over Croatia, his relations with the Papacy came under strain. He died amid plans to participate in the First *Crusade, and was buried at his new episcopal foundation of Nagyvárad (today Oradea in Romania). Venerated as a saint by his people, he was canonized in 1192. Feast day, 27 June.

Vita from 15th cent. MS ed. E. Bartoniek in E. Szentpétery (ed.), Scriptores Rerum Hungaricarum, 2 (Budapest, 1938), pp. 509–27; Ger. tr., with introd., by J. M. Bak in T. von Bogyay and others, Die heiligen Könige (Graz and Vienna, 1976), pp. 147–65. J. Karácsonyi, Szent László király élete (Budapest, 1926); L. Mezey (ed.), Athleta Patriae: Tanulmányok Szent László történetéhez (ibid., 1980). G. Györffy, 'A "lovagszent" uralkodása (1077–1095)', Történelmi Szemle, 20 (1977), pp. 533–64. Z. J. Kosztolnyik, Five Eleventh Century Hungarian Kings: Their Politics and their Relations with Rome (East European Monographs, 79; New York, etc., 1981), pp. 92–109.

Lady, Our. A common designation in use among Catholics for the Blessed Virgin *Mary (BVM). It is derived from the Latin 'Domina nostra'. Since 1559 the feast of the *Annunciation has been described in the Table of Lessons in the BCP as the 'Annunciation of our Lady'. In earlier times, the Annunciation (25 Mar.) was known as 'Our Lady in Lent' or 'in March'; the *Assumption (15 Aug.) as 'Our Lady in Harvest'; and the *Conception (8 Dec.) as 'Our Lady in December'.

Lady Chapel. A chapel dedicated to the BVM ('Our *Lady') when it forms part of a larger church. From the 13th cent. onwards the practice of constructing such chapels, often as later additions and to the east of the High Altar, became common in England, e.g. Henry VII's Chapel at *Westminster Abbey.

Lady Day. The feast of the *Annunciation of the BVM, 25 Mar. The name was used in earlier times of any feast of Our *Lady. In the Middle Ages and later 25 Mar. was reckoned the first day of the civil year. It is still a quarter day and Old Lady Day (6 April) still starts the fiscal year in Britain, e.g. for income-tax purposes.

Laetare Sunday. The Fourth Sunday in *Lent ('Mid-Lent Sunday', Mi-carême), so named from the opening words of the *Introit at the Mass (Is. 66: 10, 'Rejoice ye with Jerusalem'). In W. Christendom certain relaxations of the penitential observances of Lent are allowed, e.g. the wearing of rose-pink instead of purple vestments. The Sunday is also known as *Mothering Sunday and *Refreshment Sunday.

Laetentur Coeli (Lat., 'Let the heavens rejoice'). Two important theological documents, so named from their opening words. (They are otherwise quite unrelated.)

(1) The Greek Formulary of Union, sent on 23 Apr. 433 by *Cyril, Patr. of *Alexandria, to *John, Bp. of *Antioch, embodying the terms of reunion agreed upon by both parties, after John had previously given qualified support to the teaching of Cyril's adversary, *Nestorius. Inasmuch as the document was formally approved by the Council of *Chalcedon (451), it possesses *oecumenical authority. It expounds the Antiochene doctrine of the Person of Christ in terms acceptable to the Alexandrians, insisting on the *Theotokos and both the unity of person and the distinction of the natures.

(2) The bull issued by Pope *Eugenius IV on 6 July 1439 decreeing the union settled at the Council of *Florence between the Orthodox E. Church and the W. It laid down that the Orthodox should accept, inter alia, the doctrine of the *Double Procession of the Holy Spirit and the primacy of the see of Rome. It had been signed by Latins and Greeks alike on the previous day. See also FLORENCE, COUNCIL OF.

(1) The formulary (Gk. opening, Εὐφραινέσθωσαν οἱ οὐρανοί) is Ep. 39 of the correspondence of Cyril of Alexandria (J. P. Migne, PG 77. 173–82). It has often been repr. in collections of 'Oecumenical Documents', e.g. T. H. Bindley, Oecumenical Documents of the Faith (4th edn. by F. W. Green, 1950), pp. 138–48. The only critical text is in E. *Schwartz, ACO 1. 1. 4, pp. 15–20.

(2) Text in G. Hoffmann, SJ (ed.), Concilium Florentinum: Documenta et Scriptores, Series A. Epistolae Pontificiae ad Concilium Florentinum Spectantes, pt. 2 (Rome, 1944), pp. 68–79. Lat. text of the principal clauses repr. in Denzinger and Hünermann (37th edn., 1991), pp. 449–52 (nos. 1300–8). See also bibl. to FLORENCE, COUNCIL OF.

Lagarde, Paul Anton de (1827–91), Protestant theologian and critic. In 1854 he exchanged his earlier name of Bötticher for de Lagarde. From 1854 to 1866 he was a schoolmaster at Berlin, and from 1869 till his death professor at Göttingen. His opposition to all forms of liberalism and economic materialism, his hatred of the Jews, and his intensely national feeling anticipated many subsequent developments in German thought. On the other hand he was a keen upholder of the rights of individual personality and deprecated any attempt to set up the state as an absolute norm. Possessed of untiring industry and an extraordinary range of knowledge, he produced a number of erudite works, covering an unusually wide range of subjects. Among those of importance to the ecclesiastical historian are Didascalia Apostolorum Syriace (1854), Onomastica Sacra (1870), Psalterium iuxta Hebraeos Hieronymi (1874), Aegyptiaca (1883), Septuaginta-Studien (1891; 1892), as well as an edition of part of the *Lucianic Recension of the *Septuagint (1883).

A. de Lagarde (widow), Paul de Lagarde: Erinnerungen aus seiner Leben zusammengestellt (Göttingen, 1894). Other studies by L. Schemann (Leipzig, 1919; 3rd edn., 1943), A. Rahlfs (Mitteilungen des Septuaginta-Unternehmens der Wissenschaften zu Göttingen, 4, Heft 1; 1928), R. W. Lougee (Cambridge, Mass., and London, 1962), and a thesis by A. Favrat (Université de Paris IV, 1979), with bibl. pp. 613–41. F. [R.] Stern, The Politics of Cultural Despair: A Study in the Rise of Germanic Ideology (Berkeley and Los Angeles, Calif., 1961), pp. 3–94. R. Hanhart, 'Paul Anton de Lagarde und seine Kritik an der Theologie', in B. Moeller (ed.), Theologie in Göttingen (Göttingen [1987]), pp. 271–305. R. Heiligenthal in TRE 20 (1990), pp. 375–8, s.v.

Lagrange, Marie-Joseph (1855–1938), biblical scholar. He entered the *Dominican Order in 1879. In 1890 he founded at Jerusalem the 'École Pratique d'Études Bibliques', and in 1892 the Revue Biblique [Internationale]. He gave his warm support to *Leo XIII's efforts to encourage the critical study of the Bible in the RC Church, and in Jan. 1903 he was appointed a member of the *Biblical Commission. In matters of OT criticism, which was the chief field of his earlier labours, perhaps his position approached as nearly to that of the *Higher Critics as was then compatible with Catholic orthodoxy. His sympathies with the critical position became manifest in a memorandum which he presented in 1897 to the International Congress of Catholics at Fribourg (Switzerland) and later published in the Revue Biblique (Jan. 1898). His original interest was in the OT, but in 1907 the *Holy See forbade him to continue this work and he turned his attention to the NT. His monumental commentaries on the four Gospels (Marc, 1911; Luc, 1920; Matthieu, 1923; Jean, 1925) at once established themselves as standard works.

Le Père Lagrange au service de la Bible: Souvenirs personnels, ed. P. Benoit, OP (Chrétiens de tous les temps, 22; 1967; Eng. tr., New York [1985]), incl. text of unpub. memoirs. Lagrange's correspondence with H.-M. Cormier, Master General of the Dominicans (1904–16), ed. B. Montagnes, OP, Exégèse et Obéissance (Études Bibliques, NS 11; 1989). L. H. Vincent, OP (ed.), Mémorial Lagrange (Paris, 1940), with an 'Essai d'une bibliographie sommaire du Père Lagrange' by id., pp. 1–11. F. M. Braun, L'Œuvre du Père Lagrange (1943; Eng. adaptation, Milwaukee [1963]). J. T. Burtchaell, CSR, Catholic Theories of Biblical Inspiration since 1810 (Cambridge, 1969), esp. pp. 132–46.

Laínez, Diego (1512–65), second *General of the *Jesuits. After studying at the University of Alcalá, he joined St *Ignatius Loyola in Paris and with him helped to found the Society of Jesus. He was appointed professor of scholastic theology at the Sapienza at Rome, and was largely responsible for crushing incipient Protestant opinion at Piacenza and other cities in N. Italy. He took a very prominent part in the Council of *Trent, where he represented the more irreconcilable elements (e.g. on *justification) and supported stronger views on Papal jurisdiction than many others. On Ignatius' death (1556)

Laínez succeeded him first as 'General-Vicar' and (from 1558) as General. His term of office was notable for the continued success and expansion of the order.

Lainii Monumenta: Epistolae et Acta Patris Jacobi Lainii (8 vols., Monumenta Historica Societatis Jesu, Madrid, 1912–17); his Disputationes Tridentinae, ed. H. Grisar, SJ (2 vols., Innsbruck, 1886). Lives by P. de Ribadeneira, SJ (Madrid, 1594; modern edn. by E. Rey, SJ, under the title Historias de la Contrarreforma (1945), pp. 429–581), and F. Dilarino (pseudonym of C. M. Rinaldi, SJ, Rome, 1672). Modern studies by A. Martínez de Azagra y Beladiez (Madrid, 1933), H. Flichter, SJ (St Louis, 1944), and F. Cereceda, SJ (2 vols., Madrid, 1945–6). M. Scaduto, SJ, L'epoca di Giacomo Lainez (Storia della Compagnia di Gesù in Italia, 3 and 4; 1964–74). J. Brodrick, SJ, The Progress of the Jesuits, 1556–79 (1946), pp. 66–111. Polgár, 2 (1990), pp. 359–62. M. Scaduto, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 9 (1976), cols. 110–15, s.v. 'Laínez (Laynez; Jacques)'.

laity. The term is derived from the phrase λαὸς θεοῦ, the 'people of God', contrasted with those who had not been called by God to be His people (originally the 'Gentiles', but already in 1st-cent. Christian usage sometimes the Jews as well). In early Christian literature a lay person is a member of the Church not otherwise distinguished as being in *major or *minor orders (cf. I Clem. 40). Gradually, but unevenly, the laity came to be defined negatively as 'not the clergy'. Another traditional division is into clergy, religious, and laity. The distinction between clergy and laity has always been most marked in the RC Church, less so in the C of E, while some sects such as the *Quakers admit no distinction at all. In the RC Church the emphasis has been modified by the Second *Vatican Council: this Council stressed the role of the laity as part of the 'people of God' in the 'Constitution on the Church' (1964); in the 'Constitution on the Liturgy' (1963) the laity were said to have a share in the 'priestly, prophetic and royal office of Christ' and were assigned various duties in public worship; while the 'Decree on the Apostolate of the Laity' (1965) recognized their special gifts (charismata) for building up the body of Christ and stressed their vocation to ameliorate the social order as well as their part in the Gospel. A similar change of emphasis in the C of E is reflected in the enhanced position assigned to the laity in the government of the Church by the *Synodical Government Measure 1969. The laity, however, owe allegiance to the clergy in spiritual matters and in most Churches are bound to contribute to the support of their ministers.

Lake, Kirsopp (1872–1946), biblical and patristic scholar. Educated at Lincoln College, Oxford, he was ordained in 1895, and after holding two curacies in England, was professor of NT exegesis at *Leiden from 1904 to 1914. Later he held professorships at Harvard University, USA. Esp. in his earlier years he was a provocative NT critic. In his Historical Evidence for the Resurrection of Jesus Christ (1907) he challenged the sufficiency of the evidence for the empty tomb, and in his Earlier Epistles of St Paul (1911) maintained that the course of primitive Christianity was profoundly affected by the influence of the mystery religions. These books were followed by The Beginnings of Christianity: The Acts of the Apostles (5 vols., 1920–33), a co-operative work in the editing of which he was associated with F. J. Foakes Jackson. Throughout his life he was a devoted student of the palaeography of Greek MSS. *The Early Days of Monasticism on Mount Athos (1909) was the fruit of an early visit to Greece for the study of MSS, and from 1934 onwards he edited with his wife Monumenta Palaeographica Vetera, First Series, a fine set of facsimiles of 'Dated Greek Minuscule Manuscripts to the Year 1200'. From 1934 until his death he and his wife also edited the series Studies and Documents.

R. P. Casey, S. Lake, and A. K. Lake (eds.), Quantulacumque: Studies presented to Kirsopp Lake by Pupils, Colleagues and Friends 2[1937], with biog. note by G. K. Lake (son), pp. vii f. F. C. Grant in DNB, 1941–1950, pp. 466 f.

lamb. The use of a lamb as a symbol of Christ is based on such passages as Jn. 1: 29, Rev. 5: 12. Occasionally in early times a lamb with or near a cross was used to represent the sacrifice of Christ, e.g. in a 3rd-cent. inscription in the *Catacomb of San Callisto. Another common type of symbolism represents the lamb as standing on Mt. *Zion (cf. Rev. 14: 1), from which flow the four rivers of Paradise, while other passages in the NT (e.g. Jn. 10: 14) suggest the representation of the Christian believers as sheep, and where this symbolism is used the Good Shepherd carries His lambs or, alternatively, stands among them. After the *Trullan Synod in 692 (can. 82) forbade the representation of Christ under the form of a lamb, such imagery was confined to the W. In the E. Church, however, the portion of bread that is consecrated in the Liturgy is called the 'lamb' (see PROSPHORA). See also AGNUS DEI and PASCHAL LAMB.

F. Gerke, 'Der Ursprung der Lämmerallegorien in der altchristlichen Plastik', ZNTW 33 (1934), pp. 160–96. F. [G. L.] van der Meer, Maiestas Domini: Théophanies de l'apocalypse dans l'art chrétien (Studi di antichità cristiana, 13; 1938), pp. 27–174. F. Nikolasch, Das Lamm als Christussymbol in den Schriften der Väter (Wiener Beiträge zur Theologie, 3; 1963). H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 1 (pt. 1; 1907), cols. 877–905, s.v. 'Agneau'; A. Romeo and A. Ferrua, SJ, in EC 1 (1948), cols. 459–64, s.v. 'Agnello'; Lexikon der Christlichen Ikonographie, 3 (1971), cols. 7–14, s.v. 'Lamm, Lamm Gottes'; J. R. Miles in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 4 (1992), pp. 132–4, s.v.

Lambert, St (*c.*635–before 705/6), also 'Landebertus', martyr. A member of a noble family of Austrasia, he was Bp. of Tongeren/Maastricht from *c.*670 until his death, though from *c.*675 to 682 he was, for political causes, exiled from his see to the monastery of Stavelot. In his later life he worked zealously as a missionary in what is now Brabant. It seems indisputable that he suffered a violent death, but the circumstances are differently recorded. Acc. to some authorities it occurred in a blood feud, while there is another story (insufficiently attested) that it was the result of his outspoken reproof of Pepin II, Mayor of the Palace, for adultery. He was succeeded by St *Hubert, who transferred the see to Liège. Feast day, 17 Sept.; of the 'Translation' (of Lambert's remains to Liège in 718), 31 May.

Life (c. AD 730) by Godescalcus, deacon of Liège, and three other medieval Lives, pr. in AASS, Sept. 5 (1755), pp. 574–617; J. Demarteau, Vie la plus ancienne de S. Lambert (Liège, 1890), incl. text of first, pp. 39–64; crit. edn. of the four Lives by B. Krusch in MGH, Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, 6 (1913), pp. 299–429; cf. H. Moretus in Anal. Boll. 33 (1914), pp. 247–9. M. Zender, Räume und Schichten mittelalterlicher Heiligenverehrung in ihrer Bedeutung für die Volkskunde (Düsseldorf, 1959), pp. 27–60. M. Werner, Der Lütticher Raum in frühkarolingischer Zeit (Göttingen, 1980), pp. 241–74. J.-L. Kupper, 'Saint Lambert: de l'histoire à la légende', RHE 79 (1984), pp. 5–49.

Lambert, François (1486/7–1530), Reformer of Hesse. At the age of 15 he entered the *Franciscan Order at *Avignon and in 1517 was appointed praedicator apostolicus. While travelling through Switzerland in 1522, he met U. *Zwingli; he left his order and continued his journey under a false name to *Wittenberg (1523), where M. *Luther obtained a pension for him from the Elector, and where he married. In 1524 he went to Metz, but after eight days fled to Strasbourg, where he wrote several treatises and commentaries on the *Minor Prophets. In 1526 he was called to Hesse by the Landgraf *Philip. Here he took a prominent part in the *Homberg Synod, was charged with the preparation of a new Protestant 'Church Order' for Hesse, and in 1527 became professor of theology at the newly-founded *Marburg University. After the *Marburg Colloquy of 1529, he adopted the *Zwinglian doctrine of the Eucharist. He was the author of commentaries on the Song of Songs (1524) and the Apocalypse (1528) as well as several polemical writings, including an attack (in an excursus to his commentary on Hosea, 1525), on *Erasmus' doctrine on free will.

Studies by J. W. Baum (Strasbourg, 1840 [Ger.]; repr. Geneva, 1971) and R. L. Winters (Philadelphia, 1938). G. Müller, Franz Lambert von Avignon und die Reformation in Hessen (Veröffentlichungen der Historischen Kommission für Hessen und Waldeck, 24, 4; Marburg, 1958). P. Fraenkel (ed.), Pour retrouver François Lambert: Bio-bibliographie et études (Bibliotheca Bibliographica Aureliana, 108; Baden-Baden, 1987). R. Haas in Dict. Sp. 9 (1976), cols. 143–5; G. Müller in TRE 20 (1990), pp. 415–18, both s.v. See also works cited under HOMBERG, SYNOD OF.

Lambert of Hersfeld. See LAMPERT OF HERSFELD.

Lambeth. For over 700 years Lambeth has been the London residence of the Abps. of *Canterbury. Abp. *Baldwin (1185–90) acquired from the possessions of the see of *Rochester the manor of Lambeth and the manor-house, which was called 'Lambeth House' until about 1658, when, owing to the decay of the palace at Canterbury, the title of palace was transferred to Lambeth. Both Baldwin and his successor *Hubert Walter were prevented by the opposition of the monks at Christ Church, Canterbury, from establishing a collegiate church at Lambeth. The chapel, built in 1245 by Abp. *Boniface in the Early English style, is the oldest part of the building. The South Gateway with its two towers was erected by Cardinal John Morton (Abp., 1486–1501). The Water Tower, known in recent times as the 'Lollards' Tower' (on the supposition that *Lollards were imprisoned in it), is a massive square keep, erected by Abp. H. *Chichele in 1434. Abp. M. *Parker was consecrated at Lambeth in 1559 and is the only archbishop buried in the palace. The Great Hall, built by Abp. W. *Juxon in 1663, contains part of the Library (founded by Abp. R. *Bancroft in 1610), which has some 2,500 MSS, including the Registers of the archbishops from 1279 to 1928. The part of the palace occupied by modern archbishops dates from 1829–34. It was seriously damaged in 1940 in an air raid; restorations were completed *c.*1956. See also LAMBETH CONFERENCES.

[A.C.] Ducarel, The History and Antiquities of the Archiepiscopal Palace of Lambeth (1785; incl. in J. Nichols, Bibliotheca Topographica Britannica, 2, 1790, no. 4). J. C. Browne, Lambeth Palace and its Associations (1882). H. Roberts and W. H. Godfrey (eds.), The London County Council Survey of London, 23 (1951), pp. 81–103. C. R. Dodwell, Lambeth Palace (1958). Catalogues of the MSS in the archiepiscopal library by H. J. Todd (London, 1812; cont. by E. G. W. Bill [MSS 1222–1860], Oxford, 1972; [1907–2340], ibid., 1976; and [2341–3119 (excluding 2690–2750)], ibid., 1983) and M. R. James and C. Jenkins (5 parts, Cambridge, 1930–2); of some early pr. books by S. R. Maitland (London, 1843); index of Eng. pr. books up to 1550 by id. (ibid., 1845). There are also a number of more recent works on the Archives in the library, incl. calendars of the American Colonial Section of the Fulham Papers, by W. W. Manross (Oxford, 1965), of the Original Papal Documents, by J. E. Sayers (London, 1967), and of SPG Papers by W. W. Manross (Oxford, 1974).

Lambeth Appeal. See LAMBETH CONFERENCES.

Lambeth Articles. Nine theological propositions compiled at Lambeth in 1595 by a committee that met under Abp. J. *Whitgift. Drawn up in the interests of a pronounced *Calvinism, they maintained the *Supralapsarian doctrine that God from all eternity had predestined by an unchangeable decree a definite number of persons to salvation, and that the elect were saved not because God had foreseen their merits but through His good pleasure alone. Although they represented a considerable body of theological opinion at the time, they were never formally authorized and they were strongly disapproved of by *Elizabeth I.

The text is in E. *Cardwell, Documentary Annals of the Reformed Church of England (1839), 2, pp. 30–4. Eng. tr. in H. C. Porter, Reformation and Reaction in Tudor Cambridge (Cambridge, 1958), p. 371, with discussion, pp. 364–75. P. [G.] Lake, Moderate Puritans and the Elizabethan Church (ibid., 1982), pp. 201–42, passim.

Lambeth Conferences. Assemblies of the bishops of the Anglican Communion held about every ten years under the presidency of the Abp. of *Canterbury. From 1867 to 1958 they were held in *Lambeth Palace; in 1968 in *Church House, Westminster; and in 1978 and 1988 in the University of Kent at Canterbury. Though a council of bishops was mentioned in a letter of Bp. J. H. Hopkins of Vermont to Abp. J. B. *Sumner in 1851, it was a request for such a meeting from the Synod of the Anglican Church in *Canada, held in 1865, to Abp. C. T. *Longley, which led to the first Conference. The Canadian bishops and others were concerned about the unsettling effects of the case of Bp. J. W. Colenso and the publication of Essays and Reviews. After the original idea of a council authorized to define doctrine had been abandoned, owing to strenuous opposition, the first Conference, attended by 76 bishops, met in 1867; it issued an 'Address to the Faithful'. Subsequent Conferences have been attended by an increasing number of bishops: from *c.*100 in 1878 to 518 in 1988. The Conference of 1888 accepted the *Lambeth Quadrilateral as a foundation in the search for the reunion of Christians; it was also the first to issue a specific list of resolutions. That of 1908 was preceded by a large Pan-Anglican Congress, composed of some 7,000 clerical and lay delegates. The Conference of 1920 (delayed because of the First World War) was important for its 'Appeal to All Christian People' for reunion, which was sent to the heads of Christian communities throughout the world. That of 1930 returned to the subject of unity, as have all later Conferences. Its leading theme was the doctrine of God. It also gave guarded approval to the *South India scheme, and radically condemned racism. The chief subjects of the seventh Conference, postponed until 1948 because of the Second World War, were the doctrine of man, the Church in the modern world, and marriage discipline. One result was the issue of rules of churchmanship. The Conference of 1958 dealt with the authority of the Bible, peace, and the family in contemporary society, giving approval, with reservations, to family planning. This marked a change from the resolutions of the 1908 and 1920 Conferences, which had condemned *contraception. The Conference of 1968 devoted itself largely to considerations of the renewal of the Church in faith, ministry, and unity. One of its resolutions led to the establishment of the Anglican Consultative Council (see ANGLICAN COMMUNION). For the first time a number of observers were present, as well as Anglican consultants who were not bishops. The 1978 Conference accepted the de facto ordination of *women in some Provinces, and at the same time called for the preservation of communion and mutual respect between those Provinces which ordained women and those which did not. The 1988 Conference dealt with a wide range of issues, including world peace, polygamy, *homosexuality, and AIDS, but most of the time was devoted to ecumenism and the ordination of women to the priesthood and episcopate. The Conference endorsed the Final Report of the first *Anglican–Roman Catholic International Commission and asked the Abp. of Canterbury to establish a Commission to report to the Archbishops and Primates on women in the episcopate. (The Commission, under the chairmanship of Abp. R. Eames of Armagh, presented its findings in 1989.) At this Conference, for the first time, all the official members met each day for a period of Bible study and reflection before the business sessions. The resolutions of Lambeth Conferences, though not binding, are regarded by member Churches as significant.

The Reports of the first five Conferences were ed. [by H. Thomas] under the direction of R. T. *Davidson (1920; rev. as The Six Lambeth Conferences 1867–1920, 1929). Reports of the Conferences 1930–68 were issued by the SPCK; those of 1978 and 1988 by the Church Information Office. R. Coleman (ed.), Resolutions of the Twelve Lambeth Conferences 1867–1988 (Toronto, 1992). W. R. Curtis, The Lambeth Conferences: The Solution for Pan-Anglican Organization (New York, 1942). A. M. G. Stephenson, The First Lambeth Conference 1867 (CHS, 1967); id., Anglicanism and the Lambeth Conferences (1978). A special issue of Anglican and Episcopal History, 58 (1989), pp. 251–408, was devoted to a series of arts. on 'Lambeth Conferences, Past and Present'.

Lambeth degrees. The degrees in Divinity, Arts, Law, Medicine, and Music, which the Abp. of *Canterbury confers from time to time in virtue of the Ecclesiastical Licences Act 1533 (passed in 1534), which committed to his immediate possession many rights previously enjoyed by the Primate as '*legatus natus' of the Pope. Their recipients usually wear the academic dress of the university to which the Archbishop belongs. Since 1906 Lambeth diplomas in theology have also been awarded; these are frequently supplemented by the Abp. of Canterbury's 'Licence and Authority to teach Sacred Theology'.

Lambeth Opinions. The first 'Lambeth Opinion' was delivered on 31 July 1899, by the Abps. of Canterbury (F. *Temple) and York (W. D. Maclagan), at *Lambeth Palace, in response to questions raised by some of the English bishops. It stated that the liturgical use of *incense and the carrying of lights in procession were 'neither enjoined nor permitted' in the C of E. In the matter of incense, however, the archbishops added that there was nothing to prevent its use for sweetening the atmosphere of a church and that it was not in itself an undesirable accompaniment to Divine service. A year later (1 May 1900) the two archbishops issued further opinions (on this occasion that of Canterbury was separate from that of York, though they agreed in substance) denying the legality of *Reservation of the Sacrament. These opinions are sometimes described as the 'Lambeth Judgements', but less correctly, as the two archbishops did not sit as an ecclesiastical court.

The official texts were pub. by Macmillan under the titles The Archbishops on the Lawfulness of the Liturgical Use of Incense and the Carrying of Lights in Procession (1899); The Archbishop of Canterbury on Reservation of the Sacrament (1900, signed F. Cantuar.); Archbishop of York on Reservation of Sacrament (1900).

Lambeth Quadrilateral (1888), sometimes called the 'Chicago–Lambeth Quadrilateral'. A slightly revised edition of the four Articles agreed upon at the General Convention of the *Episcopal Church in the United States of America in Chicago 1886. These were initially inspired by the work of William Reed Huntington. In the revised form the Articles were approved by the *Lambeth Conference of 1888 as stating from the Anglican standpoint the essentials for a reunited Christian Church. The text of the Articles is as follows:

'A. The Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, as "containing all things necessary to salvation", and as being the rule and ultimate standard of faith.

'B. The Apostles' Creed, as the Baptismal Symbol; and the Nicene Creed, as the sufficient statement of the Christian Faith.

'C. The two Sacraments ordained by Christ Himself—Baptism and the Supper of the Lord—ministered with unfailing use of Christ's Words of Institution, and of the elements ordained by Him.

'D. The Historic Episcopate, locally adapted in the methods of its administration to the varying needs of the nations and peoples called of God into the Unity of His Church'.

The full text of the Chicago Quadrilateral is pr. in G. R. Evans and J. R. Wright (eds.), The Anglican Tradition (1991), pp. 345 f. (no. 343). W. R. Huntington, The Church-Idea (New York, 1870); id., The Peace of the Church (ibid., 1891); id., A National Church (ibid., 1898). J. R. Wright (ed.), Quadrilateral at One Hundred: Essays on the Centenary of the Chicago–Lambeth Quadrilateral 1886/88–1986/88 (Cincinnati, Oh., and London, 1988); J. Draper (ed.), Communion and Episcopacy: Essays to Mark the Centenary of the Chicago Lambeth Quadrilateral (Ripon College, Cuddesdon, Oxford, 1988).

Lamennais, Félicité Robert de (1782–1854), French religious and political author. He was a member of a well-to-do family of St-Malo. While still a child he read widely, esp. J.-J. *Rousseau, whose influence contributed to his loss of religious faith at an early age. But under the guidance of his brother Jean Marie (*c.*1780–1860), who had become a priest, he was converted and made his first communion at the age of 22. He was appointed professor of mathematics at the episcopal college of St-Malo in 1804; later he retired to the country house of his grandfather, La Chênaie, which became the centre of his circle of like-minded friends. In 1808 he published his Réflexions sur l'état de l'Église, written in collaboration with his brother. The book aimed at showing the futility of trust in individual reason, which led to rationalism, atheism, and intellectual anarchy, and called for systematic clerical organization. This demand brought him into conflict with Napoleon's policy and caused him to flee to London during the Hundred Days in 1815. After his return, against his own inclinations, he became a priest in 1816.

In 1818 he published the first volume of his chief work, the Essai sur l'indifférence en matière de religion. Lamennais here developed the principle of authority, which he equated with the 'raison générale' or 'sens commun'. He maintained that the individual is dependent on the community for his knowledge of the truth; to isolate oneself is to doubt; and toleration is an evil. His eloquence gained him fervent disciples, esp. among the *Ultramontanists and Royalists, and effected many conversions; but its ideas were suspect esp. to the *Sulpicians and *Jesuits and opposed by the *Gallicans. The later volumes of the work (1820, 1823) were still more opposed to the traditional doctrines. They equated Catholic Christianity with the religion of all mankind, denied the supernatural, and proclaimed subjects freed from loyalty to their temporal sovereigns when rulers refused to conform their conduct to Christian ideals. In order to counteract the evils of the time he desired a theocracy, with the Pope as supreme leader of kings and peoples. The work received the approval of Pope Leo XII, who possibly intended to make him a cardinal. In Des progrès de la Révolution (1829) he prophesied an impending revolution and demanded the separation both of the Church and of the entire educational system from the State, as well as the freedom of the press. In order to carry out these ideas he founded a religious congregation, the short-lived Congrégation de St Pierre (1828), an Agence Générale pour la Défense de la Liberté Religieuse (1830), and the paper L'Avenir (1830–1), and won the co-operation of a number of brilliant younger religious thinkers, among them C. de *Montalembert and H. *Lacordaire. He asserted that the essence of Christianity was freedom, but freedom understood in a political sense and guaranteed by the Papacy. In the last number of L'Avenir he launched the 'Acte d'Union', in which he called for the union of all freedom-loving men. Convinced that the Pope would put himself at the head of this crusade for freedom, he went to Rome in 1832 to defend his ideas before *Gregory XVI; they were, however, condemned in the encyclical '*Mirari vos' of 15 Aug. 1832. Lamennais, though submitting externally, retired to La Chênaie, where he wrote his reply, the famous Paroles d'un croyant (1834). Though admitting the authority of the Church in questions of faith, he denied it in the sphere of politics. In apocalyptic language he presented a picture of the ideal community in which production and consumption were to be harmoniously balanced. The book aroused tremendous excitement throughout Europe; it was condemned in the encyclical 'Singulari nos' of 25 June 1834. Lamennais's friends submitted, but he himself left the Church.

From this time Lamennais's interests became more and more exclusively political. He gave his views on the social needs of the times in Le Livre du peuple (1837; Eng. tr., 1838) and L'Esclavage moderne (1839; Eng. tr., 1840). The Discussions critiques (1841) marked the final end of his Christian faith. He denied the whole supernatural order together with the doctrinal beliefs of Catholicism and tended more and more to a vague pantheism, expressed also in Esquisse d'une philosophie (4 vols., 1841–6). In 1846 he published a translation of the Gospels with commentary, Les Évangiles, which was placed on the *Index. In the Revolution of 1848 he became a member of Parliament, but the political reaction of 1852 completely disillusioned him. All efforts, even those of the new Pope *Pius IX, to reconcile him to the Church were in vain. An extraordinarily gifted writer, Lamennais was one of the greatest inspirers of the new social and political ideas of the 19th and 20th cents. as well as a forerunner of *Modernism.

Œuvres complètes (12 vols. bound in 6, Paris, 1836–7); Œuvres posthumes, ed. E. D. Forgues (2 vols., ibid., 1856–9); Œuvres inédites, ed. A. Blaize (2 vols., ibid., 1866); Correspondance générale, ed. L. Le Guillou (9 vols., ibid., 1971–81). Also posthumously pub. was his Essai d'un système de philosophie catholique, ed. Y. Le Hir (Rennes, 1954). M. J. Le Guillou [OP] and L. Le Guillou (eds.), La Condamnation de Lamennais (Textes, Dossiers, Documents, 5; 1982). There is a considerable lit. about the various aspects of Lamennais's life, thought, and influence, esp. in Fr., but no fully documented biog. The two best general studies are C. Boutard, Lamennais: Sa vie et ses doctrines (3 vols., 1905–13); F. Duine, La Mennais: Sa vie, ses idées, ses ouvrages, d'après les sources imprimées et les documents inédits (1922). Further items listed in F. Duine, Essai de bibliographie de Félicité Robert de La Mennais (1923). L. Le Guillou, L'Évolution de la pensée religieuse de Félicité Lamennais (1966); G. Hourdin, Lamennais: Prophète et combattant de la liberté (1982). In Eng. the main items incl. W. Gibson, The Abbé de Lamennais and the Liberal Catholic Movement in France (1896); A. R. Vidler, Prophecy and Papacy: A Study of Lamennais, the Church, and the Revolution (Birkbeck Lectures, 1952–1953; 1954); W. G. Roe, Lamennais and England: The Reception of Lamennais's Religious Ideas in England in the Nineteenth Century (Oxford, 1966), with bibl. A. Fonck in DTC 8 (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 2473–526, s.v., with detailed bibl.

Lamentabili. The decree of the *Holy Office issued on 3 July 1907 in which 65 propositions believed to be derived from the teaching of the contemporary *Modernists on the subjects of the Church, of Revelation, of Christ, and of the Sacraments, were condemned. It was shortly afterwards followed by the encyclical Pascendi (8 Sept. 1907).

Text in ASS 40 (1907), pp. 470–8; operative clauses in Denzinger and Hünermann (37th edn., 1991), pp. 932–9 (nos. 3401–66). F. Heiner, Der Neue Syllabus Pius X (1907). J. Rivière, Le Modernisme dans l'Église (1929), pp. 331–48. G. Thils, 'Le Décret "Lamentabili sane Exitu" et la convergence de probabilité', Ephemerides Theologicae Lovanienses, 32 (1956), pp. 65–72, with further refs.

Lamentations of Jeremiah. In the Hebrew Bible, as one of the five *Megilloth, this Book is placed in the third main division of the OT, called the 'Writings' (*Kethubim). In the English Bible, as in the *Septuagint and *Vulgate, it follows Jer. The Book consists of five chapters, all dealing with the desolation of Judah after the destruction of Jerusalem *c.*586 BC. They show considerable literary art, extensive use being made of acrostic arrangement and the greater part of the Book being composed in the metre used in Hebrew dirges (the 'Qinah'; see HEBREW (TONGUE)). Traditionally the Book has been ascribed to the prophet *Jeremiah, but the tradition may not be more than a misinterpretation of 2 Chr. 35: 25, and the tendency of modern biblical scholarship is against this attribution, though the Book prob. derives from a time not long after the destruction of the city, and so during Jeremiah's lifetime. In Jewish worship it was appointed to be read at the annual commemoration of the destruction of Jerusalem, and in the Christian Church it has been commonly interpreted in reference to Christ's Passion and in the W. used in the liturgy of *Holy Week.

Comm. by W. Rudolph (KAT 16. 3; 1939; 2nd edn. 17. 1–3, on Ruth, Song of Songs, Lam., 1962, pp. 187–263), A. Weiser (Das Alte Testament Deutsch, 16. 2, by H. Ringgren and A. Weiser, on Song of Songs, Lam., and Esther, 1958, pp. 39–112; 2nd edn., 1969, pp. 295–370), H.-J. Kraus (Biblischer Kommentar, Altes Testament, 20; 3rd edn., 1968), O. Plöger (HAT, Reihe I, Bd. 18, 2nd edn., by E. Würthwein, K. Galling, and O. Plöger, on Ruth, Song of Songs, Eccles., Lam., Esther, 1969, pp. 127–64), D. R. Hillers (Anchor Bible, 1972), and H. Gross (Neue Echter Bibel, 14, 1986, on Lam. and Bar., pp. 3–42). H. Jahnow, Das hebräische Leichenlied im Rahmen der Völkerdichtung (Beihefte zur ZATW, 36; 1923). N. K. Gottwald, Studies in the Book of Lamentations (Studies in Biblical Theology, 14; 1954); B. Albrektson, Studies in the Text and Theology of the Book of Lamentations, with a critical edn. of the Peshitta text (Studia Theologica Lundensia, 21; 1963); G. Brunet, Les Lamentations contre Jérémie: Réinterprétation des quatre premières Lamentations (Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études, Section des sciences religieuses, 75; 1968). D. R. Hillers in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 4 (1992), pp. 137–41, s.v.

Lammas Day. The term 'Lammas', denoting 1 August, is found in the work of King *Alfred and was common throughout the Middle Ages; though now archaic, it occurs in the BCP. By etymology it derives from 'loaf' and 'mass', and in the early English Church it was customary to bless bread made from the first-ripe corn at Mass on this day, prob. in thanksgiving for the harvest. A later explanation (dating from the 15th cent.) suggested that it derived from 'lamb' and 'Mass', denoting the time at which a feudal tribute of lambs was paid (at *York). The day, to which some chronological significance always seems to have attached, is observed as a quarter-day in Scotland. It used also to be the feast of St *Peter ad Vincula ('St Peter's Chains'; cf. Acts 12: 3, 6 f.).

Lampert of Hersfeld (*c.*1024–after 1081), medieval chronicler. Little is known of his life, except that he became a monk at the *Benedictine abbey of Hersfeld in 1058, and after 1077 he became the first abbot of Hasungen (Hesse). Of his writings, much the most important is his Annals; these begin with the creation of the world and from 708 to 1039 are brief; from 1040 to 1068 they become fuller, increasing in scope from 1069 to 1072; from 1072 to 1077 they provide a very detailed account of events. Lampert wrote with great skill, using classical models extensively but unobtrusively, and giving an impression of objectivity and fairness. From the time of the first edition (1525) until the middle of the 19th cent. he was regarded as the main source for the history of the struggle between *Henry IV of Germany and Pope *Gregory VII, but from the time of L. von *Ranke (1854), who showed that many of his statements were motivated by strong prejudices against Henry, 19th-cent. historians became severely critical of his reliability. Recent research has done much to rehabilitate his value as a source.

The best edn. of his Opera by O. Holder-Egger (MGH, Scriptores Rerum Germanicarum in usum Scholarum; 1894). E. E. Stengel, 'Lambert von Hersfeld der erste Abt von Hasungen', in Aus Verfassungs- und Landesgeschichte: Festschrift zum 70. Geburtstag von Theodor Mayer dargebracht von seinen Freunden und Schülern, 2 (Constance, 1955), pp. 245–58; J. Semmler, 'Lambert von Hersfeld und Giselbert von Hasungen', Studien und Mitteilungen zur Geschichte des Benediktiner-Ordens, 67 (1956), pp. 261–76. T. Struve, 'Lampert von Hersfeld. Persönlichkeit und Weltbild eines Geschichtsschreibers am Beginn des Investiturstreits', Hessisches Jahrbuch für Landesgeschichte, 19 (1969), pp. 1–123; 20 (1970), pp. 32–142. Full bibl. in W. Wattenbach and R. Holtzmann, Deutschlands Geschichtsquellen im Mittelalter: Die Zeit der Sachsen und Salier, new edn. by F.-J. Schmale, 2 (Cologne, etc., 1967), pp. 456–71, and 3 (1971), pp. 141* f.

lamps. These were probably used in Christian worship from the first, as it usually took place at night. The ceremonial lighting of the evening lamp that accompanied the singing of the '*Phos Hilaron' is attested by St. *Basil as already an ancient custom in his time. From the time of *Constantine lamps were burnt in large chandeliers during the Liturgy, and this custom has continued in E. worship. It became customary to burn lights—lamps and later candles—before shrines and relics (and in the E. before *icons) at least as early as the 6th cent. The burning of lights before the *altar is prob. very ancient; the burning of a perpetual light before the reserved Sacrament came into general use in the 13th cent. in connection with the contemporary development of Eucharistic devotion, but was not to become obligatory until the 16th cent. See also CANDLE.

Rohault, 6 (1888), pp. 1–58. D. R. Dendy, The Use of Lights in Christian Worship (Alcuin Club Collections, 41; 1959). C. Babington, 'Lamps' in DCA 2 (1880), pp. 919–23; H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 8 (pt. 2; 1928), cols. 1086–221, s.v. 'Lampes', with full refs.

lance (liturgical). In the Byzantine rites, a small knife (Gk. λόγχη), shaped like a lance, with a handle ending in a small cross, which is used to cut the Eucharistic bread at the *Proskomide.

Lance, Holy. A relic, believed to be the lance mentioned in Jn. 19: 34 as having been used by a Roman soldier for piercing the Lord's dead body. The first record of its existence occurs in the 6th cent., when the Piacenza pilgrim states that he had seen it at *Jerusalem in the basilica of Mount Sion. Its presence there is also attested by *Cassiodorus and St *Gregory of Tours. At the capture of Jerusalem by the Persians in 615, it fell into the hands of the pagans, together with the other relics of the Passion; but its point, which had been broken off, was saved and given to Nicetas, who brought it to *Constantinople, where it was kept in *Sancta Sophia, set in an icon. In 1241 it was given to St *Louis and preserved in the *Sainte-Chapelle together with the *Crown of Thorns. It disappeared during the French Revolution. The other part of the Lance was stated to have been seen in Jerusalem by the Frankish pilgrim, Arculf (c.670), but after that nothing is heard of it until it reappears in Constantinople before the 10th cent. In 1492 it fell into the hands of the Turks, who sent it to the Pope as a present. Since then it has been kept at Rome in St *Peter's, but its authenticity has always been doubted.

There have been several other relics, claimed to be the Holy Lance. One of them was found by the Crusaders at Antioch in 1098 in consequence of a vision. Another was kept among the Imperial insignia of the Holy Roman Empire, having been taken to Prague by Charles IV in 1350, to Nuremberg in 1424, and finally to Vienna in 1800. A special feast of the Holy Lance was kept in Germany, on the Friday after the Octave of Easter.

F. de Mély, Exuviae Sacrae Constantinopolitanae (Paris, 1904), pp. 22–163. C. Rohault de Fleury, Mémoire sur les instruments de la Passion de N.-S. J.-C. (1870), pp. 272–5. S. Runciman, 'The Holy Lance found at Antioch', Anal. Boll. 68 (1950), pp. 197–209. A. Hofmeister, Die heilige Lanze, ein Abzeichen des alten Reiches (Untersuchungen zur Deutschen Staats- und Rechtsgeschichte, 96; 1908); P. E. Schramm, Herrschaftszeichen und Statussymbolik (Schriften der Monumenta Germaniae historica, 13), 2 (1955), pp. 492–537 ('Die "Heilige Lanze" ') with additional material in 3 (1956), pp. 1101 f., and Nachträge (1978), pp. 28–31. H. Thurston, SJ, in CE 8 (1910), pp. 773 f., s.v.; J. A. Brundage in NCE 7 (1967), pp. 75 f., s.v. 'Holy Lance'.

Lanfranc (c.1010–89), scholar and Abp. of *Canterbury. Born in Pavia and educated there and elsewhere in N. Italy, Lanfranc came to N. France as a young man and built up a reputation as an itinerant scholar. In 1042 he entered the recently-founded abbey of *Bec, where he became prior (1045). In 1063 he became abbot of *William I's prestigious new foundation of St Stephen's, Caen, and in 1070 the first Norman Abp. of Canterbury.

As a scholar, Lanfranc initially worked on the *trivium; none of this material survives. At Bec he commented on the Psalms and the Pauline Epistles, and made linguistic notes on certain works of the Fathers. His biblical commentary was used by *Anselm of Laon and thus passed into the '*Glossa Ordinaria'. Lanfranc's pupils at Bec included *Anselm of Canterbury and possibly *Ivo of Chartres. His De Corpore et Sanguine Domini (written in the 1060s) was the first widely-known criticism of the Eucharistic teaching of *Berengar of Tours. It consists essentially of patristic and Carolingian proof-texts, with a brief excursion into the terminology of logic (chs. 7–9). Lanfranc maintained that the Sacred Species in the Eucharist contained the invisible Body of Christ, identical with the body born of the BVM, but hidden under the species of bread and wine; here he approached the doctrine of *transubstantiation.

Lanfranc was a brilliant administrator. He raised Bec from poverty to a substantial monastery. He became William the Conqueror's most trusted counsellor. As archbishop, he restored the demoralized monastic community of Christ Church, Canterbury, rebuilding the cathedral church, recovering lands and rights lost at the Conquest, and providing a set of constitutions (the 'Decreta Lanfranci') for the improved observance of the monastic life. At least for his own lifetime, he enforced the juridical supremacy of Canterbury over *York. His practical authority within the English Church was well demonstrated in the synod of 1075, which transferred the sees of Selsey to *Chichester, *Lichfield to *Chester, and Ramsbury to Old Sarum (near *Salisbury). Lanfranc's canon law book was the '*False Decretals', a Carolingian collection that was still widely used; his view of clerical reform was correspondingly traditional. Opposing clerical marriage and concubinage and (like everyone else) condemning *simony, he still regarded lay *investiture as normal practice. Lanfranc was thus out of sympathy with *Gregory VII, though not disloyal to him. He sent Gregory *Peter's Pence (1080) and even in the later 1080s, when the imperial cause seemed to be triumphing, he withheld recognition from the antipope Clement III.

Collected edn. of his works by L.*d'Achery, OSB (Paris, 1648); this *Maurist edn. is largely repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 150. 9–782. Crit. edns. of 'Acta Lanfranci' (a memorandum of the circumstances of his taking up office in Canterbury) by C. Plummer and J. Earle, Two of the Saxon Chronicles Parallel, 1 (Oxford, 1892), pp. 287–92; of his monastic Constitutions by [M.] D. *Knowles, OSB, with Eng. tr. (Nelson's Medieval Classics, 1951; rev. [text only] in Corpus Consuetudinum Monasticarum, 3; Siegburg, 1967); and of his Letters and Acts of the 1075 Council (item 11), with Eng. tr., by [V.] H. Clover and M. [T.] Gibson (Oxford Medieval Texts, 1979). The main source for Lanfranc's early life is Gilbert Crispin's 'Vita Herluini' (first abbot of Bec); crit. edn. by A. S. Abulafia and G. R. Evans, The Works of Gilbert Crispin (Auctores Britannici Medii Aevi, 8; Oxford [1986]), pp. 183–212. M. [T.] Gibson, Lanfranc of Bec (Oxford, 1978). R. W. Southern, 'Lanfranc of Bec and Berengar of Tours' in R. W. Hunt, W. A. Pantin, and R. W. Southern (eds.), Studies in Medieval History Presented to Frederick Maurice Powicke (Oxford, 1948), pp. 27–48; id., 'The Canterbury Forgeries', EHR 73 (1958), pp. 193–226. J. de Montclos, Lanfranc et Bérenger: La controverse eucharistique du XI^e siècle (SSL 37; 1971), esp. pp. 249–482. G. D'Onofrio (ed.), Lanfranco di Pavia e l'Europa del Secolo XI nel IX Centenario della Morte (1089–1989): Atti del Convegno Internazionale di Studi (Pavia . . ., 12–24 settembre 1989) (Italia Sacra, 51; 1993). R. Gem, 'The Significance of the 11th-century Rebuilding of Christ Church and St Augustine's, Canterbury, in the Development of Romanesque Architecture', in Medieval Art and Architecture at Canterbury before 1220 (British Archaeological Association Conference Transactions for the Year 1979, 5; 1982), pp. 1–19; H. J. A. Strik, 'Remains of the Lanfranc Building in the Great Central Tower and the North-West Choir/Transept Area', ibid., pp. 20–6, with plans. F. Barlow, The English Church 1066–1154 (1979), passim (see index).

Lang, Cosmo Gordon (1864–1945), Abp. of *Canterbury. A Scotsman by birth and of *Presbyterian upbringing, he was educated at Glasgow University and at Balliol College, Oxford, and then studied for the Bar. In 1888 he was elected to a fellowship at All Souls College, Oxford. In 1890 he was ordained in the C of E, and after working as a curate of Leeds Parish Church from 1890 to 1893 under E. S. *Talbot, he returned to Oxford to become Dean of Divinity at Magdalen, and from 1894 to 1896 was vicar of St Mary's, the university church. From 1896 to 1901 he was vicar of Portsea. In 1901 he became (suffragan) Bp. of Stepney and in 1908 Abp. of *York. He was translated to Canterbury in 1928 and resigned in 1942. A committed ecumenist, he was chairman of the Reunion Committee of the *Lambeth Conference of 1920, which issued the influential 'Appeal to All Christian People'. He presided over the Lambeth Conference of 1930, to which he significantly invited a delegation of the *Old Catholics; full communion between the Old Catholics and the

C of E was established in 1932. In 1933 he set up the Council on Foreign Relations, called for by the *Church Assembly; he had originally opposed its establishment, but came to welcome it. His many journeys abroad included the first visit of an Archbishop of Canterbury to the *Oecumenical Patriarch in the Phanar in 1939. In Dec. 1936 he played an important part in public affairs in connection with the abdication of Edward VIII.

J. G. Lockhart, Cosmo Gordon Lang (1949). A. C. Don in DNB, 1941–1950 (1959), pp. 474–8.

Langton, Stephen (*c.*1150/55–1228), Abp. of *Canterbury. He came of a family of Lincolnshire gentry. From *c.*1170 he studied in *Paris, where he was a pupil of *Peter the Chanter and gained a high reputation as a biblical commentator, preacher, and theologian. He made a permanent mark on biblical studies. By 1206 he was a canon of *York and Paris and in that year *Innocent III made him cardinal priest of St Chrysognus; Langton left Paris for Rome. In 1207, when irregular elections at Canterbury followed the death of *Hubert Walter, the Pope nominated and consecrated Langton Abp. of Canterbury. The appointment showed little awareness of or regard for English opinion. King *John's refusal to admit Langton as archbishop excluded him from his see until June 1213. He spent much of this time at Pontigny. Meanwhile, from May 1208 until July 1214, England and Wales were placed under *interdict by the Pope. The English clergy were exposed to great hardships and could not carry on their normal ecclesiastical and spiritual guidance of the laity. When Langton returned, he prob. disliked the terms of John's submission, by which the realm came under Papal suzerainty. During the next two years he showed sympathy with baronial grievances against the King. Although his influence in the framing of Magna Carta has perhaps been exaggerated, he certainly approved the principles of government which it asserted, gave the support of his office to the rebels, and thereby forfeited the Pope's favour. In 1215 he was suspended. After the deaths of Innocent III and John in 1216, in 1218 Langton resumed his place as metropolitan with the favour of *Honorius III. He returned to the tasks of ecclesiastical government, notably seeking to secure better clerical discipline and improved pastoral care. He gave a foretaste of this concern in diocesan statutes of 1213–14 which have affinities with the constitutions which his English colleague, Cardinal Robert Courçon, published as legate in France. This impulse, intensified by the canons of the Fourth *Lateran Council (1215), caused Langton to promulgate in his provincial council of Oxford (1222) constitutions which set patterns for the future and stimulated several English bishops to similar activity before his death. Under him, standards of clerical conduct and rudimentary religious education were raised. One initiative with both devotional and political aspects was his translation in 1220 of the remains of his predecessor Thomas *Becket and the celebration of the jubilee of his martyrdom. Little is known of his character, but he certainly had a profound influence on the Church in England. He was the first Abp. of Canterbury appointed since the Norman Conquest who had not been either a monk or a minister of the Crown, and in this office he began a tradition exemplifying the new learning of the nascent universities in arts, theology, and law.

Langton's writings (apart from his official acts) grew out of his teaching at Paris. They consist mainly of theological quaestiones and commentaries (glosae) on Books of the Old and New Testaments, on the 'Historia Scholastica' of *Peter Comestor, and the 'Sentences' of *Peter Lombard, all with a pronounced moral purpose. He is credited with the division of the Books of the Bible into chapters which, with small modification, is still in use. He also prob. wrote the '*Veni Sancte Spiritus'.

Comm. on the 'Sentences' of Peter Lombard (known also as Langton's 'Summa'), ed. A. M. Landgraf (BGPM 37, Heft 1; 1952); comm. on 1–2 Chron., ed. A. Saltman (Ramat-Gan, Israel, 1978); Selected Sermons, ed. P. B. Roberts (Toronto Medieval Latin Texts, 10; 1980). His Acta as Abp., ed. K. Major (Canterbury and York Society, 50; 1950). His diocesan statutes of Canterbury and the Constitutions of the Council of Oxford, ed. F. M. Powicke and C. R. Cheney, Councils & Synods . . . 2: A.D. 1205–1313, 1 (Oxford, 1964), pp. 23–36 and 100–25. F. M. Powicke, Stephen Langton (Ford Lectures for 1927; Oxford, 1928). K. Major, 'The "Familia" of Archbishop Stephen Langton', EHR 48 (1933), pp. 529–53. G. Lacombe, B. Smalley, and A. L. Gregory, 'Studies on the Commentaries of Cardinal Stephen Langton', AHDLMA 5 ('1930' [1931]), pp. 5–266. B. Smalley, The Study of the Bible in the Middle Ages (2nd edn., Oxford, 1952), esp. ch. 5. J. W. Baldwin, Masters, Princes, and Merchants (2 vols., Princeton, NJ, 1970), esp. 1, pp. 25–31. P. B. Roberts, Stephanus de Lingua-Tonante: Studies in the Sermons of Stephen Langton (Pontifical Institute of Mediaeval Studies, Studies and Texts, 16; Toronto, 1968); J. B. Schneyer, Repertorium der lateinischen Sermones des Mittelalters für die Zeit von 1150–1350, 5 (1974), pp. 466–507. R. Quinto, 'Doctor Nominatissimus'. Stefano Langton (†1228) e la tradizione delle sue opere (BGPM, NF 39; 1994). R. Foreville in Dict. Sp. 4 (1961), cols. 1495–1502, s.v. 'Étienne Langton'. See also bibl. to JOHN, KING OF ENGLAND, and esp. arts. on the interdict by C. R. Cheney.

Laodicea. A Hellenistic city of the Roman province of Asia. It was the seat of an early Christian Church to which St *Paul wrote an epistle (Col. 4: 16), perhaps the same as the extant Eph. The city was reproved at a somewhat later date by the writer of *Rev. (3: 14 ff.) for being 'neither cold nor hot'. It was materially very prosperous in Apostolic times, and a bishopric of some importance for several centuries. It is not to be confounded with the town of Laodicea on the Syrian coast, the home of *Apollinarius.

W. M. *Ramsay, Cities and Bishoprics of Phrygia, 1 (1895), pp. 32–83. C. J. Hemer, The Letters to the Seven Churches of Asia in their Local Setting (Journal for the Study of the New Testament, Supplement Series, 11; Sheffield [1986]), pp. 178–209. F. F. Bruce in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 4 (1992), pp. 229–31, s.v., with bibl.

Laodicea, Canons of. A set of 59 4th-cent. canons which were embodied in the early collections of ecclesiastical law. They fall into two groups, acc. to their opening words (1–19: περὶ τοῦ and 20–59: ὅτι οὐ δεῖ). Among the subjects dealt with are the treatment of heretics (*Quartodecimans, *Novatianists, *Montanists, etc.), liturgy, penance, Church order, and the observance of *Lent. Nothing definite is known of the 'Council of Laodicea', though a mention of the *Photinians in can. 7 points to a date not before *c.*345, and prob. the Council took place at least 20 years later. Acc. to A. Boudinhon, the 'canons' are really subject-headings of canons issued by earlier 4th-cent. councils, among them that of Nicaea (325) and an otherwise unknown Council of Laodicea. In some texts there is appended a list of the Canonical Scriptural Books closely akin to that of Apostolic Canons, can. 85 (84), e.g. it omits the OT Apocrypha and Rev.; this list is sometimes called can. 60. Acc. to T. *Zahn and others (against C. J. *Hefele), it is prob. a later addition.

Hardouin, 1 (1715), cols. 777–92; Mansi, 2 (1759), cols. 563–600. Crit. edn. of Lat. canons in EOMIA 2. 3 (1939), pp. 321–400; Lat. and Gk. text also pr., with Fr. tr. and introd., in Joannou, 1, pt. 2 (1962), pp. 127–55. Eng. tr. in H. R. Percival, The Seven Ecumenical Councils of the Undivided Church (NPNCF 14; 1900), pp. 123–60. Hefele and Leclercq, 1 (pt. 2; 1907), pp. 989–1028. A. Boudinhon, 'Note sur le concile de Laodicée', in Congrès scientifique international des Catholiques tenu à Paris, 1888 (1889), 2, pp. 420–47 (resumed in Hefele and Leclercq, loc. cit., pp. 992–4, n.). On the appended list, see B. F. *Westcott, A General Survey of the History of the Canon of the New Testament (1855), pp. 498–508; T. Zahn, Geschichte des Neutestamentlichen Kanons, 2 (pt. 1; 1890), pp. 193–202. CPG 4 (1980), p. 29 (no. 8607). G. Bardy in DDC 6 (1957), cols. 338–43.

Laodiceans, Epistle to the. A letter of St *Paul to Laodicea is mentioned at Col. 4: 16, but has not survived. Acc. to *Tertullian (Adv. Marc. 5. 11 and 17), *Marcion and his followers gave this name to the Epistle to the *Ephesians. The *Muratorian Canon mentions a letter to Laodicea 'forged for the sect of Marcion'. The Latin apocryphal Ep. of this name, found in many 6th–15th-cent. Latin MSS of the NT and in some early printed editions of the Bible, is an artless collection of St Paul's own words (esp. from Phil.), which was doubtless produced to supply the missing letter. It appears to date from the 2nd–4th cent., and was perhaps originally composed in Greek. It is mentioned in the Liber de divinis scripturis (ch. 50), attributed to St *Augustine, and seems to have been known to St *Gregory the Great (Moralia, 35. 20). A. *Harnack sought, without success, to prove that it was a 2nd-cent. Marcionite forgery.

Crit. edn. of Lat. text, with discussion, in J. B. *Lightfoot, St Paul's Epistles to the Colossians and to Philemon (1879 edn.), pp. 274–300 (actual text, pp. 287–9). Eng. tr. in J. K. Elliott, The Apocryphal New Testament (Oxford, 1993), pp. 543–6. B. Carra de Caux, 'L'Épître aux Laodicéens en arabe', R. Bibl. 5 (1896), pp. 221–6, with Arabic text, pp. 223 f. Ger. tr., with introd. by W. Schneemelcher in Schneemelcher, 2 (5th edn., 1989), pp. 41–44; Eng. tr., 2 [1992], pp. 42–6. A. von Harnack, 'Der apokryphe Brief des Apostels Paulus an die Laodicener, eine marcionitische Fälschung aus der 2. Hälfte des 2. Jahrhunderts' in Sb. (Berl.), 1923, pp. 235–45. C. P. Anderson in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 4 (1992), pp. 231–3, s.v., with bibl.

lapcloth. See GREMIAL.

Lapide, Cornelius a. See CORNELIUS A LAPIDE.

lapsi (Lat., 'the fallen'). Those who in varying degrees denied the Christian faith under persecution. *Apostasy was regarded as the most serious sin a Christian could commit; although there is some conflicting evidence, it is widely thought that at least in some parts of the Church it was at first regarded as unforgivable. However, when the problem became serious during the Decian *persecution of 250–251, the Church, guided by such leaders as Pope *Cornelius, *Dionysius of Alexandria, and St *Cyprian of Carthage, decided to readmit such persons as showed repentance after *penance and a period of probation. This decision led the *Novatianist rigorists to make open schism. The Councils of *Elvira (*c.*306), *Arles (314), *Ancyra (314), and *Nicaea (325) also legislated on the subject. See also TRADITORS.

H. J. Vogt in DPAC 2 (1984), cols. 1899–901, s.v.; Eng. tr. in Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 1 (1992), p. 473. See also works cited under PERSECUTIONS, EARLY CHRISTIAN.

Lardner, Nathaniel (1684–1768), Nonconformist apologist. He was a native of Hawkhurst in Kent, studied at Utrecht and *Leiden (1699–1703), and became an Independent minister in 1709. After being a private chaplain and tutor from 1713 to 1721, he began to give lectures in 1723. These developed into his famous work on The Credibility of the Gospel History (14 vols., 1727–57), in which he set himself the task of reconciling the discrepancies in the biblical narratives. Its collection of materials on the date and authorship of the NT books, together with a large apparatus of footnotes, made the work a mine of information for scholars, for whom it was of greater service than for the ordinary reader for whom it was originally intended. Lardner's interpretation is based on patristic texts as well as on the commentaries of H. *Grotius. He also published sermons and a Letter concerning the Logos (1759), expounding his Christological doctrine.

Works [ed. B. Cole], 11 vols., London, 1788, with Life by A. Kippis in vol. 1, pp. i–cviii. A more important authority for his life is the anonymous Memoirs of the Life and Writings of the late Reverend Nathaniel Lardner, . . . with a Catalogue of his Works [by J. Jennings], pub. along with eight of Lardner's Sermons (London, 1769), memoir, pp. 1–134. A. Gordon in DNB 32 (1892), pp. 147–51.

La Salette. The village in the Alps near Grenoble, where on 19 Sept. 1846 a peasant boy and girl saw a vision of the BVM, who through them gave 'to all her people' a promise of the Divine Mercy after repentance. A special secret, communicated by the Virgin to each child, was afterwards sent to *Pius IX. At first doubts were thrown on the vision; but a commission appointed by the Bp. of Grenoble convinced itself of its reality, and miraculous cures were soon alleged to occur. Pilgrimages quickly followed, and in 1852 the first stone of the present church was laid on the scene of the vision. The church has been served from the first by religious known as the 'Missionaries of La Salette'. Many thousands annually make pilgrimages to the 'Virgin of the Alps'.

There is a vast lit., mostly of little critical value. More substantial works include L. Bertrand, La Salette (1888); id., La Salette: Documents et bibliographie pour servir de pièces justificatives à l'ouvrage portant le même titre (1889); J. Giray, Les Miracles de La Salette (2 vols., Grenoble, 1921); J. Jaouen, La Grâce de La Salette (1946; rev. edn., 1964); id., Les Missionnaires de Notre-Dame de La Salette (Les Grands Ordres monastiques et Instituts religieux, 63 [1953]); J. Stern, La Salette: Documents authentiques (1980 ff.). In Eng. there is a popular account by J. S. Kennedy, Light on the Mountains: The Story of La Salette (Dublin, 1954). J. Stern, MS, 'La Salette. Bibliographie', Marian Library Studies, NS 7 (Dayton, Oh., 1975), pp. 3–302.

Las Casas, Bartolomé de (1484–1566), Spanish missionary to the New World, sometimes known as 'The Apostle of the Indies'. Originally a lawyer, he accompanied the Spanish governor, Ovando, to Hispaniola (Haiti) in 1502. Having been ordained, prob. on a visit to Rome in 1507, he delayed his 'first Mass' until he could celebrate it in Hispaniola in 1510, the first time any priest said his 'first Mass' in the New World. From 1514 he devoted himself to the interests of the Indians by opposing, both in America and at the court of Spain, the cruel methods of exploitation of the Spanish settlers. These activities were strongly resented by his countrymen, and in 1515 he went back to Spain, where he successfully presented the cause of the Indians to *Ferdinand V and *Charles V. He returned to America with far-reaching powers; but though supported by his fellow-clergy and many settlers, his projects of colonization miscarried owing to a revolt of the Indians in 1522. In the same year (1522) Las Casas joined the *Dominicans. He continued to labour for the Indians and put together many lurid reports on the abuses of the settlers, notably his famous Destrucción des las Indias (pub. 1552), in which he roundly condemned the horrors perpetrated by the colonists. He was the instigator of the famous 'New Laws of the Indies'. In 1543 he became Bp. of Chiapa in Mexico, but he left his diocese in 1547 to return to Spain, where he spent the rest of his life championing the rights of the Indians at court and in numerous publications. He was in favour of limited importation of negro slaves into America to help the enfeebled Indians, but he was completely opposed to the 'slave-trade' and mass importation which benefited merchants. At the time of his death he was mainly occupied in trying to resolve the problems of the Peruvian natives with *Philip II.

Selected works ed. J. Pérez de Tudela Buesca (Biblioteca de Autores Españoles, 95, 96, 105, 106 and 110; 1957–8). Crit. edn. of his complete works, ed. P. Castañeda Delgado (Madrid, 1988 ff.). Eng. tr. of De Unico Vocationis (a treatise first pub. in 1942 but incl. in later edns. of his works) by P. F. Sullivan, SJ, The Only Way (New York and Mahwah, NJ [1992]), with introd. by H. R. Parish. There is much biog. material in A. Dávila Padilla, Historia de la fundación y discurso de la provincia de Santiago de México de la Orden de Predicadores (Madrid, 1596) and in A. de Remesal, OP, Historia de la Provincia de S. Vicente de Chýapa ý Guatemala de la Orden de . . . Sancto Domingo (ibid., 1619). The basic modern work is I. Pérez Fernández, OP, Inventario documentado de los ecritos de Fray Bartolomé de las Casas (Bayamón, Puerto Rico, 1981); id., Cronología documentada de los viajes, estancias y actuaciones de Fray Bartolomé de las Casas (ibid., 1984). L. U. Hanke, Bartolomé de Las Casas: Bookman, Scholar and Propagandist (Rosenbach Lectures; Philadelphia, 1952), and other works of this author. M. Bataillon, Études sur Bartolomé de las Casas (1965). Estudios lascasianos: IV Centenario de la Muerte de Fray Bartolomé de las Casas (1566–1966) (Publicaciones de la Escuela de Estudios Hispano-Americanos de Sevilla, 175; 1966). H. R. Wagner, The Life and Writings of Bartolomé de las Casas (posthumously ed. H. R. Parish, Albuquerque, NM, 1967). J. Friede and B. Keen (eds.), Bartholomé de la Casas in History: Toward an Understanding of the Man and his Work (Dekalb, Ill. [1971]). P. I. André-Vincent, Bartolomé de la Casas, Prophète du Nouveau Monde (1980); M. Mahn-Lot, Bartolomé de las Casas et le droit des Indiens (1982), with list of modern edns. and trs. G. Gutiérrez, En Busca de los Pobres de Jesucristo (Lima, 1992; Eng. tr., Las Casas: In search of the poor of Jesus Christ, Maryknoll, NY [1993]). There is also an important introd. by I. Pérez Fernández to his edn. of Las Casas' Brevísima relación de la destruccion de Africa (part of his Historia de las Indias, Salamanca, 1989), pp. 11–190. L. Hanke and M. Giménez Fernández, Bartolomé de las Casas 1474–1566: Bibliografía crítica y cuerpo de materiales para el estudio de su vida, escritos, actuación y polémicas que suscitaron durante cuarto siglos (Santiago, 1954).

Laski or à Lasco, John (1499–1560), Protestant Reformer. He was a Polish nobleman by birth, who, after studying at *Bologna from 1514 to 1518, visited Basle in 1524; here he met *Erasmus and later lived in his house for nearly a year (1525). From 1526 he showed an increasing interest in reforming the Church, while disapproving of M. *Luther as too extreme. In 1529 he was nominated Bp. of Veszprem and in 1538 made Archdeacon of Warsaw. He was stripped of all his ecclesiastical offices on his marriage in 1540. Two years later he openly broke with the RC Church and was appointed *Calvinist minister at Emden. Having made friends with J. *Hooper, he came to England in 1548 at the invitation of T. *Cranmer to advise on the projected reforms and returned in 1550 to become superintendent of the Foreign Protestants in London. He is generally held to have influenced the BCP of 1552. Between 1553 and 1556 he lived in several places on the Continent before returning to direct the Calvinist Church in Southern Poland.

Works ed. by A. Kuyper (2 vols., Amsterdam, 1866). H. Dalton, Johannes a Lasco (Gotha, 1881; earlier part tr. into Eng. by M. J. Evans, 1886); G. Pascal, Jean de Lasco, baron de Pologne, évêque catholique, réformateur protestant, 1499–1560: Son temps, sa vie, ses œuvres (1894); Lasciana (1898). Further Lives by P. Bartels (Leben und ausgewählte Schriften der Väter und Begründer der reformirten Kirche, 9; 1860), and O. Bartel (vol. 1, covering the period up to 1556; Warsaw, 1955), with Eng. summary. [K. A. R.] Kruske, Johannes a Lasco und der Sacramentsstreit (Studien zur Geschichte der Theologie und der Kirche, 7, Heft 1; 1901). A. Jobert, De Luther à Mohila: La Pologne dans la crise de la Chrétienté 1517–1648 (Collection historique de l'Institut d'Études Slaves, 21; 1974), pp. 95–120. B. Hall, John à Lasco, 1499–1560: A Pole in Reformation England (Friends of Dr Williams' Library Lecture, 1971). M. Cytowska in P. G. Bietenholz and T. B. Deutscher (eds.), Contemporaries of Erasmus, 2 (Toronto, etc., 1986), pp. 297–301, s.v., with bibl.

Lassus, Orlande de (Flemish form, or Orlando di Lasso, Italian) (*c.*1532–94), composer. Born at Mons (in modern Belgium), he received most of his musical education in Italy, and was briefly (1553–4) 'Maestro di Capella' of St John *Lateran in Rome, preceding G. P. da *Palestrina in this office. In 1556 he went to Munich as a tenor at the court of Duke Albrecht V of Bavaria, and in 1563 became 'Maestro di Capella', remaining in this post for the rest of his life. Enormously prolific in all the forms of vocal music of his day, sacred and secular, his technique was equal to that of Palestrina, while his style and range of expression were far more varied. Much of his output was printed (starting in his Italian days), and widely known throughout Europe. Less affected by the *Counter-Reformation than Palestrina, his sacred music included over 60 Masses, 80 settings for the *Magnificat, and some 500 *motets.

Collected edn. of his works ed. F. X. Haberl and A. Sandeberger (21 vols., Leipzig, 1894–1926; not complete); new edn. by S. Hemelinck and others (Kassel, 1956 ff.). W. Boetticher, Orlando di Lasso und seine Zeit, 1: Monographie (1958 [all pub.]); H. Leuchtmann, Orlando di Lasso (2 vols., Wiesbaden [1976–7], incl. vol. of letters); F. Messmer, Orlando di Lasso (Munich, 1982).

J. Roche, Lassus (Oxford Studies in Composers, 19; London, 1982). J. Erb, Orlando di Lasso: A Guide to Research (New York and London, 1990). J. Haar in S. Sadie (ed.), The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, 10 (1980), pp. 480–502, s.v.

Last Gospel. A second reading from the Gospels which used to take place at the very end of Mass in the W. rite. In medieval times it was said as a private devotion by the celebrant as he went back to the sacristy, but it was later read by the priest at the altar aloud. The usual Last Gospel was Jn. 1: 1–14; but on a small number of days different passages were appointed. The reading of the Last Gospel was suppressed on 26 Sept. 1964.

Jungmann (1958 edn.), 2, pp. 554–9; Eng. tr., 2 (1953), pp. 447–51.

Last Judgement. See GENERAL JUDGEMENT.

Last Supper. The final meal of Christ with His Apostles on the night before the Crucifixion. The institution of the *Eucharist is seen in the symbolic acts which He performed with the bread and wine at this meal. There is no mention of these in St *John's Gospel; it alone records the washing of the Apostles' feet (13: 1–11). Traditionally it has been held that the meal was the *Passover, in agreement with the *Synoptic Gospels, which appear to put it on the evening when the Passover celebrations began and the paschal lamb was consumed. Jn., however, asserts that the Crucifixion itself took place on the 'preparation' (Παρασκευή) of the Passover, i.e. a few hours before the Passover meal. If the latter assertion is correct, we may regard the Last Supper as an anticipation of the Passover meal or, perhaps less probably, as either a *Kiddush or some other form of religious meal, such as was celebrated by families or groups of friends. See also EUCHARIST, CHABURAH, KIDDUSH, and PASSOVER.

The principal lit. on the Last Supper is found in works on the Eucharist (q.v.) and in comm. on the Gospels. A. Jaubert, La Date de la Cène: Calendrier biblique et liturgie chrétienne (Études Bibliques, 1957), suggested a new chronology for the week of the Passion, according to which the Last Supper was a Passover meal on the Tuesday evening, the time of the Passover meal in the ancient sacerdotal calendar found at Qumran. Though support for this view may be found in the Didascalia, 21, in the work of *Victorinus of Pettau, and in a letter of *Epiphanius of Salamis, the theory has not been generally accepted. Cf. J. Jeremias, Die Abendmahlsworte Jesu (3rd edn., 1960; Eng. tr., 1966).

Last Things. See ESCHATOLOGY.

Lateran Basilica (S. Giovanni in Laterano). The present basilica stands on the site of an ancient palace on the Celian Hill at Rome which formerly belonged to the family of the Laterani. This palace, part of the dowry of Fausta, the wife of the Emp. *Constantine, who gave it to the Church, was the official residence (patriarchium) of the Popes from the 4th cent. until their departure for *Avignon (1309); it covered a much larger area than the present buildings. In 1308 it was nearly all destroyed by fire; only the 'Sancta Sanctorum' chapel now survives (see SCALA SANCTA). In 1586 *Sixtus V entrusted Domenico Fontana (1543–1607) with the erection of a new palace. This building remained unoccupied until 1693, when it was converted by Innocent XII into an asylum for orphans; in 1843 it was transformed into a museum for antiquities; it now houses the offices of the diocese of Rome. For the *Lateran Councils, see following entry.

The Lateran Basilica, which remains the cathedral church of Rome ('omnium urbis et orbis ecclesiarum mater et caput'), is one of the four 'Major *Basilicas'. The original dedication was to the Redeemer (S. Salvator); but after destruction by an earthquake in 896 the church was rebuilt by Sergius III (904–11), who dedicated it to St *John the Baptist (with whom has since been associated St *John the Apostle). After the fire of 1308 it was restored by *Clement V (1305–14); but it was again burnt down in 1361. The present church was built under the direction of a succession of Popes beginning with *Urban V, among the architects being D. Fontana (1543–1604) and F. Borromini (1599–1667). The façade to the E. (1730–32) is by Alessandro Galilei (1691–1737). On the NW is an octagonal *baptistery (S. Giovanni in Fonte), the traditional site of Constantine's baptism by Pope *Sylvester in 324 (in fact Constantine was baptized on his deathbed near Nicomedia in 337); the outer building belongs to the first half of the 4th cent., but the interior was remodelled and embellished by Sixtus III (432–40). Feast of dedication of the Lateran Basilica, 9 Nov.

A. Valentini, La Patriarcale Basilica Lateranense (2 vols., fol., 1836). P. Lauer, Le Palais de Latran (1911). A. M. Colini, Storia e topografia del Celio nell'antichità (Atti della Pontificia Accademia Romana di Archeologia, Serie 3, Memorie, 7; 1944); G. Pelliccioni, Le nuove scoperte sulle origini del Battistero Lateranense (ibid. 12/1; 1973); R. Krautheimer and others, Corpus Basilicarum Christianarum Romae, 5 (Rome, 1977), pp. 1–92 [Eng.], with full bibl. J. Freiberg, The Lateran in 1600 (Cambridge, 1995). H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 8 (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 1529–887, s.v. 'Latran', with extensive bibl.; E. Josi in EC 10 (1953), cols. 1213–20, s.v. 'Roma. V. Topografia, ii. San Giovanni in Laterano e il Patriarchium'.

Lateran Councils. A series of councils were held in the Lateran Palace at Rome from the 7th to the 18th cents. Five of these rank as *oecumenical in the W. Church and are thus of special interest:

(1) First (1123). Convoked by *Callistus II for the solemn confirmation of the Concordat of *Worms which ended the *Investiture contest. Twenty-two disciplinary canons were also promulgated, most of them repeating and emphasizing previous decrees.

(2) Second (1139). Convoked by Innocent II for the reformation of the Church after the schism which had taken place at his election. It issued 30 canons, and condemned the followers of *Arnold of Brescia.

(3) Third (1179). Convoked by *Alexander III to remove the traces of the schism of the antipope Callistus III. The most important decree of the Council concerned Papal elections. The right to elect the Pope was restricted to the college of cardinals, and a two-thirds majority was declared necessary. Another important canon (can. 18) provided for the establishment at every cathedral of a school for clerics.

(4) Fourth (1215). Convoked by *Innocent III, it was much the most important of the Lateran Councils. In the course of it an official statement of the doctrine of the *Eucharist (in which the word 'transubstantiate' is used officially for the first time) was given, and annual confession for all Christian people was prescribed. Rules were made concerning preaching in cathedral churches; bishops were reminded of their duties as teachers; and steps were taken to withdraw ecclesiastical countenance from judicial *ordeals. The foundation of new religious orders was also forbidden, one consequence of which was that St *Dominic was compelled to take an already existing rule as the basis of his Friars Preachers.

(5) Fifth (1512–17). Convened by Pope *Julius II, the Council's immediate purpose was to invalidate the decrees of the antipapal Council of Pisa convoked by Louis XII of France. It promulgated a few minor reforms, but left the main causes of the *Reformation untouched.

(1) Hardouin, 6 (pt. 2), cols. 1109–18; Mansi, 21 (1776), cols. 277–304. Canons, with Eng. tr. and introd., in Tanner, Decrees (1990), pp. 187–94. Hefele and Leclercq, 5 (pt. 1; 1912), pp. 630–44. A. Fliche in Fliche and Martin, 8 (1946), pp. 391–5. See also bibl. to CALLISTUS II and below.

(2) Hardouin, 6 (pt. 2), cols. 1207–18; Mansi, 21 (1776), cols. 525–46. Canons, with Eng. tr. and introd., in Tanner, Decrees (1990), pp. 195–203. Hefele and Leclercq, 5 (pt. 1; 1912), pp. 721–46. See also bibl. to ARNOLD OF BRESCIA and below.

(3) Hardouin, 6 (pt. 2), cols. 1671–876; Mansi, 22 (1778), cols. 209–468. Canons, with Eng. tr. and introd., in Tanner, Decrees (1990), pp. 205–25. Hefele and Leclercq, 5 (pt. 2; 1913), pp. 1086–112. J. Longère (ed.), Le troisième concile de Latran (1179): Sa place dans l'histoire. Communications présentées à la Table Ronde du C.N.R.S., le 26 avril 1980 (1982). See also below.

(4) Hardouin, 8, cols. 1–86; Mansi, 22 (1778), cols. 953–1086. A. García y García (ed.), Constitutiones Concilii quarti Lateranensis una cum Commentariis glossatorum (Monumenta Iuris Canonici, Series A: Corpus Glossatorum, 2; Vatican City, 1981). Constitutions, with Eng. tr. and introd., in Tanner, Decrees (1990), pp. 227–71. Hefele and Leclercq, 5 (pt. 2; 1913), pp. 1316–98. S. Kuttner and A. García y García, 'A New Eyewitness Account of the Fourth Lateran Council', Traditio, 20 (1964), pp. 115–78, incl. text. A. Luchaire, Innocent III (6 vols., 1904–8), esp. vol. 6, 'Le Concile de Latran et la réforme de l'Église'. A. Fliche in Fliche and Martin, 10 (1950), pp. 194–211. See also other works cited under INNOCENT III and below.

(5) Hardouin, 8, cols. 1561–856. Decisions, with Eng. tr. and introd., in Tanner, Decrees (1990), pp. 593–655. Hefele and Leclercq, 8 (pt. 1; 1917), pp. 339–558. O. de la Brosse, OP, in id. and others, Latran V et Trente (Histoire des Conciles Œcuméniques, 10; 1975), pp. 13–114. The sections of the diary of Paride de Grassi dealing with the preparation and events of the Council, ed. M. Dykmans in Annuarium Historiae Conciliorum, 14 (1982), pp. 271–369; cf. art. by N. H. Minnich, ibid., pp. 370–460. See also bibl. to LEO X.

V. Tizzani, I concili lateranesi (1878). R. Foreville, Latran I, II, III et Latran IV (Histoire des Conciles Œcuméniques, 6; 1965), with full bibl. F. Vernet in DTC 8 (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 2628–67, s.v. 'Latran (I^{er}, II^{e}, III^{e} et IV^{e} Concile[s] œcuménique[s] de)'; R. Naz in DDC 6 (1957), cols. 344–53, s.v. 'Latran (Conciles de)'; C. Duggan in NCE 4 (1967), pp. 406–10, s.v.

Lateran Treaty. This treaty, signed on 11 Feb. 1929, 'finally and irrevocably' settled the Roman question, and established the *Vatican City as a sovereign state. The Holy See recognized the Italian state with Rome as capital. The Italian state recognized 'the Catholic, Apostolic and Roman Religion as the sole religion of the State', 'the sovereign independence of the Holy See in the international field', and the Holy See's 'sovereign jurisdiction' in the Vatican City. Attached to the Treaty was a *Concordat which provided for Catholic religious instruction in the schools, the civil recognition of marriage performed in accordance with canon law, the freedom of *Catholic Action on condition of its being non-politically conducted, and the swearing of an oath of allegiance to the King by bishops before taking possession of their dioceses. The 1929 Concordat was substantially modified by an agreement signed on 18 Feb. 1984, which came into force in 1985. In particular, the Catholic religion is no longer the sole religion of the Italian state, but 'the State and the Catholic Church are, each in its proper sphere, sovereign and independent'.

Text in AAS 21 (1929), pp. 209–74, followed by text of Concordat, pp. 274–94, with 'Processo-Verbale' p. 295; that of the 1984 Concordat and appended docs., ibid. 77 (1985), pp. 521–78. J. F. Pollard, The Vatican and Italian Fascism, 1929–32 (Cambridge, 1985), with Eng. tr. of 1929 texts, pp. 197–215, and extensive bibl. L. Mistò (ed.), Il 'Nuovo' Concordato (Turin [1986]). R. Danielo in EC 9 (1953), cols. 990–5, s.v. 'Patti lateranensi'.

Latimer, Hugh (c.1485–1555), Bp. of *Worcester and Reformer. He was the son of a yeoman farmer of Thurcaston in Leicestershire, educated at Cambridge, and in 1510 elected Fellow of Clare Hall. In his earlier years he was an ardent opponent of the New Learning. He was ordained priest, and in 1522 his eloquence and zeal in reforming abuses and defending social justice led the University to license him as one of the 12 preachers commissioned to preach anywhere in England. From c.1523 his opinions began to become suspect to the ecclesiastical authorities; according to his own account, he was dramatically converted to the doctrines of the Reformers by T. *Bilney in 1524, and when in 1525 he declined the request of his bishop, N. West of *Ely, to preach a sermon against M. *Luther, he was forbidden to preach in the diocese. After skilfully defending himself before T. *Wolsey, he was again allowed to preach throughout England. The directness of his method, his understanding of human character, his homely style, and his ready wit won his sermons increasing influence. A sermon before *Henry VIII in Lent 1530, though it attacked the use of temporal weapons for the defence of God's Word, won him the royal favour, and in 1531 he was given the living of West Kington, Wilts. But his preaching, which now openly challenged ecclesiastical authority and spread Protestant doctrines, was censured by Convocation in Mar. 1532. Later in the year he submitted and signed a set of articles required by the bishops.

After T. *Cranmer's appointment to *Canterbury (1533), Latimer's position improved, and when, in 1534, Henry formally broke with the Pope, Latimer became a royal chaplain. In 1535 he was appointed Bp. of Worcester. In his sermons he continued to denounce social injustices and other contemporary corruptions, attacking also Catholic teaching on purgatory, images, etc. He also supported the King in the *Dissolution of the Monasteries. In 1538 he preached at the execution of John Forest, and in the same year approved the putting to death of the family of R. *Pole. But his career was cut short in 1539, when, in acc. with his Protestant beliefs, he opposed the Act of the *Six Articles, and resigned his see on hearing from T. *Cromwell that this was the King's wish. Taken into custody, he was freed in 1540, but ordered to leave London and forbidden to preach. Very little is known of the next few years of his life. In 1546 he was confined to the Tower, but was released on *Edward VI's accession in the following year. On New Year's Day 1548 he preached his famous sermon 'Of the Plough' at Paul's Cross, and became very popular as a court preacher, continuing to denounce social and ecclesiastical abuses and supporting the government of Somerset. On the accession of *Mary he was arrested and committed to the Tower (1553). In 1554, together with T. Cranmer and N. *Ridley, he was taken to Oxford to dispute with Catholic theologians of both universities esp. on *transubstantiation and the sacrifice of the Mass. Having refused to accept the medieval doctrine, he was excommunicated. He was examined again in 1555 and, after a renewed refusal to recant, was burnt with Ridley at Oxford on 16 Oct. 1555. In the American BCP (1979), feast day (with Cranmer and Ridley), 16 Oct.

Collected edn. of his Sermons (2 vols., London, 1758), with Life in vol. 1, pp. ix–lxxxvii; Sermons and Remains, ed. G. E. Corrie (2 vols., *Parker Society, 1844–5, with extract from J. *Foxe, Acts and Monuments, repr. in vol. 2, pp. ix–xxxi). Lives by R. Demaus (Religious Tract Society, London, 1869; many subsequent edns.), R. M. and A. J. Carlyle (London, 1899), H. S. Darby (ibid., 1953), and A. G. Chester (Philadelphia, 1954, with detailed bibl.). J. *Gairdner in DNB 32 (1892), pp. 171–9.

Latin. The language of government and the courts, Latin was also the ordinary spoken language for many people throughout the W. provinces of the Roman empire. It was naturally used as one of the languages of the early Christians, though it was only in the 4th cent. that it came to supersede Greek. The earliest evidence for a Latin translation of the Bible comes from N. Africa and S. Gaul before the end of the 2nd cent. From N. Africa too came the first Latin-speaking Bp. of Rome, *Victor I (189–98), and the first of the Latin Fathers, *Tertullian (*c.*160–*c.*225). The beginnings of Christian Latin thus coincided with the period when Classical Latin gave way to Late Latin; the changes at one level involved the decay of a Classical literary standard and the adoption into literary use of the more popular spoken language. The vulgar tongue was by its nature more productive of linguistic change than was literary Latin. The linguistic differences affect the accidence only in the replacement of rarer inflexions with common ones; syntactical constructions show much more variation as rules are less rigidly observed; but the most conspicuous difference is in vocabulary, in that words are allowed to extend their range of meaning and many new words are admitted to written use. Fixed standards of pronunciation also begin to yield to diversity.

In the late 4th cent. a series of major figures writing in Latin established it as the language of the W. Church. St *Hilary and St *Ambrose from Gaul, St *Augustine from Africa and St *Jerome from Italy were the authors who most gave the Latin Church its independent catholic tradition. *Jerome's *Vulgate translation, intended to replace the wide variety of *Old Latin versions of the Bible, quickly spread through the W. Church; already in the 5th cent. St *Patrick in Ireland was using it for the Old Testament, though for the New he continued to quote from the Old Latin. In the same period Jerome's friend *Rufinus prepared Latin translations of older Greek theological authors, including *Origen and *Eusebius, while some of the contemporary writings of St John *Chrysostom were put into Latin by Anianus. The 4th and 5th cent. also saw the beginnings of Christian literature in Latin, in the works of writers such as *Prudentius, St *Paulinus of Nola, and John *Cassian. From this period until the *Reformation Latin held a dominant position in the W.; it was for centuries not only the language of biblical study, theology, and the liturgy, it was the only language of literacy in much of W. Europe.

The fragmentation of the W. empire and the establishment of barbarian kingdoms in Italy, Gaul, and Spain led to a decline in the grammatical and rhetorical schools of the empire and a corresponding increase in the importance of the Church in education. *Boethius and *Cassiodorus are among the last representatives of an older secular-trained élite. Instead of a rhetorical training the Latin Bible became during the 5th and 6th cent. the text which most influenced the style of the written language. Spoken Latin increasingly diversified from the written standard as the many Romance dialects of Italian, French, and Spanish began to emerge. The writings of many Late Latin authors, such as St *Gregory of Tours, show a marked indifference to the grammatical structure of the language. Case-endings, probably no longer pronounced, are written indiscriminately; certain tenses and moods of verbs are confused; concord is not observed: this is the work of someone who still thought of himself as speaking Latin but who was not in control of the differences between the written and the spoken language. Others, better schooled, continued to write grammatical Latin whether in a simple practical style like that of Pope *Gregory I or in the more complex style of St *Ennodius.

The pronunciation of the language, dropping the endings of cases and reducing the inflexion of verbs, meant that the liturgy, though formally spoken and sung in Latin, was tending to follow the lines of divergence into the Romance languages during the 6th–8th cent. Latin might have gone the way of Greek with a separation between the formal written language and the spoken demotic language. The spread of Christianity beyond the area of Romance speech, however, meant that Latin was also being studied to be written and spoken as the learned language of the Church. Writers from the British Isles, both Celtic and English, exemplify this, among them St *Gildas, St *Adomnán, St *Aldhelm, and, supremely, the Ven. *Bede. In the Carolingian period strenuous efforts were made under the patronage of *Charlemagne and guided by *Alcuin, a Northumbrian like Bede, to establish a common core to the liturgy and an established pronunciation for Latin for the whole Carolingian empire. From *c.*800 Medieval Latin was for most of its users a learned language, no longer confused with the Romance vernaculars. Only in the lowest forms of written texts, for example in the private deeds of Italy and Spain, do we find grammatical disorder continuing until the 9th and 10th cent.

From the 8th to the 13th cent. Latin was used for almost all literate activity in the W. Church. In the late 11th and 12th cent. a deepening study of the Fathers and the Classics led to the cultivation of Latin as a spoken language in Church courts, schools, and universities, and by the higher clergy in general. Medieval Latin may be thought to have reached a high point in the works of such Churchmen as St *Anselm, St *Bernard, and *John of Salisbury.

Preaching to the laity was the only area in which the Church, of necessity, used the vernacular throughout the period. Increasing literacy in N. Europe in the 13th cent. gave rise to a literature of entertainment in the vernacular; biblical translations and literature of devotion followed. The reforming spirit, first recognizable among the *Lollards and the *Hussites, gave a further impetus to the translation of the Bible and led to a new interest in presenting theological debate in the vernacular, which had already found a role as the language of devotional reading for lay men, religious women, and an increasing proportion of the lower clergy. The cultivation of Humanist Latin was a scholarly pursuit, and in the 15th and 16th cent. the use of Latin became increasingly academic. With the Reformation it was all but abandoned for liturgical purposes in the Reformed Churches. The ever increasing restriction in its use to academic or formal purposes is just as apparent in RC Italy or Spain as in Protestant Germany or England.

Latin has continued to be used into the modern period as an occasional language of international scholarly communication, but increasingly since the 17th cent. it has been ousted by vernacular languages except in the official documents of the RC Church, for which the Latin text serves as the authority for vernacular translations worldwide. Even its use in this Church has declined dramatically since the Second *Vatican Council. In spite of a rearguard action by Pope *John XXIII in his Apostolic Constitution Veterum sapientia (22 Feb. 1962), the use of Latin in seminaries and pontifical universities has now dwindled probably to the point of extinction. In the same Constitution John XXIII called for the setting up of a Latin academy in the Vatican to adapt Latin vocabulary to the needs of the Church in the modern world. Since then several small dictionaries and lists of place-names in Latin have been issued. The Second Vatican Council declared that the use of Latin was to be maintained in the liturgy, though permission was granted for some use of the vernacular; in the outcome, the use of the vernacular has almost entirely triumphed, although the official books continue to be published in Latin. In the C of E the Latin versions of the Book of *Common Prayer have never been widely used, though, for instance, John *Wesley used the Latin text in doctrinal writings. The option of using traditional Latin texts in sung worship has been retained by choirs in both the Anglican and Lutheran Churches.

The standard Latin–English dictionary was long that of C. T. Lewis and C. Short (Oxford, 1879; frequently reissued); it has now been superseded for the classical period by P. G. W. Glare (ed.), Oxford Latin Dictionary (ibid., 1982). The Thesaurus linguae Latinae, orig. pub. under the auspices of the Academies of Berlin, Göttingen, Leipzig, Munich, and Vienna (Leipzig, 1900 ff.) provides the fullest dictionary of classical and patristic Latin. Medieval Latin is covered by C. Du Fresne *Du Cange, Glossarium ad scriptores mediae et infimae latinitatis (3 vols., Paris, 1678; ed. G. A. L. Henschel and L. Favre, 10 vols., Niort, 1883–7). Also useful are A. *Souter, A Glossary of Later Latin to 600 A.D. (Oxford, 1949); J. H. Baxter and C. Johnson, Medieval Latin Word-List from British and Irish Sources (1934; rev. by R. E. Latham, 1965); F. Blatt and others, Novum glossarium mediae Latinitatis (Copenhagen, 1957 ff.); R. E. Latham and others, Dictionary of Medieval Latin from British Sources (Oxford, 1975 ff.); F. Blaise, Lexicon Latinitatis Medii Aevi (CCCM, 1975 [Lat.–Fr.]); J. F. Niermeyer and others, Mediae Latinitatis Lexicon Minus (2 vols., Leiden, 1976–84).

On the specifically ecclesiastical use of Latin: C. Mohrmann, Études sur le Latin des Chrétiens (Storia e Letteratura, 65, 87, 103, and 143; Rome, 1958–77); id., Liturgical Latin: Its Origin and Character (Washington, DC, 1957); J. F. Collins, A Primer of Ecclesiastical Latin (Washington, DC [1985]); G. Sanders and M. Van Uytfanghe, Bibliographie signalétique du Latin des Chrétiens (CC, Lingua Patrum, 1; 1989). More general works on Latin in the Middle Ages include E. Auerbach, Literatursprache und Publikum in der lateinischen Spätantike und im Mittelalter (Bern, 1958; Eng. tr. 1965); E. Löfstedt, Late Latin (Instituttet for Sammenlignende Kulturforskning, Serie A, 25; Oslo, etc., 1959), and other works of this author; H. IJsewijn, Companion to Neo-Latin Studies (Amsterdam, etc., 1977; 2nd edn. of pt. 1, rewritten, Louvain, 1990 [introduces Humanist and academic Latin]); F. A. C. Mantello and A. G. Rigg (eds.), An Introduction to Medieval Latin Studies (forthcoming, Washington, DC).

The standard history of medieval Latin literature is still M. Manitius, Geschichte der lateinischen Literatur des Mittelalters (Handbuch der klassischen Altertumswissenschaft, 9, Abt. 2; 3 vols., 1911–31).

Latitudinarianism. A term opprobriously applied in the 17th cent. to the outlook of a group of Anglican divines who, while continuing to conform with the C of E, attached relatively little importance to matters of dogmatic truth, ecclesiastical organization, and liturgical practice. It found characteristic representatives in the '*Cambridge Platonists'. In general the sympathies of Latitudinarian divines lay with the *Arminian theology. Their views did much to prepare the way for the religious temper of England in the 18th cent.

la Trappe. Abbey near Soligny (Orne), from which the *Trappists take their name. (The form la Grande Trappe, dating from 1843, was discarded in the 1930s.) Founded in 1122 as a house of the *Savigny Order, like other Savigny houses la Trappe joined the *Cistercian Order, in the filiation of *Clairvaux, in 1148. Material and spiritual decline set in with the introduction of *commendatory abbots in the early 16th cent.; it continued until A. J. de Rancé, the last of them, introduced the Strict Observance in 1662 and then, on becoming regular abbot in 1664, initiated his own, much stricter, reform (only much later known as Trappist). The community continued to flourish until at the time of the French Revolution it numbered 100 monks, more than any other Cistercian house in France. In 1791 about a third of the monks chose exile rather than secularization, and after wandering as far as Russia to avoid the French armies, returned to build the ruins of their abbey in 1815, having survived continuously, under the same superior, throughout. La Trappe ranks second after *Cîteaux in the Cistercian Order of the Strict Observance.

H. de Charencey (ed.), Cartulaire de l'abbaye de Notre-Dame de la Trappe [Alençon, 1889]. Id., Histoire de l'abbaye de la Grande-Trappe (2 vols., Mortagne, 1896–1911). H. Tournoüer, Bibliographie et iconographie de la Maison-Dieu Notre-Dame de la Trappe (2 pts., ibid., 1894–6). G. Guérout, CSCO, 'La Communauté de la Trappe face à la Révolution', Cîteaux, 40 (1989), pp. 376–478. L. H. Cottineau, OSB, Répertoire topo-bibliographique des abbayes et prieurés (Mâcon, 1935), cols. 3201 f., for further bibl.

latria (λατρεία), as contrasted with 'dulia' (δουλεία; q.v.), that fullness of Divine worship which may be paid to God alone.

Latrocinium (i.e. 'Robber Council'). The Council held at *Ephesus in Aug. 449. Summoned by *Theodosius II, to deal with difficulties arising out of the condemnation of *Eutyches for unorthodoxy at a synod at *Constantinople (the σύνοδος ἐνδημοῦσα) in Nov. 448 (see MONOPHYSITES), it was under the domination of *Dioscorus, Patr. of Alexandria, a strong upholder of Monophysitism. Eutyches was acquitted of heresy and reinstated in his monastery, Flavian and other bishops were deposed, and the Roman legates, who had brought with them St Leo's *Tome, were insulted. Its decisions were reversed by the Council of *Chalcedon in 451. The name 'Latrocinium' was derived from Leo's letter (Ep. 95) to the Empress Pulcheria, where he describes the synod as 'non iudicium, sed latrocinium'.

ACO 2. 1. 1 (1933), pp. 68–101; 2. 3. 1 (1935), pp. 42–92. Crit. text of Syriac Acts, with Ger. tr., by J. Flemming (Abh. (Gött.), 15, Heft 1; 1917); Eng. tr. by S. G. F. Perry, The Second Synod of Ephesus (Dartford, 1881). W. de Vries, SJ, 'Das Konzil von Ephesus 449, eine "Räubersynode"?', OCP 41 (1975), pp. 357–98. DHGE 15 (1963), cols. 574–9, s.v. 'Éphèse (3), Concile dit Brigandage d''.

Latter-day Saints. See MORMONS.

Laud, William (1573–1645), Abp. of *Canterbury. The son of a master tailor, he was born at Reading and educated at St John's College, *Oxford, of which he became a Fellow in 1593. In 1601 he received holy orders, and in 1611 he was made President of St John's. From a very early date he opposed the prevailing *Calvinist theology, and sought to restore something of the pre-Reformation liturgical practice to the C of E. In 1616 he was made Dean of *Gloucester, where he moved the communion table to the east end of the choir, an action that brought him into violent conflict with the local *Puritans. On being appointed Bp. of *St Davids in 1621, he resigned the presidency of St John's College. In 1622 he conducted a controversy with the Jesuit, J. Percy, commonly known as '*Fisher the Jesuit' (q.v.), in which he maintained that the RC Church and the C of E are both parts of the same Church Catholic. Under *Charles I his influence increased. In 1626 he was translated to *Bath and Wells, and in 1628 to London. In 1630 he became chancellor of the university of Oxford, where he carried through many necessary and enduring reforms, codifying the statutes, enforcing discipline, instituting the ('Laudian') professorship in Arabic, and presenting a large collection of MSS to the *Bodleian Library, including the so-called 'Codex Laudianus' of Acts. He did much to encourage individual scholars, and among those who enjoyed his patronage were J. *Hales and W. *Chillingworth. In 1633 he was again translated to become Abp. of Canterbury.

For some years past Laud had been taking a leading part in the administration of the country, and now his work on the *High Commission and his attempts to impose liturgical uniformity by force increasingly aroused the intense hostility of the Puritans. Among the chief grievances were that he made the communion table rather than the pulpit the centre of the church, that he suppressed Puritan *lecturers, and that he punished all opposition to his designs with heavy penalties. His attempts to enforce a new liturgy in Scotland (1637) proved the turning-point of his career. At the sitting of Convocation in 1640 he introduced new canons, proclaiming the *Divine Right of Kings, and compelling whole classes of men to swear never to 'consent to alter the government of this Church by archbishops, deans, and archdeacons, etc.'. This formula, known as the 'etcetera oath', exposed him to general ridicule and had to be suspended at the order of the King. Soon afterwards he was impeached by the Long Parliament. In 1641 he was imprisoned in the Tower, but his trial did not begin until 1644. It is generally held to have been conducted without regard for the demands of justice, the Commons imposing their will on the Lords by force. He was executed on Tower Hill, London, on 10 Jan. 1645, after repudiating the accusation of 'Popery' and declaring his adherence to the Protestant Church of England.

Laud's apparent failure arose from his inability to understand the popular leaning towards Puritanism and the hatred aroused by his violent measures against all who did not share his own views on ritual. In doctrinal matters he showed himself broad-minded and conciliatory. He sought to improve the economic condition of the national Church, but thereby he promoted its identification with a political party. He left a remarkable private diary recording esp. the events of his last years. In the American BCP (1979), feast day, 10 Jan.

Works ed. W. Scott and J. Bliss (LACT, 7 vols., 1847–60). Apart from the records among the State Papers, the principal authority is the Life by his disciple P. *Heylyn, Cyprianus Anglicus (London, 1668). Modern Lives by W. H. *Hutton (London, 1895), A. S. Duncan-Jones (ibid., 1927), and H. R. Trevor-Roper (ibid., 1940; 3rd edn., 1988). E. C. E. Bourne, The Anglicanism of William Laud (1947). [J. E.] C. Hill, Economic Problems of the Church from Archbishop Whitgift to the Long Parliament (Oxford, 1956). N. [R. N.] Tyacke, Anti-Calvinists: The Rise of English Arminianism c.1590–1640 (ibid., 1987), passim (see index). Id., 'Archbishop Laud' in K. Fincham (ed.), The Early Stuart Church, 1603–1642 (1993), pp. 51–70. J. Davies, The Caroline Captivity of the Church (Oxford, 1992), esp. pp. 46–86. Catalogue of the MSS which he presented to the Bodleian Library by H. O. Coxe, Catalogi Codicum Manuscriptorum Bibliothecae Bodleianae pars prima (Oxford, 1853), cols. 491–582, and pars secunda (1858–85). S. R. Gardiner in DNB 32 (1892), pp. 185–94; W. H. Hutton in DECH, pp. 316–20.

Lauda Sion. The opening words, and hence the name, of the *sequence (now optional) for the feast of *Corpus Christi, composed for the occasion by St *Thomas Aquinas (*c.1264). Summoning the Church (here addressed as Sion) to the adoration of the Eucharist, it contains a doctrinal exposition of the Presence, closely following that in the Summa Theologiae. The hymn combines with close philosophical reasoning a severity of form and economy of expression which give it a grandeur and austerity lost in most English translations. These include versions by R. *Crashaw, E. B. *Pusey, F. *Oakeley, and E. *Caswall; the most familiar, 'Laud, O Sion, thy Salvation', is the work of several authors.

Crit. edn. of text in G. M. Dreves (ed.), Lateinische Hymnendichter des Mittelalters (AHMA 50; 1907), pp. 584 f. Raby, pp. 405–8, with refs. and bibl., p. 483; J. Szövérffy, Die Annalen der lateinischen Hymnendichtung, 2 (1965), pp. 246–251, with refs.

Lauds. The morning *office of the W. Church, from primitive times centred around Pss. 148–50, with their frequent use of Laudate ('Praise ye . . .'); hence the name.

The widespread conception of the rising sun symbolizing the Risen Christ was reflected in the custom of offering Him praise at dawn and was prob. connected with the origins of this office. Pss. 148–50 came to be prefaced by elements connected with the development of Vigils: the Benedicite and Cantemus (Exod. 15: 1–18) which were part of the *Paschal Vigil, and psalms expressive of waiting (Ps. 63; see MATTINS) or waiting for mercy (Ps. 51). The service was closely linked with Mattins which immediately preceded it from an early date. From late antiquity until 1912 the Roman form of Lauds comprised four largely unchanging psalms, with *antiphons (to each psalm or group of psalms), an OT canticle with antiphon (e.g. the Benedicite on Sundays), Pss. 148–50 under one antiphon, a short reading from the Bible, a hymn (from the Middle Ages), versicle, and the Benedictus with its antiphon, followed by concluding prayer(s). It was simplified by *Pius X in 1912, when the psalms, including Pss. 148–50, were redistributed; they were, however, retained at Lauds in the *Monastic Breviary until recent times. In the 1971 Roman Breviary, in which it is entitled Laudes Matutinae, it begins with Ps. 95 (if it is the first office of the day), followed by a hymn; then a psalm, an OT canticle, another psalm (each of these having an antiphon); a short reading from the Bible, a short *responsory, the Benedictus with antiphon, intercessions, the *Lord's Prayer, *collect for the day, blessing, and dismissal. Before 1960 Lauds was joined to Mattins and said on the previous day by anticipation, but it may not now be anticipated. Parts of Lauds were used by T. *Cranmer for the BCP order of Morning Prayer or Mattins.

C. Callewaert, 'De Laudibus Matutinis', Collationes Brugenses, 27 (1927), pp. 383–9, 448–51; 28 (1928), pp. 63–72, 152–66, 245–50, and 328–38; repr. in his Sacris Erudiri (Steenbrugge, 1940), pp. 53–89. I. M. Hanssens, SJ, Aux origines de la prière liturgique: Nature et genèse de l'office des matines (Analecta Gregoriana, 57; 1952), passim. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 8 (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 1887–98. See also OFFICE, DIVINE.

laura. See LAVRA.

Laurence, St (d. 258), deacon and martyr. He was one of the seven deacons at Rome during the pontificate of Sixtus II (257–8), and suffered martyrdom in the *persecution under Valerian. Acc. to a tradition handed down by St *Ambrose, *Prudentius, and others, on being asked by the prefect of Rome to deliver up the treasure of the Church, he assembled the poor among whom he had distributed the ecclesiastical possessions and presented them to the prefect, saying, 'These are the treasure of the Church', an action for which he was punished by being slowly roasted to death on a gridiron. This story has been widely rejected by modern scholars, who maintain that he was beheaded like Sixtus II and other contemporary martyrs. He was one of the most famous saints of the Roman Church. During the reign of *Constantine a chapel was built over his tomb in a *catacomb (Cyriaca) on the Via Tiburtina, and this was later linked with a basilica built by Pelagius II (579–90), the present San Lorenzo fuori le Mura. His feast occurs in the Roman 'Depositio Martyrum' of the 4th cent. and his name is also found in the *Canon of the Mass and in the Litanies. Feast day, 10 Aug. See also ROME, CHURCHES OF (6).

AASS, Aug. 2 (1735), pp. 485–532. BHL, pp. 708–12 (nos. 4751–89), and novum suppl. (1986), pp. 518–21. P. F. de' Cavalieri, 'S. Lorenzo e il supplizio della graticola', RQ 14 (1900), pp. 159–76; id., Note agiografiche, 5 (ST 27; 1915), no. 3, 'Assum est, versa et manduca', pp. 65–82. H. Grisar, SJ, 'Zum ältesten Kultus des Märtyrers Laurentius', ZKT 27 (1903), pp. 133–8. V. L. Kennedy, CSB, The Saints of the Canon of the Mass (Studi di Antichità Cristiana, 14; 1938), esp. pp. 124–8, with refs. R. Krautheimer and others, Corpus Basilicarum Christianarum Romae, 2 (Rome, 1959), pp. 1–144 [Eng.], with bibl. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 8 (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 1917–61, s.v. 'Laurent'. See also bibl. to SIXTUS II.

Laurence of Brindisi, St (1559–1619), *Capuchin friar. Giulio Cesare de' Rossi, who was born at Brindisi, near Naples, joined the Capuchins at Verona, in 1575, taking the name of Laurence. He studied at the University of Padua, where he developed his remarkable gifts for learning languages, incl. Hebrew. He soon became a noted preacher and held various offices in his Order. As chaplain of the Imperial troops, holding a crucifix aloft, he rode before them against the Turks at the battle of Székesfehérvár in Hungary in 1601. In 1602 he was elected Vicar General of the Capuchins, but three years later he refused a further period of office. He took part in much diplomatic activity and died at Lisbon on a mission to Philip III. Between 1599 and 1602 and again from 1606 to 1613 he worked to combat *Lutheranism in Bohemia, Austria, and Germany. Apart from an extensive treatise Lutheranismi Hypotyposis (first pub. in his collected works, vol. 2), his writings comprise commentaries on Gen. and Ez. and sermons. He was canonized in 1881 and in 1959 Pope *John XXIII declared him a '*Doctor of the Church'. Feast day 21 (23 until 1959) July.

Opera Omnia, ed. by the Capuchins of the Province of Venice (10 vols. in 15 parts, Padua, 1928–56 + appendices, 1959 ff.). Miscellanea Laurentiana (8 vols. in 9 parts, ibid., 1951–63, incl. substantial study by Arturo da Carmignana di Brenta, OFM Cap. as vols. 4–7 (2), 1960–3). Commentarii Laurentiani Historici Quarto Revoluto Saeculo ab ortu Sancti Laurentii Brundusini novi Ecclesiae Doctoris (Bibliotheca Seraphico-Capuccina, Sectio Historica, 18; Rome, 1959). Other Lives incl. those of A. Brennan, OFM Cap. (London, 1911) and Arturo da Carmignana di Brenta, OFM Cap. (Rome, 1959; Eng. tr., Westminster, Md., 1963). Felix a Mareto, OFM Cap., Bibliographia Laurentiana (Subsidia Scientifica Franciscalia, 1; Rome, 1962). T. Mac Vicar, OFM Cap., in NCE 8 (1967), pp. 566 f., s.v. 'Lawrence of Brindisi, St'.

'Lausanne'. The first Conference of the *Ecumenical Movement of '*Faith and Order' held at Lausanne under Bp. C. H. *Brent in 1927. It aimed at promoting doctrinal unity among the diverse branches of Christianity, about 90 different Churches being represented. Among those not represented were the RC Church, the Russian Orthodox, and several *Baptist Churches. The subjects discussed were the call to unity, the message of the Church to the world, the essence of the Church, Episcopacy and Apostolic succession, the Sacraments, and the Unity of Christendom in general. Great differences became apparent esp. as regards the doctrine of the Sacraments, of which the Orthodox recognized seven and the *Quakers none. The difficulties were emphasized by the Greek Abp. Germanos, who declared a union impossible without the acceptance of the Seven *Oecumenical Councils. None the less, the Conference did much to stimulate interest in reunion and to encourage theological co-operation.

Faith and Order: Proceedings of the World Conference, Lausanne, August 3–21, 1927, ed. H. N. Bate (1928). Convictions: A Selection from the Responses of the Churches to the Report of the World Conference on Faith and Order, held at Lausanne in 1927, ed. L. Hodgson, with the assistance of H. N. Bate and R. W. Brown (1934).

lavabo (Lat., 'I will wash'). The washing of the celebrant's fingers after the offering of the oblations in the Mass, so called from the initial Latin word of Ps. 26: 6–end (Vulg., Ps. 25: 6–end) with the recitation of which the celebrant formerly accompanied the action. In 1969 the traditional text was replaced by Ps. 51 (Vulg. 50), verse 4.

Jungmann (1958 edn.), 2, pp. 95–103; Eng. tr., 2, pp. 76–82.

Lavigerie, Charles-Martial Allemand- (1825–92), cardinal, founder of the *White Fathers and *White Sisters, and anti-*slavery campaigner. Born near Bayonne, Lavigerie studied theology at *Saint-Sulpice in Paris. After ordination and further study, he was appointed professor of Church history at the *Sorbonne in 1854. As director of the Oriental Schools, he travelled to Syria in 1860 to administer relief to Christians after the massacre by the Druses, and met the exiled Algerian leader, Abd-el Kader. In 1863 he was appointed Bp. of Nancy and four years later accepted appointment as Abp. of Algiers, with the ultimate purpose of evangelizing the African continent. To this end he founded the Society of Missionaries of Africa (White Fathers) in 1868 and the Missionary Sisters of Our Lady of Africa (White Sisters) in 1869. In 1878 *Leo XIII entrusted him with the organization of RC missions in Central Africa, in 1882 created him a cardinal, and in 1884 revived for him the see of Carthage with the title of primate of Africa. Throughout 1888 Lavigerie conducted a campaign in European capitals which resulted in the anti-slavery conferences of Brussels and Paris (both 1890). At the request of Leo XIII he proclaimed before a large gathering of officials in Algiers on 12 Nov. 1890 the obligation of French RCs to adhere to the republican government (the famous 'toast of Algiers'). He was a passionate and far-sighted man who believed in the effective evangelization of Africa by Africans themselves.

Modern selections from his writings, Écrits d'Afrique, ed. A. Hamman (Paris, 1966) and La Mission Universelle de l'Église, ed. X. de Montclos (ibid. [1968]). Docs. on Le Toast d'Alger, ed. id. (1966). Official biog. by L. Baunard (2 vols., Paris, 1896). R. F. Clarke, SJ (ed.), Cardinal Lavigerie and the African Slave Trade (1889); J. Tournier, Le Cardinal Lavigerie et son action politique (1863–1892) (1913); J. de Arteche, Lavigerie, el Cardenal de Africa (1963; Eng. tr., 1964); W. Burridge, WF, Destiny Africa: Cardinal Lavigerie and the Making of the White Fathers (1966); X. de Montclos, Lavigerie, le Saint-Siège et l'Église, 1846–1878 (1965); F. Renault, Lavigerie, l'esclavage africain et l'Europe 1868–1892 (2 vols., 1971); id., Le Cardinal Lavigerie ([1992]; Eng. tr. 1994). J. D. O'Donnell, Lavigerie in Tunisia: The Interplay of Imperialist and Missionary (Athens, Ga. [1979]). R. X. Lamey, WF, Cardinal Lavigerie (Rome, 1990).

lavra (Gk. λαύρα, literally, 'street' or 'alley'). In the early Church a colony of *anchorites who, while living in separate huts, were subject to a single abbot. The oldest lavras were founded in Palestine in the early 4th cent., where for some centuries they continued to flourish. Esp. famous were those under the direction of St Euthymius the Great (d. 473) and his pupil, St *Sabas (d. 532), the founder of the lavra, Mar Saba (μεγίστη λαύρα), SE of Jerusalem. In more recent times the term 'lavra' has also come to be applied to *coenobitic communities of particular importance.

law, canon. See CANON LAW.

Law, Natural. See NATURAL LAW.

Law, William (1686–1761), *Nonjuror and spiritual writer. He was born at Kings Cliffe, Northants, and educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, of which he became a Fellow in 1711. On the accession of George I Law refused the Oath of Allegiance, was deprived of his fellowship, and became a Nonjuror. From 1727 to 1737 he lived in the household of the *Gibbons at Putney as tutor to the father of the historian. In 1740 he retired to Kings Cliffe, where he was joined later by a Mrs Hutcheson and Miss Hester Gibbon, with whom he organized schools and almshouses, and, until his death, led a life of great simplicity, devotion, and pursuits of charity.

Among his earlier writings are Three Letters to the Bishop of Bangor (1717–19) which were welcomed as a convincing reply to B. *Hoadly's attack on *High Church principles, and in 1726 appeared his Absolute Unlawfulness of the Stage Entertainment, a strong but somewhat one-sided attack on the evils of the contemporary theatre. In the same year he published the first of his treatises, On Christian Perfection, which was followed, in 1728, by the most famous of his works, A Serious Call to a Devout and Holy Life. Inspired by the teaching of J. *Tauler, J. *Ruysbroeck, *Thomas à Kempis, and other orthodox spiritual writers, the book is a forceful exhortation to embrace the Christian life in its moral and ascetical fullness. The author insists on the exercise of those virtues practised in everyday life, temperance, humility, and self-denial, all animated by the intention to glorify God, to which every human activity should be directed. The simplicity of its teaching and its vigorous style soon established the work as a classic, which has probably had more influence than any other post-Reformation spiritual book except *The Pilgrim's Progress, and was greatly appreciated e.g. by J. *Wesley, S. *Johnson, the elder H. *Venn, and J. *Keble. In 1732 he published his Case of Reason against M. *Tindal and the *Latitudinarian position generally; and his attitude towards Rome is to be found in his Letters to a Lady inclined to enter the Church of Rome (1779). He became acquainted *c.*1734 with the writings of the German Protestant mystic, J. *Boehme, whose influence is noticeable in his later works, esp. The Spirit of Prayer (2 parts, 1749–50) and The Spirit of Love (2 parts, 1752–4), which emphasize the indwelling of Christ in the soul. This development of his spirituality estranged many of his former disciples, e.g. Wesley, and led him, though he always remained faithful to the C of E, to a doctrine resembling the *Quaker conception of the '*Inner Light'. Feast day in parts of the Anglican Communion, 9 Apr.

Collected edn. of his works, 9 vols., London, each with a general title-page, 1762 (sets being made up from various edns.). Works also ed. 'G. Moreton', 9 vols., privately pr., London, 1892–3. Selected Mystical Writings of William Law, ed. with notes and studies by S. [H.] Hobhouse (London, 1938). There has been a steady flow of edns. of A Serious Call to a Devout Life. J. H. Overton, William Law, Non-Juror and Mystic (1881). S. [H.] Hobhouse, William Law and Eighteenth Century Quakerism, with some unpub. Letters and Fragments (1927). A. W. Hopkinson, About William Law: A Running Commentary on his Works (1948). E. W. Baker, A Herald of the Evangelical Revival: A Critical Inquiry into the Relation of William Law to John Wesley and the Beginnings of Methodism (1948). H. Tallon, William Law: A Study in Literary Craftsmanship [1948]. A. K. Walker, William Law: His Life and Thought (1973). [E.] G. Rupp, Religion in England 1688–1791 (Oxford History of the Christian Church, 1986), pp. 218–42. L. Stephen in DNB 32 (1892), pp. 236–40.

Lawrence, Brother. See BROTHER LAWRENCE.

Lawrence, St. See LAURENCE, ST.

Laws, Robert (1851–1934), missionary in *Malawi. The son of an Aberdeen cabinet-maker, he was trained in his father's trade, but was determined to be a missionary. He studied arts and medicine at Aberdeen University and completed his theological training at the College of the *United Presbyterian Church in Edinburgh. Ordained in 1875, he was in the same year seconded by his Church to the pioneer party of *Free Church of Scotland 'Livingstonia' mission to the Lake Malawi area. From 1878 he was head of that mission until his retirement in 1927. After a brief stay at Cape Maclear at the south end of the lake, Laws moved the mission to Bandawe, 200 miles north on the lakeshore where the indigenous Tonga and Tumbuka people could be reached, as well as the Ngoni/Zulu conquering incomers. After the establishment of the British Protectorate in 1891, in 1894 he founded the Overtoun Institute, an educational institute modelled on *Lovedale which trained men and women from central and N. Malawi and E. Zambia both as pastors and in secular trades. President H. Kamuzu Banda of Malawi was one of its pupils. In 1888 Laws had arranged for the Cape Synod of the Dutch Reformed Church to send a mission to fill the gap in the south of Malawi between the Free Church Mission and the Church of Scotland Mission. He played a leading role in the union of the Churches produced by these missions in 1924 to form the Church of Central Africa Presbyterian. He was its first Moderator.

Laws published his autobiog., Reminiscences of Livingstonia (1934). W. P. Livingstone, Laws of Livingstonia [1921]; H. McIntosh, Robert Laws, Servant of Africa (Edinburgh, 1993). J. McCracken, Politics and Christianity in Malawi 1875–1940: The impact of the Livingstonia Mission in the Northern Province (Cambridge, 1977).

Laxism. A system in *moral theology which relaxed the obligations of natural and positive law on grounds deemed by its critics to be insufficient. It developed in the 17th cent., when modern conditions, e.g. the growing practice of taking interest on money loans, hitherto forbidden by the Church as *usury, raised several difficult cases of conscience. Its formulation is connected with the appearance of *Probabilism (q.v.), of which it may be considered a perversion. First attacked in France, esp. in B. *Pascal's Lettres provinciales (1657), it was rather clumsily defended by the *Jesuit G. Pirot in L'Apologie pour les casuistes (1657), which provoked great scandal. In 1658 certain propositions in Pirot's book which asserted that even the slightest degree of probability, derived either from reason or from authority, suffices to excuse from sin were condemned by the *Sorbonne, and in 1659 the *Holy Office censured the book itself. In 1665 and 1666 *Alexander VII condemned Laxism, and in 1679 *Innocent XI condemned 65 propositions drawn from Laxist casuists.

M. Petrocchi, Il problema del lassismo nel secolo XVII (1953), with refs. A. Degert, 'Réaction des "Provinciales" sur la théologie morale en France', Bulletin de Littérature ecclésiastique publié par l'Institut Catholique de Toulouse, 5th ser. 5 (1913), pp. 400–20 and 442–51. A. Molien and É. Amann in DTC 9 (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 37–86, s.v. 'Laxisme'. See also works cited under PROBABILISM.

lay brother, lay sister. A member of a religious order who is not bound to the recitation of the Divine Office and is occupied in manual work. The institution, which originated in the 11th cent., developed as a result of the general literacy of the monks and their abandonment of manual labour, and of the increasingly general custom of monks proceeding to holy orders if admitted to the monastery in youth. A similar development took place in the orders of women, where lay sisters were employed to leave the 'choir nuns' free for the Office, mental prayer, and intellectual pursuits. Lay brothers and sisters assist daily at Mass and recite a short Office. The Second *Vatican Council's 'Decree on the Appropriate Renewal of the Religious Life' (1965), however, now requires that lay brothers be drawn into the heart of the community's life and activities, and, in the case of women's communities, that there should, if possible, be only one category of nun.

K. Hallinger, OSB, 'Woher kommen die Laienbrüder?', Analecta Sacri Ordinis Cisterciensis, 12 (1956), pp. 1–104. J. Dubois, 'L'Institution des convers au XII[e] siècle. Forme de vie monastique propre aux laïcs', in I laici nella 'Societas Christiana' dei secoli XI e XII. Miscellanea del Centro di Studi Medioevali, 5 (Pubblicazioni dell'Università Cattolica del Sacro Cuore. Contributi, 3rd ser. 5 [1968]), pp. 183–261; G. Constable, '"Famuli" and "Conversi" at Cluny. A Note on Statute 24 of Peter the Venerable', R. Bén. 83 (1973), pp. 326–50, esp. pp. 334–50; W. Teske, 'Laien, Laienmönche und Laienbrüder in der Abtei Cluny', Frühmittelalterliche Studien, 10 (1976), pp. 248–322; 11 (1977), pp. 288–339. M. Toepfer, Die Konversen der Zisterzienser (Berliner Historische Studien, 10; 1983). J. S. Donnelly, The Decline of the Medieval Cistercian Laybrotherhood (Fordham University Studies, History Series, 3; New York, 1949). J. Dubois, OSB, in DIP 3 (1973), cols. 110–20, s.v. 'Converso'. See also bibl. to FRATERNITIES and OBLATE.

lay reader. See READER.

lay rector. In the C of E, a lay person who was formerly entitled to receive the rectorial tithes of a benefice. By custom he or she enjoys the right to the chief seat in the chancel of the parish church for self and family, and the freehold of the whole church, but this gives no right of possession or of entering it when not open for divine service. Lay rectors also have the duty of repairing the chancel, for the neglect of which duty they may be sued by the *Parochial Church Council in the county court. They may compound for this liability, however, with the Diocesan Board of Finance subject to the approval of the Parsonages Board, in default of agreement the amount to be decided by the *Church Commissioners.

laying on of hands. See HANDS, IMPOSITION OF.

laymen. See LAITY.

Laynez, James. See LAÍNEZ, DIEGO.

Lazarists. The name popularly given to the 'Congregation of the Mission' (CM), a congregation of secular priests living under religious vows, founded by St *Vincent de Paul in 1625. The name comes from the priory of St-Lazare, which was Vincent's headquarters in Paris. At first they were confined to France and territories under French influence, but have now spread all over the world. The original work of the congregation was the preaching of missions in the various parishes of France, and conducting *retreats. Later they established seminaries. Only with great reluctance, however, did they accept the charge of parishes. Outside France the work of the Lazarists lay for many years chiefly in Tunis and Algiers, where they brought succour to the Christian captives of the Barbary pirates, and in Madagascar.

P. Coste, La Congrégation de la mission dite de Saint-Lazare (1927). A. Haas, Die Lazaristen in der Kurpfalz (privately pr., Speyer, 1960). L. Chierotti, CM, in DIP 2 (1975), cols. 1543–51, s.v. 'Congregazione della Missione'.

Lazarus. The name given to two apparently separate figures in NT. (1) The poor man in the parable of *Dives and Lazarus (Lk. 16: 19–31); he was venerated as the patron of lepers in the middle ages. (2) The brother of *Martha and Mary, and intimate friend of Jesus. Acc. to Jn., the Lord raised him from the dead (11: 1–44), the chief priests then tried to kill him (12: 10–11), and these events led on directly to the crucifixion of Jesus. It is surprising that there is no mention of them in the Synoptic Gospels, and some critics have speculated that the story was constructed out of the parable mentioned above in which the poor man is quite exceptionally assigned a name (Lazarus) and the suggestion is made that he (or someone else) might rise from the dead. Another possibility is that the parable has been influenced by the story.

Acc. to E. tradition Lazarus, with Martha and Mary and some friends, was put into a leaking boat by the Jews and, being miraculously preserved, landed on Cyprus, where he was made Bp. at Kition. In 890 his supposed relics were translated to *Constantinople, where a church was built in his honour by *Leo VI ('the Philosopher'). In the 11th cent. the legend spread in the W. that he had been Bp. of Marseilles and martyred under *Domitian, a story probably due to confusion with a 5th-cent. Bp. Lazarus of Aix whose epitaph is preserved in the crypt of St Victor's at Marseilles, or, alternatively, with St Nazarius, Bp. of Autun. Devotion to Lazarus appears to have been widespread in the early Church. The 'Peregrinatio *Egeriae' describes a procession to *Bethany on the Saturday before *Palm Sunday to the church erected over his tomb. On this day ('Lazarus Saturday') his feast is still observed in the E.; in the W. Church he is commemorated in the *Roman Martyrology on 17 Dec.

For (1) see comm. to Lk, cited s.v.; (2) comm. to Jn, cited s.v. A. Marchadour, Lazare: Histoire d'un récit. Récits d'une histoire (Lectio Divina, 132; 1988). On the post-biblical legend see also G. *Morin, OSB, 'Saint Lazare et saint Maximin', Mémoires de la Société des Antiquaires de France, 56 (1897), pp. 27–51; and L. *Duchesne, Fastes épiscopaux de l'ancienne Gaule, 1 (2nd edn., 1907), pp. 321–59. On the iconography, G. Schiller, Ikonographie der christlicher Kunst, 1 (Gütersloh [1966]), pp. 189–94 (Eng. tr., 1971, pp. 181–6), and plates 559–85. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 8 (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 2009–86, s.v., and E. Josi in EC 7 (1951), cols. 996–8. See also bibl. to MARY MAGDALENE and MARTHA.

Leander, St (*c.*540–*c.*600), Bp. of Seville, prob. from 577/8. He was the brother of St *Isidore. Between 580 and 585 he made one, or perhaps two, visits to *Constantinople, where he met *Gregory the Great. He influenced Gregory's Moralia in Iob, and prob. helped to disseminate his writings in Spain. A leading champion of Catholic orthodoxy in Spain against the *Arianism of the Visigoths, he converted Prince Hermenegild, perhaps in 579, and in 589 he presided over the celebrated Third Council of *Toledo. A rule for nuns ('De Institutione Virginum') and a homily delivered at the Council of Toledo are his only certain works to survive. Feast day, 27 Feb.

The Rule for Nuns and homily are repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 72. 869–98; both ed., with full introd., by A. C. Vega, OSA (Scriptores Ecclesiastici Hispano-Latini Veteris et Medii Aevi, 16–17; Madrid, 1948); Rule also ed., with Sp. tr., by J. Velázquez (Corpus Patristicum Hispanum, 1; Madrid, 1979). Eng. tr. of Rule and homily by C. W. Barlow, Iberian Fathers, 1 (Fathers of the Church, 62; Washington, DC [1969]), pp. 175–235. The principal source is Isidore of Seville, De Viris Illustribus, 41 [28 in edn. of C. Codoñer Merino]. U. Domínguez del Val, Leandro de Sevilla y la Lucha contra el Arianismo (Biblioteca de Visionarios, Heterodoxos y Marginados, 2nd ser. 12; 1981). L. Navarra, Leandro di Siviglia: Profilo Storico-Letterario (Collana di Testi Storici, 17 [1987]). J. Madoz, SJ, 'San Leandro de Sevilla', Estudios Eclesiásticos, 56 (1981), pp. 415–53. Mrs Humphry Ward in DCB 3 (1882), pp. 637–40, s.v.; L. Ladaria, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 9 (1976), cols. 444–6, s.v.

leavened bread. See BREAD, LEAVENED AND UNLEAVENED.

Lebbaeus. An alternative name for *Thaddaeus, found in many MSS of Mt. 10: 3 and also in a few at Mk. 3: 18. In the AV and NEB it occurs only at the former place, and in the RV not at all.

Le Brun, Pierre (1661–1729), French liturgical scholar. A native of Brignoles, he entered the *Oratory *c.*1682. Having studied theology at Marseilles and Toulouse, he taught philosophy at Toulon and theology at Grenoble. In 1690 he was called to the seminary of Saint-Magloire, where he lectured on the Scriptures, the Councils, and Church history. His principal liturgical work, Explication littérale, historique et dogmatique des prières et des cérémonies de la sainte messe (4 vols., 1716–26), embodied many extended studies. In its important preface he takes up an intermediary position between the excessive symbolism of the Middle Ages and an exaggerated naturalism. In the later volumes, which contain much curious information about usages in the French churches, he gives detailed studies of the various rites, stressing their unanimity in regard to liturgical essentials. In his Défense de l'ancien sentiment sur la forme de la consécration (1727) he maintained that the *Epiclesis was an integral element in Eucharistic consecration. He also advocated a more understanding participation in the Liturgy by the laity, for whom he compiled a liturgical prayer book, Heures ou manuel pour assister à la messe (1716).

New edn. of L'Explication de la messe (Lex Orandi, 9; 1949) by E. Bonnardet, Cong. Orat., with biog., full acct. of Le Brun's works, earlier edns., and bibl., pp. xi–xxxiii. Fascimile repr. of the 1726 edn. of L'Explication de la messe and the 1729 edn. of the Défense (4 vols., Farnborough, 1970). A Lat. text of the Explication de la messe, pub. by J. A. Dalmasius (Venice, 4 vols., 1770). A. Molien in DTC 9 (1926), cols. 101–3, s.v., and H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 8 (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 2218–29.

Le Clerc, Jean (1657–1736), 'Clericus', *Arminian theologian and biblical scholar. Born at Geneva, he studied at Grenoble and Saumur, and later gave up strict *Calvinism, in which he had been brought up, and became an Arminian. In 1684 he was appointed professor of philosophy, afterwards of Church history, at the *Remonstrant College at Amsterdam, where he met J. *Locke. In his first work, Liberii de Sancto Amore Epistolae Theologicae (1679), he stated his theological convictions, explaining the mysteries of the *Trinity, the *Incarnation and *Original Sin on rationalistic lines. In Sentiments de quelques théologiens de Hollande (1685) he attacked R. *Simon, esp. his plan of a *polyglot Bible, and he denied the Mosaic authorship of the *Pentateuch. In 1696 he published an Ars Critica, and in 1699 a harmony of the Gospels, Harmonia Evangelica, in Greek and Latin. He brought out a Commentary on the Pentateuch in 1699, an annotated translation of the NT in 1703, and Commentaries on the historical books of the OT in 1708 and on the Psalms, the writings of Solomon, and the prophets in 1731. He made a new edition of the 'Apostolic Fathers' of J. B. *Cotelier and revised writings of D. *Petavius, H. *Grotius, and others; he also edited three influential periodical works, Bibliothèque universelle et historique (26 vols., 1686–93), Bibliothèque choisie (28 vols., 1703–13), and Bibliothèque ancienne et moderne (29 vols., 1714–30). A champion of freedom of thought and an enemy of all dogmatism, he defended the unlimited rights of reason in the domain of faith. He held very advanced critical views on the inspiration of Scripture, which he denied altogether for Job, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, and the Song of Songs. The historic portions of the Pentateuch he assigned to King Josiah (637–608).

Vita et Opera ad annum 1711, pub. Amsterdam, 1711. His letters to Locke are included in the latter's Correspondence, cited s.v.; Correspondence with P. van Limborch, ed. L. Simonutti, Arminianesimo e Tolleranza nel Seicento Olandese (Accademia Toscana di Scienze e Lettere 'La Colombaria', Studi, 70; Florence, 1984). A. Barnes, Jean Le Clerc (1657–1736) et la République des lettres (1938). Other studies by A. des Amorie van der Hoeven (Amsterdam, 1843) and J. Collen (thesis, Geneva, 1884). J. Carreyre in DTC 9 (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 105–7.

Leclercq, Henri (1869–1945), *Benedictine scholar. A native of Tournai (Belgium), he became a naturalized French subject and after profession at *Solesmes was sent to Farnborough Abbey in 1896. He was ordained priest in 1898. From 1914 till his death he lived in London, where he became a very familiar reader at the British Museum. He was a prolific and voluminous editor and writer, esp. concerned with the history of Latin Christianity. His numerous publications include L'Afrique chrétienne (2 vols., 1904); L'Espagne chrétienne (1906); Manuel d'archéologie chrétienne depuis les origines jusqu'au VIII^e siècle (2 vols., 1907); Monumenta Ecclesiae Liturgica (4 vols., 1900–13), in conjunction with F. *Cabrol, a collection of early liturgical documents; Histoire des conciles (10 vols., 1907–38), a completely recast French edition of K. J. *Hefele's Conciliengeschichte; and a large number of articles in the Dictionnaire d'archéologie chrétienne et de liturgie (ed. by F. Cabrol and himself, 1903–53), the later volumes being almost wholly Leclercq's work. His major work on J. *Mabillon (2 vols., 1953–7) was virtually complete at the time of his death. The range of his writing led it to suffer seriously in accuracy and to compel him to borrow extensively from other writers, so that his work can seldom be used without checking. It is, however, always readable, and often clothed in a lively and controversial style.

T. Klauser, Henri Leclercq 1869–1945: Vom Autodidakten zum Kompilator grossen Stils (Jahrbuch für Antike und Christentum, Ergänzungsband 5; 1977).

lectern (Lat. legere, 'to read'). A bookstand used to support the liturgical books, usually of wood or metal and movable, often taking the form of an eagle or pelican with outstretched wings.

J. C. Cox, Pulpits, Lecterns and Organs in English Churches (1915), pp. 163–203. C. C. Oman, 'Medieval Brass Lecterns in England', Archaeological Journal, 87 (1930), pp. 117–49; id., 'English Brass Lecterns of the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Centuries', ibid. 88 (1931), pp. 218–27.

lectionary. A book containing the extracts ('pericopes') from Scripture appointed to be read at public worship. The apportionment of particular extracts to particular days began in the 4th cent. Originally the beginning (incipit) and ending (explicit) of each pericope was noted in the margin of the church Bible, and a 'capitulary', or table of incipits and explicits, was made for reference. Later the pericopes were collected into lectionaries, those for the Mass being further separated into *Epistolaries and *Evangeliaries. With the appearance of the Missal in the 10th cent. all the passages used in the Mass were incorporated in it. In the 1970 RC Missal, however, the biblical readings were omitted. They were issued in the form of a separate lectionary (1969, revised 1981), which provides for a three-year cycle of three readings for Masses on Sundays, and a two-year cycle of two readings for weekday Masses.

The lessons read at *Mattins and *Evensong in the C of E were long regulated by a lectionary ('Table of Lessons') issued in 1871, or, alternatively, by a revised Table of 1922. Since 1944 there has been a series of revisions, culminating in the 1961 Lectionary. This provides for continuous reading of the OT at Mattins and Evensong, with readings from the NT generally in separate sequences in each Office. The Alternative Calendar and Lectionary, introduced in 1979 and incorporated in the ASB, provides separate sequences for both Lessons at each Office. It also provides for the Psalms to be spread over a period of about ten weeks. The ASB has, in addition, a 'Daily Eucharistic Lectionary' of Psalms and Lessons.

S. Beissel, SJ, Entstehung der Perikopen des Römischen Messbuches (Ergänzungsheft zu den Stimmen aus Maria-Laach, 96; 1907). A. Chavasse, Les lectionnaires romains de la messe au VII^e et au VIII^e siècle: Sources et dérivés (2 vols., Spicilegii Friburgensis Subsidia, 22; 1993). G. G. Willis, St Augustine's Lectionary (Alcuin Club Collections, 44; 1962). R. Cabié in A. G. Martimort, L'Église en Prière (new edn.), 2: L'Eucharistie [1983], pp. 77–84, 213–18; Eng. tr. (1986), pp. 61–6 and 197–202, with bibl. A. A. McArthur, The Christian Year and Lectionary Reform (1958). On early Christian lectionaries, F. H. Scrivener in DCA 2 (1893), pp. 953–67, s.v., and K. Junack in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 4 (1992), pp. 271–3, s.v. See also bibl. to EVANGELIARY.

lector (also reader). In the E. and RC Churches, one of the *Minor Orders of the ministry. In early times his main function was to read the OT Prophecies, the Epistle, and in some places (e.g. Africa, Spain) the Gospel. The first traces of the order may be seen in Col. 4: 16 and Rev. 1: 3, and express mention of a liturgical reader is found in St *Justin (Apol. 1. 67. 3 f.). From the end of the 2nd cent. there is plentiful but widely scattered evidence, e.g. St *Cyprian (Epp. 29; 38. 2; 39. 4). Can. 10 of *Antioch (330 or 341) sanctioned their ordination by *chorepiscopi. In Syria (Ap. Const. 8. 2) and elsewhere they were appointed by the laying on of hands, accompanied in the W. ('Conc. Carth. 4', can. 8) by the delivery of a codex. From the Middle Ages the office ranked as the second of the Minor Orders. In 1972 it was constituted the lower of the two remaining ministeria and allotted various duties, incl. that of reading the Scriptures (except the Gospel) and, when there is no deacon or cantor present, of announcing the petitions in the General Intercession at Mass. Only laymen are eligible for the office (CIC (1983), can. 230), but the duties of the lector may be assigned to laymen or women. In the E. Church it is common for the lector to be ordained also subdeacon and deacon at the same service. For the office in the Anglican Communion, see READER.

A. *Harnack, Die Quellen der sogenannten Apostolischen Kirchenordnung (TU 2, Heft 5; 1886), pp. 57–100, 'Über den Ursprung des Lectorats und den anderen niederen Weihen'. F. Wieland, Die genetische Entwicklung der sog. Ordines Minores in den drei ersten Jahrhunderten (RQ, Supplementheft 7; 1897), pp. 67–114 and 165–72. J. G. Davies, 'Deacons, Deaconesses and the Minor Orders in the Patristic Period', JEH 14 (1963), pp. 1–15, esp. pp. 10–14. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 8 (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 2241–69, s.v. 'Lecteur'.

lecturers. Rare before the *Reformation, lecturers were originally ordained stipendiary ministers (often deacons), appointed during the century after 1559 by town corporations, by many parishes (esp. in London), and in a few cases by individual laymen, to provide for regular frequent preaching. By 1600 about 100 sermons a week were preached by lecturers in London. Most lecturers (e.g. J. *Field) were appointed by parishes, and the most influential by corporations. Lectureships were not benefices. Some stipendiary lecturers were themselves incumbents of the same or another parish, and some held more than one lectureship; they were supported by endowments, voluntary contributions, or levies on parishioners. A parallel and equally important feature were the 'lectures by combination', whereby groups of beneficed clergy qualified to preach would combine to provide a regular rota of sermons in some central church, usually on market days.

Many stipendiary lectureships became a *Puritan device to secure preachers with views of which Puritans could approve; they were used in cathedrals in aid of the establishment, but were otherwise bitterly resisted by many bishops, e.g. by J. Aylmer and R. *Bancroft and esp. by W. *Laud. The Long Parliament encouraged lectureships; but in the 1650s Anglicans contrived to use them in London. The system was dealt its death-blow by the Act of Uniformity in 1662; a few lectureships still remain as archaic survivals.

P. S. Seaver, The Puritan Lectureships: The Politics of Religious Dissent 1560–1662 (Stanford, Calif., 1970). P. Collinson, 'Lectures by Combination: Structures and Characteristics of Church Life in 17th-Century England', Bulletin of the Institute of Historical Research, 48 (1975), pp. 182–213, repr. in id., Godly People (1983), pp. 467–98. See also bibl. to PURITANS.

Ledger, St. See LEODEGAR, ST.

Lee, Frederick George (1832–1902), theological writer. From 1867 to 1899 he was vicar of All Saints', Lambeth. He actively promoted reunion between the C of E and the RC Church, and to this end helped to found the *APUC in 1857, started the Union Review in 1863, and was one of the founders of the Order of Corporate Reunion in 1877. It appears that *c.*1877 he was secretly consecrated Bp. at or near *Venice by some prelate in communion with the see of Rome and took the title of 'Bp. of *Dorchester (Oxon)' (see EPISCOPI VAGANTES). He also took a prominent part in furthering the ceremonial revival in the C of E. His voluminous writings, the historical ones mostly very partisan, include The Validity of the Holy Orders of the Church of England (1869), Historical Sketches of the Reformation (1879) and a Glossary of Liturgical and Ecclesiastical Terms (1877). His widely used Directorium Anglicanum (1865; a much revised edn. of an earlier book issued by J. *Purchas in 1858) was a manual of directions for clergy at the altar. In 1901 he became a RC.

H. R. T. Brandreth, Dr Lee of Lambeth: A Chapter in Parenthesis in the History of the Oxford Movement (1951). W. G. D. Fletcher in DNB, 1901–1911, 2, pp. 440–2.

Leen, Edward (1885–1944), Irish spiritual writer. A native of Co. Limerick, he entered the Congregation of the *Holy Ghost and studied at Rockwell College and Rome. He was ordained priest in 1914, became dean of studies at Blackrock College in 1922, and its president in 1925. From 1939 he was superior of the house of his congregation at Kimmage. Leen was among the most popular RC spiritual authors. Among his best-known works are Progress through Mental Prayer (1935), containing practical instructions on the lower stages of mental prayer up to the Prayer of Quiet; The Holy Ghost (1936), considered esp. in His workings in souls; Why the Cross? (1938), meditations on the problem of pain; and The Church before Pilate (1939). He also wrote numerous pamphlets and articles on Catholic education.

His The Voice of A Priest posthumously ed. B. J. Keily, C.S.Sp. (1947); 14 talks on the BVM were also posthumously pub., Our Blessed Mother: Talks on Our Lady by Edward Leen ... and John Kearney, ed. id. (Dublin, 1947), pp. 1–106, and notes taken on his Last Retreat ed. R. F. Walker, C.S.Sp. (Cork, 1959). Life by M. O'Carroll (Dun Laoghaire [1952]).

Lefèvre d'Étaples, Jacques. See FABER, JACOBUS.

legate, Papal. A personal representative of the *Holy See who has been entrusted with a mission. The sending of envoys by the Pope dates from early times, but they grew in importance from the 11th cent. There came to be three kinds of legates: legati missi, legates a latere, and legati nati. Legati missi are legates sent to carry out particular tasks; those appointed for more exalted occasions came to be known as legates a latere, i.e. from the side of the Pope. In practice legates a latere are still invariably *cardinals, and such cardinals represent the Pope as his alter ego at solemn celebrations or gatherings. Legati nati were the holders of certain important residential archbishoprics to whom legatine status was conferred on a stable basis; to some extent their powers survive in the office of certain primates. Before the Reformation the Abp. of *Canterbury was such a legatus natus. The system of legates has been reorganized at various times, and from the 16th cent. permanent *nunciatures to secular governments have been established. Though a modern legate is usually fortified with various powers, his principal task is to make effective the bonds of unity between the *Holy See and particular Churches. He is to assist the local bishops, while leaving intact the exercise of their lawful powers, and he is to act with them in relations with the civil authorities. The position of legates is governed mainly by the motu proprio 'Sollicitudo Omnium Ecclesiarum' issued by *Paul VI on 24 June 1969 (AAS 61 (1969), pp. 473–84) and CIC (1983), cans. 358 and 362–7. See also APOSTOLIC DELEGATE and NUNCIO.

V. E. Hrabar (ed.), De Legatis et Legationibus Tractatus Varii (Dorpat, 1905). M. Oliveri, The Representatives: The Real Nature and Function of Papal Legates (Gerrards Cross, 1980); P. Blet, SJ, Histoire de la Répresentation Diplomatique du Saint Siège des origines à l'aube du XIX[e] siècle (Collectanea Archivi Vaticani, 9; Vatican City, 1982). J. A. Abbo in NCE 8 (1967), pp. 607–9, s.v.

Leger, St. See LEODEGAR, ST.

Leibniz, Gottfried Wilhelm (1646–1716), philosopher. He was a native of Leipzig, where after a precocious boyhood he entered the university in 1661 as a student of law. Here philosophy and mathematics soon became his chief interests, and in 1663 he wrote a dissertation on the Principle of Individuation, a subject which remained of permanent interest to him. A tract, De Arte Combinatoria, which elaborated a new system of symbolic logic, followed in 1666. In 1667 he declined a chair at Altdorf, the university town attached to Nuremberg. Shortly afterwards his friendship with J. C. von Boyneburg (1622–72) introduced him to the Elector of Mainz, who employed him on several political projects, including a plan to persuade Louis XIV to divert his attention from Germany to an attack on Egypt. Contacts with French savants while in Paris on this mission much widened his outlook; and it was at about this date that he made his celebrated discovery of the infinitesimal calculus. In 1673 he changed to the service of the Duke of Brunswick-Lüneburg, in the employ of whose family he remained for the rest of his life, residing from 1676 at Hanover. Here his main official task was the assembly of a vast body of material relating to the history of the House of Brunswick. But he developed and maintained a great number of other interests. A Protestant by upbringing, he engaged in correspondence with J.-B. *Bossuet on Christian reunion, and to this end published his Systema Theologicum (1686). The Prussian Academy, founded in 1700, was virtually Leibniz's creation, and he also exerted himself to promote the erection of similar institutions in other European states. Most of his philosophical writings date from the last 16 years of his life in which he conducted a large correspondence with A. *Arnauld, S. *Clarke, and others. He also contributed to learned journals, and wrote an extensive critique of J. *Locke's Essay which, owing to Locke's death in 1704, he withheld from publication. (It was first issued by R. E. Raspe in 1765.) In 1710 appeared his Essais de Théodicée sur la bonté de Dieu, la liberté de l'homme et l'origine du mal, his one considerable theological work. In 1714 he wrote the Monadologie (pub. 1720) and Principes de la nature et de la grâce (pub. 1718), which though brief contain the only systematic account of his metaphysical doctrines. Throughout his life Leibniz was ardently devoted to the cause of international peace.

Acc. to the Monadology, the universe consisted of an infinite number of 'monads', i.e. simple substances, and nothing else. These monads are indivisible, yet, unlike the atoms of Democritus, ever-active. As every monad contains within itself the whole infinity of substance, each is a living mirror of all existence. Each is, however, limited and different from all the rest, as it mirrors the universe in its own way. All difference is relative and gradual, not absolute, and the universe is governed by a law of continuity. The monads form a continuously ascending series from the lowest, which is next to nothing, to the highest, which is God. Yet though Leibniz sometimes described God as the highest of the monads, he could not avoid the difficulties in the way of reconciling the inclusion of God in the monadic series with the Christian doctrine of the Divine transcendence. In some places he speaks as though God were outside the series and the cause of the monads' existence, or as though they proceeded from Him by 'fulgurations'. A radical optimism pervaded his whole system, expressed in his belief that this world is 'the best of all possible worlds'.

Leibniz defended the validity of the traditional proofs of God's existence, though he thought that they needed modification in detail, notably the *Ontological Argument. In general he was much more favourably disposed towards Scholastic principles than most philosophers who had come under the influence of F. *Bacon and R. *Descartes, and he firmly believed in final causes. He believed that one of the merits of his doctrine of substance was that it was in harmony with *transubstantiation and *consubstantiation alike.

A complete edn. of his works is being pub. under the auspices of the Berlin Academy (Darmstadt, Leipzig, Berlin, 1923 ff.). Details of earlier edns. in E. Ravier, Bibliographie des œuvres de Leibniz (1937). R. Latta, The Monadology and other Writings (Eng. tr. with introds. and notes, 1898). Eng. tr. of selected Philosophical Papers and Letters, with introd., by L. E. Loemker (Chicago, 1956; 2nd edn., Dordrecht, 1969). There are also Eng. trs. of The Leibniz–Clarke Correspondence by H. G. Alexander (Manchester, 1956) and The Leibniz Arnauld Correspondence by H. T. Mason (ibid. and New York, 1967). Lives by G. E. Guhrauer (2 vols., Breslau, 1846) and E. J. Aiton (Bristol and Boston [1985]). Collection of mainly biog. essays ed. W. Totok and C. Haase, Leibniz (Hanover [1966]). B. Russell, A Critical Exposition of the Philosophy of Leibniz (1900). L. Couturat, La Logique de Leibniz d'après des documents inédits (1901). H. W. B. Joseph, Lectures on the Philosophy of Leibniz (posthumously pub., Oxford, 1949). G. Martin, Leibniz: Logik und Metaphysik (Cologne, 1960; Eng. tr., Manchester, 1964). Y. Belaval, Leibniz: Initiation à sa philosophie (1962). B. Mates, The Philosophy of Leibniz (New York and Oxford, 1986). C. Wilson, Leibniz's Metaphysics: A Historical and Comparative Study (Princeton, NJ [1989]). Short studies by C. B. Broad, ed. C. Lewy (London, 1975), N. Rescher (Oxford, 1979), and S. Brown (Brighton, 1984). G. J. Jordan, The Reunion of the Churches: A Study of G. W. Leibnitz and his Great Attempt (1927). É. Naert, Leibniz et la querelle du pur amour (1959). J. Jalabert, Le Dieu de Leibniz (1960). Bibl. by K. Müller (Frankfurt am Main [1967]). Überweg, 3, pp. 299–340, with bibl., pp. 673–81. L. J. Russell in P. Edwards (ed.), Encyclopedia of Philosophy, 4 (1967), pp. 422–34, s.v.; W. R. Sorley and M. Kneale in EB (1968 edn.), 13, pp. 913–17, s.v., with bibl.

Leiden. To mark its heroic defence against the Spanish (1574), William of Orange, in 1575, gave the city a university. Although this was formally free from Church control, *Calvinist influence was powerful and, strengthened by the foundation of a College for training theological students (1592), Leiden soon became a stronghold of Calvinist orthodoxy and a refuge of the English *Puritans; from 1609 to 1620 it gave hospitality to the *Pilgrim Fathers. About the same time the *Arminians engaged in religious disputes with the *Gomarists; other great 17th-cent. controversies connected with the name of the city concerned the theology of J. *Cocceius and the *Cartesian philosophy, which had been defended by A. van der Heyden. The *Elzevir family of printers had their headquarters here; but, despite the imprint 'Lugdunum Batavorum' on books issued from Leiden, the modern city has no connection with this Roman town. Famous scholars of the university during its golden era include H. *Saravia, J. Lipsius (1547–1606), C. *Salmasius, G. J. *Voss, H. *Grotius, D. Heinsius (1580–1655), and J. J. *Scaliger. The 18th cent. saw both a decline in prestige and a move towards a more liberal theology, a trend which continued in the 19th cent. under such professors as J. H. Scholten (1811–85) and A. *Kuenen. Today Leiden is a major university with the full range of faculties, amongst which that of oriental studies has a particular reputation.

P. J. Blok, Geschiedenis eener Hollandsche Stad (4 vols., The Hague, 1910–18). P. C. Molhuysen (ed.), Bronnen tot de Geschiedenis der Leidsche Universiteit (7 vols., ibid., 1913–24). C. A. Siegenbeek van Heukelon-Lamme, Album Scholasticum Academiae Lugduno-Batavae MDLXXV–MCMXL (Leiden, 1941). T. H. Lunsingh Scheurleer and G. H. M. P. Meyjes (eds.), Leiden University in the Seventeenth Century (ibid., 1975).

Leighton, Robert (1611–84), Abp. of Glasgow. After spending some time in France, he was ordained in 1641, became principal of Edinburgh University in 1653, Bp. of Dunblane in 1661, and Abp. of Glasgow in 1670. His acceptance of a bishopric was not due to abandonment of *Presbyterian principles, or to mere compromise, but to his belief that he had been chosen to help bring peace in the conflict between Presbyterianism and Episcopalianism. He laboured hard for the restoration of Church unity in Scotland, but failed in his hopes of accommodating the two systems. He purposed to retire from his bishopric of Dunblane when the Government continued persecuting the *Covenanters (1665), but on being reassured by *Charles II, relented. He finally resigned his archbishopric in 1674, after vainly redoubling his efforts towards conciliation. Learned in Latin, Greek, and Hebrew, he combined a deep-seated Calvinist belief with a quality of devotion which he learnt in part from the writings of St *Bernard and *Thomas à Kempis.

His writings have never been satisfactorily ed. Early edns. by J. Fall (1692–1708) and P. *Doddridge (2 vols., 1748). More recent edn. by W. West (vols. 2–7, 1869–75; vol. 1 never pub.). Selections ed. by W. Blair (1883). D. Butler, Life and Letters of Robert Leighton (1903); E. A. *Knox, Robert Leighton, Archbishop of Glasgow [1931]. W. O. Chadwick, 'Robert Leighton after three hundred years', Journal of the Society of Friends of Dunblane Cathedral, 14 (1985), pp. 116–26. G. W. Sprott in DNB 33 (1893), pp. 4–7.

Leipzig, Disputation of. The disputation held at Leipzig from 27 June to 16 July 1519, under the orders of George, Duke of Saxony (1500–39), was provoked by J. *Eck's challenge of *Carlstadt, in which M. *Luther felt himself included. It began with a rather academic discussion between Eck and Carlstadt on the relations of grace and free will, but the appearance of Luther on 4 July turned the disputation to the question of the doctrinal authority of the Church. Under the pressure of Eck, Luther was led to the decisive statement that Councils not only may err, but actually have erred, holding that among the doctrines of J. *Huss condemned at *Constance some were very Christian and evangelical, and that the same Council had been wrong in affirming the primacy of the Pope. The disputation resulted in the clearing of the issues on both sides and furnished Rome with new material for the process against Luther.

The standard edn. of the text is that of O. Seitz (Berlin, 1903). Extracts of some docs. are conveniently pr. in Kidd, pp. 44–51. J. C. Seidemann, Die Leipziger Disputation im Jahre 1519 (1843). K.-V. Selge, 'Der Weg zur Leipziger Disputation zwischen Luther und Eck im Jahre 1519', in B. Moeller and G. Ruhbach (eds.), Bleibendes im Wandel der Kirchengeschichte (Tübingen, 1973), pp. 169–210.

Leipzig Interim. See AUGSBURG, INTERIM OF.

Le Neve, John (1679–1741), English antiquary. He was educated at Eton and at Trinity College, Cambridge. His Fasti Ecclesiae Anglicanae, or an Essay towards deducing a regular Succession of all principal Dignitaries in every Cathedral in those parts of Great Britain called England and Wales (fol., 1716), based on the collections of White *Kennett, was a work of immense industry and has remained a standard treatise on matters of ecclesiastical chronology, etc. His other publications include a Life of R. *Field, Dean of Gloucester (1717; but perhaps only the preface is Le Neve's own work), and The Lives and Characters . . . of all the Protestant Bishops in the Church of England since the Reformation (1720).

His Fasti Ecclesiae Anglicanae was 'corrected and continued from the Year M.DCC.XV. to the present time' by T. D. Hardy (3 vols., Oxford, 1854), with biog. note of Le Neve in vol. 1, pp. xiii–xx. Modern edn. of the section covering the period 1300–1541 by H. P. F. King, J. M. Horn, and B. Jones (12 vols., 1962–7); of that covering 1066–1300 by D. E. Greenway and others (1968 ff.); and of that covering 1541–1857 by J. M. Horn and others (1969 ff.). W. Rye in DNB 33 (1893), pp. 35 f.

Le Nourry, Denis Nicolas (1647–1724), *Maurist historian. Educated by the *Oratorians, in 1655 he joined the *Benedictine Order at *Jumièges. From *c.*1685 till his death he lived at *Paris. He took part in preparing some of the standard editions of the Fathers, notably of *Cassiodorus (with J. Garet) and St *Ambrose (with J. Du Friche). His own principal work was his Apparatus ad Bibliothecam Maximam Veterum Patrum et Antiquorum Scriptorum (2 vols., 1703 and 1715), a very learned set of dissertations on several of the leading early Fathers and their writings, issued as an Appendix to the Lyons Bibliotheca. His Liber ad Donatum Confessorem de Mortibus Persecutorum (1710) is notable as the first modern attempt to prove that *Lactantius did not write the treatise 'On the Deaths of Persecutors'.

J. Baudot in DTC 9 (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 217 f., s.v. with bibl.

Lent. The fast of 40 days before *Easter. In the first three centuries the period of fasting in preparation for Easter did not, as a rule, exceed two or three days, as is evident from a statement of *Irenaeus recorded by *Eusebius (Hist. Eccl. 5. 24. 12). The first mention of a period of 40 days (τεσσαρακοστή), prob. of Lent, occurs in the Canons of *Nicaea (AD 325; can. 5). The custom may have originated in the prescribed fast of candidates for baptism, and the number 40 was evidently suggested by the 40 days' fasts of *Moses, *Elijah, and esp. the Lord Himself, though till a much later date the period was reckoned differently in the different Churches. In the E. Churches the Lenten Fast was observed during seven weeks, but as Saturdays and Sundays (except *Holy Saturday) were exempt there were only 36 actual fast days. The W. Church, on the other hand, fasted during six weeks but also counted 36 days, as they normally left out only the Sundays. Apparently only in *Jerusalem were the actual 40 days observed as early as the 4th cent. by fasting on five days for eight weeks, but local customs long varied and acc. to *Socrates (Hist. Eccl. 5. 22) even a fast of three weeks or a fortnight was called τεσσαρακοστή. C. Callewaert argued that in Rome the original fast was of 40 days from the First Sunday in Lent to *Maundy Thursday, the fasts of Good Friday and Holy Saturday being independent. It is, however, generally held that the number of 40 was not made up in the Latin Church until the 7th cent., when the four days from *Ash Wednesday to the First Sunday in Lent were added, a practice first attested by the *Gelasian Sacramentary and spreading from Rome throughout the W.

During the early centuries the observance of the fast was very strict. Only one meal a day, taken towards evening, was allowed, and flesh-meat and fish, and in most places also eggs and lacticinia*, were absolutely forbidden. From the 9th cent. onwards in the W. the practice began to be considerably relaxed. The hour for breaking the fast was gradually anticipated to three o'clock in the afternoon, and by the 15th cent. it had become the general custom even for religious to eat at noon. These relaxations entailed not only the anticipation of the evening office of *Vespers to before midday (in order to keep the rule of not eating before Vespers), but also the concession of a 'collation' in the evening. This consisted originally only of a drink, but from the 13th cent. included some light food. Fish was allowed throughout the Middle Ages, and from the 15th cent. abstinence from lacticinia came to be more and more generally dispensed. By the Apostolic Constitution Paenitemini* (1966) in the RC Church the obligation to fast was restricted to the first day of Lent and *Good Friday. In the E. Church, however, abstinence from meat, fish, eggs, and lacticinia is still widely practised.

In the W. Church the penitential character of Lent is reflected in various features in the liturgy, such as the use of purple vestments and the omission of the Alleluia and (except on great feasts) of the Gloria in excelsis at Mass. There has long been a proper Mass for each day in Lent; despite some recent rearrangement of the lections, the Lenten Masses (except those for the Thursdays which are later than the rest) are among the earliest in the Missal. Since the time of *Pius X the ferial Masses of Lent have been gradually restored to prominence and now take precedence over all but the most important feasts. In the E. Church in Lent the celebration of the Eucharist is confined to Saturdays and Sundays; on Wednesdays and Fridays the Liturgy of the *Presanctified is used.

Lent is generally observed as a time of penance by abstaining from festivities, by almsgiving, and by devoting more than the usual time to religious exercises. Of recent years in the W. Church more emphasis has been placed on these aspects than on physical fasting.

The observance of Lent continued in the C of E after the Reformation. It was expressly prescribed by the BCP, and sometimes enforced even by the secular authorities. Dispensations allowing the use of meat were issued in special cases, e.g. by Abp. W. *Juxon. Falling into comparative disuse in the 18th cent., it was revived by the Tractarians in the 19th and is now widely kept. See also REFRESHMENT SUNDAY; HOLY WEEK.

H. Thurston, SJ, Lent and Holy Week (1904). J. Pascher, Das liturgische Jahr (Munich, 1963), pp. 47–156. F. X. Funk, Kirchengeschichtliche Abhandlungen und Untersuchungen, 1 (1897), 'Die Entwickelung des Osterfastens', no. 9, pp. 241–78. C. Callewaert, Sacris Erudiri (Steenbrugge, 1940), pp. 449–671. A. Chavasse, 'La Structure du Carême et les lectures des messes quadragésimales dans la liturgie romaine', Maison-Dieu, 31 (1952, no. 3), pp. 76–119, and other specialized arts. by this author; cf. J. A. Jungmann, SJ, 'Die Quadragesima in den Forschungen von Antoine Chavasse', Archiv für Liturgiewissenschaft, 5 (pt. 1; 1957), pp. 84–95. V. Peri, 'La Durata e la Struttura della Quaresima nell'antico uso ecclesiastico Gerosolimitano', Aevum, 37 (1963), pp. 31–62. P. Radó, OSB, Enchiridion Liturgicum, 2 (2nd edn., Rome, 1966), pp. 1145–218, with bibl. and suppl. 2/8° f. P. Jounel in A. G. Martimort (ed.), L'Église en Prière (new edn.), 4 (1983), pp. 78–90; Eng. tr. [1985], pp. 65–76. R. Sinker in DCA 2 (1880), pp. 972–7; H. Thurston in CE 9 (1910), pp. 152–4; E. Vacandard in DTC 2 (1905), cols. 1724–50, and in DACL 2 (pt. 2; 1910), cols. 2139–58, both s.v. 'Carême'; R. Pierret, OSB, and F. Flicoteaux, OSB, in Dict. Sp. 2 (1953), cols. 136–52, also s.v. 'Carême'.

Leo I, St (d. 461), 'Leo the Great', Pope from 440. Little is known of his early life beyond the fact that as a Roman deacon he opposed *Pelagianism. His Papacy is remarkable chiefly through the enormous extent to which he advanced and consolidated the influence of the Roman see. At a time of general disorder he sought to strengthen the Church by energetic central government, based on a firm belief that the supremacy of his see was of Divine and Scriptural authority, and he pressed his claims to jurisdiction in Africa, Spain, and Gaul. He also secured from Valentinian III a rescript which recognized his jurisdiction over all the W. provinces. Though his jurisdiction was not recognized in the E., he was drawn into E. affairs by the *Eutychian controversy, and his support was coveted by all parties. His legates spoke first at the Council of *Chalcedon (451), where his *Tome (449) was accepted as a standard of Christological orthodoxy. In the political sphere he also much increased Papal prestige by persuading the Huns to withdraw beyond the Danube (452) and securing concessions when the Vandals took Rome (455). Doctrinally Leo was clear and forcible, but not profound. He knew no Greek. 143 genuine letters and some 97 sermons have survived. The latter cover the whole ecclesiastical year; they provide important evidence of contemporary liturgical practices (e.g. the observance of four sets of fast days, later known as *Ember Days) and reveal a remarkable grasp of liturgical principles. Both his letters and his sermons are distinguished by clarity of thought and purity of language. Mainly on grounds of style, many scholars have claimed to detect his hand in some of the prayers in the so-called *Leonine and *Gelasian Sacramentaries. He was declared a '*Doctor of the Church' by *Benedict XIV. Feast day, in the E., 18 Feb.; in the W., 10 Nov. (formerly 11 Apr.). See also TOME OF LEO.

Works ed. P. *Quesnel (2 vols., Paris, 1675; strongly *Gallicanist) and by P. and H. *Ballerini (3 vols., Venice, 1753–7, with replies to Quesnel's Disquisitions from the *Ultramontane standpoint); both deservedly famous patristic edns. The latter is repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 54–6. Modern crit. edn. of Leo's Epistles in E. *Schwartz, ACO 2. 4 (1932). Eng. tr. of Letters by C. L. Feltoe (1896). Migne text of sermons repr., with two further sermons, Fr. tr. and notes by R. Dolle, OSB (SC 22, 49, 74, 200; [1947]–1973); crit. edn. of sermons by A. Chavasse (CCSL 138 and 138A; 1973). Eng. tr. of selected sermons by W. *Bright (1862; 2nd edn., 1886). T. [G.] Jalland, The Life and Times of St Leo the Great (1941). A. P. Lang, Leo der Grosse und die Texte des Altgelasianums (1957). M. B. de Soos, OSB, Le Mystère liturgique d'après saint Léon le Grand (Liturgiewissenschaftliche Quellen und Forschungen, 34; 1958). G. Hudon, OMI, La Perfection chrétienne d'après les sermons de saint Léon (Lex Orandi, 26; 1959). P. Stockmeier, Leo I des Grossen Beurteilung der kaiserlichen Religionspolitik (Münchener Theologische Studien, 1. Historische Abteilung, 14; 1959). P. A. McShane, La Romanitas et le pape Léon le Grand: L'apport culturel des institutions impériales à la formation des structures ecclésiastiques (1979). S. O. Horn, Petrou Kathedra: Der Bishof von Rom und die Synoden von Ephesus (449) und Chalcedon (Konfessionskundliche und Kontroverstheologische Studien, 45; Paderborn, 1982). W. Ullmann, 'Leo I and the Theme of Papal Primacy', JTS NS 11 (1960), pp. 25–51. B. Studer in J. Quasten (cont.), Patrology, 4 (1986), pp. 589–612, with bibl. H. *Lietzmann in PW 12 (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 1962–73; P. *Batiffol in DTC 9 (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 218–301; F. X. Murphy in NCE 8 (1967), pp. 637–9, s.v.; B. Studer [OSB] in TRE 20 (1990), pp. 737–41, s.v. See also works cited under LEONINE SACRAMENTARY.

Leo III (*c.*675–741), Byzantine Emperor, usually 'the Isaurian', but more correctly the Syrian. Born at Germanicia in Commagene, he won distinction as a soldier and became commander of the eastern army under Anastasius II. In 717 he was elected Emperor in place of the usurper Theodosius III. In the same year began the siege of *Constantinople by the Saracens, ending with Leo's victory in 718, which saved Europe from Islam. He then effected many administrative reforms, and in 726 issued a new code of law, the 'Ecloge'. He also introduced reforms in the religious sphere. From 726 to 729 he published a number of edicts against image worship and thus initiated the *Iconoclastic Controversy. In 730 he replaced the Patr. *Germanus I, an upholder of images, by Anastasius, against popular opinion, which was supported by the monks and the majority of Byzantine theologians. The defence of the veneration of images by the Popes, *Gregory II and Gregory III, in letters and synodal decrees caused the Emperor to annex the Papal Patrimonies in S. Italy and the province of Illyria; he failed, however, to abolish image worship. In 740 he won another decisive victory over the Arabs, and thus at his death left the Empire well consolidated.

Crit. edn. of the Ecloge, with Ger. tr. and introd., by L. Burgmann (Forschungen zur Byzantinischen Rechtsgeschichte, 10 [1983]). Eng. tr. by E. H. Freshfield, with full introd. (Cambridge, 1926). K. Schenk, Kaiser Leon III: Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte des Bilderstreits (Inaugural Diss., Halle, 1880); id., 'Kaiser Leons III Walten im Innern', BZ 5 (1896), pp. 257–310. A. A. Vasiliev, History of the Byzantine Empire, 324–1453 (Eng. tr. from Russ., 2nd edn., Oxford, 1952), pp. 234–59. M. V. Anastos in C.Med.H. 4 (pt. 1; 1966), pp. 61–72. See also bibl. to ICONOCLASTIC CONTROVERSY.

Leo III, St (d. 816), Pope. A Roman priest of humble birth and blameless character, he was unanimously elected Pope in 795. From the beginning of his reign he had to contend with the opposition of the ambitious relatives of his predecessor, *Hadrian I, who, during the procession of St Mark's Day in 799, set on him and tried to mutilate him. After recovering from his wounds he fled to *Charlemagne, to whom he had sent the keys of the confessio of St Peter in 795, and who now provided him with an escort back to Rome. In 800, when Charles had himself come to investigate the charges brought against the Pope, Leo cleared himself by an oath of compurgation. On Christmas Day, two days later, he crowned Charles Roman Emperor. At Charlemagne's instigation the Pope took severe measures against the Adoptianist heresy, but refused to accede to the Emperor's request to include the Filioque in the *Nicene Creed, in order not to alienate the Greeks. Several times he intervened in the differences between the Archbishops of *Canterbury and the Anglo-Saxon kings, excommunicating the usurper of the throne of Kent, Eadbert Praen, and withdrawing the *pallium from *Lichfield. In the E. he encouraged the monks in their opposition to the Emp. Constantine VI, who had divorced his wife. After Charlemagne's death in 814, trouble began again for the Pope, who had to crush another conspiracy against himself and, shortly afterwards, revolts of nobles and peasants of the Campagna by the help of the Duke of Spoleto. Assisted by Charlemagne's rich gifts, Leo III did much to adorn the churches in Rome and other cities of Italy, and was an efficient and charitable ruler of the *Patrimony. He was canonized in 1673. Feast day, 12 June.

Some of his Correspondence and Privilegia are repr., mainly from J. D. *Mansi, in J. P. Migne, PL 102. 1023–72; 10 letters also ed. P. Jaffé, Bibliotheca Rerum Germanicarum, 4, Monumenta Carolina (Berlin, 1867), pp. 307–34. Id., Regesta Pontificum Romanorum, 1 (2nd edn. by W. Wattenbach, Leipzig, 1885), pp. 307–16. LP (Duchesne), 2, pp. 1–48 (Eng. tr., with introd., by R. Davis, Liverpool, 1992, pp. 173–230). E. Caspar, 'Das Papsttum unter frankischer Herrschaft', ZKG 54 (1935), pp. 132–264, esp. pp. 214–64; L. Wallach, 'The Genuine and Forged Oath of Pope

Leo III', Traditio, 11 (1955), pp. 37–63; id., 'The Roman Synod of December 800 and the Alleged Trial of Leo III', HTR 49 (1956), pp. 123–42; W. Mohr, 'Karl der Grosse, Leo III. und der römische Aufstand von 799', Bulletin Du Cange, 30 (1960), pp. 39–98. T. F. X. Noble, The Republic of St Peter: The Birth of the Papal State, 680–825 (Philadelphia, 1984), pp. 184–324 passim. Mann, 2 (1906), pp. 1–110. Fliche and Martin, 6 (1937), pp. 148–203. É. Amann in DTC 9 (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 304–12, s.v. 'Léon III'. See also bibl. to CHARLEMAGNE.

Leo IV, St (d. 855), Pope. A native of Rome, he became cardinal-priest of the titulus of the *Quattro Coronati and in 847 was elected to succeed Sergius II. He at once set about repairing the damage done by the Saracens (846), putting a wall, 40 ft. high, round the part of Rome on the right of the Tiber (henceforward the '*Leonine City'); he restored many churches (*Vatican, *Lateran, St Martin's, Quattro Coronati); and he rebuilt and fortified ravaged cities (Porto, Subiaco). In 850 he crowned Louis, the son of Lothair, as co-Emperor. In 853 he is said to have 'hallowed' the young *Alfred as future King of England. Among those whom he sought to bring under his authority were *Anastasius Bibliothecarius (later antipope), John, Abp. of Ravenna, *Hincmar of Reims, and Nomenoe, Duke of Brittany. He was keenly interested in the liturgical chant and the *Asperges is ascribed to him. A terrible conflagration in the Borgo, said to have been extinguished in answer to Leo's prayers, is the subject of *Raphael's celebrated fresco in the Stanza dell'Incendio in the Vatican. Feast day, 17 July.

Various 'Epistolae et Decreta et Homilia' in J. P. Migne, PL 115. 629–84; frags. of his Register ed. P. Ewald in NA 5 (1879), pp. 375–98, and ed. A. de Hirsch-Gereuth in MGH, Epistolae, 5 (1899), pp. 585–612. LP (Duchesne), 2, pp. 106–39 (Eng. tr., with introd., by R. Davis, Liverpool, 1995, pp. 99–159). L. *Duchesne, Les Premiers Temps de l'état pontifical (2nd edn., 1904), pp. 217–29. Mann, 2 (1906), pp. 258–307. É. Amann in Fliche and Martin, 6 (1931), pp. 281–8. Id. in DTC 9 (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 312–16, s.v. 'Léon IV' with further bibl. J. N. D. Kelly, The Oxford Dictionary of Popes (1986) pp. 104 f.

Leo VI (866–912), generally known as Leo the Philosopher or Leo Sapiens, Byzantine Emperor. Succeeding Basil I in 886, he opened his reign by banishing the Patr. of Constantinople, *Photius, to a monastery and installing his own brother Stephen in his place, thus restoring normal relations with the W. In the disputes that followed his fourth marriage he appealed from the Patriarch, now Nicolas Mysticus, to the Pope, who recognized the validity of the marriage against the Patriarch, whom Leo then deposed in favour of Euthymius I. The extensive writings of the Emperor contain many novellae and other items of ecclesiastical legislation, two homilies attacking the *Double Procession of the Holy Spirit, and hymns and treatises in honour of the BVM.

Collection of his works in J. P. Migne, PG 107; further panegyrics ed. Akakios, monk of Mt *Athos (Athens, 1868); funeral oration of his father ed. A. Vogt and I. Hausherr, SJ (Orientalia Christiana, vol. 26, no. 1 (fasc. 77); 1932); 'Problemata' ed. A. Dain (Paris, 1935). Standard edn. of his Novellae, with Fr. tr., by P. Noailles and A. Dain (ibid., 1944). H. J. W. Tillyard, 'The Morning Hymns of the Emperor Leo', Annual of the British School at Athens, 30 (1932), pp. 86–108; 31 (1933), pp. 115–47, incl. text. J. M. Hussey, The Orthodox Church in the Byzantine Empire (Oxford History of the Christian Church, 1986), pp. 102–8. L. Petit, 'Notes sur les homélies de Léon le Sage', ÉO 2 (1899–1900), pp. 245–9; D. Serruys, 'Les Homélies de Léon le Sage', BZ 12 (1903), pp. 167–70. S. Salaville, AA, in DTC 9 (1926), cols. 365–94, s.v. 'Léon VI le Sage'.

Leo IX, St (1002–54), Pope from 1048. His original name was Bruno. A native of Alsace of noble birth, he was educated at Toul, where he was later successively canon and, from 1026, bishop. Through the influence of the Emp. Henry III, whose favour he had secured, he was elected Pope in 1048, and at once began to reform the Church from its decadence of a century and a half. In his pastoral zeal and personal humility, he did much to foster a wholly new ideal of the Papacy. At the Easter Synod of 1049 *celibacy was enforced on all clergy from the rank of *subdeacon upwards and shortly afterwards Councils were held at Pavia, *Reims, and Mainz, at which decrees were promulgated against *simony and other abuses. In carrying out his programme Leo travelled extensively and was assisted by several able advisers, among them Hildebrand (*Gregory VII), *Humbert, and St *Peter Damian. At the Easter Synod at Rome in 1050, *Berengar of Tours was condemned for his Eucharistic doctrine. The latter years of his pontificate were marred by defeat at the hands of the Normans at Civitate (18 June 1053) and the breach with the E. Church. He has a place in the *Roman Martyrology for 19 Apr.

Contemporary biog. ed. A. Poncelet, 'Vie et miracles du Pape S. Léon IX', Anal. Boll. 25 (1906), pp. 258–97, with further notes ibid. 26 (1907), pp. 302–4. L. Sittler and P. Stintzi, Saint Léon IX: Le Pape alsacien (Colmar [1950]). J. Drehmann, Leo IX und die Simonie (Beiträge zur Kulturgeschichte des Mittelalters, 2; 1908); P. P. Brucker, L'Alsace et l'Église au temps du Pape Saint Léon IX (2 vols., 1889). H. Tritz, CSSR, 'Die hagiographischen Quellen zur Geschichte Papst Leos IX.', Studi Gregoriani, 4 (1952), pp. 191–364. A. Fliche, La Réforme grégorienne, 1 (SSL 6; 1924), pp. 129–59. Mann, 4 (1910), pp. 18–182, with refs. to sources. J. Choux in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 7 (1966), cols. 1292–301, s.v. 'Leone IX'.

Leo X (1475–1521), Pope from 1513. Giovanni de' Medici was the second son of Lorenzo 'the Magnificent'. He was destined early for an ecclesiastical career and created a cardinal in 1489, but not invested with the insignia of office until he had completed three years' study of theology and canon law at Pisa. After the expulsion of his family from Florence in 1494 he led a wandering and almost Bohemian life in Germany, the Netherlands, and France, returning to Rome in 1500. Towards the end of the pontificate of *Julius II, the affairs of the young cardinal began to improve. In 1511 he became legate in *Bologna and the Romagna, and in 1513, at the age of 38, he was elected Pope.

The high hopes which had been placed upon him were soon disappointed. Leo was, indeed, a person of moral life and sincerely religious, but he was pleasure-loving, easy-going, and far too liberal with money and offices. Within two years he had squandered the fortune left by Julius II and was in serious financial embarrassment. In politics, concern for the independence of the Papal states led him to pursue a shifting course. Eventually he concluded a concordat with Francis I of France (in place of the *Pragmatic Sanction of Bourges) which firmly established royal influence over the French Church (1516). He was completely blind to what was involved in the revolt of M. *Luther, whom he excommunicated in 1520. He did, however, continue the Fifth *Lateran Council.

Regesta ed. J. *Hergenröther (2 vols. only, to 16 Oct. 1515; Freiburg i.B., 1884–91). Life by Paolo Giovio, Bp. of Nocera (Florence, 1548). W. Roscoe, The Life and Pontificate of Leo the Tenth (4 vols., 1805). E. Rodocanachi, Le Pontificat de Léon X (1931). F. S. Nitti, Leone X e la sua politica (1892). G. B. Picotti, La giovinezza di Leone X [1928]. G. Truc, Léon X et son siècle (1941). C. L. Mee, Jun., White Robe, Black Pope (1973 [popular]). H. M. Vaughan, The Medici Popes (1908), pp. 1–284. Pastor, 7 and 8 (1908), with full bibl. G. Mollat in DTC 9 (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 329–32, s.v. 'Léon X', with bibl.; G. B. Picotti in EC 7 (1951), cols. 1150–5, s.v. 'Leone X'; J. G. Gallaher in NCE 8 (1967), pp. 643–5, s.v.; G. Simon in TRE 20 (1990), pp. 744–8, s.v. See also bibl. to REFORMATION.

Leo XIII (1810–1903), Pope from 1878. Vincenzo Gioacchino Pecci was a native of Carpineto. He was educated by the *Jesuits of Viterbo and later studied at the 'Academy of Noble Ecclesiastics' in Rome. Ordained priest in 1837, he was sent on a mission to Benevento in the next year. In 1843 he was appointed nuncio to Brussels, where he gained considerable diplomatic experience. On missions to London, *Paris, *Cologne, and many other European cities he became acquainted with modern social questions which were to play an important part in his pontificate. In 1846 *Gregory XVI made him Bp. of Perugia, and in 1853 he was created cardinal by *Pius IX. When, in 1860, Perugia passed under the secular power of Piedmont, the Cardinal opposed the new laws, esp. the suppression of ecclesiastical jurisdiction, the institution of civil marriage, and the spoliation of the religious orders.

After his election to the Papacy in 1878, Leo continued many of the policies of Pius IX, while attempting to bring the Church to terms with modern civilization. This aim, reflected in the programme he outlined in his first encyclical, 'Inscrutabili Dei Concilio' (21 Apr. 1878), determined his attitude towards the great powers. He restored good relations with Germany after the Kulturkampf by procuring the gradual abolition of the *May Laws in 1886 and 1887, and with Belgium after the victory of the Catholic party in 1884. In 1892 he established an Apostolic Delegation in Washington, and he renewed contacts with Russia and Japan. The improvement of relations with Great Britain found expression in King Edward VII's visit to the *Vatican in 1903. His policy failed, however, in the Italian question; the Pope remained the 'Prisoner of the Vatican', and the prohibition of the participation of Catholics in Italian politics was retained. In France, too, relations between Church and State deteriorated, and the Pope's last years were darkened by the increasingly anti-Catholic French legislation, esp. the *Associations Law of 1901.

Leo XIII's pontificate was esp. important for the lead he gave on the burning political and social questions of his time. In some notable encyclicals he developed the Christian doctrine of the State on the basis of St *Thomas Aquinas. In 'Immortale Dei' (1 Nov. 1885) he defined the respective spheres of spiritual and temporal power; 'Libertas Praestantissimum' (20 June 1888) deals with the freedom of citizens, and 'Graves de Communi' (18 Jan. 1901) with Christian democracy. He upheld the dignity and rights of the State, whether monarchy or republic, and emphasized the compatibility of Catholic teaching with a moderate democracy. His most important pronouncement on social questions was the famous '*Rerum Novarum' (q.v.) of 15 May 1891. Among his activities in the doctrinal sphere his injunction of the study of St Thomas Aquinas by '*Aeterni Patris' (q.v.) of 4 Aug. 1879 had far-reaching consequences, leading to a great revival of Thomist studies. In 1883 he opened the Vatican archives to historical research; he encouraged the study of the Bible in the encyclical '*Providentissimus Deus' (18 Nov. 1893) and instituted the *Biblical Commission in 1902. He gave a limited measure of encouragement to the new methods of biblical criticism, which ceased in the pontificate of his successor. His attitude to other Christian Churches is marked by the letter 'Praeclara' of 1894, in which he invited Greeks and Protestants of all shades to unite with Rome; but he rejected the conception of union as a federation of Churches in the encyclical '*Satis Cognitum' of 1896. In his Apostolic Letter 'Ad Anglos' (1895) he encouraged Anglican aspirations to union as promoted by Lord *Halifax and the *English Church Union, and in the same year appointed a commission for the investigation of *Anglican Ordinations. They were rejected as invalid in '*Apostolicae Curae' (1896). Leo XIII promoted the spiritual life of the Church in many encyclicals dealing with the redemptive work of Christ, the Eucharist, and devotion to the BVM and the *Rosary; and he sought to renew the spirit of St *Francis by modifying the rules of the *Third Order in accordance with the requirements of the times. Following a revelation received by Mary von Droste-Vischering, religious of the Good Shepherd of Angers, he consecrated the whole human race to the *Sacred Heart of Jesus in the jubilee year 1900. He also encouraged the work of the missions, esp. the formation of a native clergy. In 1887 he condemned 40 propositions from the works of A. *Rosmini contradicting the doctrine of St Thomas, and in 1899 he censured in 'Testem Benevolentiae' the teaching known as '*Americanism'.

Acta (22 vols., index and appendix, Rome, 1881–1905); Allocutiones, Epistolae, Constitutiones, aliaque Acta Praecipua (8 vols., Bruges, 1887–1910). Carmina, Inscriptiones, Numismata, ed. J. Bach (Cologne, 1903). The basic Life is that of C. de t'Serclaes (3 vols., Bruges, 1894–1906). The many others incl. those by M. Spahn (Munich, 1905), F. Hayward (Paris, 1937), and L. P. Wallace (Durham, NC, 1966). E. Soderini, Il pontificato di Leone XIII (3 vols., Milan [1932–3]; Eng. tr. of vols. 1 and 2, 1934–5). E. Lecanuet, La Vie de l'Église sous Léon XIII (1930). G. Rossini (ed.), Aspetti della cultura cattolica nell'età di Leone XIII: Atti del convegno tenuto a Bologna il 27, 28, 29 dicembre 1960 (1961). E. T. Gargan (ed.), Leo XIII and the Modern World (New York [1961]). G. Jarlot, SJ, Doctrine pontificale et histoire: L'Enseignement social de Léon XIII, Pie X et Benoît XV vu dans son ambiance historique (Studia Socialia, 9; 1964), pp. 17–257. R. F. Esposito, SSP, Leone XIII et l'oriente cristiano [1960]. V. C. Orti, Leon XIII y los Catolicos Españoles: Informes vaticanos sobre la Iglesia en España (Pamplona, 1988). G. Goyau in DTC 9 (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 334–59, s.v. 'Léon XIII'; J. M. Mayeur in NCE 8 (1967), pp. 646–9, s.v.; R. Aubert in TRE 20 (1990), pp. 748–53, s.v., all with bibl. See also bibl. to ANGLICAN ORDINATIONS.

Leodegar, Ledger, or Leger, St (*c.*616–678/9), Bp. of Autun. Of noble Neustrian family (his brother was Count of Paris), he was trained at the royal court and at the age of 20 made an archdeacon by his uncle, Bp. Dido of Poitiers; in 653 he became Abbot of St Maxentius. Through the patronage of Queen Balthild, he was raised to the bishopric of Autun in 663 after rival factions of aristocrats had quarrelled over it. As bishop he presided over a Council of Autun (the date is not known) which recommended the use of the Rule of St *Benedict in all monasteries of his diocese (which had previously followed a wide variety of rules) and insisted that his clergy should know by heart the Quicumque Vult (*Athanasian Creed); the canones Augustodunenses are thought to have been produced under his aegis. After the death of Clothar III in 673 Leodegar, a champion of royal power, was bitterly opposed by the Neustrian Mayor of the Palace Ebroin. Ebroin defeated Leodegar, who was tortured and killed on 3 Oct. 678 or 679. Though killed in a political cause he was soon regarded as a saint and martyr, and his cultus became popular throughout France. Feast day, 2 (occasionally 3) Oct.

The earliest Life, written *c.*690 by a monk of St Symphorian of Autun, was reconstructed by B. Krusch in MGH, Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, 5 (1910), pp. 282–322. Two later Lives, of the 8th and 11th cents., pr. in AASS, Oct. 1 (1765), pp. 355–491 and by B. Krusch, op. cit., pp. 323–62. All three Lives are repr. from Krusch's edn. in CCSL 117 (1957), pp. 519–644. The Passio Praeiecti, ed. B. Krusch in MGH, loc. cit, pp. 226–48, also contains valuable information on Leodegar as one of Praejectus' chief opponents.

J.-C. Poulin, 'Saint Léger d'Autun et ses premiers biographes', Bulletin de la Société des Antiquaires de l'Ouest et des Musées de Poitiers, 4th ser. 14 (1977–8), pp. 167–200, with refs. R. A. Gerberding, The Rise of the Carolingians and the Liber Historiae Francorum (Oxford Historical Monographs, 1987), pp. 69–78. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 8 (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 2460–92, s.v. 'Léger'.

León, Luis de (1527/8–91), Spanish theologian and poet. Of prosperous Castilian family, he made his profession as an *Augustinian Hermit at Salamanca in 1544. He studied there and at Alcalá before becoming a professor at Salamanca in 1561. Here both St *John of the Cross and F. *Suárez were among his pupils. In 1572 he was denounced to the *Inquisition and imprisoned, accused of undermining the authority of the *Vulgate by preferring the Hebrew OT. He encountered strong *Dominican antagonism, led by Bartolomé *Medina. He was, however, vindicated of all charges, released late in 1576, and returned to his teaching in Salamanca. In 1579 he was elected to the professorship of biblical studies there.

Luis de León is one of the greatest lyric poets of Spain, and his harmonious polished prose style brought a new richness and beauty to the language. He wrote Latin commentaries on the Song of Solomon (the most important, the Triplex Explanatio was pub. in 1589) and on other Books of the Bible; his Spanish exposition of Job was not published until 1779. His treatise on the duties of a Christian wife, La Perfecta Casada (1583) has remained a classic, but his devotional masterpiece is De los Nombres de Cristo (1583–95), a dialogue on some of the Scriptural names of Christ in which he expounds the Lord's universal ministry of reconciliation. In 1588 he edited the works of St *Teresa of Ávila.

His poetry was first pub. posthumously by F. de Quevedo (Madrid, 1631), Modern edns. of his Lat. Opera, ed. M. Gutiérrez, OSA (7 vols., Salamanca, 1891–5) and of his Span. Obras completas castellanas, ed. F. García, OSA (Biblioteca de Autores Cristianos, 4–5; 1944). Eng. tr. of his Poems by W. Barnstone (Albany, NY, 1979) and of the Nombres by M. Durán and W. Kluback (Classics of Western Spirituality, 1984). A. F. G. Bell, Luis de Leon (Oxford, 1925); M. Durán, Luis de León (New York, 1971). A. Guy, La Pensée de Fray Luis de León (Limoges, 1943); S. Muñoz Iglesias, Fray Luis de León, Teólogo (1950); R. J. Welch, OSA, Introduction to the Spiritual Doctrine of Fray Luis de León (Washington, DC, 1951); K. A. Kottman, Law and Apocalypse: The Moral Thought of Luis de Leon (International Archives of the History of Ideas, 44; 1972), with useful bibl. C. P. Thompson, The Strife of Tongues: Fray Luis de León and the Golden Age of Spain (Cambridge, 1988). R. Lazcano González, 'Fray Luis de León Bibliografía', Revista Agustiniana, 31 (1990), pp. 3–278 (also issued separately, Madrid, 1990). D. Gutiérrez, ESA, in Dict. Sp. 9 (1976), cols. 634–43, s.v.

Leonard, St (6th cent.), hermit. Despite his great popularity in the Middle Ages, nothing was heard of him before the 11th cent. Acc. to the Vita (*c.*1050), he was a Frankish nobleman of the court of King *Clovis, whom St *Remigius converted to Christianity. He lived in a cell at Noblac, nr. Limoges, and later founded a monastery. His cult spread in the 12th cent. to England, France, Italy, and Germany, and many churches were dedicated to him. He is the special patron of prisoners and also of peasants, the sick, and horses. Feast day, 6 Nov.

Excerpts of the Vita ed. B. Krusch in MGH, Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, 3 (1896), pp. 394–9; full text in AASS, Nov. 3 (1910), pp. 149–55, with comm. by A. Poncelet, SJ, pp. 139–49, and other material pp. 155–209. [F.] Arbellot, Vie de saint Léonard, solitaire en Limousin, ses miracles et son culte (1883). J. A. Aich, Leonard, der grosse Patron des Volkes (Vienna, 1928). G. Kapfhammer, St Leonhard zu Ehren: Vom Patron der Pferde. Von Wundern und Verehrung. Von Leonhardifahrten und Kettenkirchen (Rosenheim, 1977). B. Cignitti and C. Colafrancheschi in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 7 (1966), cols. 1198–208, s.v. 'Leonardo', with bibl.

Leonardo da Vinci (1452–1519), Italian painter and scholar. The natural son of a Florentine notary and a peasant woman, he became a pupil of A. del Verrocchio at Florence, where he stayed till 1482. From 1483 to 1499 he lived at Milan, and during this period executed some of his best-known works, among them the Virgin of the Rocks and the Last Supper (1495–8), the latter done on the refectory wall of the *Dominican convent of Sta Maria delle Grazie. The originality of the Last Supper lay in that it depicted not the institution of the Eucharist but the moment of the announcement of the betrayal, the quiet superiority of the sublime figure of Christ dominating a scene filled with human emotions and agitation. When the French invaded Milan (1499), Leonardo left and began to lead a nomadic life mainly devoted to scientific and scholarly work. In this he covered an enormous field of knowledge, and made creative contributions to such different branches as geological research and the construction of guns and even air-machines. To this period belong his St Anne, Mona Lisa, and St John the Baptist. In 1517 he went to France, where he died. With his complete mastery of technique, Leonardo introduced the style of the High Renaissance.

Reproductions of his pictures (in black and white) ed. H. Bodmer (Klassiker der Kunst in Gesamtausgaben, 37 [1931]); smaller collection of reproductions (incl. some colour plates) ed. L. Goldscheider (London, 1943; 7th edn., 1964). Drawings ed., with introd. and notes, by A. E. Popham (ibid., 1946). K. [M.] Clark, A Catalogue of the Drawings of Leonardo da Vinci in the Collection of his Majesty the King at Windsor Castle (2 vols., with reproductions, 1935; 2nd edn., with the assistance of C. Pedretti, 3 vols., 1969). Leonardo da Vinci on the Human Body: The Anatomical, physiological, and embryological drawings, with Eng. tr. and biog. introd. by C. D. O'Malley and J. B. de C. M. Saunders (New York [1952]). K. D. Keele and C. Pedretti, Leonardo da Vinci: Corpus of the Anatomical Studies in the Collection of Her Majesty the Queen at Windsor Castle (2 vols. + box of plates, 1978–80). Literary Works, with Eng. tr., ed. J. P. Richter (London, 1883; 3rd edn., 2 vols., 1970); comm. by C. Pedretti (2 vols., Oxford, 1977). Facsimile reproduction of his MSS, with transcription and Fr. tr., by C. Ravaisson-Mollien (6 vols., Paris, 1881–91). Eng. tr. of Selections from his Notebooks, ed. I. A. Richter (World's Classics, 530; 1952; repr., Oxford, 1977). Eng. tr. of his Treatise on Painting, with facsimile of MS, by A. P. McMahon (2 vols., Princeton, NJ, 1956). General studies incl. E. McCurdy (London, 1928), K. [M.] Clark (Ryerson Lectures for 1936; Cambridge, 1939; 2nd edn., 1952; rev. by M. [J.] Kemp, 1988), L. H. Heydenreich (Berlin, 1943; rev. edn., 2 vols., Basle [1953]; Eng. tr., 1954), M. [J.] Kemp (London, etc., 1981), with useful bibl., and S. Bramly (Paris, 1988; Eng. tr., New York, 1991; London, 1992). E. Solmi, Scritti vinciani (1924). I. B. Hart, The Mechanical Investigations of Leonardo da Vinci (1925; 2nd edn., Berkeley and Los Angeles, Calif., 1963). C. D. O'Malley (ed.), Leonardo's Legacy: An International Symposium (ibid., 1969). C. Pedretti, Leonardo: A Study in Chronology and Style (ibid., 1973); id., Leonardo architetto ([1978]; Eng. tr., 1986). L. H. Heydenreich, Leonardo: The Last Supper (1974). C. [H. M.] Gould, Leonardo the Artist and the Non-Artist (1975). E. Winternitz, Leonardo da Vinci as a Musician [1982]. M. Guerrini, Bibliotheca Leonardiana 1493–1989 (3 vols., Milan [1990]).

Leonine City (Lat. Civitas Leonina; Ital. Città Leonina). The part of Rome on the right bank of the Tiber, fortified with a wall by Pope *Leo IV in 848–52. Besides the *Vatican, it contains the Castello S. Angelo.

Leonine Prayers. In the Roman rite, the prayers which, until 1964, were recited in the vernacular by priest and people at the end of Mass. Their ultimate form (three 'Hail Mary's, the Salve Regina*, a collect Deus refugium nostrum, an invocation of St *Michael) went back to *Leo XIII. In 1859 Pius IX had introduced for local use similar prayers for the preservation of the Papal States, which continued to be said even after the end of the temporal power in 1870; in 1884 Leo XIII extended their use to the whole world, with special reference to the last stages of the Kulturkampf; and in 1886 he reissued them in a revised form, adding the invocation of St Michael. A final optional petition ('Most Sacred Heart of Jesus, have mercy on us', three times) was added by *Pius X in 1904. After the signing of the *Lateran Treaty (1929), *Pius XI directed that they should be said on behalf of the Church in Russia, but when they had come to be omitted on an increasing number of occasions, they were suppressed on 26 Sept. 1964.

Jungmann (1958 edn.), 2, pp. 565–70; Eng. tr., 2, pp. 455–9.

Leonine Sacramentary. The earliest surviving book of *Mass prayers acc. to the Roman rite. It exists in a single MS of the early 7th cent., preserved in the Chapter Library at *Verona (cod. lxxxv), and was first published in 1735 by J. Bianchini. Its attribution to Pope *Leo I (d. 461) is quite arbitrary, though certain of its prayers may well be Leo's compositions. It is not a *sacramentary in the proper sense, but a private collection of *libelli; it drew on Roman material of the 5th or 6th cent., but was put together outside Rome. It possesses no *Ordinary or *Canon of the Mass, and contains only the variable parts of the liturgy. It is arranged according to the civil year, but three quires at the beginning (covering 1 Jan.–14 Apr.) are lost.

J. Bianchini, Vitae Romanorum Pontificum, 4 (1735), pp. xii–lvii. Text also ed. P. and H. *Ballerini, S. Leonis Opera, 2 (Venice, 1756, cols. 1–160, repr. J. P. Migne, PL 55. 21–156); C. L. Feltoe (Cambridge, 1896); and L. C. Mohlberg, OSB, and others, Sacramentarium Veronense (Rerum Ecclesiasticarum Documenta, Series Maior, Fontes, 1; Rome, 1955). P. Bruylants, 'Concordance verbale du sacramentaire léonien', Archivum Latinitatis Medii Aevi, nos. 18–19 (Brussels, 1945–8). Fundamental is A. Stuiber, Libelli Sacramentorum Romani (Theophaneia, 6; Bonn, 1950). D. M. Hope, The Leonine Sacramentary: A Reassessment of its Nature and Purpose (Oxford Theological Monographs, 1971). B. *Capelle, OSB, 'Messes du pape S. Gélase dans le sacramentaire léonien', R. Bén. 56 (1945–6), pp. 12–41; id., 'Retouches gélasiennes dans le sacramentaire léonien', ibid. 61 (1951), pp. 3–14; C. Callewaert, 'Saint Léon le Grand et les textes du Léonien', Sacris Erudiri, 1 (1948), pp. 35–132; C. Coebergh, OSB, 'S. Gélase I^er^, auteur principal du soi-disant sacramentaire léonien', EL 64 (1950), pp. 214–37, and 65 (1951), pp. 171–81; E. Dekkers, OSB, 'Autour de l'œuvre liturgique de S. Léon le Grand', Sacris Erudiri, 10 (1958), pp. 363–98; A. Chavasse, 'Le Sacramentaire, dit léonien, conservé par le Veronensis LXXXV (80)', ibid. 27 (1984), pp. 151–90. Vogel, Sources, pp. 38–46, with notes pp. 55–9. F. *Cabrol, OSB, in DACL 8 (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 2549–73.

Leontius of Byzantium (6th cent.), anti-*Monophysite theologian. He is prob. to be distinguished from the Scythian monk of the same name who took a prominent part in the *Theopaschite controversy and with whom he was formerly identified; on the other hand he seems to be the same person as the *Origenist Leontius mentioned in *Cyril of Scythopolis' 'Vita S. Sabae', though what his Origenism amounted to is much disputed. Despite his theological importance, virtually nothing is known of his life. He was a staunch upholder of the *Chalcedonian Christology, introducing the notion of the *Enhypostasia (q.v.). In his polemic he made full use of contemporary philosophy (*Aristotelianism in logic, *Neoplatonism in psychology). His chief theological work is his 'Libri III contra Nestorianos et Eutychianos' (*c.*543–4), of which Book 2 took the form of a dialogue between an Orthodox and an *Aphthartodocetist, and Book 3 is directed esp. against *Theodore of Mopsuestia. He also wrote two works against *Severus of Antioch ('Solutio Argumentorum Severi' and 'Triginta Capita adversus Nestorium'). There is much dispute as to whether he is the author of 'Adversus Fraudes Apollinistarum', a work of considerable critical acumen on the forgeries of the *Apollinarians (q.v.). Of other works traditionally ascribed to him the 'De Sectis' (also attributed to *Theodore of Raïthu) is prob. not his, while the 'Contra Nestorianos' and 'Contra Monophysitas' are now assigned to *Leontius of Jerusalem (q.v.).

Works in J. P. Migne, PG 86. 1185–2016. F. *Loofs, Leontius von Byzanz und die gleichnamigen Schriftsteller der griechischen Kirche (TU 3, Hefte 1–2; 1887); J. P. Junglas, Leontius von Byzanz (Paderborn, 1908). M. Richard, 'Léonce de Byzance était-il Origéniste?', Revue des Études Byzantines, 5 (1947), pp. 31–66, repr.

in his Opera Minora, 2 (Turnhout and Louvain, 1977), no. 57; B. *Altaner, 'Der griechische Theologe Leontius und Leontius der skythische Mönch', Th.Q. 127 (1947), pp. 147–65, repr. in his Kleine Patristische Schriften (TU 83; 1967), pp. 375–91. S. Rees, 'The Literary Activity of Leontius of Byzantium', JTS NS 19 (1968), pp. 229–42. S. Otto, Person und Subsistenz: Die philosophische Anthropologie des Leontios von Byzanz. Ein Beitrag zur spätantiken Geistesgeschichte (Munich, 1968). D. B. Evans, Leontius of Byzantium: An Origenist Christology (Dumbarton Oaks Studies, 13; 1970). B. Daley, 'The Origenism of Leontius of Byzantium', JTS NS 27 (1976), pp. 333–69; id., ' "A Richer Union": Leontius of Byzantium and the Relationship of the Human and Divine in Christ', in E. A. Livingstone (ed.), Studia Patristica, 24 (1993), pp. 239–65. A. Grillmeier, SJ, Jesus der Christus im Glauben der Kirche, 2 (pt. 2; Freiburg, etc., 1989), pp. 190–241; Eng. tr. (1995), pp. 181–229. CPG 3 (1979), pp. 293–5 (nos. 6813–23). Beck (1959), pp. 373 f. V. Grumel, AA, in DTC 9 (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 400–26 [excellent for its period, but superseded in detail]; L. Perrone in DPAC 2 (1984), cols. 1928–30, s.v. 'Leonzio di Bisanzio'; Eng. tr., Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 1 (1992), pp. 480 f.

On the 'De Sectis', M. Richard, 'Le Traité "De Sectis" et Léonce de Byzance', RHE 35 (1939), pp. 695–723, repr. in his Opera Minora, 2 (Turnhout and Louvain, 1977), no. 55; J. Speigl, 'Der Autor der Schrift De Sectis über die Konzilien und die Religionspolitik Justinians', Annuarium Historiae Conciliorum, 2 (1970), pp. 207–30; M. van Esbroeck, SJ, 'La Date et l'Auteur du De Sectis attribué à Léonce de Byzance', in After Chalcedon: Studies in Theology and Church History offered to Professor Albert van Roey, ed. C. Laga and others (Orientalia Lovaniensia Analecta, 18; Louvain, 1985), pp. 415–24.

Leontius of Jerusalem (6th cent.). The name given by modern scholars to the author of the treatises Contra Monophysitas and Contra Nestorianos, formerly ascribed to *Leontius of Byzantium. He may have been the monk Leontius who took part in the discussions with the supporters of *Severus of Antioch in 532 and in a Council of Constantinople in 536. His Christology was 'neo-Chalcedonian', i.e. he interpreted the teaching of that Council in the light of the doctrine and language of St *Cyril of Alexandria.

The Contra Monophysitas and Contra Nestorianos are repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 86. 1399–902. M. Richard, 'Léonce de Jérusalem et Léonce de Byzance', Mélanges de Science Religieuse, 1 (1944), pp. 35–88, repr. in his Opera Minora, 3 (Turnhout and Louvain, 1977), no. 59; C. Moeller, 'Textes "Monophysites" de Léonce de Jérusalem', Ephemerides Theologicae Lovanienses, 27 (1951), pp. 467–82; P. T. R. Gray, The Defence of Chalcedon in the East (451–553) (Studies in the History of Christian Thought, 20; Leiden, 1979), pp. 122–41. A. Grillmeier, SJ, Jesus der Christus im Glauben der Kirche, 2 (pt. 2; Freiburg, etc., 1989), pp. 286–328; Eng. tr. (1995), pp. 271–312. CPG 3 (1979), p. 309 (nos. 6917 f.). Beck (1959), p. 379. L. Perrone in DPAC 2 (1984), cols. 1931–3, s.v. 'Leonzio di Gerusalemme'; Eng. tr., Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 1 (1992), p. 481, s.v.

Lepanto, Battle of. The naval battle, fought on 7 Oct. 1571, in which the 'Christian League' created chiefly by the efforts of *Pius V between Venice and Spain, with help from the Papal states and Genoa, decisively beat the Turks, who were threatening W. Christendom. Lepanto, on the N. entrance to the Gulf of Corinth, is the ancient Naupactos. In thanksgiving for the victory, the Pope instituted a special feast of the BVM on 7 Oct., which since 1573 has been kept as the feast of the *Rosary (q.v.).

Leporius (early 5th cent.), monk and then (by 430) priest. Perhaps a native of Trier, he issued a letter (no longer extant) in which he emphasized the distinction of the two natures in Christ at the expense of the unity of His person. Rebuked by his superiors in S. Gaul, he went to Africa, where he came into contact with St *Augustine (Aug., Ep. 219) and in 418 publicly confessed his error at Carthage in a 'Libellus Emendationis' subscribed by *Aurelius, Bp. of Carthage, and by Augustine. John *Cassian presented him as a doctrinal forerunner of *Nestorius and, less justifiably, as a sympathizer of *Pelagius. His 'Libellus' was frequently cited by later theologians for its Christological formulae.

'Libellus' first pub. by J. *Sirmond, SJ, Opuscula Dogmatica Veterum Quinque Scriptorum (Paris, 1630), pp. 1–34; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 31. 1221–30. Crit. edn. by R. Demeulenaere (CCSL 64; 1985, pp. 95–123), with introd. [in Fr.] and bibl. A. Grillmeier [SJ], Jesus der Christus im Glauben der Kirche, 1 (1979), pp. 661–5; Eng. tr. of an earlier recension of this work, Christ in Christian Tradition, 1 (2nd edn., 1975), pp. 464–7. A. Mandouze, Prosopographie Chrétienne du Bas-Empire, 1: Prosopographie de l'Afrique Chrétienne (303–533) (1982), pp. 634 f. A. Hamman in Quasten (cont), Patrology, 4 (1986), pp. 524 f. É. Amann in DTC 9 (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 434–40.

Le Quien, Michel (1661–1733), patristic scholar. In 1681 he entered the Dominican Order at Paris, where he spent most of his life. His two principal works were (1) Oriens Christianus (published posthumously [1740] in 3 vols.), in which he collected a vast amount of material on the history of the E. Churches, and (2) his edition of the works of St *John of Damascus (1712). His other writings included La Nullité des ordinations anglicanes (2 vols., 1725) and La Nullité des ordinations anglicanes démontrée de nouveau (2 vols., 1730), both in answer to P. *Courayer's book on the subject.

Quétif and Échard, 2 (1721), pp. 808–10. S. Salaville, AA, 'II[e] Centenaire de Michel Le Quien', ÉO 32 (1933), pp. 257–66. J. Carreyre in DTC 9 (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 441–3, s.v., with bibl.

Lérins. The ancient name of two islands off Cannes in the Mediterranean, on the smaller of which (formerly 'Lerinum', now 'St-Honorat') a celebrated abbey was founded by St *Honoratus *c.*410. It was the nursery of a long line of scholars and bishops, among them St *Hilary of Arles, St *Vincent (author of the Commonitorium), St *Lupus (Bp. of Troyes), St *Eucherius (Bp. of Lyons), St *Faustus of Riez, and St *Caesarius of Arles. Its religious history continued unbroken down to 1788, when it was secularized. Since 1871 a *Cistercian convent has been re-established on the island.

H. Moris, L'Abbaye de Lérins: Histoire et monuments (1909); A. C. Cooper-Marsdin, The History of the Islands of the Lerins (Cambridge, 1913; uncritical); L. Cristiani, Lérins et ses fondateurs (Abbaye S. Wandrille, 1946). S. Pricoco, L'Isola dei Santi: Il Cenobio di Lerins e le origini del monachesimo gallico (Filologia e Critica, 23; 1978). V. Barralis, Chronologia Sanctorum et aliorum Virorum illustrium ac Abbatum Sacrae Insulae Lerinensis (Lyons, 1613). 'Cartulary' of Lérins, ed. H. Moris and E. Blanc (2 vols., Paris, 1883–1905); reconstructed 'Bullarium', ed. L. H. Labande in Annales de la Société des Lettres, Sciences et Arts des Alpes Maritimes, 24 (1922–3), pp. 117–98. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 8 (pt. 2, 1929), cols. 2596–627, with full bibl.; F. Prinz in DIP 5 (1978), cols. 609–23, s.v.

Leslie, Charles (1650–1722), *Nonjuring divine and controversialist. After studying law at *Trinity College, Dublin, he was ordained in 1680 and presented to the chancellorship of Connor. Refusal to take the oaths after the Revolution of 1688 deprived him of his benefice, and in 1689 he withdrew to London. His most celebrated production was an attack on the *Deist philosophy, A Short and Easy Method with the Deists (1698; many later editions and translations). His other works included Gallienus Redivivus (1695), an important historical authority for the Glencoe massacre; The Snake in the Grass (1696), against the *Quakers; and The Case of the Regale and of the Pontificat (1700), an assertion of the divine and inherent rights of the Church. He was also an influential proponent of the patriarchal theories of government derived from Sir Robert Filmer, and developed similar views in his periodical The Rehearsal (1704–9). In 1710 a warrant for his arrest was issued on the grounds of his Jacobitism, and in 1711 he escaped to join the Stuart Court in exile at St Germains. He followed the Pretender to Bar-le-Duc, Avignon, and Rome, while maintaining his loyalty to the C of E, which found expression in The Case Stated between the Church of Rome and the Church of England (1713). He returned to Ireland in 1721.

Collected edn. of his Theological Works (2 vols., London, 1721); fuller edn. (7 vols., Oxford, 1832), with Life from Biographia Britannica and list of other works, vol. 1, pp. i–xii. R. J. Leslie, Life and Writings of Charles Leslie (1885). J. A. W. Gunn, Beyond Liberty and Property: The Process of Self-Recognition in Eighteenth Century Political Thought (Kingston, Ont., and Montreal, 1983), pp. 132–6. J. M. Rigg in DNB 33 (1893), pp. 77–83.

Leslie, John (1527–96), Bp. of Ross. Born at Kingussie, south of Inverness, he studied at Aberdeen, *Paris, and Poitiers. Returning to Scotland in 1554, he strongly opposed the introduction of the Reformation and in 1561 he took part in a disputation at Edinburgh with J. *Knox and John Willock (d. 1585). In 1562 he was appointed professor of canon law at Aberdeen and in 1566 Bp. of Ross. A strong supporter of *Mary, Queen of Scots, he became her ambassador to *Elizabeth I in 1569. In 1571 he was imprisoned for assisting Mary in her projected marriage to the Duke of Norfolk, but was set free in 1573 on condition that he left the country. Proceeding to Paris and Rome he tried to arrange the capture and Catholic education of the young James VI (later *James I of England) and to further other plans in the Catholic interest. In 1578 he published at Rome his De Origine, Moribus, et Rebus Gestis Scotorum, which had been partly written originally in Scots and intended for Queen Mary. The latter part is an important authority for contemporary history. In 1579 he was appointed suffragan bishop and Vicar General of Rouen, and in 1593 Bp. of Coutances; but unable to reach his diocese he spent his last years with the *Augustinian Canons at Guirtenburg, near Brussels.

Contemporary Eng. version of the latter part of his De Origine, Moribus et Rebus Gestis Scotorum, from the reign of James II (1436), ed. for the Bannatyne Club, 39 (1830); a Scots version of the history made by Fr. James Dalrymple in 1596, ed. E. G. Cody, OSB, for the Scottish Text Society (2 vols., 1888–95). His 'Narrative of the Progress of Events in Scotland, 1562–1571', is also pr. in W. Forbes-Leith, SJ (ed.), Narratives of Scottish Catholics under Mary Stuart and James VI (1885), pp. 85–126; a letter from him to Cardinal de Cosmo (June 1579), ibid., pp. 134–40. His Diary from 11 Apr. to 16 Oct. 1571 in The Bannatyne Miscellany, 3 (1855), pp. 111–56. Short Life pr. Brussels, 1596, repr. in J. Anderson (ed.), Collections Relating to the History of Mary Queen of Scotland, 1 (1727), pp. 1–19; Eng. tr. in vol. 3 (1727), pp. vii–xx. Pre-1641 edns. of his works listed in A. F. Allison and D. M. Rogers, 'A Catalogue of Catholic Books in English . . .', Biographical Studies, 3 (1956), pp. 214 f. (nos. 451–5), and idd., The Contemporary Printed Literature of the English Counter-Reformation, 1 (Aldershot, 1989), pp. 99–101 (nos. 719–35). T. F. Henderson in DNB 33 (1893), pp. 93–9.

Lesser Entrance. See LITTLE ENTRANCE.

Lesser Ministries. See MINOR ORDERS.

Lessing, Gotthold Ephraim (1729–81), one of the principal figures of the *Enlightenment. As the eldest son of a *Lutheran pastor he was intended to study theology, but soon took up a literary career and made himself a name as a drama and art critic and as a playwright. In his later years he was chiefly concerned with theological and philosophical problems, his interest receiving a strong stimulus from the fragments of H. S. *Reimarus which Lessing edited (1774–8). He saw the essence of religion in a purely humanitarian morality independent of all historical revelation, and embodied his views in the principal figure of the play Nathan der Weise (1779), an ideal Jew of serene tolerance, benevolence, and generosity, conceived on the lines of enlightened rationalism. His chief theoretical writings on the same subject are Ernst und Falk (1778–80) and Die Erziehung des Menschengeschlechts (1780), in which he laid the foundations of the Protestant Liberalism that was to hold sway in Germany throughout the 19th cent. He rejected Christianity as an historical religion on the ground that 'the accidental truths of history can never become the proof of necessary truths of reason', and that the disinterested search for truth was intrinsically preferable to its possession.

Besides publishing the remains of Reimarus, the so-called Wolfenbüttel Fragments* (7 parts, 1774–8, q.v.), Lessing himself made original studies in Gospel origins. In his Neue Hypothese über die Evangelisten als blosse menschliche Geschichtsschreiber betrachtet (1788) he argued that an Aramaic original underlay St *Matthew's Gospel, and that this was known to, and supplemented by, Mk. and Lk. He also discovered, in 1770, an incomplete MS of *Berengar's famous treatise on the *Eucharist, the text of which was first published by A. F. and F. T. Vischer in 1834.

Collected edns. of Lessing's works incl. those by K. *Lachmann (13 vols., Berlin, 1838–40), F. Muncker (23 vols., Stuttgart, 1886–1924), J. Petersen and W. von Olshausen (25 vols., Berlin, 1925–9, incl., as vols. 20–3, the 2nd edn. of his 'Theological Writings' ed. L. Zscharnack, 4 vols., ibid., 1929), and H. G. Göpfert and others (8 vols., Darmstadt, 1970–79). Eng. tr. of selected Theological Writings by H. Chadwick (1956), with introd. pp. 9–49. Lives by C. G. Lessing (3 vols., Berlin, 1793–5) and E. Schmidt (2 vols., ibid., 1884–92). Lives in Eng. by J. Sime (2 vols., London, 1877), H. Zimmern (ibid., 1878), and T. W. Rolleston (ibid., 1889; repr., 1972). W. Oehlke, Lessing und seine Zeit (2 vols., 1919). H. B. Garland, Lessing: The Founder of Modern German Literature (Cambridge, 1937; 2nd edn., London, 1962). E. H. Gombrich, 'Lessing', Proceedings of the British Academy, 43 (1957), pp. 133–56. H. E. Allison, Lessing and the Enlightenment: His Philosophy of History and its Relation to Eighteenth-Century

Thought (Ann Arbor, Mich., 1966). F. J. Lamport, Lessing and the Drama (Oxford, 1981). E. M. Batley, Catalyst of Englightenment: Gotthold Ephraem Lessing (Berne, etc. [1990]). F. *Loofs, Lessings Stellung zum Christentum (Lecture before Univ. of Halle, 1910, with bibl.). E. Zeller, 'Lessing als Theolog', HZ 23 (1870), pp. 342–83; repr. in Zeller's Vorträge und Abhandlungen, 2 (1877), pp. 283–327. K. Aner, Die Theologie der Lessingzeit (Halle, 1929). A. Cozzi, Lessing teologo (Naples, 1960). A. Schilson, Geschichte im Horizont der Vorsehung: G. E. Lessings Beitrag zu einer Theologie der Geschichte (Tübinger theologische Studien, 3; 1974). L. P. Wessell, G. E. Lessing's Theology: A Reinterpretation (The Hague and Paris [1977]). J. von Lüpke, Wege der Weisheit: Studien zu Lessings Theologiekritik (Göttinger theologische Arbeiten, 41, 1989). S. Seifert, Lessing-Bibliographie (1973); D. Kuhles, Lessing-Bibliographie 1971–1985 (1988). H. Chadwick in P. Edwards (ed.), Encyclopedia of Philosophy, 4 (1967), pp. 443–6, s.v.

Lessius, Leonhard (1554–1623), *Jesuit theologian. A native of Brecht, near Antwerp, he taught philosophy at *Douai from 1574 to 1581 and at Louvain from 1585 to 1600, and studied for a time under F. *Suárez at Rome. Among his pupils was *Cornelius a Lapide. He took a prominent part in the controversies then raging on the nature of grace (see DE AUXILIIS), defending a position closely akin to that of L. *Molina, with the result that in 1587 M. *Baius secured the censure by the Louvain Theological Faculty of 34 theses taken from his writings. His principal work on the subject of grace was his De gratia efficaci (Antwerp, 1610). He also wrote extensively on moral theology, his De justitia et jure (1605) being one of the earliest treatises to investigate the ethics of economics.

Opuscula Varia (Paris, 1626). Texts on Holy Scripture from various sources collected and ed. by A. M. Artola, CP (Biblica Victoriensia, 1; 1974). Works listed in Sommervogel, 4 (1893), cols. 1726–51, and 9 (1900), cols. 588 f.; Polgár, 2 (1990), pp. 406–11. L. Scotts, De Vita et Moribus R. P. Leonardi Lessii Liber (Paris, 1644). K. van Sull, SJ, Leonardus Lessius, 1554–1623 (Wetteren, 1923; French edn., Museum Lessianum, Section théologique, 21; 1930). A. Ampe, SJ, 'Marginalia Lessiana', Ons Geestelijk Erf, 28 (1954), pp. 329–73; 29 (1955), pp. 5–29, with summary in Lat.; L. Ceyssens, OFM, 'Marginalia Lessio-Janseniana', Bijdragen tot de Geschiedenis, 3[e] Reeks, 10 (1958), pp. 95–142 [in Fr.]. J. de Ghellinck, SJ, in CE 9 (1910), pp. 192 f.

Letters Commendatory. The document issued by an ecclesiastical superior to one of his clerical subjects when travelling, testifying that he is of irreproachable morals and doctrine.

Letters Dimissory. In the C of E the licence which the bishop of a diocese where a candidate for Holy Orders has his title issues to the bishop of another diocese to perform the ministerial act of ordination when the former bishop finds it inconvenient or impossible to ordain the candidate. By Canon C 5 of the 1969 Canons, the bishop who ordains must require the production of such letters from the candidate. They are to be distinguished from 'Letters of Request', which ask the ordaining bishop to examine as well as to ordain the candidate. The practice of providing a candidate with such Letters directed to 'any bishop' (literae dimissoriae ad omnes) was formerly common, despite the abuse to which it was open; and, though now obsolete, it still appears to be legal. During the vacancy of a see the issue of such Letters is vested in the *guardian of the spiritualities.

Letters of Business. The document issued by the Crown from time to time since the reign of *Anne to the English *Convocations permitting them to prepare canons on a prescribed subject. Without these Letters any such action was of doubtful legality. The Letters did not dispense the Convocations from the necessity of obtaining a further licence before any canons so prepared might be enacted. Canons are now made by the General *Synod and Letters of Business are no longer required.

Letters of Orders. A certificate issued to those who have been ordained, bearing the seal and signature of the officiating bishop. The C of E Canon C 10 of the 1969 Canons requires that 'Letters of Orders or other sufficient evidence' of ordination be shown to the bishop before *institution to a benefice, except when the presentee was ordained by the instituting bishop. Formerly Letters of Orders were the normal means of proving a claim to *Benefit of Clergy.

Letters Testimonial. The certificate of 'good life and conversation from three priests, of whom one at least must be beneficed' and from 'any college or hall in any university, or . . . any theological college' in which he may have resided, which a candidate for ordination in the C of E is required to present to the ordaining bishop by Canon C 6 of the 1969 Canons.

Leucius. The name of a (real or fictitious) companion of St *John the Apostle, to whom inter alia the apocryphal 'Acts of *John' is attributed. From the time of *Photius (Bibl. cod. 114), he was generally known as Leucius Charinus.

Leuenberg Concord. A statement of concord between the *Lutheran and *Reformed Churches of both E. and W. Europe adopted at Leuenberg in Switzerland on 16 Mar. 1973. It affirms that their common understanding of the Gospel enables them to declare and realize Church fellowship; 16th cent. disagreements on the Lord's Supper, Christology, and *predestination are revoked, and diversity in worship and Church order are accepted. The Concord was signed by more than 60 Churches. It pledged the signatories to continuing discussions; these have taken place both on a regional basis and in full assemblies at Sigtuna in Sweden in 1976 and at Driebergen in the Netherlands in 1981. While the Concord was criticized by some conservative Lutherans, it brought intercommunion and provided a framework for further growing together between the Churches.

Text and introd. by W. Lohff, Die Konkordie reformatorischer Kirchen in Europa: Leuenberger Konkordie (Frankfurt, 1985). Eng. tr. of the text in Ecumenical Review, 25 (1973), pp. 355–9; also, of the Concord and certain preliminary documents in Lutheran World, 20 (1973), pp. 347–53. The Lutheran World material, with introd, repr. in J. A. Andrews and J. A. Burgess (eds.), An Invitation to Action: The Lutheran–Reformed Dialogue, Series III, 1981–1983 (Philadelphia, 1984), pp. 61–73.

Leutholf, Hiob. See LUDOLF, HIOB.

Levellers, 17th-cent. English political and religious party. They were opposed to kingship and advocated complete freedom in religion and a wide extension of the suffrage. The name, to which they themselves objected, first occurs in 1647. Mainly supported by the Army, they found their chief leader in J. Lilburne, who, in The Case of the Army Truly Stated (1647), urged the dissolution of Parliament and its re-establishment on democratic lines. In 1648 Lilburne was temporarily imprisoned and his party was treated by O. *Cromwell with marked suspicion. After the execution of *Charles I (1649), they resumed their agitation, demanding the dissolution of the Council of State and a reformed Parliament; and Lilburne and other leaders were again arrested. Mutinies in the Army were suppressed, and the Levellers faded out after making contact with *Charles II in exile. By the *Restoration (1660) they had almost completely disappeared.

W. Haller and G. Davies (eds.), The Leveller Tracts (New York, 1944); D. M. Wolfe (ed.), Leveller Manifestoes of the Puritan Revolution (1944); G. E. Aylmer (ed.), The Levellers in the English Revolution (1975). W. Haller (ed.), Tracts on Liberty in the Puritan Revolution (Records of Civilization, Sources and Studies, 18; 3 vols., New York, 1934–7); A. S. P. Woodhouse (ed.), Puritanism and Liberty: Being the Army Debates (1646–9) from the Clarke Manuscripts with Supplementary Documents (1939); J. R. McMichael and B. Taft (eds.), The Writings of William Walwyn (Athens, Ga., and London [1989]). J. Frank, The Levellers: A History of the Writings of Three Seventeenth-Century Social Democrats: John Lilburne, Richard Overton, William Walwyn (Cambridge, Mass., 1955); H. N. Brailsford, The Levellers and the English Revolution, ed. [J. E.] C. Hill (1961); C. B. Macpherson, The Political Theory of Possessive Individualism: Hobbes to Locke (Oxford, 1962), pp. 107–59; [J. E.] C. Hill, The World Turned Upside Down (1972), esp. chs. 4 and 7; J. C. Davis, 'The Levellers and Christianity', in B. Manning (ed.), Politics, Religion and the English Civil War (1973), pp. 225–50; A. [H.] Woolrych, Soldiers and Statesmen: The General Council of the Army and its Debates, 1647–1648 (Oxford, 1987). M. [P.] Ashley, John Wildman: Plotter and Postmaster (1947); P. [E.] Gregg, Free-born John: A Biography of John Lilburne (1961); M. Gimelfarb-Brack, Liberté, Égalité, Fraternité, Justice! La vie et l'œuvre de Richard Overton, Niveleur (Berne, 1979).

Levi, son of Alphaeus. The tax-gatherer whom the Lord called to be one of His disciples (Mk. 2: 14). He is apparently to be identified with St *Matthew (Mt. 9: 9; 10: 3).

Leviathan. A mythological sea-serpent or dragon, mentioned several times in the Ugaritic texts, the OT, and later Jewish literature. The leviathan of Ps. 104: 26 has sometimes been identified with a whale, that of Job. 41: 1 (AV, RV, RSV, and NRSV) with a crocodile. The name was transferred to the devil (e.g. Is. 27: 1). T. *Hobbes gave his famous treatise (1651) on 'the matter, form and power of a Commonwealth, ecclesiastical and civil' this title on the ground that the commonwealth was 'that great Leviathan, or rather, to speak more reverently . . . that mortal god, to which we owe under the immortal God, our peace and defence'.

J. Day, God's Conflict with the Dragon and the Sea (Cambridge, 1985), pp. 62–75; id. in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 4 (1992), pp. 295 f.

levirate marriage (Lat. levir, 'husband's brother'), the marriage of a man with his brother's widow. The Mosaic legislation (Deut. 25: 5–10) required that if a man died, leaving his widow without offspring, his surviving brother should marry the widow so that he might not be without descendants. Reference is made to the practice in the question on the *resurrection of the dead put by the *Sadducees (Mk. 12: 19, etc.); but it seems probable that by NT times the requirement was already a dead letter. In the *Talmud, the subject is dealt with in the tractate 'Jebamoth'. For canonical legislation, see AFFINITY.

Levites. Members of one of the twelve tribes, descended from Levi, one of the sons of *Jacob, and acc. to the biblical account specially set apart as ministers of the sanctuary. Some modern scholars, however, have doubted the existence of such a tribe and have held that the term 'Levite' designated primarily a priestly functionary and that only when the function became hereditary was the idea of a tribe developed, with Levi as a quasi-fictional eponymous ancestor. In the *Deuteronomic legislation, the terms 'priest' and 'Levite' are virtually interchangeable and are sometimes used in apposition. In the 7th and 8th cents. BC, the Levites came to be distinguished from the priests, the latter term being restricted to those of Levitical descent who could trace their ancestry through Zadok. Acc. to Ezek. 44: 10–4, the Levites were now allotted only the inferior duties in the *Temple: they provided the officers and judges, the porters and players of musical instruments, and they were to slay the burnt offerings and sacrifice for the people. After the Exile their status improved. Acc. to 1 Chron. 15: 15, they had had the prerogative of carrying the *Ark, and their role as musicians was seen as having been so important that two groups of Psalms are attributed to them (the 'Psalms of the sons of Korah', Pss. 42–9, and the 'Psalms of the sons of Asaph', Pss. 50 and 70–83). Their status in NT times is confirmed by Lk. 10: 32. In the Middle Ages, the term levitae was applied to *deacons.

The subject is regularly discussed in works on the Pentateuch and in histories of the OT sacrificial system. G. E. Wright, 'The Levites in Deuteronomy', Vetus Testamentum, 4 (1954), pp. 325–30; J. A. Emerton, 'Priests and Levites in Deuteronomy', ibid. 12 (1962), pp. 129–38. E. Nielsen, 'The Levites in Ancient Israel', Annual of the Swedish Theological Institute, 3 (1964), pp. 16–27. R. de Vaux, OP, Les Institutions de l'Ancien Testament, 2 (1960), pp. 213–31, 254–63, with bibl. pp. 447 f.; Eng. tr. (2nd edn., 1965), pp. 358–71, 388–94, with bibl. pp. 544 f.; E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 2 (Edinburgh, 1979), pp. 250–6. G. Hölscher in PW 12 (pt. 2; 1925), cols. 2155–208, s.v. 'Levi'. See also works cited under PRIEST.

Leviticus, Book of. The third Book of the *Pentateuch. The English title follows the Gk. and Lat. versions, the Hebrew title (וַיִּקְרָא, 'And he called') being the first word of the text. The Book consists almost wholly of legislation, the general subjects of which are sacrifice (1–10), ritual purification and holiness (11–26), and vows and tithes (27). Acc. to modern critical theories, the bulk of the Book, except chs. 17–26, is derived from the Priestly document ('P') and is thus not earlier than the 6th cent. BC, while 17–26, which form a clearly defined unity and are generally known as 'The *Holiness Code' (q.v.), seem to be older than the rest. The language and theology of Lev. are reflected in the terminology and conceptions of certain NT writers, notably the author of Heb., where the priesthood of Christ is contrasted with the Levitical priesthood, and the ritual and aim of the Jewish Day of *Atonement (Lev. 16, 23: 26 ff.) are explained as receiving their full significance and final realization in Christ's atoning death (Heb. 9 and 10).

Comm. by M. *Noth (Das Alte Testament Deutsch, 6; 1962; Eng. tr., 1965), K. Elliger (HAT, Reihe 1. 4; 1966), N. H. Snaith (Cent. Bib., new edn., on Lev. and Num., 1967, pp. 28–178), J. R. Porter (Camb. Bib, NEB, 1976), G. J. Wenham (New International Comm. on the OT, 1979), and J. E. Hartley (Word Biblical Comm., 4; Dallas [1992]). R. de Vaux, OP, Les Sacrifices de l'Ancien Testament (Cahiers de la Revue Biblique, 1; 1964), pp. 28–96 passim; Eng. tr. (Cardiff, 1966), pp. 27–108 passim. [M.] M. Douglas, Purity and Danger: An Analysis of Concepts of Pollution and Taboo (1966), pp. 41–57. J. Milgrom, Cult and Conscience: The Asham and Priestly Doctrine of Repentance (Studies in Judaism in Late Antiquity, 18; Leiden, 1976), passim. L. L. Grabbe, Leviticus (Old Testament Guides; Sheffield, 1993). B. A. Levine in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 4 (1992), pp. 311–21, s.v.

Lewis, Clive Staples (1893–1963), scholar and Christian apologist. Born in Belfast, he was educated mainly privately until he entered University College, Oxford, in 1917. He was Tutor and Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford, from 1925 to 1956, when he was appointed Professor of Medieval and Renaissance Literature in the University of Cambridge. His critical works include The Allegory of Love (1936), A Preface to Paradise Lost (1942), and English Literature in the Sixteenth Century (vol. 3 of the Oxford History of English Literature, 1954). At Magdalen Lewis underwent a gradual conversion experience described in his spiritual autobiography, Surprised by Joy (pub. 1955). He became widely known as a Christian apologist through a series of broadcast talks given between 1941 and 1944 and later published in book form, and through a number of other popular religious works which had a very wide circulation; these included The Problem of Pain (1940), The Screwtape Letters (1942; ostensibly from a senior devil to his nephew, a junior devil), and Miracles (1947). His clarity, wit, and skill as a communicator meant that he, like D. L. *Sayers and Charles *Williams, carried considerable weight; many Christians had their faith confirmed and a number of agnostics were brought closer to the Christian faith through reading his works. Lewis also published three science fiction novels with a strong Christian flavour: Out of the Silent Planet (1938), Perelandra (1943), and That Hideous Strength (1945). A series of seven 'Narnia' stories for children began in 1950 with The Lion, the Witch and the Wardrobe. In 1956 he married Joy Gresham (née Davidson); A Grief Observed (originally pub. under a pseudonym in 1961) is a profound treatment of bereavement written after her death. A group of his friends, including Charles Williams, was known as 'The Inklings'; they met regularly for many years in his rooms to talk and read aloud their works.

Letters of C. S. Lewis, ed., with a memoir, by W. H. Lewis [brother] (1966); They Stand Together: The Letters of C. S. Lewis to Arthur Greeves (1914–1963), ed. W. Hooper (1979). R. L. Green and W. Hooper, C. S. Lewis: A Biography (1974); A. N. Wilson, C. S. Lewis: A Biography (1990). P. L. Holmer, C. S. Lewis: The Shape of his Faith and Thought (1976). H. Carpenter, The Inklings (1978). J. A. W. Bennett in DNB, 1961–1970 (1981), pp. 651–3.

libellatici. The name given to those who during the *Decian persecution (249–51) had procured certificates ('libelli pacis') by purchase from the civil authorities stating that they had sacrificed to the pagan idols when, in fact, no such sacrifice had been offered. The practice was condemned by the Church authorities, but those guilty of the circumvention were treated more leniently than those who had actually sacrificed (the 'sacrificati').

The chief authority is the correspondence of St *Cyprian and the same writer's De Lapsis. Several actual libelli, from among the Egyptian papyri, have been pub. since 1897 by U. Wilcken, C. Wessely, P. M. Mayer, and others; cf. summary report in J. R. Knipfing, 'Libelli of the Decian Persecution', HTR 16 (1923), pp. 345–90. A. Bludau, Die ägyptischen Libelli und die Christenverfolgung des Kaisers Decius (RQ, Suppl. 27; 1931). R. Andreotti, 'Religione ufficiale e culto dell'imperatore nei "Libelli" di Decio', in Studi in onore di Aristide Calderini e Roberto Paribeni, 1 (Milan, 1956), pp. 369–76. P. Keresztes, Imperial Rome and the Christians, 2 (New York and London [1989]), pp. 43–65. See also works cited under PERSECUTIONS, EARLY CHRISTIAN.

Libelli Missarum. The name given to the precursors of the *Sacramentary. They were booklets containing the formularies for one or more Masses for a given period for the use of a particular church. They did not include the *Canon, which was fixed, the readings from Scripture or the parts which were sung. They formed the link between the period of free composition and the organization of fixed formularies in a Sacramentary. No examples have survived, but there are literary references to them and the so-called *Leonine Sacramentary contains a series of them.

The fundamental work is A. Stuiber, Libelli Sacramentorum Romani (Theophaneia, 6; Bonn, 1950). F. L. Cross, 'Early Western Liturgical Manuscripts', JTS NS 16 (1965), pp. 61–7. Vogel, Sources, pp. 37–43.

Liber Antiphonarius. See ANTIPHONAL.

Liber Censuum. The official register of the Roman Church, which recorded the dues (census) payable by various institutions, esp. monasteries, churches, cities, dominions, and kingdoms, to the Holy See. It was drawn up by Cencio Savelli (later Pope *Honorius III), the 'chamberlain' of Clement III (Pope, 1187–91) and *Celestine III (Pope, 1191–8). It drew extensively on the Liber Canonum of the younger *Anselm of Lucca, the Collectio Canonum attributed to Deusdedit (Pope, 616–18), the Liber Politicus of Canon Benedict (*fl. c.*1140), and other sources. The original MS is preserved in the *Vatican (lat. 8486). Besides the list of census, it contains a list of the bishoprics and monasteries directly dependent on the Holy See, a treatise Mirabilia Urbis Romae, and other documents.

Crit. edn. by P. Fabre (d. 1899) and L. *Duchesne, completed by G. Mollat (3 vols., Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 2nd ser.; '1910'–52). V. Pfaff, 'Der Liber Censuum von 1192', Vierteljahrschrift für Sozial- und Wirtschaftsgeschichte, 44 (1957), pp. 78–96, 105–20, 220–42, 325–51. P. Fabre, Étude sur le Liber Censuum de l'Église de Rome (1892). R. Elze, 'Der Liber Censuum des Cencius (Cod. Vat. lat. 8486) von 1192 bis 1228. Zur Überlieferung des Kaiserkrönungsordo Cencius II', Bullettino dell' 'Archivio Paleografico Italiano', NS 2–3 (pt. 1; 1956–7), pp. 251–70. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 9 (pt. 1; 1929), cols. 180–220, s.v. 'Liber Censuum Romanae Ecclesiae', with further bibl.; M. Michaud in DDC 3 (1942), cols. 233–53, s.v. 'Censuum (Liber)'.

Liber Comicus. See COMES.

Liber de Causis. A treatise, consisting for the most part of extracts from *Proclus' 'Elements of Theology', which was put together in Arabic by an unknown Muslim philosopher, prob. in Baghdad, *c.*850. It exercised an important influence on medieval philosophy through Gerard of Cremona, who translated it into Latin at Toledo between 1167 and 1187. Following its title in Arabic, he announced it as a work of *Aristotle, with the result that many *Neoplatonist doctrines were mistakenly held to be Aristotelian. *William of Moerbeke's translation of Proclus' 'Elements of Theology' into Latin (completed on 18 May 1268) revealed to St *Thomas Aquinas and medieval philosophers generally the true character of the Liber de Causis.

Arab. text, with Ger. tr. and version of Gerard of Cremona, in O. *Bardenhewer, Die pseudo-aristotelische Schrift Ueber das reine Gute, bekannt unter dem Namen Liber de Causis (Freiburg, 1882). Crit. edn. of Lat. text, with introd. and notes by A. Pattin in Tijdschrift voor Filosofie, 28 (1966), pp. 90–203. It is also conveniently pr. in R. Steele (ed.), Opera hactenus inedita Rogeri Baconi, 12 (Oxford, 1935), pp. 161–87. H. D. Saffrey, OP, Sancti Thomae de Aquino Super Librum de Causis Expositio (Textus Philosophici Friburgenses, 4–5; 1954). R. C. Taylor, 'The Kalām fī Maḥḍ al-khair (Liber de causis) in the Islamic Philosophical Milieu', in J. Kraye and others (eds.), Pseudo-Aristotle in the Middle Ages: The Theology and Other Texts (Warburg Institute Surveys and Texts, 11; 1986), pp. 37–52; see also C. H. Lohr, ibid., pp. 53–62. L. Sweeney in NCE 8 (1967), pp. 693 f., s.v.

Liber Gradualis. See GRADUAL.

Liber Pontificalis (Lat., 'the Papal Book'). A collection of early Papal biographies. The account of each Pope is written acc. to a regular plan, with stereotyped formulae and exact chronological data. The biographies of the earliest Popes are quite short, but from the 4th cent. onwards they tend gradually to increase in size until those of the 8th–9th cents. have the dimensions of a small book. The whole is prefaced by an apocryphal letter of Pope *Damasus to St *Jerome, begging him to provide a history of the Popes from St Peter down to his own times. The work was issued in a series of 'editions', which were brought up to date by the addition of later Lives. The earliest form of it, which was dependent on the *Liberian Catalogue (354), appears to have been the work of a Roman presbyter at the time of Boniface II (530–2). Subsequent redactions carry the history down to the death of *Martin V (1431), and even later.

Important crit. edns. by L. *Duchesne (2 vols., Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 2nd ser. 3; 1886–92 + further vol. of additions and corrections by C. Vogel, ibid., 1957) and T. *Mommsen (MGH, Gesta Pontificum Romanorum, 1, vol. 1, to AD 715, all pub., 1898). Eng. tr. of section to 715, with introd. by R. Davis, The Book of Pontiffs (Translated Texts for Historians, Latin Series, 5; Liverpool, 1989); of section 715–817 by id., The Lives of the Eighth-Century Popes (Translated Texts for Historians, 13; ibid., 1992); of section 817–91 by id., The Lives of the Ninth-Century Popes (ibid. 20; 1995). L. Duchesne, Étude sur le Liber Pontificalis (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 1st ser. 1; 1877; esp. on MSS). J. B. *Lightfoot, Apostolic Fathers, 1. 1 (S. Clement of Rome; 2nd edn., 1890), pp. 303–25. O. Bertolini, 'Il "Liber Pontificalis"', Settimane di Studio del Centro Italiano di Studi sull'Alto Medioevo, 17 (1970), pp. 387–455. C. Vogel, 'Le "Liber Pontificalis" dans l'Édition de Louis Duchesne', in Monseigneur Duchesne et son temps: Actes du Colloque organisé par l'École Française de Rome (Palais Farnèse, 23–25 mai 1973) (Collection de l'École Française de Rome, 23; 1975), pp. 99–127; cf. also pp. 129–40. J. P. Kirsch in CE 9 (1910), pp. 224–6; H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 9 (pt. 1; 1930), cols. 354–460; E. Josi in EC 7 (1951), cols. 1278–82; all s.v. and with further bibl.

Liber Praedestinatus. See PRAEDESTINATUS.

Liber Regalis. The book containing the English *Coronation Service introduced for the crowning of Edward II in 1308. The rubrics were extended for Richard II (1377). The book was translated into English for *James I (1603), and continued in use until discarded by *James II in 1685. Its unknown compiler possessed considerable competence and knowledge. Among its many new features were the introduction of the seven Penitential Psalms, of the Veni Creator Spiritus, and the homage of the peers after the enthronement. Several 14th- and 15th-cent. MSS survive.

Text ed., with Eng. tr., by L. G. Wickham Legg, English Coronation Records (1901), pp. 81–130. E. C. Ratcliff, The English Coronation Service (1936). See also other works cited under CORONATION RITE IN ENGLAND.

Liber Sacramentorum. See SACRAMENTARY.

liber vitae (Lat., 'book of life'). A name occasionally given in the early Church to the *diptychs, i.e. the lists of those who were recognized members of the Christian community. It was doubtless derived from the references in Scripture to the '*book of life' (e.g. Rev. 3: 5).

liberal arts, seven. See SEVEN LIBERAL ARTS.

Liberal Evangelicalism. The outlook of those within the C of E who, while maintaining their spiritual kinship with the *Evangelical Revival, have been concerned to restate old truths, e.g. concerning the Atonement and the authority of the Bible, in terms thought to be more consonant with modern thought with its stress on historical method and the philosophy of personality. See also ANGLICAN EVANGELICAL GROUP MOVEMENT.

T. G. Rogers (ed.), Liberal Evangelicalism. By Members of the Church of England (1923).

liberalism. The word, which came into use early in the 19th cent., has been defined as 'the holding of liberal opinions in politics or theology'. In theology it has been used with many different shades of meaning. If taken to mean freedom from bigotry and readiness to welcome new ideas or proposals for reform, it is a characteristic which many people will readily profess, but in itself it gives no indication of their beliefs or aspirations. There have been 'Liberal Catholics', 'Liberal Protestants', and 'Liberal Evangelicals'; but all that they have had in common is a general tendency to favour freedom and progress. Such a tendency may lead to many different results. The 'Liberal Catholics' who formed a distinguished group in the RC Church in the 19th cent. were for the most part theologically orthodox, but they favoured political democracy and ecclesiastical reform. Père H. D. *Lacordaire (1802–61), the famous French Dominican, said: 'I die a penitent Catholic, but an impenitent Liberal.' 'Liberal Protestantism', on the other hand, developed into an anti-dogmatic and humanitarian reconstruction of the Christian faith which at one time appeared to be gaining ground in nearly all the Protestant Churches.

The word is sometimes also used of the belief in secular or anthropocentric humanism which has its origins in the Renaissance and which is quite inconsistent with biblical and dogmatic orthodoxy. It was in this sense that the *Tractarians were fiercely opposed to liberalism. On the other hand, by many orthodox Christians the word 'liberal' is felt to have positive associations of great value. Hence the confusion which surrounds its use.

Liberation Theology. A theological movement that came to prominence in the second Conference of Latin American bishops (CELAM) held at Medellín in Columbia in 1968 at the request of Pope *Paul VI. A third Conference under *John Paul II was held at Puebla (in *Mexico) in 1979. In the interval the Medellín meeting had given impetus to a great flowering of theological reflection, as well as to numerous practical measures. The term 'liberation' stems from dislike of 'development', which is understood to imply an imposed solution to South America's problems, determined by the industrialized nations and involving no real initiative on the part of the people.

Of the theological writings of the movement, the Peruvian Gustavo Gutierrez's Teología de la liberación, published at Lima in 1971 (Eng. tr., A Theology of Liberation, 1974), has attained the status of a minor classic. He has been followed by a large number of other writers, most of whose works have been translated into English and so in turn influenced related movements such as *Black and *Feminist Theology. Other important figures include two Brazilians, Hugo Assmann and Leonardo Boff, until recently OFM, the Argentinians José Míguez Bonino (a Protestant) and Jan Luis Segundo, José P. Miranda of Mexico, and Jan Sobrino, SJ, in San Salvador. All have been influenced in varying degrees by Karl Marx and 20th-cent. Marxist philosophers such as Louis Althusser and Ernst Bloch, but they would insist that this is so only with regard to Marx's sociological analysis and not to his ideological commitments on religion and materialism. The salient features of their thought are: (1) a preferential option for the poor, that is the idea that the Church's primary duty in a situation of oppression is to support the poor; (2) liberation is regarded as an essential element in salvation, since salvation is concerned with the whole man and not just his spiritual needs; (3) the *Exodus is taken as the biblical paradigm, since individual salvation can come only through social transformation; (4) Christ's apparent lack of involvement in politics is countered by saying that His teaching was in fact highly political (e.g. by Miranda), or by maintaining that His confrontation was really with social structures (e.g. by Sobrino and Segundo); (5) the priority of praxis, the view that right belief (orthodoxy) can issue only from right action (orthopraxis); and (6) structural or institutional violence, the view that structures that coerce are no less violent than the actual physical use of force. In 1984 the Sacred Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith (formerly the *Holy Office), under the aegis of Cardinal Ratzinger, issued 'Libertatis Nuntius'. While endorsing 'a preferential option for the poor', it was severely critical of the use of Marxist analyses in Liberation Theology, arguing that it is impossible to separate analysis and ideology, and it rejected any suggestion that orthopraxis takes precedence over orthodoxy. In the same year Leonardo Boff was summoned to Rome to answer charges made on the basis of his Igreja: Carisma e poder (Petropolis, 1981; Eng. tr., Church, Charism and Power, 1985). Despite the support of two cardinals who accompanied him, Boff was required to submit to an indefinite period of 'obedient silence'; in 1992 he was secularized. His writings are in fact more moderate than those of many others, and the main source of concern seems to have been the way in which he applied the principles of Liberation Theology to the structures of ecclesiastical authority. In 1986 the Sacred Congregation issued a further Instruction, 'Libertatis Conscientia', which many have read as offering a more favourable assessment of the contribution of Liberation Theology. Certainly some of its concerns and terminology figure prominently in John Paul II's encyclical 'Sollicitudo Rei Socialis' (1987), but against this must be set his continuing promotion of leading critics of the movement, most notably perhaps in the appointment of Alfonso López Trujillo as Abp. of Medellín in 1979 (made a cardinal in 1983) and José Cardoso Sobrinho in succession to Helder *Câmara as Abp. of Recife in 1985.

The most obvious practical expression of Liberation Theology has been in the growth of comunidades eclesiales de base, small communities of 15–20 families that are led by laymen and try to integrate spiritual and social issues. There are over 70,000 of these in *Brazil alone, and in El Salvador they were consulted by Abp. O. A. *Romero both over decisions and in the composition of some of his pastoral letters. Under the influence of the educationalist Paulo Freiere one aim all such base communities share is concientización, making people more aware of their situation and rights. On occasion this has led to the endorsement of a specific political party, as in the case of the poet and priest, Ernesto Cardenal, in Solentiname in Nicaragua, where active support for the Sandinista guerillas was encouraged, Cardenal himself along with several other priests eventually joining the Revolutionary Government after the overthrow of the Somoza dictatorship in 1979. Of the religious orders the *Jesuits have been prominent as has the Catholic Foreign Mission Society of America at Maryknoll, NY. In their attitudes to the use of force, positions have ranged from, at the one end, the pacifism of Abp. H. Câmara in Brazil that was combined with fearless denunciation of the abuse of rights under General Branco, to open resort to arms at the other, as with the minority who followed the example of Fr. Camilo Torres who was killed while resisting the government in Colombia in 1966.

Exponents of Liberation Theology include: J. P. Miranda, Marx y la biblia (Salamanca, 1971; Eng. tr., Marx and the Bible, Maryknoll, NY, 1974; London, 1977); E. [D.] Dussel, Caminos de liberación latinoamericana (Buenos Aires, 1972; Eng. tr., History and the Theology of Liberation, Maryknoll, NY, 1976); H. Assmann, Teología desde la praxis de la liberación (Salamanca, 1973; Eng. tr., Practical Theology of Liberation, 1975); J. L. Segundo, Liberación de la teología (Buenos Aires, 1975; Eng. tr., The Liberation of Theology, New York, 1976); J. Miguez Bonino, Revolutionary Theology comes of Age (1975; in USA entitled, Doing Theology in a Revolutionary Situation, Philadelpha, 1975); E. Cardenal, El Evangelio en Solentiname (2 vols, Salamanca, 1975–7; Eng. tr., The Gospel in Solentimane, 4 vols, Maryknoll, NY, 1976–82); J. Sobrino, SJ, Cristología desde américa latina (Mexico, 1976; rev. Eng. tr., Christology at the Crossroads, 1978); id., Resurreción de la verdadera Iglesia: Los pobres, lugar teológico de la eclesiología (Santander, 1981; Eng. tr., The True Church of the Poor, 1984); L. Boff, OFM, A Graça liberadora (Petropolis, 1977; Eng. tr., Liberating Grace, Maryknoll, NY, 1981); P. Berryman, The Religious Roots of Rebellion (1984). Useful collection of works, by L. Boff and others, in Eng. tr., in the series 'Liberation and Theology' (Maryknoll, NY, and Tunbridge Wells, 1987 ff.). A. T. Hennelly (ed.), Liberation Theology: A Documentary History (Maryknoll, NY, 1990). P. E. Sigmund, Liberation Theology at the Crossroads: Democracy or Revolution? (New York and Oxford, 1990).

The text of 'Libertatis Nuntius' pub. in AAS 76 (1984), pp. 876–909; 'Libertatis Conscientia', ibid. 79 (1987), pp. 554–99. Eng. trs. were pub. by the *Catholic Truth Society, Instruction on Certain Aspects of the Theology of Liberation (CTS pamphlet Do 560; 1984) and Instruction on Christian Freedom and Liberation (pamphlet Do 570; 1986). Other critics incl. R. Vekemans, SJ, Iglesia y mundo político; sacerdocio y política (Lima, 1970; Eng. tr., Caesar and God, Maryknoll, NY, 1972); A. Fierro, El evangelio beligerante (Estella, Navarra, 1975; Eng. tr., The Militant Gospel, 1977); E. [R.] Norman, Christianity and the World Order (Reith Lectures, 1978; Oxford, 1979); D. P. McCann, Christian Realism and Liberation Theology (Maryknoll, NY [1981]); J. V. Schall, Liberation Theology in Latin America (San Francisco, 1982). M. Novak, The Spirit of Democratic Capitalism (New York [1982]), chs. 17–18.

Liberian Catalogue. An early list of the Popes down to *Liberius (352–66). It is one of the items in a collection of documents made by a compiler known (since T. *Mommsen's studies) as the '*Chronographer of 354' (q.v.). Its earlier section, which goes down to Pope Pontianus (230–5) and appears to be dependent on a list in the 'Chronicle' of St *Hippolytus, is less reliable than its latter half. First edited by the Jesuit, A. Bucherius, at Antwerp in 1636, it used sometimes to be called the 'Bucherian Catalogue'.

For edns., see art. CHRONOGRAPHER OF AD 354. Text also pr. in LP (Duchesne), 1 (1886), pp. 1–12. Eng. tr. in R. Davis, The Book of Pontiffs (Translated Texts for Historians, Latin Series, 5; Liverpool, 1989), pp. 93–6. Critical discussions in H. *Lietzmann, Petrus und Paulus in Rom (2nd edn., 1927), esp. pp. 1–28, and E. Caspar, Die älteste römische Bischofsliste (Schriften der Königsberger gelehrten Gesellschaft, 2, Geisteswissenschaftliche Klasse, Heft 4; 1926), pp. [170–8] (pp. 384–92 of vol. 2 of the Schriften). C. Pietri, Roma Christiana: Recherches sur l'Église de Rome ... (311–440) (Bibliothèque des Écoles françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 224; 2 vols., 1976), 1, pp. 389–97.

Liberius, Pope from 352 to 366. Ordered by the *Arian Emperor, Constantius, to assent to the condemnation of St *Athanasius as a rebel, Liberius refused and was banished from Rome in 355. In 357 he submitted to Constantius, after a collapse of his morale which can be traced in four letters ('Studens pace', 'Pro deifico', 'Quia scio', and 'Non doceo') preserved by *Hilary of Poitiers. In 358 he was permitted to reoccupy his see, having agreed to the deposition of Athanasius and having signed a confession of faith passed at a council of Sirmium (prob. that of 351, not the 'Blasphemy of *Sirmium') which, while not mentioning the *homoousion, is otherwise orthodox. St *Jerome and Athanasius agree that his subscription was forced. He built a celebrated church on the Esquiline Hill (the 'Basilica Liberiana') which was the ancestor of the present *Santa Maria Maggiore. Though his name does not appear in modern calendars, his feast occurs on 23 Sept. in the *Hieronymian Martyrology.

Letters and other writings mainly repr. from P. *Coustant in J. P. Migne, PL 8. 1349–1410; crit. text of the nine Epp. found in Hilary by A. L. Feder (CSEL 65; 1916). A Sermon of Liberius survives in a modified form in *Ambrose, De Virginibus, 3. 1–3 (text in PL 8. 1345–50). A. L. Feder, Studien zu Hilarius von Poitiers, 1 (Vienna, 1910), pp. 153–83; cf. also LP (Duchesne), 1, pp. 207–10. E. Caspar, Geschichte des Papsttums, 1 (1930), pp. 166–95. M. Simonetti, La crisi ariana nel IV secolo (Studia Ephemerides 'Augustinianum', 11; 1975), esp. pp. 216–43, 395–7. C. Pietri, Roma Christiana: Recherches sur l'Église de Rome ... (311–440) (Bibliothèque des Écoles françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 224; 2 vols., 1976), 1, pp. 237–68. C. Dagens, 'Autour du pape Libère. L'Iconographie de Suzanne et des martyrs romains sur l'Arcosolium de Celerina', Mélanges d'Archéologie et d'Histoire, 88 (1966), pp. 327–81. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 9 (pt. 1; 1930), cols. 497–530; É Amann in DTC 9 (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 631–59; P. T. Camelot, OP, in NCE 8 (1967), pp. 714–16, s.v.

Library of the Fathers. The series of English translations of selected writings of the early Christian Fathers, published under the inspiration of the Oxford Movement. The first volume to appear was the Confessions of St *Augustine (1838; edited by E. B. *Pusey).

H. P. *Liddon, Life of Edward Bouverie Pusey, 1 (1893), pp. 409–47. R. W. Pfaff, 'The Library of the Fathers: The Tractarians as Patristic Translators', Studies in Philology, 70 (1973), pp. 329–44.

Libri Carolini. See CAROLINE BOOKS.

licences, marriage. See MARRIAGE LICENCES.

Lichfield. The seat of the Mercian diocese under St *Chad, it was constituted an archbishopric in 787. Though the Abp. retained his title at least until 799, he gradually lost control over his suffragans and in 803 the see was again formally subjected to the authority of *Canterbury. Despite the nominal removal of the see to *Chester in 1075 and to *Coventry in 1095, Lichfield remained throughout the Middle Ages a centre of episcopal administration in the diocese. The formation of the Chester diocese in 1541, and various 19th-cent. changes, greatly reduced its importance. The present cathedral dates mainly from the 13th cent. An Anglican theological college in the city was founded in 1857; closed in 1972.

E. Hobhouse, 'The Register of Roger of Norbury, Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry, from A.D. 1322 to A.D. 1358. An Abstract of Contents and Remarks', in Collections for a History of Staffordshire edited by the William Salt Archaeological Society, 1 (1880), pp. 241–88; Registers of Bishop Robert de Stretton, 1358–1385, abstracted into Eng. by R. A. Wilson (ibid., NS 8 and 10, pt. 2; 1905–7); Register of John Catterick, 1415–9, ed. R. N. Swanson (Canterbury and York Society, 150; 1990). H. E. Savage (ed.), The Great Register of Lichfield Cathedral known as Magnum Registrum Album (William Salt Archaeological Society, for 1924; 1926). 'The Muniments of the Dean and Chapter of Lichfield', in Fourteenth Report of the Historical Manuscripts Commission, Appendix 8 (1895), pp. 205–36. J. W. Lamb, The Archbishopric of Lichfield (787–803) (1964). C. J. Godfrey, 'The Archbishopric of Lichfield', in C. W. Dugmore and C. Duggan (eds.), Studies in Church History, 1 (1964), pp. 145–53. N. Brooks, The Early History of the Church of Canterbury (Leicester, 1984), pp. 118–27. T. Harwood, The History and Antiquities of the Church and City of Lichfield (Gloucester, 1806). There is much information on the cathedral and diocese in the 26 lectures given on St Chad's Day by H. E. Savage (Lichfield, 1913–37). On the glass in Lichfield Cathedral, Y. Vanden Bemden and J. Kerr, 'The Glass of Herkenrode Abbey', Archaeologia, 108 (1986), pp. 189–226. A. J. Kettle and D. A. Johnson in VCH, Stafford, 3, ed. M. W. Greenslade (1970), pp. 140–99. T. Barns in DECH (1912), pp. 322–6, s.v.

lich-gate. See LYCH-GATE.

Liddell, Henry George (1811–98), Greek lexicographer. He was educated at Charterhouse and *Christ Church, Oxford, where he became tutor (1836) and censor (1845). He was later headmaster of Westminster (1846–55) and Dean of Christ Church (1855–91). In 1852 he was appointed to sit on the commission for University Reform. Later he was a decisive influence in the radical plan of internal reconstruction embodied in the Christ Church, Oxford, Act of 1867. The famous Greek Lexicon, in which Liddell had the collaboration of R. *Scott (q.v.), appeared in a modest form in 1843, the original edition being based on the Greek–German lexicon of F. Passow, professor at Breslau. It was constantly revised and extended during Liddell's lifetime, the last (8th) edition being issued in 1897. It was later completely recast by H. Stuart Jones (1867–1939) and R. McKenzie (1887–1937), who greatly enlarged it by full attention to recent archaeological and papyrological discoveries, but with the exclusion of *patristic usages (issued in 10 parts, 1925–40, + supplement, 1968).

Memoir by H. L. Thompson (London, 1899). F. *Max Muller, 'Dean Liddell: as I knew him', Fortnightly Review, 71 (1899), pp. 10–24, repr. in Max Muller's Last Essays, First Series (Collected Works, 17; 1901), pp. 314–32. H. L. Thomson in DNB, Suppl. 3 (1901), pp. 94–6.

Liddon, Henry Parry (1829–90), Canon of *St Paul's. He was educated at King's College School, London, and *Christ Church, Oxford, where he held a Studentship until his death. He was successively one of W. J. *Butler's curates at Wantage (1852–4), first vice-principal of Cuddesdon Theological College (1854–9), and vice-principal of St Edmund Hall, Oxford (1859–62). At Cuddesdon he developed a ministry of spiritual direction which continued throughout his life. In the 1860s he began to exercise great influence in face of the post-Tractarian Oxford liberalism. In 1864 Bp. W. K. *Hamilton appointed him a prebendary of *Salisbury Cathedral and in 1870 he was installed as a Canon of St Paul's, where his powerful preaching attracted large audiences. In 1870 he was also appointed Dean Ireland's professor of exegesis at Oxford; this combination of offices strengthened his influence in the C of E, which he used chiefly for extending Catholic principles. He also stood firmly against the attempts made in the 1870s to lessen or abandon the use of the *Athanasian Creed in the C of E services. After resigning his professorship in 1882 he travelled extensively, esp. in Russia, Palestine, and Egypt. He was much interested in the *Old Catholics, and at the invitation of J. J. I. von *Döllinger, whom he visited in Munich many times, he attended the Bonn Reunion Conferences. In 1886 he was made chancellor of St Paul's. In his last years he watched with growing apprehension the spread of critical doctrines of the OT among the younger generation even of his own party, and the publication of Lux Mundi (1889) was a great grief to him. He was also a considerable, if hardly an original, theologian, whose *Bampton Lectures for 1866, on The Divinity of Our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ (1867), were deservedly held in high repute as a well-argued defence of Christian orthodoxy. His intense admiration for E. B. *Pusey led him to devote himself assiduously in his later years to writing Pusey's life (4 vols., posthumously pub., 1893–7), and it was for this purpose that he resigned his professorship. Liddon House, in South Audley Street, was founded in his memory as a religious centre in London for educated Anglican Churchmen.

J. O. Johnston, Life and Letters of Henry Parry Liddon (London, 1904). Shorter Life by G. W. E. Russell (ibid., 1905). Centenary memoir with contributions by W. M. Whitley, T. B. Strong, D. *Stone, E. S. *Talbot, and A. B. Emden (ibid., 1929). [W.] O. Chadwick, The Spirit of the Oxford Movement (Cambridge, 1990), pp. 214–46 ('The Young Liddon'). H. Scott *Holland in DNB 33 (1893), pp. 223–8.

Lieber, Thomas. See ERASTIANISM.

Lietzmann, Hans (1875–1942), Church historian. He studied philosophy and theology at Jena and Bonn from 1893 to 1898. After being lecturer at Bonn from 1900 he was appointed professor at Jena in 1905. In 1924 he succeeded A. Harnack at Berlin. His early studies were largely in the little-worked Greek patristic catenae, which bore fruit in a Catalogue (1902; in conjunction with G. Karo) and a series of Catenenstudien under his editorship. In 1904 there followed Apollinaris von Laodicea und seine Schule, which by a fresh attempt to distinguish the genuine and spurious works completely transformed Apollinarian studies. Petrus und Paulus in Rom (1915; 2nd edn., 1927) was the outcome of long archaeological and chronological researches. In the field of liturgy, he published an edition of the *Gregorian Sacramentary which derived from the ancient Aachen MS (1921), and Messe und Herrenmahl (1926; Eng. tr., Leiden, 1953–79), in which he sought to trace the Eucharistic rite back to two distinct primitive types. In his later years he issued a manual of Church history, Geschichte der alten Kirche (4 vols., 1932–44; Eng. tr., 1937–51). From 1902 onwards he edited Kleine Texte für Vorlesungen und Übungen, from 1906 the Handbuch zum Neuen Testament (to which he himself contributed the commentaries on Rom., Cor., and Gal.), and from 1920 the Zeitschrift für die neutestamentliche Wissenschaft.

Gedächtnisrede by H. Bornkamm and bibl. by K. Aland (490 items) in ZNTW 41 (1942), pp. 1–33. Three vols. of Lietzmann's Kleine Schriften ed. K. Aland in TU 67 (1958), 68 (1958), and 74 (1962; with reissue of items by H. Bornkamm and K. Aland just mentioned). K. Aland (ed.), Glanz und Niedergang der deutschen Universität: 50 Jahre deutscher Wissenschaftsgeschichte in Briefen an und von Hans Lietzmann, 1892–1942 (1979).

Life and Work. The branch of the *Ecumenical Movement concerned with the relation of the Christian faith to society, politics, and economics. It held notable conferences at *Stockholm (1925) and *Oxford (1937). It owed its existence esp. to N. *Söderblom. See also FAITH AND ORDER, REUNION, and WORLD COUNCIL OF CHURCHES.

N. Karlström and N. Ehrenström in R. Rouse and S. C. Neill (eds.), A History of the Ecumenical Movement 1517–1948 (1954), pp. 509–96.

Light of the World, the (Lat. Lux Mundi). A title of Christ, derived from Jn. 8: 12. It is the subject of Holman *Hunt's famous picture (of which the artist painted two copies, the one at Keble College, *Oxford, and the other at *St Paul's Cathedral).

J. Maas, Holman Hunt and The Light of the World (1984). See also other works cited s.v. HUNT, W. H.

Lightfoot, John (1602–75), biblical and *rabbinic scholar. Educated at Christ's College, Cambridge, he was from 1630 to 1642 rector of Ashley, Staffs. In 1643 he became one of the original and more influential members of the *Westminster Assembly, opposing the extreme *Presbyterians. In 1643 he became master of Catharine Hall, Cambridge, and rector of Much Munden, Herts, and held both offices for the rest of his life. He early developed an interest in Hebrew and Talmudic studies and in 1629 published Erubhin; or Miscellanies, Christian and Judaical, followed later by a book on Genesis (1642) and many further learned writings. He also materially assisted B. *Walton with the *Polyglot Bible which appeared in 1657. His best-known work, his series of Horae Hebraicae et Talmudicae (6 vols., 1658–78), was designed to show the bearing of Jewish studies on the interpretation of the NT. It is a mine of information and has never been wholly superseded.

Works in Eng. ed. G. Bright (2 vols., London, 1684); in Lat. [ed. J. Texelius] (2 vols., Rotterdam, 1686), also ed. J. Leusden (2 vols., Utrecht, 1699). Complete works ed. J. R. Pitman (13 vols., London, 1822–5). J. Hamilton in DNB 33 (1893), pp. 229–31.

Lightfoot, Joseph Barber (1828–89), Bp. of *Durham. He was educated at King Edward's School, Birmingham, where he made a lifelong friendship with E. W. *Benson (q.v.), and at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he was a private pupil of B. F. *Westcott (q.v.). He was ordained deacon in 1854 and priest in 1858. Becoming a tutor at Trinity College in 1857, he made classical and biblical subjects his main interest. In 1861 he succeeded C. J. *Ellicott as Hulsean professor of divinity, his lectures on the NT being the basis of his later commentaries. In 1871 he was appointed a Canon of *St Paul's and in 1875 Lady Margaret professor of divinity at Cambridge. From 1870 to 1880 he was also one of the leading members of the Company of Revisers of the NT. Having accepted the see of Durham with great reluctance (1879), he here proved himself a remarkably successful administrator, did much for the adornment of Auckland Castle, and personally trained many promising men for the priesthood.

The excellence of Lightfoot's critical work on the NT and the Fathers, which from the first won the highest recognition in Britain and beyond, has stood the test of time. His famous commentaries on St Paul's Epistles—Galatians (1865), Philippians (1868), and Colossians with Philemon (1875)—were marked by a wide and original patristic and classical erudition, lucid presentation, freedom from technicalities, and avoidance of sectional controversies; esp. notable were their long dissertations, e.g. the well-known essay on 'The Christian Ministry' in Philippians. The same qualities marked his work on the Apostolic Fathers, which perhaps showed an even greater mastery of learning and technique. His first edition of Clement of Rome appeared in 1869 (Appendix, 1877), a second and much extended recasting, revised in the light of the newly recovered full text, in 1890. In 1885 there followed his famous Ignatius (2 vols. in 3, 1885; 2nd edn., 1889), which finally disposed of W. *Cureton's contention that only the three Epp. in the Syriac recension were genuine. His other writings included A Fresh Revision of the New Testament (1871), the valuable art. 'Eusebius of Caesarea' in the Dictionary of Christian Biography (vol. 2, 1880), and several volumes of Sermons.

Brief account (attributed to H. W. Watkins) in Quarterly Review, 176 (1893), pp. 73–105, repr. separately, with prefatory note by B. F. Westcott (London, 1894). G. R. Eden and F. C. Macdonald (eds.), Lightfoot of Durham: Memoirs and Appreciations (1932). A. C. Benson, The Leaves of the Tree (1911), pp. 187–211. J. A. T. *Robinson, Joseph Barber Lightfoot (Durham Cathedral Lecture, 1981). F. J. A. *Hort in DNB 33 (1893), pp. 232–40.

Lightfoot, Robert Henry (1883–1953), NT scholar. Educated at Eton and at Worcester College, Oxford, after ordination he taught at Wells Theological College and at Oxford, where he was a Fellow of Lincoln College (1919–21) and of New College (1921–50) and Dean Ireland's professor of the exegesis of holy scripture (1934–49). His chief publications were History and Interpretation in the Gospels (*Bampton Lectures for 1934; 1935), Locality and Doctrine in the Gospels (1938), The Gospel Message of St Mark (1950), and St John's Gospel (1956; ed. C. F. Evans). From 1941 until his death he edited the Journal of Theological Studies. Influenced by German *Form Criticism, and by contemporary American scholarship, he was a pioneer of *Redaction Criticism. His work was marked by accuracy and caution, combined with scepticism regarding the historicity of the Gospel narratives. Of deep, if reticent, Christian faith, Lightfoot exercised a considerable influence, esp. on a group of younger Oxford NT students.

D. E. Nineham (ed.), Studies in the Gospels: Essays in Memory of R. H. Lightfoot (1955), with memoir, pp. vi–xvi. Obituary notice by R. L. P. Milburn in Proceedings of the British Academy, 40 (1954), pp. 253–61.

Lights, Feast of. See DEDICATION, THE JEWISH FEAST OF THE.

Ligugé, Defensor of. See DEFENSOR.

Liguori, St Alphonsus. See ALPHONSUS LIGUORI, ST.

Lima Document. See BAPTISM, EUCHARIST AND MINISTRY.

limbo. In Latin theology the abode of souls excluded from the full blessedness of the Beatific Vision, but not condemned to any other punishment. There are distinguished (1) the limbus patrum, in which the saints of the Old Covenant remained until Christ's coming and redemption of the world; and (2) the limbus infantium, the everlasting state of those who die unregenerate, e.g. unbaptized infants, and hence in *original sin, but innocent of personal guilt. Those in limbo are held to be excluded from supernatural beatitude, but, acc. to St *Thomas Aquinas, enjoy full natural happiness. St *Augustine, however, esp. in combating the *Pelagians, taught that all who die unbaptized, being in original sin, suffer some degree of positive punishment. The existence of limbo is a matter of theological opinion on which the Church has never pronounced definitively either way.

Limina Apostolorum. See AD LIMINA APOSTOLORUM.

Linacre, Thomas (*c.*1460–1524), humanist and founder of the Royal College of Physicians. He was among the first to cultivate Greek letters in England. He was educated at *Canterbury Cathedral School and at Oxford and in 1484 became a Fellow of All Souls. In 1487 he made his way to Italy, where he studied medicine and the classics, spending two years in Florence (*c.*1488–90) as the pupil of Angelo Poliziano and Demetrius Chalcondylas; he then went on to Rome and Padua. By 1499 he had returned to London and was at once recognized as one of the foremost humanist scholars of England. He was physician to Henry VII and *Henry VIII, and many great statesmen (e.g. T. *Wolsey, W. *Warham) were his patients. He was also the intimate friend of J. *Colet, *Erasmus, and T. *More. In 1520 he was ordained deacon, having already acquired various ecclesiastical preferments. The College for which he secured the royal charter (23 Sept. 1518) was designed to regulate the practice of medicine and to discourage the quacks who flourished at the time in London. He also founded chairs of medicine at Oxford and Cambridge. Among his writings are a treatise on Latin composition and Latin translations from Galen.

Linacre College, founded in 1962 (until 1965 Linacre House), in Oxford is named after him.

J. N. Johnson, Life of Thomas Linacre (1835). F. Maddison and others (eds.), Linacre Studies: Essays on the Life and Work of Thomas Linacre c.1460–1524 (Oxford, 1977). J. F. Payne in DNB 33 (1893), pp. 266–71 [cf. P. S. Allen in EHR 18 (1903), pp. 514–17, and R. J. Mitchell, ibid. 50 (1935), pp. 696–8]. BRUO 2 (1958), pp. 1147–9.

Lincoln. A see was established here by Bp. Remigius (d. 1092), who transferred it from *Dorchester, Oxon. The diocese became the largest in England, extending from the Thames to the Humber, and including the present dioceses of *Oxford, *Peterborough, and Leicester, as well as the present Lincoln. The cathedral, begun in 1086 and largely completed before 1300, contains fine Early English and Decorated architecture. Among celebrated Bps. of Lincoln are St *Hugh (1186–1200), R. *Grosseteste (1235–53), Richard *Fleming (1420–31), Thomas *Barlow (1675–91), W. *Wake (1705–16), E. *Gibson (1716–23), and E. *King (1885–1910).

W. P. W. Phillimore (ed.), Rotuli Hugonis de Welles, Episcopi Lincolniensis A.D. MCCIX–MCCXXXV (Cant. and York Society, 1, 3, and 4; 1907–9, and in The Lincoln Record Society, 3, 6, and 9; 1912–14); F. N. Davis (ed.), Rotuli Roberti Grosseteste, Episcopi Lincolniensis A.D. MCCXXXV–MCCLIII (Cant. and York Society, 10; 1913, and, with the Rotulus Henrici de Lixington, Episcopi Lincolniensis A.D. MCCLIV–MCCLIX, in The Lincoln Record Society, 11; 1914); id., C. W. Foster and A. H. Thompson (eds.), Rotuli Ricardi Gravesend [Bp., 1258–79] (Cant. and York Society, 31; 1925, and Linc. Record Society, 20; 1925); R. M. T. Hill (ed.), The Rolls and Register of Bishop Oliver Sutton, 1280–1299 (Linc. Record Society, 39, 43, 48, 52, 60, 64, 69, 76; 1948–86). A. H. Thompson, 'Registers of John Gynewell, Bishop of Lincoln, for the Years 1347–1350', Archaeological Journal, 68 (1911), pp. 301–60, with extracts. The Register of Bishop Philip Repingdon 1405–1419, ed. M. Archer (Linc. Record Society, 57, 58, 74; 1963–82). The Register of Richard Fleming, Bishop of Lincoln, 1420–31, ed. N. H. Bennett (Cant. and York Society, 146, etc.; 1984 ff.). C. W. Foster (ed.), Lincoln Episcopal Records in the Time of Thomas Cooper . . . Bishop of Lincoln A.D. 1571 to A.D. 1584 (Linc. Record Society 2; 1912). A. H. Thompson (ed.), Visitations of Religious Houses in the diocese of Lincoln [1420–49] (ibid. 7, 14, and 21; 1914–29). R. E. G. Cole (ed.), Chapter Acts of the Cathedral Church of St Mary of Lincoln A.D. 1520–1559 (ibid. 12, 13, and 15; 1915–20). C. W. Foster and K. Major (eds.), The Registrum Antiquissimum of the Cathedral Church of Lincoln (ibid. 27, 28, 29, 32, 34, 41, 46, 51, 62, 67, 68; 1931–73). A. H. Thompson (ed.), Visitations in the Diocese of Lincoln 1517–1531 (ibid. 33, 35, and 37; 1940–7). C. W. Foster, The State of the Church in the Reigns of Elizabeth and James I as Illustrated by Documents Relating to the Diocese of Lincoln, vol. 1 (ibid. 23; 1926). M. Bowker, The Secular Clergy in the Diocese of Lincoln 1495–1520 (Cambridge, 1968); id., The Henrician Reformation: The Diocese of Lincoln under John Longland 1521–1547 (ibid., 1981). H. Bradshaw and C. *Wordsworth (eds.), Statutes of Lincoln Cathedral (2 vols., 1892–7). K. Major, A Handlist of the Records of the Bishops of Lincoln and of the Archdeacons of Lincoln and Stow (1953). G. F. Apthorp, A Catalogue of the Books and Manuscripts in the Library of Lincoln Cathedral (Lincoln, 1859). W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, 6 (pt. 3; 1830), pp. 1266–92. B. Willis, A Survey of the Cathedrals of Lincoln, Ely, Oxford and Peterborough (1730), pp. 1–330. J. H. Srawley, The Story of Lincoln Minster (1933). D. [M.] Owen (ed.), A History of Lincoln Minster (Cambridge, 1994). J. W. F. Hill, Medieval Lincoln (ibid., 1948); id., Tudor & Stuart Lincoln (ibid., 1956); id., Georgian Lincoln (ibid., 1966). P. Wragge, 'Lincoln Cathedral' in VCH, Lincoln, 2 (1906), pp. 80–96. W. Hunt in DECH, pp. 328–32, s.v.

Lincoln, Use of. The liturgical usage adopted in the vast pre-Reformation diocese of Lincoln and referred to by T. *Cranmer in the preface to the 1549 BCP (see *CONCERNING THE SERVICE OF THE CHURCH). Among the few traces of it which have survived are three leaves of a 15th cent. MS Missal secundum usum Lincoln., now among the Tanner MSS in the *Bodleian Library (MS 9824).

Lincoln Judgement. The Judgement, given in 1890 by E. W. *Benson, Abp. of Canterbury, upon the complaints made two years before by the *Church Association against Edward *King, Bp. of Lincoln, for consecrating the Eucharist in the eastward position, having lighted candles on the altar, mixing water and wine in the chalice, allowing the *Agnus Dei to be sung after the Consecration, absolving and blessing with the *sign of the Cross, and taking the ablutions of the sacred vessels. The Judgement upheld the Bishop in the main, but ordered that the chalice must be mixed, if at all, before the service, that the *manual acts of consecration must be visible to the people, and that the sign of the Cross may not be used. The Judgement was notable in that it ignored previous decisions of the secular courts and the *Judicial Committee of the Privy Council.

E. S. Roscoe, The Bishop of Lincoln's Case: A Report of the Proceedings in the Court of the Archbishop of Canterbury . . . (1889). Read and Others v. the Lord Bishop of Lincoln: Judgment, Nov. 21, 1890. A. C. Benson, The Life of Edward White Benson, 2 (1899), pp. 319–81; G. W. E. Russell, Edward King, Sixtieth Bishop of Lincoln (1912), pp. 143–210.

Lindisfarne. From the 11th cent. it has also been called 'Holy Island'. Its history begins with St *Aidan's arrival from *Iona in 635, when it became a missionary centre and episcopal see, and a large number of churches were founded by its efforts from Edinburgh to the Humber and beyond. Among those educated in the monastery were St *Chad, St *Cedd, St *Egbert, and St *Wilfrid. The church was rebuilt by Aidan's successor, St *Finan (d. 661). In the latter part of the 7th cent. the Scoto-Irish monks, with some of their English brethren, withdrew to Iona, as they disliked the Roman discipline agreed upon at the Synod of *Whitby (664), and from that time the monastery looked towards Rome. St *Cuthbert's association with it added to its celebrity. In 793 and again in 875 the monastery and church were pillaged by the Danes and the monks fled. Eardulf (d. 900), the last of the 16 bishops, fixed his see in 875 at Chester-le-Street, but it was transferred to *Durham in 995. From 1082 to the Dissolution there was continuous monastic life on the island. The abbey church was a small copy of Durham cathedral, and dedicated to St Cuthbert.

The MS known as the 'Lindisfarne Gospels', now in the British Library (Cotton MS Nero D. iv), was written and decorated *c.*696–8 by Eadfrith (afterwards Bp. of Lindisfarne) 'in honour of St Cuthbert'. Its script is of a formal insular style, and its decoration one of the finest surviving monuments of early Hiberno-Saxon art. Its text is closely related to that of the *Codex Amiatinus. An interlinear gloss in Anglo-Saxon was added by Aldred, who was provost of Lindisfarne in 970.

The Liber Vitae Ecclesiae Dunelmensis (also in the Brit. Lib., Cotton MS Domitian A. vii) contains the names of the benefactors of the Church of St Cuthbert, Lindisfarne, and others entitled to commemoration. Begun in the 9th cent. (prob. *c.*840) and written in silver and gold, it was later removed to Durham.

'Annales Lindisfarnenses et Cantuarienses a. 618–690', ed. G. H. Pertz in MGH, Scriptores, 4 (1841), pp. 1 f.; 'Annales Lindisfarnenses' [AD 532–993], ed. id., ibid. 19 (1866), pp. 502–7. W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, 1, (1846 edn.), pp. 220–52. J. Raine, The History and Antiquities of North Durham (1852), pp. 73–188. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 9 (pt. 1; 1930), cols. 1186–92, s.v.

Fine facsimile of the Lindisfarne Gospels (Olten and Berne, 1956, with important vol. of comm. by T. J. Brown, R. L. Bruce-Mitford and others, ibid., 1960). Text ed. J. Stevenson and G. Waring (Surtees Society, 28, 39, 43, and 48; 1854–65). Lat. text collated in the edn. of the *Vulgate by J. *Wordsworth and H. J. White (Oxford, 1889). Plates, with introd. by E. G. Millar (British Museum, 1923). J. Backhouse, The Lindisfarne Gospels (Oxford, 1981). J. J. G. Alexander, Insular Manuscripts, 6th to the 9th century (A Survey of Manuscripts illuminated in the British Isles, 1; 1978), pp. 35–40 (no. 9, ills. 28–46). Liber Vitae, ed. J. Stevenson (Surtees Society, 13, 1841); facsimile edn. by A. H. Thompson (ibid., 136; 1923).

Lindsay, Thomas Martin (1843–1914), Church historian. He was educated at Glasgow and Edinburgh, and was for a time assistant at the latter to A. C. *Fraser in philosophy. He decided, however, to become a minister in the *Free Church of Scotland, and in 1873 he became professor of church history at the theological college at Glasgow. His main interest was the history of the Protestant Reformation on the Continent, his two principal books being Luther and the German Reformation (1900) and A History of the Reformation in Europe (2 vols., 1906–7). His other writings include The Church and the Ministry in the Early Centuries (Cunningham Lectures, 1903).

His son Alexander Dunlop, first Lord Lindsay of Birker (1879–1952), Master of Balliol College, Oxford (1924–49), took a prominent and effective part in furthering Christian principles in their bearing on social and ethical problems. In addition to philosophical works, notably studies of H. *Bergson (1911) and I. *Kant (1934), he wrote on personal, social, and political ethics.

A Collection of College Addresses: and Sermons preached on Various Occasions by the late Thomas Martin Lindsay, ed. A. D. Lindsay, son (Glasgow, 1915). Letters of Principal T. M. Lindsay to Janet Ross (1923), with introd. by J. [A.] Ross, pp. v–x. R. S. Rait in DNB, 1912–1921, pp. 338 f., s.v.

Life of Alexander D. Lindsay by [A.] D. Scott (daughter) (Oxford, 1971); [J. E.] C. Hill in DNB, 1951–1960, pp. 641–4.

Lindsey, Theophilus (1723–1808), English *Unitarian. Educated at Leeds and at St John's College, Cambridge, of which he was later elected a Fellow (1747), he held two other livings before becoming vicar of Catterick in 1763. In 1760 he married the stepdaughter of his friend Archdeacon Francis Blackburne (1705–87), with whose *Latitudinarian ideas he was much in sympathy. Having become doubtful about the doctrine of the Trinity, he supported Blackburne in the controversy arising out of the latter's Confessional (1766) and, stimulated in his unorthodoxy by friendship with J. *Priestley, he joined in the *Feathers Tavern Petition to Parliament against subscription to the *Thirty-Nine Articles. The failure of the petition and a change in his own intellectual position led him to adopt Unitarianism. He went to London, where, from 1774, he conducted services in Essex Street. His writings include Apology on Resigning the Vicarage of Catterick (1774), A Sequel to the Apology (1776), Historical View of the State of the Unitarian Doctrine and Worship from the Reformation to our own Time (1783), Vindiciae Priestleianae (1788), and Conversations on the Divine Government (1802).

Collected edn. of his Sermons (2 vols., London, 1810). T. Belsham, Memoirs of . . . Theophilus Lindsey . . . including a Brief Analysis of his Works (1812). H. McLachlan, Letters of Theophilus Lindsey (Publications of the University of Manchester, 134; 1920), with introductory 'Sketch of the Life of Theophilus Lindsey', pp. ix–xii. A. Nicholson in DNB 33 (1893), pp. 317 f.

Lingard, John (1771–1851), English historian. He came from an old Lincolnshire RC family which had migrated to *Winchester, where he was born. He entered the English College at *Douai in 1782, but had to leave in 1793 on account of the French war. Having finished his theological studies at Crook Hall, nr. *Durham, he was ordained priest in 1795, made prefect of studies, and taught natural and moral philosophy. In 1806 he published his Antiquities of the Anglo-Saxon Church (3rd edn., much enlarged, 1845), and in 1808 he went to Ushaw, where he helped with the foundation of the College and became its vice-president. In 1811 he moved to Hornby, nr. Lancaster, a small country mission, where he spent most of the rest of his life writing. In 1817 he paid a visit to Rome, where he negotiated the reopening of the *English College. In 1819 appeared the first three volumes of his History of England, the great work on which his fame rests. The eighth and last volume was published in 1830, carrying the history down to 1688. The work had a great success, which it owed esp. to its objectivity, its extensive use of contemporary documents, and the new light in which it viewed esp. such controversial periods as the *Reformation. It was translated into many European languages and earned its author the triple doctorate of theology, canon, and civil law from *Pius VII in 1821. There is some evidence that Leo XII created him cardinal in petto in 1826. Among his many other writings are a New Version of the Four Gospels (1836) and manuals of prayer and instruction, as well as some controversial treatises.

J. Hughes, John Lingard (1907); M. Haile and E. Bonney, Life and Letters of John Lingard (1911). J. P. Chinnici, OFM, The English Catholic Englightenment: John Lingard and the Cisalpine Movement, 1780 1850 (Shepherdstown, W.Va., 1980). G. Culkin, 'The Making of Lingard's History', The Month, 192 (1951), pp. 7–18. T. Cooper in DNB 33 (1893), pp. 320–3.

Linus, St. Acc. to all the early episcopal lists, Linus was the first Bp. of Rome after the Apostles Peter and Paul, but nothing else is known with certainty about him. A Christian of this name sends greetings, perhaps from Rome, in 2 Tim. 4: 21; and *Irenaeus and *Eusebius of Caesarea identify him with the Bishop. Feast day, 23 Sept., suppressed in 1969.

St Linus is mentioned by Irenaeus, Adv. Haer. 3. 3. 3, and Eusebius, HE 3. 2 and 5. 6. LP (Duchesne), 1. 121. AASS, Sept. 6 (1757), pp. 539–45. J. B. *Lightfoot, The Apostolic Fathers, 1 (pt. 1; 2nd edn., 1890), pp. 76–9. V. L. Kennedy, CSB, The Saints of the Canon of the Mass (Studi di Antichità Cristiana, 14; 1938), esp. pp. 111–13. É. Amann in DTC 9 (pt. 1; 1926), col. 772, s.v. 'Lin', with further refs.

lion. The lion appears in early Christian art esp. in two connections. (1) In representations of the story of *Daniel, conceived as a 'type' of God's redemption of His chosen people. This occurs among the earliest *catacomb paintings. (2) As the symbol of St *Mark. This symbolism, based on Ezek. 1 and Rev. 4, was discussed by St *Jerome and St *Augustine. In art its use dates from the 5th cent.

H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 9 (pt. 1; 1930), cols. 1198–207, s.v.

Lippi, Fra Filippo (*c.*1406–69), Italian painter. Brought up as an orphan by *Carmelites in Florence, he took the habit in 1420. The earliest reference to him as a painter dates from 1431. He led an immoral life and *c.*1461 he was released from his vows by *Pius II and allowed to marry. He was much patronized by the Medici in Florence and also worked in Padua, Prato, and Spoleto, where he died. His style of painting was influenced by contemporary developments in sculpture. Among his principal pictures are the Barbadori Altarpiece (1437), the Coronation of the Virgin (1441), and his great fresco cycles in Prato of *St John the Baptist and *St Stephen (1452–65). Though he belonged to the second generation of Renaissance artists and his work did not reach the spiritual heights of a Fra *Angelico (except perhaps in his representations of the Adoration of the Child and the Annunciation), he none the less exercised a considerable influence on the subsequent development of devotional art. He was the father of the painter Filippino Lippi (*c.*1457–1504).

Studies, with reproductions, by H. Mendelsohn (Berlin, 1909), R. Oertel (Vienna, 1942), M. Pittaluga (Florence, 1949), G. Marchini (Florence, 1975), and J. Ruda (Oxford, 1987).

Lipsius, Richard Adelbert (1830–92), German Protestant theologian. He studied at Leipzig, and after holding other academic appointments became professor of systematic theology at Jena in 1871. In his Pilatus-Acten (1871; new edn., 1886) and his Die Apokryphen Apostelgeschichten und Apostellegenden (4 vols., 1883–90) he did much towards unravelling problems connected with early Christian apocryphal literature, and in 1891 he edited, in association with M. Bonnet, the still standard collection of Apocryphal Acts. He also made researches into the early history of the Popes, arguing that St Peter was never in Rome, and into the literary relationships of the early anti-heretical Christian writings. A pronounced liberal in dogmatic theology, he set out his systematic doctrines in a Lehrbuch der evangelisch-protestantischen Dogmatik (1876) and in Philosophie und Religion (1885); but he differed from A. *Ritschl and his disciples in a greater readiness to draw on the theoretical aspects of I. *Kant's idealism.

A. Neumann, Grundlagen und Grundzüge der Weltanschauung von R. A. Lipsius (1896). Short study by H. Weinel (Tübingen, 1930). F. R. Lipsius in PRE (3rd edn.), 11 (1902), pp. 520–4; M. Scheibe in Allegemeine Deutsche Biographie, 52 (1906), pp. 7–27.

Lisle, Ambrose Lisle March Phillipps de. See DE LISLE, AMBROSE LISLE MARCH PHILLIPPS.

Lismore, Book of. A 15th-cent. MS found in 1814 at Lismore Castle, the Irish seat of the dukes of Devonshire, and now at Chatsworth House. It contains a miscellaneous collection of medieval Irish literature, secular and ecclesiastical, including Lives of saints in Middle Irish.

Facsimile, with introd. by R. A. S. Macalister (Facsimiles in Collotype of Irish Manuscripts, 5; Dublin, 1950). Lives of Saints from the Book of Lismore, ed., with Eng. tr. and notes, by W. Stokes (Anecdota Oxoniensia, Mediaeval and Modern Series, 5; 1890). B. Ó Cuív, 'Observations on the Book of Lismore', Proceedings of the Royal Irish Academy, 83 C (1983), pp. 269–92.

litany (Gk. λιτανεία, 'a supplication'). A form of prayer consisting of a series of petitions or biddings which are sung or said by a deacon, a priest, or cantors, and to which the people make fixed responses, e.g. Kyrie eleison*, 'Grant, Lord', 'We beseech thee, hear us', etc. The litany apparently originated at *Antioch in the 4th cent., and thence by way of Asia Minor passed to *Constantinople, whence it spread to the rest of the E. Litanies said by the deacon (ἐκτεναί) figure largely in the Greek liturgies, being the principal element of the devotion of the congregation, from whom the main parts of the service which take place in the sanctuary are concealed by the *iconostasis. From Constantinople the litany spread also to Rome and the W. Pope Gelasius I (492–6) introduced a litanic intercession (the Deprecatio Gelasii) into the Mass of which the Kyrie may be a relic. The litany became also a favourite form of private prayer. Invocations of saints were a feature in many litanies (see LITANY OF THE SAINTS). The procession of St *Mark's Day, instituted at Rome in the 5th cent. or earlier to replace a similar pagan observance, acquired the name of litaniae majores, while the *Rogations were by contrast known as the litaniae minores.

N. Serarius, SJ, Litaneutici seu de Litaniis (Cologne, 1609; repr. in his Opuscula Theologica, 3 (Mainz, 1611), pp. 60–94). Irish Litanies, ed., with Eng. tr., by C. Plummer (HBS 62; 1925). L. Eisenhofer, Handbuch der katholischen Liturgik, 1 (1932), pp. 193–202. A. *Baumstark, Liturgie comparée (3rd edn. by B. Botte, OSB, 1953), pp. 80–90; Eng. tr. (1958), pp. 74–80. P. De Clerck, La 'Prière Universelle' dans les liturgies latines anciennes (Liturgiewissenschaftliche Quellen und Forschungen, 62; 1977), esp. pp. 114–314. D. E. Moeller, 'Litanies majeures et rogations', Questions Liturgiques et Paroissiales, 23 (1938), pp. 75–91. H. J. Hotham in DCA 2 (1880), pp. 999–1005, s.v.; F. *Cabrol, OSB, in DACL 9 (pt. 2; 1930), cols. 1540–71, s.v. 'Litanies', with bibl. See also bibl. to KYRIE ELEISON, LITANY OF THE SAINTS, and ROGATION DAYS.

Litany, the BCP. The form of 'general supplication' appointed to be sung or said after *Morning Prayer on *Sundays, *Wednesdays, and *Fridays. It is also included, with the addition of special suffrages, in the rites of Ordination. It falls into two parts: (1) the invocation of the Persons of the Trinity, the deprecations, the obsecrations, the intercessions, and a final section consisting of invocations, Kyrie eleison and the Lord's Prayer; and (2) versicles and responses, followed by collects, which are an adaptation of a special intercession in time of war. The Litany was first issued by T. *Cranmer in 1544 for use in the processions ordered by *Henry VIII at a time when England was at war with Scotland and France. Cranmer drew mostly on the Latin litanies then in use in England, esp. the *Sarum *Rogationtide Litany, but also on M. *Luther's 'Latin Litany' of 1529 and the Deacon's Litany in the 'Liturgy of St John *Chrysostom'. Though he added little or nothing of his own, he made a notable change in the rhythm by grouping several suffrages under one response. In 1544 the invocations of the Trinity were followed by three invocations of saints; these were omitted when the Litany was included in the First BCP (1549). Minor changes were made in later versions of the BCP and the collects at the end have been altered several times. The appointment of Wednesday and Friday as Litany days coincides with Lutheran usage.

Text of the Litanies of 1544, 1552, and 1661, with indication of sources, in F. E. *Brightman, The English Rite, 1 (1915), pp. 174–91. W. H. Karslake, The Litany of the English Church Considered in its History, its Plan, and the Manner in which it is Intended to be Used (1876). E. G. C. F. Atchley, The People's Prayers: Being some Considerations on the Use of the Litany in Public Worship (*Alcuin Club Tracts, 6; 1906). Cf. also Brightman, op. cit., pp. lviii–lxviii, and see bibl. to COMMON PRAYER, THE BOOK OF.

litany desk. In the C of E, a low movable desk placed in the midst of the church, within or without the chancel, at which the minister kneels to recite the Litany in acc. with *Injunctions 24 of 1547 and 18 of 1559.

Litany of Loreto. A litany in honour of the BVM, consisting of a series of invocations of our Lady under various honorific titles, such as 'Mother of Divine grace', 'Virgin most prudent', 'Queen of Angels', etc., each followed by the request: 'Pray for us'. It derives its name from the famous Italian shrine, where its use is attested for the year 1558; but it is doubtful whether it was first sung at *Loreto and did not rather arise under *Dominican influence in the confraternities of the Rosary and thence make its way to the shrine. It is a simplified version of older Litanies of our Lady, which first appeared in the 12th cent. It was approved and indulgenced by *Sixtus V in 1587, and again by *Clement VIII in 1601. In the course of time more titles were added to the original series, e.g. 'Queen of the Most Holy Rosary', 'Queen conceived without Original Sin', and 'Mother of Good Counsel' by *Leo XIII, 'Queen of Peace' by *Benedict XV in 1917, and 'Queen assumed into Heaven' by *Pius XII after the definition of the doctrine of the *Assumption of the BVM. It is often recited in RC churches after the service of *Benediction, and has been used in many religious orders, e.g. by the *Carmelites, every day after Vespers, and by the Dominicans on Saturdays after *Compline.

A. De Santi, SJ, Le Litanie lauretane (1897; Fr. tr., 1900). J. Sauren, Die lauretanische Litanei nach Ursprung, Geschichte und Inhalt dargestellt (Kempten, 1895). K. Kammer, Die lauretanische Litanei (Innsbruck, 1960). A. De Santi in CE 9 (1910), pp. 286–90, s.v.

Litany of the Saints. In the W. Church this litany is in regular use. It consists of invocations for mercy and deliverance addressed to the three Persons of the Trinity and for intercession to the BVM and a list of prophets, patriarchs, angels, apostles, saints, confessors, and virgins individually and in classes. Early forms of such a litany are found in the E. from the end of the 3rd cent. and in the W. from the late 5th cent. A later stage is represented in the 'Athelstan Psalter' (9th cent.), the *Stowe Missal and the 'Book of *Cerne'. The list of saints invoked varied locally and increased in length through the Middle Ages until in 1570 it became necessary to obtain Papal licence to differ from the use of Rome. It was revised in 1969, when some modern saints were introduced. Acc. to current RC practice, the longer form may be used for solemn intercessions at any time; a shortened form is used for *Ordinations, dedications of churches and during the *Paschal Vigil Service; and a further form exists in the Commendation of the Dying. The practice of reciting the Greater Litanies on St *Mark's day was suppressed in 1969 and it is no longer obligatory on the *Rogation Days (q.v.). Other litanies, e.g. the *Litany of Loreto and that of St *Joseph, are used in private devotion. See also DEPRECATIO GELASII.

C. Kammer, Die Litanei von Allen Heiligen, die Namen-Jesu-Litanei, die Josefs-Litanei (Innsbruck, 1962). E. *Bishop, 'The Litany of the Saints in the Stowe Missal', JTS 7 (1906), pp. 122–36; repr., with additional note, in Liturgica Historica (Oxford, 1918), pp. 137–64. M. Coens, SJ, 'Anciennes Litanies des saints', Anal. Boll. 54 (1936), pp. 5–37; 55 (1937), pp. 49–69; 59 (1941), pp. 272–98; 62 (1944), pp. 126–68, rev. and repr. in id., Recueil d'études bollandiennes (Subsidia Hagiographica, 37; 1963), pp. 131–322. P. De Clerck, La 'Prière Universelle' dans les liturgies latines anciennes (Liturgiewissenschaftliche Quellen und Forschungen, 62; 1977), pp. 275–81. S. A. van Dijk, OFM, 'The Litany of the Saints on Holy Saturday', JEH 1 (1950), pp. 51–62. M. Lapidge (ed.), Anglo-Saxon Litanies of the Saints (HBS 106; 1991), with general introd., pp. 1–61, and bibl., pp. 86–8.

Literary Criticism. See HIGHER CRITICISM.

literate. In the C of E a cleric who has been admitted to holy orders without a university degree. Canon 58 of 1604 permitted such ministers 'to wear upon their surplices, instead of hoods, some decent *tippet of black, so it be not silk'.

Little Brothers of Jesus. See DE FOUCAULD, CHARLES EUGÈNE.

Little Entrance (Gk. μικρὰ εἴσοδος). In the E. Church, the procession at the *Liturgy with the *Gospel Book. In origin it was the procession of the bishop and clergy into the church, thus marking the beginning of the Liturgy proper; it is thus the first intervention in the service of the bishop, who at this point is fetched from the nave. The procession now takes place whether or not the bishop is present in person. See also GREAT ENTRANCE.

Little Flower of Jesus. A popular designation of St *Teresa of Lisieux (q.v.), who frequently so describes herself in her autobiography.

Little Flowers of St Francis (the 'Fioretti'). A classic collection of stories and traditions about St *Francis of Assisi (d. 1226) and his companions. It is apparently an anonymous Tuscan translation of 53 chapters of the 'Actus Beati Francisci et Sociorum Eius' which was written by Fra Ugolini Boniscambi of Montegiorgio *c.*1335, to which the translator added 'Five Considerations of the Holy Stigmata' derived from other sources as well as from the 'Actus'. The translation dates from *c.*1375. It gives an exquisite picture of the religious life and spirit of the early Franciscans. In some 15th-cent. MSS and modern editions other material has been added.

Editio princeps, Vicenza, 1476. Modern edns. by G. Pagnani, OFM (Rome, 1959), and incl. the later additions, by R. Pratesi, OFM, with note by B. Bughetti, OFM (Florence, 1960), and among the writings of St Francis ed. A. Vicinelli (Verona, 1955), pp. 255–397. The numerous Eng. trs. incl. those of R. Brown (Garden City, NY [1958]) and L. Sherley-Price (Penguin Classics, 1959). 'Actus Beati Francisci et Sociorum Eius' ed. P. *Sabatier (Collection d'Études et de Documents sur l'Histoire religieuse et littéraire du Moyen Âge, 4; 1902) and J. Cambell, M. Bignori, OFM, and G. Boccoli, OFM (Pubblicazione della Bibliotheca Francescana Chiesa Nuova—Assisi, 5; Assisi, 1988). Eng. tr. by E. M. Blaiklock and A. C. Keys (London, 1985). R. Brown in NCE 5 (1967), pp. 932 f., s.v. 'Fioretti, The'.

Little Gidding. A manor, 11 miles NW of Huntingdon, where the Ferrar family lived under a definite religious rule in the C of E from 1625 to 1646. The household, some 40 persons in all, consisted of N. *Ferrar, in deacon's orders, his mother Mary, and the families of his brother and sister. A systematic rule of devotion and work was followed. At the beginning of every hour, from 6 a.m. to 8 p.m., there was an Office of a quarter of an hour, in which several groups of the community took their turn. It consisted of a hymn and portions from the Psalms and the Gospels, the whole of the Psalter being thus recited every day and the Gospels once a month. In addition to this two or more members watched every night from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m., once more reciting the whole of the Psalter. Ferrar himself kept this watch two, and later three, times a week. Besides prayer, the community engaged in charitable works for the whole neighbourhood. Its members visited and relieved the poor and sick, and ran a dispensary and a school for the village children. They were also skilled in the art of bookbinding, and the famous 'Harmonies', now in the British Library, were arranged, illustrated, and bound by them under Ferrar's direction. For recreation they had a study circle called the Little Academy, which met frequently to tell and discuss stories illustrating events in the Church's year and Christian virtues.

The house was visited by *Charles I and G. *Herbert. After Nicholas Ferrar's death in 1637 the community continued until it was raided by O. *Cromwell's soldiers in 1646, when its members were dispersed. The house has disappeared, but the church still stands. Interest in Ferrar and his community was reawakened by the publication of J. H. *Shorthouse's famous novel, John Inglesant (1881), with its vivid and, except for the romance of Mary Collett, historically accurate picture of life at Little Gidding; it received further impetus from the poem 'Little Gidding' included in T. S. *Eliot's Four Quartets (1944).

In 1977 a new (ecumenical) community was founded at Little Gidding. It is named 'The Community of Christ the Sower', and, with a membership of about 35 people, including some resident families, it has houses also at Leighton Bromswold and Great Gidding. A simple daily Office is recited in common, and the community receives guests, publishes in the field of Christian spirituality, and tends a small farm.

The Arminian Nunnery; or a Brief Description and Relation of the late erected Monastical Place, called the Arminian Nunnery, at Little Gidding in Huntingdonshire (1641). H. Collett, Little Gidding and its Founder (1925). A. [L.] Maycock, Chronicles of Little Gidding (1954; on the history of Little Gidding from 1637 to 1748, when the estate passed out of the Ferrar family). J. E. Acland, Little Gidding and its Inmates in the Time of Charles I (1903). Appendix on 'Little Gidding' by W. Page in The Victoria History of the County of Huntingdon, 1 (1926), pp. 399–406. E. C. Sharland (ed.), The Story Books of Little Gidding (1899); A. M. Williams (ed.), Conversations at Little Gidding: 'On the Retirement of Charles V', 'On the Austere Life'. Dialogues by Members of the Ferrar Family (Cambridge, 1970). See also bibl. s.v. FERRAR, NICHOLAS.

Little Labyrinth, The. A lost 3rd-cent. treatise which, acc. to *Eusebius, was directed against the *Adoptionist heretics, *Theodotus and *Artemon. It is referred to under this title (ὁ σμικρὸς λαβύρινθος) by *Theodoret (Haer. Fab. Comp. 2. 5), who says that some ascribe it to *Origen. Two passages are quoted by Eusebius (HE 5. 28). In modern times, its authorship has been assigned to St *Hippolytus by J. B. *Lightfoot (followed by A. *Harnack and O. *Bardenhewer), though G. Salmon wished to ascribe it to *Gaius. Its attribution is still disputed. It is to be distinguished from another writing, the 'Labyrinth', mentioned by *Photius (Cod. 48), which is very probably to be identified with St Hippolytus' Refutatio.

J. B. Lightfoot, St Clement of Rome, 2 (1890 edn.), pp. 377–80. R. H. *Connolly, OSB, 'Eusebius H.E. v. 28', JTS 49 (1948), pp. 73–9. P. Nautin, Le Dossier d'Hippolyte et de Méliton (Patristica, 1; 1953), pp. 115–20. CPG 1 (1983), p. 275 (no. 1915). Bardenhewer, 2, pp. 567 f. G. Salmon in DCB 1 (1877), pp. 384–6, s.v. 'Caius (2)'.

Little Office of Our Lady (Officium Parvum Beatae Mariae Virginis). A brief office in honour of the BVM, modelled on the Divine *Office; it was thus divided into the traditional seven hours, but Mattins had only one *Nocturn with three Psalms and three Lessons, and the Psalms of the other hours did not vary acc. to the days of the week. It was first known in the 10th cent. It originated in the religious orders, being early adopted by the *Cistercians and *Camaldolese, and was later taken over by the secular clergy. In the Middle Ages the Little Office of Our Lady was widely reproduced in 'Books of Hours', many of which were richly illuminated. It was retained at the *Breviary reform of *Pius V in 1568, though the obligation of its recitation was no longer binding under sin; *Pius X removed the obligation altogether, though recommending it as a private devotion. It became the ordinary form of vocal prayer of a number of new congregations of women and its recitation was frequently enjoined upon *Tertiaries. In 1953 a revision was approved. This affords greater variety by dividing the year into six seasons (instead of two), with special lessons, collects, etc., and provides for the observance of 28 feasts (of which 12 are Marian). See also PRIMER.

Facsimile edn. of two 11th-cent. MSS ed., with introd., by E. S. Dewick (HBS 21; 1902), with refs.; a 15th-cent. MS ed. H. Littlehales, The Prymer or Lay Folks' Prayer Book (EETS, Orig. Series, 105, 109; 1895–7), with important essay by E. *Bishop, 'The Origin of the Prymer', pp. xi–xxxviii, repr. in Bishop's Liturgica Historica (1918), pp. 211–27. E. Taunton, The Little Office of Our Lady: A Treatise Theoretical, Practical, and Exegetical (1903). E. Hoskins, Horae Beatae Mariae Virginis or Sarum and York Primers with Kindred Books and Primers of the Reformed Roman Use (1901). J. Leclercq, OSB, 'Fragmenta Mariana', pt. 2, 'Formes successives de l'office votif de la Vierge', EL 72 (1958), pp. 294–301; id., 'Formes anciennes de l'office mariale', ibid. 74 (1960), pp. 89–102. H. Bohatta, Bibliographie des Livres d'heures (Vienna, 1909). L. A. St L. Toke in CE 9 (1910), pp. 294 f.

Little Offices. Originally, very short offices modelled on the *Little Office of Our Lady, intended for devotional recitation. Recently the term has been more commonly used of forms of prayer, based on the Divine *Office, usually with a reduced content of Psalms and a modern lectionary. While it had long been customary for devout laity and religious not bound to recite the choir offices acc. to the Roman or monastic *Breviary to use the *Day Hours alone (omitting *Mattins) or the Little Office of Our Lady, in modern times a number of other 'Little Offices' have been compiled, mainly in the vernacular, to meet the needs of those not completely satisfied with the existing books and to provide some liturgical content for their common prayer. Among those most widely used were the Officium Divinum Parvum compiled by H. Fleischmann, OSB (Freiburg, 1933; rev. 1950), used esp. in German-speaking countries; A Short Breviary for Religious and the Laity, edited by the Monks of St John's Abbey, Collegeville (Collegeville, Minn., 1940; new edn. by W. G. Heidt, OSB, ibid., 1954), which circulated widely esp. in USA; Klein Brevier by T. Stallaert, CSSR (Haarlem and Antwerp, 1950; Eng. tr., 1957; also tr. into Fr. and Ital.); Bréviaire des fidèles by A. M. Henry, OP (1951); and the Livre d'heures compiled by the Benedictines of En-Calcat (1952), which has predominated in French-speaking countries. Although these shortened offices were given a certain status by the 'Constitution on the Liturgy' of the Second *Vatican Council (1963), they were virtually superseded when the Office was reordered by *Paul VI's Liturgia Horarum (1971); those not bound to recite the whole Office normally use Morning and Evening Prayer (*Lauds and *Vespers).

H. A. P. Schmidt, SJ, Introductio in Liturgiam Occidentalem (Freiburg, 1960), pp. 472–83; L. J. Doyle in NCE 2 (1967), p. 793, s.v. 'Breviary, Short'.

Little Sisters. See DE FOUCAULD, CHARLES EUGÈNE.

Littledale, Richard Frederick (1833–90), liturgical writer and Anglo-Catholic apologist. He came of an Irish family but lived in England from *c.*1855, holding curacies from 1856 to 1861, when ill-health forced him to abandon parochial work. In an essay in The Church and the World, ed. O. Shipley (1866), he argued that Ritualism had an important missionary dimension. His Plain Reasons against joining the Church of Rome (1880) enjoyed a wide circulation. He also completed J. M. *Neale's Commentary on the Psalms from Primitive and Medieval Writers (4 vols., 1860–74). With J. E. Vaux, he was the first editor of The Priest's Prayer Book (1864).

G. C. Boase in DNB 33 (1893), pp. 364 f., s.v.

liturgical colours. See COLOURS, LITURGICAL.

Liturgical Movement. A movement of which the object is the restoration of the active participation of the people in the official worship of the Church. In the RC Church the revival may be traced to P. L. P. *Guéranger (q.v.), but it received its chief impetus from the directions of *Pius X relating to Church music (1903) and to the promotion of Eucharistic piety and frequent communion. It was fostered esp. by the *Benedictines, e.g. the abbeys of *Solesmes in France, *Maredsous and Mont-César in Belgium, and *Maria Laach in Germany. From *c.*1910 the movement spread to the Netherlands, Italy, and England, and later to the USA and elsewhere. In England there had been some restoration of traditional liturgical worship under Cardinal N. P. S. *Wiseman in the 19th cent., but a later stage of the Continental movement was popularized largely through the writings of F. *Cabrol on the liturgy and esp. his English–Latin Missal (1921). In 1929 the Society of St Gregory was founded to encourage the active participation of the laity in worship through the propagation of *plainsong. At about the time of the Second World War in France, and soon afterwards in Germany, the impetus of the movement spread outside the monastic centres into the parochial and missionary spheres, and from then on the movement took a more pastoral direction. The attempt to restore the scrupulous observance of the rite in the form in which it had developed in the Middle Ages and later was joined by pressure for a reform of the rite itself in order to bring it into line with much earlier liturgical understanding and practice and with the pastoral and evangelistic needs of the day. These aspirations lay behind the development of the 'dialogue mass' in which the people joined in the responses, and the custom of reading a vernacular version of the liturgy in the body of the church at the same time as the priest celebrated in Latin. In his encyclical Mediator Dei (20 Nov. 1947) *Pius XII gave considerable encouragement to the liturgical movement by his insistence on the importance of the liturgy and the need for the participation of the people, though at the same time he stressed the need for proper order. From this time permission was given for the use of the vernacular in the administration of all sacraments except the Eucharist; and the reform of the rites began with the revision of the Holy Week liturgy in 1951 and 1955 (see GOOD FRIDAY, MAUNDY THURSDAY and PASCHAL VIGIL SERVICE). The Second *Vatican Council in its 'Constitution on the Sacred Liturgy' (1963) endorsed the aims of the liturgical movement, encouraging the active participation of the people in the liturgy, and legislated for the use of the vernacular and the reform of the rites (a new Ordo Missae, lectionary, and calendar appeared in 1969 and a definitive Roman Missal in 1970; for details of new rites of Baptism, Confirmation, Dedication of Churches, etc., see s.vv.). More recently consideration has been given to the possibility of adapting liturgies for use in different parts of the world where different cultures prevail.

The renewed interest in the liturgy has not been confined to the RC Church. The Ritualist Movement, inaugurated by the *Tractarians to give sacramental worship a central place in the C of E, grew steadily in the early part of the 20th cent. More recently there has been a tendency to change the traditional pattern of Sunday worship from a plain celebration of the Eucharist at an early hour, followed by either Morning Prayer or a Solemn Eucharist at which only the celebrant communicated; the tendency has been to replace these services by one 'Parish Communion' at which there is some singing and often a short sermon and at which nearly all present communicate. This has often been accompanied by ceremonial developments (mainly taken over from the RC Church) which are intended to stress the corporate aspects of the liturgy, such as the adoption of a '*westward position' by the celebrant and an 'offertory procession' in which members of the congregation bring the bread and wine up to the altar. The same influences which have been felt at work in the RC Church have also played some part in the revisions of the liturgy authorized by the Prayer Book (*Alternative and Other Services) Measure (1965). Similar tendencies have been at work in most other Churches, possibly partly at least in reaction against the individualism by which nearly all Churches have been affected since the 16th cent.

O. Rousseau, OSB, Histoire du mouvement liturgique: Esquisse historique depuis le début du XIX^e siècle jusqu'au pontificat de Pie X (Lex Orandi, 3; 1945; Eng. tr., Westminster, Md., 1951), with bibl.; J. H. Srawley, The Liturgical Movement: Its Origin and Growth (*Alcuin Club Tracts, 27; 1954). E. B. Koenker, The Liturgical Renaissance in the Roman Catholic Church (Chicago, 1954). J. D. Benoit, Liturgical Renewal: Studies in Catholic and Protestant Developments on the Continent (Studies in Ministry and Worship, 5; 1958). What is the Liturgical Movement? by Priests of St Séverin (Paris) and St Joseph (Nice), adapted into Eng. by L. C. Sheppard [1964]. [D.] H. [M.] Davies, Worship and Theology in England: The Ecumenical Century, 1900–1965 (1965), esp. pp. 13–49.

L. *Beauduin, OSB, La Piété de l'Église (1914; Eng. tr., Liturgy, the Life of the Church, Collegeville, Minn., 1926). La Participation active des fidèles au culte (Cours et conférences des Semaines Liturgiques, 11; Louvain, 1933). A. G. Hebert (ed.), The Parish Communion (1937). A. R. Shands, The Liturgical Movement and the Local Church (1959; rev. edn., 1965). M. H. Shepherd, Jun. (ed.), The Liturgical Renewal of the Church: Addresses of the Liturgical Conference held in Grace Church, Madison, May 19–21, 1958 (New York, 1960). Id., The Reform of Liturgical Worship: Perspectives and Prospects (Bohlen Lectures, 1959; New York, 1961). J. D. Crichton, The Church's Worship: Considerations on the Liturgical Constitution of the Second Vatican Council (1964), incl. Eng. tr. of the Constitution. Id., H. E. Winstone, and J. R. Ainslee (eds.), English Catholic Worship: Liturgical Renewal in England since 1900 (1979). H. E. Chandlee in A New Dictionary of Liturgy & Worship, ed. J. G. Davies (1986), pp. 307–14, s.v.

liturgiology. A cumbersome term for the scientific study of liturgies and related subjects. Its first appearance is in the title of J. M. *Neale's Essays on Liturgiology and Church History (1863).

Liturgy (Gk. λειτουργία from λεώς 'people' and ἔργον 'work'). The original Gk. word was used of a public work of any kind, not only religious, but in the *Septuagint it is applied particularly to the services of the *Temple. The word in English is used in two senses: (1) of all the prescribed services of the Church, e.g. incl. the canonical hours, as contrasted with private devotion; and (2) specifically as a title of the *Eucharist (as the chief act of public worship). It is commonly so used among the E. Churches. In derived senses the word is further used: (1) of the written texts which order such services (e.g. the 'Liturgy of St John Chrysostom'), and (2) as a general name for the branch of study (more cumbrously 'liturgiology') which concerns itself with these liturgies.

Among the classic collections of liturgical docs. and texts are those of J. *Mabillon, E. *Martène, B. *Gavanti, G. M. *Tommasi, E. *Renaudot (qq.v.). Cf. also F. *Cabrol, OSB and H. *Leclercq, OSB, Monumenta Ecclesiae Liturgica, 1: Reliquiae Liturgicae Vetustissimae (Paris, 1900–2), F. E. *Brightman, Liturgies Eastern and Western, 1 (Eastern Liturgies, 1895; all pub.), and J. Quasten (ed.), Monumenta Eucharistica et Liturgica Vetustissima (Florilegium Patristicum, 7; Bonn, 1935). Imp. modern studies incl. P. *Guéranger, OSB, Institutiones Liturgicae (4 vols., Paris, 1878–85); L. *Duchesne, Origines du culte chrétien (1889); L. Eisenhofer, Grundriss der Liturgik des römischen Ritus (1924; 5th edn., J. Lechner, 1950); id., Handbuch der Katholischen Liturgik (2 vols., 1932–3); C. Harris and W. K. Lowther Clarke (eds.), Liturgy and Worship: A Companion to the Prayer Books of the Anglican Communion (1932); C. Callewaert, Liturgicae Institutiones: De Sacra Liturgia universim (Bruges, 1933); A. *Baumstark, Liturgie comparée (Chevetogne, 1939; 3rd edn. by B. Botte, OSB, 1953; Eng. tr., 1958); M. Righetti, UJD, Manuale di storia liturgica (4 vols., Milan, 1944–53; 2nd edn., 1950–59; 3rd edn., 1964 ff.); A. G. Martimort and others, L'Église en prière: Introduction à la liturgie ([1962]; new edn., 4 vols. [1983–4]; Eng. tr., 1986); C. [P. M.] Jones and others (eds.), The Study of Liturgy (1978; 2nd edn., 1992). On the whole subject, A. Baumstark, Vom geschichtlichen Werden der Liturgie (Ecclesia Orans, 10; 1923), and K. Mohlberg, OSB, Ziele und Aufgaben der liturgiegeschichtlichen Forschungen (Münster i.W., 1919). Among periodicals devoted mainly or exclusively to the furtherance of liturgical studies are Ephemerides Liturgicae (Rome, 1887 ff.), Les Questions liturgiques et paroissiales (Louvain, 1911 ff.), Jahrbuch für Liturgiewissenschaft (1921 ff.), contd. since 1951 as Archiv für Liturgiewissenschaft, Ambrosius (Milan, 1925 ff.), Sacris Erudiri (Bruges, 1948 ff.), and Liturgisches Jahrbuch (Münster, 1951 ff.); also the series Liturgiegeschichtliche Quellen und Forschungen (Münster, 1918 ff.), Rerum Ecclesiasticarum Documenta cura Pontificii Athenaei Sancti Anselmi de Urbe edita (Rome, 1956 ff.), and the DACL (unhappily its interesting and often sparkling arts. suffer from innumerable inaccuracies). P. Radó, OSB, Enchiridion Liturgicum (2 vols., Rome, 1961; 2nd edn., 1966); L. Brinkhoff, OFM, and others, Liturgisch Woordenboek (2 vols., 1958–68).

Liudhard, St (d. *c.*602), chaplain of Queen Bertha, who brought him from Gaul to England, as was arranged by the terms of her marriage to *Ethelbert, King of Kent (*Bede, HE 1. 25). He probably ministered in St Martin's Church at *Canterbury. *William of Malmesbury (untrustworthy) represents him as having been prominent in preparing for the evangelization of Kent by the Roman mission of St *Augustine. Feast day, 4 Feb.

The principal authority is Bede, HE 1. 25; notes in edn. by C. Plummer, 2 (Oxford, 1896), p. 42; comm. by J. M. Wallace-Hadrill (ibid., 1988), pp. 33, 36 f., 39. Later Lives listed in Hardy, 1 (pt. 1; 1862), pp. 175 f. William of Malmesbury, Gesta Regum, 1. 9 (ed. W. *Stubbs, 1, Rolls Series, 1887, p. 13).

Liudprand (c. 922–*c.*972), or 'Liutprand', Bp. of Cremona. A member of a Lombard family prominent in Pavia, he entered the service of Berengar, ruler of northern Italy, who sent him in 949 on an embassy to the Byzantine court. He subsequently transferred his allegiance to the Emp. Otto I, who nominated him Bp. of Cremona in 961. In 963 he was sent as an ambassador to Rome, where he took part in the assembly which deposed *John XII, and in 968 he undertook a mission to Constantinople, after Otto's invasion of Byzantine territory in SE Italy. His unsuccessful negotiations with the Byzantine Emp. Nicephorus Phocas II are described in his entertaining 'Relatio de Legatione Constantinopolitana'. It is possible, though not probable, that he may have taken part in the embassy to Constantinople in 971 which negotiated the marriage between Otto's son (later Otto II) and the Byzantine princess Theophano. His most important work is the 'Antapodosis', which relates events from 888 to 949; while the 'Historia Ottonis' covers the years 960–4. Liudprand is the chief authority for the Italian history of the period, but he allowed rhetoric and prejudice to obscure accuracy and objectivity. The ascription of the '*Liber Pontificalis' to him is erroneous.

Collected edn. of his works by H. de la Higuera and L. Ramirez de Prado (Antwerp, 1640); crit. edn. by J. Becker (MGH, Scriptores Rerum Germanicarum in Usum Scholarum; 1915). Eng. tr. by F. A. Wright (Broadway Medieval Library, 1930), with introd., pp. 1–24. 'Relatio de Legatione Constantinopolitana' also ed., with Eng. tr. and useful introd., by [A.] B. Scott (London, 1993). M. Lintzel, Studien über Liutprand von Cremona (Historische Studien, Heft 233; 1933), with further refs., repr. in his Ausgewählte Schriften, 2 (1961), pp. 351–98. M. Rentschler, Liudprand von Cremona (Frankfurter wissenschaftliche Beiträge, Kulturwissenschaftliche Reihe, 14; 1981). J. N. Sutherland, Liudprand of Cremona, Bishop, Diplomat, Historian [posthumously pub.] (Biblioteca degli Studi Medievali, 14; Spoleto, 1988). K. [J.] Leyser, 'Liudprand of Cremona, Preacher and Homilist', in K. Walsh and D. Wood (eds.), The Bible in the Medieval World: Essays in Memory of Beryl Smalley (Studies in Church History, Subsidia, 4; 1985), pp. 43–60.

Liverpool Cathedrals. (1) THE ANGLICAN CATHEDRAL was designed in the Romantic Gothic style by G. G. *Scott (RC; 1880–1960), the winner of an architectural competition in 1903. Built of local sandstone, on a massive scale, high on St James's Mount, it dominates Merseyside. The foundation stone was laid in 1904. The Lady Chapel was consecrated in 1910 and the chancel in 1924. After his death, Scott's partner shortened and simplified the plans for the west end, consolidating the building symmetrically about the central tower. It was completed in 1978.

(2) THE RC CATHEDRAL. A large Gothic revival building was originally designed by A. W. *Pugin in 1853, on a site at Everton, but only the Lady Chapel was built. In 1930 Sir Edwin Lutyens (1869–1944) designed a massive domed building for a new site in the centre of the city; the foundation stone was laid in 1934, but the Second World War and rises in building costs caused it to be abandoned on completion of the crypt. The design of Sir Frederick Gibberd (1908–84), the winner of an architectural competition in 1959, is a circular and completely modern building, incorporating the crypt. A congregation of 2,000 people can encircle the central altar, which is surmounted by a tower of coloured glass. The Cathedral is dedicated to Christ the King and was consecrated in May 1967.

(1) V. E. Cotton, The Book of Liverpool Cathedral (1928; rev., 1964). J. Riley, Today's Cathedral: The Cathedral Church of Christ, Liverpool (1978).

(2) F. Gibberd, Metropolitan Cathedral of Christ the King Liverpool (1968). A. S. G. Butler and others, The Architecture of Sir Edwin Lutyens, 3 (1950), pp. 47–51.

J. N. Tarn, 'Liverpool's Two Cathedrals', in D. Wood (ed.), The Church and the Arts (Studies in Church History, 28; Oxford, 1992), pp. 537–69.

Livingstone, David (1813–73), missionary and explorer. A native of Blantyre in Strathclyde, he educated himself by omnivorous reading while employed in a cotton factory. The study of Thomas Dick's Philosophy of a Future State determined him to devote his life to missionary work and the alleviation of suffering; and after attending medical classes in Glasgow, in 1838 he went to London, where he joined the *LMS, at first contemplating work in *China. In 1840, inspired by R. *Moffat, he embarked for the Cape of Good Hope and for some years worked as a missionary in the Bechuana country. Here he became passionately interested in Africa and worked for several years among her people, winning their confidence by his medical work and schools. Reports of his explorations and experiences aroused wide interest in England and he was greeted with enthusiasm on his return in 1856. In 1858 he resumed his travels in Africa, no longer under the auspices of the LMS, as he had ceased to be a missionary in the technical sense. In 1861, however, he gave pioneer help to the *UMCA (q.v.). In 1859 he discovered the lakes of Shirwa and Nyasa; he later explored the basin of the Upper Nile and discovered Lake Bangweulu in 1868. In 1871 he was found in a state of exhaustion by H. M. *Stanley of the New York Herald. He died in 1873 in the village of Ilala and was buried in *Westminster Abbey. His principal works were his Missionary Travels and Researches in South Africa (1857) and The Zambesi and its Tributaries (1865), which both had a wide circulation.

Livingstone's Private Journals, 1851–1853, ed. I. Schapera (London, 1960); African Journal, 1853–1856, ed. id. (2 vols., ibid., 1963); The Zambesi Expedition . . ., 1858–1863. Journals with letters and dispatches, ed. J. P. R. Wallis (2 vols., ibid., 1956); Last Journals in Central Africa from 1865 to his Death, ed. H. Waller (2 vols., ibid., 1874). Some Letters from Livingstone, 1840–1872, ed. D. Chamberlin (ibid., 1940); Family Letters, 1841–1856, ed. I. Schapera (2 vols., ibid., 1959). The Zambesi Doctors: David Livingstone's Letters to John Kirk 1858–1872, ed. R. Foskett (Edinburgh, 1964). Lives incl. those of W. G. Blaikie (London, 1880; the official biography), R. J. Campbell (ibid., 1929), G. Seaver (ibid., 1957), and O. Ransford (ibid., 1978). R. Coupland, Livingstone's Last Journey (1945). D. O. Helly, Livingstone's Legacy: Horace Waller and Victorian Mythmaking (Athens, Oh., and London [1987]). J. A. Casada, Dr David Livingstone and Sir Henry Morton Stanley: An Annotated Bibliography (1976), pp. 15–102, 192–4. R. H. Vetch in DNB 33 (1893), pp. 384–96.

Llandaff. Welsh episcopal see, two miles north of the centre of Cardiff. The diocese used to cover most of SE Wales, but in 1921 the diocese of Monmouth was formed out of it. Its early history, to the first part of the 12th cent., is told in the 'Book of Llandaff', which is not a trustworthy source. Written mainly in Latin, with some pieces in Welsh, it was largely inspired by Bp. Urban (1107–33) and produced to assert the rights of the see over territory claimed by *Hereford and *St Davids; it includes fictitious Lives of St *Dubricius, St *Teilo, and Oudoceus, who, though associated with St *Peter in the dedication of the cathedral, prob. had nothing to do with Llandaff. It has none the less been argued that the charters in the Book are based on original records and show something of the ecclesiastical life of SE Wales before fixed dioceses were established. When, under the Norman kings, diocesan organization of the Church spread to Wales, the see (originally of Glamorgan) emerged, with the head of the monastic community as its bishop. In 1107 Bp. Urban formally recognised the jurisdiction of *Canterbury. In 1120 he began to build the cathedral. Bp. Anthony Kitchin (d. 1563) was the only Marian bishop to take the Oath of Supremacy in 1559. In the early years of the Elizabethan Reformation the diocese was a centre of *recusancy, but in the later 17th cent. it became a stronghold of *Puritanism. During the 18th and the first half of the 19th cent. Llandaff was unfortunate in its bishops, who were mostly Englishmen with little interest in their diocese; but from the middle of the 19th cent. Church life revived. Between 1844 and 1869 the medieval cathedral, much of which was in a ruinous condition, was restored. Many new churches and mission halls were built, and in 1907 St Michael's Theological College (originally founded at Aberdare in 1892) was moved to Llandaff. The cathedral was badly damaged in an air raid in 1941; when it was restored in 1957 an impressive figure of 'Christ in Majesty' by Sir Jacob Epstein (d. 1959) was placed high at the east end of the nave.

The 'Book of Llandaff', ed., with Eng. tr., by W. J. Rees (Welsh Manuscript Society, 1; 1840); suppl. notes by T. Wakeman appended (sep. pagination) to W. J. Rees, Lives of the Cambro-British Saints (ibid. 4; 1853). Text reproduced from the Gwysaney MS, with transcription, by J. G. Evans and J. Rhys (Series of Old Welsh Texts, 4; Oxford, 1893; repr. Aberystwyth, 1979). W. Davies, The Llandaff Charters (ibid., 1979). Id., An Early Welsh Microcosm: Studies in the Llandaff Charters (Royal Historical Society Studies in History Series, 9; 1978). J. C. Davies (ed.), Episcopal Acts and Cognate Documents relating to Welsh Dioceses 1066–1272, 2 (Historical Society of the Church in Wales, 3–4; 1948), pp. 607–753. D. Crouch (ed.), Llandaff Episcopal Acta 1140 1287 (Publications of the South Wales Record Society, 5; 1988). J. A. Bradney (ed.), Acts of the Bishops of Llandaff [1660–1724] (4 books in 3 vols., Llandaff Records, 2–4; 1908–12). C. [N. L.] Brooke, 'The Archbishops of St David's, Llandaff and Caerleon-on-Usk', in N. K. Chadwick and others, Studies in the Early British Church (Cambridge, 1958), pp. 201–42, rev. in id., The Church and the Welsh Border in the Central Middle Ages (Studies in Celtic History, 8; Woodbridge, Suffolk, 1986), pp. 16–46. W. de G. Birch, Memorials of the See and Cathedral of Llandaff (Neath, 1912). B. Willis, A Survey of the Cathedral Church of Llandaff (1719). E. J. Newell, Llandaff (Diocesan Histories; 1902); E. [A.] Foord, St David's, Llandaff and Brecon (Cathedrals, Abbeys, and Famous Churches; 1925), pp. 97–124. J. Fisher in DECH, pp. 333–5, s.v. See also works cited s.v. WALES, CHRISTIANITY IN.

Lloyd, Charles (1784–1829), Bp. of Oxford from 1827. After a brilliant career at Christ Church, Oxford, where he was in turn lecturer, tutor, and censor, he was appointed Regius professor of divinity in 1822, an office which he retained until his death. He was a *High Churchman, and by his teaching influenced J. H. *Newman, E. B. *Pusey, and R. H. Froude. He emphasized, as Tract 90 did later, the importance of distinguishing between the decrees of the Council of *Trent and popular RC practice, and he insisted upon the primitive and medieval elements in the BCP. He was the tutor, friend, and counsellor of the statesman Sir Robert Peel.

W. J. Baker, Beyond Port and Prejudice: Charles Lloyd of Oxford 1784–1829 (Orono, Me., 1981). R. Garnett in DNB 33 (1893), pp. 411–14.

Llull, Ramon (*c.*1233–*c.*1315) (also Lull) lay missionary and philosopher. Of well-to-do parents, Llull was born in Majorca, which had recently been recovered after three cents. under *Islamic rule. He was educated as a knight and became seneschal to the son of James I of Aragon, later James II of Majorca. He married and had two children. At the age of 30 he had a vision of Christ crucified, which led him to devote himself wholly to His service. His chief mission was the conversion of Islam. On the advice of St *Raymond of Peñafort he remained in Majorca studying Arabic and Christian thought for nine years. During this time he composed his first work, the 'Book of Contemplation'; it was written in Arabic and translated into Catalan. This period of his life culminated in a vision on Mt. Randa (*c.*1274), in which the form in which he was to set out his ideas was revealed to him; he worked this out in his 'Art of Finding Truth'. In 1276 he persuaded James II to set up a place of study at Miramar in Majorca where 13 *Franciscans could study oriental languages. The next decade of his life is obscure. From 1287 onwards, when he made his first visit to Paris, he was engaged in constant travel, visiting the courts of France, Aragon, and the Pope, trying to win support for his plans for converting Islam, elaborating his ideas, and writing a large number of books and tracts. On three occasions he went on missions in N. Africa. His one practical success was the decree of the Council of *Vienne (1311–12) establishing studia of oriental languages in five universities. The often repeated statement that he died a martyr's death at Bougie in N. Africa, stoned by the populace, does not rest on any contemporary evidence.

Llull's basic aim in his writings was the conversion of Islam and of the Jews, 'that in the whole world there may not be more than one language, one belief, one faith' (Blanquerna, c. 94). With this aim he elaborated an approach by which he hoped to convince them by rational argument, without recourse to the authority of Scripture. In his Art (in its final elaboration, Ars generalis ultima, finished in 1308), he attempted to relate 'all forms of knowledge (including religious belief) to the manifestations of God's "Dignities" [i.e. Divine Attributes] in the universe, taking for its point of departure the monotheistic vision common to Judaism, Islam and Christianity, and their acceptance of a broadly Neoplatonic exemplarist world-picture, and arguing . . . analogically up and down "the ladder of being" ' (R. D. F. Pring-Mill). In his exposition Llull made extensive use of diagrams and of the representation of philosophical terms by letters of the alphabet, which, rightly combined, could, he held, provide the solution to any problem. He had no training in the scholastic theology of the universities and his works seemed difficult and strange to many, but for a few they had a strong attraction, and his writings were widely diffused. Among those whom he influenced was *Nicholas of Cusa.

As a mystic Llull has been considered the forerunner of St *Teresa and St *John of the Cross. His conception of the mystic life centres in the contemplation of the Divine perfections, which is achieved by the purification of memory, understanding, and will, and results in action for the greater glory of God. He was one of the most ardent defenders of the *Immaculate Conception in the Middle Ages. His cult, which developed soon after his death, was hindered by the ecclesiastical authorities owing to the difficulties in his teaching, but it was approved by *Pius IX in 1847. Interest in him has been steadily growing in recent times.

Opera Latina, ed. F. Stegmüller (1–5, Majorca, 1959–67); cont. by H. Harada, OFM, and others (CCCM 32–9; 1975–85; and 75, 76, 78, 79, 80, 111, etc., 1986 ff.). Obres, ed. M. Obrador y Bennásar and others (Majorca, 1906 ff.). Obres essencials, ed. M. Batllori, SJ (2 vols., Barcelona, 1957–[60]), incl. Life. Liber Predicationis Contra Judaeos, ed. J. M. Millás Vallicrosa (Madrid and Barcelona, 1957). Eng. trs. from the Catalan by E. A. Peers of his Blanquerna: A Thirteenth-Century Romance (London [1926]), The Book of the Lover and the Beloved (ibid., 1923), The Art of Contemplation (ibid., 1925), The Tree of Life (ibid., 1926) and The Book of the Beasts (ibid., 1927). Eng. tr. of Selected Works, with valuable introds., by A. Bonner (2 vols., Princeton, NJ [1985]). The principal authority for his life is a contemporary Life surviving in Lat. and Catalan. Lat. text ed. B. de Gaiffier, SJ, in Anal. Boll. 48 (1930), pp. 130–78, with refs. E. A. Peers, Ramón Lull: A Biography (1929). E. W. Platzeck, Raimund Lull: Sein Leben, seine Werke, die Grundlagen seines Denkens (Bibliotheca Franciscana, 5–6; Düsseldorf, 1962–4). J. N. Hillgarth, Ramón Lull and Lullism in Fourteenth-Century France (Oxford Warburg Studies, 1971). M. D. Johnston, The Spiritual Logic of Ramon Llull (Oxford, 1987); id., The Evangelical Rhetoric of Ramon Llull (New York and Oxford, 1996). Raymond Lulle et le Pays d'Oc, with introd. by M.-H. Vicaire (Cahiers de Fanjeaux, 22 [1987]). E. Longpré, OFM, in DTC 9 (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 1072–141, s.v., with full bibl. R. D. F. Pring-Mill in EB (1968 edn.), 13, pp. 173 f., s.v. 'Llull, Ramon'; A. Bonner and C. Lohr in Dict. Sp. 13 (1988), cols. 171–87, s.v. 'Raymond Lulle'.

LMS. The 'London Missionary Society' was founded in 1795 by a body of *Congregationalists, *Anglicans, *Presbyterians, and *Wesleyans who combined to promote Christian missions to the heathen. The first 29 missionaries under its auspices sailed to Tahiti in 1796. It was one of its principles that no form of denominationalism should be preached by its members, but that decisions about the form of Church government be left to those whom they should convert. In recent times the Society, which carried on extensive work in *China, *India, SE Asia, S. and E. Africa and the *South Pacific was maintained almost exclusively by Congregationalists, and in 1966 responsibility for its work passed to the (then Congregational) *Council for World Mission.

R. Lovett, The History of the London Missionary Society, 1795–1895 (2 vols., 1899); N. Goodall, A History of the London Missionary Society, 1895–1945 (1954). A. J. Hanna, 'The Role of the London Missionary Society in the Opening Up of East Central Africa', Transactions of the Royal Historical Society, 5th ser. 5 (1955), pp. 41–59.

Locke, John (1632–1704), English philosopher. A native of Wrington, Avon, he was educated at Westminster School and *Christ Church, Oxford, where he was deeply influenced by the works of R. *Descartes, whose emphasis on reason made a lasting impression on him. In 1666 he became acquainted with Lord Ashley, later first Earl of Shaftesbury, who made him his secretary, and with whom he moved to London. In 1675 he went to France, returning to England in 1679, but after the fall of Shaftesbury escaped to the Netherlands in 1683, where he remained till 1689. After the accession of William and Mary he once more returned to London. After the *Exclusion Controversy, he had been expelled from his Studentship at Christ Church (1684); from 1691 till his death he lived in the manor house of Oates, in Essex.

Locke was the foremost defender of free inquiry and toleration in the later 17th cent. His system is a combination of Christian rationalism and empiricism. In the Letters concerning Toleration (1689, 1690, and 1692) he pleaded for religious liberty for all except atheists and RCs, who were excluded because he held them to be a danger to the state. His ideal was a national Church with an all-embracing creed that made ample allowance for individual opinion, on the ground that human understanding was too limited for one man to impose his beliefs on another. In 1690 he published his Two Treatises of Government, expounding the principles of the Whig Revolution of 1688. They were hardly profound, but their historical importance was great through their influence in the following century. The substance of his philosophical thought is contained in the famous Essay concerning Human Understanding (1690 [in fact pub. in 1689]). In it he attacks the Platonist conception of 'innate ideas'. The human mind is a tabula rasa and all our ideas come from experience, i.e. from sensation or reflection, knowledge through reason being, acc. to him, a 'natural revelation'. Pure reality cannot be grasped by the human mind; consequently there is no sure basis for metaphysics, and substance is 'an uncertain supposition of we know not what'. The spirituality of the soul, though not certain, is at least probable; the existence of God, on the other hand, can be discovered with certainty by reason, and His law gives men their rule of conduct.

Locke's religious ideas were further developed in The Reasonableness of Christianity as Delivered in the Scriptures (1695). Here he maintains that the only secure basis of Christianity is its reasonableness, though he accepts the miracles recorded in Scripture as proofs of its Divine origin. Reason, however, has the last word in the acceptance of the supernatural and the interpretation of Scripture. The essence of Christianity is the acknowledgement of Christ as the Messiah, who was sent into the world chiefly to spread the true knowledge of God and of our duties. All other doctrines are secondary and incapable of conclusive proof. The book roused much controversy, among its critics being John Edwards (1637–1716), J. *Sergeant and Thomas Burnet (1635–1715). In his last years Locke devoted himself to the study of Scripture; the outcome was two posthumous works, A Paraphrase and Notes on the Epistles of St Paul (1705–7) and A Discourse on Miracles (1706).

The many collected edns. of his Works incl. 3 vols., fol., London, 1714; ed. E. Law, Bp. of Carlisle, 4 vols., London, 1777; and the Clarendon Edition, ed. successively P. H. Nidditch and J. W. Yolton (Oxford, 1975 ff.). This last incl. his Essay concerning Human Understanding, ed. P. H. Nidditch (1975; text repr., without introd., 1979); Correspondence, ed. E. S. de Beer (9 vols., 1976 ff.); and A Paraphrase and Notes on the Epistles of St Paul, ed. A. W. Wainwright (2 vols., 1987). Three sets of early writings pub. for the first time by W. von Leyden, Essays on the Law of Nature: The Latin text with a translation, introduction and notes, together with transcripts of Locke's shorthand in his Journal for 1676 (Oxford, 1954). Two Tracts on Government, ed., with Eng. tr., by P. Abrams (Cambridge, 1967). Crit. edns. of his Two Treatises of Government by P. Laslett (ibid., 1960; 2nd edn., 1967) and of the orig. Lat. text of his Epistola de Tolerantia (orig. pub. anonymously in 1689) by R. Klibansky, with Eng. tr. by J. W. Gough (Oxford, 1968). The Reasonableness of Christianity, with A Discourse of Miracles and part of A Third Letter concerning Toleration, abridged, with introd., by I. T. Ramsey (1958). The standard Life of Locke is that of H. R. Fox Bourne (2 vols., London, 1876). The best modern Life, with material from the Lovelace Collection, is that of M. Cranston (ibid., 1957). Other general studies by R. I. Aaron ('Leaders of Philosophy', Oxford, 1937; 3rd edn., 1971), D. J. O'Connor (Harmondsworth, 1952; repr., New York, 1967), R. S. Woolhouse (Brighton, 1983), J. W. Yolton (Oxford, 1985), and M. Ayers ('The Arguments of the Philosophers', 2 vols., London, 1991). H. McLauchlan, The Religious Opinions of Milton, Locke and Newton (Publications of the University of Manchester, 276, Theological Series, 6; 1941), pp. 67–114. J. W. Gough, John Locke's Political Philosophy (Oxford, 1950). J. W. Yolton (ed.), John Locke: Problems and Perspectives (Cambridge, 1969); id., John Locke and the Compass of Human Understanding: A Selective Commentary on the 'Essay' (ibid., 1970). J. Dunn, The Political Thought of John Locke: An Historical Account of the Argument of the 'Two Treatises of Government' (ibid., 1969). J. L. Mackie, Problems from Locke (Oxford, 1976). I. C. Tipton (ed.), Locke on Human Understanding (ibid., 1977). W. M. Spellman, John Locke and the Problem of Depravity (ibid., 1988). R. Ashcraft, Revolutionary Politics & Locke's Two Treatises of Government (Princeton, NJ [1986]). Id. (ed.), Locke: Critical Assessments (4 vols., 1991). A. J. Simmons, The Lockean Theory of Rights (Princeton, NJ [1992]). J. Harrison and P. Laslett, The Library of John Locke (Oxford Bibliographical Society Publications, NS 13; 1965; 2nd edn., 1971). R. Hall and R. [S.] Woolhouse, 80 Years of Locke Scholarship (Edinburgh [1983]); J. S. and J. W. Yolton, John Locke: A Reference Guide (Boston [1985]).

loculus. (1) The commonest type of tomb in the *catacombs, in the form of a horizontal rectangular niche. The loculi are cut, one above another, in the sides of the corridors. Each is closed at the front by a tile or marble slab which bears the epitaph. (2) A name sometimes given to the hole ('sepulchre') in a fixed *altar in which relics were placed before 1977.

On (1) H. Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 9 (pt. 2; 1930), cols. 1934–43, s.v., with refs. E. Diehl, Inscriptiones Latinae Christianae Veteres (3 vols., Berlin, 1925–31), esp. vol. 2, pp. 222–32 and 279–86.

logia (Gk. λόγια, 'sayings'). In NT criticism the term is applied to a supposed collection of the sayings of Christ which circulated in the early Church. The use of the word in this connection derives from the statement of *Papias that 'Matthew compiled the logia (τὰ λόγια) in the Hebrew language, and each person interpreted them as he was able'. As many scholars have held that the reference here is to the lost document '*Q' (q.v.) which was drawn upon by Mt. and Lk., the term has often been used as a synonym for 'Q'. The word is also used of the '*Sayings of Jesus' (q.v.) discovered at *Oxyrhynchus in 1897 and 1904.

Logos (Gk. Λόγος, 'Word' or 'Reason'), used esp. in Christian theology with reference to the Second Person of the Trinity. The term was known both in pagan and in Jewish antiquity. Heraclitus (*c.*500 BC) conceived of the Logos in a pantheistic way as the universal reason governing and permeating the world, and the Stoics took over the idea and popularized it. In the OT God's word was not only the medium of his communication with men: what God said had creative power (Gen. 1, vv. 3, 6, 9, etc., Ps. 33: 6), and by the time of the Prophets the Word of the Lord was presented as having an almost independent existence (1 Sam. 15: 10; Is. 55: 11; Jer. 23: 29). In the *Targums the Word was used as a means of speaking of God without using his name (see MEMRA). In Hellenistic Judaism the concept of the Logos as an independent *hypostasis was further developed, and the Logos also came to be associated with the figure of Wisdom (Wisd. Sol. 9: 1–2; 18: 15). *Philo to some extent combined the Greek and the biblical concepts: for him the Logos is the Divine pattern from which the material world is copied, the Divine power in the cosmos, the Divine purpose or agent in creation and an intermediary between God and man.

In the NT the term in its technical sense is confined to the Johannine writings (Jn. 1: 1 and 14; 1 Jn. 1: 1; and Rev. 19: 13). In the Prologue of the Gospel the Logos is described as God from eternity, the Creative Word, who became incarnate in the man, Jesus Christ of Nazareth. Though various antecedents for the Evangelist's ideas have been suggested, his identification of the Logos with the Messiah was entirely new.

In patristic times teaching about the Logos was developed by St *Ignatius and by the Apologists of the 2nd cent., who saw in it a welcome means of making the Christian teaching compatible with Hellenistic philosophy. *Justin Martyr, e.g., held that the Logos was generated by an act of will of the Father with a view to creation, and *Theophilus, following the Stoics, distinguished the λόγος ἐνδιάθετος, i.e. the Logos immanent in God before creation, from the λόγος προφορικός, i.e. the Logos externalized as the instrument of creation. Speculation about the Logos is also found among the *Gnostics. *Clement of Alexandria made the Logos doctrine a chief part of his teaching, whilst *Irenaeus pointed out the dangers of going into too detailed speculations. St *Athanasius is among the first to give a comprehensive and completely satisfactory presentation of the Christian Logos conception by linking it up with the whole doctrine of Redemption. St *Augustine connected it with the image of the Trinity in the human soul. The whole complex of earlier teaching was eventually systematized in the teaching of the Schoolmen, esp. in the Summa Theologiae of St *Thomas Aquinas.

A. Aall, Der Logos: Geschichte seiner Entwickelung in der griechischen Philosophie und der christlichen Literatur (2 vols., 1896–9). J. Réville, La Doctrine du Logos dans le quatrième évangile et dans les œuvres de Philon (1881). J. Lebreton, Histoire du dogme de la Trinité des origines au concile de Nicée, 1 (1910), pp. 41–73; Eng. tr., 1 (1939), pp. 40–60. G. L. Prestige, God in Patristic Thought (1936), esp. ch. 6. W. Kelber, Die Logoslehre von Heraklit bis Origenes (Stuttgart, 1958). B. L. Mack, Logos und Sophia: Untersuchungen zur Weisheitstheologie im hellenistischen Judentum (Studien zur Umwelt des Neuen Testaments, 10 [1973]). J. D. G. Dunn, Christology in the Making: A New Testament Inquiry into the Origins of the Doctrine of the Incarnation (1980), pp. 213–50. T. F. Glasson, 'Heraclitus' alleged Logos Doctrine', JTS NS 3 (1952), pp. 231–8, with refs. W. R. *Inge in HERE 8 (1915), pp. 133–8, s.v.; H. Leisegang in PW 13 (1926), cols. 1035–81, s.v.; H. Kleinknecht and others in TWNT 4 (1942), pp. 76–140 (Eng. tr., 4, 1967, pp. 76–136), s.v. λέγω etc., with further bibl., 10/2 (1979), pp. 1157–60; A. Michel in DTC 15 (pt. 2; 1950), cols. 2639–72, s.v. 'Verbe'; R. J. Tournay, OP, and others in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 5 (1957), cols. 425–97, s.v.

Loisy, Alfred Firmin (1857–1940), French *Modernist biblical scholar. A native of Ambrières (Marne), he came of farming stock. Educated at the diocesan seminary at Châlons-sur-Marne and at the *Institut Catholique in Paris, he was ordained priest in 1879. After a short time as a country curé, he returned to Paris at the instigation of L. *Duchesne, who inspired him with zeal for historico-critical study. It was to the critical study of the Bible that Loisy devoted himself, and in this sphere he came to feel the need for a radical renewal of conventional ecclesiastical teaching. Although by 1886 his own faith in traditional Catholicism had been severely strained he remained in the RC Church in the hope of modernizing its teaching. In 1890, when he was appointed Professor of Sacred Scripture at the Institut Catholique, he was already publishing the results of his critical studies, which were arousing both enthusiasm and suspicion. In 1893 he was dismissed from his professorship and urged to confine himself to oriental languages. From this time he received encouragement from his friends E. I. Mignot (1842–1918), Abp. of Albi, and F. *von Hügel. From 1894 to 1896 he was chaplain to the *Dominican nuns and their school at Neuilly; here he had ample time to work out a new apologetic for Catholicism. From 1900 he taught at the École Pratique des Hautes Études.

In 1902 Loisy published L'Évangile et l'Église; it took the form of a reply to A. *Harnack's Wesen des Christentums (1900), but it was in effect a sensationally novel defence of Catholicism. As against Harnack, who sought to base Christianity on the teaching of the historic Jesus apart from later dogmatic accretions, Loisy maintained that its essence was to be sought in the faith of the developed Church as expanded under the guidance of the Spirit. The fact that Christ did not found a Church or institute Sacraments did not detract from their central place in the Christian life. The book was welcomed in some quarters, but also violently attacked. It was condemned by the Abp. of Paris and by a few other French bishops, but the Papacy refrained from intervening. When, however, in the following year Loisy published not only Autour d'un petit livre, which dealt with the controversy that had arisen, but also Le Quatrième Évangile, Pope *Pius X, who had just succeeded *Leo XIII, placed both these books and other works of his on the *Index. In 1904 Loisy reluctantly made a formal act of submission, resigned his lectureship at the École Pratique des Hautes Études, and retired to the country. In 1906 he abandoned his priestly functions. A final breach with the Church came after the Papal acts of 1907 which condemned Modernism. Loisy published Simples Réflexions sur le décret du Saint-Office Lamentabili sane Exitu et sur l'encyclique Pascendi Dominici gregis (1908), as well as his great work Les Évangiles synoptiques (2 vols., 1907–8). On 7 Mar. 1908 he was excommunicated.

From 1909 to 1930 Loisy was professor of the history of religions at the Collège de France. He was a prolific writer and during this period he published major works on Christian origins and on the comparative history of religions, such as Les Actes des Apôtres (1920) and Essai historique sur le sacrifice (1920), and smaller books in which he foreshadowed his own religious and moral philosophy, notably La Religion (1917; 2nd edn., 1924). In his autobiographical writings, Choses passées (1913) and Mémoires pour servir à l'histoire religieuse de notre temps (3 vols., 1930–1), he sought to justify his part in the Modernist movement and to interpret its history. After his break with the Church, his work as a biblical critic, despite the brilliance of style and learning which characterized it, was generally regarded as erratic and recklessly conjectural. His final views on the NT are summed up in La Naissance du christianisme (1933), in which he treated the Gospels not as historical documents but as catechetical and cultural literature with but slight historical basis. The works of his last years, however, attacked the proponents of the Christ-myth theories and appear more in line with his earlier Christian faith. Since 1968 many volumes of his private papers have been accessible in the Bibliothèque Nationale at Paris. They emphasize that he was a mystic, with a pastoral sense, as well as a savant, and reveal the complexity of his character as well as the range of his interests and friendships.

R. Marlé, SJ, Au cœur de la crise moderniste: Le dossier inédit d'une controverse. Lettres de Maurice Blondel, H. Bremond, Fr. von Hügel, Alfred Loisy, Fernand Mourret, J. Wehrlé (1960). Contemporary accounts by [H. *Bremond], Un Clerc qui n'a pas trahi, pub. under the pseudonym Sylvain Leblanc (1931); M. J. *Lagrange, OP, M. Loisy et le modernisme (1932); and A. Houtin (d. 1926) and F. Sartiaux (d. 1944), Alfred Loisy: Sa Vie, son œuvre, ed. E. Poulat (1960). M. D. Petre, Alfred Loisy: His Religious Significance (1944); F. *Heiler, Der Vater der katholischen Modernismus, Alfred Loisy (Munich, 1947); R. de Boyer de Sainte Suzanne, Alfred Loisy entre la foi et l'incroyance [1968], with some unpub. letters; M. Guasco, Alfred Loisy in Italia (Pubblicazioni dell'Istituto di Scienze Politiche dell'Università di Torino, 33; 1975), also with unpub. letters. F. Turvasi, The Condemnation of Alfred Loisy and the Historical Method (Uomini e Dottrine, 24; 1979). A. R. Vidler, The Modernist Movement in the Roman Catholic Church (1934), pp. 67–139; id., A Variety of Catholic Modernists (Sarum Lectures for 1968–9; Cambridge, 1970), esp. pp. 20–56. J. Ratté, Three Modernists (1968), pp. 43–141, with bibl. pp. 353 f. A. H. Jones, Independence and Exegesis: The Study of Early Christianity in the Work of Alfred Loisy . . . Charles Guignebert . . . and Maurice Goguel . . . (Beiträge zur Geschichte der Biblischen Exegese, 26; 1983), pp. 60–127. J. Bonsirven in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 5 (1957), cols. 530–44. See also other works cited s.v. MODERNISM.

Lollardy. A 'Lollard' was originally a follower of J. *Wycliffe; later, the name was applied somewhat vaguely to anyone seriously critical of the Church—knights who hankered after Church property, dissatisfied tenants of an oppressive abbey, parishioners who refused to pay tithes, and apocalyptic visionaries. The original meaning of the term would appear to be a 'chanter' and so a 'mumbler of prayers' (cf. Middle Dutch lollen or lullen, 'to sing'); but it was associated with the Latin lolia ('tares'). Its first use occurs in 1382 (as a term of contempt) and its first official use in 1387.

The Lollards, following Wycliffe, based their teaching on personal faith, Divine election, and, above all, the Bible. The Scriptures were the sole authority in religion and every man had the right to read and interpret them for himself. The Lollards commonly attacked clerical *celibacy, *transubstantiation, obligatory oral *confession, *indulgences, and *pilgrimages; and they held that the validity of priestly acts was determined by the priest's moral character and that endowments, the Pope, the hierarchy, and 'private religions' (of monks, friars, and canons) were all unscriptural. They propagated their teaching by various unlicensed preachers and by books.

The movement went through several phases. For about 20 years it enjoyed some academic support, though in 1382 Abp. W. *Courtenay condemned Wycliffe's teachings and started to deprive Lollardy of a base at Oxford. (see NICHOLAS HEREFORD and REPINGTON, P.) The chroniclers' allegations that some knights of Richard II's court supported Lollardy have been shown to have some justification. Following the accession of Henry IV and the return of Abp. T. Arundel, rigorous persecution, esp. the passing of the statute De Haeretico Comburendo (1401) and the introduction of his Constitutions (1408), seriously diminished the number of the movement's adherents. After Sir J. *Oldcastle's rising in 1414, and another attempted rising in 1431, the movement went underground. Recent research into heresy cases suggests that (despite the attention given to it by Bp. R. *Pecock) Lollardy may have declined after the middle of the 15th cent., but revived after *c.*1490; early Tudor heresy trials reveal significant pockets of Lollardy composed mostly of craftsmen and town workers, esp. in the Chilterns, London, Kent, Essex, Coventry, and parts of the North.

Lollardy, while powerful enough to inhibit Catholic reforms in the 15th cent., at no time won over the governing classes in strength, and thus could not achieve a reformation unaided; but it contributed to the English Reformation by providing areas and minds receptive to *Lutheranism, and its influence continued in the movement now seen as its direct heir, the congregational dissent of the 17th cent. Lollardy was also powerful in Scotland and exercised an important influence on the development of the *Hussite rising in Bohemia.

A. Hudson (ed.), Selections from English Wycliffite Writings (Cambridge, 1978); English Wycliffite Sermons, ed. A. Hudson and P. Gradon (5 vols., Oxford, 1983–96). H. B. Workman, John Wyclif: A Study of the English Medieval Church (2 vols., 1926). K. B. McFarlane, John Wycliffe and the Beginnings of English Nonconformity (1952); id., Lancastrian Kings and Lollard Knights (posthumous; Oxford, 1972), esp. pp. 139–232. A. G. Dickens, Lollards and Protestants in the Diocese of York 1509 1558 (1959). J. A. F. Thomson, The Later Lollards 1414–1520 (Oxford, 1965). M. E. Aston, 'Lollardy and Sedition 1381–1431', Past and Present, no. 17 (1960), pp. 1–44; id., 'Lollardy and the Reformation: Survival or Revival?', History, 49 (1964), pp. 149–70; id., 'John Wycliffe's Reformation Reputation', Past and Present, no. 30 (1965), pp. 23–51; repr., with other papers, in Lollards and Reformers (1984). A. Hudson, 'A Lollard Compilation and the Dissemination of Wycliffite Thought' JTS NS 23 (1972), pp. 65–81; id., 'The Examination of Lollards', Bulletin of the Institute of Historical Research, 46 (1973), pp. 145–59; id., 'The Debate on Bible Translation, Oxford 1401', EHR 90 (1975), pp. 1–18; repr., with other papers, in Lollards and their Books (1985). Id., The Premature Reformation: Wycliffite Texts and Lollard History (Oxford, 1988), with further bibl. M. Lambert, Medieval Heresy (2nd edn., 1992), pp. 243–83.

Lombard, Peter. See PETER LOMBARD.

London. See BOW CHURCH, BROMPTON ORATORY, ST PAUL'S CATHEDRAL, WESTMINSTER ABBEY and WESTMINSTER CATHEDRAL.

London Missionary Society. See LMS.

Longinus, St (prob. from Gk. λόγχη, 'lance'). The name traditionally given to the soldier who pierced the side of Christ with his spear. It can be traced back to the apocryphal 'Acts of *Pilate', one version of which also gives it to the centurion who, standing by the Cross, confessed Christ as the Son of God. In the later forms of the legend the two persons are often confused. *Bede, who is followed by many medieval authors, among them the author of the *Golden Legend, reports that he was martyred for his faith at Caesarea in Cappadocia in AD 58 and gives as his feast, which occurs in several old martyrologies, 15 Mar. In the E. his feast is observed on 16 Oct.

'Acta' of Longinus the soldier and of Longinus the centurion pr. in AASS, Mar. 2 (1668), pp. 376–90. 'Martyrium Sancti Longini Centurionis' attributed to *Hesychius of Jerusalem pr. in J. P. Migne, PG 93. 1546–60; Gk. text of 'Martyrium . . . Sancti Longini Centurionis' in *Simeon Metaphrastes, ibid. 115. 32–41. Though he does not accept its attribution to Hesychius, the 'Martyrium' and another 'Passio' are ed., with Fr. tr. and full introd., by M. Aubineau [SJ], Les Homélies Festales d'Hésychius de Jérusalem, 2 (Subsidia Hagiographica, 59; 1980), pp. 778–901. The cultus of the centurion (unnamed) in Cappadocia is attested by *Gregory of Nyssa, Ep. 17 (PG 46. 1061). F. J. Dölger, Antike und Christentum, 4 (1934), pp. 81–94 ('Die Blutsalbung des Soldaten mit der Lanze im Passionsspiel Christus Patiens'). R. J. Peebles, The Legend of Longinus in Ecclesiastical Tradition and in English Literature and its Connection with the Grail (Diss., Bryn Mawr College Monographs, Monograph Series, 9; 1911).

Longland, John (1473–1547), Bp. of *Lincoln. After a long period of study at Oxford, where he became Fellow of Magdalen, Longland was made Dean of *Salisbury in 1514 and Bp. of Lincoln in 1521. He was a staunch upholder of the royal supremacy, and as *Henry VIII's confessor took a prominent part in furthering the divorce proceedings with Catherine of Aragon. A preacher and a humanist of considerable repute, he enjoyed the warm friendship of *Erasmus.

A. H. Thompson (ed.), Visitations in the Diocese of Lincoln, 1517–1531 (Lincoln Record Society, 33, 35, 37; 1940–7; discussion of injunctions and docs. relating to monasteries issued by Longland, ibid., vol. 2, pp. 201–22. Further extracts in A. Clark (ed.), Lincoln Diocese Documents, 1450 1544 (EETS, Original Series, 149; 1914), pp. 133–244, 245–54, incl. text of Longland's directions for publication in his diocese of Henry VIII's repudiation of the Pope's Supremacy, pp. 188–91. His Benedictional, ed. R. M. Woolley (HBS 64; 1927). M. Bowker, The Henrician Reformation: The Diocese of Lincoln under John Longland 1521–1547 (Cambridge, 1981). BRUO 2 (1958), pp. 1160–2. M. Feingold in P. G. Beitenholz and T. B. Deutscher (eds.), Contemporaries of Erasmus, 2 [1986], pp. 341 f.

Longley, Charles Thomas (1794–1868), Abp. of *Canterbury. He was educated at Christ Church, Oxford, where he taught for some years before becoming headmaster of Harrow in 1829. In 1836 he brought to the school as a master J. W. *Colenso. In the same year he became Bp. of the newly-created diocese of *Ripon. A moderate *High Churchman, he opposed the ritualism of some *Tractarians and held that as a bishop he had the authority and duty to suppress such practices; he did so, amid much controversy, at E. B. *Pusey's newly-built church of St Saviour's, Leeds. He became Bp. of *Durham in 1856 and subsequently Abp. of *York (1860) and then of Canterbury (1862). At Canterbury he supported R. Gray, Bp. of Cape Town, against Colenso and proceeded as far as he could in the case without provoking a conflict with the law. He disapproved of Essays and Reviews and was among those who urged its condemnation in *Convocation in 1864. The most significant event of his primacy was the first *Lambeth Conference in 1867. His cautious handling of requests and questions before the Conference and his judicious chairmanship of it contributed to the desire for a second such meeting of bishops in 1878 and did much to establish the ethos of successive Lambeth Conferences.

J. E. Sayers and E. G. W. Bill, Calendar of the Papers of Charles Thomas Longley . . . in Lambeth Palace Library (1976). E. [F.] Carpenter, Cantuar: The Archbishops in their Office (1971; 2nd edn., 1988), pp. 312–33. A. M. G. Stephenson, The First Lambeth Conference 1867 (CHS, 1967). G. C. Boase in DNB 34 (1893), pp. 121 f.

Loofs, Friedrich (1858–1928), historian of doctrine. He studied at Leipzig, where under A. *Harnack he became a keen student of the history of dogma, and at Göttingen, where A. *Ritschl stimulated his interest in systematic theology. From 1882 to 1887 he taught at Leipzig. In 1887 he became extraordinary, and in 1888 full, professor at Halle, where he remained till his death. He took a prominent part in *Lutheran ecclesiastical affairs, becoming a member of the Saxon Consistory in 1910. Among many important essays in patristic subjects are a monograph on *Leontius of Byzantium (1887), his significant Leitfaden zur Dogmengeschichte (1890), works on the 'Sacra Parallela' of St *John of Damascus (1892) and *Eustathius of Sebaste (1898), a collection of the then-known Nestoriana (1905), and a comprehensive study of *Paul of Samosata (1924). He also took an active part in opposing E. *Haeckel's materialism in his Anti-Haeckel (1900; Eng. tr., 1903). An original interpretation of *Nestorian teaching was presented in Nestorius and his Place in the History of Christian Doctrine (1914), the substance of four lectures delivered at London in 1913.

Autobiog. notice in Die Religionswissenschaft der Gegenwart in Selbstdarstellungen (ed. E. Stange), 2 (1926), pp. 119–60, with bibl. S. Bitter in TRE 21 (1991), pp. 464–6, s.v.

Lopez, Gregory (1615/6–91), first native Chinese bishop. His native name was Lo Wên-tsao. Born of pagan parents in the province of Fukien, he embraced Christianity when he grew up, and was baptized by the *Franciscans. After studying at Manila, he joined the *Dominican Order; he was professed in 1651. In 1654 he was ordained the first Chinese priest. His success and zeal led the French bishops in Tonkin and Siam in 1674 to induce Clement X to offer him the titular bishopric of Basilopolis in Bithynia and the office of Vicar Apostolic of Nanking. Lopez, however, modestly declined the promotion. In 1679 *Innocent XI overruled his objections and ordered him to accept consecration. Now, however, the Dominican Master wanted him to have a European associate to advise him, and the Dominicans in Manila, where Lopez went for consecration, were apparently unwilling to proceed because of his attitude to the Rites Controversy (see CHINA, CHRISTIANITY IN). He was eventually consecrated in 1685 at Canton at the hands of Italian Franciscans. Later he was promoted to the new see of Nanking, but did not live to employ the title. There was no further native RC bishop in China until 1918.

B. [M.] Biermann, OP, 'Briefe des ersten chinesischen Priesters und Bischofs Fray Gregorio López, O.P. aus dem Indias-Archiv zu Sevilla (Fil. 305)', in J. Beckmann, SMB (ed.), Der Einheimische Klerus in Geschichte und Gegenwart: Festschrift P. Dr Laurenz Kilger OSB zum 60. Geburtstag dargeboten von Freunden und Schülern (Neue Zeitschrift für Missionswissenschaft, Supplementa 2; 1950), pp. 99–117, incl. text. J. M. González, OP, Biografía del primer obispo Chino, Excmo. Sr. D. Fr. Gregorio Lo o López O.P. (Manila 1946; enlarged edn., Pamplona, 1971). J. Hao Sy, OP, 'The Chinese indigenous clergy: the case of the Dominican Gregorio Lo Wen Tsao (1615–1691)', Philippiniana Sacra, 27 (Manila, 1992), pp. 313–25. Quétif and Échard, 2, pp. 708 f.; Eng. tr. by A. C. Moule in New China Review, 1 (Hong Kong, 1919), pp. 480–7; suppl. note by id., ibid. 3 (1921), pp. 138 f. A. Duval, OP, in Catholicisme, 7 (1975), cols. 1074 f., s.v. See also works cited s.v. CHINA, CHRISTIANITY IN.

Lord of Hosts (Heb. יְהוָֹה צְבָאוֹת). This Divine title occurs in the OT 282 times, all except 36 of them in the Prophetic writings. In its earliest usage among the Hebrews, it was probably based on the belief that it was their God *Yahweh who led and defended their armies against their enemies (cf., e.g., Ex. 7: 4, where the forces of Israel are described as 'the hosts of the Lord'), but in later times its reference was to God's dominion in majesty and power over the angels and other celestial beings and, a fortiori, His supremacy over the destinies of men. In the LXX the term is variously rendered as κύριος σαβαώθ (e.g. Is. 1: 9, which is quoted in the NT at Rom. 9: 29 and there traditionally rendered in English as 'Lord of Sabaoth', leaving the word 'Sabaoth' untranslated), κύριος τῶν δυνάμεων (e.g. Ps. 23: 10; Eng. versions 24: 10), and κύριος παντοκράτωρ (e.g. Hag. 1: 2). This last was rendered in Latin as Deus omnipotens, hence the English 'Almighty God'.

S. R. *Driver in HDB 3 (1900), pp. 137 f.; E. Kautzsch in PRE (3rd edn.), 21 (1908), pp. 620–7, s.v. 'Zebaoth'; M. Rose in TRE 16 (1987), pp. 438–41, s.v. 'Jahwe'; C. L. Seow in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 3 (1992), pp. 304–7, s.v. 'Hosts, Lord of'.

Lord of Misrule. See MISRULE, LORD OF.

Lord's Day, the. A Christian appellation of *Sunday, based on Rev. 1: 10 (ἡ κυριακὴ ἡμέρα). In recent times it has been used (esp. by Protestants) when special stress is laid on the sacred character of the day. In the 17th–18th cents., however, the title 'Lord's Day' (without the article) was fairly widely used as an ordinary name for the day, and not only among *Puritans. The Lord's Day Observance Society, founded in 1831 by D. *Wilson, later Bp. of Calcutta, has as its two principal objects the diffusion of information about the blessings of Sunday and the promotion of its observance as a weekly day of rest and worship.

Lord's Prayer (Lat. Oratio Dominica or Pater Noster), the prayer, 'Our Father', taught by the Lord to His disciples. In the NT it is given in two slightly different forms: in Mt. 6: 9–13, in the teaching on prayer in the *Sermon on the Mount, and in Lk. 11: 2–4, where Christ gives it in answer to the request 'Lord, teach us to pray'. The form in Mt. is that universally used by Christians; that in Lk. is shorter. In Lk. 11: 2 some MSS replace 'Thy kingdom come' with 'May thy Holy Spirit come upon us and cleanse us'. A concluding doxology was probably added in early times, for it occurs in the Didache; a longer form of the doxology, based on 1 Chron. 29: 11, and corresponding to the formula in the BCP, is found in some later Gospel MSS. E. liturgies expand this with a reference to Father, Son, and Holy Spirit.

The Lord's Prayer is usually divided into the address and seven petitions, the first three asking for the glorification of God, the latter four being requests for the chief physical and spiritual needs of man. The meaning of ἐπιούσιος used to describe the bread which is sought (translated 'daily') is, however, uncertain. As a prayer given to the Church by the Lord Himself, it has always been regarded by Christians as uniquely sacred.

From early times the Lord's Prayer was taught to the *catechumens at *Baptism and used in the Liturgy. St *Cyprian already calls it 'the public and common prayer'. It has also regularly found a place in the celebration of the Eucharist. The first witness to it in this connection is St *Cyril of Jerusalem (c.350). Acc. to St *Augustine and to the *Ambrosian and *Mozarabic Liturgies, it was said after the Breaking of the Bread, immediately before the *Kiss of Peace and the Communion. St *Gregory the Great (d. 604), however, following the Greek Liturgies, placed it at the end of the Canon, before the Breaking of the Bread. He also appears to have held the opinion that the Apostles used the Lord's Prayer to consecrate the Eucharist. In the BCP, since 1552, it has followed the Communion. The ASB provides for its use either here or before or after the Breaking of the Bread. In the Divine *Office the Prayer has also occupied a prominent place. It is mentioned as part of *Lauds and *Vespers by the Synod of Gerona of 517, and St *Benedict prescribed it in his rule for all the Canonical Hours.

The *Breviary of 1568 laid down that it should be said before every Office except *Compline and before the ferial prayers. In *Paul VI's Breviary of 1971 it is said after the NT *Canticles and the intercessions, before the collect at Morning and Evening Prayer.

The Lord's Prayer has played a prominent part in Christian devotion. *Tertullian called it the 'epitome of the whole Gospel' (breviarium totius evangelii) and St Augustine the source of all other prayers. It has been frequently expounded either in commentaries on the Gospels or in separate treatises, notably by St *Maximus the Confessor, St *Thomas Aquinas, and St *Teresa of Ávila.

The version of the Lord's Prayer traditionally used by English-speaking Catholics and Protestants alike owed its general acceptance to an ordinance of *Henry VIII in 1541. It follows closely the form of the Prayer in W. *Tyndale's version of the NT. The concluding Doxology, however, which was not traditional in the liturgical tradition of W. Christendom, is first found in the Scottish BCP of 1637, whence it was taken over in many places in the revision of 1662.

Patristic comm. incl. Tertullian, De Oratione, 1–10, *Origen, De Oratione, esp. 22–30, Cyprian, De Dominica Oratione, and Augustine, De Sermone Domini in Monte, 2. 15–39. F. H. Chase, The Lord's Prayer in the Early Church (Texts and Studies, 1. 3; Cambridge, 1891); O. *Dibelius, Das Vaterunser: Umrisse zu einer Geschichte des Gebets in der alten und mittleren Kirche (Giessen, 1903); G. Walter, Untersuchungen zur Geschichte der griechischen Vaterunser-Exegese (1914); P. Fiebig, Das Vaterunser: Ursprung, Sinn, und Bedeutung des christlichen Hauptgebetes (Gütersloh, 1927); E. Lohmeyer, Das Vater-unser (1946; 3rd edn., 1952; Eng. tr., 1965); J. Lowe, The Interpretation of the Lord's Prayer (Evanston, Ill., 1955; expanded and rev. by C. S. C. Williams, Oxford, 1962); J. Jeremias, Das Vater-Unser im Lichte der neueren Forschung (Calwer Hefte zur Förderung biblischen Glaubens und christlichen Lebens, 50; Stuttgart, 1962; Eng. tr. in The Prayers of Jesus (Studies in Biblical Theology, 2nd ser. 6; 1967), pp. 82–107); C. F. Evans, The Lord's Prayer (1963); J. Carmignac, Recherches sur le 'Notre Père' (1969), with extensive bibl. Works of spirituality often take the form of comm. on the Lord's Prayer; these include L. Boff, O pai-nosso: a oração de libertação integral ([1979]; Eng. tr., Maryknoll, NY [1983]). E. *Nestle and J. C. Lambert in DCG 2 (1908), pp. 57–63, s.v., with full bibl. p. 60; H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 12 (pt. 2; 1936), cols. 2244–55, s.v. 'Oraison dominicale'; J. L. Houlden in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 4 (1992), pp. 356–62, s.v.

Lord's Supper. A title for the Holy Communion, now used esp. among Protestants. It is taken from 1 Cor. 11: 20 (τὸ κυριακὸν δεῖπνον), where the rendering 'Lord's Supper' is found in the English *Lollard version of 1382. Its occurrence in the title of N. *Ridley's Brief Declaration of the Lord's Supper, written in 1554 while its author was in prison, helped to popularize the name. See also EUCHARIST.

Loreto, near Ancona in Italy, is the site of the Holy House, alleged to have been inhabited by the BVM at the time of the *Annunciation and to have been miraculously transported by angels from *Nazareth to Tersatz in Dalmatia in 1291 and thence by the same agency to Loreto in 1295. The earliest attestation of the legend is an account of the sanctuary written c.1470. The whole story is now commonly regarded as unhistorical, not least by RC writers of unquestioned orthodoxy. See also LITANY OF LORETO.

The traditional account in H. Tursellinus, Lauretanae Historiae Libri V (1597), and P. V. Martorelli, Teatro Historico della S. Casa Nazarena (3 vols., fol., 1732–5). Somewhat more critical, J. A. Vogel, De Ecclesiis Recanatensi et Lauretana (1859; but written in 1806), and Mgr Leopardi, La Santa Casa di Loreto (Lugano, 1841). The attack on the tradition, led by H. Grisar, SJ, at the Munich Congress in 1900, was brought to a conclusion by C. U. J. Chevalier, Notre-Dame de Lorette: Étude historique sur l'authenticité de la Santa Casa (1906). G. Hueffer, Loreto: Eine geschichts- kritische Untersuchung der Frage des heiligen Hauses (2 vols., 1913–21). N. Alfieri and others, 'Contributi archeologici per la storia S. Casa di Loreto', Studia Picena, 35 (1967), pp. 64–128; idd., 'Nuovi contributi archeologici per la storia della S. Casa di Loreto', ibid. 36 (1968), pp. 1–112 [after excavations in 1962]. K. Weil-Garris, The Santa Casa di Loreto: Problems in Cinquecento Sculpture (2 vols., New York, 1977). F. [Grimaldi] da Morrovalle, OFM Cap., L'archivio storico della Santa Casa di Loreto: Inventario (Vatican City, 1965). H. Thurston in CE 13 (1912), pp. 454–6, s.v. 'Santa Casa di Loreto'.

Loric of St Patrick. See BREASTPLATE OF ST PATRICK.

Lorsch, *Benedictine Abbey near Worms. Founded in 764 with monks sent by *Chrodegang of Metz from *Gorze, it enjoyed the special favour of *Charlemagne and became one of the largest and best-endowed abbeys in Germany. Under St *Bruno (brother of the Emp. Otto I), in the middle of the 10th cent. it was a centre of the Gorze reform movement. Later it declined in importance. It became *Cistercian in 1232 and *Premonstratensian in 1248. In the Carolingian age there was built up one of the largest libraries in Europe, which is of great importance for the transmission of patristic texts. Considerable remains survive among the Palatine MSS in the *Vatican Library and among the Laudian MSS in the *Bodleian Library in Oxford.

Codex Laureshamensis, ed. K. Glöckner (Arbeiten der historischen Kommission für den Volksstaat Hessen; 3 vols., Darmstadt, 1929–36, repr., 1963); Ger. tr. by K. J. Minst (6 vols., Lorsch, 1966–72). Laurissa Jubilans: Festschrift zur 1200-Jahrfeier von Lorsch (Darmstadt, 1964); Die Reichsabtei Lorsch: Festschrift zum Gedenken an ihre Stiftung 764, ed. F. Knöpp (2 vols., ibid., 1973–7), incl. repr. in vol. 2, pp. 7–128, of B. Bischoff, Lorsch im Spiegel seiner Handschriften (Münchener Beiträge zur Mediävistik und Renaissance-Forschung, Beiheft, 1974). A number of important older arts. are repr. in Beiträge zur Geschichte des Klosters Lorsch (Geschichtsblätter für den Kreis Bergstrasse, Sonderband 4; Lorsch, 1978). Medieval library catalogue pr. in G. Becker, Catalogi bibliothecarum antiqui (Bonn, 1885), pp. 82–125. H. Hoffmann, Buchkunst und Königtum im ottonischen und frühsalischen Reich (Schriften der MGH, 30/1; 1986), pp. 203–26.

Lossky, Vladimir (1903–58), Russian lay theologian. The son of the philosopher Nicolas Lossky, he studied first at the University of St Petersburg and then, after expulsion from Russia by the Soviet government in 1922, at Prague and the *Sorbonne. He lived for the rest of his life in France. He became one of the leading exponents of Orthodox thought to the western world and a vigorous opponent of the sophiological doctrines of S. *Bulgakov. He devoted his concluding years to the study of *Eckhart, but his work on this subject was unfinished at the time of his death. His published writings include Essai sur la théologie mystique de l'Église d'Orient (1944; rev. Eng. tr., 1957); Théologie négative et connaissance de Dieu chez Maître Eckhart (1960); Vision de Dieu (Neuchâtel, 1962; Eng. tr., 1963); À l'Image et à la ressemblance de Dieu (1967; Eng. tr., 1974); and, with L. Ouspensky, The Meaning of Icons (Bern and Olten, 1952).

O. Clément, 'Vladimir Lossky, un théologien de la personne et du Saint-Esprit', Messager de l'Exarchat du Patriarche russe en Europe occidentale, 30–1 (1959), pp. 137–206.

Los von Rom (Ger., 'free from Rome'). A vigorous anti-Roman Movement begun in Austria in 1897 and fostered by the Pan-German party, who aimed at the incorporation of an Austria, freed from the Pope, into Germany under the protection of the Protestant Hohenzollern Emperors. The Movement, which owed its name to the shout of a student at the Deutscher Volkstag at Vienna (1897), came to have its centre at Innsbruck. Its chief organization was the 'Ulrich-Hutten-Bund', and among its principal leaders were G. von Schönerer, V. Eisenkolb, and Superintendent F. Meyer. Its influence was increased by the unsatisfactory situation of the Church in Austria, e.g. the unwieldy size of the dioceses, the lack of German priests, and esp. the anticlerical spirit of the secondary schools. Though most of those who left the RC Church (up to 1914 *c.*75,000) became nominal Protestants, the Movement was essentially anti-Christian, as the Pan-Germans favoured a neo-pagan 'German' religion, an aim later realized on a much greater scale by the National Socialists. From Austria parallel Los von Rom movements spread to other countries, e.g. *Poland (see MARIAVITES), *France, *Belgium, *Sri Lanka, and *Mexico, but with comparatively little success.

P. Bräunlich, Berichte über den Fortgang der 'Los von Rom-Bewegung' (1. Reihe, Hefte 1–10, 2. Reihe, Hefte 1–10; 1899–1910). On the background, J. W. Boyer, Political Radicalism in late Imperial Vienna: Origins of the Christian Social Movement 1848–1897 (Chicago and London [1981]), pp. 122–83. F. Lau in RGG (3rd edn.), 4 (1960), cols. 451–5, s.v.; H. Grote in TRE 21 (1991), pp. 469–71, s.v.

Lotze, Hermann (1817–81), logician and metaphysician. A native of Bautzen, he studied medicine and philosophy at Leipzig. After teaching for a short time at Leipzig (1839–42), he became professor of philosophy at Göttingen (1842; full professor 1844), where he remained until called to Berlin (1881) shortly before his death. He combined a firm belief in the reign of scientific law with conviction of the need for metaphysics, and opposed alike the theory of a specific Lebenskraft in nature ('vitalism') and the a priori constructions of the German Idealists (F. W. J. von *Schelling, G. W. F. *Hegel). He was insistent that philosophy must be rooted in the natural sciences, in which he retained his interest until his death. He had a firm faith in *Theism; and, believing in the validity of moral judgements, he became an early exponent of 'value philosophy'. His doctrines, first formulated in his Metaphysik (1841) and Logik (1843), were elaborated in a semi-popular form in his Mikrokosmus (3 vols., 1856–64; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1885). He devoted his later years to the elaboration of a System der Philosophie, of which only two volumes were published, the Logik (1874; Eng. tr. by B. *Bosanquet, 1884) and Metaphysik (1879; Eng. tr. by id., 1884).

Lotze's main Works have been reissued, with introds., in the Philosophische Bibliothek. Kleine Schriften, ed. D. Peipers, 3 vols., 1885–91. T. M. *Lindsay, 'Hermann Lotze', Mind, 1 (1876), pp. 363–82. E. Pfleiderer, Lotze's philosophische Weltanschauung nach ihren Grundzügen (1882); E. von *Hartmann, Lotzes Philosophie (1888); H. Jones, A Critical Account of the Philosophy of Lotze (1895); R. Falckenberg, Hermann Lotze (1901); M. Wentscher, Hermann Lotze (vol. 1, 1913), and other works; P. Gese, Lotzes Religionsphilosophie (1916); E. E. Thomas, Lotze's Theory of Reality (1921). R. Gotesky in P. Edwards (ed.), The Encyclopedia of Philosophy, 5 (1967), pp. 87–9, s.v.

Lou, Tseng-tsiang. See LU, CHENG-HSIANG.

Louis I (778–840) (the Pious or le Débonnaire). The third son of *Charlemagne (d. 814), by whom he was appointed King of Aquitaine in 781 and joint Emperor in 813. He married Ermengard, daughter of Count Ingrawn *c.*794. As King in Aquitaine he exerted himself with considerable success in military campaigns into Spain, and promoted monastic reform. On his accession to the Empire in 814 (on Charlemagne's death) he extended the monastic reforms, under the direction of St *Benedict of Aniane, to embrace the entire Frankish kingdom, and promulgated major legislation concerning monasticism in 816–17. In 817, with the Ordinatio Imperii, he associated his eldest son Lothar with him as Emperor and gave subkingdoms to his other sons, Louis (Bavaria) and Pepin (Aquitaine). The birth of a fourth son, Charles, by his second wife, Judith, in 823, eventually upset this arrangement, and the latter years of his reign were marred by disputes with his sons and their supporting aristocratic factions, culminating in his temporary deposition in 833 and his performance of public *penance. Despite the political difficulties of his reign, Louis was an efficient and innovative administrator, as well as zealous in the promotion of monasticism and missionary work, and enjoying considerable success in his relations with the Papacy, the Danes, and the Slavs. The royal library remained important during Louis's reign, and the work of *Carolingian scholars and artists is notable in this period.

J. F. Böhmer, Die Regesten des Kaiserreichs unter den Karolingern (2nd edn. by E. Mühlbacher, 1908), pp. 234–412. Life by Theganus, written in 835, ed. G. H. Pertz in MGH, Scriptores, 2 (1829), pp. 589–603; further early Life by an anonymous writer known as the 'Astronomer', ibid., pp. 604–48; Eng. tr. of the latter, with introd. and notes, by A. Cabannis (Syracuse, NY, 1961). B. Simson, Jahrbücher des fränkischen Reiches unter Ludwig dem Frommen (Jahrbücher der deutschen Geschichte, 2 vols. in one, 1874–6). R. McKitterick, The Frankish Kingdoms under the Carolingians, 751–987 (1983), pp. 106–39. F. L. Ganshof, 'Louis the Pious Reconsidered', History, 42 (1957), pp. 171–80. P. Godman and R. Collins (eds.), Charlemagne's Heir: New Perspectives on the Reign of Louis the Pious (814–840) (Oxford, 1990). T. Schieffer, 'Die Krise des karolingischen Imperiums', in J. Engel and H. M. Klinkenberg (eds.), Aus Mittelalter und Neuzeit: Gerhard Kallen zum 70 Geburtstag (Bonn, 1957), pp. 1–15; B. Bischoff, 'Die Hofbibliothek unter Ludwig dem Frommen', in J. J. G. Alexander and M. T. Gibson (eds). Medieval Learning and Literature: Essays Presented to Richard William Hunt (Oxford, 1976), pp. 3–22. T. F. X. Noble, The Republic of St Peter: The Birth of the Papal State, 680–825 (Philadelphia [1984]), esp. pp. 299–323. J. M. Wallace-Hadrill, The Frankish Church (Oxford History of the Christian Church, 1983), pp. 226–41.

Louis IX, St (1214–70), King of France. Born at Poissy, he was the son of Louis VIII (d. 1226) and Blanche of Castile (d. 1252), who acted as regent during his minority. In 1226 he was crowned at *Reims and in 1234 he married Margaret of Provence. In 1242 he defeated an attempt by Henry III of England to recover the lost Angevin territories in western France. Having resolved during an illness in 1244 to take the cross, he sailed in 1248 and captured the Egyptian port of Damietta in 1249; but owing to floods and lack of co-operation the crusaders were routed in 1250 and Louis IX taken prisoner. Securing his own release by the surrender of Damietta and that of his men by the payment of their ransoms, he proceeded to Syria in 1250 to fortify the strongholds still in Christian hands. He returned to France in 1254, imposed peace on Flanders in 1256 and signed the Treaties of Corbeil with Aragon in 1258 and of Paris with Henry III in 1259, the terms of both illustrating his desire for equity and a lasting settlement. Between 1258 and 1265 he several times arbitrated between Henry III and his barons. Having planned a further crusade in 1267, he embarked on 1 July 1270 and landed at Tunis, where he died of dysentery on 25 Aug.

In his austere and prayerful private life, with its close links with the *Franciscan and *Dominican Orders, his energy, his determination that every man should have his due, and the paramount consideration which he gave to the defence of the Holy Land, Louis embodied the highest ideals of medieval kingship. He reformed the administration of France, frequently meting out justice himself. He built the *Sainte-Chapelle in Paris (c. 1245–8) for the *Crown of Thorns which he had acquired from the Latin Emp. of Constantinople, Baldwin II, in 1239; he endowed various religious houses and supported the theological college founded by Robert de *Sorbon in 1257. He was canonized by *Boniface VIII in 1297. Feast day, 25 Aug.

Crit. edn. of the instructions which Louis compiled for his son Philippe by D. O'Connell as The Teachings of Saint Louis (University of North Carolina Studies in the Romance Languages and Literatures, 116; Chapel Hill, NC, 1972); those which he compiled for his daughter Isabelle, ed. id. as The Instructions of Saint Louis (ibid. 216; 1979). The principal authority is the Life by J. de *Joinville (q.v. for edns. and trs.). Life by William of Saint-Pathus, written some time between 1302 and 1307, ed. H. F. Delaborde (Collection de textes pour servir à l'étude et à l'enseignement de l'histoire; 1899); Miracles by the same author ed. P. B. Fay in Les Classiques français du moyen âge, 70; 1931. Lives by Geoffrey of Beaulieu, OP, and William of Chartres, OP, his confessors and chaplains, pr., with other material, in AASS, Aug. 5 (1741), pp. 275–672. BHL, pp. 747–50 (nos. 5034–52), and Suppl. Novum (1986), pp. 549 f. Classic Lives by L. S. Le N. de *Tillemont, Vie de saint Louis, first ed. in full, J. de Gaulle (6 vols., Société de l'Histoire de France; 1847–51) and H. Wallon (2 vols., Paris, 1875). J. Richard, Saint Louis, roi d'une France féodale, soutien de la Terre sainte (1983; abridged Eng. tr., Cambridge and Paris, 1992). W. C. Jordan, Louis IX and the Challenge of the Crusade (Princeton, NJ [1979]). L. Carolus-Barré and others (eds.), Septième Centenaire de la Mort de Saint Louis: Actes des Colloques de Royaumont et de Paris (21–27 Mai 1970) (Paris, 1976). L. Buisson, König Ludwig IX., der Heilige, und das Recht (Freiburg, 1954). L. Carolus-Barré, 'Les Enquêtes pour la Canonisation de Saint Louis—de Grégoire X à Boniface VIII—et la Bulle Gloria Laus, du 11 août 1297', Revue d'Histoire de l'Église de France, 57 (1971), pp. 19–29; R. Folz, 'La Sainteté de Saint Louis d'après les Textes liturgiques de sa Fête', ibid., pp. 31–45. J. Le Goff in TRE 21 (1991), pp. 487–90, s.v. 'Ludwig IX'.

Louis of Granada. See LUIS OF GRANADA.

Lourdes, a famous French place of pilgrimage in the Department of Hautes-Pyrénées. In 1858 the 14-year-old peasant girl, *Bernadette Soubirous, had visions of the BVM in the grotto of a rock at Lourdes in which the Virgin told her that she was the Immaculate Conception. At the same time a spring appeared; miraculous healings were soon reported to have taken place; and the faithful began to flock to Lourdes. In 1862 the pilgrimage received official ecclesiastical recognition, a church was built above the grotto, and beside it from 1883 to 1901 the magnificent church of the Rosary. The crypt of the Basilica of the Immaculate Conception (above the grotto) and a vast underground church dedicated to Pope *Pius X were consecrated by the future Pope *John XXIII in 1958. Millions of pilgrims have visited the shrine, a medical bureau has been established to investigate the character of the cures, and an enormous literature, much of it controversial, has sprung up around it. In 1891 a local feast of the apparition of Our Lady of Lourdes (11 Feb.) was sanctioned, and extended to the universal Church by Pius X in 1907; since 1969 its observance has been optional.

L.-J.-M. Cros, SJ, Histoire de Notre-Dame de Lourdes d'après les documents et les témoins (3 vols., 1925–6); id., Lourdes 1858, ed. P. M. Olphe-Galliard, SJ [1957]. R. Laurentin, Lourdes: Histoire authentique des apparitions (6 vols., 1961–4). There is also a very large number of popular studies such as J. Jørgensen, Lourdes (Copenhagen, 1910; Eng. tr., 1914), and R. Laurentin, Sens de Lourdes (2nd edn., 1958; Eng. tr., 1959). T. F. Casey in NCE 8 (1967), pp. 1031–3, s.v. See also bibl. to BERNADETTE, ST.

love. In Christian theology, the principle of God's action and man's response. In the OT the loving character of God was recognized, notably by *Hosea, but it was only in the NT that the doctrine that love constitutes the essential nature of God was developed (e.g. 1 Jn. 4: 8). Love, as the bond between the Father and the Son, is particularly associated with the Holy Spirit by St *Augustine and other writers. The OT commandments that man should love God (e.g. Deut. 6: 5) and his neighbour (Lev. 19: 18) are joined together by Christ (Mk. 12: 29–31), but the peculiarly Christian character of the love required is emphasized by the Lord's description of the demand for love as a 'new commandment' (Jn. 13: 34). One special characteristic of this commandment is that love must be extended even to one's enemies (Mt. 5: 43–8). This Christian love (called ἀγάπη in the NT, traditionally rendered 'charity' in English) is the greatest of the *theological virtues (1 Cor. 13: 13; Col. 3: 14). In 1 Cor. 13: 1–8 its manifestations are described; it is a matter of the will rather than the emotions, and it appears (1 Jn. 5: 3) to consist in keeping God's commandments. St *Augustine developed a theology of the Christian life as consisting essentially in charity, understood as a supernatural gift obtained only by means of divine *grace; without the motivation supplied by charity, mere outward observance of God's Law is insufficient for salvation. In the Augustinian tradition some theologians (e.g. *Peter Lombard) identified our charity with the Holy Spirit, but this was rejected by St *Thomas Aquinas and others, who regard charity as a created effect of grace in us. In the late Middle Ages some devotional writers interpreted love of God in primarily emotional terms, which sometimes made it difficult to leave room for love of neighbour, whether affective or practical, but theologians insisted on an 'ordered love', in which we love God for himself and creatures in God and for God. Some, like St *Catherine of Siena, resolved the tension between the two precepts of love by insisting that in each case it is God's own love which draws the believer into itself, making him love God and creatures supernaturally. See also AGAPE.

C. E. Raven, Jesus and the Gospel of Love (Albert Robertson Lectures for 1931; 1931). J. Burnaby, Amor Dei: A Study of the Religion of St Augustine (Hulsean Lectures for 1938; 1938). H. Riesenfeld, 'Étude bibliographique sur la notion biblique d'ΑΓΑΠΗ', Coniectanea Neotestamentica, 5 (Uppsala, 1941), pp. 1–32. M. C. *D'Arcy, SJ, The Mind and Heart of Love (1945). H. Pétré, Caritas: Étude sur le vocabulaire latin de la charité chrétienne (SSL 22; 1948). V. Warnack, Agape: Die Liebe als Grundmotiv der neutestamentlichen Theologie (1951). P. Gilleman, SJ, Le Primat de la charité en théologie morale: Essai méthodologique (Museum Lessianum, Section théologique, 50; 1952; Eng. tr. [1959]). C. S. *Lewis, The Four Loves (1960). C. Spicq, OP, Agapè dans le Nouveau Testament: Analyse des textes (3 vols., Études Bibliques, 1958–9; Eng. tr., 2 vols., 1963–5). D. D. Williams, The Spirit and the Forms of Love (1968). G. [H.] Outka, Agape: An Ethical Analysis (Yale Publications in Religion, 17; 1972). W. H. Vanstone, Love's Endeavour, Love's Expense: The Response of Being to the Love of God (1977). G. Quell and E. Stauffer in TWNT 1 (1933), cols. 20–55, s.v. ἀγαπάω; Eng. tr. of this art., with bibl., by J. R. Coates (London, 1949). F. Prat and others in Dict. Sp. 2 (1953), cols. 508–691, s.v. 'Charité'; K. D. Sakenfeld and W. Klassen in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 4 (1992), pp. 375–96, s.v. See also works cited under AGAPE (1).

Lovedale. Missionary educational centre in the Eastern Cape, *South Africa. In 1824 missionaries of the Glasgow Missionary Society, an offshoot of the *LMS, founded a mission station in the Tyume valley. In 1841 the Lovedale Institution was inaugurated there; until its effective abolition as a result of the Bantu Education Act of 1952, it was the leading educational institution for Africans, not only in South Africa but in the whole of Southern Africa. Under its first two principals, William Govan and James Stewart (1870–1905), a primary school, a high school, a teacher-training college, a theological school, and a technical college were developed. Later Dr Neil MacVicar (1902–37) created the first school to train African nurses to SRN standard. Southern Africa's first university college for Africans, Fort Hare, also developed out of Lovedale, again led by a Scottish missionary, Alexander Kerr, its first principal (1918–48). From the beginning Lovedale was multiracial as well as coeducational, until this arrangement was terminated by Government action. It was also a publishing house of some importance and produced The Christian Express (1871–1921; from 1922 The South African Outlook), long one of the few journals of liberal Christian opinion in South Africa.

R. H. W. Shepherd, Lovedale, South Africa: The Story of a Century 1841–1941 (Lovedale [1940]). Various papers which had previously appeared in The South African Outlook, some shortened, ed. F. Wilson and D. Perrot, Outlook on a Century: South Africa 1870–1970 (Lovedale, 1973).

Low Churchmen. The group in the C of E which gives a relatively unimportant or 'low' place to the claims of the episcopate, priesthood, and sacraments, and generally approximates in its beliefs to those of Protestant Nonconformists. The term 'Low Churchman', which dates from the early 18th cent., was coined in contrast to '*High Churchman', but orig. used of the *Latitudinarian (liberal) group. It went out of use; when revived in the mid-19th cent. it was applied to the *Evangelicals, whereas the liberal group then came to be dubbed '*Broad Churchmen'. See also EVANGELICALISM.

Low Mass. In the W. Church, the simplified form of Mass, until modern times the form in most frequent use. It grew up in the Middle Ages, when the practice of each priest saying a Mass daily became common and the elaborate ceremonial and considerable number of assistants traditionally required for the Liturgy were no longer practicable. In a Low Mass, where the celebrating priest had no ministers to assist him except a single server, he read both the *Epistle and *Gospel himself, and no part of the service was sung. Except in cathedral and capitular churches, Low Mass was the usual form of celebration except on Sundays and greater feast days; and even on these days all except one of the Masses in any church was usually a Low Mass. The current RC Ordo Missae, however, no longer uses the term; it requires that all Masses celebrated with the people shall be community Masses with full participation; if there is no deacon or *lector some other lay person may read the first two lessons, and it is urged that there should be singing at all Masses. In the E. Low Masses have never been known, though some *Uniat bodies adopted a somewhat similar form of celebration. See also HIGH MASS.

Jungmann (1958 edn.), 1, pp. 279–306; Eng tr. (1951), pp. 212–33.

Low Sunday. The first Sunday after Easter, probably so called in contrast to the 'high' feast of Easter Sunday itself. In Latin it used to be termed Dominica in albis. In the RC Church it is now officially designated the second Sunday in Eastertide.

Lowder, Charles Fuge (1820–80), vicar of St Peter's, London Docks. Educated at Exeter College, Oxford, he was ordained priest in 1844, and in 1851 became curate at the *Anglo-Catholic parish of St Barnabas, Pimlico. With others he founded the *Society of the Holy Cross in 1855 and stressed the importance of groups of *celibate clergy living under a simple rule for mission work in the slums. In 1856 he joined the staff of St George's in the East, where he took a leading part in the first regular mission work in E. London, with A. H. *Mackonochie as his colleague from 1858. The advanced ceremonial led to fierce riots. His mission work expanded, however, and he built the church of St Peter's, London Docks (1860–6). Known always as 'Father Lowder', he was the means of bringing many thousands of E. Londoners to the Christian faith.

Anonymous Life by M. Trench (London, 1881). L. E. Ellsworth, Charles Lowder and the Ritualist Movement (1982). S. L. Ollard in DECH, pp. 342 f.

Lowth, Robert (1710–87), Bp. of London. He was educated at Winchester and at New College, Oxford. From 1741 to 1750 he was professor of poetry at Oxford, and later Bp. successively of *St David's (1776), of Oxford (also 1766), and of London (1777). His chief contributions to biblical learning arose from his study of the forms of Hebrew poetry. In his De sacra poesi Hebraeorum Praelectiones Academicae (1753; J. D. *Michaelis added notes in 1775; Eng. tr. of this expanded revision, 1793) he recognized the existence of '*parallelism' as a regular device of Hebrew poetry. In a controversy with W. *Warburton, Lowth defended the extreme antiquity of the Book of *Job. His commentary on *Isaiah (1778) pointed the way to later criticism of that Book.

Sermons and Other Remains of Robert Lowth, ed. P. Hall (London, 1834), with introd. Memoir, pp. 1–42. Extracts from the 1787 Eng. tr. of his De sacra poesi Hebraeorum repr., with introd., in J. Drury (ed.), Critics of the Bible 1724–1873 (Cambridge, 1989), pp. 69–102. Short Memoirs of the Life and Writings of . . . Robert Lowth (London, 1787). B. Hepworth, Robert Lowth (Boston [1978]). W. Hunt in DNB 34 (1893), pp. 214–16.

Loyola, St Ignatius. See IGNATIUS LOYOLA, ST.

Lu, Cheng-hsiang (1871–1949), Chinese statesman and Benedictine monk and abbot. The son of a Protestant catechist, he was born at Shanghai and educated at Shanghai and Peking. He was interpreter and secretary to the Chinese Legation at St Petersburg (1893–1906), Minister at The Hague (1907–11) and St Petersburg (1911–12) and Foreign Minister (1912–20; with brief interruptions). In 1912 and 1915 he was also Prime Minister and from 1922 to 1927 Chinese Minister at Berne. In Oct. 1911 he was received into the RC Church. After the death of his wife (a Belgian whom he had married in 1899) in 1926, he entered the *Benedictine Abbey of St-André, near Bruges (1927), where he was later professed as Dom Pierre Célestin Lou. In 1946 he was appointed Titular Abbot of St-Pierre-de-Gand by *Pius XII. His intention of returning to the East to establish a Benedictine Congregation in China was prevented by ill health. As a Christian statesman he had been a reformer not a revolutionary. In the sphere of religion he saw in Christianity the fulfilment of Confucianism, finding St *John's doctrine of the *Logos paralleled by Lao-Tse's teaching of the Tao. He believed Classical Chinese to be the appropriate liturgical language for the worship of his countrymen. His writings include Souvenirs et pensées (1945; Eng. tr. as Ways of Confucius and of Christ, 1948) and La Rencontre des humanités (1949; posthumous).

Wu Ching-Hioung, Dom Lou: Sa vie spirituelle [1949]; E. Neut, OSB, Jean-Jacques Lou, Dom Lou (Suppl. to nos. 192–3 of Synthèses, Brussels, 1962). H. L. Boorman (ed.), Biographical Dictionary of Republican China, 2 (1968), pp. 441–4, s.v. 'Lu Cheng-hsiang'.

Lubac, Henri de (1896–1991), French *Jesuit theologian. Born in Cambrai, he became a Jesuit in 1913. He fought in the French Army in the First World War and was severely wounded. After studying in England, the Channel Islands, and France, he was ordained priest in 1927 and taught theology at Lyons from 1929 (as professor from 1934); here he had many distinguished pupils, incl. J. *Daniélou and H. U. von *Balthasar. A peritus at the Second *Vatican Council, he was made a cardinal in 1983.

His Mémoire sur l'occasion de mes écrits (1989) recounts a vast literary output, covering a wide range of subjects. He wrote on the doctrine of the Church in Catholicisme (1938; Eng. tr., 1950) and Corpus Mysticum (1944) and on grace and the supernatural in Surnaturel (1946), Augustinisme et théologie moderne (1965; Eng. tr., 1969), and Le Mystère de surnaturel (1965; Eng. tr., 1967). He produced two important works on the history of *exegesis and the value of *allegory: Histoire et esprit (1950), in which he supported the position of *Origen, and Exégèse médiévale (1959–64), which contains an appreciation of Renaissance humanism as well as discussion of the apocalyptic views of *Joachim of Fiore. These interests were developed in his study of *Pico della Mirandola (1974) and in La Posterité spirituelle de Joachim de Flore (1979–81). He was appreciative, but not uncritical, of the work of P. *Teilhard de Chardin; he edited a number of volumes of his correspondence and devoted three books to his thought: La Pensée religieuse de Père Teilhard de Chardin (1962; Eng. tr., 1967), La Prière du Père Teilhard de Chardin (1964; Eng. tr., 1965), and L'Éternel féminin (1968; Eng. tr., 1971). His other works include Le Drame de l'humanisme athée (1944; Eng. tr., 1949), Aspects du bouddhisme (1951–5; Eng. tr. of vol. 1, 1953), La Rencontre du bouddhisme et de l'occident (1952), and Athéisme et sens de l'homme (1968). De Lubac was one of the thinkers who created the intellectual climate that made possible the Second *Vatican Council, largely by opening up the vast spiritual resources of the Catholic tradition which had been cramped by post-Tridentine 'baroque' theology. He was also one of the founders of the collection 'Sources Chrétiennes', an important series of patristic and medieval texts, with French translation, now involving scholars from all over the world.

L'Homme devant Dieu: Mélanges offerts au Père Henri de Lubac (Théologie, 56–8 [1964]), with bibl. of his works, 3, pp. 347–56. K. H. Neufeld and M. Sales, Bibliographie Henri de Lubac S.J. (Einsiedeln, 1971; 2nd edn., 1974). H. U. von Balthasar, Henri de Lubac: Sein organisches Lebenswerk (ibid. [1976]). Polgár, 2 (1990), pp. 449–52.

Lubbertus, Sibrandus (c. 1555–1625), Dutch *Calvinist theologian. Born at Langwarden in Oldenburg and educated first at the Latin School at Bremen, he studied theology at *Wittenberg, *Geneva (under T. *Beza), *Marburg, and Neustadt (under Z. *Ursinus). In 1585 he became professor of theology at the newly-founded University of Franeker where he remained till his death, combining his duties in the faculty with a ministry in the local church. Lubbertus' prime concern was to counter RC teaching and esp. that of R. *Bellarmine, against whom he directed De Principiis Christianorum Dogmatum (1591; 2nd edn., 1595), De Papa Romano (1594), De Conciliis (1601), and De Ecclesia (1607). His role as defender of orthodox Calvinism was also exercised in response to *Socinianism, esp. in De Jesu Christo Servatore contra Faustum Socinum (1611) and in his opposition to *Arminianism. In the latter controversy, he took a prominent part in The Hague Conference of 1607, and corresponded extensively with foreign theologians (among them A. *Melville and G. *Abbot) to warn them against Arminius' teaching. He further attacked the Arminianism of P. Bertius in Epistolica Disceptatio de Fide Justificante (1612), C. *Vorstius in two works (1611 and 1613), and the Ordinum Hollandiae ac Westfrisiae Pietas of H. *Grotius (1613) in his Responsio ad Pietatem Grotii (1614). At the Synod of *Dort (1618–19), at which he was a prominent defender of the Calvinist position, albeit an opponent of F. *Gomar's *Supralapsarianism, he was appointed to the Commission preparing a new Dutch version of the OT. His last published work was a commentary on the *Heidelberg Catechism.

More than 700 items of his correspondence are preserved in the British Library, MSS Add. 22960–2. C. Van der Woude, Sibrandus Lubbertus: Leven en Werken in het bijzonder naar zijn correspondentie (Kampen, 1963). Id. in Biografisch Lexicon voor de Geschiedenis van het Nederlandse Protestantisme, 1 (1978), pp. 143–5.

Lüber, Thomas. See ERASTIANISM.

Lucar, Cyril (1570–1638), Patriarch of *Constantinople. He was a Cretan by birth. After studying at *Venice and Padua, where he came into contact with Latin thought, he became *syncellus to Meletios Pegas, Patr. of *Alexandria, whom he succeeded in 1601. His presence at the Synod of *Brest-Litovsk in 1596 had already turned him against Rome and the *Jesuits, and he now became more and more friendly disposed towards the Reformed Churches. His sympathies towards the C of E were expressed in his dispatch of *Metrophanes Critopoulos to study at Oxford in 1617. In 1620 he was appointed Patr. of Constantinople, an appointment as welcome to the Protestants, esp. the Dutch, as disagreeable to the Jesuits. In 1623, 1633 (twice), and 1634 he was removed from the patriarchal throne, but later restored, partly through the help of the English and Dutch ambassadors, particularly Sir Thomas Roe (1621–8) and Cornelius van Haga. Through the former he presented the famous '*Codex Alexandrinus' to King *Charles I in 1628. With the support and encouragement of the *Calvinist theologian Antoine Léger, a translation of the Bible into the vernacular for the use of his flock was begun and eventually published in Geneva in 1638; and in 1629 there was published at the same place a Confessio Fidei, to which Cyril had appended his signature. This reinterprets the traditional E. Orthodox faith in thoroughly Calvinistic terms. Eight years later his enemies accused him of inciting the Cossacks against the Turkish government, and he was put to death on the orders of the Sultan Murad. He was the first important theologian of the E. Church since the fall of Constantinople in 1453; but his sympathies with Calvinism, in which he saw a legitimate way of clarifying and purifying Orthodox faith and life, led to the condemnation of his teaching by synods held at Constantinople (1638, 1642), *Jassy (1642), and *Jerusalem (1672). He remains, however, the most brilliant and politically outstanding Greek Patriarch and national leader ('ethnarch') of the 17th century.

For his 'Confession', see E. Kimmel, Libri Symbolici Ecclesiae Orientalis (Jena, 1843), pp. 24–44; Eng. tr. in J. N. W. B. Robertson, The Acts and Decrees of the Synod of Jerusalem (1899), pp. 185–215; Eng. tr. of the main part also in G. A. Hadjiantoniou, op. cit. infra, pp. 141–5. Sermons 1598–1602, ed. K. Rozemond (Leiden, 1974). E. Legrand, Bibliographie hellénique ou description raisonnée des ouvrages publiés par des Grecs au dix-septième siècle, 4 (1896), pp. 161–521. G. A. Hadjiantoniou, Protestant Patriarch: The Life of Cyril Lucaris (1572–1638), Patriarch of Constantinople (1961). S. Runciman, The Great Church in Captivity (Cambridge, 1968), pp. 259–88. G. Podskalsky, Griechische Theologie in der Zeit der Türkenherrschaft (1453–1821) (Munich, 1988), pp. 162–80. P. Meyer in PRE (3rd edn.), 11 (1902), pp. 682–90, with full bibl., and C. Emereau in DTC 9 (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 1003–19, s.v., with bibl.

Lucian of Antioch, St (d. 312), theologian and martyr. A presbyter of *Antioch, he was an influential teacher, counting both *Arius and *Eusebius of Nicomedia among his pupils; indeed his *subordinationist teaching seems to have been the immediate source of the Arian heresy. Only a few fragments of his writings have survived; but acc. to *Sozomen (HE 3. 5), the second of the four Creeds put forward by the Council of *Antioch in 341 was said to be his composition. He was a keen biblical student, who revised the Greek text (see LUCIANIC TEXT). His reputation for sanctity was not less than his fame as a scholar; and after enduring many tortures he was martyred at Nicomedia in 312. The long-prevalent view that he was a pupil of *Paul of Samosata has been disputed by F. *Loofs and G. Bardy. Feast day in E, 15 Oct.; in W., 7 Jan.

Frags. collected in M. J. *Routh, Reliquiae Sacrae (2nd edn., 4, 1846), pp. 3–10 (texts), 11–17 (notes). Eusebius, HE 8. 13. 2 and 9. 6. 3; Jerome, De Vir. Illustr. 77. Vita in *Philostorgius, HE (ed. J. Bidez in GCS, pp. 184–201). G. Bardy, Recherches sur Lucien d'Antioche et son école (1936). A. d'Alès, 'Autour de Lucien d'Antioche', Mélanges de l'Université Saint-Joseph, Beyrouth, 21 (1938), pp. 185–99. E. Boularand, 'Aux Sources de la doctrine d'Arius. La théologie antiochienne', Bulletin de Littérature Ecclésiastique, 68 (1967), pp. 241–72, esp. pp. 241–58. CPG 1 (1981), pp. 218 f. (nos. 1720–23). Bardenhewer, 2, pp. 279–85; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 214 f. J. Quasten, Patrology, 2 (Utrecht, 1953), pp. 142–4. G. Bardy in DTC 9 (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 1024–31; J. Liébaert in Catholicisme, 7 (1975), cols. 1245 f. See also bibl. to LUCIANIC TEXT.

Lucian of Samosata (*c.*115–*c.*200), pagan satirist. His interest to the student of early Christianity lies chiefly in some references in his 'Alexander of Abonuteichos' and esp. in 'De Morte Peregrini'. The former confirms the testimony of *Pliny that Christianity had made much progress in Bithynia-Pontus. The latter treats of the philosopher Peregrinus, a historical person who exchanged paganism for Christianity and was even imprisoned for his faith; but later he apostatized and became a cynic. Being expelled from Rome he made his way to Athens, where he burned himself at a stake during the Olympic Games, in order, as he said, to crown an exemplary life by an exemplary death. Lucian describes the generosity with which the Christians looked after their fellow-believer, Peregrinus, when imprisoned; but, believing that the philosopher was an impostor, he scoffs at their simplicity.

The '*Philopatris' (q.v.), which purports to be a work of Lucian and directly attacks Christianity, is of much later date, prob. 10th century.

Editio princeps of his collected works, Florence, 1496; modern edns. by C. Jacobitz (4 vols., Leipzig, 1836–41; 3 vols., Teub., 1852–3, and subsequent edns.) and M. D. Macleod (Oxford Classical Texts, 4 vols., 1972–87). Selection repr., with introd., Eng. tr., and comm. by id. (Warminster [1991]). Eng. tr. of Works by A. M. Harmon and others (8 vols., Loeb, 1913–67). J. Bompaire, Lucien écrivain (Bibliothèque des Écoles françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 190; 1958); J. Schwartz, Biographie de Lucien de Samosate (Collection Latomus, 85; 1965). C. P. Jones, Culture and Society in Lucian (Cambridge, Mass., and London, 1986). M. Caster, Lucien et la pensée religieuse de son temps (1937; with bibl.). H. D. Betz, Lukian von Samosata und das Neue Testament: Religionsgeschichtliche und paränetische Parallelen (TU 76; 1961), with bibl. on Lucian, pp. 218–51. A.*Harnack in PRE (3rd edn.), 11 (1902), pp. 659–66, s.v.

Lucianic text. The text of the Gk. Bible, as revised by *Lucian of Antioch (q.v.). Its marks are the elimination of barbarisms and obscurities, the conflation of variant readings, intelligibility, and smoothness. Quotations in the Fathers indicate that it very soon became the accepted standard text in Syria, Asia Minor, and *Constantinople. The researches of F. J. A. *Hort and H. von Soden in the NT indicate that Lucian's text is now represented by the great body of the surviving Gk. MSS and is thus embodied in the 'Textus Receptus' (q.v.) and the AV. See also BYZANTINE TEXT and SYRIAN TEXT OF THE NT.

B. M. Metzger, Chapters in the History of New Testament Textual Criticism (New Testament Tools and Studies, 4; Leiden, 1963), pp. 1–41 ('The Lucianic Recension of the Greek Bible'), with bibl. S. Jellicoe, The Septuagint and Modern Study (Oxford, 1968), pp. 157–71. G. Mercati, 'Di alcune testimonianze antiche sulle cure bibliche di S. Luciano', Biblica, 24 (1943), pp. 1–17. M. Spanneut, 'La Bible d'Eustathe d'Antioche—contribution à l'histoire de la "version lucianique"', in F. L. Cross (ed.), Studia Patristica, 4 (TU 79; 1961), pp. 171–90. E. Tov, 'Lucian and Proto-Lucian. Toward a new solution of the problem', Revue Biblique, 79 (1972), pp. 101–13.

Lucifer (Lat., 'light-bearer'), in Is. 14: 12 (Vulgate, followed by AV), an epithet of the King of Babylon. Taken in conjunction with Lk. 10: 18 it was used as a synonym for the devil by St *Jerome and other Fathers. With the use of the word in classical mythology for the planet Venus may be compared the RV rendering 'day star' in Is. 14: 12. The imagery is applied to Christ in 2 Pet. 1: 19 (φωσφόρος, 'day star'), Rev. 22: 16 (ὁ ἀστὴρ ὁ πρωϊνός, 'the morning star'), and in the *Exultet.

Lucifer (d. 370 or 371), Bp. of Cagliari. A fiercely anti-Arian theologian, at the first session of the Council of Milan (354) he resisted the proposal to condemn *Athanasius with such vehemence that the Arians prevailed on the Emp. Constantius to confine him for three days in the Imperial Palace. His personal altercations with the Emperor which followed led to his banishment first to Palestine and later to the Thebaid (Egypt). During his exile he addressed several violent writings to Constantius with the evident, but unsuccessful, intent of courting martyrdom. They include 'De non conveniendo cum haereticis', 'De regibus apostaticis', and 'De S. Athanasio'. Soon after the accession of *Julian, in common with the exiled bishops generally, he was released (362). He then made his way to Antioch, where he vigorously resisted all conciliatory action towards repentant Arians, and by consecrating Paulinus, an Antiochene presbyter, bishop, created an unfortunate schism. A little later, it appears, he went back to his see. Whether or not he was ever formally excommunicated is uncertain, though this is suggested by passages in St *Ambrose and St *Augustine, and St *Jerome refers to his followers as 'Luciferians'.

His writings survive in the single MS Cod. Vat. 133 (9th–10th cent.). J. P. Migne, PL 13. 767–1038. Modern edns. by W. Hartel (CSEL 14; 1886) and by G. F. Diercks (CCSL 8; 1978). G. Krüger, Lucifer Bischof von Cagliari und das Schisma der Luciferianer (1886); F. Piva, Lucifero di Cagliari contro l'imperatore Costanzo (Trent, 1928); G. Thörnell, Studia Luciferiana (Uppsala, 1934). C. Zedda, 'La teologia trinitaria di Lucifero di Cagliari', Divus Thomas, 52 (Piacenza, 1949), pp. 276–329. A. Figus, L'Enigma de Lucifero di Cagliari (Cagliari, 1973), with bibl. Bardenhewer, 3, pp. 469–77; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 367 and 626. É. Amann in DTC 9 (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 1032–44.

Lucina. Several pious women of this name figure in the early traditions and legends of the Roman Church. Acc. to the Liber Pontificalis* (s.v. *Cornelius, AD 251–3), a certain Lucina had the bodies of Sts *Peter and *Paul removed from their resting-place at the *catacombs ('ad Catacumbas') and laid that of St Paul in her own property on the *Ostian Way. It appears that she or another Lucina was buried in another property, the 'Crypt of Lucina', on the *Appian Way, which also contains the tomb of Cornelius. G. B. *de Rossi sought to identify the Lucina who gives her name to the crypt with *Pomponia Graecina (1st cent.; q.v.).

H. *Lietzmann, Petrus und Paulus in Rom (2nd edn., 1927), pp. 179–89. L. Reekmans, La tombe du pape Corneille et sa région cémétériale (Roma Sotterranea Cristiana, 4; Vatican City, 1964). H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 9 (pt. 2; 1930), cols. 2636–61, s.v. 'Lucine (Crypte de)'; A. P. Frutaz in L.Th.K. (2nd edn.), 6 (1951), col. 1175. See also bibl. to POMPONIA GRAECINA.

Lucius. In legend, the first Christian King of Britain. Acc. to an early form of the story (based apparently on a statement in the Liber Pontificalis* that a British king, Lucius, sent a request to the Pope that he might become a Christian), Lucius successfully appealed to Pope Eleutherius (174–89) for Christian teachers to be sent to Britain, and together with large numbers of his subjects received Baptism at their hands; the heathen temples were converted into Christian churches; the heathen priesthood abandoned their pagan functions for the Christian ministry; and Lucius is said to have died at *Gloucester in 156. In later times (9th–16th cents.) the legend was considerably embellished. King Lucius becomes the son of *Simon of Cyrene, is converted by St *Timothy, and goes as a missionary to Rhaetia, where he establishes himself as the first Bp. of Chur and is martyred by stoning. The details of the later story are apparently due to the conflation of legends about the King of Britain with independent traditions about a Lucius of Chur, who was possibly a historical person. A. *Harnack suggested that the statement in the Liber Pontificalis is due to a confusion between 'Britain' and 'Britis', a name for *Edessa, and that the king mentioned was really *Abgar IX [VIII] of that city.

The story is related by *Bede, HE 1. 4 and 5. 24 (cf. notes to edn. by C. Plummer, 2, Oxford, 1896, p. 14, and comm. by J. M. Wallace-Hadrill, ibid., 1988, p. 11); *William of Malmesbury, De Antiquitate Glastoniensis Ecclesiae, 2, and *Geoffrey of Monmouth, Historia Regum Britanniae, 4. 19 and 5. 1. A. Harnack, 'Der Brief des britischen Königs Lucius an den Papst Eleutherus', Sb. (Berl.), 1904, 1, pp. 909–16. A. W. Haddan and W. *Stubbs, Councils and Ecclesiastical Documents Relating to Great Britain and Ireland, 1 (1869), pp. 25 f. V. Berther, 'Der hl. Lucius', Zeitschrift der Schweizerischen Kirchengeschichte, 32 (1938), pp. 20–38, 103–24; I. Müller, 'Die Verehrung des hl. Lucius im 9.–12. Jh.', ibid. 48 (1954), pp. 96–126; id., 'Zur karolingischen Hagiographie. Kritik der Luciusvita', Schweizer Beiträge zur allgemeinen Geschichte, 14 (1956), pp. 5–28. A. Smith, 'Lucius of Britain: Alleged King and Church Founder', Folklore, 90 (1979), pp. 29–36.

Lucy, St. Acc. to tradition, she was a native of Syracuse who openly proclaimed her Christian faith by distributing her goods to the poor at the height of the *Diocletianic persecution. For this act she was denounced to the authorities by the young man to whom she had been betrothed by her parents, and suffered martyrdom in 303. She was much venerated in the early Church, as is shown by her inclusion in the *Canon of the Roman and *Ambrosian Mass. Her acta were utilized by St *Aldhelm in Tractatus de Laudibus Virginitatis, 42, and in his poem De Laudibus Virginum. There is also a long poem by *Sigebert of Gembloux in her honour. Feast day, 13 Dec.

The details of the acta (prob. 5th–6th cent., surviving in various Gk. and Lat. recensions) from which the story derives are untrustworthy. The Gk. passio ed. G. di Giovanni (Palermo, 1758), C. Barreca (Rome, 1902), and G. R. Taibbi (Istituto Siciliano di Studi Bizantini e Neogreci. Testi e Monumenti, Testi 6; 1959); the Lat. passio frequently ed., e.g. in A. Beaugrand, Sainte Lucie (1882). The most reliable authority for her early cult appears to be an inscription described by P. Orsi, 'Insigne epigrafe del cimitero di S. Giovanni in Siracusa', RQ 9 (1895), pp. 299–308. S. L. Agnello, 'Recenti esplorazioni nelle catacombe siracusane di S. Lucia', Riv. A.C. 30 (1954), pp. 7–60; 31 (1955), pp. 7–50. G. Goyau, Sainte Lucie (1921); O. Garana, S. Lucia nella tradizione, nella storia, nell'arte (Syracuse, 1958). Collection of pictures ed. M. Capdevila, Iconografía de Santa Lucía (Barcelona, 1949). H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 9 (pt. 2; 1930), cols. 2616–18, s.v. 'Lucie (Sainte)'.

Ludlow, John Malcolm Forbes (1821–1911), the founder of *Christian Socialism. Educated in France, where he got to know Charles Fourier and other Socialist pioneers, he came to London in 1838, and in 1843 he was called to the bar at Lincoln's Inn. In a letter to F. D. *Maurice from *Paris after the Revolution of 1848, he insisted that 'the new Socialism must be Christianized'. Many of the English leaders of Christian Socialism were not really Socialist in any political sense, but Ludlow was a convinced Socialist, and it was he who acquainted the English movement with European political ideas. He soon became active in literary propaganda, helped to form some co-operative associations for production, which, however, were short-lived, and was largely responsible for promoting the Industrial and Provident Societies Act of 1852. Later he co-operated with Maurice in the founding of the Working Men's College, where he taught for many years. Although overshadowed in public estimation by Maurice and C. *Kingsley, Ludlow was the real founder of the movement and remained its organizer and co-ordinator. He was never quite at home in the C of E, and, although he adhered to Anglicanism, he often worshipped at the French Protestant church in London. He believed in Socialism as the truest expression of democracy, but was also convinced that Christian Socialism was possible only if political and industrial emancipation were accompanied by an education spiritual and moral as well as intellectual. Ludlow was well versed in law, politics, and economics, and an accomplished linguist. His influence did much to prevent in England the antagonism between the Church and Socialism that existed in many other countries.

Life by N. C. Masterman (Cambridge, 1963). Sir Norman Moore in DNB, 1901–1911 (1912), pp. 487 f., s.v. See also works cited under CHRISTIAN SOCIALISM.

Ludolf, Hiob (1624–1704), also spelt 'Leutholf', German orientalist. A native of Erfurt, after studying there and at *Leiden he travelled extensively to increase his linguistic knowledge. In 1649 in Italy he met an Ethiopian scholar, Abba Gregorius, who taught him Amharic and served as a valuable informant. From 1652 to 1678 he was in the employment of the Duke of Saxe-Gotha. In 1683 he visited England to try to establish trade with Ethiopia, but, owing to obstacles raised by the *Ethiopian Church, met with no success. For the rest of his life he devoted himself to study. His many publications did much to introduce to the W. a knowledge of Ethiopic sources and history, which did not advance appreciably till the work of A. *Dillmann. They include a Grammatica Aethiopica (1661; 2nd edn., much enlarged and improved, 1702; photographically repr., Halle, 1986), a Historia Aethiopica (1681), and a Commentarius ad suam Historiam Aethiopicam (1691). In the last-named the '*Apostolic Tradition' of St *Hippolytus was first made accessible to W. scholars. He also published an edition of the Psalter in Ethiopic and Latin (1701).

His correspondence with Leibniz (mainly on linguistic subjects) was ed. by A. B. Michaelis (Göttingen, 1755); Eng. tr. of excerpts by J. T. Waterman (University of California Publications in Linguistics, 88 [1978]). His 'Theologia Aethiopica' was first pub. by S. Uhlig (Äthiopische Forschungen, 14A–B; 1983). Eng. tr. of his 'New History of Ethiopia' by 'J. P., Gent.' (London, 1682). J. Fleming, 'Hiob Ludolf. Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte der orientalischen Philologie', Beiträge zur Assyriologie, 1 (1890), pp. 537–58, 2 (1894), pp. 63–110. C. F. Bauer, Hiob Ludolf: Der Begründer der äthiopischen Sprachwissenschaft und des äthiopischen Buchdrucks (1937; brief, with specimens of his Ethiopic type and bibl.). E. Ullendorff, The Ethiopians (1960; 2nd edn., 1965), pp. 9–11.

Ludolf of Saxony (*c.*1300–78), also 'Ludolf the *Carthusian', spiritual writer. Little is known of his early life, except that he entered the *Dominican Order and became a Master of Theology before he joined the Carthusians at Strasbourg in 1340. From 1343 until 1348 he was Prior of the Charterhouse at Koblenz, but he then resumed his status as an ordinary monk and spent the rest of his life at Mainz and Strasbourg. His two principal works are a 'Commentary on the Psalms' and his celebrated 'Vita Christi'. The latter is not a biography but a meditation on the life of Christ, with doctrinal, spiritual, and moral instructions as well as prayers and extensive patristic citations; it became very popular.

His 'Vita Christi' was pr. at Cologne, 1474. It has frequently been reissued in many languages. The fullest modern edn. is that of A.-C. Bolard and others (Paris and Rome, 1865); also ed. L. M. Rigollot (Paris, 1878). His Comm. on the Psalms was pr. at Speyer, *c.*1491. Eng. tr. of the prayers at the end of the Vita Christi by M. I. Bodenstedt, SNB (Analecta Cartusiana, 15; Salzburg, 1973). Id., The Vita Christi of Ludolphus the Carthusian (Catholic University of America, Studies in Medieval and Renaissance Latin Language and Literature, 16; Washington, DC, 1955), with bibl. A. Passmann, OFM Cap., 'Probleme um Ludolf von Sachsen', Archives de l'Église d'Alsace, NS 3 (1949–50), pp. 13–34. W. Baier, Untersuchungen zu den Passionsbetrachtungen in der Vita Christi des Ludolf von Sachsen (Analecta Cartusiana, 44; 3 vols., Salzburg, 1977). Id. in Dict. Sp. 9 (1976) cols. 1130–8, s.v. 'Ludolphe de Saxe'.

Lugo, John de (1583–1660), Spanish *Jesuit. After studying law at Salamanca till 1603, he entered the Society in that year. From 1611 he taught philosophy at several Spanish colleges, and from 1616 theology at Valladolid. Called to the Jesuit College at Rome in 1621, he soon achieved international fame as a theologian, and was made cardinal by *Urban VIII in 1643. During these years were published his chief works, De Incarnatione (1633), De Sacramentis in Genere (1636), De Virtute Fidei Divinae (1646), Responsa Moralia (1651). An independent thinker, Lugo is chiefly important for his teaching on faith and on the sacrifice of the Mass. He held that God gives light sufficient for salvation to every soul, so that all men of good will can find among the errors of their human religious or philosophical systems the elements of Divine truth which will enable them to be saved. In his Eucharistic teaching he emphasized the element of destruction as the distinctive characteristic of sacrificial worship. He held that in the act of Consecration, Christ's human nature is in some manner 'destroyed' by being changed into a lower state from which the normal human activities are excluded and the primary object of its existence is henceforward to be consumed as food. His contributions to dogmatic theology, combined with his luminous exposition of many problems of moral theology, caused St *Alphonsus Liguori to regard Lugo as 'the most important theologian after St *Thomas Aquinas'.

Works listed in Sommervogel, 5 (1894), cols. 176–80, and 9 (1900), cols. 619 f., with details of pr. edns. More recent bibl. in Polgár, 2 (1990), pp. 454 f. L. Gómez Hellin, SJ, Praedestinatio apud Ioannem Cardinalem de Lugo (Analecta Gregoriana, 12; 1938). G. Brinkman, OFM, The Social Thought of John de Lugo (Catholic University of America Studies in Sociology, 41; Washington, DC, 1957). D. *Stone, A History of the Doctrine of the Holy Eucharist, 2 (1909), pp. 373–7. P. Bernard in DTC 9 (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 1071 f.

Luis de León. See LEÓN, LUIS DE.

Luis of Granada (1504–88), Spanish spiritual author. Luis de Sarria, who was born at Granada, was professed there as a *Dominican in 1525. He studied at the college of San Gregorio in Valladolid, where he became a close friend of Bartolomé de Carranza, later Primate of Spain and a victim of the Spanish Inquisition. Back in Andalusia, he spent 11 years (1534–45) at the Dominican convent of Escalaceli, near Córdoba, restoring the house and studying works of spirituality. He read the Imitation of Christ and was long thought, probably wrongly, to have translated it into Spanish. He became the foremost disciple of *John of Ávila and himself one of the most widely admired preachers of his day. In 1550/1, after some time in Extremadura, he was invited to go to Portugal by the Cardinal Infante Henry and scarcely ever returned to Spain. Provincial of the Portuguese Dominicans from 1556 to 1560, he acted as confessor to the great of the land and later included the Duke of Alba among his penitents. He refused the archbishopric of Braga, recommending instead his fellow-Dominican *Bartholomew of the Martyrs; his own life he gave to prayer, writing, and preaching. His fame and importance rest on his books of spiritual guidance, esp. the Libro de la oración y meditación ('Book on Prayer and Meditation', 1554) and the Guía de pecadores ('Guide for Sinners', 1556–7). He sought to give spiritual guidance to laymen as well as religious. He urged the practice of Christian virtues, which he saw as bringing a sense of confidence, Christian wisdom, liberation from sin, illumination, and transformation by the Holy Spirit. He attributed great importance to the interior life, to mental as distinct from vocal prayer, and saw outward ceremonies as relatively unimportant in comparison with the inner religious life, which was the life of grace. He drew his ideas from many sources, but was particularly indebted to G. *Savonarola and the *Erasmus of the Enchiridion, and stood in the tradition that linked them. His concern with interiority led to both his most celebrated works being placed on the Spanish *Index in 1559, but his ideas largely survived in the revised versions of 1566–7. He much admired, and was admired by, the *Jesuits. In his eighties he wrote an account of John of Ávila as a preacher and began a life of Bartholomew of the Martyrs. Among Spanish religious writers his works enjoyed a uniquely abundant circulation in Spanish and in translation, Italian, French, and English, esp. in his own and the following century. He wrote exceptionally fine Spanish prose, and his writings include superb renderings of passages of Scripture.

Collected edn. of his works by J. Cuervo, OP (14 vols., Madrid, 1906–8); Letters also ed. A. Huerga, OP (Cordoba, 1989). Fr.tr. of his works by J.-F. Bareille and others (22 vols., Paris, 1862–8). Sermones tr. from Lat. into Sp. by P. Duarte (14 vols., Madrid, 1790–93). A. Huerga, OP, Fray Luis de Granada: una vida al servicio de la Iglesia (Biblioteca de autores cristianos, 496; 1988), with bibl. E. A. Peers, Studies of the Spanish Mystics, 1 (1927), pp. 31–76. M. Bataillon, 'De Savonarole à Louis de Grenade', Revue de Littérature Comparée, 16 (1936), pp. 23–39. Id., Érasme et l'Espagne (Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études Hispaniques, 21; 1937; new edn. by D. Devoto, ed. C. Amiel, Travaux d'Humanisme et Renaissance, 250; 3 vols., Geneva, 1991: see index s.v. Grenade (Louis de)). Fidel de Ros, OFM Cap., 'Los místicos del Norte y Fray Luis de Granada', Archivo Ibero-Americano, 7 (1947), pp. 5–30, 145–65. R. L. Oechslin, OP, Louis de Grenade ou la rencontre avec Dieu (1954; Eng. tr., 1962). M. I. R. Rodrigues, Fray Luis de Granada y la Literatura de Espiritualidad en Portugal (1554–1632) (1988). M. Llaneza, Bibliografía del V.P.M. Fr. Luis de Granada, O.P. (4 vols., Salamanca, 1926–8). Quétif and Échard, 2, pp. 285–91. Pourrat, 3 (1925), pp. 143–53; Eng. tr., 3 (1927), pp. 95–101. A. Huerga, OP, in Dict. Sp. 9 (1976), cols. 1043–54, s.v. 'Louis (9) de Grenade', with bibl.

Luke, St, Evangelist; acc. to tradition the author of the Third Gospel and of *Acts. Several facts of his life can be gathered from the Pauline Epp. and from Acts, if the 'we-sections' (Acts 16: 10–17; 20: 5–21: 18; 27: 1–28: 16) are parts of his travel journal. Acc. to Col. 4: 14 he was a physician, and it has been inferred from Col. 4: 11 that he was a Gentile (an inference corroborated by his idiomatic Greek). He accompanied St Paul on his Second Missionary Journey from Troas to Philippi (Acts 16: 10–17) and on the Third from Philippi to *Jerusalem (Acts 20: 5–21: 18), and he went with him to Rome, where he stayed during his captivity (Col. 4: 14, 2 Tim. 4: 11, Philem. 24). A variant in *Codex Bezae at Acts 11: 28 implies that he was one of the early members of the Christian community at *Antioch, a hypothesis made plausible by his other references to the Church in Antioch, and supported by statements in *Eusebius, St *Jerome, and others. Acc. to a tradition recorded in the *Anti-Marcionite Prologues, St Luke was unmarried, wrote his Gospel in Greece, and died at the age of 84. *Origen is the first to identify him with 'the brother' of 2 Cor. 8: 18, a view followed by the BCP collect for his feast. In 356–7 Constantius II had his relics translated from Thebes in Boeotia to *Constantinople, where they were preserved at the Church of the Apostles, built soon afterwards. The Acta of his alleged martyrdom are legendary.

St Luke is the patron of doctors. Acc. to later legends he was one of the Seventy of Lk. 10: 1, the unnamed disciple of *Emmaus (Lk. 24: 13–35), and a painter, and in the Middle Ages a picture of the BVM in *Santa Maria Maggiore, Rome, was ascribed to him. He is therefore also the patron of artists. Feast day, 18 Oct.

For bibl., see works cited under foll. entry.

Luke, Gospel of St. The third of the Synoptic Gospels. From the end of the 2nd cent. its authorship has been attributed to St *Luke (q.v.), the companion of St *Paul. The tradition has been widely accepted on the ground that there is no reason why a Gospel should have been falsely assigned to a comparatively unimportant person. It forms a single work with the *Acts of the Apostles (q.v.). Luke's probable dependence on Mark and the prediction of the fall of *Jerusalem (19: 43 f. and 21, verses 20 and 24) in more precise terms than in Matthew and Mark, have seemed to require a date after AD 70, but this inference has been contested.

According to most modern scholars, the author drew on two main sources, Mark and the so-called '*Q'. Some, however, think that his second source was Matthew. (On these questions, see SYNOPTIC PROBLEM.) The similarities with Matthew and Mark indicate that the author could follow sources closely, but his work is more than a compilation; it has the broad characteristics of literature, history, and theology.

The author can write in idiomatic and elegant Greek, but he sometimes uses the style of the Greek OT. The prologue (1: 1–4), addressed to His Excellency Theophilus, might suggest that he is writing for readers outside the Christian circle, and claims that he is giving an authentic account based on material supplied by eye-witnesses. He presents his material in the most favourable light from the point of view of the Roman authorities. Thus Pilate is recorded three times as saying that he finds no fault in Jesus (23, verses 4, 14, and 22) and responsibility for the Crucifixion is placed on the Jews. There are also a number of other specific references to persons and events in contemporary history (e.g. in 3: 1), though the accuracy of details (e.g. the date of the census in 2: 1–2) has been disputed.

The narrative opens with an account of the birth of *John the Baptist and of Christ, and then follows the same course as in Mark (and Matthew) from John's preaching, through the Galilean ministry, to *Jerusalem and the account of the Passion and Resurrection, though it differs at a number of points. For instance, it has no parallel to Mk. 6: 45–8: 26 (= Mt 14: 22–16: 12), and the section setting Christ's journey to Jerusalem by way of *Samaria (9: 51–18: 14) and the account of His hearing before *Herod Antipas (23: 8–12) are peculiar to Luke. Other passages which occur only in this Gospel stress the Lord's kindness and human understanding, e.g. the Parable of the Prodigal (15: 11–32) and the promise to the good thief (23: 43); His care for outcasts, e.g. the woman who was a sinner (7: 37–50), and for the poor, in the first *Beatitude (6: 20) and the Parable of Dives and Lazarus (16: 19–31). There are numerous references to women not found in the other Gospels, e.g. *Elizabeth (1: 5–66) and the widow of Nain (7: 11–17), while it is Mary, not *Joseph, who plays the principal part in the Birth stories. Luke assigns a more prominent place to prayer in the picture of Christ than do the other Gospels (e.g. 3: 21) and constantly stresses the activity of the Holy Spirit in the Incarnation (1: 35), in the events of the Lord's life (4, verses 1, 14, 18), and as the guide and inspiration of the Christian community (11: 13, 12: 12).

An important feature in Luke–Acts is the insistence that the salvation offered by Christ's life, death, and teaching is addressed to all, and not to the Jews only. This teaching is brought out in the scene at the synagogue in *Nazareth; Christ's message is welcomed, but when He makes clear that it will have a better welcome from the Gentiles the reception turns hostile (4: 16–30). It can be seen also in other passages in Luke (e.g. 2: 32, 3: 6, 24: 47), though it is only in the events recorded in Acts that it is fully realized. The growth and activity of the Church, regarded as the inheritor of the promises of the OT, is seen as an integral stage in the history of salvation. Some scholars have credited Luke with expressing this in a scheme of three distinct ages: the age of expectation, the teaching and ministry of Christ, and its proclamation in the Church. Although belief in the Lord's return is retained, the expectation of the end of the world is minimized. Salvation through Christ is proclaimed, but the significance of the Cross is not spelt out in detail.

Patristic works on the Gospel include the Homilies of *Origen on chs. 1–4 and comm. in Greek by *Cyril of Alexandria, *Theophylact, and *Euthymius Zigabenus, and in Lat. by *Ambrose, *Bede, and *Walafrid Strabo. Modern comm. by A. Plummer (ICC, 1896), E. Klostermann (Hb. NT 2. 1; 1919), M. J. *Lagrange (Études Bibliques, 1921), W. Manson (Moff. Comm., 1930), J. M. Creed (London, 1930), A. R. C. Leaney (Black's NT Comm., 1958; 2nd edn., 1966), E. E. Ellis (New Cent. Bib., 1966; 2nd edn., 1974), H. Schürmann (Herders Theologischer Kommentar zum Neuen Testament, 3; 1969 ff.), G. H. P. Thompson (New Clar. Bib., 1972), I. H. Marshall (New International Greek Testament Commentary, 1978), E. Schweizer (Das Neue Testament Deutsch, 3; 1982; Eng. tr., 1984), J. A. Fitzmyer, SJ (Anchor Bible, 2 vols.; 1981–5), J. Nolland (Word Biblical Comm., 35; 3 vols., Dallas [1989–93]), C. F. Evans (London and Philadelphia, 1990), and L. T. Johnson (Sacra Pagina, 3; Collegeville, Minn. [1991]).

H. J. *Cadbury, The Style and Literary Method of Luke (1920); B. H. *Streeter, The Four Gospels (1924), pp. 199–270; V. Taylor, Behind the Third Gospel: A Study of the Proto-Luke Hypothesis (1926); H. J. Cadbury, The Making of Luke-Acts (1927); H. Conzelmann, Die Mitte der Zeit: Studien zur Theologie des Lukas (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, 17; 1954; Eng. tr., 1960); H. Flender, Heil und Geschichte in der Theologie des Lukas (Beiträge zur Evangelischen Theologie, 41; 1965; Eng. tr., 1967); I. H. Marshall, Luke: Historian and Theologian [1970]; J. Drury, Tradition and Design in Luke's Gospel (1976); D. L. Tiede, Prophecy and History in Luke and Acts (Philadelphia [1980]); J. Jeremias, Die Sprache des Lukasevangeliums: Redaktion und Tradition im Nicht-Markusstoff des dritten Evangeliums (KEK, Sonderband, 1980); R. Maddox, The Purpose of Luke Acts (Forschungen zur Religion und Literatur des Alten und Neuen Testaments, 126; 1982; also Edinburgh, 1982); R. C. Tannehill, The Narrative Unity of Luke–Acts: A Literary Interpretation, 1: The Gospel according to Luke (Philadelphia, 1986); P. F. Esler, Community and Gospel in Luke-Acts: The Social and Political Motivation of Lucan Theology (Society for New Testament Studies, Monograph Series; Cambridge, 1987); J. T. Sanders, The Jews in Luke–Acts (1987); M. D. Goulder, Luke: A New Paradigm (2 vols., Journal for the Study of the New Testament, Supplement Series, 20; Sheffield [1989]). See also bibl. to ACTS.

Lull, St (d. 786), Bp.of Mainz. Like St *Boniface an Anglo-Saxon, he was educated and ordained priest at *Malmesbury. Proceeding to Rome and then to Germany, he became closely associated with Boniface who appointed Lull his successor in the see of Mainz; by a special concession from Pope *Zacharius Lull was consecrated bishop *c.*752 and took over Mainz after Boniface's death (754). He did not, however, receive the *pallium until *c.*781, after a petition had been sent to Pope *Hadrian I, who ordered an examination of Lull by three Frankish bishops; in the course of this Lull made a Profession of Faith. A long dispute between Lull and Sturm, the Abbot of *Fulda, began when Lull attempted to end the exemption of Fulda from the jurisdiction of Mainz and its direct dependence on Rome, which Sturm's predecessor had secured; the consequence was that Fulda was taken under the protection of *Pepin III, to whom both Lull and the monks had appealed, and it became a royal monastery, coming within the sphere of Frankish influence. Lull founded the monastery at Hersfeld, where he was afterwards buried. His interest in learning is reflected in his correspondence with some of the most notable clerics of his time, esp. in England. Feast day, 16 Oct.

Letters of Boniface and Lull ed. M. Tangl (MGH, Epistolae Selectae, 1; 1916). J. F. Böhmer and C. Will (eds.), Regesten zur Geschichte der Mainzer Erzbischöfe, 1 (Innsbruck, 1887), pp. 34–45. Life by *Lampert of Hersfeld pr. among the latter's works (ed. O. Holder-Egger, Hanover, etc, 1894), pp. 305–40; cf. also Eigil's Life of Sturm, ed. G. H. Pertz in MGH, Scriptores, 2 (1829), pp. 366–77. T. Schieffer, 'Angelsachsen und Franken', Akademie der Wissenschaften und der Literatur [in Mainz]. Abhandlungen der Geistes- und Sozialwissenschaftlichen Klasse, Jahrg. 1950, no. 20, pt. 2: 'Erzbischof Lul und die Anfänge des Mainzer Sprengels', pp. 1471–529. J. Hörle, 'Breviarium Sancti Lulli—Gestalt und Gehalt', Archiv für Mittelrheinische Kirchengeschichte, 12 (1960), pp. 18–52. For Lull's Profession of Faith see W. Levison, England and the Continent in the Eighth Century (Ford Lectures for 1943; 1946), Appendix 2, pp. 233–40; text repr. in T. Schieffer, op. cit., pp. 1535–9. W. *Stubbs in DCB 3 (1882), pp. 757–61.

Lull, Raymond. See LLULL, RAMON.

Luna, Pedro de. See BENEDICT XIII, ANTIPOPE.

Lund. Constituted a bishopric suffragan to Hamburg-Bremen in the middle of the 10th cent., it was established as an independent archbishopric in 1104. Apart from a brief period from 1133 onwards, it continued to possess its archiepiscopal status till the see was suppressed in 1536. The university dates from 1668. In the 19th cent. its theological faculty stood for a conservative and 'High Church' tradition in contrast to the liberalizing theology of *Uppsala. From 15 to 28 Aug. 1952 it was the scene of a Conference of the *Faith and Order Commission of the *World Council of Churches on 'The Church, Ways of Worship and Intercommunion'. This Conference's 'Word to the Churches' enunciated what came to be known as the 'Lund Principle': 'Should not our Churches ask themselves . . . whether they should not act together in all matters, except those in which deep differences of conviction compel them to act separately?'

L. Weibull (ed.), Diplomatarium Diocesis Lundensis: Lunds Ärkestifts Urkundsbok, vols. 3–6 ([covering 1421–1502], Lund, 1900–39 [vols. 1 and 2 not pub.]). Studies on the Cathedral by O. Rydbeck (Lund, 1915), E. H. G. Wrangel (ibid., 1923), and E. Newman (2 vols., Stockholm, 1946). J. Rosén and others, Lunds Universitets Historia (4 vols., 1968–82). C. Fehrman, Lärdomens Lund (1984; abridged Eng. tr., Lund and Learning: An Informal History of Lund University, Lund, 1987). A. Radler in TRE 21 (1991), cols. 506–13, s.v. 'Lund, Universität'. The Transactions of the Third World Conference on Faith and Order held at Lund, Aug. 1952, ed. O. S. Tomkins (London, 1953).

Lupercalia. A pagan festival which continued to be observed in Christian Rome at least until the 5th cent. *Gelasius I (or his predecessor Felix III) made strenous efforts to suppress it.

Survey in introd. by G. Pomarès to his edn. of the letter 'Adversus Adromachum contra Lupercalia' attributed to Gelasius (SC 65; 1959), pp. 21–34.

Lupus, St (*c.*395–479), Bp. of Troyes. A native of Toul (in modern Lorraine), he married Pimeniola, the sister of St *Hilary of Arles. After seven years of wedlock, he and his wife agreed to adopt an ascetic life and moved to *Lérins (426). Shortly afterwards (427), however, he accepted the bishopric of Troyes, and held the see for some 50 years. Acc. to his Life (now dated in the 6th cent.), he accompanied St *Germanus of Auxerre on his mission to Britain against the *Pelagians in 429, and by his entreaties preserved his country from the ravages of *Attila. Feast day, 29 July.

A letter, pr. in J. P. Migne, PL 58. 66–8, survives; crit. edn. by C. Munier, Concilia Galliae A. 314–A. 506 (CCSL 148; 1963), pp. 140 f. His Life, ed. by B. Krusch in MGH, Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, 7 (pt. 1; 1919), pp. 284–302; Krusch doubted its value, but it has been upheld by L. *Duchesne, Fastes épiscopaux de l'ancienne Gaule, 2 (1899), p. 449, and by E. Ewig, 'Bemerkungen zur Vita des Bischofs Lupus von Troyes', in K. Hauck and H. Mordek (eds.), Geschichtsschreibung und Geistiges Leben im Mittelalter: Festschrift für Heinz Löwe zum 65. Geburtstag (Cologne, 1978), pp. 14–26. CPL (3rd edn., 1995), p. 320 (nos. 988 f.).

Lupus, Servatus (*c.*805–62), Abbot of Ferrières, classical scholar. Born into a Bavarian family with extensive interests in W. Francia, he spent his youth in the abbey of Ferrières (NE of Orleans) before going on to study under *Rabanus Maurus at *Fulda (*c.*829–36). His uncle and brother were successively bishops of Auxerre; another brother was abbot of St Germanus, Auxerre; in 840 Lupus himself received from Charles the Bald the abbey of Ferrières. He supported Charles throughout the turbulent years preceding the division of the Empire in 843, and took an active part in ecclesiastical affairs. He attended at least six synods, for one of which (that at Vers, south of Senlis; 844) he wrote the official report.

Lupus' principal literary monument is a collection of over 100 letters. These are both a primary source for the history of his time and evidence of his remarkable knowledge of classical and patristic authors, his determination in searching out rare texts, and his zeal to improve corrupt readings. A number of MSS written, corrected, and annotated in his hand have survived. His pupils included *Heiric of Auxerre. Lupus' strictly ecclesiastical writings range from a prose Life of St Wigbert of Fritzlar (836, arising out of his years at Fulda) and the revision of a Life of St Maximinus of Trier (839) to a treatise on *predestination, the Liber de tribus questionibus (*c.*850). With its supporting series of proof-texts (the Collectaneum de tribus questionibus) this treatise is a measured, but not unsympathetic, response to the doctrine of double predestination proposed by *Gottschalk, whom Lupus had known since their student days at Fulda. It affirmed that in fallen man free will left to its own powers was capable only of evil, that there was a predestination to hell as well as to eternal life, and that the biblical assertion that it is God's will that all men should be saved (1 Tim. 2: 4) is to be interpreted as applying only to the elect.

Collected edn. of his works by É. *Baluze (Paris, 1664; 2nd edn., Antwerp, 1710; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 119. 427–700). Crit. edns. of his Vita Wigberti by O. Holder-Egger in MGH, Scriptores, 15 (pt. 1; 1887), pp. 36–43, and of his letters by E. Dümmler in MGH, Epistolae, 6 (1925), pp. 1–126, and by P. K. Marshall (Teub., 1984, with good bibl.). Eng. tr. of his letters by G. W. Regenos (The Hague, 1966). E. von Severus, OSB, Lupus von Ferrières: Gestalt und Werk eines Vermittlers antiken Geistesgutes an das Mittelalter im 9. Jahrhundert (Beiträge zur Geschichte des alten Mönchtums und des Benediktinerordens, 21; Münster, 1940). W. Levison, 'Eine Predigt des Lupus von Ferrières', in Kultur- und Universalgeschichte Walter Goetz zu seinem 60. Geburtstage dargebracht (1927), pp. 3–14; repr. in id., Aus Rheinischer und Fränkischer Frühzeit (Düsseldorf, 1948), pp. 557–66; C. H. Beeson, Lupus of Ferrières as Scribe and Text Critic (Mediaeval Academy of America Publication, 4; Cambridge, Mass., 1930); É. Pellegrin, 'Les Manuscrits de Loup de Ferrières. À propos du MS. Orléans 162 (139) corrigé de sa main', Bibliothèque de l'École des Chartes, 115 (for 1957; 1958), pp. 5–31; W. Edelstein, Eruditio und Sapientia: Weltbild und Erziehung in der Karolingerzeit (Freiburg i.B., 1965), pp. 169–218; R. J. Gariépy, 'Lupus of Ferrières: Carolingian Scribe and Text Critic', Mediaeval Studies, 30 (1968), pp. 90–105; P. von Moos, Consolatio: Studien zur mittellateinischen Trostliteratur über den Tod und zum Problem der christlichen Trauer (Münstersche Mittelalter-Schriften, 3; 4 vols., 1971–2), 1, pp. 111–31; 2, pp. 78–94; V. Brown, 'Lupus of Ferrières on the metres of Boethius', in J. J. O'Meara and B. Naumann (eds.), Latin Script and Letters A.D. 400–900. Festschrift presented to Ludwig Bieler (Leiden, 1976), pp. 63–79. E. S. Duckett, Carolingian Portraits (Ann Arbor, Mich., 1962), pp. 161–201. J. M. Wallace-Hadrill, The Frankish Church (Oxford History of the Christian Church, 1983), pp. 304 14, with bibl. pp. 435 f. Manitius, 1 (1911), pp. 483–90. R. B. Palmer in NCE 8 (1967), p. 1078, s.v.

Luther, Martin (1483–1546), founder of the German *Reformation. The son of a miner at Mansfeld in Saxony, he was educated at Magdeburg and Eisenbach, and then at Erfurt University (1501–5). His studies in the faculty of arts brought him under the influence of leading *Nominalists such as Jodocus Trutvetter and Bartholomäus Arnoldi of Usingen. In 1505 he entered the monastery of the *Augustinian Hermits at Erfurt, and was ordained priest in 1507. In the following year he was sent to be professor of moral philosophy in the faculty of arts at the recently-founded University of *Wittenberg, in the aftermath of university reforms which appear to have established the presence of a Nominalist faction within that faculty. In 1510 he went to Rome on affairs of his order. Soon after his return to Wittenberg in 1511, with the support of his superior, Johannes von Staupitz, he became a doctor of theology and professor of biblical exegesis in the university faculty of theology, retaining this position until his death. In 1515 he was made vicar of his order, an office entailing the charge of 11 Augustinian monasteries.

Initially Luther appears to have adopted a form of biblical exegesis and theology of *justification similar to that of Nominalism, allowing man a definite, if limited, role in his own justification. During the years 1512–19, however, he developed insights concerning man's incapacity to justify himself which led him initially to modify, and then to reject, this position. He came to believe that man is unable to respond to God without divine grace, and that man can be justified only through faith (per solam fidem), by the merits of Christ imputed to him: works or religious observance are irrelevant. In an autobiographical fragment of 1545, Luther indicated that this theological breakthrough was linked with the discovery of a new understanding of 'the righteousness of God' (Rom. 1: 17). On the basis of internal evidence within his writings of the period, this discovery is generally regarded as having taken place in the period 1514–15. It is often, though perhaps unwarrantably, referred to as the 'Turmerlebnis' ('Tower Experience'). During the period 1515–19, Luther consolidated his doctrine of man's justification before God (coram Deo), emphasizing that justification was a work of God within man. Although in many respects Luther's theology of justification at this stage parallels that found in St *Augustine's anti-*Pelagian writings, important differences emerged, esp. in relation to the nature of justifying righteousness. Parallels have also been noted with the writings of J. Tauler and the Theologia Germanica (which Luther edited in 1516 and 1518). In April 1517 *Carlstadt (then dean of the faculty of theology at Wittenberg) lent his support to Luther, after a close reading of Augustine's De Spiritu et Littera, with the result that by March 1518 the Wittenberg faculty of theology was committed to a programme of theological reform based on 'the Bible and St Augustine'.

On 31 Oct. 1517 Luther's 95 theses on *indulgences were posted on the door of the castle church at Wittenberg. They were written largely in response to the preaching of J. *Tetzel on the indulgences granted by *Leo X for contributions towards the renovation of *St Peter's in Rome. Although possessing the status of a purely academic disputation, and stating little that was exceptionable or radical, given the variety of opinions on the subject at the time, the theses came to be viewed as a manifesto of reform, and attracted considerable attention throughout Germany within weeks of their publication. In April 1518 Luther defended his position in the Heidelberg Disputation, held during a meeting of the chapter of his order; he won over several of his brethren and the Dominican M. *Bucer. In the same year he was tried (in his absence) in Rome on charges of heresy, and was summoned before Card. *Cajetan at Augsburg. Refusing to recant, he fled to Wittenberg under the protection of the Elector *Frederick III of Saxony. Negotiations with the Papal camerarius, C. von *Miltitz, elicited from Luther nothing more than a promise that he would remain silent if his opponents did likewise. In 1519 Luther and J. *Eck confronted each other at the *Leipzig Disputation, at which Luther denied both the primacy of the Pope and the infallibility of General Councils. By this time Luther was the object of considerable admiration in humanist circles, being 'productively misunderstood' as sharing the humanist concern for the institutional and moral reform of the Church. Acc. to Bucer and others, Luther and *Erasmus differed only in the extent to which they voiced their views. Recent scholarship has drawn attention to the way in which the humanist movement expanded what was initially little more than an academic debate into an international cause célèbre.

In 1520 Luther's programme of reform was further consolidated by a direct appeal to the German people to take the initiative in reforming the Church. Three major reforming treatises were published. The first, An den christlichen Adel deutscher Nation, addressed to the German princes, laid the foundations for a programme of lay reform by rejecting the distinction between the 'spiritual' and 'temporal' orders, by insisting on the right to challenge the Pope on the interpretation of Scripture, and the right of the laity to summon a reforming General Council. It encouraged the princes to abolish tributes to Rome, the celibacy of the clergy, Masses for the dead, and many other Catholic practices and institutions. This was followed by De Captivitate Babylonica Ecclesiae (pub. in Latin and German, Von der babylonischen Gefangenschaft der Kirche); here Luther criticized the subjection of the laity to the institution of the Church which he particularly identified with the denial to the laity of Communion in both kinds, the doctrine of *transubstantiation, and the Sacrifice of the Mass, and only Baptism and the Eucharist were recognized as possessing sacramental character. In the final work of the trilogy, Von der Freiheit eines Christenmenschen, the liberation of the Christian from a 'bondage of works' through his justification was enthusiastically proclaimed. The cumulative effect of these treatises was considerable. Even before they were published, however, Luther was condemned in the bull '*Exsurge Domine' of 12 June 1520, which censured 41 theses drawn from his works to date. Luther replied by burning the bull, along with many Catholic books; this action led to his excommunication by the bull 'Decet Romanum Pontificem' of 3 Jan. 1521.

In the aftermath of this excommunication, Luther was summoned before the Diet of *Worms, where he refused to recant (acc. to an early but unreliable tradition, in the famous words 'Hier stehe ich. Ich kan nicht anders', 'Here I stand, I can do no other'). On 26 May 1521 his teachings were formally condemned in the Edict of Worms and Luther was put under the ban of the Empire. Fearing for his safety, the Elector of Saxony arranged for Luther to be abducted in June to the *Wartburg, near Eisenach, where he spent the next eight months under the pseudonym 'Junker Georg'. In many respects, this was one of the most constructive periods of Luther's career, witnessing the beginning of his translation of the Bible into German, of which the NT was published in Sept. 1522. His important attack on Jacobus Latomus, in which Luther's views on the relation of grace and faith are explained with some brilliance, also dates from this period.

In his absence, however, the situation at Wittenberg had deteriorated, with radical elements (such as the '*Zwickau Prophets'), recently joined by Carlstadt, causing religious anarchy. Luther was obliged to return to Wittenberg on 7 May 1522, and to restore order with the assistance of the secular authorities. In this period of liturgical reform and consolidation Luther issued the Forma Missae et Communionis (1523), an important pamphlet explaining the new Protestant rite and clarifying his attitude to the Eucharist; in the following year the first Wittenberg hymnal (incl. four of Luther's own compositions) appeared. Having already abandoned many Catholic practices, incl. private Masses and fasts, since leaving the *Wartburg, Luther finally discarded his Augustinian habit in 1524. After the death of the Elector, who had remained hostile to the marriage of priests and religious, he married the former *Cistercian nun, Katharina von Bora, on 13 June 1525. In the same year Luther's pamphlet advising the German princes to wage war against the peasants who had risen in arms appeared; this cost him the sympathies of a section of the population (see PEASANTS' WAR). His open attack on Erasmus in De Servo Arbitrio (1525) exposed the tension between them, causing some embarrassment to the more humanist of the Wittenberg Reformers, such as P. *Melanchthon (even though U. *Zwingli had independently set out what were to be the main elements of Luther's attack in a work published earlier the same year, but not known to the German Reformer).

The religious and political situation, however, continued to favour the spread of Luther's views. The use of the vernacular in the liturgy (the Deutsche Messe was published in 1526), in the public reading of the Bible, and in the singing of hymns, all served to further Luther's end. His work was considerably facilitated by the Diet of *Speyer (1526), which established the right of the princes to organize national Churches. Although Luther was unable to be present at the Diet of Augsburg (1530) on account of the ban of the Empire, he lent his approval to the comparatively conciliatory '*Augsburg Confession (Confessio Augustana)', drawn up by Melanchthon, which established the doctrinal basis of the Lutheran Church.

At this time, however, the differences between the Lutheran and Reformed wings of the Reformation became increasingly evident, esp. in relation to sacramental theology. At the Colloquy of *Marburg (1529) the deep division between Luther and Zwingli over the nature of the Presence of Christ in the Eucharist proved unbridgeable: Luther argued that after consecration the substances both of the Body and Blood of Christ and of the bread and wine coexist in union with each other ('*consubstantiation'), Zwingli that the Presence of Christ was purely symbolic. The renewal of the Eucharistic controversy within Lutheranism itself in the 1540s, in addition to the continued tension between the Lutheran and Reformed wings of the Reformation, illustrates how serious this division would prove to be. The final years of Luther's life were marked by controversy, arising over such matters as his covert approval of the bigamous marriage of *Philip of Hesse and the appointment of Nikolaus von *Amsdorf as Bp. of Naumburg in 1541. Luther died on 18 Feb. 1543 and was buried in the castle church at Wittenberg. The rumour that his body had been disinterred and reburied in a field during the Schmalkaldic War was finally silenced through its recovery during the restoration of the castle church on 14 Feb. 1892.

Apart from his three treatises of 1520, Luther published a considerable number of works, mostly small occasional pamphlets, with no attempt at a systematic elaboration of his doctrine, and prone to frequent lapses into personal abuse of his opponents. His passionate reply to *Henry VIII's Defence of the Seven Sacraments, entitled Contra Henricum Regem Anglicanum (1522) lost him the sympathies of England. But several such works are of importance. In De Servo Arbitrio (1525) Luther defended his radical views on the impotence of the human free will against the criticisms of Erasmus in De Libero Arbitrio. His pedagogical works, Kleiner Katechismus and Grosser Katechismus (both 1529) heightened the attraction of the Reformation for humanists, allowing them to regard the movement as fundamentally educational. His abilities as a biblical commentator are perhaps best seen from the 1535 Galatians commentary. A more informal, and perhaps rather inaccurate, view of the Reformer may be gained from the Tischreden (records of conversations over Luther's dinner-table in the period 1529–45). Many of his German hymns, an important means of disseminating the ideas of the Reformation among the people, are still in general use, the most celebrated being 'Ein feste burg ist unser Gott' (Eng. tr., 'A safe stronghold our God is still', EH 362), prob. written in 1528.

Luther's distinctive ideas were considerably modified by the Lutheran Church after his death (see LUTHERANISM), with the Formula of *Concord (1577) explicitly rejecting some of the ideas defended by Luther in De Servo Arbitrio (e.g. the doctrine of double *predestination, and of God as auctor peccati). In the 20th cent., however, Luther's '*theologia crucis' has been reappropriated, esp. by theologians such as Jürgen *Moltmann and Eberhard Jüngel, as a fruitful way of exploring the nature of God's presence in and dealings with the world.

The standard critical edn. of Luther's works is the 'Weimarer Ausgabe' in some 100 vols. (Weimar, 1883 ff.; text completed 1983, though since 1963 some works in the edition have been re-edited; indexes, 1986 ff.). Its four sections contain his writings and lectures, the Tischreden, his correspondence, and material on his tr. of the Bible. Selected docs. on his intellectual development to 1519 in O. Scheel, Dokumente zu Luthers Entwicklung (2nd edn., Sammlung ausgewählter kirchen- und dogmengeschichtlicher Quellenschriften, NF 2; Tübingen, 1929). Standard Eng. tr. of Luther's Works [not exhaustive], ed. J. Pelikan and H. T. Lehmann (54 vols. + introd., St Louis and Philadelphia, 1955–76).

Modern historical and biographical studies incl. G. [G. B.] Ritter, Luther: Gestalt und Tod (1925; 6th edn., 1959; Eng. tr., 1963); J. Mackinnon, Luther and the Reformation (4 vols., 1925–30); E. G. Schwiebert, Luther and his Times (St Louis [1950]); R. H. Bainton, Here I Stand: A Life of Martin Luther (1951); A. G. Dickens, The German Nation and Martin Luther (1974); H. Bornkamm, Martin Luther in der Mittes seines Leben (posthumously ed. K. Bornkamm, Göttingen, 1979; Eng. tr., 1983); H. G. Haile, Luther: A Biography (New York, 1980; London, 1981); M. Lienhard, Martin Luther: Un temps, une vie, un message (1983); H. Junghans (ed.), Leben und Werk Martin Luthers von 1526 bis 1546: Festgabe zu seinem 500. Geburtstag (2 vols., 1983).

On his theology, there is a classic work by K. *Holl, Gesammelte Aufsätze, Bd. 1: Luther (1921); Bd. 3: Der Westen (1928), pp. 130–243. More recent studies incl. P. S. Watson, Let God be God! An Interpretation of the Theology of Martin Luther (1947); [E.] G. Rupp, The Righteousness of God: Luther Studies (Birkbeck Lectures, 1947; 1953); G. Ebeling, Luther: Einführung in sein Denken (Tübingen, 1964; Eng. tr., 1970). Seminal essays on specific doctrines by W. von Loewenich, Luthers Theologia Crucis (Munich, 1929; 4th edn., 1954; Eng. tr., Belfast, 1976); R. Prenter, Spiritus Creator: Studier i Luthers Teologi (Copenhagen, 1944; 2nd edn., 1946; Eng. tr., Philadelphia, 1953); H. Sasse, This is my Body: Luther's Contention for the Real Presence in the Sacrament of the Altar (Minneapolis [1959]; rev. edn., Adelaide, 1977); E. Bizer, Fides ex auditu: Eine Untersuchungen über die Entdeckung der Gerechtigkeit Gottes durch Martin Luther (Neukirchen, 1958; 3rd edn., 1966); I. D. K. Siggins, Martin Luther's Doctrine of Christ (1970); G. Ebeling, Lutherstudien (3 vols. in 4, Tübingen, 1971–85); M. Lienhard, Luther, témoin de Jésus-Christ (1973; Eng. tr., Minneapolis, 1982); M. Brecht, Martin Luther: Sein Weg zur Reformation 1483 1521 (Stuttgart, 1981; Eng. tr., Philadelphia, 1985); A. E. McGrath, Luther's Theology of the Cross: Martin Luther's Theological Breakthrough (Oxford, 1985); H.-M. Gutmann, Über Liebe und Herrschaft: Luthers Verständnis von Intimität und Autorität im Kontext des Zivilisationsprozesses (Göttinger theologische Arbeiten, 47 [1991]).

Full bibl. of the vast lit. is provided in the authoritative Jahrbuch der Luther-Gesellschaft (1919; from 1920 Luther-Jahrbuch) and a shorter account in the annual Literaturberichte of the Archiv für Reformationsgeschichte (1903 ff.).

M. Brecht and others in TRE 21 (1991), pp. 514–94, s.v., with extensive bibl. E. G. Rupp in EB (1985 edn.), 23, pp. 364 72, both s.v., with bibl. See also bibl. to REFORMATION.

Lutheranism. A confessional movement within the W. Church tracing its origins to the theology of M. *Luther and various formulae collected in the *Book of Concord (1580, q.v.). These writings, which claim to 'introduce nothing . . . that is either contrary to Holy Scripture or the universal Christian church' (*Augsburg Confession, 1530), promote *justification by faith alone as the 'first and chief article' on which rests 'all that we teach and practise' (*Schmalkaldic Articles, 1537). After Luther's death (1546), Lutherans divided over issues such as *original sin, free will, good works, the Lord's Supper, the Person of Christ, indifferent matters (*adiaphora), and divine foreknowledge and election (*predestination). Appealing to Scripture as the 'only rule and norm' of doctrine, accommodation was reached in the Formula of Concord (1577), drafted by J. *Andreae and M. *Chemnitz. Lutherans modified, though generally retained, traditional liturgical forms, placing equal emphasis on preaching and sacraments. The Eucharist was celebrated 'every Sunday and on other festivals' (Apology of the Augsburg Confession, 1531).

P. *Melanchthon formulated the first systematic presentation of Lutheran theology. His Loci communes (1521) became the foundation of Lutheran dogmatics. The need for consolidation in the face of challenges from Rome, the *Calvinists, and rationalists, spurred the development of Lutheran 'orthodoxy', which dominated the 17th cent. It was elaborated in a Scholastic mould which gave it a somewhat intellectual cast. The publication of P. J. Spener's Pia Desideria (1675) and the emergence of *Pietism was a reaction against this orthodoxy, as well as against confessional strife and the consolidation of state Churches after the *Thirty Years War. The Pietists proposed a less intellectualized, more irenic form of Christianity, appealing to Luther's ideas on the sufficiency of Scripture and the personal nature of faith. However, by developing subjective trends in late orthodoxy, e.g., the 'order of salvation' (ordo salutis), which delineated various stages in the process of conversion, Pietism stressed religious experience to the detriment of the original Lutheran insistence on the objectivity of the means of grace in word and sacraments.

In the 16th cent. Lutheranism spread through much of Germany, *Denmark, *Norway, *Sweden, *Finland, and E. Europe (e.g. in *Poland, *Hungary and Latvia), though in E. Europe and in Germany RCism and Calvinism later reversed or modified this situation. In the 19th cent. Frederick William III promoted a union of Reformed (Calvinist) and Lutheran Churches in Prussia (1817). Such political pressures, combined with the reductionist tendencies inherent in both the *Enlightenment and in a resurgent Pietism, and the challenge of biblical and historical criticism, stimulated a romantic rediscovery of Luther and a renewed confessionalism, e.g., by W. Löhe (1808–72) and the Erlangen school led by J. K. von Hofmann (1810–77). Early in the 20th cent. a Luther renaissance was promoted by K. *Holl, N. *Söderblom, and L. Ihmels (1858–1933). The First World War, National Socialism and Communism, however, decisively challenged any romantic views, provoking an intense critique of Luther's distinctive 'two kingdoms' ethic. This teaching distinguishes, without separating, two ways, spiritual and secular, in which God effects His will in the world. It is an interim ethic in which Christians are powerless themselves to bring about God's kingdom. Thus Lutherans in Germany were accused of uncritical accommodation and of 'quietism', esp. by the influential Swiss Reformed theologian K. *Barth, though many Lutherans such as H. Asmussen (1898–1968) and M. *Niemöller actively offered resistance, joining with the *Confessing Church.

In Germany after 1918, with the separation of Church and state (though the Church still retained its right to receive taxes), new structures were developed based upon a combination of synodical and episcopal forms. Thus the autonomous territorial Churches (Landeskirchen) continued to receive support from the regional governments. Lutheranism struggled to retain its identity as it participated in efforts to establish a combined Protestant Church. After 1945 attempts were made to unite all Lutheran Churches in the Vereinigte Evangelisch-Lutherische Kirche Deutschlands (VELKD), formed in 1948, though Württemberg and Oldenburg declined membership. The VELKD became part of the *Evangelical Church in Germany embracing Lutherans, Reformed, and 'United' Churches. Churches in the former German Democratic Republic were fully integrated into this body in 1991. In Scandinavia Lutheranism is the officially recognized religion. In the Church of Sweden debate continues over the question of membership, whether it should be by baptism, or by birthright, as is customary, through one baptized parent. Lutheranism in Sweden and Finland has retained the historic episcopal succession.

Lutheranism came to N. America in the 17th cent., but remained very small until after 1730 when German emigration surged. Many of the Lutherans who went to America were influenced by Pietism. In 1742 H. M. *Muhlenberg was sent from Halle to Pennsylvania to organize the Lutheran Church; he established the first Lutheran synod, the Ministerium of Pennsylvania, in 1748. Successive waves of immigrants from varied backgrounds settling in different regions led to a proliferation of Lutheran Church bodies. The history of Lutheranism in N. America is marked by struggles for confessional identity and increasingly for visible unity. By 1988 there were three major Lutheran Churches in N. America: (1) the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, formed in 1988 by merging the Lutheran Church in America (itself the result of a merger in 1962 of the United Lutheran Church in America (formed 1918), the Augustana Evangelical Lutheran Church (formed 1948), and others) with the American Lutheran Church (the result of a merger in 1960 of the old American Lutheran Church (formed 1930), and others), and the Association of Evangelical Lutheran Churches (which separated from the Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod in 1976); (2) the Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod, stemming from a group of Saxon immigrants to Perry County and St Louis, Missouri, in 1839, joined in 1947 by a merger of the Evangelical Lutheran Synod of Missouri, Ohio, and Other States (formed 1847), and in 1971 by the Synod of Evangelical Lutheran Churches (formed 1959); and (3) the Evangelical Lutheran Church in Canada, a merger in 1986 of the Evangelical Lutheran Church of Canada (formed 1967; formerly the Canada District of the American Lutheran Church), and the Lutheran Church in America–Canada Section (formed 1962). Inter-church co-operation was furthered by the National Lutheran Council (formed 1918) and the Lutheran Council in the USA (1967–88).

European missionary efforts, dating from the 18th cent., joined in the 19th cent. by Lutherans from America, established Lutheranism in *India, the *South Pacific and other parts of Asia, in Africa, Latin America, and *Australia. In 1923 many Lutherans joined to form the Lutheran World Convention, which in 1947 developed into the Lutheran World Federation. In 1984 at its 7th assembly, member Churches declared themselves to be in 'altar and pulpit' fellowship; at its 8th assembly in 1990, the Lutheran World Federation officially proclaimed itself a worldwide 'communion' of Churches. By the 1990s it included most but not all of the world's Lutherans (the Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod, e.g., is not a member). Notable ecumenical developments include the *Leuenberg Concord between European Lutheran and Reformed Churches (1973), the Lutheran–Episcopal Agreement in the USA (1982), the Meissen Common Statement between the Evangelical Church of Germany and the C of E (1988) and the Porvoo Agreement between the Nordic and Baltic Lutheran Churches and the C of E (1992) and, since 1965, a productive series of dialogues with RCs in Europe and N. America.

Die Bekenntnisschriften der evangelisch-lutherischen Kirche, ed. by the Deutscher Evangelischer Kirchenausschuss (Göttingen, 1930; 10th edn., 1986). Convenient Eng. tr. by T. G. Tappert, The Book of Concord: The Confessions of the Evangelical Lutheran Church (Philadelphia [1959]). 16th-cent. 'Kirchenordnung', ed. E. Sehling and others (Leipzig, and later Tübingen, 1902 ff.). H. [F. F.] Schmid, Die Dogmatik der Evangelisch-Lutherischen Kirche (Erlangen, 1843; Eng. tr., The Doctrinal Theology of the Evangelical Lutheran Church, Philadelphia, 1876; 3rd edn., 1899; repr., Minneapolis [1961]). W. Elert, Morphologie des Luthertums (2 vols., 1931–2; Eng. tr. of vol. 1, Saint Louis, 1962); id., Der christliche Glaube: Grundlinien der lutherischen Dogmatik (1940; 3rd edn. by E. Kinder, 1956); id., Das christliche Ethos: Grundlinien der lutherischen Ethik (1949). E. Schlink, Theologie der lutherischen Bekenntnisschriften (1940; 3rd edn., 1948; Eng. tr., Philadelphia, 1961); P. Althaus, Die christliche Wahrheit: Lehrbuch der Dogmatik (2 vols., 1947–8). E. Kinder, Der evangelische Glaube und die Kirche: Grundzüge des evangelisch-lutherischen Kirchenverständnisses (1958; 2nd edn., 1960). E. W. Gritsch and R. W. Jenson, Lutheranism: The Theological Movement and its Confessional Writings (Philadelphia [1976]). T. G. A. Hardt, Venerabilis et adorabilis Eucharistia: Eine Studie über die lutherische Abendmahlslehre im 16. Jahrhundert (Forschungen zur Kirchen- und Dogmengeschichte, 24; 1988). H.-C. Rublack (ed.), Die lutherische Konfessionalisierung in Deutschland: Wissenschaftliches Symposion des Vereins für Reformationsgeschichte 1988 (Schriften des Vereins für Reformationsgeschichte, 197; 1992). H. Leube, Kalvinismus und Luthertum im Zeitalter der Orthodoxie (vol. 1 only pub., 1928); H. E. Weber, Reformation, Orthodoxie und Rationalismus (Beiträge zur Förderung christlicher Theologie, Reihe 2, Bde. 35, 51, pts. 1 and 2 only pub., 1935–51); H. Stephan, Geschichte der evangelischen Theologie seit dem Idealismus (Sammlung Töpelmann, Reihe 1, 9; 1938). E. Fischer, Zur Geschichte der evangelischen Beichte (Studien zur Geschichte der Theologie und der Kirche, 8, Heft 2, and 9, Heft 4; 1902–3); E. *Troeltsch, Die Soziallehren der christlichen Kirchen und Gruppen (1912), pp. 427–605 (Eng. tr., 1931, 2, pp. 461–576). A. Jundt, Histoire résumée de l'Église luthérienne en France (1935). A. R. Wentz, A Basic History of Lutheranism in America (Philadelphia, 1955). V. Fern, The Crisis in American Lutheran Theology: A Study of the Issue between American Lutheranism and Old Lutheranism (New York, 1927). T. G. Tappert (ed.), Lutheran Confessional Theology in America 1840–1880 (Library of Protestant Thought, New York, 1972). E. C. Nelson (ed.), The Lutherans in North America (Philadelphia [1974]; 2nd edn. [1980]). Id., The Rise of World Lutheranism: An American Perspective (Philadelphia [1982]). R. C. Wolf (ed.), Documents of Lutheran Unity in America (Philadelphia, 1966). A. R. Wentz (ed.), The Lutheran Churches of the World, 1952 (Geneva, 1952). V. Vajta and H. Wiessgerber (eds.), Das Bekenntnis im Leben der Kirche: Studien zur Lehrgrundlage und Bekenntnissbildung in der lutherischen Kirchen (Berlin and Hamburg, 1963). V. Vajta, From Generation to Generation: The Lutheran World Federation 1947–1982 (Lutheran World Federation Report, 16; Geneva, 1983). E. T. and M. B. Bachmann, Lutheran Churches in the World: A Handbook (Augsburg, 1989). J. Bodensieck (ed.), The Encyclopedia of the Lutheran Church (3 vols., Minneapolis, 1965). G. Gassmann in TRE 21 (1991), pp. 599–616, s.v. 'Lutherische Kirchen', and pp. 616–20, s.v. 'Lutherischer Weltbild', with bibl. See also bibl. to preceding entry, to REFORMATION and to individual countries where Lutherans are the main religious body.

Lux Mundi. A 'Series of Studies in the Religion of the Incarnation' published in 1889 by a group of Oxford Anglican teachers under the editorship of C. *Gore, then Principal of Pusey House. The other contributors included H. S. *Holland, E. S. *Talbot, R. C. *Moberly, and F. *Paget. Its purpose was 'to put the Catholic faith into its right relation to modern intellectual and moral problems'. At the time interest in the book was directed esp. to a few pages in Gore's own essay on 'The Holy Spirit and Inspiration', in which by accepting in principle the new critical views of the OT, he definitely broke with the conservative position of E. B. *Pusey and the *Tractarians. For this reason the book caused grave distress to many of the older school of High Churchmen, e.g. H. P. *Liddon.

[D.] G. Rowell, 'Historical Retrospect: Lux Mundi 1889', in R. [C.] Morgan (ed.), The Religion of the Incarnation (Bristol, 1989), pp. 205–17. P. [B.] Hinchliff, God and History (Oxford, 1992), pp. 99–121.

Luxeuil. The abbey, established *c.*590 by St *Columbanus on the site of the Roman Luxovium (about 20 miles NE of Vesoul), soon became the most important in France. The abbey of *Corbie was founded *c.*660 by some of its monks. Destroyed in 732 by the *Saracens, under *Charlemagne it was re-established, henceforward under the *Benedictine Rule. The abbey ceased to exist in 1790, though the abbey church is still in use as a parish church.

'Chronicon Luxoviense Breve' (from origins to 1039), ed. G. H. Pertz in MGH, Scriptores, 3 (1839), pp. 219–21. H. Baumont, Étude historique sur l'abbaye de Luxeuil, 590–1790 (Luxeuil, 1895); E. de Beauséjour, L'Église abbatiale de Luxeuil (Besançon, 1891). Lectionary of Luxeuil [Par. lat. 9427], ed. P. Salmon, OSB (Collectanea Biblica Latina, 7 and 9; Rome, 1944–53). Mélanges colombaniens: Congrès International d'Études Colombaniennes. Luxeuil, 20–23 juil. 1950 (Paris, 1951). F. Prinz, Frühes Mönchtum im Frankreich (Munich, 1965; repr. with additional material as 2nd edn., Darmstadt, 1988), passim. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 9 (pt. 2; 1930), cols., 2722–87; G. Oury in DIP 5 (1978), cols. 790 f., both s.v.

LXX. An abbreviation in common use for the *Septuagint (q.v.).

lych-gate (Old Eng. lic [cf. Ger. Leiche], 'corpse'). The roofed gateway to a churchyard beneath which the coffin is set down to await the arrival of the officiating minister.

lying. A lie is a statement not in accordance with the mind of the speaker, made with the intention of deceiving. In the OT the practice of lying is denounced as an attribute of sinners (Lev. 19: 11, Ps. 5: 6, Prov. 6: 17), though it is sometimes recorded of otherwise righteous people, e.g. of *Abraham (Gen. 20: 2), *Jacob (Gen. 27: 32), and *David (1 Sam. 21: 2). These lies, however, are usually regarded as excusable because they were told in cases of necessity without the intention to hurt. In the NT the standard is higher, and lying is so abhorrent that for the disciple a simple affirmation of the truth is to take the place of an oath (Mt. 5: 37). St *Paul, too, exhorts Christians to put away falsehood (Col. 3: 9; cf. Eph. 4: 25), and in the Bk. of Rev. the virgins who follow the Lamb are praised because 'in their mouth was found no lie' (14: 5). The NT teaching is followed by the Fathers, though with slight divergences. Some of them, e.g. *Origen, St *Hilary of Poitiers, St *Jerome, and St *Chrysostom, held that a lie may be lawful, e.g. in order to save an innocent man from death. St *Augustine, however, and following him St *Thomas Aquinas, hold that lying is always sinful, because it perverts the nature of human speech, which is meant to express man's thought, not to disguise it. Acc. to St Thomas lies are never lawful, and even 'officious' lies, i.e. those told for the benefit of someone without the intention of deceiving, and 'jocose' lies, told for amusement, are reprehensible. St Thomas admits, however, that in certain cases it may be prudent to hide the truth under some 'dissimulation'. In modern times the problem of the lawfulness of lying in these cases, when, e.g., human life would be endangered or a secret violated not only by speaking the truth but also by preserving silence, has given rise to several theories attempting a solution. They either permit *mental reservation (q.v.) or assert that not everyone has the right to the truth (so, e.g., H. *Grotius and S. *Pufendorf), or, what seems most in agreement with common sense, that there may arise conflicts of duty in which the choice of a lie is a lesser evil. These, however, are exceptional cases which do not prejudice the general obligation of speaking the truth, without which an ordered human society which is built on mutual trust would become impossible.

Lyndhurst, Act of Lord. The Marriage Act 1835 made all future marriages within the *prohibited degrees (e.g. marriage with a deceased wife's sister) ipso facto null and void, and not voidable (as had been the previous rule) only by an explicit pronouncement of the ecclesiastical courts.

Lyndwood, William (c.1375–1446), English canonist and Bp. of *St Davids. Educated at Gonville and Caius College, Cambridge, he became a Fellow of Pembroke Hall; later he migrated to Oxford, where he took his doctorate in canon and civil law. In 1414 he was commissioned by Abp. H. *Chichele as both his Chancellor and Auditor of Causes in the Court of *Audience, and in 1417 he was appointed *Official Principal of the Provincial Court of *Canterbury. In 1432 he became Keeper of the Privy Seal. He held a considerable number of benefices, in 1442 becoming Bp. of St Davids. He was closely associated with Chichele's administration and in his proceedings against the *Lollards. His celebrated Provinciale (completed in 1430) is the most substantial work on English canon law surviving from the later Middle Ages. It is a collection in five books of the provincial constitutions of the Abps. of Canterbury from S. *Langton (1222) to Chichele (1416), with an extensive gloss and detailed index (completed in 1433). It remains a standard authority on English ecclesiastical law and his text of the constitutions is that generally used for official purposes. As F. W. *Maitland pointed out in his discussion with W. *Stubbs over the authority of Papal law in pre-Reformation England, Lyndwood regarded the law of the Church in England as dependent on the Papal codes and held that local constitutions must be interpreted in accordance with Papal law. Similarly the Archbishop's legislative and jurisdictional authority is superior to that of the provincial councils, but the Archbishop himself is bound by the legatine constitutions.

The latest and best edn. of Lyndwood's Provinciale is that pub. at Oxford, 1679; repr. Farnborough, 1968. Text of Canons (only) repr. from Eng. tr. made in 1534, ed. J. V. Bullard and H. Chalmer Bell, London, 1929. A. C. Reeves, 'The Careers of William Lynwood', in J. S. Hamilton and P. J. Bradley (eds.), Documenting the Past: Essays in Medieval History Presented to George Peddy Cuttino (Woodbridge, Suffolk, 1989), pp. 197–216. F. W. Maitland, Roman Canon Law in the Church of England (1896), pp. 1–50. C. R. Cheney, 'William Lyndwood's Provinciale', The Jurist, 21 (1961), pp. 405–34, repr. in id., Medieval Texts and Studies (Oxford, 1973), pp. 158–84. B. E. Ferme, Canon Law in Late Medieval England: A Study of William Lyndwood's Provinciale with particular reference to Testamentary Law (Pontificia Studiorum Universitas Salesiana, Facultas Iuris Canonici. Studia et Textus Historiae Iuris Canonici, 8; Rome [1996]). BRUO 2 (1958), pp. 1191–3; BRUC, pp. 379–81 and 679.

Lyne, Joseph Leycester. See IGNATIUS, FATHER.

Lyons, First Council of (1245). Acc. to RC numbering the 13th *Oecumenical Council. The Council was convoked by *Innocent IV to deal with what, in his opening sermon, he called the five wounds of the Church, the bad lives of the clergy and faithful, the danger of the Saracens, the Greek Schism, the invasion of Hungary by the Tatars, and the rupture between the Church and the Emp. *Frederick II. The bishops present, who did not greatly exceed 150, came chiefly from France, Italy, and Spain. The principal achievement of the Council was the formal deposition of the Emperor, who had been repeatedly excommunicated for having imprisoned cardinals and bishops on their way to a Council convoked by *Gregory IX, for being suspect of heresy through his association with the Saracens, and for pursuing a violently anti-ecclesiastical policy in Sicily. The objections of Thaddaeus of Suessa, Frederick's ambassador, that the accused had not been cited to the Council, that it was wholly irregular for the Pope to be plaintiff and judge at once, and that the Council was not truly oecumenical, were over-ruled. At the last session the *Dominicans and *Franciscans were charged with the publication of the decree throughout Christendom. The Council also enjoined the preaching of a Crusade for the liberation of the Holy Land from the Saracens, which, however, came to nothing.

Hardouin, 7, cols. 375–406; Mansi, 23 (1779), cols. 605–86. Bull deposing Frederick II and Constitutions also pr., with Eng. tr., introd., and bibl., in Tanner, Decrees (1990), pp. 273–301. Hefele and Leclercq, 5 (pt. 2; 1913), pp. 1633–79. J. B. Martin, Conciles et bullaires du diocèse de Lyon (Lyons thesis; 1905), pp. 252–83, 624–9. H. Wolter, SJ, and H. Holstein, SJ, Lyon I et Lyon II (Histoire des conciles œcuméniques, 7; 1966), pp. 11–128, 245–67. Contemporary accounts of the Council in the 'Brevis nota eorum quae in primo Concilio Lugdunensi Generali gesta sunt' (repr. in Mansi, loc. cit., cols. 610–13), and by *Matthew Paris, Chronica Majora, under the year 1245 (ed. H. R. Luard, 4, RS, 1877, pp. 430–79). M. Tangl, 'Die sogenannte Brevis Nota über das Lyoner Concil von 1245', Mittheilungen des Instituts für Oesterreichische Geschichtsforschung, 12 (1891), pp. 246–53. T. G. von Karajan, 'Zur Geschichte des Concils von Lyon 1245', Denkschriften der kaiserlichen Akademie der Wissenschaften, Phil.-hist. Kl. 2 (Vienna, 1851), pp. 67–100, with texts, pp. 103–17. S. Kuttner, 'Die Konstitutionen des ersten allgemeinen Konzils von Lyon', Studia et Documenta Historiae et Iuris, 6 (Rome, 1940), pp. 70–131. F. Vernet in DTC 9 (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 1361–74, s.v. 'Lyon (I[er] Concile œcuménique de)', with detailed bibl. See further bibl. to GREGORY IX and INNOCENT IV.

Lyons, Second Council of (1274). Acc. to RC numbering the 14th *Oecumenical Council. It was convoked by *Gregory X to bring about the union with the Greek Church, the liberation of the Holy Land, and the reform of morals. It was attended by about 500 bishops, 60 abbots, and 1,000 other prelates. Among its better-known members were St *Albert the Great, St *Bonaventure, St Philip Benizi, General of the *Servites, *Humbert of Romans, and Peter of Tarentaise, the future Pope Innocent V. St *Thomas Aquinas died on the way to the Council. The desire of the Greeks for reunion with Rome arose chiefly from their fear of Charles of Anjou, who sought to become Latin Emp. of Constantinople. The legates of the Greek Emperor, Michael VIII Paleologus, presented letters declaring their adherence to the obedience of the RC Church and to the articles of faith which the Apostolic nuncios had asked them to subscribe, and at the High Mass, at which St Bonaventure preached the sermon, they repeated three times the *Filioque of the Creed. Besides defining in detail the *Double Procession of the Holy Spirit, the Council gave rulings about the election of the Pope in *conclave, suppressed some of the newly founded mendicant orders while approving esp. the *Dominicans and *Franciscans, and deposed several prelates. Its principal achievement, the union of the Churches, proved ephemeral; it came to an end in 1289.

Hardouin, 7, cols. 669–722; Mansi, 24 (1780), cols. 38–136. Constitutions also pr., with Eng. tr., introd., and bibl., in Tanner, Decrees (1990), pp. 303–31. Hefele and Leclercq, 6 (pt. 1; 1914), pp. 153–209. J. B. Martin, Conciles et bullaires du diocèse de Lyon (Lyons thesis, 1905), pp. 403–61, 651–6. H. Wolter, SJ, and H. Holstein, SJ, Lyon I et Lyon II (Histoire des conciles œcuméniques, 7; 1966), pp. 129–241, 268–87. B. Roberg, Das Zweite Konzil von Lyon [1274] (Konziliengeschichte, Reihe A: Darstellungen, Paderborn, etc., 1990). A. Franchi, OFM (ed.), Il Concilio II di Lione (1274) secondo la Ordinatio Concilii Generalis Lugdunensis (Studi e testi francesani, 3; 1965). V. Laurent and J. Darrouzès, Dossier Grec de l'Union de Lyon (1273–1277) (Archives de l'Orient Chrétien, 16; 1976 [Gk. text with Fr. tr. and introd.]). S. Kuttner, 'Conciliar Law in the Making. The Lyonese Constitutions (1274) of Gregory X in a MS. at Washington', in Miscellanea Pio Paschini, 2 (Lateranum, NS 15; 1949), pp. 39–81, with useful refs. L. Gatto, Il pontificato di Gregorio X (1271 1276) (Istituto Storico Italiano per il Medio Evo. Studi Storici, 28–30; 1959), pp. 82–98 and 107–62. J. M. Hussey, The Orthodox Church in the Byzantine Empire (Oxford History of the Christian Church, 1986), pp. 223–42. A. Fliche in Fliche and Martin, 10 (1950), pp. 487–503, with bibl. F. Vernet and V. Grumel, AA, in DTC 9 (pt. 1; 1926), cols. 1374–410, s.v. 'Lyon (II[e] Concile œcuménique de)', with detailed bibl.; M. Jugie, AA, in EC 7 (1951), cols. 1398–401, s.v. 'Lione, Secundo Concilio'.

Lyons, rite of. The minor local variations to the fused *Gregorian Sacramentary which developed in the course of the Middle Ages and are peculiar to Lyons. They were swept away in the 18th cent. but some of them were restored by *Pius IX in 1863. In 1904 the Congregation of *Rites approved a Missale Romanum in quo antiqui ritus Lugdunenses servantur. The Pontifical High Mass is characterized by great splendour, the bishop being assisted by six priests (in *chasubles), seven deacons (in *dalmatics), seven subdeacons (until their suppression, in *tunicles), seven acolytes (in *albs), and seven clerics (in capes).

D. Buenner, OSB, L'Ancienne Liturgie romaine: Le rite lyonnais (1933). A. A. King, Liturgies of the Primatial Sees (1957), pp. 1–154. R. X. Redmond in NCE 8 (1967), pp. 1112–14, s.v. 'Lyonese Rite'.

Lyra. See NICHOLAS OF LYRE.

M

Maassen, Friedrich (1823–1900), historian of early canon law. He began life as an advocate in N. Germany; but, finding himself debarred from public office through his conversion to the RC faith in 1851, he decided to devote himself to academic teaching, and later held professorships at Innsbruck (1857), Graz (1860), and Vienna (1871). He was at first a strong opponent of the decrees of the First *Vatican Council on Papal Infallibility, but in the *Kulturkampf he strenuously defended the claims of the RC Church. Of the first importance were his studies in the history of the ecclesiastical canons, embodied in his Geschichte der Quellen und der Literatur des canonischen Rechts im Abendlande bis zum Ausgange des Mittelalters (Bd. 1, 1870 [all published]), which were the basis of the later researches of E. *Schwartz, C. H. *Turner, and others. Among his other writings were his Pseudoisidorstudien (1885).

Obituary notice by R. von Scherer in Hist. J. 21 (1900), pp. 640–2. N. Grass, 'Österreichische Kanonistenschulen aus drei Jahrhunderten', Zeitschrift der Savigny-Stiftung für Rechtsgeschichte, 72. Kanonistische Abteilung, 41 (1955), pp. 290–411, esp. pp. 300–48. R. Naz in DDC 6 (1957), cols. 687–9, s.v.

Mabillon, Jean (1632–1707), *Maurist scholar. He entered the *Benedictine abbey of Saint-Rémy at Reims in 1653, but in 1664 he was sent to *Saint-Germain-des-Prés, at the request of J. L. *d'Achery, to help edit texts. Prob. the most erudite of all the Maurists, Mabillon rendered immense services to historical research. He produced some 20 folio works, including an edition of the writings of St Bernard (1667); the Acta Sanctorum Ordinis Sancti Benedicti (with d'Achery, 9 vols., 1668–1701); the first four volumes of the Benedictine Annales (to AD 1066; 1703–7); and several collections of documents, notably the Museum Italicum (2 vols., 1687–9), which included a set of Ordines Romani*. His collections incorporated the fruits of his journeys in quest of manuscripts and rare books, of which the most famous was that to Italy in 1685–6 undertaken at the expense of the King of France. In his De Re Diplomatica (1681), conceived as a reply to attacks on the authenticity of early charters by the *Bollandist D. *Papebroch, he put the study of palaeography and diplomatic on a scientific footing. The attacks made by A.-J. le B. de *Rancé on the engagement of religious in scholarly pursuits provoked his Traité des études monastiques (1691; repr. Farnborough, 1967).

Ouvrages Posthumes de D. Jean Mabillon et de D. Thierri Ruinart, ed. V. Thuillier, OSB (1724; repr. Farnborough, 1967), 1 and 2, pp. 1–396. T. *Ruinart, OSB, Abrégé de la vie de Dom Jean Mabillon (1709; modern edn. in 'Collection Pax', 35; 1933). Mélanges et documents publiés à l'occasion du 2e centenaire de la mort de Mabillon (Archives de la France Monastique, 5; 1908). H. *Leclercq, OSB, Dom Mabillon (2 vols., Paris, 1953–7). B. Barret-Kriegel, Les Historiens et la Monarchie, 1: Jean Mabillon [1988], pp. 7–159; 2: La défaite de l'érudition [1988], esp. pp. 145–75. M. D. *Knowles, OSB, 'Jean Mabillon', JEH 10 (1959), pp. 153–73, repr. in The Historian and Character and Other Essays (Cambridge, 1963), pp. 213–39. H. Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 10 (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 427–724, s.v.; G.-M. Oury OSB, in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 1–4, s.v. See also works cited under MAURISTS.

Macarius, St (d. *c.*334), Bp. of Jerusalem from *c.*311. He is mentioned in *Arius' letter to *Eusebius of Nicomedia (*c.*320) as one of the few 'bishops of the East' who denied him support. At the Council of *Nicaea (325) he was resolutely opposed to *Arianism. Soon after the Council he was commissioned by *Constantine to build the Church of the *Holy Sepulchre at Jerusalem after St *Helena's celebrated '*invention of the Cross' (326). Later he and his fellow-bishops of Palestine received a further letter from Constantine providing for the erection of a church at Mamre. Feast day, 10 Mar.

Arius' letter mentioning Macarius is preserved by *Theodoret, HE 1. 5 [PG 1. 4]; Constantine's letters to Macarius in *Eusebius of Caesarea, Vita Constantini, 3. 30–2 and 52 f. E. Venables in DCB 3 (1882), p. 765, s.v.

Macarius, St (1481/2–1563), Metropolitan of Moscow and All Russia. Born in Moscow and christened Michael, he became a monk with the name of Macarius. In 1526 he became Archbishop of Novgorod, and in 1542 Metropolitan of Moscow. He embarked on a reform of the Russian Church, both in its canon law and in its liturgical practice, and had the newly-compiled liturgical books made available in printed form. He was canonized by the 1988 Synod of the Russian Church; feast day, 30 Dec.

Detailed account, in Russian, by E. E. Golubinsky, Istoriya Russkoy Tserkri, 2 (Moscow, 1911), pt. 2. M. Veretennikov, 'Makarij, Metropolit von ganz Russland', in K. C. Felmy and others (eds.), Tausend Jahre Christentum in Russland (Göttingen, 1988), pp. 687–716.

Macarius, St, of Alexandria (d. *c.*394), Egyptian hermit. (He is often confused with St *Macarius of Egypt, q.v.) He retired into the desert at the age of 40 and seems to have lived near St *Antony. He was ordained priest *c.*355, when he was in his 60s, to serve the monks at Kellia. He was persecuted by the Arian Patr. of Alexandria and, like Macarius of Egypt, was a miracle-worker of repute. A monastic rule has been ascribed to him, probably erroneously. Feast day, 2 Jan. in the W., 19 Jan. or 1 May in the E.

On the various Macarii see C. Butler, The Lausiac History of Palladius, 2 (1904), pp. 193 f. and A. Guillaumont, 'Le problème des deux Macaire dans les Apophthegmata Patrum', Irénikon, 48 (1975), pp. 41–59. The early authorities for Macarius the Alexandrian are *Palladius, Hist. Laus. 18, and *Rufinus, Hist. Mon. 29, and HE 2. 4. Coptic Life, ed. by E. Amélineau in Annales du Musée Guimet, 25 (1894), pp. 235–61. Writings ascribed to him in J. P. Migne, PG 34 ('Rule', cols. 967–70 [Lat.], 'Sermo de Exitu Statuque Animarum post hanc Vitam', 385–92). A. Guillaumont in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 4 f., s.v.

Macarius, St, of Egypt (*c.*300–*c.*390), also known as Macarius the Great. He was a native of Upper Egypt who, at about the age of 30, founded a colony of monks in the desert of Scetis (Wadi-el-Natrun), which became one of the chief centres of Egyptian monasticism. Renowned for his sanctity and miracles, he was ordained priest *c.*340. He certainly knew, and seems to have been much influenced by, the great St *Antony; and, as a staunch supporter of St *Athanasius, he suffered a brief period of exile under Athanasius' Arian successor, Lucius. For the homilies ascribed to him in some MSS, see MACARIUS/SIMEON. Feast day, 15 Jan. in the W.; 19 Jan. or 9 Mar. in the E.

Our knowledge of him derives chiefly from the Apophthegmata Patrum*, s.v. 'Μακάριος'; *Rufinus' tr. of the Historia Monachorum, 28; and *Palladius, Historia Lausiaca, 17. A. Guillaumont in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 11–13, s.v. 'Macaire l'Égyptien', with further refs.

Macarius Magnes (4th–5th cent.), Christian apologist. Nothing is known of his life, unless he is to be identified with the Bp. of Magnesia who was the accuser of Heraclides of Ephesus at the Synod of the *Oak (403). He was the author of an apology in five books known as the 'Apocriticus', Μονογενὴς ἢ Ἀποκριτικὸς πρὸς Ἕλληνας περὶ τῶν ἀπορουμένων ἐν τῇ Καινῇ Διαθήκῃ ζητημάτων καὶ λύσεων, in which the objections which a learned and clever Neoplatonist (perhaps *Porphyry) had raised against the Christian faith were (not altogether effectively) attacked. In the 9th cent. the treatise was used by the *Iconoclasts in defence of their doctrines, and in the 16th cent. it was quoted by F. *Torres from a copy in the *Marciana. Later the MS was lost and the text not recovered till 1867, when a defective MS was found at Athens; but this appears now to have also been lost. There also survive fragments of an almost entirely spurious series of 'Homilies on Genesis' ascribed to Macarius.

Text of 'Apocriticus' ed. C. Blondel [and P. Foucart] (Paris, 1876). L. *Duchesne, De Macario Magnete et Scriptis ejus (Paris, 1877, with text of the spurious Gen. frags., pp. 39–43). Eng. tr. of extracts of 'Apocriticus' by T. W. Crafer (1919). On the MS tradition G. Schalkhausser, Zu den Schriften des Makarios von Magnesia (TU 31, Heft 4; 1907). A. *Harnack, Kritik des Neuen Testaments von einem griechischen Philosophen des 3. Jahrhunderts: Die im Apocriticus des Macarius Magnes enthaltene Streitschrift (ibid. 37. 4; 1911). G. *Mercati, Nuove note di letteratura biblica e cristiana antica (ST 95; 1941), pp. 49–84 ('Per l'Apocritico di Macario Magnete. Una tavola dei capi libri I, II e III'). J. W. J. Palm, Textkritisches zum Apokritikos des Makarios Magnes (Scripta minora Regiae Societatis Humaniorum Litterarum Lundensis, 1959/60, no. 4; 1961). R. Waelkens, *L'Économie, thème apologétique et principe herméneutique dans l'*Apocriticos de Macarius Magnès (Université de Louvain, Recueil de Travaux d'Histoire et de Philologie, 6th ser. 4; 1974). R. Goulet, 'La Théologie de Makarios Magnès', Mélanges de Science Religieuse, 34 (1977), pp. 45–69 and 145–80. G. *Salmon in DCB 3 (1882), pp. 766–71; R. Waelkens in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 13–17.

Macarius of Moscow (1816–82), Metropolitan of Moscow. Michael Bulgakov, son of a country priest, was educated at the seminary of Kursk and at the ecclesiastical academy of Kiev. After finishing his studies he became a monk, taking the name of Macarius, and later was appointed assistant lecturer in ecclesiastical and civil history at Kiev. From 1842 to 1857 he was professor of dogmatic theology at the academy of St Petersburg. In 1857 he was appointed Bp. of Tambov, in 1859 transferred to Kharkov, and in 1868 to Vilna. He became Metrop. of Moscow in 1879. He is the best representative of 19th-cent. Russian theologians. His two most important works, which were translated into several languages, were the Introduction à la théologie dogmatique orthodoxe (1847) and Théologie dogmatique orthodoxe (5 vols., 1845–53). They reflect the official orthodoxy which was imposed on the Russian Church by A. S. Protasov (lay procurator of the Holy Synod) to counteract Protestant influences, and are based on the Scriptures, the tradition as recognized by the Orthodox Church, and on arguments from reason. He also wrote a comprehensive History of the Russian Church (12 vols., 1857–82), which he traces from its beginnings to the Council of Moscow of 1667.

Life by T. Titov (2 vols., Kiev, 1895–8, in Russian). M. Jugie, AA, in DTC 9 (pt. 2; 1927), cols. 1443 f., s.v. 'Macaire Bulgakov'; P. Mailleux in NCE 2 (1967), pp. 861 f., s.v. 'Bulgakov, Macarius'.

Macarius/Simeon (4th–5th cent.), author of the so-called homilies ascribed in most MSS to St *Macarius of Egypt, though in some MSS (incl. all the Arabic versions) to a certain Simeon. The homilies survive in Greek in four collections: Collection I, the most extensive, which begins with the 'Great Letter' and contains 63 other homilies; Collection II, the most popular, the Fifty Spiritual Homilies, of which two MSS contain seven additional homilies; Collection III, of 43 homilies, which largely overlap with I and II; and Collection IV, of 26 homilies, all of which are to be found in I, for which it seems to have been a source. There are versions in many languages, the Arabic being particularly important, since it preserves homilies lost in Greek. In form some 'homilies' are homilies proper, others ἐρωταποκρίσεις (Questions and answers), recalling the Short Rules of St *Basil, and others are letters. The ascription to Macarius of Egypt is impossible, for the geography and climate envisaged, as well as various historical allusions, point to Syria. Syrian provenance is further supported by the parallels between the homilies and the tenets of *Messalianism. The relation of the homilies to Messalianism is disputed, but it seems clear that many of the passages from the Messalians' Asceticon (condemned at the Council of *Ephesus in 431) were taken from the homilies, and the conclusion is often drawn that the 'Simeon' whom some MSS claim as the author is Simeon of Mesopotamia, a leader of the Messalians mentioned by *Theodoret. There are, however, also differences. There are parallels between the homilies and at least two of the *Cappadocian Fathers, St Basil and St *Gregory of Nyssa. The links with Messalianism suggest a date for the homilies between 380/90 and 430.

The teaching of the homilies is that, as a result of the *Fall of *Adam, the devil has gained control over man's heart so that sin has become natural to him. The only remedy is prayer, prayer for the gift of the Holy Spirit who alone can overcome the power of the devil. Grace, or the presence of the Holy Spirit, is something that can be felt; it is an experience that brings assurance, an experience which often takes the form of a vision of the light of the Godhead. In this teaching the homilies foreshadowed a characteristic doctrine of the *Hesychasts. The homilies have proved very influential, treasured esp. by the monastic spirituality of E. Orthodoxy. In modern times they have found favour, notably among the German *Pietists and the English *Methodists; the first volume of J. *Wesley's '*Christian Library' included a translation of 22 Macarian homilies.

There are modern edns. of Collections I–III: Collection I (apart from the 'Great Letter'), ed. H. Berthold (2 vols., GCS, 1973); the 'Great Letter', ed. R. Staats (Abh. (Gött.), Folge 3, 134; 1984). Collection II: The 'Fifty Spiritual Homilies', first pr. by J. Picus (Paris, 1559), repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 34. 449–822; crit. edn. H. Dörries, E. Klostermann, and M. Kroeger (Patristische Texte und Studien, 4; 1964). Eng. tr. by A. J. Mason (London, 1921). The seven additional homilies, ed. G. L. Marriott (Harvard Theological Studies, 5; 1918). Collection III (except for homilies also in Collection II), ed. E. Klostermann and H. Berthold (TU 72; 1961); repr. (but omitting homilies also in Collections I and II), with Fr. tr. and introd. by V. Desprez, OSB (SC 275; 1980). Eng. tr. of the 'Fifty Spiritual Homilies' and the 'Great Letter' by G. A. Maloney, SJ (Classics of Western Spirituality [1992]). The homilies found only in Arabic are tr. into Ger. by W. Strothmann (Göttinger Orientforschungen, I Reihe: Syriaca, 11; 1975).

J. Stiglmayr, SJ, Sachliches und Sprachliches bei Makarius (Innsbruck, 1912). L. Villecourt, OSB, 'La Date et l'origine des "Homélies spirituelles" attribuées à Macaire', in Comptes Rendus des séances de l'Académie des Inscriptions et des Belles-Lettres (Paris, 1920), pp. 250–8; G. L. Marriott, 'The Messalians; and the Discovery of their Ascetic Book', HTR 19 (1926), pp. 191–8; H. Dörries, Symeon von Mesopotamien: Die Überlieferung der messalianischen 'Makarius'-Schriften (TU 55, Heft 1; 1941); W. Jaeger, Two Rediscovered Works of Ancient Christian Literature: Gregory of Nyssa and Macarius (Leiden, 1954), incl. text of the 'Great Letter', pp. 233–301; G. Quispel, Makarius, das Thomasevangelium und das Lied von der Perle (Supplements to Novum Testamentum, 15; 1967); R. Staats, Gregor von Nyssa und die Messalianer (Patristische Texte und Studien, 8; 1968); E. A. Davids, Das Bild vom neuen Menschen: Ein Beitrag zum Verständnis des Corpus Macarianum (Salzburg, 1968); J. Gribomont, OSB, 'Le Dossier des origines du messalianisme', in Epektasis: Mélanges patristiques offerts au Cardinal Jean Daniélou, ed. J. Fontaine and C. Kannengiesser (1972), pp. 611–25. H. Dörries, Die Theologie des Makarios/Symeon (Abh. (Gött.), Folge 3, 103; 1978). H. Berthold, 'Die Ursprünglichkeit literarischer Einheiten im Corpus Macarianum', in F. Paschke (ed.), Überlieferungsgeschichtliche Untersuchungen (TU 125; 1981), pp. 61–76. C. Stewart, OSB, 'Working the Earth of the Heart': The Messalian Controversy in History, Texts, and Language to A.D. 431 (Oxford Theological Monographs, 1991). CPG 2 (1974), pp. 73–7 (nos. 2410–27). V. Desprez, OSB, and M. Canévet in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 20–43, s.v. 'Macaire (Pseudo-Macaire)'.

Macaulay, Zachary (1768–1838), Anglican *Evangelical and philanthropist and father of Thomas Babington Macaulay (1800–59), the historian. At the age of 16 he went to Jamaica, where he became manager of an estate which used slave labour. Disgust at the conditions under which the slaves worked determined him to wage war on the practice of slavery, and on returning to England in 1792 he made the cause of abolition his main concern. In 1793 he became governor of the colony of Sierra Leone, where he remained intermittently until 1799. A member of the '*Clapham Sect', he became deeply interested in the work of the *BFBS and of the *CMS. From 1802 to 1816 he edited the Christian Observer, the organ of the Clapham Sect. He was also one of the founders of London University.

Viscountess Knutsford [M. J. Holland, granddaughter], Life and Letters of Zachary Macaulay (1900). C. Z. Booth, Zachary Macaulay: His Part in the Movement for the Abolition of the Slave Trade and of Slavery (1934). L. Stephen in DNB 34 (1893), pp. 418–20. See also bibl. to CLAPHAM SECT.

Maccabees. The celebrated Jewish family, which played a major role in arousing armed opposition by Judaean Jews to the introduction of pagan cult into the *Temple at Jerusalem by *Antiochus Epiphanes, and thus at a very critical period of its history stemmed the threatened destruction of Judaism. The revolt was begun in 168 BC at Modin, where Mattathias, then an aged priest, killed an apostate Jew who was about to offer a pagan sacrifice. The struggle was carried on by his five sons, three of whom in turn, *Judas (who alone in the *Apocrypha is given the epithet 'Maccabaeus', Gk. Μακκαβαῖος, meaning perhaps 'hammerer'), Jonathan, and Simon, led the Jews in their struggle. Acc. to *Josephus (Antiq. 12. 6. 1), Mattathias was the great-great-grandson of Hasmon, and they are thus often known as the 'Hasmonaeans'.

The principal authority for the history of the family, besides Josephus, is 1 and 2 Macc. (see following entry). A. Momigliano, Prime linee di storia della tradizione maccabaica (1930). E. Bickermann, Der Gott der Makkabäer (1937; Eng. tr., Studies in Judaism in Late Antiquity, 32; Leiden, 1979). W. R. Farmer, Maccabees, Zealots, and Josephus: An Inquiry into Jewish Nationalism in the Greco-Roman Period (New York, 1956). M. Hengel, Judentum und Hellenismus (Wissenschaftliche Untersuchungen zum Neuen Testament, 10; 1969), pp. 464–564; Eng. tr., Judaism and Hellenism (2 vols., 1974), 1, pp. 255–309, with notes, 2, pp. 169–205; cf. F. Millar, 'The Background to the Maccabean Revolution', Journal of Jewish Studies, 29 (1978), pp. 1–21. B. Bar-Kochva, Judas Maccabaeus (Cambridge, 1989). E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 1 (Edinburgh, 1973), pp. 125–242. T. Rajak in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 3 (1992), pp. 67–76, s.v. 'Hasmonean Dynasty'.

Maccabees, Books of. Four Books, so called after the hero of the first two, *Judas Maccabaeus, are found in certain MSS of the *Septuagint, of which the first three are included in the *Canon of the E. Church and the first two in that of the RC Church and the *Apocrypha of (non-RC) English Bibles. (A fifth Book, contained in the Ambrosian *Peshitta (B. 21 Inf.) and thus designated by Henry Cotton (1789–1879), is merely a Syriac version of *Josephus, Jewish War, book 6.)

The First Book consists of a history of the Jews from the accession of *Antiochus Epiphanes (175 BC) to the death of Simon Maccabaeus in 135 BC. After a brief note on the reign of Alexander, it describes the desecration of the *Temple and the resistance of Mattathias the priest, continued by his sons, Judas, Jonathan, and Simon Maccabaeus. It closes with the escape of Simon's son, John Hyrcanus, on a note of reassurance for the future. Extant only in Greek, though written in Hebrew (known to St *Jerome, Prol. Gal. ad Lib. Reg.), it appears to have been the work of a Palestinian Jew of nationalist sympathies, prob. *c.*100 BC. It is the primary historical source for the period.

The Second Book describes the history of the Maccabean wars from the close of the reign of the Syrian king Seleucus IV (176 BC) to the victory of Judas Maccabaeus over Nicanor and the death of the latter (161 BC). It is an epitome of a larger work by Jason of Cyrene (otherwise unknown; 2: 23) and appears to have been written in Greek by a Jew some time before 63 BC. It has a marked devotional note, emphasizing the care of God for His people in all things.

The Third Book describes the attempt of Ptolemy IV to enter the Sanctuary of the Temple (217 BC), his frustration, and his unsuccessful attempt to take vengeance on the Jews of Egypt. It appears to have been written in Greek, prob. by an Alexandrian Jew between 100 BC and AD 70, and is prob. thus named on the analogy of the events described with those of the Maccabaean period. Listed in the biblical catalogue in the *Apostolic Canons (can. 85), the Book appears to have been held in high esteem in the early Church, but its canonicity is now admitted only by the E. Church.

The Fourth Book is a Greek philosophical treatise addressed to Jews on the supremacy of devout reason over the passions, illustrated by examples from the history of the Maccabees. The work was erroneously attributed to Josephus by *Eusebius, '*Suidas', and others. It was prob. written by a Hellenistic Jew at some time later than Book 2 and before AD 70.

The Books of the Maccabees contain important doctrinal teaching on immortality (2 Macc. 7: 9, 23, 37 and 4 Macc.), the value of suffering as a means of expiation (2 Macc. 7: 37 f.), and prayers for the dead (2 Macc. 12: 43–5). This last passage has played an important part in the defence of the doctrine of *purgatory.

The Gk. text of 1–4 Macc. is pr. in H. B. *Swete, The Old Testament in Greek, 3 (1894), pp. 586–762, and other edns. of the LXX, the most scholarly text of 1–3 Macc. being that in the edn. of the LXX under the auspices of the Göttingen Academy, vol. 9: 1 Macc. ed. W. Kappler (1936; 2nd edn., 1967); 2 Macc. ed. W. Kappler and R. Hanhart (1959; 2nd edn., 1976); 3 Macc. ed. R. Hanhart (1960; 2nd edn., 1980). Crit. edn. of Syriac text of 4 Macc. by R. L. Bensly (Cambridge, 1895). H. Cotton, The Five Books of Maccabees in English, with notes (Oxford, 1832). Modern comm. on 1 and 2 Macc. by W. O. E. Oesterley in R. H. *Charles (ed.), The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, 1 (1913), pp. 59–124 (on 1 Macc.), and J. Moffatt, ibid., pp. 125–54 (on 2 Macc.), H. Bévenot, OSB (Das Heilige Schrift des Alten Testaments, 1931), F.-M. Abel, OP (Études bibliques, 1949), S. Zeitlin (Jewish Apocryphal Literature, 1950, on 1 Macc.; 1954, on 2 Macc.), F.-M. Abel, OP and J. Starcky (La Sainte Bible, traduite en français sous la direction de l'École Biblique de Jérusalem, 3rd edn.; Paris, 1961), and J. A. Goldstein (Anchor Bible, 1976, on 1 Macc.; 1983 on 2 Macc.); also on 1 Macc. by J. C. Dancy (Oxford, 1954); on 3 Macc. by C. Emmet in R. H. Charles (ed.), op. cit., pp. 155–73; and on 4 Macc. by R. B. Townshend, ibid. 2, pp. 653–85, and A. Dupont-Sommer (Bibliothèque de l'École des Hautes Études, 274; 1939); and on 3 and 4 Macc. by M. Hadas (Jewish Apocryphal Literature, New York, 1953). D. de Bruyne, OSB, 'Le Texte grec des deux premiers Livres des Machabées', R. Bibl. 31 (1922), pp. 31–54. Id. and B. Sodar, OSB (eds.), Les Anciennes Traductions latines des [1 and 2] Machabées (Anecdota Maredsolana, 4; 1932). B. Niese, Kritik der beiden Makkabäerbücher (1900). E. J. B. Bickerman, 'The Date of Fourth Maccabees', in Louis Ginzberg Jubilee Volume on the Occasion of his Seventieth Birthday, English Section (New York, 1945), pp. 105–12. E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 3 (pt. 1; Edinburgh, 1986), pp. 180–5, 531–42, and 588–93, with bibl. T. Fischer in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 4 (1992), pp. 439–50 (on 1–2 Macc.); A. Anderson, ibid., pp. 450–54 (on 3–4 Macc.). See also bibl. to APOCRYPHA.

Maccabees, Feast of the Holy. The feast formerly kept in the W. Church (and still observed in the E.) on 1 Aug. to commemorate the seven Jewish brethren whose sufferings and deaths are described in 2 Macc. 7. The incident, which is doubtless referred to in Heb. 11: 35, struck the imagination of the early Christians and was celebrated by many of the Church fathers, notably St *Gregory of Nazianzus (Serm. 15) and St *Augustine (Serm. 300–2). The reputed relics of the martyrs were honoured at Antioch, the scene of their deaths, and later at S. Pietro in Vincoli in Rome (see LAMMAS DAY, also observed on 1 Aug.).

M. Maas, 'Die Maccabäer als christliche Heilige', Monatsschrift für Geschichte und Wissenschaft des Judenthums, 44 (1900), pp. 145–56; H. Bévenot, OSB, 'The Holy Machabees', The Month, 150 (1927), pp. 107–14. On the early veneration of the Maccabees at Antioch, where the cultus prob. originated, see also H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 1 (pt. 2; 1907), cols. 2375–9, s.v. 'Antioche (archéologie), IV: La Basilique et le culte des Macchabées'; cf. ibid. 10 (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 724–7. F. Spadafora and M. C. Celletti in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 8 (1967), cols. 434–9, s.v. 'Maccabei'.

MacDonald, George (1824–1905), Scottish novelist and poet. Educated at the University of Aberdeen and at Highbury College, London, he became a *Congregational minister, but in 1853 left the ministry to devote himself to literature. His writings, largely based on the life and customs of NE Scotland, include the novels David Elginbrod (1863), Alec Forbes of Howglen (1865), Malcolm (1875), and Donal Grant (3 vols., 1883). MacDonald's books, which were highly valued by C. S. *Lewis, reveal firm religious faith, moral enthusiasm, and Christian optimism. He was also the author of several religious works, including Unspoken Sermons (1867, 1885, 1889) and The Miracles of our Lord (1886).

The Poetical Works of George MacDonald (2 vols., 1893). His romance, Lilith (1895), was ed. by G. MacDonald (son) (1924), with introd., pp. ix–xx. C. S. Lewis (ed.), George MacDonald: An Anthology (1946). J. M. Bulloch, 'A Bibliography of George MacDonald', Aberdeen University Library Bulletin, 5 (1925), pp. 679–747, also issued separately (1925). G. MacDonald (son), George MacDonald and his Wife (1924). R. MacDonald (son), 'George MacDonald: A Personal Note', in F. Watson (ed.), From a Northern Window: Papers, Critical, Historical and Imaginative (1911), pp. 55–113. R. L. Wolff, The Golden Key: A Study in the Fiction of George MacDonald (New Haven, Conn., 1961). K. Triggs, The Stars and the Stillness: A Portrait of George MacDonald (Cambridge, 1986). D. S. Robb, George MacDonald (Scottish Writers, 11; Edinburgh, 1987). A. Matheson in DNB, 1901–1911, pp. 513–15.

Mace, Daniel (d. *c.*1753), NT textual critic. Little is known of his life beyond the fact that he was a *Presbyterian minister at Newbury from 1727 till his death. He anticipated conclusions which only met with general acceptance among textual critics over a century later, e.g. he disproved the authenticity of the text known as the *Johannine Comma (1 Jn. 5: 7). His results were incorporated in The New Testament in Greek and English (2 vols., 1729), to which a reply in defence of the *Textus Receptus was issued shortly afterwards by L. Twells (d. 1742).

H. McLachlan, 'An Almost Forgotten Pioneer in New Testament Criticism', Hibbert Journal, 37 (1939), pp. 617–25. A. Gordon in DNB 35 (1893), pp. 68 f.

Macedonius (d. *c.*362), Bp. of *Constantinople. In the divisions which followed the death of *Eusebius of Nicomedia (*c.*341) he was one of the rival claimants to the see, and seems to have gained possession of it *c.*342. He strongly supported the *Semiarian cause and defended his position at the Council of *Seleucia in 359. In 360 he was deposed by the Arian Council of Constantinople. From the end of the 4th cent. onwards he has been regarded as the founder of the '*Pneumatomachi' (q.v.) and thus caused the sect to be known as the 'Macedonians'; but it is doubtful how far this association is correct, as it seems clear that disputes about the Divinity of the Holy Spirit did not arise until after Macedonius' deposition. It is not known whether he left any writings.

J. M. Fuller in DCB 3 (1882), pp. 775–7, s.v. F. *Loofs in PRE (3rd edn.), 12 (1903), pp. 41–8, s.v.; G. Bardy in DTC 9 (1926), cols. 1464–78, s.v., both with bibl. See also bibl. to PNEUMATOMACHI.

Machutus (otherwise Malo, Maclovius, Maclou), St (d. *c.*640), early Breton saint. Acc. to tradition, he was of either Welsh or Breton descent, and trained in the monastic life by St *Brendan. He settled at Aleth, opposite the present town of St-Malo, and is said to have lived an ascetic life, preached with great success, and founded several monasteries in the surrounding districts. One tradition asserts that he accompanied St Brendan on his journey to *Iona. Feast day, 15 Nov.

Two Lives (both c. AD 850–900) exist, the one by the deacon Bili of Aleth, ed. by F. Plaine, OSB, in Bulletins et Mémoires de la Société archéologique du département d'Ille-et-Vilaine, 16 (1883), pp. 167–256; the other by an Anon. of Saintes, ed. by A. de La Borderie, ibid., pp. 267–93. For texts cf. also F. Lot, Mélanges d'histoire bretonne (1907), pp. 294–329 and 331–430; and id., 'Les Diverses Rédactions de la vie de saint Malo', ibid., pp. 97–206. The Life by Bili, together with an Old English tr., also ed. G. Le Duc (St-Malo, 1979). More satisfactory edn. of the Old English tr., with Lat. text opposite, by D. Yerkes (Toronto Old English Series, 9 [1984]). L. *Duchesne, 'La Vie de saint Malo. Étude critique', Revue celtique, 11 (1890), pp. 1–22. A. Poncelet, 'Une Source de la vie de S. Malo par Bili', Anal. Boll. 24 (1905), pp. 483–6. P. Riché, 'Translation de reliques à l'époque carolingienne. Histoire des reliques de Saint-Malo', Le Moyen Âge, 82 (1976), pp. 201–18. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 10 (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 1293–318, s.v. 'Malo (Saint)'.

Mackay, Alexander Murdoch (1849–90), *C.M.S. Missionary in *Uganda. The son of a Free Church minister, he was educated at Edinburgh, and in 1873 he obtained a post as a draftsman in Berlin. His thoughts had long turned to missionary work, however, and in 1876 he was accepted by the CMS for work in Africa. Having embarked for Victoria Nyanza, he finally reached Uganda in 1878 after constructing 230 miles of road. His printing of part of the Scriptures in Swahili interested King Mtesa, and he was granted permission to carry on missionary work. Soon, however, he met with opposition both from RCs and from Muslims. In 1884, when King Mtesa was succeeded on the throne of Uganda by Mwanga, Mackay was threatened with expulsion, but allowed to remain by reason of his engineering skill. The Christians meanwhile had to face fierce persecution, and many were slain. In 1887 Mackay was expelled, and settled at Usambiro on the southern end of Lake Victoria, where he reduced the vernacular of Uganda to writing, and then translated the Scriptures into it.

A. M. Mackay, Pioneer Missionary of the C.M.S. Uganda, by his sister [Mrs J. W. Harrison] (1890). A. H. Millar in DNB 35 (1893), p. 118.

Mackintosh, Hugh Ross (1870–1936), Scottish theologian. After a distinguished undergraduate career at Edinburgh, he studied at *Marburg, specializing in philosophy. He was ordained in 1897, and after some years of pastoral work at Tayport and at Beechgrove Church, Aberdeen, he was appointed professor of systematic theology at New College, Edinburgh, in 1904. Here he exercised great influence as a teacher. He showed marked sympathy with the Liberal Movement in German Protestant theology and made it one of his chief objects to make German doctrines better known in Britain. In 1932 he was elected Moderator of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland. Among his written works the more important are The Doctrine of the Person of Christ (1912), in which he showed himself critical of the *Chalcedonian Christology and defended a modified *kenotic doctrine, The Christian Experience of Forgiveness (1927), and Types of Modern Theology (1937, posthumous).

Sermons (1938), with Memoir by A. B. Macaulay, pp. 1–33, and list of his chief pubs., p. ix. J. W. Leitch, A Theology of Transition: H. R. Mackintosh as an approach to Barth (1952). D. M. Baillie in DNB, 1931–1940, pp. 581 f.

Mackonochie, Alexander Heriot (1825–87), *Anglo-Catholic leader. Educated at Wadham College, Oxford, he was ordained in 1849, and served in turn under W. J. *Butler at Wantage (1852–8) and C. F. *Lowder at St George's in the East (1858–62). By 1862, when he was put in charge of the newly built church of St Alban's, Holborn, he was recognized as an advanced 'ritualist', and from 1867 onwards was constantly prosecuted by the *Church Association for his ceremonial practices (e.g. the *mixed chalice and *altar lights). He eventually resigned in 1882, though he worked unofficially in the parish from 1883 until his sudden death in the Highlands in Dec. 1887.

E. A. Towle, A. H. Mackonochie (1890); H. Reynolds, Martyr of Ritualism: Father Mackonochie of St Alban's, Holborn (1965). W. A. J. Archbold in DNB 35 (1893), pp. 185 f.

Maclaren, Alexander (1826–1910), *Baptist preacher and expositor. Trained at Glasgow University and Stepney College, after twelve years as minister in Southampton (1846–58) he moved to Manchester and from the pulpit of Union Chapel (1858–1903) achieved a world-wide reputation by his sermons and writings. Twice President of the Baptist Union (1875; 1901), he also presided at the first Congress of the Baptist World Alliance in 1905.

G. G. Atkins (ed.), The Best of Alexander Maclaren (New York, 1949), with introd. pp. vii–xix (London, 1950, with introd. pp. 7–22). G. Eayrs, An Index to Expositions of Holy Scripture by Alexander Maclaren [1912], with an Appreciation of Dr Maclaren by W. R. *Nicoll (repr. from the British Weekly), pp. v–xviii. D. Williamson and J. H. Shakespeare, The Life of Alexander Maclaren [1910]; E. T. McLaren (cousin and sister-in-law), Dr. McLaren of Manchester: A Sketch (1911). A. Gordon in DNB, 1901–1911, p. 534, with list of pubs.

Macleod, George Fielden (1895–1991), Lord MacLeod of Fuinary, founder of the *Iona Community. Born of a notable Scottish ecclesiastical dynasty, MacLeod went to Winchester College and began reading law at Oriel College, Oxford, but in 1914 enlisted for service in the First World War, in which he was decorated for bravery. He then trained for ministry in the Church of Scotland at Edinburgh University, worked for *Toc H in Scotland, and in 1926 was appointed minister of the fashionable St Cuthbert's Church in Edinburgh. Despite his popularity here, in 1930 he accepted an invitation to become minister of Govan Old Parish Church in the slums of Glasgow. During the 1930s he became a pacifist and a socialist, and an outstanding radio preacher. In 1938 he founded the Iona Community, which was intended to express in social terms the theology of the Incarnation, and he began the rebuilding of the living quarters of the ruined medieval abbey on the island. He exercised a wide influence and received many honours both in Britain and the USA. In 1956 he was appointed a chaplain to the Queen and in the following year he became *Moderator of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland. He was elevated to the House of Lords in 1967, resigning as Leader of the Iona Community; he became president of the International Fellowship of Reconciliation the same year. An international youth and reconciliation centre on Iona, opened in 1988, was named in his honour. His works include Govan Calling: Sermons and Addresses (1934); We Shall Re-Build: The Work of the Iona Community on Mainland and Island [1944]; and Only One Way Left (1956).

Life by R. Ferguson (London, 1990).

Macleod, Norman (1812–72), Scottish divine. Educated at Glasgow and Edinburgh (under T. *Chalmers), he travelled on the Continent before his ordination in 1838. After holding appointments at Loudoun, Ayrshire, and Dalkeith, he became minister of the Barony Church, Glasgow, in 1851, and in 1857 chaplain to Queen Victoria, with whom he was a great favourite. In 1869 he was elected *Moderator of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland. He was one of the most prominent and respected parochial ministers in Scotland in the 19th cent. Besides being the editor of the successful periodical Good Words (from 1860), he was the author of several books, among the best-known being his Reminiscences of a Highland Parish (1867).

Memoir by his brother, D. Macleod (2 vols., London, 1876). Shorter study by J. Wellwood ('Famous Scots Series', Edinburgh and London [1897]). T. Hamilton in DNB 35 (1893), pp. 217 f.

Macrina, St (*c.*327–80), the elder sister of St *Basil the Great and St *Gregory of Nyssa. She is sometimes known as 'Macrina the Younger' to distinguish her from 'Macrina the Elder', her paternal grandmother. By her strength of character she exercised a deep influence upon her brothers, esp. in winning Basil from a promising secular career for the Christian priesthood. She also established a flourishing community on the family estate in Pontus. The chief source for knowledge of her life is Gregory of Nyssa's Vita Macrinae Junioris, which also preserves a vivid account of their meeting at her deathbed. Her competence as a theologian is attested by the same writer's De Anima et Resurrectione. Feast day, 19 July [of Macrina the Elder, 14 Jan.].

For the Vita see J. P. Migne, PG 46. 959–1000. Crit. edns. by V. W. Callahan in Gregorii Nysseni Opera, ed. W. Jaeger and others, 8, pt. 1 (Leiden 1952), pp. 347–414, and, with Fr. tr., by P. Maraval (SC 178; 1971). There is an Eng. tr., with introd., by W. K. L. Clarke (1916). R. Albrecht, Das Leben der heiligen Makrina auf dem Hintergrund der Thekla-Traditionen (Forschungen zur Kirchen- und Dogmengeschichte, 38; 1986).

Madauran Martyrs (2nd cent.), the first reputed Christian martyrs in Africa. The four martyrs, all of whom had Punic names (Namphamo, Miggin, Lucitas, Samae), supposedly suffered at Madaura in 180. Our knowledge of them comes from Maximus of Madaura, a pagan grammarian of the late 4th cent., who inveighs against the populace for deserting the pagan cults and visiting the tombs of such uncultured barbarians. But J. H. Baxter has argued that the evidence is very insecure, and that the martyrs were in fact 4th-cent. *Circumcellions from a wider area.

Maximus' letter and St Augustine's reply are pr. among the latter's Epp., nos. 16 f. (CSEL 34, pt. 1, 1895, pp. 37–44). J. B. *Lightfoot, The Apostolic Fathers, pt. 2, vol. 1 (1885), pp. 506 f.; 2nd edn. (1889), pp. 522 f. (Note ζ). J. H. Baxter, 'The Martyrs of Madaura, A.D. 180', JTS 26 (1924–5), pp. 21–37.

Madeba Map. A map of Palestine and the Near East in coloured mosaics, uncovered in 1896 in the church at Madeba to the east of the Dead Sea. It almost certainly dates from the 6th cent. and it throws important light on the history of Palestinian topography.

M. J. *Lagrange, 'La Mosaïque géographique de Mâdaba', R. Bibl. 6 (1897), pp. 165–84. M. Avi-Yonah, The Madaba Map (Jerusalem, 1954). H. Donner and H. Cüppers, Die Mosaikkarte von Madeba (Abhandlungen des Deutschen Palästinavereins, 1977 ff.). R. T. O'Callaghan, SJ, in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 5 (1957), cols. 627–704, s.v. 'Madaba (Carte de)', with bibl.

Madonna, Ital. for 'My Lady'. A designation of the BVM, used esp. with reference to statues and pictures of her, e.g. 'The *Sistine Madonna'. The Madonna lily is the White Lily (Lilium candidum), which on account of its pure whiteness is a frequent emblem of Mary in art.

Madras Conference (1938). See TAMBARAM CONFERENCE.

Maffei, Francesco Scipio (1675–1755), polyhistorian. A native of *Verona, he studied under the *Jesuits at Parma, fought in the Spanish Succession War, and became the friend of *Benedict XIV. He took a lively and practical interest in a variety of problems, attacking duelling (1710) and magic (1754) and defending the theatre (1713), which he actively fostered. His historical work centred on his native city, and he published Verona illustrata (4 vols., Verona, 1731–2). In the contemporary controversies on grace, he attacked the *Jansenists in De Haeresi Semipelagiana (Rovereto, 1743) and other writings. His defence of usury in Dell'impiego del danaro (Verona, 1744) provoked Benedict XIV's encyclical of 1 Nov. 1745; but Maffei's work was not actually condemned and a 2nd edition appeared in 1746. In 1712 he rediscovered the ancient manuscripts in the Chapter Library of Verona. An examination of them led Maffei to a much clearer understanding of the development of Latin script than had been reached by J. *Mabillon, which he set out in Istoria Diplomatica (Mantua, 1727). He used these MSS for his edition of *Hilary of Poitiers (2 vols., Verona, 1730, a revision of the text of P. *Coustant) and other treatises. He also edited for the first time the 'Historia Acephala', a primary source for the Life of St *Athanasius, from Cod. Ver. LX (58) (Osservazioni letterarie, 3 (1738), pp. 60–83).

Opere (ed. A. Rubbi), 21 vols., Venice, 1790. Opuscoli letterarii di Scipione Maffei con alcune sue lettere edite e inedite (Venice, 1829). Modern edn. of Opere drammatiche e poesie by A. Avena (Bari, 1928) and of his Epistolario (1700–55) by C. Garibotto (2 vols., Milan, 1955). L. Traube, Vorlesungen und Abhandlungen (ed. F. Boll), 1 (1909), pp. 43–8; cf. also W. Telfer, 'The Codex Verona LX (58)', HTR 36 (1943), pp. 169–246, esp. pp. 228–31. G. Silvestri, Un Europeo del settecento, Scipione Maffei (Treviso, 1954; 2nd edn., Verona, 1968 [popular]); A. Momigliano, 'Gli studi classici di Scipione Maffei', Giornale Storico della Letteratura Italiana, 133 (1956), pp. 363–83, repr. with further bibl. in Secondo contributo alla storia degli studi classici (1960), pp. 255–71.

Magdalene, St Mary. See MARY MAGDALENE, ST.

Magdalens. In reference to St *Mary Magdalene, the word has often been applied to reformed prostitutes. As a title it was widely adopted in the Middle Ages by religious communities consisting of penitent women ('*White Ladies'), to whom others of blameless lives often joined themselves. These communities, widely established in the 13th cent. in Germany, France, Belgium, Italy, Spain, and Portugal, often followed the Rule of St *Augustine, though many German houses were affiliated to *Dominicans and *Franciscans. They are now reduced to one convent, at Vilsbiburg. The 'Magdalonettes', an order of Magdalens founded for the reformation of women in 1618 by Père Athanase Molé, a *Capuchin, is extinct.

Magdeburg, Centuriators of. See CENTURIATORS OF MAGDEBURG.

Magi. The first Gentiles to worship Christ, acc. to Mt. 2: 1–12. Guided by a mysterious star, they came from the East to *Bethlehem with gifts of gold, frankincense, and myrrh for the Christ Child. They are called in the NT μάγοι (sages). The idea that they were kings first appears in Christian tradition in *Tertullian, who calls them fere reges ('almost kings'; Adv. Jud. 9 and Adv. Marc. 3. 13), and it became general from the 6th cent., on the basis of the implied reference in Ps. 72 (71): 10. The NT account says nothing of their number. *Origen is the first to give it as three, probably on account of their three gifts, and this has become the general tradition. Their names, Gaspar, Melchior, and Balthasar, are first mentioned in the 6th cent. Excerpta Latina Barbari and later in a work of pseudo-*Bede known as the Collectanea. In the Middle Ages they were venerated as saints, and the Milanese claimed to possess their relics, brought from *Constantinople in the 5th cent. These were taken to Germany by *Frederick Barbarossa in 1162, and are now enshrined in *Cologne Cathedral. The Adoration of the Magi early became one of the most popular subjects of representation in art, the first extant painting being in the 'Cappella greca' of the Priscilla Catacomb dating from the 2nd cent. See also EPIPHANY.

H. Kehrer, Die hl. drei Könige in Literatur und Kunst (2 vols., 1908–9). R. E. McNally, 'The Three Holy Kings in Early Irish Latin Writing', in P. Granfield and J. A. Jungmann (eds.), Kyriakon: Festschrift Johannes Quasten, 1 (Münster, 1970), pp. 667–90. H. Hofmann, Die heiligen drei Könige: Zur Heiligenverehrung im kirchlichen, gesellschaftlichen und politischen Leben des Mittelalters (Rheinisches Archiv, 94; 1975). F. H. Dudden in DCG 2 (1908), pp. 97–101, s.v., with bibl.; W. Schulten in TRE 9 (1982), pp. 166–9, s.v. 'Drei Könige' with bibl. For iconography, H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 10 (1931), cols. 980–1067, s.v. 'Mages'.

Magnificat. The song of praise (Lk. 1: 46–55) sung by the BVM when her cousin *Elizabeth had greeted her as the mother of the Lord. It is so named from the opening word of the Latin text, 'Magnificat anima mea Dominum' ('My soul doth magnify the Lord'). From a very early date, probably since St *Benedict, it has been the canticle of *Vespers of the W. Church, and its importance is emphasized by its special antiphons and the censing of the altar at solemn Vespers. It was adopted at Evensong in the BCP and in modern Anglican liturgies retains its place, though sometimes not on every day of the week. In the E. Church it is sung daily in the morning office (the *Orthros), except on certain great feasts, and it is followed by the *Benedictus (but in practice this last is usually omitted). Its language, which is steeped in the poetic tradition of the OT, shows notable resemblances to that of the 'Song of Hannah' (1 Sam. 2: 1 ff.); this fact, among others (notably that at Lk. 1: 46 a few Latin MSS read et ait Elisabeth, instead of et ait Maria) has led some scholars to argue that Luke attributed it originally to Elizabeth and not to Mary.

H. P. *Liddon, The Magnificat: Sermons in St Paul's (1889). S. Farris, The Hymns of Luke's Infancy Narrative (Journal for the Study of the New Testament, Supplement Series, 9; Sheffield, 1985), with refs. The ruling of the *Biblical Commission in 1912 defending the attribution of the Magnificat to the BVM is discussed by L. Pirot in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 2 (1934), cols. 1269–72, s.v. 'Évangile et commission biblique', with bibl. See also comm. to LUKE, GOSPEL OF ST, cited s.v.

Magnus, St. (1) Martyr. The supposed existence of the saint of this name occurring in the Roman martyrology for 19 Aug., where he is asserted to have suffered in the Decian *persecution, seems to have arisen from a blunder. In Latin lists 'St Andrew the Tribune', who in Greek calendars is described as the 'Megalomartyr' (μεγαλομάρτυς, i.e. the Great Martyr), became Andreas Tribunus Magnus Martyr; and this description was later erroneously understood to refer to two saints, Andrew the Tribune and Magnus the Martyr.

(2) of Füssen (d. *c.*770), Apostle of the Allgäu, Bavaria. Practically the only source is the Life dating from 1065–70, rewritten by Otloh of Saint-Emmeran from an earlier document. The first part, depicting Magnus as a companion of St *Gall and St *Columbanus in Ireland and then in Gaul, is clearly unhistorical. The second part, which is more reliable, describes his mission to the Allgäu, supported by Wichpert, Bp. of Augsburg. The mission was centred on Füssen, where Magnus began to exploit the deposits of iron. Feast day, 6 Sept.

(3) (d. 1116), son of Earl Erlin, ruler of the Orkneys. Having been captured by the Norwegian king, Magnus Barefoot, he escaped to Malcolm III of Scotland (d. 1093), and later lived in the house of a British bishop. During the latter part of his life he devoted himself to prayer and penance. After Magnus Barefoot's death he returned to the Orkneys, where he shared the government with his cousin Hakon, who treacherously killed him. Because of his saintly life he was soon venerated as a martyr though he did not die for the faith. He is supposed to have appeared to Robert Bruce before the battle of Bannockburn (1314) and promised him victory. Feast day, 16 Apr.

(1) On the cult, AASS, Aug. 3 (1737), pp. 717–9; for the blunder over the name of Andrew, ibid., p. 720.

(2) Text of Life by Otloh, ed. M. Coens, SJ, in Anal. Boll. 81 (1963), pp. 159–227, incl. discussion of its relation to the earlier tradition. A shorter version, for liturgical use, ed. id., ibid., pp. 321–32.

(3) The principal sources are the Orkneyinga Saga and Magnus Saga (longer and shorter forms), both ed., with Eng. tr., by G. Vigfusson and G. W. Dasent, Icelandic Sagas, 1 and 3 (RS, 1887–94); Eng. tr. of Orkneyinga Saga by H. Pálsson and P. Edwards (London, 1978). J. Mooney, St Magnus—Earl of Orkney (Kirkwall, 1935).

Mahometanism. See ISLAM.

Mai, Angelo (1782–1854), Italian philologist and palaeographer. Born of poor parents, he was educated at the Collegium Romanum and for a time belonged to the Society of Jesus (*Jesuits). In 1813 he was appointed custodian of the *Ambrosiana at Milan, and in 1819 prefect of the *Vatican library. In 1838 he became cardinal. He was renowned esp. as a reader of *palimpsests. He published four large collections of classical and theological texts, chiefly based on unpublished MSS in the Vatican and Ambrosian libraries: Classici Auctores (10 vols., 1828–38), Scriptorum Veterum Nova Collectio (10 vols., 1830–8), Spicilegium Romanum (10 vols., 1839–44), and Nova Patrum Bibliotheca (8 vols., 1844–71; vols. 9 (1888) and 10 (1905) added later by J. Cozza-Luzi).

Letters ed. G. Cozza Luzi (Bergamo, 1883) and G. Gervasoni (Florence, 1954 ff.). Lives by B. Prina (Bergamo, 1882) and G. Poletto (ibid., 1882; 2nd edn., Siena, 1886). A. Bonnetty, Table alphabétique analytique et raisonnée de tous les auteurs sacrés et profanes qui ont été découverts et édités récemment dans les 43 vol. publiés par le cardinal Mai (1850). G. Cozza-Luzi, 'I grandi lavori del cardinale Mai', Bessarione, 2nd ser. 7 (1904), pp. 103–33; 8 (1905), pp. 59–74; 9 (1905), pp. 308–17; 10 (1906), pp. 169–82. G. Gervasoni, L'ambiente letterario milanese nel secondo decennio dell'ottocento: Angelo Mai alla Bibliotheca Ambrosiana (Fontes ambrosiani, 11; Florence, 1936), with full bibl. S. Timpanaro, 'Angelo Mai', Atene e Roma, NS 1 (1956), pp. 3–34. Bergomum (Bollettino della civica biblioteca, vol. 28, no. 4. Numero speciale dedicato alle celebrazioni in onore del Card. Angelo Mai nel centenario della morte; 1954). Polgár, 2 (1990), pp. 469–73. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 10 (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 1196–202, s.v.

Maid of Kent. See BARTON, ELIZABETH.

Maid of Orléans. See JOAN OF ARC, ST.

Maier, Johannes. See ECK, JOHANN.

Maimonides, Moses (1138–1204), Jewish philosopher. He is known to Jewish writers as 'Rambam' (the consonants being the initial letters of 'Rabbi Moses ben Maimon'). Born at Córdoba, he lived for a time in Fez, and eventually, after a brief stay in Palestine, settled at Fostat (Old Cairo), where he became head of the Jewish community (*c.*1171). In 1168 he completed his commentary on the *Mishnah, known as the Siraj or 'Luminary'; it was a notable contribution to exegesis and scholarship. He brought out *c.*1180 his 'Mishneh Torah' in Hebrew, a Talmudic code in 14 parts arranged by subject matter. His reputation as one of the leading *halachists (legal authorities) rests mainly on this masterly distillation of traditional sources and in part on his many responsa. His other works were written in Arabic. In 1190 appeared his principal treatise, the 'Guide for the Perplexed' (Dux Neutrorum sive Dubiorum). Its purpose was to achieve a working harmony between reason and faith. Its three parts treat of: (1) the idea of God; (2) the arguments for the existence of God, His manifestations, the world of spirits, the creation of the world in time, and prophecy; and (3) the interpretation of *Ezekiel's vision, the problem of evil, the end of creation, Divine Providence, and Divine knowledge. Maimonides' aim was to achieve a synthesis of the data of the Jewish revelation and the findings of human reason proposed by *Aristotle. His 'Guide' had a profound influence on the Christian thought of the Middle Ages, esp. on St *Albert the Great and St *Thomas Aquinas.

Maimonides' works have been repeatedly repr. from the 15th cent. onwards, but there is no collected edn. The principal edns. of his 'Guide' (Arab. text) are those of S. Munk, with Fr. tr. (3 vols., Paris, 1856–66) and J. Kafih, with modern Hebrew tr. (3 vols., Jerusalem, 1972); Eng. trs. by M. Friedländer (3 vols., London, 1881–5) and S. Pines (Chicago, 1963). Eng. tr. (in progress) of the Mishneh Torah by J. J. Rabinowitz, H. Danby, H. Klein, and others (Yale Judaica Series, New Haven, Conn., 1949 ff.). I. Twersky, Introduction to the Code of Maimonides (Mishneh Torah) (ibid. 22; 1980). Eng. tr. from various works by A. Cohen as The Teachings of Maimonides (1927). Studies by D. Yellin and I. Abrahams (London, 1903; rev. edn., New York [1972]), J. Müntz (Frankfurt am Main, 1912; Eng. tr., Boston, 1935), A. Heschel (Berlin, 1935; Eng. tr., New York, 1982), S. Zeitlin (New York, 1935), H. Sérouya (Paris, 1964), and O. Leaman (London and New York, 1990). I. Epstein (ed.), Moses Maimonides, 1135–1204: Anglo-Jewish Papers in connexion with the eighth centenary of his birth (1935), with bibl. of Eng. works, pp. 231–48. S. W. Baron (ed.), Essays on Maimonides: An Octocentennial Volume (New York, 1941). N. Roth, Maimonides: Essays and Texts. 850th Anniversary (Madison, Wis., 1985). J. L. Kraemer (ed.), Perspectives on Maimonides (Oxford, 1991). S.-D. Goitein, 'Moses Maimonides, Man of Action. A revision of the master's biography in the light of the Geniza documents', in G. Nahon and C. Touati (eds.), Hommage à Georges Vajda: Études d'histoire et de pensée juives (Louvain, 1980), pp. 155–67. L. Roth, The Guide for the Perplexed: Moses Maimonides (1948). D. B. Burrell, CSC, Knowing the Unknowable God: Ibn-Sina, Maimonides, Aquinas (Notre Dame, Ind. [1986]). L. I. Rabinowitz and others in Encyclopaedia Judaica, 11 (Jerusalem, 1972), pp. 754–81, s.v.

Maistre, J. Comte de. See DE MAISTRE, J.

Maitland, Frederic William (1850–1906), historian. The grandson of the ecclesiastical historian, Samuel Roffey Maitland (1792–1866), he was educated at Eton and at Trinity College, Cambridge, and called to the bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1876. In 1884 he was appointed reader in, and in 1888 Downing professor of, English law at Cambridge. In his Roman Canon Law in the C of E (1898) he maintained against nearly all previous writers, including W. *Stubbs (who was convinced by Maitland's arguments), that in the Middle Ages the English secular courts recognized the Roman canon law as binding on the English clergy apart from its re-enactment in the English synods. His crucial instance was the legitimation of natural-born children by subsequent matrimony. He also contributed the chapter on 'The Anglican Settlement and the Scottish Reformation' to the Cambridge Modern History (vol. 2, ch. 16) and was the author of a large number of other historical writings.

Collected Papers, ed. H. A. L. Fisher (3 vols., Cambridge, 1911); some of these, with additions, ed. H. D. Hazeltine, G. Lapsley, and P. H. Winfield, as Selected Essays (ibid., 1936); Selected Historical Essays, chosen and with introd. by H. M. Cam (ibid., 1957); Letters, ed. C. H. S. Fifoot (ibid., 1965). A. L. Smith, Frederic William Maitland: Two Lectures and a Bibliography (Oxford, 1908). Fuller Lives by H. A. L. Fisher (Cambridge, 1910) and C. H. S. Fifoot (Cambridge, Mass., 1971). H. E. Bell, Maitland: A Critical Examination and Assessment (1965). J. R. Cameron, Frederick William Maitland and the History of English Law (Norman, Okla. [1961]). G. R. Elton, F. W. Maitland (Historians on Historians, 1985). B. F. Lock in DNB, 1901–1911, pp. 552–5.

Major (or Maier), Georg (1502–74), *Lutheran theologian. He studied at *Wittenberg under M. *Luther and P. *Melanchthon. After eight years as a schoolmaster in Magdeburg, he returned to Wittenberg in 1537, first as court preacher and then (from 1545) as a member of the theological faculty. He enjoyed the favour of John Frederick, Elector of Saxony, and supported his resistance to the Emp. *Charles V in the Schmalkaldic Wars. After his defeat, Major fled briefly to Magdeburg before making peace with the new ruler, Duke Maurice. Apart from brief periods elsewhere, he spent the rest of his life at Wittenberg, involved in producing the Wittenberg edition of Luther's works and serving as dean of the theology faculty from J. *Bugenhagen's death (1558) until his own. He is famous chiefly as the protagonist of the 'Majoristic Controversy'. This broke out in the wake of the *Leipzig Interim, which Major, like his mentor Melanchthon, supported. In defending his role in the Interim against harsh criticism from N. von *Amsdorf, Major asserted in his Auff des Ehrenwirdigen Herren Niclas von Ambdsorff . . . Antwort (1552) that good works were necessary for salvation. This statement was denounced by Amsdorf, M. *Flacius, and other *Gnesio-Lutherans as incompatible with the doctrine of *justification by faith alone. In the ensuing controversy Major, without fully retracting his views, qualified them to the extent of claiming that good works were only a token of justification and that his teaching was never intended in the sense that his opponents attached to it.

Werke were ed. in 3 vols., Wittenberg (1569–70; many works omitted). R. Kolb, 'Georg Major as Controversialist: Polemics in the Late Reformation', Church History, 45 (1976), pp. 455–68. H. Scheible in TRE 21 (1991), pp. 725–30, with bibl.

Majoristic Controversy. See previous entry.

Major Orders. The higher grades of the Christian ministry in contradistinction from the *Minor Orders (q.v.). In the early Church these were generally held to be *bishop, *priest, and *deacon. From the time of *Innocent III, the *subdiaconate was accounted a major order and the diaconate and priesthood (in which the episcopate was included) reckoned as the other two to preserve the original number of three in all. In modern times the Second *Vatican Council implied a restoration of the primitive conception of a ministry consisting of episcopate, priesthood, and diaconate, and in 1972 the subdiaconate was suppressed. Acc. to RC canon law no one can receive major orders who has not previously received the lesser ministries; within the Latin rite, but not in the *Uniat Churches, those on whom they are conferred (except permanent deacons) are bound to *celibacy and the recitation of the Divine *Office. The obligations and rights of clerics are listed in CIC (1983), cans. 273–89.

majuscule script. See UNCIAL SCRIPT.

Malabar Christians. A title applied in a wider sense to all the Christian communities of the Syriac rite living in Kerala in SW *India (also known as 'Thomas Christians'), and in a narrower sense to the community of the E. Syrian rite in communion with Rome (the 'Syro-Malabar Church'). All claim that their Church was founded by St *Thomas the Apostle, who is held to have been martyred near Madras; a shrine of St Thomas near Madras is marked by a cross bearing a 7th-cent. Pahlavi inscription. Though the tradition is not impossible, there is no certain evidence earlier than the assertion of *Cosmas Indicopleustes that there were Christians in India before 550. These early Christians were probably originally from E. Syria, with which India conducted considerable trade; their bishops came from the Patriarch of the *Church of the East in Baghdad, and Syriac was used exclusively in liturgical worship. When the Portuguese arrived at the end of the 15th cent. they were originally friendly towards the 'Syrians'. At the Synod of *Diamper in 1599 the Malabar Christians renounced *Nestorius and allied themselves with Rome. Interference with their customs, esp. by the *Jesuits, caused a breach with the W. in 1653; but, largely as a result of the ministrations of the *Carmelites, about two-thirds of them returned to communion with Rome in 1662. They use the Liturgy of *Addai and Mari and still form the largest body of Malabar Christians. In recent years there have been various moves to restore the Syro-Malabar liturgy which had undergone considerable Latinization as a result of the Synod of Diamper.

Those who did not return to Rome in 1662 joined themselves to the *Syrian Orthodox and adopted the W. Syrian Antiochene liturgy. They were prevented by the Portuguese from receiving a bishop from Mesopotamia, but eventually they obtained a bishop from the Patriarch in Homs. From 1816 to 1836 they were in close touch with the Anglican Church and received missionaries from the *CMS. Until recently, they have been constantly disturbed by internal dissensions, and at the end of the 19th cent. there was a further split, the reforming party constituting themselves the 'Mar Thoma' Church, which has maintained close links with the C of E and later the Church of *South India. There were also various attempts to obtain union with Rome; after the secession of Mar Ivanios in 1925 more serious negotiations were opened and in 1930 the *Malankarese Uniat Church (q.v.) came into being. As a result of a recent schism in the Syrian Orthodox Church in India there are now two Catholicoi, one recognizing the Patriarch as the supreme head, the other independent. Since 1907 there has been a small community once again subject to the Patriarch of the Church of the East. The Syrian Orthodox Church in India is one of the most literate communities in the country and is active in missionary work in Africa and in most parts of Asia.

The best account is that of L. W. Brown, The Indian Christians of St Thomas (Cambridge, 1956; reissued with additional ch., 1982). Earlier works include M. Geddes, The History of the Church of Malabar from the Time of its first being discovered by the Portuguese in the Year 1501 (tr. from the Portuguese into Eng., London, 1694). J. F. Raulin, Historia Ecclesiae Malabaricae cum Diamperitana Synodo (Rome, 1745). T. Whitehouse, Lingerings of Light in a Dark Land: being researches into the past history and present condition of the Syrian Church of Malabar (1873); N. J. Thomas, Die Syrisch-Orthodoxe Kirche der Südindischen Thomas-Christen (Das östliche Christentum, NF 19; 1967). J. Vellian (ed.), The Malabar Church: Symposium in honour of Rev. Placid Podipara, C.M.I. (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 186; 1970). P. J. Podipara, CMI, The Thomas Christians (1970). P. Verghese (ed.), Die Syrischen Kirchen in Indien (Die Kirchen der Welt, 13; Stuttgart, 1974). P. Cheriyan, The Malabar Syrians and the Church Missionary Society 1816–1840 (Kottayam, 1935); J. F. Coakley, 'The Archbishop of Canterbury's Assyrian Mission and the Consecration of Mar Abimalek Timotheus of Malabar' [in 1907], in R. Lavenant, SJ (ed.), III° Symposium Syriacum 1980 (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 221; 1983), pp. 203–12. R. H. *Connolly, 'The Work of Menezes on the Malabar Liturgy', JTS 15 (1914), pp. 396–425, 569–89, with addition by E. *Bishop, pp. 589–93. L. K. Ananthakrishna Ayyar, Anthropology of the Syrian Christians (Ernakulam, 1926). G. B. Howard, The Christians of St Thomas and their Liturgies (1864; with trs. of several liturgies). J. P. M. van der Ploeg, OP, The Christians of St Thomas in South India and their Syriac Manuscripts (Bangalore, 1983). G. Menachery (ed.), The St Thomas Christian Encyclopaedia of India (Trichur, 1973 ff.). M. Mundadan, History of Christianity in India, 1: From the Beginnings up to the Middle of the Sixteenth Century (Bangalore, 1984). A. J. Maclean in HERE 12 (1921), pp. 178–80, s.v. 'Syrian Christians, 9'. E. Amann in DTC 9, (pt. 2; 1927), cols. 1704–45, s.v. 'Malabres (Rites)'; E. Tisserant, ibid. 14 (pt. 2; 1941), cols. 3089–162, s.v. 'Syro-Malabare (Église)'; adapted into Eng. as Eastern Christianity in India (1957). See also bibl. to INDIA, CHRISTIANITY IN, and THOMAS, ACTS OF.

Malachi, Book of. The last of the 12 *Minor Prophets and the last Book of the OT, acc. to the English order. The Heb. 'Malachi' מַלְאָכִי means 'my messenger', and the word is probably not to be considered the actual name of the prophet, although a few scholars hold that one of *Ezra's assistants was so called. The writer, whoever he was, begins by emphasizing the love of God for His people (1: 2–5), which is reciprocated only by insincere worship and empty, corrupt, and unworthy practices by the priests (1: 6–2: 9); he then condemns the practice of mixed marriages and divorce (2: 10–16); he announces that a day of judgement will surely come (2: 17–3: 6) and that happiness and prosperity can be restored only by the regular payment of tithes and other dues (3: 7–12); he touches on the age-long problem of innocent suffering and the ultimate reward of the righteous (3: 13–4: 3); and in conclusion he exhorts his readers to keep the law of *Moses (4: 4–6).

The language and thought of the Book are those of the age following the Exile (i.e. after 538), and the Jewish *Temple has evidently been rebuilt. Contemporary Jewish expectations for the future may be seen in the role given to *Elijah (4: 5; cf. Lk. 1: 17). The prophecy about the messenger who shall prepare the way of the Lord in 3: 1 is applied in the Gospels to *John the Baptist (Mk. 1: 2), while the reference to the 'pure offering' in 1: 11 is often taken in Christian tradition as a prophecy of the *Eucharist.

Comm. by J. M. P. Smith (ICC on Hag., Zech., Mal., Jon., 1912; separate pagination), W. Rudolph (KAT 13/4, on Hag., Zech., Mal., 1976, pp. 245–99), and R. [A.] Mason (Camb. Bib., NEB, on Hag., Zech., Mal., 1977, pp. 135–62). K. Elliger, 'Maleachi und die kirchliche Tradition', in E. Würthwein and O. Kaiser (eds.), Tradition und Situation: Studien zur alttestamentlichen Prophetie Artur Weiser zum 70. Geburtstag ... dargebracht (Göttingen, 1963), pp. 43–48. B. Glazier-McDonald, Malachi: The Divine Messenger (Society of Biblical Literature, Dissertation Series, 98; Atlanta, Ga. [1987]).

Malachy, St (1094–1148), Abp. of *Armagh. After restoring monastic life at the ancient site of *Bangor (in Co. Down), Malachy was made Bp. of Connor in 1124. He was a strong advocate for reform in the Irish Church. When he was appointed Abp. of Armagh in 1129, he was opposed by a rival chosen by the hereditary clerical families; he was not installed until 1134, and resigned within three years, preferring an inspirational role. He became Bp. of Down, but prob. lived at Bangor. In 1139 he set out for Rome to seek the *pallium for the two Irish metropolitans from Innocent II, and on the way at *Clairvaux met St *Bernard, who became his close friend and biographer. Though the Pope received him favourably, he refused to grant the pallia until the request was made by an Irish synod. On the return journey, Malachy again visited Clairvaux, and taking thence four of its monks, introduced the *Cistercian Order into Ireland. In 1148 he was dispatched to Rome with the same request as before, but died at Clairvaux on the way in the arms of St Bernard. (The pallia were brought to Ireland by a Papal legate in 1152.) Feast day, 3 Nov.

Best edn. of Life by St Bernard is that in S. Bernardi Opera, 3, ed. J. Leclercq, OSB, and H. M. Rochais, OSB (Rome, 1963), pp. 297–378; Epitaph and hymn, ibid., pp. 517–26. Eng. tr. of Life, with notes, by R. T. Meyer (Cistercian Fathers Series, 10; Kalamazoo, Mich., 1978). E. Vacandard, 'Un Évêque d'Irlande, au XII^e siècle. Saint Malachie O'Margair', RQH 52 (1892), pp. 5–72. A. Gwynn, SJ, 'St. Malachy of Armagh', Irish Ecclesiastical Record, 70 (1948), pp. 961–78; 71 (1949), pp. 134–48, 317–31. J. Leclercq, OSB, 'Documents on the Cult of St. Malachy', Seanchas Ardmhacha: Journal of the Armagh Diocesan Historical Society, 3 (1959), pp. 318–32. Study by A. B. Scott (Dublin, 1976). J. F. Kenney, Sources of the Early History of Ireland, 1 (New York, 1929), pp. 764–7, with further bibl.

Malachy, Prophecies of. The so-called Prophecies of Malachy, which are contained in a document apparently composed in 1590, have no connection with St *Malachy except their erroneous attribution to him. They purport to give a concise motto for every Pope from Celestine II (1143–4) to 'Peter II' at the end of the world (In persecutione extrema S.R. Ecclesiae sedebit Petrus II Romanus). *Pius IX, e.g., corresponded with crux de cruce; *Pius X with ignis ardens; *Pius XII was pastor angelicus; *John XXIII, pastor et nauta; and *John Paul II is de labore solis. Esp. inappropriate was the description of *Benedict XIV as a 'rustic animal' (animal rurale).

Text first pr. by A. Wion, OSB, Lignum Vitae, Ornamentum et Decus Ecclesiae, 1 (Venice, 1595), pp. 307–11. M. J. O'Brien, An Historical and Critical Account of the So-Called Prophecy of St Malachy (Dublin, 1880), incl. text. Also ed., with introd. and comm., by P. Bander (Gerrards Cross, 1969). A. *Harnack, 'Über den Verfasser und den Zweck der Prophetia Malachie de Summis Pontificibus (1590)', ZKG 3 (1879), pp. 315–24. H. Thurston, SJ, The War and the Prophets (1915), pp. 120–41 ('The So-Called Prophecy of St. Malachy'). R. Thibaut, SJ, La Mystérieuse Prophétie des Papes (Bibliothèque de la Faculté de Philosophie et Lettres de Namur, 10; 1951).

Malalas, John. See JOHN MALALAS.

Malankarese Church. The group of *Malabar Christians (q.v.) of the W. Syrian rite who entered into communion with Rome in 1930. Several earlier unsuccessful attempts to achieve union with Rome had been made. The group, which became *Uniat in 1930, consisted of Mar Ivanios (who had shortly before been raised to the rank of metropolitan) and his suffragan, Mar Theophilus, with some 10,000 followers. By the Papal constitution Christo pastorum principi of 11 June 1932, Trivandrum was made the metropolitan see. They retain their ancient Antiochene rite.

C. Malancharuvil, OIC, The Syro Malankara Church (The Syrian Churches Series, 7; Ernakulam, 1974). D. Attwater, The Catholic Eastern Churches (Milwaukee, Wis. [1935]), pp. 196–9, rev. as The Christian Churches of the East, 1 ([Leominster] 1961; London, 1963), pp. 169–71. M. Ivanios, 'The Malabar Reunion', Pax 21 (1931), pp. 1–4. See also bibl. to MALABAR CHRISTIANS.

Malawi, Christianity in. It is possible that in the 17th cent. *Jesuit missionaries visited Nyasaland, as the country was called before it became independent in 1964, but there is no sure evidence for their presence. D. *Livingstone reached Lake Malawi in 1859. With his encouragement the first expedition of the *UMCA arrived in 1861; after the death of Bp. C. F. Mackenzie in 1862, the UMCA withdrew to Zanzibar, but returned in 1879. In a national movement commemorating Livingstone's death, the *Free Church of Scotland and Established Church of *Scotland sent out co-operating missions in 1875 and 1876; the first resulted in the establishment of Livingstonia in the north of the country, the second in Blantyre in the south. They were joined by the Cape Synod of the Dutch Reformed Church in 1888. These missions united to establish the Church of Central Africa Presbyterian in 1924, its first Moderator being R. *Laws. The *White Fathers arrived in 1889 to be aided later by the *Marists in building up the RC Church in Malawi. After Nyasaland became a British Protectorate in 1891, a number of small Protestant evangelical missions arrived, to be joined later by American-based *Pentecostal and Adventist missions. The most significant of the African Independent Churches is the Providence Industrial Mission founded by the nationalist leader John Chilembwe, who was killed in the Nyasaland Rising of 1915. Of the total population of 10 million in 1994, c. 7 million are Christian. The RC Church is the largest denomination, with a membership of 2.5 million, while the Church of Central Africa Presbyterian has 2.25 million members. The Anglican dioceses belong to the Church of the Province of Central Africa.

J. McCracken, Politics and Christianity in Malawi 1875 1940: The Impact of the Livingstonia Mission in the Northern Province (Cambridge, 1977). K. N. Mufuka, Mission and Politics in Malawi (Modern Africa Series, 1; Kingston, Ont. [1977]). I. and J. Linden, Catholics, Peasants, and Chewa Resistance in Nyasaland 1889–1939 (1974). J. Weller and J. Linden, Mainstream Christianity to 1980 in Malawi, Zambia and Zimbabwe (Gweru, 1984), passim. G. Shepperson and T. Price, Independent Africa: John Chilembwe and the Origins, Setting and Significance of the Nyasaland Rising of 1915 (Edinburgh, 1958). [W.] O. Chadwick, Mackenzie's Grave [1959].

Malchion (3rd cent.), *Antiochene presbyter. He was head of the Hellenic rhetorical school at Antioch and chosen for his orthodoxy and great learning to interrogate *Paul of Samosata at the Council of Antioch (*c.*270). He successfully forced Paul to reveal his heretical doctrines and, acc. to St *Jerome, himself composed the synodical letter which condemned them.

The chief early authorities are *Eusebius, HE 7. 29 f., and Jerome, De vir. ill. 71. The (scattered) frags. of Malchion's Dialogue with Paul, taken down in shorthand, have been collected by F. *Loofs, Paulus von Samosata (TU 44, no. 5; 1924), pp. 334–7. Cf. also G. Bardy, Paul de Samosate (1923), and H. de Riedmatten, OP, Les Actes du procès de Paul de Samosate (Paradosis, 6; Fribourg, 1952). Brief art. by G. Bardy in DTC 9 (pt. 2; 1927), cols. 1765 f., s.v.

Maldonado, Juan (1533–83), 'Maldonatus', Spanish theologian and exegete. After being educated at the university of Salamanca, he entered the Society of Jesus in 1562. In 1564 he became professor at the *Jesuit Collège de Clermont at Paris, where his theological lectures attracted enormous audiences. In 1574 the *Sorbonne attacked his teaching as heretical; and, though vindicated by the Bp. of Paris in 1576, he withdrew from Paris. His work went far towards rescuing Catholic theology from the barbarous language and barrenness of ideas then prevalent, and his commentaries on the Gospels (2 vols., 1596–7) are held in deservedly high repute. All his writings were published posthumously, and some of those attributed to him are to be treated with caution, as they appear to be inaccurate reproductions of notes taken down at his lectures.

Opera Varia Theologica, pub. in 3 vols. (Paris, 1677), with short Life in vol. 3. R. Galdos, SJ (ed.), Miscellanea de Maldonato anno ab eius nativitate quater centenario, 1534?–1934 (Madrid, 1947), with Life, pp. 11–16, and bibl., pp. 17–21, and certain of his Orations. J. M. Prat, SJ, Maldonat et l'université de Paris au XVI[e] siècle (Paris, 1856); J. I. Tellechea Idigoras, La Inmaculada Concepción en la controversia del P. Maldonado, S.J., con la Sorbona (Victoriensia, 7; Vitoria, 1958), with docs. and bibl. A. Astrain, SJ, Historia de la Compañía de Jesús en la asistencia de España, 2 (1905), pp. 357–65. J. Iturrioz, 'Maldonado en Salamanca', Estudios eclesiásticos, 16 (1942), pp. 221–34. Sommervogel, 5 (1894), cols. 403–14; 9 (1900), col. 631; and 12 (1911–30), cols. 1144–6; Polgár, 2 (1990), pp. 477 f. E. Amann in DTC 9 (pt. 2; 1927), cols. 1772–6, s.v. 'Maldonat'.

Malebranche, Nicolas (1638–1715), French philosopher. He became an *Oratorian in 1660. His most important works are Recherche de la vérité (1674) and Traité de la nature et de la grâce (1680). Some of his positions derive from *Augustine and *Descartes, but his system is profoundly original. He denied that any action of matter upon mind was possible, and explained sensation as the effect of a new creative act in the mental order to correspond with things in the physical creation ('*Occasionalism'). His principle of simplicité des moyens (that God exhibits His omnipotence by acting always in the simplest possible way) led him into a form of *Ontologism, in which God was the immediate cause of all human knowledge, and the 'place of our ideas'; consequently, he taught that our first and simplest idea is that of the infinite. Again, the complexity of the natural creation as a whole was justified in his system solely by the fact of its being eternally ordained (as the simplest possible means) towards the Incarnation of the Word and the reign of grace. A. *Arnauld, J.-B. *Bossuet, and F. *Fénelon wrote against various aspects of his doctrine during his lifetime.

Crit. edns. of Malebranche's works by A. Robinet (Bibliothèque des Textes Philosophiques; 20 vols. + index, Paris, 1958–1970) and by G. Rodis-Lewis (Bibliothèque de la Pléiade, 2 vols., ibid., 1979–92). Besides various older trs. of Malebranche's writings, there is a good Eng. tr. of the Dialogues on Metaphysics and on Religion by M. Ginsberg ('Library of Philosophy', 1923); also of The Search for Truth by T. M. Lennon and P. J. Olscamp (Columbus, Oh., 1980) and of the Treatise on Nature and Grace by P. Riley (Oxford, 1992). E. A. Blampignon, Études sur Malebranche d'après des documents manuscrits, suivie d'une correspondance inédite (1862). Studies by L. *Ollé-Laprune (2 vols., Paris, 1870), H. Joly ('Les Grands Philosophes', 1901), R. W. Church (London, 1931), M. Guéroult ('Philosophie de l'Esprit', 3 vols., 1955–9), P. Blanchard (Paris, 1956), G. Rodis-Lewis ('Les Grands Penseurs', 1963), B. K. Rome (Chicago, 1963), A. Robinet (Bibliothèque d'Histoire de la Philosophie, 1965), F. Alquié (ibid., 1974), and D. Radnor (Assen, 1978). Malebranche nel terzo centenario della nascita. Pubblicazione a cura della Facoltà di Filosofia dell'Università Cattolica del Sacro Cuore (Rivista di Filosofia Neo-Scolastica, Supplemento speciale al volume 30; Milan, 1938). Malebranche: L'Homme et l'œuvre, 1638–1715, by A. Robinet and others (Centre International de Synthèse, 1967). H. Gouhier, La Philosophie de Malebranche et son expérience religieuse (1926); Y. de Montcheuil, Malebranche et le quiétisme (Théologie, 10; 1946); D. Connell, The Vision in God: Malebranche's Scholastic Sources (Louvain and Paris, 1967); M. E. Hobart, Science and Religion in the Thought of Nicolas Malebranche (Chapel Hill, NC [1982]). C. J. McCracken, Malebranche and British Philosophy (Oxford, 1983). J. Wehrlé in DTC 9 (pt. 2; 1927), cols. 1776–804, s.v.; G. Rodis-Lewis in NCE 9 (1967), pp. 110–12, s.v.; W. Doney in P. Edwards (ed.), The Encyclopedia of Philosophy, 5 (1967), pp. 140–4, s.v.

Malines Conversations. The meetings of a group of Anglican and RC theologians held at Malines between 1921 and 1925 under the presidency of Cardinal D. J. *Mercier. The initiative came from Lord *Halifax. The others who took part were, on the Anglican side, J. A. *Robinson, W. H. *Frere, C. *Gore, and Dr B. J. Kidd (the Warden of Keble College, Oxford), and on the Roman side Mgr. J. E. van Roey, the Abbé F. Portal, P. *Batiffol, and the Abbé H. Hemmer; and all the meetings except the first took place with the cognizance of the Holy See and the Abp. of *Canterbury. It was agreed that the Pope should be given primacy of honour; that the Body and Blood of Christ are indeed taken in the Eucharist; that the Sacrifice of the Eucharist is a true sacrifice, but after a mystical manner; that Episcopacy is by Divine law; and that Communion in both kinds is a matter of discipline not of dogma. The more Protestant sections of the C of E viewed the Conversations with great suspicion, and the publication of the Report was long delayed for fear that it might fan the opposition to the Revised Prayer Book. Lord Halifax, however, published it early in 1928. Though the Conversations issued in no tangible result and further progress was hindered by *Pius XI's encyclical '*Mortalium Animos' (1928), they indirectly stimulated the movement for co-operation between the C of E and the RC Church.

Lord Halifax, The Conversations at Malines, 1921–5 (1930); W. H. Frere, Recollections of Malines (1935); G. K. A. *Bell, Randall Davidson (1935), ch. 79; J. G. Lockhart, Viscount Halifax, vol. 2 (1936), chs. 18–22. J. de Bivort de la Saudée, Anglicans et Catholiques (2 vols., Brussels, 1949), with docs. in vol. 2. H. Hemmer, Monsieur Portal, prêtre de la mission (1855–1926) (posthumously pub., 1947; Eng. tr. and edn. by A. T. Macmillan, 1961), pp. 121–68. J. A. Dick, The Malines Conversations Revisited (Bibliotheca Ephemeridum Theologicarum Lovaniensium, 85; 1989), with bibl.

Malleolus (or Malleus) Haereticorum (Lat., 'Hammer of the Heretics'). A title applied to various persons who contended vigorously with heretics, among them St *Antony of Padua, St Peter *Canisius, and Johann *Faber (1478–1541).

Malmesbury. The town, formerly the seat of a *Benedictine abbey, traces its origin to the Scottish or Irish monk Meldum (also written Meildulf), who founded a school there *c.*635. It developed into a monastery under his pupil, St *Aldhelm, who became its first abbot and later Bp. of *Sherborne. The house flourished under him and his successors, and enjoyed the favour of many English kings, *Athelstan, *William I, and later Richard II and Henry V, among them. Throughout the Middle Ages it remained one of the principal English monasteries and sent its mitred abbots to Parliament; its most famous member was the historian, *William of Malmesbury. The monastery was dissolved in 1539. The principal portions of the abbey that remain now form the parish church of St Mary and St Aldhelm.

J. S. Brewer and C. T. Martin (eds.), Registrum Malmesburiense (RS, 2 vols., 1879–80). R. H. Luce, Pages from the History of the Benedictine Monastery of Malmesbury (Devizes, 1929). H. Breakspear, 'Malmesbury Abbey', Archaeologia, 64 (1913), pp. 399–436. W. Dugdale, Monasticon Anglicanum, 1 (1817 edn.), pp. 253–64. A. Watkin, OSB, in VCH, Wilts, 3, ed. R. B. Pugh and E. Crittall (1956), pp. 210–31.

Malo, St. See MACHUTUS, ST.

Malta, Knights of. See HOSPITALLERS.

Maltese Cross. A black cross of eight points on a white ground, so named because it was adopted by the Knights of Malta, i.e. the *Hospitallers of St John of Jerusalem.

Malvern Conference. The Anglican Conference which met at Malvern, 7–10 Jan. 1941, under the presidency of Abp. W. *Temple, to consider in the light of the Christian faith the crisis confronting civilization. In its 'findings', which were esp. concerned with the relation of the Church to economic life, the Conference asserted its belief that the continued private ownership of the industrial resources of the country imperilled the Christian doctrine of man, and it urged that the C of E should radically reform its own economic and administrative system.

The Resolutions were issued as a leaflet entitled The Life of the Church and the Order of Society by the *Industrial Christian Fellowship. Most of the papers read were pr. in Malvern 1941 (1941).

Mamertine Prison. A building in the centre of Rome consisting of two cells, one above the other, in which, acc. to tradition, St *Peter was imprisoned and converted his two gaolers, Processus and Martinianus. It was certainly in use as a prison from Republican times. The small church of San Giuseppe dei Falegnami now stands above the site.

H. Grisar, SJ, 'Der mamertinische Kerker und die römischen Traditionen vom Gefängnisse und den Ketten Petri', ZKT 20 (1896), pp. 102–20. L. *Duchesne, 'Le Forum Chrétien', Mélanges de littérature et d'histoire religieuses publiés à l'occasion du jubilé épiscopal de Mgr de Cabrières, 1 (1899), II, 'La Prison mamertine', pp. 128–31. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 10 (pt. 1; 1931), cols. 1356–60, s.v.

Mamertus, St (d. *c.*475), Bp. of Vienne. The brother of *Claudianus Mamertus (q.v.), he was Bp. of the metropolitan see of Vienne in Gaul by 463. For consecrating a Bishop of Die and overriding the attempted settlement of the conflicting claims of the sees of Arles and Vienne (450), he received a rebuke from Pope Hilary (464). He is esp. remembered for having introduced (*c.*470) the 'litanies' on the days immediately preceding *Ascension Day as an act of intercession against earthquakes and other perils, a practice which led later to the institution of the *Rogation Days. Feast day, 11 May.

*Avitus, Homilia de Rogationibus (PL 59. 289–94). AASS, Mai. 2 (1680), pp. 629–31. É. Griffe, La Gaule Chrétienne, 2 (1957), pp. 215 f.; 2nd edn. (1966), pp. 268 f. J. P. Kirsch in CE 9 (1910), p. 580. See also bibl. to ROGATION DAYS.

Man, Isle of. See SODOR AND MAN.

Manasses, Prayer of. This short book in the OT *Apocrypha consists of a penitential prayer put into the mouth of Manasseh, King of Judah (2 Kgs. 21: 1–18). Though the prayer contains no reference to Manasseh by name (apart from the heading) and in content resembles some of the *Penitential Psalms, there are some indications that it was composed with Manasseh's situation, as described in 2 Chron. 33: 12 f., in view. In some early Greek Bibles it is found among the biblical *canticles appended to the Psalter, and its use in the early Christian Church is attested by its embodiment in the *Didascalia and the *Apostolic Constitutions. All that can be said with certainty about its date is that it must be earlier than that of the Didascalia (early 3rd cent.). It is a matter of dispute whether it was originally written in a Semitic language (Hebrew, Aramaic, or Syriac) or in Greek. In printed *Vulgates, since the time of *Clement VIII (1592–1605) it has formed an appendix. In the E. Church it is recited in Great *Compline during Lent and on the eves of certain great feasts.

The numerous edns. of the LXX text incl. H. B. *Swete, The Old Testament in Greek, 3 (1894), pp. 802–4. Syriac texts ed. W. Baars and H. Schneider, The Old Testament in Syriac according to the Peshitta Version, pt. 4, fasc. 6 (Leiden, 1972), separate pagination. H. E. *Ryle in R. H. *Charles (ed.), The Apocrypha and Pseudepigrapha of the Old Testament, 1 (1913), pp. 612–19; J. H. Charlesworth in id. (ed.), The Old Testament Pseudepigrapha, 2 (1985), pp. 625–37, both with Eng. tr. H. Volz, 'Zur Überlieferung des Gebetes Manasse', ZKG 70 (1959), pp. 293–307, with refs. H. Schneider, 'Der Vulgata-Text der Oratio Manasse', Biblische Zeitschrift, NF 4 (1960), pp. 277–82. A.-M. Denis, Introduction aux pseudépigraphes grecs d'Ancien Testament (Studia in Veteris Testamenti Pseudepigrapha, 1; Leiden, 1970), pp. 177–81. E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 3 (pt. 2; Edinburgh, 1987), pp. 730–3. F. Prat, SJ, in Dict. Bibl. 4 (1908), cols. 654–83, s.v. 'Manassé (Prière de)'; J. B. Frey, ibid., Suppl. 3 (1928), cols. 442–5, s.v. 'Apocryphes de l'Ancien Testament 13'. See also bibl. to APOCRYPHA.

Mandaeans (also known as Nasoreans). A *Gnostic sect which survives as a small community in S. Iraq and SW Iran. Their origins may go back to a group practising repeated baptisms, living to the east of the R. *Jordan in the 1st and 2nd cent. AD. Their extant writings, the chief of which is the Ginza or 'Treasure', mostly date from the 7th or 8th cent. or later, though some of their hymns must be considerably older, since the *Manichaean Psalm Book (3rd–4th cent.) in places makes use of them. Their doctrines are based on a dualistic opposition between the World of Light and the World of Darkness. They teach that man's soul, unwillingly imprisoned in the body and persecuted by demons, will finally be freed by the redeemer, Manda de Hayyê, the personified 'Knowledge of Life' (sometimes also called Hibel, or Enoš Uthra), who was himself once on earth and defeated the powers of darkness, and hence can guide souls through the heavenly spheres. Their most important rituals are various kinds of baptismal rites (one initiatory, the others repeated regularly), and the masiqta, a rite to assist the souls of the departed to ascend to the World of Light. Although Mandaean texts are hostile to Judaism and Christianity, many elements appear to have been derived from these sources. As St *John the Baptist plays a large part in some Mandaean writings (esp. those dating from the Islamic period), the Christian missionaries who first came across them in the 16th cent. mistakenly called them 'Christians of St John'.

Modern crit. edns. of several Mandaean texts by M. Lidzbarski, incl. Das Johannesbuch der Mandäer (2 parts, Giessen, 1905–15), Mandäische Liturgien (Abh. (Gött.), 17, Heft 1; 1920), and Ginza, der Schatz oder das grosse Buch der Mandäer (Quellen der Religionsgeschichte, 13; 1925 [Ger. tr.]). Collection of extracts in Eng. tr., with useful introd. by K. Rudolf, in W. Foerster, Gnosis, Eng. tr. ed. R. McL. Wilson, 2 (Oxford, 1974), pp. 123–319. Eng. tr., with notes, of The Canonical Prayerbook of the Mandaeans by E. S. Drower (Leiden, 1959). Id., The Mandaeans of Iraq and Iran: Their Cults, Customs, Magic, Legends, and Folklore (1937); id., The Secret of Adam: A Study of Nasoraean Gnosis (Oxford, 1960). K. Rudolph, Die Mandäer (Forschungen zur Religion und Literatur des Alten und Neuen Testaments, NF 56–7; Göttingen, 1960–1). G. Widengren (ed.), Der Mandäismus (Weg der Forschung, 167; 1982). E. Segelberg, Maṣbūtā: Studies in the Ritual of the Mandaean Baptism (Uppsala, 1958). On the language, T. Nöldeke, Mandäische Grammatik (1875); E. S. Drower and R. Macuch, A Mandaic Dictionary (Oxford, 1963); R. Macuch, Handbook of Classical and Modern Mandaic (Berlin, 1965); id., Zur Sprache und Literatur der Mandäer (1976). S. A. Pallis, Essay on Mandaean Bibliography, 1560–1930 (London and Copenhagen, 1933). J. Schmitt in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 5 (1957), cols. 758–88, s.v. 'Mandéisme', with bibl.

Mande, Hendrik (*c.*1360–1431), one of the *Brethren of the Common Life. He came under the influence of G. *Groote and *Florentius Radewijns and in 1395 entered the monastery at *Windesheim, where he was subject to visionary experiences. Here he wrote in Flemish 11 or 12 mystical tracts which embodied and developed many of J. van *Ruysbroeck's ideas.

Modern edn. of three of his tracts by T. Mertens: Een minnentlike claege (Veröffentlichungen des Instituts für Niederländische Philologie der Universität zu Köln, 6; 1984); Een spiegel der waerheit (ibid. 7; 1984); Vanden licht der waerheit (ibid. 8; 1984). The chief source is Jan *Busch, Chronicon Windeshemense (ed. K. Grube, Halle, 1886), pp. 122–35. G. Visser, Hendrik Mande: Bijdrage tot de Kennis der Noord-Nederlandsche Mystiek (The Hague, 1899; with repr. of 5 of Mande's writings). T. F. C. Mertens, Hendrik Mande (? 1431): Tekshistorische en literairhistorische studies (Nijmegen thesis, 1986), with summaries in Fr. G. de Baere, SJ, 'Hendrik Mandes Liber de sapida sapientia teruggevonden?', Ons Geestelijk Erf, 63 (1989), pp. 288–95. T. Mertens, 'Hendrik Mande (± 1360–1431). Een geannoteerde bibliografie van de werken over hem en van de uitgaven van zijn geschriften', ibid. 52 (1978), pp. 363–96. B. Spaapen in Dict. Sp. 7 (pt. 1; 1969), cols. 222–5, s.v. 'Henri (32) Mande'.

mandyas (Gk. μανδύας). A form of cloak worn by monks and bishops in the E. Church. The ordinary monastic mandyas is black; bishops and abbots wear a larger mandyas, usually of purple, with a train extending behind.

Mani (or Manes) and Manichaeism. It is impossible to state in brief compass the facts relating to the life of Mani (or, acc. to the usual W. form of his name, 'Manichaeus'), the founder of Manichaeism, as the relatively late sources of his life are mutually contradictory in their details. The chief sources are: (1) the writings of certain of the Church Fathers, notably St *Ephraem Syrus, *Titus of Bostra, *Serapion of Thmuis, and esp. St *Augustine of Hippo (who was himself a Manichee for nine years before his conversion); (2) a report of a reputed dialogue between Mani and a bishop, Archelaus, the so-called 'Acta Archelai', which was issued by one Hegemonius; (3) references in various medieval Muslim historians who came across Manichaeism in Babylonia, notably Al-Biruni; (4) a collection of Manichaean documents, discovered in 1904–5 at Turfan and elsewhere in Chinese Turkestan, and published by F. W. K. Müller and others; (5) another collection of Manichaean documents of the 3rd and 4th cents. found in Egypt in 1930 and published by C. Schmidt, H. J. Polotsky, and others, which, if not from Mani himself, embody the teaching of his earliest disciples; and (6) a biography of Mani, prob. translated from a Syriac original, more recently discovered in Egypt. This casts a new light on his evolution as a young man, in the environment of a Judaeo-Christian sect, the *Elkesaites.

From our extant sources it would seem that Mani (c.216–276) was born near Seleucia-Ctesiphon, the capital of the Persian Empire; that he began his own special teaching in 240; that opposition from the *Zoroastrians forced him into exile in India, and that he propagated his teaching rapidly by preaching far and wide in the E.; that in 242 he returned to the capital and may have approached Sapor I, who first gave him active support and then attacked him; and that under his second successor, Bahram I, he was put to death by being flayed alive, and his disciples banished.

Mani's system was a radical offshoot of the *Gnostic traditions of E. Persia. Deeply influenced by St *Paul (Manichaeism struck Christians as a 'Pauline heresy'), Mani transformed the cramped, ritualist views of the Judaeo-Christian sect in which he had been brought up into a coherent body of Gnostic dogma, uncompromisingly dualistic, consequential, and deeply conscious of having 'unveiled' truths of universal validity. It was based on a supposed primeval conflict between light and darkness. It taught that the object of the practice of religion was to release the particles of light which Satan had stolen from the world of Light and imprisoned in man's brain and that Jesus, Buddha, the Prophets, and Mani had been sent to help in this task. For the Manichaean believer, the whole physical universe was mobilized to create this release. The Gnostic myth of salvation has seldom been presented on so grandiose a cosmic scale, worked out in rigorous detail; every phase of the movements of the sun, moon, and stars was a stage in the deliverance of the believer's soul, and every ritual act of the individual had resonance among the heavenly bodies.

To achieve this release, severe asceticism, including vegetarianism, was practised. There existed in the sect a hierarchy of grades professing different standards of austerity; the 'Elect' were supported by the 'Hearers' in their determined missionary endeavours and in an otherworldly state of perfection. The Manichaeans' enemies attributed to them many abominable practices, but St Augustine, with his exceptional opportunities for being well informed, nowhere criticized their morals.

The sect spread rapidly. It appears to have been established in Egypt before the end of the 3rd cent., and at Rome early in the 4th. In the later 4th cent. Manichaeans were numerous in Africa. How far the sect directly influenced such heretics as the *Albigensians, *Bogomils, and *Paulicians is disputed; for some similarities of practice would account for the charges of 'Manichaeism' laid against them. On the other hand, the Turfan fragments attest its survival in Chinese Turkestan down to the 10th cent.; and, as the 'Doctrine of Light', it still flourished in 13th-cent. Fukien.

Convenient collection of texts ed. A. Adam, Texte zum Manichäismus (Kleine Texte für Vorlesungen und Übungen, 175; 1954; enlarged edn., 1969); fuller collection of texts, in Ger. tr., by J. P. Asmussen and A. Böhlig, Die Gnosis [ed. W. Förster], 3: Der Manichäismus (Zurich, 1980). The texts discovered in Egypt in 1930, which were reported in 1933, were shared mainly between the *Chester Beatty Collection and the Berlin Academy; those in the former collection have been ed. by H. J. Polotsky, Manichäische Homilien (Stuttgart, 1934) and C. R. C. Allberry, A Manichaean Psalm-Book, pt. 2 (ibid., 1938), and those in the latter by C. Schmidt and others, Kephalaia, 1. Hälfte (ibid., 1940), all with introds. by H. Ibscher. On the recently recovered Life of Mani, see A. Henrichs and L. Koenen, 'Ein griechischer Mani-Codex (P. Colon. inv. nr. 4780)', Zeitschrift für Papyrologie und Epigraphik, 5 (1970), pp. 97–216 (the first report). It is now ed., with comm., by idd., ibid. 19 (1975), pp. 1–85 (pp. 1–72.7 of the codex); 32 (1978), pp. 87–199 (pp. 72. 8–99. 9 of the codex); 44 (1981), pp. 201–318 (pp. 99. 10–120 of the codex); and 48 (1982), pp. 1–59 (pp. 121–92 of the codex). Pages 1–99.8 of the codex is repr., with Eng. tr., by R. Cameron and A. J. Dewey, The Cologne Mani Codex (Society of Biblical Literature, Texts and Translations, 15; Missoula, Mont., 1979). Crit. edn., with Ger. tr., by L. Koenen and C. Römer (Papyrologica Coloniensia, 14; Opladen, 1988). The first crit. study of Manichaeism was I. de Beausobre, Histoire critique de Manichée et du manichéisme (2 vols., Amsterdam, 1734–9). Important later works include F. C. *Baur, Das manichäische Religionssystem (1831); G. Flügel, Mani, seine Lehre, seine Schriften (1862); F. Cumont and M. A. Kugener, Recherches sur le manichéisme (2 vols., 1908–12); P. Alfaric, Les Écritures manichéennes (2 vols., 1918–19). F. C. *Burkitt, The Religion of the Manichees (Donnellan Lectures for 1924; 1925); H. C. Puech, Le Manichéisme (1949); G. Widengren, Mani und der Manichäismus (Urban-Bücher, 57; Stuttgart [1961]; Eng. tr. 1965); F. Decret, Aspects du manichéisme dans l'Afrique romaine: Les controverses de Fortunatus, Faustus et Felix avec Saint Augustin (Études Augustiniennes, 1970); id., L'Afrique Manichéenne (IV^e–V^e siècles): Étude historique et doctrinale (2 vols., ibid., 1978). There is also a more popular study by id., Mani et la tradition manichéenne (Maîtres spirituels, 1974). E. Rose, Die manichäische Christologie (Studies in Oriental Religions, 5; Wiesbaden, 1979). S. N. C. Lieu, Manichaeism in the Later Roman Empire and Medieval China (Manchester [1985]). P. Brown, 'The Diffusion of Manichaeism in the Roman Empire', Journal of Roman Studies, 59 (1969), pp. 92–103.

maniple. A strip of silk, two to four inches wide and a little over a yard in length, sometimes worn over the left arm by the ministers at Mass. In origin it was a handkerchief carried, as pagan and Christian monuments attest, in the left hand. It was first used liturgically in Rome, but in the 6th cent. is found in *Ravenna, and by the 9th cent. was in use all over Europe. In the Middle Ages it was sometimes worn by all clerks, but in post-Tridentine times it came to be confined to those who had attained at least the rank of *subdeacon. Its colour accords with that of the liturgical season and until recently it usually carried three crosses. The use of the maniple was made optional on 3 May 1967, and it is not mentioned in the 1969 Ordo Missae.

Braun, LG, pp. 515–61. J. H. Crehan, SJ, 'The Bishop's Maniple', Downside Review, 84 (1966), pp. 280–4. J. Braun, SJ, in CE 9 (1910), pp. 601 f.

manna. The food miraculously provided for the *Israelites on their pilgrimage through the wilderness from Egypt to the *Holy Land (Exod. 16). In Exod. 16: 15 the word 'manna' is explained as deriving from the Israelites' question 'What is it?' (Heb. מָן הוּא, man hu). It was a white substance which fell along with the dew, and was collected every morning except on the *Sabbath, for which an additional portion was gathered on the previous day. In Jn. 6 Christ speaks of Himself as the True Bread of life, apparently in contrast to the manna given in the wilderness, but in 1 Cor. 10: 3 and elsewhere the manna is regarded as a type of the Christian Eucharist.

P. Borgen, Bread from Heaven: An Exegetical Study of the Concept of Manna in the Gospel of John and the Writings of Philo (Supplement to Novum Testamentum, 10; 1965). See also comm. on EXODUS and JOHN, GOSPEL OF ST, cited s.v.

Manners-Sutton, Charles (1755–1828), Abp. of *Canterbury. A grandson of the third Duke of Rutland, he was educated at Emmanuel College, Cambridge. In 1791 he became Dean of *Peterborough and in 1792 Bp. of *Norwich. In 1794 he was appointed Dean of *Windsor *in commendam and lived on intimate terms with the family of George III. In 1805 he became Abp. of Canterbury. A *High Churchman of the old school, he was dignified, gracious, and highly respected. He was opposed to RC emancipation, but favoured concessions to dissenters. He gave active support to many initiatives of the '*Hackney Phalanx', presiding over the formation of the *National Society (for the education of the poor) in 1811, and using his influence in securing the foundation of an Anglican episcopate in *India.

A. W. Rowden, The Primates of the First Four Georges (1916), pp. 380–426. J. H. Overton in DNB 36 (1893), pp. 57 f.

Manning, Henry Edward (1808–92), Abp. of *Westminster. The youngest son of William Manning, MP, he was educated at Harrow and Balliol College, Oxford. His early ambition was for a parliamentary career, but his father's bankruptcy compelled him to accept a clerkship in the Colonial Office. In 1832 he was elected to a fellowship at Merton College, and in the same year he returned to Oxford and was ordained deacon. In Jan. 1833 he went as curate to John Sargent, rector of Lavington, whom he succeeded in May, and whose daughter Caroline (d. 1837) he married in Nov. In 1841 he became Archdeacon of *Chichester. Manning, who had begun life as an Evangelical, now gradually swung round to the *Tractarian side. He contributed no. 78 to the Tracts for the Times, and after J. H. *Newman's secession (1845) he was looked on as one of the leaders of the *Oxford Movement. He had disapproved, however, of the contents of Tract 90, and on 5 Nov. 1843 preached a strongly anti-Papal sermon before the University. The *Gorham Judgement destroyed his faith in Anglicanism and in 1851 he was received into the RC Church. Two months later he was (re-)ordained priest by N. *Wiseman, and after studying for two years at Rome, he founded the Congregation of the Oblates of St *Charles Borromeo, based in Bayswater, primarily to undertake mission work for the poor of London. He was made Provost of the Westminster Metropolitan Chapter in 1857. In 1865 he succeeded Wiseman as Abp. of Westminster, on the personal appointment of *Pius IX. At the First *Vatican Council (1869–70) he was a staunch supporter of Papal *Infallibility, taking a vow to do his utmost to secure its promulgation. His bitter hostility to the admission of RCs to the universities and other differences completely alienated him from Newman after 1866. After 1875, when he was made a cardinal, he was prominent in social work of all kinds, and in 1889 mediated successfully in the London Dock Strike. His body was buried in Kensal Green Cemetery, but was later brought back to Westminster Cathedral, which he had founded.

Official Life by E. S. Purcell (2 vols., London, 1896; cynical, also inaccurate). In a similar vein L. Strachey, Eminent Victorians (1918), pp. 3–115 ('Cardinal Manning'). Other Lives by A. W. Hutton (London, 1892, with list of Manning's works; rev. edn., 'English Leaders of Religion', 1894) S. Leslie (ibid., 1921), and R. Gray (London, 1985). J. Fitzsimons (ed.), Manning: Anglican and Catholic (1951). V. A. McClelland, Cardinal Manning: His Public Life and Influence 1865–1892 (1962). J. E. C. Bodley, Cardinal Manning [and other Essays] (1912), pp. 1–65. D. [H.] Newsome, The Parting of Friends: A Study of the Wilberforces and Henry Manning (1966); id., The Convert Cardinals: John Henry Newman and Henry Edward Manning (1993). J. M. Rigg in DNB 36 (1893), pp. 62–8; A. W. Hutton in EB (11th edn.), 17 (1911), pp. 589–91.

manse. There are three principal meanings:

(1) The dwelling-house of a nonconformist minister.

(2) In *Scotland, also the dwelling-house of a minister of the Church of Scotland, he having right to occupy the house during his incumbency. The manse is available for the minister for use in the fulfilment of his ministerial functions and duties and for the accommodation of his family. It is the obligation of the Financial Board of the Congregation concerned to meet the costs of maintenance and taxes payable in connection with the manse. In the old Church of Scotland, prior to 1925, it was usually the legal obligation of the *heritors of the Parish to provide the manse in country areas but, in consequence of the Church of Scotland (Property and Endowment) Act 1925, the rights of property in such manses have been transferred to the Church of Scotland General Trustees.

(3) In English ecclesiastical law, the parsonage house and *glebe belonging to a *benefice, taken together.

Mansel, Henry Longueville (1820–71), Anglican divine. He was successively scholar (1839) and tutor (1844) of St John's College, Oxford. In 1859 he became the first Waynflete professor of moral and metaphysical philosophy at Oxford, in 1866 (somewhat incongruously) Regius professor of ecclesiastical history, and in 1868 Dean of *St Paul's. He delivered a course of *Bampton Lectures in 1858 on The Limits of Religious Thought, in which he argued that the limitations of the human intellect meant that the truths of religion are not speculative but regulative. God is in Himself unknowable and human knowledge of the nature of God is acquired from supernatural revelation alone. His contentions, which had been reached esp. from study of the doctrines of Sir William Hamilton, provoked much hostile criticism, notably from F. D. *Maurice and J. S. Mill. Mansel's other writings include Artis Logicae Rudimenta (1849), a widely used compendium of logic based on H. *Aldrich's manual; The Limits of Demonstrative Science (1853); the article 'Metaphysics' in the 8th edition of the Encyclopaedia Britannica (1857); and a set of lectures on the Gnostic Heresies (1875; issued by J. B. *Lightfoot). His witty pen was often employed in matters of domestic controversy in the university, e.g. Phrontisterion, or, Oxford in the 19th Century (1852), a satire on the University Commission of 1850.

A collection of Mansel's Letters, Lectures and Reviews, including the Phrontisterion, ed. H. W. Chandler (London, 1873). The Phrontisterion was repr. in Three Oxford Ironies, ed. G. Gordon (London, 1927), pp. 77–102, with introd., pp. 17–23. J. W. *Burgon, The Lives of Twelve Good Men, 2 (1888), pp. 149–237. W. R. Matthews, The Religious Philosophy of Dean Mansel (Friends of Dr Williams's Library, 10th Lecture; 1956). K. D. Freeman, The Role of Reason in Religion: A Study of Henry Mansel (The Hague, 1969). D. Cupitt, 'What was Mansel trying to do?', JTS NS 22 (1971), pp. 544–7, with refs. to other recent works; D. W. Dockrill, 'The Doctrine of Regulative Truth and Mansel's Intentions', ibid. 25 (1974), pp. 453–65. L. Stephen in DNB 36 (1893), pp. 81–3.

Mansi, Giovanni Domenico (1692–1769), canonist and Abp. of Lucca. A native of Lucca, where he spent most of his life, he was professed a Clerk Regular of the Mother of God in 1710 and in 1765 was elected Abp. of Lucca. In 1724 he published Tractatus de Casibus et Censuris Reservatis, his only considerable original work. But he issued a vast series of publications in which his own part usually did not go beyond annotations (some 90 folio vols. have Mansi's name on their title-pages). The most celebrated was his edition of the Councils. In its original shape it was designed as a supplement to N. Coleti's collection (1728–33) and issued in 6 vols. (1748–52). Its success encouraged Mansi to produce his well-known 'Amplissima', the Sacrorum Conciliorum Nova et Amplissima Collectio (31 vols., 1759–98). It goes down to the Council of *Florence, but Mansi himself supervised only the first 14 vols. Its only real merit is its completeness. The editing is poor and uncritical and the older editions are often to be preferred. A continuation under the editorship of L. Petit, AA, and J. B. Martin (26 vols., 1901–27) takes the collection to the First *Vatican Council. Among earlier scholars whose writings (in whole or part) Mansi re-edited were C. *Baronius (1738–56), J. A. *Fabricius (1754), *Pius II (Aeneas Silvius Piccolomini, 1755), and É. *Baluze (1761).

H. *Quentin, OSB, J. D. Mansi et les grandes collections conciliaires (1900). Hefele and Leclercq, 1 (pt. 1; 1907), pp. 111–14. H. Chadwick in J. Cannon and others (eds.), The Blackwell Dictionary of Historians (1988), pp. 267 f.

Mant, Richard (1776–1848), Bp. of Down, Connor, and Dromore. Educated at Winchester and Trinity College, Oxford, he was elected a Fellow of Oriel College in 1798 and ordained deacon in 1802. After holding several livings, he was appointed Bp. of Killaloe and Kilfenoragh in 1820 and of Down and Connor in 1823 (with Dromore from 1842). His best-known work, which he prepared with G. D'Oyly (d. 1846), was an edition of the Bible with notes selected from Anglican divines (1814). His other writings include an annotated Book of Common Prayer (1820) and, the fruit of wide research, a History of the Church of Ireland (1840). He was also the author of 'Bright the vision that delighted' and other well-known hymns, as well as of much indifferent poetry.

Memoirs by [E.] Berens (London, 1849) and Walter Bishop Mant (Dublin, 1857). Detailed list of his pub. works in H. Cotton (ed.), Fasti Ecclesiae Hibernicae, 3 (Dublin, 1849), pp. 213–17. A. Gordon in DNB 36 (1893), pp. 96–8.

Mantegna, Andrea (1431–1506), Italian painter. Adopted as a child by the painter Francesco Squarcione, he received an artistic education from his early youth, and in 1452 he married the daughter of Jacopono Bellini. His series of fresco paintings representing the Histories of St James and St Christopher (1448–57) in the church of the Eremitani at Padua (almost completely destroyed by bombing in March 1944) established his reputation. A second series of frescoes painted in the Palazzo Ducale (Camera degli Sposi), Mantua, finished in 1474, treats of scenes from the Life of Marquess Lodovico Gonzaga, and a third sequence, painted in tempera on canvas, now at Hampton Court, depicts the Triumphs of Caesar (1484–92). Towards the end of his life he executed paintings (Parnassus, Pallas expelling the Vices, and Comus, all now in the Louvre) for the Studiolo of Isabella d'Este at Mantua. A distinct line of development is noticeable in his altar-pieces. His earliest works follow the traditional side-by-side grouping of saints' figures, e.g. St Luke's Altar (1453–5) of St Giustina's at Padua, now in the Brera at Milan; but his later altar-pieces, e.g. that of San Zeno at Venice (1457–9), the triptych of the Adoration of the Magi (*c.*1465), the Madonna della Vittoria (1495–6, Louvre), and the Madonna and Child in Glory with SS John the Baptist, Gregory the Great, Benedict, and Jerome (1496–7, Milan, Museo del Castello Sforzesco), show considerable originality in composition. He also used in his compositions half-length figures (e.g. The Adoration of the Magi, in the J. Paul Getty Museum, Malibu). One of his last works, the famous Dead Christ in the Brera at Milan, is remarkable for its virtuosity in foreshortening the body. Mantegna's copper engravings, which are among the earliest Italian specimens of this technique, are remarkable for the austerity of their style.

E. Tietze-Conrat, Mantegna. Paintings: Drawings: Engravings (1955); R. Lightbown, Mantegna (Oxford, 1986), with a complete catalogue of his paintings, drawings, and prints, and select bibl.; J. Martineau (ed.), Andrea Mantegna (London, 1992). P. Kristeller, Andrea Mantegna (Berlin and Leipzig, 1902; Eng. tr., 1901), with plates and orig. docs. G. Fiocco, L'arte di Andrea Mantegna (Bologna, 1927). G. Paccagnini, Andrea Mantegna: Catalogo della Mostra (Venice, 1961). E. Camesasca, Mantegna (Milan, 1964). A. Martindale, The Triumphs of Caesar by Andrea Mantegna . . . at Hampton Court [1979].

mantelletta. In the W. Church a short cloak open in front and reaching to the knees which, since 1969, has been reserved to prelates of the Roman *Curia and Protonotaries supra numerum.

The principal legislation governing the dress of senior members of the RC hierarchy is contained in the Instruction 'Ut sive sollicite' issued by the Papal Secretariate of State, 31 Mar. 1969, printed in AAS 61 (1969), pp. 334–40. J. Braun, SJ, in CE 9 (1910), p. 611, s.v.; P. Siffrin, OSB, in EC 7 (1951), cols. 1985 f., s.v.

mantellone. A purple-coloured cloak of silk or wool, until 1969 worn by certain lesser prelates of the Papal court. It was fastened at the neck, reached to the ground, and had slits for the arms.

G. Felici in EC 7 (1951), cols. 1986 f., s.v. T. Ortolan in DTC 3 (1908), col. 1972, s.v. 'Cour romaine'. See also bibl. to previous entry.

mantum. A red cloak of the Pope which from the 11th to the 14th cents. played an important part in the Papal elections, since the investiture with it (the so-called immantatio) expressed the transference to the Pope of his right to govern the Church.

Manual Acts. The rubrics in the 1662 BCP require the celebrant of Holy Communion at the consecration to take the paten into his hands, to break the bread, lay his hand upon it, and to perform corresponding acts at the consecration of the wine. In 1549 the rubrics were less detailed, while from 1552 to 1662 they were omitted altogether, though some of the traditional ceremonies at the consecration no doubt continued. In the *Ridsdale case (1875–7) the Privy Council held that the rubric at the head of the Prayer of Consecration requiring the priest to break the bread 'before the people' meant that he must not intentionally so stand at the consecration as to prevent the congregation from seeing the manual acts. This decision was reaffirmed in substance in the *Lincoln Judgement (q.v.). It is now rarely observed except among extreme Evangelicals. The problem no longer arises where the *westward position has been adopted. See also 'NORTH END'.

V. Staley, The Manual Acts (*Alcuin Club Prayer Book Revision Pamphlets, 4; 1913).

Manuale (Lat., 'a book of handy size'). In the Middle Ages the usual name for the book containing the forms prescribed to the parish priest for the administration of the sacraments. It now commonly goes by the name of the *'Rituale' (q.v.).

manuscripts of the Bible. Writing in the ancient world was usually either on papyrus (made from the stems of the papyrus plant which once flourished in the marshes of the Nile; see PAPYROLOGY) or on specially prepared skins of animals ('parchment' or 'vellum'). For short communications, such as a letter or a business contract, a single sheet would be sufficient; but for longer items, such as a philosophical treatise or most Books of the Bible, a number of sheets would be joined together to form either a roll or a 'codex' (in which the sheets were first folded in quires and then sewn together as in a modern book).

The earliest part of the OT about the writing of which we have any definite information is the Book of *Jeremiah; this is clearly stated to have been written on a roll both in its first edition (Jer. 36: 2, 4, 6, etc.) and its second (Jer. 36: 32), though whether a papyrus or a parchment roll is not stated. It seems that the roll was the normal form of book used among the Jews at the time (cf. Ezek. 2: 9, 3: 3) and it continued so until well into the Christian era. The 'book' handed to the Lord in the synagogue at Nazareth will have been a roll because he is said to have 'opened' (lit. 'unrolled') it, and, after reading, rolled it up again before giving it back to the attendant (Lk. 4. 17–20). The evidence of the *Dead Sea Scrolls proves that both parchment and papyrus were used, but that parchment was preferred, particularly for biblical Books; especially noteworthy here is the celebrated Isaiah roll (DS. Isa^a) found in Qumran Cave 1, which, apart from a few small lacunae, has been preserved complete, and is dated in either the 1st or the 2nd cent. BC. Some time later the Jews adopted the codex for private use, the earliest surviving examples being the British Library Pentateuch (c. AD 850), the Cairo Prophets (AD 895), and the Leningrad Codex of the whole OT (AD 1008), though for reading in synagogue they have remained faithful to the parchment roll to the present day.

The first Greek translations of the OT Books are likely to have been written on papyrus, since they seem to have been made in Egypt, the home of papyrus. The only certain survivals from the pre-Christian period are fragments from two papyrus rolls (Pap. Rylands Gr. 458 and Pap. Fouad 266), both containing portions of Deuteronomy and both dated 2nd–1st cent. BC. From c. AD 100 come the fragments of Genesis now at Yale (Pap. Yale 1); these are thought to be Christian in origin and to have been part of a codex, not a roll. In any case, the many Christian biblical fragments datable in the 2nd and 3rd cents. AD, whether of OT or NT Books, are without exception all from codices: outstanding in this group are those in the *Chester Beatty collection. During the 4th cent. there was a tendency for parchment to replace papyrus, at least for MSS written for public reading in church. Acc. to *Eusebius (Vit. Const. 4. 36), the Emp. *Constantine gave instructions c. AD 330 for the preparation of 'fifty copies of the sacred scriptures... to be written on fine parchment ... by professional scribes' for the new churches which he was building in *Constantinople. There is no reason to suppose that any of these 50 copies has survived, but a very good idea of what they must have been like can be gained from the appearance of the *Codex Sinaiticus or the *Codex Vaticanus, both of the 4th cent. Such MSS might contain the whole Bible or only a part of it; their text is arranged in columns (two, three, or even four, to a page); and they were called 'uncials' because written in the formal *uncial script, roughly equivalent to our 'capitals'. About the beginning of the 9th cent. a new style of script was introduced (known as 'minuscule'; see CURSIVE SCRIPT); the use of this script made it possible to accommodate the whole of the NT in one convenient volume. There are altogether some six or seven thousand Greek MSS of different parts of the Bible accessible today (some as late as the 17th cent. and written on paper); the great majority of them are minuscules.

The oldest known Latin biblical MS is the 4th-cent. Codex Vercellensis; this is a sumptuous volume, written in uncial with silver ink on purple parchment, and contains an almost complete *Old Latin text of the Gospels. Even more substantial is the Old Latin 'Lyons Heptateuch' (Codex Lugdunensis, 5th–6th cent.), which contains about a third of Genesis, half of Exodus, three-quarters of Leviticus, and the whole of Numbers, Deuteronomy, Joshua and Judges, except the last chapter and a half of Judges. Of St Jerome's *Vulgate, the most ancient relic is the fragmentary 5th-cent. Codex Sangallensis of the Gospels; the most ancient complete Bible is the *Codex Amiatinus, written in Northumberland at the very end of the 7th cent. All these are parchment codices, and the script of all of them is uncial. As in the East, minuscule types of script were developed, the most influential being that associated with the ecclesiastical reforms of *Charlemagne and known as 'Carolingian minuscule' (see CAROLINGIAN SCHOOLS); this in turn provided the basis for yet further developments until the invention of printing. The extant Latin MSS are even more numerous than their Greek counterparts (well over 8,000). One of them is said to be the largest book in the world, Codex Gigas, written in Bohemia in the 13th cent. and now at Stockholm, which is *c.*20 inches wide and over 36 inches high and contains not only the Bible but a variety of other works as well. Also in the 13th cent. the use of very thin parchment and small writing made it possible to accommodate the text of the whole Bible within single conveniently sized volumes which are termed 'pocket Bibles'.

Of the *Old Syriac version only two MSS are known (the 'Curetonian' and the 'Sinaitic'), both of the Gospels and both incomplete; but of the *Peshitta and the later *Syriac versions there are many, dating from the 5th cent. onwards. Among the MSS and fragments in the various *Coptic dialects several have been dated as early as the 4th cent. (e.g. the sub-Akhmimic papyrus of St John). Of the *Armenian version(s) well over a thousand MSS are known to exist; of the *Gothic, only the remains of some half a dozen of the Gospels and Pauline Epistles in the NT and in the OT only fragments of Gen. 5, Ps. 52: 2–3, and Neh. 5–7. A mid-10th-cent. translation of the Gospels into West Saxon is preserved in four MSS of the 11th and two of the 12th cents.

Finally, there are 'bilingual' MSS: these are of three kinds. Either the secondary text is written immediately above the primary text, or the two texts are copied in two parallel columns on the same page, or they are arranged to face one another on opposite pages. The first ('interlinear') arrangement is found, e.g., in the Codex Bœrnerianus of the Pauline Epistles, where the Latin is a more or less word-for-word equivalent of the Greek underneath; in the Codex Claromontanus (also of the Paulines) the Greek and Latin are in parallel columns; and in the *Codex Bezae they are on opposite pages.

For the use of biblical MSS in preparing a text, see TEXTUAL CRITICISM.

F. G. Kenyon, Our Bible and the Ancient Manuscripts (1895; rev. by A. W. Adams, 1958). B. J. Roberts, The Old Testament Text and Versions (Cardiff, 1951); E. Würthwein, Der Text des Alten Testaments: Ein Einführung in die Biblia Hebraica (1952; 4th edn., 1973; Eng. tr., The Text of the Old Testament, Grand Rapids, Mich., 1979, London, 1980). B. M. Metzger, The Early Versions of the New Testament (Oxford, 1977); id., Manuscripts of the Greek Bible (New York, 1981). W. L. Petersen (ed.), Gospel Traditions in the Second Century: Origins, Recensions, Text, and Transmission (Notre Dame, Ind., and London [1989]). T. C. Skeat, 'Early Christian Book Production: Papyri and Manuscripts', in G. W. H. Lampe (ed.), The Cambridge History of the Bible, 2 (Cambridge, 1969), pp. 54–79; C. H. Roberts and T. C. Skeat, The Birth of the Codex (1987). M. Haran, 'Book-Scrolls in Israel in Pre-Exilic Times', Journal of Jewish Studies, 33 (1982), pp. 161–73. K. Aland, Kurzgefasste Liste der griechischen Handschriften des Neuen Testaments (Arbeiten zur Neutestamentlichen Textforschung, 1; 1963); id., Repertorium der griechischen christlichen Papyri, 1: Biblische Papyri (Patristische Texte und Studien, 18; 1976); J. van Haelst, Catalogue des Papyrus littéraires juifs et chrétiens (Paris, 1976), pp. 1–198. C. Van Puyvelde, OSB, and B. Botte, OSB, in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 5 (1957), cols. 793–835, s.v. 'Manuscrits bibliques'. See also bibl. to MASSORETES and individual MSS and subjects referred to above.

maphrian (Syriac mafriano, 'one who bears fruit', i.e. 'a consecrator'). The title of the bishop of the *Syrian Orthodox who holds rank immediately after the Patriarch.

Maran, Prudentius (1683–1762), *Maurist scholar. Born at Sézanne, he entered the *Benedictine Order at Saint-Faron in Meaux, in 1703. Later he went to *Saint-Germain-des-Prés, where he co-operated with A. A. Touttée (1677–1718) and completed his edition of St *Cyril of Jerusalem (1720). In 1734 he was exiled from Saint-Germain-des-Prés on account of his refusal to accept the anti-Jansenist Bull Unigenitus. In 1737 he returned to Paris and spent the rest of his life at the abbey of Blancs-Manteaux. Of his patristic editions his masterpiece was his edition of St *Justin Martyr and the other *Apologists (1742), with learned prolegomena. He also completed the editions of St *Cyprian, begun by É. *Baluze (1726), and of St *Basil, begun by Julien Garnier (1730). His other writings (anon.) include a Dissertation sur les Semi-ariens (1722; in defence of Touttée's edition of St Cyril) and La Divinité de Jésus Christ prouvée contre les Hérétiques et les Déistes (3 vols., 1751).

[R. P. Tassin, OSB,] Histoire littéraire de la congrégation de Saint-Maur (Brussels, 1770), pp. 741–9. J. Daoust in Dictionnaire des Lettres Françaises. Le dix-huitième siècle, 2 (1960), pp. 160 f.; G.-M. Oury, OSB, in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 238 f., both s.v. See also bibl. to MAURISTS.

maranatha. This Aramaic word, which occurs at 1 Cor. 16: 22, was understood by the Christian Fathers as 'The Lord has come', but it is probably more correctly rendered by the imperative 'O Lord, come' (cf. Rev. 22: 20). Its use by St *Paul reflects the strong eschatological hopes of the early Church.

See comm. to 1 Cor. 16: 22 and Didache*, 10. 6 (the only other literary occurrence of the word). J. A. T. *Robinson, 'Traces of a Liturgical Sequence in 1 Cor. 16. 20–24', JTS NS 4 (1953), pp. 38–41; C. F. D. Moule, 'A Reconsideration of the Context of Maranatha', New Testament Studies, 6 (1960), pp. 307–10; B. Botte, OSB, 'Maranatha', in A. M. Dubarle, B. Botte, and others, Noël-Épiphanie: Retour du Christ (Semaine Liturgique de l'Institut Saint-Serge; Lex Orandi, 40; 1967), pp. 25–42; J. A. Emerton, 'Maranatha and Ephphatha', JTS, NS 18 (1967), pp. 427–31, esp. p. 427. K. G. Kuhn in TWNT 4 (1942), pp. 470–5; Eng. tr., 4 (1967), pp. 466–72. G. Schneider in H. Balz and G. Schneider (eds.), Exegetisches Wörterbuch zum Neuen Testament, 2 (1981), cols. 947 f. s.v., with further refs.

Marburg, Colloquy of (1529). The meeting convened by *Philip of Hesse with a view to achieving unity between the *Lutherans and Zwinglians. It met in the castle at Marburg-on-the-Lahn on 1–4 Oct. 1529, with M. *Luther and P. *Melanchthon on the one side, and U. *Zwingli, J. *Oecolampadius, and M. *Bucer on the other. It is usually thought that complete accord was reached on 14 of the 15 'Marburg Articles' drawn up by Luther and that the conference failed solely because of Zwingli's refusal to accept the Lutheran doctrine of the Eucharist (*consubstantiation) contained in the remaining article. Some historians, however, consider that the agreement on the 14 articles was only apparent. Luther revised the Marburg articles shortly after the conference; in this form, as the 'Articles of *Schwabach', they were the first Lutheran credal statement and a precursor of the *Augsburg Confession of 1530.

Text in H. Heppe (ed.), Die fünfzehn Marburger Artikel vom 3. Oktober 1529 nach dem wieder aufgefundenen Autographen der Reformatoren als Facsimile veröffentlicht (Cassel, 1847; 2nd edn., 1854). 'Relatio Rodolphi Collini de Colloquio Marburgensi', in U. Zwingli's Opera, ed. M. Schuler and J. Schulthess, 4 (Zurich, 1841), pp. 173–82, mostly repr. in Kidd, no. 109, pp. 247–54. An account of the proceedings by the Strasbourg theologian Caspar Hedio, with a different text of the Marburg Articles, is pr. in M. Bucer's Opera Omnia, 1st ser., Deutsche Schriften, 4, ed. R. Stupperich (Gütersloh, 1975), pp. 323–64. G. May (ed.), Das Marburger Religionsgespräch 1529 (Texte zur Kirchen- und Theologiegeschichte, 13; Gütersloh [1970]). They are also pr. in a way which shows their relationship to the Augsburg Confession in Die Bekenntnisschriften der evangelisch-lutherischen Kirche herausgegeben im Gedenkjahr der Augsburgischen Konfession 1930 (10th edn., Göttingen, 1986), pp. 52–83d. W. Köhler, Das Marburger Religionsgespräch 1529: Versuch einer Rekonstruktion (Schriften des Vereins für Reformationsgeschichte, no. 148; 1929). S. Hausammann, 'Die Marburger Artikel—eine echte Konkordie?', ZKG 77 (1966), pp. 288–321. Schottenloher, 4 (1938), pp. 533 f. (nos. 41337a–62), and 7 (1966), p. 463 (nos. 63967 f.). G. May in TRE 22 (1992), pp. 75–9, s.v. 'Marburger Religionsgespräch'.

Marburg, University of. Founded by *Philip, Landgraf of Hesse, in 1527, it was the first Protestant university established in Europe. Its theological faculty, esp. since the middle of the 19th cent., has been famous through its long line of distinguished professors (including W. *Herrmann, K. *Budde, A. *Harnack, J. *Weiss, C. Mirbt, R. *Otto, F. *Heiler, R. *Bultmann). The university was also the centre of an influential philosophical school (the 'Marburg School'), which on Neo-Kantian principles conceived of religion as purely immanental. The chief representatives of this school were H. Cohen, P. Natorp, E. Cassirer, and (in his first phase) N. Hartmann.

Die Philipps-Universität zu Marburg, 1527–1927: Fünf Kapitel aus der Geschichte der Universität Marburg, 1527–1866, von H. Hermelink und S. A. Kaehler; Die Universität Marburg seit 1866 in Einzeldarstellungen (Marburg, 1927). F. Gundlach (ed.), Die akademischen Lehrer der Philipps-Universität in Marburg von 1527 bis 1910 (Veröffentlichungen der Historischen Kommission für Hessen und Waldeck, no. 15; Marburg, 1927). I. Schnack (ed.), Marburger Gelehrte in der ersten Hälfte des 20. Jahrhundert (Veröffentlichungen der Historischen Kommission für Hessen, 35; Marburg, 1977). H. Schneider in TRE 22 (1992), pp. 68–75, s.v.

Marca, Pierre de (1594–1662), French canonist. After filling several important civil offices, he was commissioned by the King to publish his dissertations De Concordia Sacerdotii et Imperii (1641). A defence of *Gallican doctrines, it was put on the *Index in the following year. In 1642 he was ordained priest (having been widowed in 1631); but though nominated by the King in 1643 to the bishopric of Conserans, he did not obtain Papal confirmation until 1647. In 1652 he became Abp. of Toulouse and in 1662, shortly before his death, he was appointed Abp. of Paris. A much enlarged edition of the De Concordia was issued in 1663 by É. *Baluze, but this too was put on the Index in 1664.

Early Lives by É. Baluze, in the form of 'Epistola ad Clarissimum et Eruditissimum Virum Samuelem Sorberium', prefixed to his edn. of Marca's Dissertationes de Concordia Sacerdotii et Imperii (Paris, 1663), pp. 1–32; and P. de Forget, prefixed to his collection of Marca's Dissertationes Posthumae (Paris, 1669). F. Gaquère, Pierre de Marca, 1594–1662: Sa vie, ses œuvres, son gallicanisme (1932). J. Carreyre in DTC 9 (pt. 2; 1927), cols. 1987–91; G. Mollat in DDC 6 (1957), cols. 726–9, s.v.

Marcan Hypothesis, the. The theory that St Mark's is the earliest of the four Gospels and that in its presentation of the life of Christ the facts of history are set down with a minimum of disarrangement, interpretation, and embellishment. The hypothesis was first put on a seemingly secure footing in 1835 by K. *Lachmann, who based his case on an analysis of the literary relationship between the three *Synoptic Gospels. It was adopted almost at once by C. H. Weisse (1801–66) and C. G. Wilke (1788–1854) and in the latter part of the 19th cent. became very widely accepted. Later study, though leaving the literary priority of Mark generally unchallenged, has tended to discover a much greater element of theological interpetation in the Gospel. It has also generally discounted the possibility that the author had access to an independent historical framework.

Marcella, St (*c.*325–411), Christian ascetic. Of a noble Roman family, she determined to devote herself, after the early death of her husband, to a life of charitable works, study, and asceticism. Her palace on the Aventine Hill became a centre of Christian influence and St *Jerome once referred to her as 'the glory of the ladies of Rome'. She suffered bodily ill-treatment at the hands of the Goths when they captured Rome in 410 and died from its effects. Feast day, 31 Jan.

Practically all our information is derived from the Epp. of St Jerome, esp. Ep. 127 (J. P. Migne, PL 22. 1087–95). F. Cavallera, St Jérôme: Sa vie et son œuvre, 1. 1 (SSL 1; 1922), pp. 85–9 and 114–19. A. Solignac, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 293–5, s.v.

Marcellina, St (*c.*330–*c.*398), the sister of St *Ambrose. After the death of her father, she assisted her mother in the education of her brother, and was consecrated a virgin by Pope *Liberius in 353. Later she lived at Milan with her brother, who tried to dissuade her from her excessive austerities. St Ambrose dedicated to her his three sermons 'De Virginibus'. Feast day, 17 July.

For Ambrose's three sermons, De Virginibus, see J. P. Migne, PL 16. 187–232. Marcellina was also the recipient of Ambrose's three Epp. 20, 22, and 41 (ibid. 994–1002, 1019–26, and 1115–21), and she is mentioned in his De Excessu Satyri, 33 and 76. A Lat. panegyric, pr. by B. Mombritius, is repr. in AASS, Jul. 4 (1725), pp. 234–8. A. Rimoldi in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 8 (1967), cols. 646–8, s.v.

Marcellus (d. *c.*374), Bp. of Ancyra and a strong supporter of the *Homoousion at the Council of *Nicaea. In 336 he was deposed from his see on the ground of certain statements in his work against the Arian *Asterius. He was restored on the death of *Constantine (337), but *c.*339 again expelled. The W. accepted his orthodoxy at Councils held at Rome *c.*340 and at *Sardica in 343, on the ground that the offending passages were merely conjectures. The E. was more critical of his orthodoxy and here the Nicene party found his support embarrassing. Marcellus taught that in the Unity of the Godhead the Son and the Spirit only emerged as independent entities for the purposes of Creation and Redemption. After the redemptive work is achieved they will be resumed again into the Divine Unity and 'God will be all in all'. The clause in the *Nicene Creed, 'whose Kingdom shall have no end', was inserted to combat his teaching. The Creed which Marcellus embodied in his Ep. to Pope *Julius (in *Epiphanius, Haer. 72) is generally considered a primary witness for the history of the *Old Roman Creed.

Frags. coll. by C. H. G. Rettberg (Göttingen, 1794); crit. edn. by E. Klostermann in Eusebius' Werke, vol. 4 (GCS, 1906; rev. by G. C. Hansen, 1972), pp. 183–215 (129 items). F. *Loofs, 'Die Trinitätslehre von Marcellus von Ancyra', Sb. (Berl.), 1902, pp. 764–81; W. Gericke, Marcell von Ancyra (1940); M. Tetz, 'Zur Theologie des Markell von Ankyra', ZKG 75 (1964), pp. 217–70; 79 (1968), pp. 3–42; 83 (1972), pp. 145–94. G. Feige, Die Lehre Markells von Ankyra in der Darstellung seiner Gegner (Erfurter Theologische Studien, 58; 1991). A. H. B. Logan, 'Marcellus of Ancyra and the Councils of AD 325: Antioch, Ancyra, and Nicaea', JTS NS 43 (1992), pp. 428–46. K. Seibt, Die Theologie des Markell von Ankyra (Arbeiten zur Kirchengeschichte, 59; 1994). CPG 2 (1974), pp. 135–7 (nos. 2800–6). J. Quasten, Patrology, 3 (Utrecht and Westminster, Md., 1960), pp. 197–201; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 289 and 606. M.-D. Chenu, OP, in DTC 9 (pt. 2; 1927), cols. 1993–8, s.v. 'Marcel d'Ancyre'; C. Kannengiesser, SJ, in DPAC 2 (1984), cols. 2089–91, s.v. 'Marcello di Ancira'; Eng. tr. in Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 1 (Cambridge, 1992), p. 552, s.v., with extensive bibl.

Marcian (396–457), the soldier who by his marriage with *Pulcheria, the sister of the Emp. *Theodosius II, became the E. Emperor in 450. His financial reforms made his reign one of considerable prosperity. Theologically his rule was marked by his successful repression of *Monophysitism, Marcian himself attending personally at the sixth session of the Council of *Chalcedon (451) and even resorting to arms to enforce its theological decrees. He stood in good relations with Pope *Leo I (440–61), his correspondence with whom has survived.

E. Stein and J. R. Palanque, Histoire du Bas-Empire, 1 (1959), pp. 311–15 and 351–3; A. H. M. Jones, The Later Roman Empire, 1 (Oxford, 1964), pp. 217–21. F. H. B. Daniell in DCB 3 (1882), pp. 815 f., s.v. 'Marcianus (8)'; W. Ensslin in PW 14 (pt. 2; 1930), cols. 1514–29, s.v. 'Marcianus (34)'; H. Chirat in NCE 9 (1967), pp. 192 f., s.v.

Marcian the Monk (prob. late 4th cent.), ascetical writer. Marcian has long been known as the author of three short extracts found in the Florilegium Edessenum, but in modern times J. Lebon attributed to him nine other works, two of them doctrinal in character, one ascetical. Though for the most part surviving only in Syriac, they were clearly written in Greek. Lebon sought to identify the author with the Marcian mentioned by *Theodoret (Religious History, 3); he lived in the desert of Chalcis towards the end of the 4th cent. (d. *c.*385). Other scholars have attributed the works, or some of them, to Marcian of Bethlehem, mentioned by *Cyril of Scythopolis; he died in 492.

J. Lebon, Le Moine Saint Marcien: Étude critique des sources, Édition de ses écrits, posthumously ed. A. van Roey (SSL 36; 1968). J. Kirchmeyer, SJ, 'Le moine Marcien (de Bethléem?)', in F. L. Cross (ed.), Studia Patristica, 5 (TU 80; 1962), pp. 341–59. CPG 2 (1974), pp. 362–6 (nos. 3885–900).

Marciana. The famous library at Venice, named after St *Mark, the patron saint of the city. The nucleus of the library was the valuable collection of (largely Greek) MSS made in the 15th cent. by Cardinal *Bessarion. Besides a very large number of important classical, biblical, and patristic MSS, the library contains the autographs of Bessarion's 'Encomium on Trebizond' and of P. *Sarpi's History of the Council of Trent, as well as many early printed works. Since 1904 the library has been housed in the Palazzo della Zecca (the Mint).

J. Valentinelli (ed.), Bibliotheca Manuscripta ad S. Marci Venetiarum: Codices Latini (6 vols., Venice, 1868–73); P. Zorzanello, Catalogo dei Codici Latini della Biblioteca Nazionale Marciana di Venezia non compresi nel Catalogo di G. Valentinelli (3 vols., Trezzano, 1980–5); E. Mioni (ed.), Bibliothecae Divi Marci Venetiarum Codices Graeci Manuscripti (5 vols. in 6 parts, Rome, 1960–85). Miscellanea Marciana di Studi Bessarionei (Medioevo e Umanesimo, 24; 1976). M. Zorzi (ed.), Biblioteca Marciana, Venezia (Florence [1988]), with fine illustrations. See also bibl. to BESSARION.

Marcion (d. *c.*160), heretic. He was a native of Sinope in Pontus and a wealthy shipowner. Acc. to *Hippolytus (Syntagma ap. *Epiphanius, Haer. 42) he was the son of a Bishop who excommunicated him on grounds of immorality. Making his way to Rome, *c.*140, he attached himself to the local orthodox Church. In the next few years he worked out his system and began to organize his followers as a separate community; and in 144 he was formally excommunicated. From now on, apparently from Rome as a centre, he devoted his gifts as an organizer to the propagation of his views and established compact communities over a large part of the Empire which admitted converts of every age, rank, and background. His many and widely scattered opponents (among them *Dionysius of Corinth, *Irenaeus of Lyons, *Theophilus of Antioch, Philip of Gortyna, *Tertullian at Carthage, Hippolytus and *Rhodo at Rome, *Clement and *Origen at Alexandria, *Bardesanes at Edessa) sufficiently attest Marcion's success. His followers were certainly the chief danger to the Church from dogmatic unorthodoxy in the latter half of the 2nd cent. By the end of the 3rd cent. most of the Marcionite communities had been absorbed in *Manichaeism, but they continued to exist in small numbers down to a much later date.

Marcion's central thesis was that the Christian Gospel was wholly a Gospel of Love to the absolute exclusion of Law. This doctrine, which he expounded esp. in his 'Antitheses', led him to reject the OT completely. The Creator God or *Demiurge, revealed in the OT from Gen. 1 onwards as wholly a God of Law, had nothing in common with the God of Jesus Christ. Study of the OT indicated that this Jewish God constantly involved himself in contradictory courses of action, that he was fickle, capricious, ignorant, despotic, cruel. Utterly different was the Supreme God of Love whom Jesus came to reveal. It was His purpose to overthrow the Demiurge.

Acc. to Marcion, this contrast of law and grace was fully understood by St *Paul alone, the Twelve Apostles and Evangelists being largely blinded to the truth by the remnants of Jewish influence. Hence for Marcion the only Canonical Scriptures were ten of the Epp. of St Paul (he either rejected or did not know the *Pastorals) and an edited recension of the Gospel of St *Luke. He seems to have encouraged in his disciples a close study of the Bible and to have rejected all *allegorical methods of exegesis. He even exercised a certain influence on the history of the Catholic Bible. The so-called *Marcionite Prologues to the Pauline Epp. found their way into Latin biblical MSS of orthodox provenance, while his rejection of three of the Gospels was an important factor in compelling the Church to differentiate between true and spurious works and construct its own *Canon. His Christology was *Docetic. Christ, who was an emissary of the Father, suddenly appeared preaching and teaching in the Synagogue at *Capernaum. His Passion and Death were the work of the Creator God.

Marcion's writings have all been lost; but it is possible to deduce a good deal about them and to reconstruct much of his biblical text, esp. from Tertullian. He has often been reckoned among the *Gnostics, but it is clear that he would have had little sympathy with their mythological speculations. He inculcated a severe morality and some of his followers suffered in the persecutions.

The standard modern work, with full analysis of sources and attempted reconstruction of Marcion's biblical text, is A. *Harnack, Marcion: Das Evangelium vom fremden Gott (TU 45; 1921; 2nd edn., 1924); its value as a history is not seriously affected by its attempt to see in Marcion a precursor of classical Protestantism. Id., Neue Studien zu Marcion (ibid. 44, Heft 4; 1923). E. C. Blackman, Marcion and his Influence (1948). U. Bianchi, 'Marcion: théologien biblique ou docteur gnostique?', VC 21 (1967), pp. 141–9. H. von Campenhausen, Die Entstehung der christlichen Bibel (Beiträge zur historischen Theologie, 39; 1968), pp. 173–94 (Eng. tr., 1972, pp. 147–65). B. Aland, 'Marcion. Versuch einer neuen Interpretation', Zeitschrift für Theologie und Kirche, 70 (1973), pp. 420–47. R. J. Hoffmann, Marcion: On the Restitution of Christianity (American Academy of Religion, Academy Series, 46; Chico, Calif., 1984), with bibl. Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 106 f., and 570. G. *Salmon in DCB 3 (1882), pp. 816–24; É. Amann in DTC 9 (pt. 2; 1927), cols. 2009–32; G. Bardy in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 5 (1957), cols. 862–77; G. Pelland, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 311–21, all s.v. See also bibl. to GNOSTICISM and following entry.

Marcionite Prologues. A set of short introductory prologues to each of the Pauline Epistles which are to be found in a majority of the best MSS of the *Vulgate. D. de Bruyne argued that the prologues to Gal., 1 Cor., Rom., 1 Thess., Col., Phil., and Philem. originated in Marcionite circles. The theory that all the prologues were of Marcionite origin received the support of A. *Harnack, while the Marcionite origin of any of them was rejected by M.-J. *Lagrange and others. De Bruyne's position is now generally accepted (if not the extended claim).

Text pr. in J. *Wordsworth and H. J. White, Novum Testamentum Latine, 2 (1913–41), at the head of each Epistle, and in A. Harnack, Marcion (TU 45; 1921), pp. 136*–8*. D. de Bruyne, OSB, 'Prologues bibliques d'origine marcionite', R. Bén. 14 (1907), pp. 1–16; A. Harnack, 'Der marcionitische Ursprung der ältesten Vulgata-Prologe zu den Paulusbriefen', ZNTW 24 (1925), pp. 204–18. M.-J. Lagrange, 'Les Prologues prétendus marcionites', R. Bibl. 35 (1926), pp. 161–73; H. J. Frede, Altlateinische Paulus-Handschriften (Vetus Latina. Aus der Geschichte der lateinischen Bibel, 4; Freiburg, 1964), pp. 171–8; K. T. Schäfer, 'Marius Victorinus und die marcionitischen Prologe zu den Paulusbriefen', R. Bén. 80 (1970), pp. 7–16.

Marcosians, the followers of the *Gnostic Marcus, a disciple of *Valentinus. Acc. to *Irenaeus, from whom our knowledge of the sect is derived, they flourished in the Rhône valley in the middle of the 2nd cent. Irenaeus represents Marcus as a charlatan, who made use of magical devices esp. to deceive women to be his prophetesses, and his followers as indulging in elaborate sacramental rites and fantastic speculations about numbers. As Scriptures they used the 'Acts of *Thomas' and other apocryphal books. They represent Gnosticism in its later and most decadent phase.

Irenaeus, Adv. Haer. 1. 12–21, is the sole source; both *Hippolytus, Haer. 6. 39–55, and *Epiphanius, Haer. 34, refer explicitly to Irenaeus. F.-M.-M. Sagnard, OP, La Gnose valentinienne et le témoignage de St Irénée (1947), pp. 358–86. G. *Salmon in DCB 3 (1882), pp. 827–9, s.v., and É. Amann in DTC 9 (1926), cols. 1960–2, s.v.

Marcus, *Gnostic heretic. See preceding entry.

Marcus Aurelius (121–80), Roman Emperor from 161. The adopted son of his predecessor, Antoninus Pius (138–61), whose daughter he married, he was a professed *Stoic, though influenced by other philosophical teaching. His extant Meditations are best interpreted as a work of spiritual reflection intended only for his own eyes and designed to fortify himself in fidelity to his own convictions. Very little in it bears directly on what he saw as his providential role as Emperor, though parts at least were written during the campaigns which occupied much of his reign; the Empire was afflicted with plague and foreign invasions; Marcus ultimately restored the imperial defences. As a professed disciple of Antoninus Pius, not a Stoic, whom he depicts as having conformed to the principles which the ruling classes had always desired in an Emperor, he followed traditional policies. Hence the Christians still suffered sporadic persecutions, perhaps aggravated by the misfortunes of his reign, if these were ascribed to divine retribution for Christian 'impiety'. He himself denied that the gods were ever responsible for evil, but he adhered to Trajan's attitude to the Christians (see PERSECUTIONS, EARLY CHRISTIAN). Some scholars see dark allusions to them in the Meditations, and one text (11. 3) explicitly imputes to them a spirit of refractory opposition; it may be a gloss, and no clear view of Marcus' opinions on the Christians (if he had any) can be extracted from the Meditations. A number of Christian writers addressed 'Apologies' to him, including *Athenagoras and perhaps *Theophilus of Antioch, whose works survive, and *Miltiades, Claudius *Apollinarius, and *Melito, whose Apologies are lost, but there is no reason to think that he read them. See also THUNDERING LEGION.

The editio princeps of his Meditations was pub. at Zurich, 1558–9. Crit. edn., with Eng. tr. and comm., by A. S. L. Farquharson (posthumously pub. by J. Sparrow, 2 vols., Oxford, 1944); useful text, Eng. tr., and notes, by C. R. Haines (Loeb, 1916); Teubner edn., with index verborum, by J. Dalfen (1979). R. B. Rutherford, The Meditations of Marcus Aurelius: A Study (Oxford Classical Monographs, 1989). Marcus' philosophical views were close to those of *Epictetus; see also works cited s.v. For his reign, A. Garzetti, From Tiberius to the Antonines (rev. Eng. tr., 1974), pp. 472–527, with bibl. pp. 708–25 and 768–73. A. [R.] Birley, Marcus Aurelius (London, 1966). P. A. Brunt, 'Marcus Aurelius in his Meditations', Journal of Roman Studies, 64 (1974), pp. 1–20; id., 'Marcus Aurelius and the Christians' in C. Deroux (ed.), Studies in Latin Literature and Roman History, 1 (Collection Latomus, 164; 1979), pp. 483–520.

Marcus Diadochus. The reputed author of a 4th-cent. sermon against the *Arians. It has been suggested that the name 'Marcus' arose out of a MS confusion for 'Blessed Diadochus' (μακάριος Διάδοχος). He is not to be identified, however, with *Diadochus of Photice.

The sermon is pr. in J. P. Migne, PG 65. 1149–66. CPG 3 (1979), p. 189 (no. 6105).

Marcus Eremita. See MARK THE HERMIT.

Maredsous. The seat of a Belgian *Benedictine abbey, founded in 1872 as a daughter house of *Beuron in Germany. It is a noted centre of scholarship and publishes the Revue Bénédictine (from 1890; originally, from 1884, the Messager des fidèles) and the collection Anecdota Maredsolana (from 1893). Dom Columba *Marmion was Abbot from 1909 to 1923. After the war of 1914–18, Maredsous separated from Beuron and became one of the constituent abbeys in the newly constituted 'Belgian Congregation' of the order.

G. Ghysens, OSB, 'Fondation et essor de Maredsous 1872–1923', R. Bén. 83 (1973), pp. 229–75. L. H. Cottineau, OSB, Répertoire topo-bibliographique des abbayes et prieurés (Mâcon, 1939), col. 1744, with good bibl. H. Ledoyen, OSB, in DIP 5 (1978), cols. 904–6, s.v.

Margaret, St, of Antioch (in Pisidia). She is also known as St Marina. A reputed martyr of the *Diocletianic persecution, of whom, however, nothing certain is known. From an early date she was honoured in the E. Church, and from the 7th cent. also in the W., though devotion to her did not become popular in the W. till the 12th. In more recent times she has been included among the 14 *Auxiliary Saints, and is invoked esp. by women in travail. In art she is often depicted with a dragon (representing the devil). Many of the numerous legends which have gathered round her have also attached themselves to St *Pelagia (q.v.). Feast day in the W., 20 July; in the E., 17 July.

AASS, Jul. 5 (1727), pp. 22–44. BHL, pp. 787 f. (nos. 5303–13). H. *Delehaye, SJ, Les Légendes hagiographiques (1905), pp. 222–34. J. M. Sauget in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 8 (Rome, 1967), cols. 1150–60, s.v. 'Marina'. See also bibl. to PELAGIA, ST.

Margaret, 'The Lady' (1443–1509), Margaret Beaufort, Countess of Richmond and Derby. She was the daughter of the 1st Duke of Somerset and was married to *Henry VI's half-brother, Edmund Tudor, the Earl of Richmond, in 1455. He died in 1456 before the birth of his son, the later Henry VII. Before 1464 she married a distant cousin, Lord Henry Stafford, and after his death Lord Stanley, later Earl of Derby (?1473). She had a considerable part in the insurrection which ended in the decisive victory of Bosworth (1485) and in the accession of her son as Henry VII, for whom she had arranged a marriage with Elizabeth of York to reconcile the rival houses. She used her important position as the King's mother mostly for religious and educational interests. In 1494 or 1495 she became acquainted with J. *Fisher, whom she later chose as her spiritual director. Under his guidance she took religious vows and gave herself up to a life of prayer and good works, reciting the Divine Office as well as the Office of Our Lady and hearing several Masses every day. She also was a 'Sister' of many religious houses, among them *Charterhouse, *Durham, and *Westminster. Fisher also encouraged the foundations by which her name still survives in the older universities. She established the Lady Margaret professorships (originally readerships) at Oxford (1502) and Cambridge (1503) as well as a preachership at Cambridge (1504), and she refounded God's House as Christ's College, Cambridge, in 1505. Her other foundation, St John's College, Cambridge, was completed only after her death.

Her translation from the Fr. of the Imitation of Christ*, bk 4, was orig. pub. by R. Pynson at London, 1503; reissued by W. de Worde, ibid. ?1519, repr., ibid., 1904; also ed. J. K. Ingram (EETS, Extra Series, 63, 1893, pp. 259–83). C. H. Cooper, Memoir of Margaret Countess of Richmond and Derby (posthumously pub. by J. E. B. Mayor, Cambridge, 1874), with orig. docs. M. K. Jones and M. G. Underwood, The King's Mother: Lady Margaret Beaufort, Countess of Richmond and Derby (ibid., 1992). H. A. Tipping in DNB 4 (1885), pp. 48 f., s.v. 'Beaufort, Margaret'.

Margaret Clitherow, St. See CLITHEROW, ST MARGARET.

Margaret Mary Alacoque, St (1647–90), *Visitandine, chief founder of devotion to the *Sacred Heart (q.v.). After an unhappy childhood—she was for years unable to leave her bed, and later had to suffer much from unsympathetic relatives—she entered the Convent of the Visitation at Paray-le-Monial in central France in 1671, where she subsequently became Novice Mistress and Assistant Superior. Here she received several revelations of the Sacred Heart, the first in Dec. 1673, and the final one 18 months later. The visions revealed to her the form of the devotion, the chief features being Holy Communion on the *First Friday of each month, the Holy Hour on Thursdays, and the Feast of the Sacred Heart. Her visions were at first treated with contempt by her superiors, who regarded them as delusions, but under the influence of her temporary confessor, Bl Claude de la Colombière, SJ (d. 1682), the opposition softened and eventually ceased. The devotion, however, was not officially recognized till 75 years after her death. She was beatified in 1864 and canonized in 1920. Feast day, 16 (formerly 17) Oct.

Crit. edn. of Vie et œuvres de la bienheureuse Marguerite-Marie Alacoque by L. Gauthey (3rd edn., 3 vols., Paris, 1915; incl. the best text of her autobiog., also pub. separately, 1920). Eng. tr. of her autobiog. by V. Kerns (1961). The standard Lives are those by J. J. Languet (Paris, 1729; ed. L. Gauthey, 1890; Eng. tr. in the series 'The Saints and Servants of God', ed. F. W. *Faber, 1850), E. Bougaud (Paris, 1874; Eng. tr., New York, 1920), and A. Hamon, SJ (Paris, 1907; vol. 1 of his Histoire de la dévotion au sacré-cœur; frequently pub. separately). Among the better-known popular Lives is that of Mgr. M. Deminuid ('Les Saints', 1912); in Eng. there is a Life by G. Tickell, SJ (London, 1869). P. Blanchard, Ste Marguerite-Marie: Expérience et doctrine (1962). Pourrat, 4, pp. 402–19. J. Le Brun in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 349–55, s.v. 'Marguerite-Marie Alacoque'. See also bibl. to SACRED HEART.

Margaret of Scotland, St (*c.*1046–93), wife of Malcolm III of Scotland, and granddaughter of the English king, Edmund Ironside. She was probably born in Hungary. In 1067, after the battle of Hastings, she left England with her mother and sister and found refuge at the court of Malcolm, to whom she was married in 1070, despite a leaning to the religious life. At her instigation many abuses were reformed, and synods held to regulate the Lenten fast and Easter Communion and the observance of the prohibited degrees in marriage. Her great personal piety found expression in her practice of prayer and fasting, in her charity to the poor, and in the royal benefactions to religion in her lifetime, which included the foundation of the Church of the Holy Trinity at Dunfermline. She was canonized by Innocent IV in 1250. She died on 16 Nov., in some places observed as her feast day. There seems no satisfactory explanation of the date of her feast day in the *Roman Martyrology of 1584, namely 10 June, to which, after being transferred to 8 July, it was restored by Innocent XII in 1693 (at the request of the deposed *James II to mark the birthday of his son). In 1969 it was transferred to 16 Nov.

Life, prob. by Turgot, her confessor and later Bp. of St Andrews, pr. in AASS, Jun. 2 (1698), pp. 328–35, also in [J.] Pinkerton's Lives of the Scottish Saints, rev. and enlarged by W. M. Metcalfe, 2 (Paisley, 1889), pp. 159–182; Eng. tr. by W. M. Metcalfe, Ancient Lives of Scottish Saints (ibid., 1895), pp. 298–321. The numerous modern studies include those by L. Menzies (London, 1925) and T. R. Barnett (Edinburgh and London, 1926). D. Baker, ' "A nursery of saints": St Margaret of Scotland reconsidered', in id. (ed.), Medieval Women: Dedicated and Presented to Professor Rosalind M. T. Hill (Studies in Church History, Subsidia, 1; 1978), pp. 119–41. W. M. Bryce, 'Saint Margaret of Scotland and her Chapel in the Castle of Edinburgh', The Book of the Old Edinburgh Club, 5 (Edinburgh, 1912), pp. 1–66.

Marheineke, Philipp Konrad (1780–1846), Protestant theologian. From 1811 till his death he was professor at Berlin, and from 1820 in charge also of the important Dreifaltigkeitskirche. A warm admirer of the philosophy of G. W. F. *Hegel, then exercising a dominating influence on all aspects of German culture, Marheineke sought to invoke its support for the Christian faith, though not without radically transforming it. He professed to be, in Hegelian language, a 'theologian of the concept' (Begriffstheologe), as opposed to a 'theologian of faith' (the standpoint of traditional historic Christianity) or 'of feeling' (F. D. E. *Schleiermacher). Characteristic of his theological method and attitude was his thesis that 'the Church is the truth (Wahrheit) of the State, the State the reality (Wirklichkeit) of the Church'. The Protestant and Catholic Confessions were to be united in a higher Hegelian synthesis. His writings include a Symbolik (3 vols., 1810–14, which brought him into conflict with J. A. *Möhler), a history of the German Reformation (2 vols., 1816), and Die Bedeutung der Hegelschen Philosophie in der christlichen Theologie (1842). Much of his most characteristic teaching was formulated in his lectures, many of which were published by his pupils soon after his death.

His theological lectures were ed. by S. Matthies and W. Vatke (4 vols., Berlin, 1847–9). [M.] E. Ihle, P. K. Marheineke: Der Einfluss der Philosophie auf sein theologisches System (Diss., Leipzig, 1938). K. *Barth, Die protestantische Theologie im 19. Jahrhundert (Zurich, 1947), pp. 442–9; Eng. tr. (1972), pp. 491–8. V. Drehsen in TRE 22 (1992), pp. 109–15.

Maria Laach ('Maria ad lacum'), *Benedictine abbey near Andernach, some 15 miles NW of Koblenz. Founded in 1093, it flourished under the customary of *Cluny. The fine Romanesque church, with five towers and a dome, was consecrated in 1156. In 1474 the community joined the Bursfeld Union, taking a leading role after the Reformation. In the aftermath of the French Revolution, the abbey was suppressed in 1802; the buildings were secularized, the church taken into Prussian government possession (in 1815), and the property granted to individuals. The *Jesuits acquired Maria Laach in 1862/3 and in 1864 established a collegium maximum. They produced various learned works with titles associated with Maria Laach, including the periodical Stimmen aus Maria Laach (1871–1915, thereafter called Stimmen der Zeit). They were expelled in 1872 during the Kulturkampf*, and sold the property to the Benedictines of *Beuron in 1892. Under Ildefons Herwegen (abbot 1913–46; commemorated in the Abt Herwegen Institut established in 1948), Maria Laach became a centre of liturgical study and played an influential part in the *Liturgical Movement. Herwegen himself edited Ecclesia Orans (1918 ff.), a popular series of source material and studies of liturgical subjects, while monks of Maria Laach, including O. *Casel, undertook academic work in the field of liturgy, publishing the Jahrbuch für Liturgiewissenschaft (1921–38; revived as Archiv für Liturgiewissenschaft, 1950 ff.), as well as series of texts and studies. From 1921 a 'missa recitata' or 'dialogue mass' was celebrated from a *westward position in the crypt of the abbey church; this so-called 'crypt mass' was a major contribution to the Liturgical Movement, and a spiritual source of resistance to the Nazis.

A. Schippers, OSB, Das Laacher Münster (1927), and other works by this author. H. Emonds, OSB (ed.), Enkainia: Gesammelte Arbeiten zum 800jährigen Weihegedächtnis der Abteikirche Maria Laach am 24. August 1956 (Düsseldorf [1956]). T. Bogler, OSB (ed.), Benedikt und Ignatius: Maria Laach als Collegium maximum der Gesellschaft Jesu 1863–1872 1892 (Liturgie und Mönchtum, Laacher Heft 32; 1963). B. Neunheuser, OSB, '"Das Krypta-Messe" in Maria Laach', in T. Bogler, OSB (ed.), Beten und Arbeiten (ibid. 28, 1961), pp. 70–82; id., 'Towards a history of Maria Laach between the Wars, 1918–1939', Monastic Studies, 13 (1982), pp. 217–26. I. Herwegen, OSB, in CE 9 (1910), p. 658.

Mariana, Juan (1536–1624), Spanish *Jesuit. He joined the order in 1554, and held teaching appointments at Rome (1561–5), Loreto (1565–7), Messina (1567–9), Paris (1569–74), and Toledo (from 1574). He became famous through his book De Rege et Regis Institutione (1559), justifying tyrannicide. The book encouraged the belief that the Jesuits were responsible for the assassination of *Henry IV of France and the *Gunpowder Plot in England, and in 1610 the Jesuit General, C. *Aquaviva, expressly forbade members of the order to teach this doctrine. Mariana is also one of the foremost historians of Spain (the 'Spanish Livy'). In 1592 he issued his Historia de rebus Hispaniae, translated into Spanish as Historia general de España (2 vols., 1601).

An Eng. tr. of his History of Spain was pub. at London, 1699. G. Cirot, Études sur l'historiographie espagnole: Mariana historien (Bibliothèque de la Fondation Thiers, 8; 1905). M. Ballesteros-Gaibrois, Juan de Mariana (2 vols., Santander, 1938–9). J. Laures, SJ, The Political Economy of Juan de Mariana (New York, 1928); M. B. Amzalak, As teorias monetários do Padre João de Mariana (1944). G. Lewy, Constitutionalism and Statecraft during the Golden Age of Spain: A Study of the political philosophy of Juan de Mariana, S.J. (Geneva, 1960). D. Ferraro, Tradizione e Ragione in Juan de Mariana [1989]. F. Asensio, 'El profesorado de Juan de Mariana y su influjo en la vida del escritor', Hispana, 53 (1953), pp. 581–639. Sommervogel, 5 (1894), cols. 547–67; Polgár, 2 (1990), pp. 488–92. A. Lehmkuhl in CE 9 (1910), pp. 659 f., s.v.; E. Rey in Q. Alden Vaquero and others (eds.), Diccionario de historia eclesiástica de España, 3 (1973), pp. 1417 f., s.v., with bibl.

Marianists. The 'Society of Mary', of Bordeaux (to be distinguished from the *Marists, q.v.). The congregation, which consists of priests and laymen, was founded at Bordeaux in 1817 by the theologian Guillaume-Joseph Chaminade (1761–1850); it received first approval by decree of praise from Rome in 1839 and definitive approval of its constitutions in 1891. It was instituted to fight religious indifference, and its members, who devote themselves esp. to educational work, add to the three vows of poverty, chastity, and obedience a fourth, promising stability in the service of the BVM, originally expressed in the daily recitation of the *Rosary and of the *Little Office of Our Lady. The congregation spread rapidly in many European countries as well as in America, Africa, and Asia. The members of the female Institute, the 'Daughters of Mary', founded in 1816, also devote themselves to education; their constitutions were finally confirmed in 1888.

Lives of the founder by J. Simler (Paris, 1901), H. Rousseau, SM (ibid., 1913), G. Goyau (ibid., 1914), and K. Burton (Milwaukee, 1949). G. J. Ruppel, SM, in NCE 9 (1967), pp. 214–16, s.v., with bibl.; V. Vasey, SM, and A. Albano, SM, in DIP 8 (1988), cols. 1616–24, s.v. 'Società di Maria'.

Mariavites. A Polish sect, founded in 1906 by J. Kowalski, a priest of Warsaw, and Felicia Kozlowska, a *Tertiary sister (d. 1922), on their excommunication from the RC Church. Many years earlier the latter had laid claim to private revelations and these formed the doctrinal basis of the new communities. Their name is derived from their profession of great devotion to the BVM ('qui Mariae vitam imitantur'). They acknowledged the first seven *Oecumenical Councils, accepted the '*Filioque' as a 'theological opinion', and incorporated into their practice many ascetic elements, combined with some unconventional arrangements about the marriage of the clergy. Relations having been established with the *Old Catholics, in 1909 Kowalski was consecrated a bishop by the Abp. of Utrecht; and in 1911 they were officially recognized by the Duma. But after a few brief years of prosperity their numbers and influence declined, their discipline deteriorated, and in 1924 the Old Catholics severed communion with them.

K. Gajowski, Mariavitensekte: Einige Blätter aus der neuesten Kirchengeschichte Russisch-Polens (Cracow, 1911); A. Rhode, Bei den Mariaviten: Eindrücke von einer neuen romfreien katholischen Kirche (1911). J. Peterkiewicz, The Third Adam (1975). R. Janin, 'Les Mariavites et l'orthodoxie', ÉO 30 (1927), pp. 216–20; M. Niwinski, 'Les Mariavites de Pologne', Revue apologétique, 54 (1932), pp. 570–80. E. Appolis, 'Une Église des derniers temps. L'Église Mariavite', Archives de Sociologie des Religions, 19 (1965), pp. 51–67. I. Rhode in RGG (3rd edn.), 4 (1960), cols. 752–4, s.v. 'Mariaviten'.

Mariolatry. A term derived from 'Maria' and 'latria' (Gk. λατρεία, worship), denoting erroneous attribution of Divine honours to the BVM. An early instance of it is found in the 4th cent., when the sect of the *Collyridians was condemned by St *Epiphanius for offering sacrificial worship to Mary. A more recent example is the cult of the BVM in the Eucharist, advocated by the Franciscan *Recollect, Z. de Someire, and condemned by *Benedict XIV. By Protestants the word is often employed in an abusive sense of what they consider the excessive devotion to the BVM in the RC Church.

Mariology. The systematic study of the person of the Blessed Virgin *Mary and of her place in the economy of the *Incarnation.

Marisco, Adama de. See ADAM OF MARSH.

Marists. The 'Society of Mary' was founded at Lyons in 1816 by the Ven. Jean Claude Marie Colin (1790–1875), though the original idea seems to have come from his fellow seminarian, Jean Claude Courveille (1787–1866), who left the Marists in 1826. The Society was approved by *Gregory XVI in 1836, when the first 20 Marists took simple perpetual vows and the W. Pacific was allotted to them as their special mission field, and finally sanctioned in 1873. It spread rapidly in many European countries, in N. America, and esp. in *Australia and *New Zealand, and was introduced into England by N. *Wiseman in 1850. The congregation comprises priests and lay brothers whose main activities are educational and missionary work. Their rule, which is based on that of the *Jesuits, aims esp. at fostering devotion to the BVM. Several other institutes are connected with the Marists, among them the Marist School-brothers founded in 1817 by the Ven. Marcellin Joseph Benedict Champagnat and approved by the Holy See in 1863 and 1903, the Marist Sisters (Sisters of the Holy Name of Mary), founded by Colin in 1823 for the education of young girls, and the Third Order of the Society of Mary, founded in 1850 for persons living in the world, with its seat in Rome.

J. Coste, SM, and G. Lessard, SM (eds.), Origines Maristes (1786–1836) (Fontes historici Societatis Mariae, 3; 4 vols, Rome, 1960–7). H. [M.] Laracy, Marists and Melanesians (Honolulu, 1976). S. W. Hosie, Anonymous Apostle: The Life of Jean-Claude Colin (New York, 1967). J. L. White, SM, in NCE 9 (1967), pp. 229 f., s.v. 'Marist Fathers'; J. Coste, SM, in DIP 8 (1988), cols. 1624–7, s.v. 'Società di Maria'; A. G. di Pietro, ibid. 4 (1977), cols. 653–65, s.v. 'Fratelli Maristi delle Scuole'.

Maritain, Jacques (1882–1973), French *Thomist philosopher. A native of Paris, he studied at the *Sorbonne, where he came under the influence of H. *Bergson. He was converted to Roman Catholicism in 1906. After a short period devoted to biology at Heidelberg (1907–8), he turned to the study of St *Thomas Aquinas, whose philosophy he sought to relate to modern culture. He held professorial chairs successively at the *Institut Catholique in Paris (1914–33), at the Institute for Mediaeval Studies in Toronto (1933–45) and at Princeton (1948–52). From 1945 to 1948 he was French ambassador to the Holy See. In 1961 (after the death of his wife in the previous year) he went to live with the *Little Brothers of Jesus in Toulouse and in 1970 he became a Little Brother himself.

In his numerous books Maritain endeavoured to apply the classical doctrines of Thomist philosophy in turn to metaphysics and theoretical philosophy, moral, social, and political philosophy, the philosophy of education, history, and culture, as well as to art and poetry. He also wrote on the relations of philosophy to religious experience and mysticism. His principal works include La Philosophie bergsonienne (1914; Eng. tr., New York, 1955; a critique of his former master); Distinguer pour unir, ou Les degrés du savoir (1932; Eng. tr., 1959); Humanisme intégral (1936; Eng. tr., 1938); La Philosophie morale (1960; Eng. tr., 1964), and Le Paysan de la Garonne (1966; Eng. tr., 1968), in which he sought to present a synthesis of his views on life.

Complete edn. of his works (together with those of his wife, Raïssa) by J.-M. Allion and others (15 vols., Fribourg and Paris, 1982–95). Selected works, ed. H. Bars (Bibliothèque Européenne, 2 vols. [1975–9]). Festschrift for his Sixtieth Birthday (New York, 1943); Jacques Maritain: Son œuvre philosophique (Bibliothèque de la Revue Thomiste [1949]), both with lists of works. Studies by G. B. Phelan (London, 1937), J. Croteau, OMI (Ottawa, 1955), H. Bars (Paris, 1959), L. F. de A. Sampaio, CR (Paris, 1963), G. Forni (Bologna [1965]), J. W. Hanke (The Hague, 1973), B. E. Doering (Notre Dame, Ind., and London, 1983), ed. D. W. Hudson and M. J. Mancini (Mercer, Ga. [1987]) and by R. McInerny (Notre Dame, Ind. [1988]). His 90th birthday was marked by a special issue of New Scholasticism, 46 (1972), pp. 1–128, incl. list of his works, pp. 118–28.

Marius Mercator (early 5th cent.), a Latin Christian writer, formerly regarded as of African origin, but more prob. born in Italy. A friend and disciple of St *Augustine, *c.*418 in Rome he wrote against *Pelagius two works which have not survived. Some ten years later, when in Constantinople, he again wrote in defence of orthodoxy, this time attacking both *Nestorians and Pelagians. A collection of his writings, compiled about 100 years after his time, has survived in a Vatican MS (Cod. Vat. Pal. 234). It consists largely of Mercator's translations of and replies to Nestorius' writings, made (acc. to E. *Schwartz) for the Latin-speaking monks of Thrace, and is one of the more important sources for our knowledge of Nestorius' doctrines.

Writings ed. J. *Garnier, SJ (Paris, 1673; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 48), on the basis of a Beauvais MS, since lost. Another edn. by É. *Baluze (Paris, 1684) from Vat. Pal. 234. Crit. text, with discussion, by E. Schwartz in ACO 1. 5 (1), pp. 5–70 (acc. to Schwartz, the Counter-Anathematisms of Nestorius, ibid., pp. 71–84, although commonly ascribed to Marius Mercator, are not his work). E. Amann, 'L'affaire Nestorius vue de Rome', Rev. S.R. 23 (1949), pp. 5–37, esp. pp. 5–17 (against the view that Mercator acted as an agent of Pope *Celestine in Constantinople); S. Prete, Mario Mercatore, polemista antipelagiano (Scrinium Theologicum, 11; Turin, 1958). V. Grossi in Quasten (cont.), Patrology, 4 (1986), pp. 499–501. W. Eltester in PW 14 (1930), cols. 1831–5; O. Wermelinger in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 610–15, s.v.

Marius Victorinus. See VICTORINUS AFER.

Mark, St, Evangelist. *Papias asserts that Mark, having become the interpreter of St *Peter, set down accurately everything that he remembered of the words and actions of the Lord, and Mark is associated with Peter in 1 Pet. 5: 13. He has traditionally been identified with John Mark, the cousin of St *Barnabas (Col. 4: 10), a Jew, who set out with Barnabas and St *Paul on their first missionary journey, but for reasons which failed to satisfy Paul turned back (Acts 12: 25; 13: 5 and 13; 15: 37 f.); afterwards he accompanied Barnabas on a mission to *Cyprus (Acts 15: 39), and he was in Rome with St Paul (Col. 4: 10, Philem. 24, 2 Tim. 4: 11). The identification may not be justified. Acc. to *Eusebius (HE 2. 16. 1 and 2. 24. 1), who was perhaps relying on early sources, Mark went to *Alexandria and was its first bishop, while in later tradition he is also associated with *Venice. The tradition that Mark was κολοβοδάκτυλος (prob. 'stump-fingered', i.e. Mark himself, and not an allusion to the brevity of his Gospel) is found in the *Anti-Marcionite Prologues and in St *Hippolytus, Haer. 7. 30. Feast day, 25 Apr.

The processional Major Litanies (Litaniae Majores) traditionally observed at Rome on 25 Apr. (but abolished in 1969) appear to have arisen quite independently of the feast. They go back to the time of St *Gregory the Great (d. 604), when they were introduced as a Christian substitute for the pagan robigalia on that day.

AASS, Apr. 3 (1675), pp. 344–58, and Sept. 7 (1760), pp. 379–90. C. N. Jefford in Anchor Bible Dictionary, 4 (1992), pp. 557 f. s.v. 'Mark, John', with further refs. On the Major Litanies, see bibl. s.v. LITANY.

Mark, Gospel of St. The earliest reference to the Gospel comes through *Papias, who states, on the authority of *John the Presbyter, that St *Mark was 'the interpreter (ἑρμηνευτής)' of St *Peter, adding that he wrote down accurately what he heard and remembered. Later tradition amplifies Papias' statement and connects the Gospel with *Rome.

The Gospel may have been written by John Mark (see the preceding entry); there is no obvious reason why tradition should have wrongly assigned it to so unimportant a character. 'Mark', however, is a common name. Speculation has sometimes identified the young man in *Gethsemane (14: 51 f.) with the author.

The Gospel is written in 'Koine *Greek', i.e. the popular language that was the lingua franca of the E. Mediterranean. It is the least polished of the Gospels, though the narratives are extremely vivid and full of circumstantial detail. Mark has some knowledge of Palestine and Jewish parties and officials, and his Aramaic quotations are striking. He nevertheless presents Jesus as not bound by Jewish laws on food (7: 19) or the *sabbath (2: 27 f.). A date soon after the death of Peter (commonly put in AD 64) and during the siege of *Jerusalem has been accepted by many scholars; others prefer a date soon after AD 70.

Many attempts have been made to detect sources underlying Mark, whether some continuous primitive Gospel or briefer collections (e.g. Petrine material, parables, or controversy stories, etc.), but no theories have been firmly established. With the rise of *Form Criticism it came to be held that in oral tradition the material was used and preserved in small units, and that Mark, or someone before him, put them together 'like beads on a string'. Whether he had access to a firm historical framework has been a matter of dispute. Interest later shifted to Mark's own contribution as author or editor (see REDACTION CRITICISM), but no consensus emerged and more recently wider literary approaches to the Gospel have become common.

Mark makes it clear that Jesus is *Messiah (q.v.) and Son of God (1: 1). In the narrative this truth, though known to demons, and implicit in the miracles and in the Lord's authority as teacher, is disclosed only by degrees (8: 29; 14: 62; 15: 39), and the disciples are slow to comprehend. At least until the entry into Jerusalem, Christ maintains an element of secrecy (8: 30, 9: 9), preferring to refer to Himself in the enigmatic phrase '*Son of Man'. See MESSIANIC SECRET.

The narrative opens with the preaching of St *John the Baptist. After the Baptism and Temptation of Christ, the Messianic ministry at once begins: disciples are called, miracles are performed, and teaching is given, chiefly in the form of *parables. The whole emphasizes the idea of fulfilment; the *Kingdom of God, though still the object of hope, is already active in Christ. A turning point is reached at 8: 27 ff., with Peter's confession that Jesus is the Messiah. From that point the burden of the Lord's teaching is that the Son of Man must suffer, die, and rise from the dead. The story of the Passion (which many have held to have existed as a continuous narrative at an earlier date) includes the account of the Last Supper and describes the death of Christ as a fulfilment of OT prophecy and as a sacrifice inaugurating the new covenant. The Crucifixion is followed by the Resurrection; but Mark's Gospel concludes abruptly at 16: 8, perhaps because Mark intended it to end there, possibly because the end has been lost. 16: 9–20 is one of two supplements, not in the oldest MSS, which were added to the Gospel at an early date. See ARISTION; also MARCAN HYPOTHESIS and SYNOPTIC PROBLEM.

The patristic and medieval commentators paid scant attention to St Mark's Gospel, probably because of its brevity and the inclusion of nearly all its matter in the other Synoptics. Those who commented on it include *Victor of Antioch, *Theophylact, and *Euthymius Zigabenus among the Greeks and *Bede among the Latins. In modern times, on the other hand, it has attracted close attention from all students of the Gospels. Comm. incl. those of E. P. Gould (ICC, 1896), H. B. *Swete (London, 1898), M. J. *Lagrange (Études bibliques, 1911), A. E. J. Rawlinson (West. Comm., 1925), E. Lohmeyer (KEK, 10th edn.; 1937), V. Taylor (London, 1952; 2nd edn., 1966), P. Carrington (Cambridge, 1960), D. E. Nineham (Pelican Gospel Commentaries, 1963; rev. edn., 1968), E. Schweizer (Das Neue Testament Deutsch, 1967; Eng. tr., 1971), W. L. Lane (New London Commentary on the New Testament, 1974), H. Anderson (New Cent. Bib., 1976), J. Gnilka (Evangelisch-Katholischer Kommentar zum Neuen Testament, 2 vols., 1978–9), C. S. Mann (Anchor Bible, 1986), D. Lührmann (Hb. NT, 1987), R. A. Guelich (Word Biblical Comm., 34; Dallas, Tex. [1986 ff.]), and M. D. Hooker (Black's NT Comm., 1991).

Other studies include R. H. *Lightfoot, The Gospel Message of St Mark (1950); A. M. Farrer, A Study in St Mark (1951; 2nd edn., 1966); W. Marxsen, Der Evangelist Markus: Studien zur Redaktionsgeschichte des Evangeliums (Forschungen zur Religion und Literatur des Alten und Neuen Testaments, NF 49; 1956; 2nd edn., 1959; Eng. tr., 1969); T. A. Burkill, Mysterious Revelation: An Examination of the Philosophy of St Mark's Gospel (Ithaca, NY, 1963); id., New Light on the Earliest Gospel (ibid., 1972); E. Trocmé, La Formation de l'Évangile selon Marc (1963; Eng. tr., 1975); C. F. Evans, The Beginning of the Gospel (1968); R. P. Martin, Mark: Evangelist and Theologian (Exeter [1972]); W. H. Kelber (ed.), The Passion in Mark: Studies on Mark 14–16 (Philadelphia [1976]); W. R. Farmer, The Last Twelve Verses of Mark (Cambridge, 1974); H. C. Kee, Community of the New Age: Studies in Mark's Gospel (1977); E. Best, Mark: The Gospel as Story (Edinburgh, 1983); id., Disciples and Discipleship: Studies in the Gospel according to Mark (ibid., 1986), and other works of this author; M. Hengel, Studies in the Gospel of Mark [Eng. tr. of various papers pub. 1982–4] (1985); W. Telford (ed.), The Interpretation of Mark (Issues in Religion and Theology, 7; 1985); B. van Iersal, Belichting van het Bijbelboek: Marcus (1986; Eng. tr., Reading Mark, Edinburgh, 1989); C. Myers, Binding the Strong Man: A Political Reading of Mark's Story of Jesus (Maryknoll, NY [1988]); M. A. Tolbert, Sowing the Gospel: Mark's World in Literary-Historical Perspective (Minneapolis [1989]); R. M. Fowler, Let the Reader Understand: Reader-Response Criticism and the Gospel of Mark (Minneapolis [1991]). See also bibl. to SYNOPTIC PROBLEM.

Mark, Liturgy of St. The traditional Greek Eucharistic Liturgy of the Church of *Alexandria, formerly used by the Egyptian *Melchites. It survives in various forms in three late MSS, the Cod. Rossanensis (Vat. gr. 1970; 13th cent.; the source of the textus receptus), the Rotulus Vaticanus (Vat. gr. 2281; 13th cent.), and the Rotulus Messanensis (Cod. Messin. gr. 177; 12th cent.). Behind these texts, all much altered by foreign influences (*Constantinople and/or *Jerusalem), lies a primitive local Egyptian text, in which the great intercessory prayer stood before the *Sanctus and there was no *Benedictus at the end of the Sanctus. In 1928 a fragment of the authentic text of the Liturgy was recovered on a Strasbourg papyrus (4th–5th cent.), and in 1966 a further papyrus fragment (4th cent.) at Barcelona was identified. Other Egyptian fragments have been discovered which show a close affinity to the text, esp. the *Der Balyzeh Papyrus. A modified form of the rite in Coptic (known alternatively as 'The Coptic Liturgy of St Mark' or 'of St Cyril') is still in use in the *Coptic Church; another form of it, in Ethiopic, in the *Ethiopian Church.

Text in E. *Renaudot, Liturgiarum Orientalium Collectio, 1 (Paris, 1716), pp. 131–65; in C. A. Swainson, The Greek Liturgies

(1884), pp. 2–73; and in Brightman, LEW, pp. 115–88. Crit. edn., incl. readings from the frags. and complete text of some of them, with conjectural reconstruction (in Eng.) of the anaphora of St Mark *c.*350 and *c.*450, comm., and full bibl., by G. J. Cuming, The Liturgy of St Mark (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 234; Rome, 1990). The Strasbourg papyrus was orig. ed. by M. Andrieu and P. Collomp, Rev. S.R. 8 (1928), pp. 489–515; that at Barcelona by L. Roca-Puig, Aegyptus, 46 (1966), pp. 91 f.

Mark, Secret Gospel of. In 1958, at the monastery of Mar Saba near Jerusalem, Morton Smith found a letter ascribed to *Clement of Alexandria written on the blank pages at the back of a 17th-cent. edition of the works of *Ignatius. It gave warning of a 'secret Gospel of Mark' falsified by the *Carpocratians, and quoted from it. Even if the letter is authentic, Smith's contention that the quotations go back to an original Aramaic version of Mark, which served as a source both for the canonical Mark and John, has not found favour among scholars.

M. Smith, Clement of Alexandria and a Secret Gospel of Mark (Cambridge, Mass., 1973), with text and Eng. tr. of the letter, pp. 446–52. Id., The Secret Gospel: The Discovery and Interpretation of the Secret Gospel according to Mark (New York, 1973; London, 1974). H. Merkel in Schneemelcher, 1 (5th edn., 1987), pp. 89–92, with bibl; Eng. tr., 1 (1991), pp. 106–9.

Mark the Hermit (date disputed; prob. early 5th or possibly 6th cent.), ascetical writer. Very little is known of his life. He is said to have been a disciple of St *Chrysostom (like his contemporary, *Nilus the Ascetic), but this is not certain. He may at one period of his life have been abbot of a community near Ancyra; later he was a hermit, possibly in Palestine or in Egypt. H. Chadwick has argued that he is to be identified with Mark, priest and hegumen of a monastery near Tarsus, mentioned by *Severus of Antioch in two letters written between 515 and 518. His writings, for the most part of a practical character, include treatises 'On Repentance', 'On the Spiritual Law', and 'On Those who suppose Justification is from Works'. His vigorous attack on human merit in the last-named writing commended him to older Protestant theologians. A work 'On Temperance' (Κεφάλαια νηπτικά), which is ascribed to him, is certainly spurious; and another 'On Fasting' (Περὶ νηστείας) is now attributed to *Marcian the Monk.

Works in J. P. Migne, PL 65. 893–1140. His 'Adversus Nestorianos', pub. from a 13th-cent. Jerusalem MS by A. Papadopoulos-Kerameus at St Petersburg in 1891, was issued in an improved text by J. Kunze, Marcus Eremita (Leipzig, 1895; important study, esp. on Mark's Baptismal Creed), pp. 6–30; further ed. by A. Rocchi in Mai, NPB 10, pt. 1 (1905), pp. 201–47. Fr. tr. of his works by C.-A. Zirnheld, OSCO (Spiritualité Orientale, 41; Bellafontaine [1985]); Ger. tr., with valuable introd., by O. Hesse (Bibliothek der griechischen Literatur, 19; 1985). K. T. Ware, 'The Sacrament of Baptism and the Ascetic Life in the Teaching of Mark the Monk', in F. L. Cross (ed.), Studia Patristica, 10 (TU 107; 1970), pp. 441–52. H. Chadwick, 'The Identity and Date of Mark the Hermit', Eastern Churches Review, 4 (1972), pp. 125–30 (repr. in his History and Thought of the Early Church (1982), no. 15); O. Hesse, 'Was Mark the Monk a Sixth-Century Hegumen near Tarsus?' [No!], ibid. 8 (1976), pp. 174–8. CPG 3 (1979), pp. 184–8 (nos. 6090–102). J. Gribomont, OSB, in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 274–83, s.v. 'Marc le Moine'; O. Hesse in TRE 22 (1992), pp. 101–4, s.v. 'Marcus Eremita'.

Marks of the Church. See NOTES OF THE CHURCH.

Marmion, Columba (1858–1923), Abbot of *Maredsous. He was an Irishman by birth, who, though he lived mainly surrounded by French culture, retained his Irish characteristics and sympathies till his death. In 1886 he entered the Benedictine house at Maredsous; in 1899 he became prior of the Abbey of Mont-César at Louvain; and from 1909 till his death was Abbot of Maredsous. Basing his teaching on the Christocentric teaching of St *Paul, he drew largely on the patristic and liturgical traditions of *Benedictine monasticism, without at the same time failing to appreciate *Thomist theology. He was an unusually gifted spiritual writer and director, whose main works, the fruit of series of spiritual addresses, are Le Christ, vie de l'âme (1918, over 100,000 copies issued; Eng. tr., 1922), Le Christ dans ses mystères (1919; Eng. tr., 1924), and Le Christ, idéal du moine (1922; Eng. tr., 1926).

Life by R. Thibaut (Maredsous, 1929; Eng. tr., 1932). M. M. Philipon, OP, La Doctrine spirituelle de Dom Marmion (1954; Eng. tr., 1956). T. Delforge, OSB, in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 627–30, s.v.

Marnix, Philipp van (1540–98), Baron de Sainte-Aldegonde, Dutch *Calvinist theologian and statesman. Having studied at *Geneva under J. *Calvin and T. *Beza, he became a lifelong upholder of rigid Calvinist theology. Between 1562 and 1569 he won fame by his Protestant and nationalist writings, of which the most celebrated was the bitterly satirical De biënkorf der heilige roomsche kerche (1569; Eng. tr. by G. Gilpin, 1579). About 1566–7 he took up arms as an anti-Spanish leader, and formed a close friendship with William the Silent, for whose conversion to Calvinism he was partly responsible. A constant adviser to the Prince of Orange, he became a member of the Council of State in 1577 and burgomaster of Antwerp in 1583, but lost his political influence in 1585 by his surrender of the town to the Duke of Parma. Devoting himself for the rest of his life to literary activity, most notably to his Dutch version of the Psalms, he was charged by the States of Holland with the translation of the Bible, a task which he did not fulfil.

Œuvres de P. de Marnix de Sainte-Aldegonde, with introd. by E. Quinet (8 vols., Brussels, 1857–60); Godsdienstige en Kerkelijke Geschriften, ed. J. J. van Toorenenbergen (3 vols., The Hague, 1871–91); Epistulae, ed. A. Gerlo and R. de Smet (Brussels, 1990 ff.). A. A. van Schelven, Marnix van Sint Aldegonde (Utrecht, 1939). W. A. Nolet, Marnix als Theoloog: Historische Inleiding (Amsterdam, 1948), with bibl. F. van Kalken and T. Jonckheere, Marnix de Sainte Aldegonde (Neuchâtel [1952]). Facsimile of the Catalogue of the Library of Philips van Marnix van Sint-Aldegonde sold by auction (July 6th), Leiden, Christophorus Guyot, 1599 (Nieuwkoop, 1964), with introd. in Eng. T. Schott and S. D. van Veen in PRE (3rd edn.), 12 (1903), pp. 347–55, s.v.

Maronites. A Christian community of Syrian origin, the greater part of whom still live in their native land of Lebanon, though some are to be found elsewhere in Syria, Israel, and Cyprus. Many have also emigrated to N. and S. America and to Australia. Since 1182 they have been in formal communion with the RC Church.

By their own theologians it is claimed that their existence can be traced back to St Maro, a friend of St *Chrysostom (d. 407), whose disciples shortly after his death founded the monastery on the Orontes that now goes by his name, and that the modern Maronites derive directly from this foundation. Their origin as a separate community, however, goes back only to the *Monothelite controversy of the 7th and 8th cents., when they rejected the teaching of the Third Council of *Constantinople that in the Person of Christ there are two wills, the one human and the other Divine. Their monastery on Mt. Lebanon was destroyed by the Arab invasion at the beginning of the 10th cent. Since their union with Rome in the 12th cent. relations with the W. have been continuously maintained. In 1584 *Gregory XIII founded a Maronite college in Rome, which was later the home of the *Assemani and several other notable scholars. In the 19th cent. they suffered severe treatment at the hands of the Turks and the Druses. Today they constitute the largest single religious body in the Lebanon.

As a *Uniat body they possess their own liturgy, which is in essence an Antiochene rite in the Syriac language, in parts modified by Latin influences. They employ several (Syriac) anaphoras, of which the oldest, known from its opening word as the 'Sharrar', has links with the anaphora of '*Addai and Mari'. Their hierarchy consists of a *patriarch (whose see is Bkerké in Lebanon), 10 bishops (Aleppo, Baalbek, Beirut, Cairo, Cyprus, Damascus, Sarba, Sidon, Tripoli, Tyre), an Apostolic Exarch in USA, an auxiliary bishop in Brazil and three titular bishops.

T. Anaissi (ed.), Bullarium Maronitarum (Rome, 1911). P. Dib (ed.), Quelques Documents pour servir à l'histoire des Maronites (1945). J. Gribomont [OSB], 'Documents sur les origines de l'Église maronite', Parole de l'Orient, 5 (1974), pp. 95–132. M. Lequien, OP, Oriens Christianus, 3 (Rome, 1740), cols. 1–100. P. Dib, Histoire de l'Église maronite (2 vols., Beirut, 1962; Eng. tr., Detroit, 1971). Id. in Codificazione Canonica Orientale, Fonti, fasc. 8 (Rome, 1932), pp. 90–116; P. Sfair, ibid., fasc. 12, Ius Particolare Maronitarum (ibid., 1933). G. J. Mahfoud, L'Organisation monastique dans l'Église maronite (Bibliothèque de l'Université Saint-Esprit, Kaslik, Jounieh, Liban, 1; Beirut, 1967). M. Hayek, Liturgie maronite: Histoire et textes eucharistiques (1964). J. Feghali, Histoire du droit canonique de l'Église maronite, 1 (Bibliothèque de la faculté de droit canonique de Paris; 1962; no more pub.). P. Raphael, Le Rôle du Collège maronite romain dans l'orientalisme aux XVII^e et XVIII^e siècles (Beirut, 1950). A. S. Atiya, A History of Eastern Christianity (1968), pp. 389–423. J. Raymond, Essai de bibliographie maronite (Bibliothèque de l'Université Saint-Esprit, 9; Kaslik, Lebanon, 1980). P. Dib in DTC 10 (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 1–142, s.v., with full bibl.; P. Sfair and A. Raes, SJ, in EC 8 (1952), cols. 177–84, s.v. 'Maroniti'; E. El-Hayek in NCE 9 (1967), pp. 245–53, s.v. 'Maronite Rite'; M. Hayek in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 631–44, s.v. 'Maronite (Église)'. On canon law in force before 1990, C. de Clercq in DDC 6 (1957), cols. 811–29, s.v. 'Maronite (Droit canonique)'.

Marot, Clément (*c.*1497–1544), French poet and translator. Some controversy surrounds his exact religious affiliations, but his association with the circle of Marguerite de Navarre would clearly ally him with évangélisme, a biblical and humanist, though in other respects essentially orthodox, tendency. He none the less went into exile to Ferrara and Venice in 1535, in the intolerant climate following the Protestant manifestations known as the affaire des placards; and again, to *Geneva, in 1542. His French verse paraphrase of 49 selected Psalms appeared between 1538 and 1542. It was received with great acclaim by the Protestant community. T. *Beza admired his work and in 1562 completed a verse translation of the Psalms based on it, thereby bringing into being the first vernacular Psalter in French.

Crit. edn. of all his works by C. A. Mayer: Épîtres (London, 1958), Œuvres satiriques (ibid., 1962), Œuvres lyriques (ibid., 1964), Œuvres diverses (ibid., 1966), Epigrammes (ibid., 1970), and Traductions (Geneva, 1980). O. Douen, Clément Marot et le psautier huguenot (2 vols., 1878–9); P. A. Becker, Clément Marots Psalmenübersetzungen (Ber. (Sächs.), 72, Heft 1, for 1920; 1921); P. Leblanc, La poésie religieuse de Clément Marot (1955); C. A. Mayer, La religion de Marot (Travaux d'Humanisme et de Renaissance, 39; 1960); M. Jeanneret, 'Marot traducteur des Psaumes entre le néoplatonisme et la Réforme', Bibliothèque d'Humanisme et Renaissance, 27 (1965), pp. 629–43; id., Poésie et tradition biblique au XVI^e siècle: Recherches stylistiques sur les paraphrases des psaumes de Marot à Malherbe (1969), pp. 51–87. M. A. Screech, Marot évangélique (Geneva, 1967; Eng. adaptation, Clément Marot: A Renaissance Poet Discovers his Gospel, Studies in Medieval and Reformation Thought, 54; Leiden, 1994). H. P. Clive, Clément Marot: An Annotated Bibliography (1983).

Marprelate Tracts. A series of violent and frequently scurrilous *Puritan tracts attacking *episcopacy, issued under the pseudonym of Martin Marprelate in 1588 and 1589. They reflect the heightened atmosphere of confrontation between Puritanism and the Church establisment which resulted from Abp. J. *Whitgift's drive for conformity from 1583. The titles (abbreviated) of the seven which survive are The Epistle, The Epitome, Mineral and Metaphysical School-points, Hay any Work for Cooper, Theses Martinianae, The Just Censure and Reproof, and The Protestation. They appear to have been published successively at East Moseley (Surrey), Fawsley House (nr. Daventry), Coventry, Wolston, and prob. Haseley (both Warwicks). Among those accused of writing them were Job Throckmorton (1545–1601; prob. the principal author) and J. *Udall, who both denied the charges, and J. *Penry, who was executed. Replies were published by T. *Cooper, Bp. of Winchester, R. *Bancroft, J. Lyly, and T. Nash. The tracts themselves, though prob. the most brilliant prose satire of the period, by their violence aroused hostility rather than sympathy for the Puritan party.

Modern edn. of Tracts with historical notes by W. Pierce (London, 1911). Facsimile of original edn., Leeds, 1967. There is a useful account of the Marprelate Controversy in The Works of Thomas Nashe, ed. R. B. McKerrow and F. P. Wilson, 5 (Oxford, 1958), pp. 34–65. D. J. McGinn, John Penry and the Marprelate Controversy (New Brunswick, NJ, 1966). L. H. Carlson, Martin Marprelate, Gentleman: Master Job Throkmorton Laid Open in his Colors (San Marino, Calif. [1981]). P. G. Stanwood in NCBEL 1 (1974), cols. 1957–64.

Marriage. See MATRIMONY.

marriage licences. Licences to dispense with the necessity of *banns have been granted by bishops since the early 14th cent. The power to issue such licences was confirmed to them in 1534 by the Ecclesiastical Licences Act 1533 (commonly known as the *Peter's Pence Act). The Clandestine Marriages Act 1753 (Lord *Hardwicke's Marriage Act) provided that marriages solemnized without banns or licence should be void according to the secular law, although acc. to Anglican Church law they were irregular but valid. It was repealed by the Marriage Act 1823, which declared clandestine marriages valid, but the officiating minister a felon.

Acc. to Canon B 34 of the 1969 Canons, marriage licences may be issued by those having episcopal authority or the commissary for faculties, Vicars General of the Archbishops and Bishops sede plena or sede vacante, the *guardian of the spiritualities, or *Ordinaries exercising the right of episcopal jurisdiction in the several jurisdictions respectively, but in practice they are generally granted by *surrogates appointed by the *chancellor. They are entirely a matter of grace. The Marriage Act 1949 requires that before a licence is granted one of the parties shall swear before the surrogate that he knows of no impediment or suit pending in any court to bar the marriage and that one of the parties has for the past 15 days had his or her abode in the parish or chapelry in which the marriage is to be solemnized, or that the church or chapel in which the marriage is to be solemnized is the usual place of worship of one of the parties.

The power to grant special licences to marry at any time and in any church, chapel, or other suitable or convenient place was exercised in both provinces by the Abps. of *Canterbury as legati nati. It was confirmed to them by the Peter's Pence Act, and specifically reserved in the Marriage Act 1823. In 1995 the fee was £90.

By the Marriage Act 1836, superintendent registrars were authorized to issue licences for marriages in the office of a registrar or a nonconformist place of worship. The Marriage Act 1949 extended this provision to C of E churches and chapels in which banns may be called, provided that the consent of the minister of the church or chapel is obtained and the marriage is solemnized by a clergyman. The law is now contained in the Marriage Act 1949 as amended by the Registration Service Act 1953 and the Marriage Act 1983.

The rulings mentioned do not apply to Scotland, where the law is completely different.

R. Phillimore, The Ecclesiastical Law of the Church of England (2nd edn., 1895), pp. 607–17; R. D. H. Bursell, Liturgy, Order and Law (Oxford, 1996), pp. 87–91. C. C. A. Pearce, 'The Roles of the Vicar-General and Surrogate in the Granting of Marriage-Licences', Ecclesiastical Law Journal, 2 (1990), pp. 28–36.

Marriott, Charles (1811–58), English divine. He was educated at Exeter and Balliol Colleges, Oxford, and in 1833 was elected a Fellow of Oriel, where he became closely associated with several of the *Tractarian leaders and a devoted disciple of J. H. *Newman. After Newman seceded to the RC Church Marriott remained with E. B. *Pusey a leader in Oxford of the High Church Movement. As a religious counsellor he exercised a wide influence, esp. on young men, notably E. *King. From 1839 to 1841 he was the first principal of Chichester Theological College, and from 1850 to 1855 vicar of the University Church at Oxford. A meticulous scholar, from 1841 onwards he collaborated with Pusey and J. *Keble in producing the '*Library of the Fathers', and bore the chief burden of the work of direction.

J. W. *Burgon, Lives of Twelve Good Men (1888), 1, pp. 296–373 (no. 3: 'The Man of Saintly Life'); R. W. *Church, The Oxford Movement (1891), ch. 5. J. H. Overton in DNB 36 (1893), pp. 196–8.

Marrow Controversy. A protracted controversy in the Church of *Scotland arising out of the condemnation by the *General Assembly in 1720 of The Marrow of Modern Divinity, a book written in 1645 by 'E.F.' (Edward Fisher, d. 1650, a London barber-surgeon, not, as sometimes thought, by the Oxford-educated Edward Fisher, fl. 1627–55). The book had been reissued, with a preface by James Hog of Carnock, in 1718. It advocated strongly *Calvinistic doctrines and was held to favour *antinomianism.

D. C. Lachman, The Marrow Controversy, 1718–1723 (Edinburgh [1988]).

Marsh, Herbert (1757–1839), Bp. of *Peterborough. Educated at King's School, *Canterbury, and St John's College, Cambridge, of which he was elected a Fellow in 1779, he studied in Germany under J. D. *Michaelis. Here he became conversant with the prevalent critical methods, esp. as applied to the Gospels, and after his return translated into English Michaelis's Introduction to the New Testament (4 vols., 1793–1801), adding a 'hypothesis' of his own on the murual relations of the Gospels. In 1805 he preached a series of sermons against the *Calvinist doctrines of *justification and the inamissibility of grace which provoked a violent controversy with C. *Simeon and other *Evangelicals. In 1807 he was elected Lady Margaret professor of divinity at Cambridge, holding the post until his death. His lectures on biblical criticism (1809–16), among the first to popularize German critical methods in England, were enthusiastically listened to by the University and The History of Sacred Criticism (1809) was based on the first of his courses. In 1814 he issued A Comparative View of the Churches of England and Rome, and in 1815 Horae Pelasgicae (pt. 1, all pub.), a learned study of the origin and language of the Pelasgi. In 1816 he was appointed Bp. of *Llandaff and three years later translated to Peterborough. The early years of his episcopate were marked by controversy arising from his anti-Evangelical measures and his refusal to license clergy of Calvinist beliefs. His profound and extensive erudition, his clear and active mind, his belief in the *Establishment, his ideal of rigid uniformity in matters of doctrine and liturgical practice, and his capacity for business made him the foremost English bishop of his age.

E. Venables in DNB 36 (1893), pp. 211–15.

Marsiglio (or Marsilius) of Padua (*c.*1275–1342), Italian scholar and author of the 'Defensor Pacis'. After studying at Padua, he went to Paris *c.*1311 to devote himself to medicine, was made rector of the university in 1313, and, after a period in N. Italy and Avignon, practised medicine and possibly studied theology in Paris from 1320. In 1324 he completed the 'Defensor Pacis', his principal work. When, in 1326, his authorship became known he fled to the Emperor, Louis of Bavaria, who had just been excommunicated. In 1327 *John XXII condemned five propositions of the 'Defensor' and excommunicated its author. From 1327 to 1329 Marsiglio accompanied the Emperor to Rome, where he was made Imperial Vicar. After the failure of Louis's policy he spent the remainder of his life at the court of Munich.

The 'Defensor Pacis' is one of the most challenging works produced in the Middle Ages. Acc. to Marsiglio, the State is the great unifying power of society to which the Church must be completely subordinated. It derives its authority from the people, who retain the right to censure and depose the Ruler. The Church, on the other hand, has no inherent jurisdiction whether spiritual or temporal. All her rights in this regard are given her by the State, which may withdraw them at will. She may own no property, but only use what the State lends her; her hierarchy is not of Divine but purely human institution; St *Peter was never given the primacy, and the Papacy owes its prerogatives chiefly to the *Donation of the Emp. *Constantine (a document the authenticity of which Marsiglio did not doubt). The principal authority in all ecclesiastical matters is the *General Council, which should be composed of priests and laymen. These ideas, which ran counter to the whole medieval conception of society, have led to Marsiglio of Padua's being claimed as a forerunner of the Reformers, modern democracy, and even totalitarianism.

The Defensor Pacis was first pr. at Basle in 1522, and was put on the *Index in 1559. De Translatione Imperii and De Iurisdictione Imperatoris in causis matrimonialibus, ed. M. Goldast, Monarchia S. Romani Imperii, 2 (Frankfurt, 1614), pp. 147–53 and 1383–91 respectively. Crit. edns. of the Defensor Pacis by C. W. Previté-Orton (Cambridge, 1928), with introd. and notes, and by R. Scholz (Fontes Iuris Germanici Antiqui in Usum Scholarum; Hanover, 1933). The Defensor Minor was ed. by C. K. Brampton (Birmingham, 1922); Defensor Minor and De Translatione Imperii, ed., with Fr. tr., by C. Jeudy and J. Quillet as Œuvres mineurs (Paris, 1979). A. Gewirth, Marsilius of Padua, the Defender of Peace (2 vols., Records of Civilization. Sources and Studies, 46; New York, 1951–6, with Eng. tr. of Defensor Pacis in vol. 2). Fr. tr. of Defensor Pacis, with comm., by J. Quillet (Paris, 1968). G. de Lagarde, La Naissance de l'esprit laïque au déclin du moyen-âge, 2 (Saint-Paul-Trois-Châteaux, 1934); rev. edn., 3 (Louvain, 1970). C. Pincin, Marsilio (Pubblicazioni dell'Istituto di Scienze Politiche dell'Università di Torino, 17; 1967). J. Quillet, La Philosophie politique de Marsile de Padoue (L'Église et l'État au Moyen Âge, 14; 1970). Marsilio da Padova: Convegno Internazionale (Padova, 18–20 settembre 1980) (Medioevo. Rivista di Storia della Filosofia Medievale, 5 (for 1979) and 6 (for 1980); [1982]). D. Sternberger, Die Stadt und das Reich in der Verfassungslehre des Marsilius von Padua (Sitzungsberichte der wissenschaftlichen Gesellschaft an der Johann Wolfgang Goethe-Universität Frankfurt am Main, 18, no. 3; Wiesbaden, 1981). J. Haller, 'Zur Lebensgeschichte des Marsilius von Padua', ZKG 48 (1929), pp. 166–97. A. P. d'Entrèves, The Medieval Contribution to Political Thought (1939), chs. 3 and 4, pp. 44–87. A. Gewirth, 'John of Jandun and the Defensor Pacis', Speculum, 23 (1948), pp. 267–72, establishing that Marsiglio was the sole author. N. Rubinstein, 'Marsilius of Padua and Italian Political Thought of his Time', in J. R. Hale and others (eds.), Europe in the Late Middle Ages (1965), pp. 44–75. M. [J.] Wilks, 'Corporation and representation in the Defensor Pacis', Studia Gratiana, 15 (1972), pp. 251–92. J. Rivière in DTC 12 (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 153–77, s.v. 'Marsile de Padoue', with bibl.

Martène, Edmond (1654–1739), liturgist. In 1672 Martène made his profession as a *Benedictine at the *Maurist house at *Reims and was later sent to *St-Germain-des-Prés to be trained under J. L. *d'Achery and J. *Mabillon. Of his many writings the chief is his De antiquis ecclesiae ritibus (3 vols., Rouen, 1700–2), a large collection of liturgical texts, with disquisitions on their historical significance. This he supplemented in 1706 by a Tractatus de antiqua ecclesiae disciplina. From 1708 till 1715 he worked on the Gallia Christiana, travelling extensively with Ursin Durand (d. 1773) through France and Belgium in search of MSS and other materials. Later the two scholars visited many religious houses of the Netherlands and Germany for documents, which were embodied in their Veterum scriptorum et monumentorum ecclesiasticorum et dogmaticorum amplissima collectio (9 vols. fol., 1724–33). Their journeys are described in the two volumes, Voyage littéraire de deux religieux bénédictins (1717 and 1724; both repr. Farnborough, 1969). Martène was a disciple of Claude *Martin, the son of Marie *Guyard, and the author of his biography (1697). He was also the sole compiler of the Annales Ordinis S. Benedicti, vol. 6 (1739), begun by Mabillon.

[R. P. Tassin,] Histoire littéraire de la congrégation de Saint-Maur (1770), pp. 542–71. H. Wilhelm and U. Berlière, Nouveau Supplément à l'histoire littéraire de la congrégation de Saint-Maur, 2 (Maredsous, 1931), pp. 48–57. J. Daoust, Dom Martène: Un géant de l'érudition bénédictine (Abbaye S. Wandrille, 1947). A.-G. Martimort, La Documentation liturgique de Dom Edmond Martène: Étude codicologique (ST 279; 1978). Bremond, 6 (1922), ch. 6: 'Dom Martin et Dom Martène', pp. 177–266. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 10 (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 2297–322. G.-M. Oury, OSB, in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 662–4.

Martensen, Hans Lassen (1808–84), Danish Protestant theologian. He was a native of Flensburg. After studying theology at Copenhagen (1827–32), and further studies in Germany and at Paris, he became a lecturer in Copenhagen in 1838 and professor of systematic theology in 1840. In 1854 he succeeded J. P. Mynster as Bp. of Seeland. As a theologian he was greatly influenced by G. W. F. *Hegel and German Idealism. His principal work, Den Christelige Dogmatik (1849; Eng. tr., 1866) rests on the principle of the harmony between faith and knowledge, in the light of which he interpreted the *Lutheran system of doctrine. His search for harmony led to an interest in *theosophical speculation, manifest in his Den Christelige Ethik (3 vols., 1871–8; Eng. tr., 1873–82), and in the German theosophical writer J. *Boehme, on whom he published an influential study (1881; Eng. tr., 1885). He was popular in English theological circles in his day, but is now chiefly remembered as S. *Kierkegaard's principal opponent in his attack upon the Established Church, in the course of which Kierkegaard died.

Coll. of his lesser works ed. Julius Martensen, Copenhagen, 1885, with detailed bibl. Eng. tr. of his Jacob Boehme (London, 1885); new edn., with notes by S. Hobhouse (ibid., 1949). Correspondence with I. A. *Dorner, ed. posthumously, 2 vols., Berlin, 1888. Martensen wrote some autobiog. reflections, pub. Copenhagen, 1882–3 (Ger. tr., 3 vols., 1883–4). The material that constituted Kierkegaard's attack was tr. by W. Lowrie, Kierkegaard's Attack upon 'Christendom' 1854 1855 (1944; repr., with new introd. by H. A. Johnson, Princeton, NJ, 1968). Lives of Martensen by V. Nannestad (Copenhagen, 1897) and S. Arildsen (vol. 1, all pub., ibid., 1932). P. Madsen in PRE (3rd edn.), 12 (1903), pp. 373–9; P. G. Lindhardt in Dansk Biografisk Leksikon, 9 (1981), pp. 445–50.

Martha, St. The sister of Mary and *Lazarus, who received Christ in her house during His ministry. From the incident related in Lk. 10: 38–42, she is commonly regarded as typifying the 'active' Christian life as contrasted with Mary, who typifies the 'contemplative'. Acc. to a medieval legend, Martha, Mary, and Lazarus came to the S. of France and founded churches at Marseilles, Aix, *Avignon, and other places. Feast day in E., 4 June; in W., 29 July.

On the legend, besides the collections of docs. listed under MARY MAGDALENE, L. *Duchesne, Fastes épiscopaux de l'ancien Gaule, 1 (1894), pp. 310–44 ('La Légende de sainte Marie-Madeleine', esp. sect. 3, pp. 325–9, 'La Légende de sainte Marthe'); G. *Morin, OSB, 'La Formation des légendes provençales. Faits et aperçus nouveaux', R. Bén. 26 (1909), pp. 24–33, with refs. to earlier lit.; E. Vacandard, 'La Venue de Lazare et Marie-Madeleine en Provence', RQH 100 (1924), pp. 257–305. G. Constable, Three Studies in Medieval Religious and Social Thought (Cambridge, 1995), pp. 1–141 ('The Interpretation of Mary and Martha'). H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 8 (pt. 1; 1929), cols. 2044–86, s.v. 'Lazare', with detailed bibl.; A. Solignac, SJ, and L. Donnat, OSB, in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 664–73, s.v. 'Marthe et Marie'. See also bibl. to LAZARUS.

Mar Thoma Church. See MALABAR CHRISTIANS.

Martin, St (d. 397), Bp. of Tours and a patron saint of France. He was born to pagan parents at Sabaria (now Szombathely, Hungary) either *c.*315 (as implied by Dialogues, 2. 7. 4), or *c.*336 (as implied by Vita, 3–4). Forced to adopt his father's profession of soldiering, Martin was already behaving exemplarily, giving half his cloak—his only garment—to a naked beggar at Amiens. A subsequent vision of Christ inspired him to seek baptism at the age of 18, though he remained a soldier until 356. Various travels and adventures ensued, including a spell as a hermit. In 360 Martin joined *Hilary at Poitiers and founded the nearby monastery of Ligugé, the first known north of the Alps. His growing fame as a holy man and healer led to his being popularly elected Bp. of Tours *c.*371. As bishop, Martin continued to practise and promote monasticism; he was active in evangelizing the countryside, replacing pagan shrines with churches; he healed the sick and championed the oppressed; and *Priscillian's condemnation by a secular court led him to denounce secular interference in Church matters. His younger contemporary and disciple *Sulpicius Severus wrote a Life and other hagiographical works about him, and his cult reached its zenith under the Merovingians. *Gregory of Tours preserves some independent information, as well as detailing miracles at his shrine. Feast day in W., 11 Nov.; in E., 12 Nov.

Sulpicius Severus, Vita Martini, to which are appended three letters, and Dialogi; also Chronica, 2. 50; Gregory of Tours, Historia Francorum, 10. 31. 3; for details of edns. see under SULPICIUS and GREGORY. The edn. of Sulpicius' Vita by J. Fontaine (SC 133–5; 1967–9), with Fr. tr., includes valuable introd. and extensive notes. E.-C. Babut, Saint Martin de Tours [1912], though highly tendentious, opened a new era of Martinian scholarship; cf. crit review art. by H. *Delehaye, SJ, 'Saint Martin et Sulpice Sévère', Anal. Boll. 38 (1920), pp. 5–136. Saint Martin et son temps: Mémorial du XVIe centenaire des débuts du monasticisme en Gaule 361–1961 (Studia Anselmiana, 46; Rome, 1961). C. [E.] Stancliffe, St Martin and his Hagiographer (Oxford Historical Monographs, 1983). L. Pietri, La ville de Tours du IVe au VIe siècle (Collection de l'École française de Rome, 69; Rome 1983), pp. 36–87; D. von der Nahmer, 'Martin von Tours: sein Mönchtum—seine Wirkung', Francia, 15 (for 1986; 1988), pp. 1–41 (with summary in Fr.). J. Fontaine in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 687–94, s.v. 'Martin (8)'.

On the cult, Mémorial de l'année martinienne M.DCCCC.LX M.DCCCC.LXI, with preface by G. Le Bras (Bibliothèque de la Société d'Histoire ecclésiastique de la France, 1962); E. Ewig, 'Der Martinskult im Frühmittelalter', Archiv für mittelrheinische Kirchengeschichte, 14 (1962), pp. 11–30. L. Pietri, op. cit., passim; R. Van Dam, 'Images of Saint Martin in Late Roman and Early Merovingian Gaul', Viator, 19 (1988), pp. 1–27; S. [A.] Farmer, Communities of Saint Martin: Legend and Ritual in Medieval Tours (Ithaca, NY, and London, 1991).

Martin, St (*c.*520–79), Bp. of Braga. He was a Pannonian by birth. After visiting the Holy Land, he travelled to Spain (*c.*550) and founded a monastery at Dumio, becoming its first abbot and later bishop for the community. In *c.*570 he was made bishop of the metropolitan see of Braga and presided at the Second Council of Braga (572). He was active in furthering the conversion of the Sueves of Galicia, formerly *Arians, to Catholicism, and in promoting the cult of St *Martin of Tours in the Spanish peninsula. He wrote a letter to a bishop, Boniface, 'De Trina Mersione', opposing the Spanish practice of using one immersion only at baptism, which, adopted probably through fear of Arianism, he considered to smack of *Sabellianism. He also wrote several moral treatises, among them the 'Formula Vitae Honestae' and the 'De Ira' (both based on *Seneca), translated a collection of the sayings of the Desert Fathers into Latin ('Sententiae Patrum Aegyptiorum'), and compiled an important collection of canons relating to the duties and status of clergy and laity (the so-called 'Capitula Martini'). A sermon 'De Correctione Rusticorum' has considerable interest for the light it throws on the older pagan beliefs of the country population. Feast day, 20 Mar.

J. P. Migne, PL 72. 17–52 (from A. *Gallandi), and 84. 574–86 ('Capitula Martini'). Mod. crit. edn. of Works by C. W. Barlow (New Haven, Conn., 1950); Eng. tr., with introd., by id. (Fathers of the Church, 62, 1969, pp. 3–109). C. P. *Caspari, Martin von Bracaras Schrift De Correctione Rusticorum (Christiania, 1883), with imp. introd. The chief authorities for his life are St *Gregory of Tours and *Venantius Fortunatus; also St *Isidore of Seville, De Vir. Ill. 35 [22 in edn. of Carmen Codoñer Merino]. J. Madoz, SJ, 'Martín de Braga. En el XIV centenario de su advenimiento a la Península (550–1950)', Estudios eclesiásticos, 25 (1951), pp. 219–42. U. Domínguez del Val, Estudios sobre literatura latina hispano-cristiano, 1: 1955–1971 (Corpus Patristicum Hispanum, 2; Madrid, 1986), pp. 201–14. Bardenhewer, 5, pp. 379–88; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 492 f. and 656. M. C. Díaz y Díaz in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 678–80, s.v., with bibl.

Martin I, St (d. 655), Pope from 649. He was a vigorous opponent of the *Monothelites. Before his election as Pope had been confirmed from Constantinople by the Emp. Constans II, Martin had condemned Monothelitism at a Synod at the *Lateran in 649. When Constans found Martin unwilling to sign the *Typos, he tried to induce his exarch, Olympius, to seize the Pope's person, but in vain. Olympius' successor, Theodore Calliopas, did so, however, and after a year in captivity at Naxos on the way, Martin arrived at Constantinople in Dec. 653. Here he was condemned to exile, though the sentence was commuted to banishment to the Chersonesus (Crimea), where he died soon afterwards. He is the last of the Popes who is venerated as a martyr, and is actually mentioned by name in the *Canon of the Mass in the *Bobbio Missal. Feast day, 13 Apr.; in E., also 20 Sept.; in W., formerly 12 Nov.

A few of his letters and privilegia repr. from G. D. *Mansi in J. P. Migne, PL 87. 119–211; others calendared in P. Jaffé (ed.), Regesta Pontificum Romanorum, 1 (ed. G. Wattenbach, Leipzig, 1885), pp. 230–4. Crit. edn. of the docs. relating to the 649 Lateran Council by R. Riedinger (ACO, 2nd ser. 1; Berlin, 1984). LP (Duchesne), 1, pp. 336–40. *Anastasius Bibliothecarius in J. P. Migne, PL 129. 586–604. P. Peeters, SJ, 'Une Vie grecque du pape S. Martin I', Anal. Boll. 51 (1933), pp. 225–62, with text. W. M. Peitz, SJ, 'Martin I und Maximus Confessor. Beiträge zur Geschichte des Monotheletenstreites in den Jahren 645–68', Hist. J. 38 (1917), pp. 213–36 and 429–58; O. Bertolini, 'Riflessi politici delle controversie religiose con Bisanzio nelle vicende del sec. vii in Italia', Settimane di Studi del Centro Italiano di Studi sull' Alto Medievo, 5 (Spoleto, 1958), pp. 733–89. E. Caspar, 'Die Lateransynode von 649', ZKG 51 (1932), pp. 75–137. Hefele and Leclercq, 3 (pt. 1; 1909), pp. 435–61. E. Michael, SJ, 'Wann ist Papst Martin I bei seiner Exilierung nach Constantinopel gekommen?', ZKT 16 (1892), pp. 375–80. Martino I Papa (649 653) e il suo tempo: Atti del XXVIII Convegno storico internazionale Todi, 13–16 ottobre 1991 (Spoleto, 1992). L. *Duchesne, L'Église au VIᵉ siècle (1925), pp. 441–53. Mann, 1 (pt. 1; 1902), pp. 385–405. É. Amann in DTC 10 (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 182–94; C. M. Aherne in NCE 9 (1967), pp. 300 f., both s.v.

Martin IV (*c.*1210–85), Pope from 1281. Simon de Brie (or Brion) was a native of Touraine. After being canon and treasurer at St Martin's at Tours, he was appointed Chancellor of France by *Louis IX in 1260. In 1261 Urban IV created him Cardinal-priest of St Cecilia. As Papal legate he conducted the negotiations for the crown of Sicily with Charles of Anjou and presided over several French synods, including that held at Bourges in 1276. In 1281 he was elected Pope at Viterbo against his will through the influence of Charles of Anjou, on whom he remained dependent throughout his pontificate. He restored Charles to the influential position of Roman Senator of which Nicholas III had deprived him, and with a view to assisting the planned attack on the Greek Empire he excommunicated in 1281 its Emperor, Michael Palaeologus, thus destroying the union between the Latin and Greek Churches achieved at the Second Council of *Lyons in 1274. His unpopularity with the Roman people led to his expulsion from the city, and he died at Perugia. He was a supporter of the *Franciscan Order, whose privileges he extended by the bull 'Ad fructus uberes' in 1281.

Les Registres de Martin IV, 1281–1285 (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 2nd ser. 16; 1935). Two contemporary biogs. repr. in LP (Duchesne), 2, pp. 459–65. N. Backes, Kardinal Simon de Brion (Papst Martin IV) (Breslau Diss., Berlin, 1910), with bibl. pp. 10 f. Mann, 16 (1932), pp. 171–356. R. Sternfeld, 'Das Konklave von 1280 und die Wahl Martins IV. (1281)', Mitteilungen des Instituts für Österreichische Geschichtsforschung, 31 (1910), pp. 1–53. R. Kay, 'Martin IV and the Fugitive Bishop of Bayeux', Speculum, 40 (1965), pp. 460–83. É. Amann in DTC 10 (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 194–7, s.v.

Martin V (1368–1431), Pope. Oddo (Otto) *Colonna, a man of simple tastes and free from intrigue, was unanimously elected Pope at the Council of *Constance in 1417. His reign marked the end of the *Great Schism, the Antipope Clement VIII submitting to him in 1429. Three years after his election Martin entered Rome, then in a ruinous condition, and restored its churches and other public buildings. In the Papal States he also re-established order with the help of his relatives, among whom he distributed honours and offices. He strengthened the Papal power by dissolving the Council of Constance in 1418, and that of Pavia and Siena in 1424. In the following years he curtailed the liberties of the Church of France and increased the influence of the Papacy in England, though he failed to secure the repeal of the Statutes of *Provisors and *Praemunire. His attempts at suppressing the *Hussites and at restoring union with the Greek Church were also unsuccessful.

E. v. Ottenthal, 'Die Bullenregister Martin V. und Eugen IV.', Mittheilungen des Instituts für Österreichische Geschichtsforschung, Ergänzungsband, 1 (1885), pp. 401–589, esp. pp. 401–568. K. A. Fink, Verzeichnis der in den päpstlichen Registern und Kameralakten Martins V. vorkommenden Personen, Kirchen und Orte des Deutschen Reiches (Repertorium Germanicum, 4; 3 parts, 1943–58). F. Baix (ed.), La Chambre apostolique et les 'Libri Annatarum' de Martin V (1417 1431) (Analecta Vaticano-Belgica, 14; 2 vols. in 3 parts, '1942' [1947]–60). P. Partner, The Papal State under Martin V: The administration and government of the temporal power in the early fifteenth century (1958). K. A. Finke, Martin V. und Aragon (Historische Studien, 340; 1938). J. Haller, 'England und Rom unter Martin V.', Quellen und Forschungen aus italienischen Archiven und Bibliotheken, 8 (1905), pp. 249–304; K. A. Finke, 'Martin V. und Bologna (1428–1429)', ibid. 23 (1931–2), pp. 182–217. M. Dykmans, SJ, 'D'Avignon à Rome. Martin V et le cortège apostolique', Bulletin de l'Institut Historique Belge de Rome, 39 (1968), pp. 203–310, with texts. R. G. Davies, 'Martin V and the English episcopate, with particular reference to his campaign for the repeal of the Statute of Provisors', EHR 92 (1977), pp. 309–44. Pastor, 1, pp. 208–82. G. Mollat in DTC 10 (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 197–202, s.v.; K. A. Fink in NCE 9 (1967), pp. 301 f., s.v.

Martin, Claude (1619–96), *Maurist. The son of Marie *Guyard, he deeply resented being parted from his widowed mother when she joined the *Ursulines in 1631 and went to Canada in 1639. In 1641 he entered the Maurist abbey at Vendôme and came to hold various offices in houses of the Congregation, being assistant general in 1668–75 and 1681–90. He encouraged and supported work on the Maurist editions of St *Augustine and later of the Greek Fathers. He was particularly concerned, however, with the development of the spiritual training of monks, and it is in this sphere that his importance has been recognized in modern times. His Pratique de la Règle de Saint Benoît (1680) had a considerable influence in the Maurist Congregation and in other parts of the *Benedictine Order. It emphasized the place of contemplation and withdrawal from the world, rather than of activity, however laudable. Martin himself would have preferred a solitary life and was attracted to contemplative or passive forms of prayer. He was influenced by his mother's spirituality, edited her letters (infelicitously changing her style), and wrote her Life. His own disciples include E. *Martène.

For details of edns. of works on his mother see GUYARD, M. His Conférences ascétiques were ed. by R.-J. Hesbert, OSB (2 vols. [1956–7]). Life of Martin by E. Martène, OSB (Tours, 1697). Modern study by G.-M. Oury, OSB (Solesmes, 1983). Bremond, 6 (1922), pp. 177–226. G.-M. Oury, OSB, in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 695–701, s.v., with bibl.

Martin, Gregory (d. 1582), biblical translator. One of the original scholars of St John's College, Oxford, he became a tutor in the household of Thomas Howard, Duke of Norfolk. On the Duke's imprisonment for Catholicism, Martin escaped to *Douai, where he joined W. *Allen. In 1573 he was ordained priest. After some time in Rome he returned to Douai in 1578, where he spent most of the rest of his life translating the *Vulgate into English. He described the religious life and organized charities of Rome in a work written in 1580–1, entitled 'Roma Sancta', which remained unpublished until 1969. He died on 28 Oct.

1582, the year in which the NT appeared at Reims. See also DOUAI–REIMS BIBLE.

The MS of his Roma Sancta (now in the National Library of Australia), ed. by G. B. Parks (Rome, 1969), with introd. on 'The Life and Works of Gregory Martin', pp. xi–xxxii. W. McKane, Selected Christian Hebraists (Cambridge, 1989), pp. 76–110, with notes pp. 226–31 and bibl. p. 250.

Martineau, James (1805–1900), *Unitarian divine. He was the brother of Harriet Martineau (1802–76). Educated at Norwich Grammar School, he was converted in 1822 and in the same year entered Manchester College at York. After work as a Unitarian minister at Dublin and Liverpool, during which he became increasingly interested in problems of philosophy, he became professor of philosophy (1840) at, and afterwards principal of, Manchester New College (1869), but continued his pastoral activities. He was a strong and ardent upholder of the theist position against the negations of physical science and elaborated the 'Design argument' with the modifications made necessary by the Darwinian theory of evolution; and did much to convince many of his contemporaries of all shades of theological belief that the Monism of H. *Spencer and the Materialism of John Tyndall (1820–93) did not cover all the facts. In Types of Ethical Theory (2 vols., 1885) and in A Study of Religion (2 vols., 1888) he found powerful arguments for theism in the facts of the moral consciousness and the existence of the laws of nature. He also did much for the organization of the Unitarian body in England and Ireland.

Martineau's other writings include A Study of Spinoza (1882), The Seat of Authority in Religion (1890), and some collections of Hymns and 'Home Prayers'.

Essays, Reviews and Addresses. Selected and revised by the Author (4 vols., 1890–1). Life and Letters, ed. J. *Drummond and C. B. Upton (London, 1902). A. H. G. Craufurd, Recollections of James Martineau (1903). Other Lives by A. W. Jackson (London, 1900) and J. E. *Carpenter (ibid., 1905). H. *Sidgwick, Lectures on the Ethics of T. H. Green, Mr. Herbert Spencer, and J. Martineau (1902; posthumous), pp. 313–74. A. Gordon in DNB, Suppl. 3 (1901), pp. 146–51. A. M. *Fairbairn in EB (11th edn.), 17 (1911), pp. 797–800, s.v.

Martínez de Ripalda, Juan. See RIPALDA, JUAN MARTÍNEZ DE.

Martyn, Henry (1781–1812), Anglican missionary. He was born at Truro and studied at St John's College, Cambridge (1797–1801), of which he became a Fellow in 1802. His acquaintance with C. *Simeon awakened his interest in missionary work, and having been ordained deacon in 1803, he became a chaplain of the East India Company at Calcutta in 1805. Besides doing missionary work among the natives he translated the NT into Hindustani and Persian, the Psalms into Persian, and the BCP into Hindustani. He also prepared a translation of the NT into Arabic. On his way back from Persia he died at Tokat, where he was given Christian burial by the *Armenian clergy. His life of devotion to the cause of the missions made a great impression in Britain and he became the hero of several literary publications. In the American BCP (1979), feast day, 19 Oct.

Journals and Letters of the Rev. Henry Martyn, ed. S. *Wilberforce (2 vols., London, 1837). Lives by J. Sargent (London, 1819; repr., Edinburgh, 1985) and G. Smith (London, 1892); more popular account by C. E. Padwick (ibid., 1922). M. L. Loane, They were Pilgrims (Sydney, 1970), pp. 45–98; rev. in id., Three Faithful Servants (Blackwood, SA, 1991), pp. 21–88. Unsigned art. in DNB 36 (1893), pp. 315–17.

martyr (Gk. μάρτυς, 'witness'). The term was originally used of the Apostles as witnesses of Christ's life and resurrection (e.g. Acts 1: 8, 1: 22), but with the spread of *persecution it was reserved to those who had undergone hardships for the faith, and finally it was restricted to those who had suffered death. The age before *Constantine was the classic period of martyrs, esp. the era of *Diocletian. As those who had followed Christ's example literally, they quickly became the focus of veneration in the Church. They were also regarded as specially inspired by the Holy Spirit, and their utterances greatly treasured; some scholars see in this belief a reference to Mk. 13: 11. From the earliest time martyrdom, the 'baptism of blood', was considered an equivalent of normal Baptism where this had not been received. Since the end of the 2nd cent. the anniversary of the martyr's death (natalis, i.e. his [heavenly] birthday) was kept as a feast with a liturgical celebration at his tomb; and later churches were frequently built on the site. The fame of the martyrs often spread beyond their city and country. They were venerated as powerful intercessors, their relics were sought after, and their Lives widely read and often embellished by numerous legends.

In the Roman liturgy, after the BVM and the Apostles, martyrs rank before all other saints. The liturgical colour is red, to signify that they shed their blood for the faith, and acc. to RC practice until 1969 relics of martyrs had to be contained in every consecrated altar. This is still the law in the E. Church.

H. *Delehaye, SJ, Les Origines du culte des martyrs (Subsidia Hagiographica, 20; 1912); id., Les Passions des martyrs et les genres littéraires (1921). O. Michel, Prophet und Märtyrer (Beiträge zur Förderung christlicher Theologie, 37, Heft 2; 1932); H. von Campenhausen, Die Idee des Martyriums in der alten Kirche (1935); E. Günther, Μάρτυς: Die Geschichte eines Wortes (1941); M. Lods, Confesseurs et martyrs: Successeurs des prophètes dans l'Église des trois premiers siècles (Cahiers théologiques, 41 [1958]); J. Jeremias, Heiligengräber in Jesu Umwelt (Mt. 23, 29; Lk. 11, 47): Eine Untersuchungen zur Volksreligion der Zeit Jesu (Göttingen, 1958); N. Brox, Zeuge und Märtyrer: Untersuchungen zur frühchristlichen Zeugnis-Terminologie (Studien zum Alten und Neuen Testament, 5; Munich, 1961). T. Klauser, Christlicher Märtyrerkult, heidnischer Heroenkult und spätjüdische Heiligenverehrung (Arbeitsgemeinschaft für Forschung des Landes Nordrhein-Westfalen, 91 [1960]). W. H. C. Frend, Martyrdom and Persecution in the Early Church (Oxford, 1965). T. Baumeister, Die Anfänge der Theologie des Martyriums (Münsterische Beiträge zur Theologie, 45; 1980). R. Lane Fox, Pagans and Christians (1986), pp. 434–50. D. Wood (ed.), Martyrs and Martyrologies (Studies in Church History, 30; Oxford, 1993). H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 10 (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 2359–512; W. Rordorf and A. Solignac, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 718–37, both s.v. H. Strathmann in TWB 4 (1942), pp. 477–520; Eng. tr., 4 (1967), pp. 474–514, s.v. μάρτυς.

Martyr, Peter. See PETER MARTYR.

martyrium (Gk. μαρτύριον). A church built over the tomb or relics of a *martyr or occasionally a church built just in honour of a martyr. The cleric in charge of such a church was sometimes known as the 'martyrarius'.

A. Grabar, Martyrium: Recherches sur le culte des reliques et l'art chrétien antique (Collège de France. Fondation Schlumberger pour les Études byzantines, 2 vols., 1946; Album, 1943). H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 10 (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 2512–23, s.v.

martyrology. An official register of Christian martyrs. As distinct from individual 'Passions' describing the martyrdoms of those who have suffered for the Christian faith, martyrologies are collective in structure. The earliest are calendars, merely naming the martyr and the place of martyrdom under the day of the festival. They may be local, like the calendars of Rome (354) and Carthage (*c.*505), or general, like the '*Hieronymian Martyrology' (q.v.) and the 'Breviarium Syriacum' (441). The later 'historical' martyrologies, notably those of *Bede (*c.*730), *Florus of Lyons, *Rabanus, *Ado, and *Usuard (all 9th cent.), add stories of martyrs from sources of varying value. The '*Roman Martyrology' (q.v.; 1584) is a revision of Usuard's. The practice of reading in choir at *Prime the martyrology for the day is already laid down by *Chrodegang of Metz and in the Aachen Capitula of 817, and until recently was preceptive in religious houses.

The standard source is the magisterial edn. and discussion of the 'Hieronymian Martyrology' in AASS, Nov. 2, 1 (1894); new edn. by H. *Quentin, OSB, with important notes by H. *Delehaye, SJ, in AASS, Nov. 2, 2 (1931). H. Achelis, Die Martyrologien: Ihre Geschichte und ihr Wert (Abh. (Gött.), NF 3, Heft 3; 1900); H. Quentin, OSB, Les Martyrologes historiques du moyen âge (1908); J. Dubois, Les Martyrologes du Moyen Âge Latin (Typologie des Sources du Moyen Âge Occidental, fasc. 26; 1978). R. Aigrain, L'Hagiographie (1953), pp. 11–106. B. de Gaiffier, 'De l'usage et de la lecture du martyrologe. Témoignages antérieurs au XI[e] siècle', Anal. Boll. 79 (1961), pp. 40–59. H. Delehaye, SJ, in CE 9 (1910), pp. 741 f., s.v.; H. Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 10 (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 2523–619, s.v.; J. Dubois, OSB, in Catholicisme, 8 (1979), cols. 776–83, s.v., repr. in id., Martyrologes d'Usuard au Martyrologe Romain (Abbeville, 1990), pp. 3–15. See also bibl. to separate martyrologies and authors mentioned above.

Martyrs, Acts of the. See ACTS OF THE MARTYRS.

Martyrs, Era of the. See DIOCLETIANIC ERA.

Martyrs, Four Crowned. See QUATTRO CORONATI.

Marucchi, Orazio (1852–1931), Italian archaeologist. Under the influence of G. B. *de Rossi, the *catacombs of Rome became the chief object of his research. In 1879 he founded the 'Collegium Cultorum Martyrum' and in quick succession became Scriptor of the *Vatican Library, director of the *Lateran Museum, lecturer on Christian archaeology at several institutes, and, after de Rossi's death (1894), editor of the Nuovo Bullettino di Archeologia Cristiana. As secretary of the pontifical 'Commissione di Archeologia Sacra', he conducted the excavations of many famous tombs, such as the 'Coemeterium Valentini' (1876 ff.) and parts of the Catacomb of *Priscilla. Owing to the considerable diversity of his interests, his work was sometimes wanting in precision in its details. Among his principal writings are Éléments d'archéologie chrétienne (1900–3) and Le catacombe romane (1903; 2nd edn., 1933), besides a great number of contributions to learned periodicals.

The 2nd edn. of Marucchi's Le catacombe romane was pub. posthumously by E. Josi [1933], with biog. introd., pp. xix–xxxi. C. Cecchelli, 'Scrittori contemporanei di cose romane. Orazio Marucchi', Archivio della R. Società Romana di Storia Patria, 52 (1929; stampato nel 1931), pp. 381–406, with list of his works, pp. 407–52. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 10 (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 2619–38, s.v.

Mary, the Blessed Virgin, the Mother of Christ. The place accorded to her in Catholic and Orthodox theology and devotion issues from her position as Mother of the Redeemer. She is accounted pre-eminent among the *saints (q.v.).

In the NT the Blessed Virgin figures prominently in the birth stories of Mt. (1–2) and esp. Lk. (1–2). Though mentioned several times during Christ's public ministry, she remains mainly in the background; acc. to the Fourth Gospel she reappears at the foot of the Cross (Jn. 19: 25). In the Upper Room at Jerusalem she witnessed the growth of the early Church (Acts 1: 14). Both her maternity and her virginity are stated in the Gospels; she conceived and gave birth to Jesus (Lk. 1: 31–3) without losing her virginity (Mt. 1: 20 and 23; Lk. 1: 34 f.). See VIRGIN BIRTH.

In the earliest patristic writings Mary is mentioned only rarely, and then usually in conjunction with *Eve. *Justin Martyr (d. *c.*165) contrasts her obedience with the disobedience of Eve, and the same theme is developed by *Irenaeus (d. *c.*202). Her perpetual virginity was first asserted in the apocryphal Book of *James; it may have been taught by Irenaeus and *Clement of Alexandria, but was certainly held by *Athanasius, who used the term 'ever virgin' (ἀειπάρθενος); and, though contested by *Jovinian, it was accepted by orthodox Fathers of the E. and W. from the 5th cent. onwards. The development of Marian doctrine received considerable impetus at the Council of *Ephesus (431), which upheld the title *Theotokos (θεοτόκος). This expression was prob. in use among Alexandrian theologians perhaps from as early as *Origen; it became common in the 4th cent.; and, though it was contested by *Nestorius as being Christologically incorrect, it was defended by *Cyril of Alexandria and became generally accepted after 431. In the W., where at this time Mary played a lesser role than in the E., she was esp. associated with the Church; St *Ambrose held her to be a type of the Church, in that in giving birth to Christ she also brought forth Christians who were formed in her womb with Him. In the 6th cent. the doctrine of the corporeal *Assumption of Mary was formulated in orthodox circles by *Gregory of Tours (d. 594); it had previously been found in apocryphal documents dating from the late 4th cent. onwards. Also in the 6th cent. the feast of the Assumption of the BVM became more widely observed, and sermons preached on the occasion, e.g. by Theoteknos of Livias (between 550 and 650) and by *Germanus of Constantinople, emphasized her power in heaven. Belief in the Assumption seems to have spread in both E. and W. without arousing opposition in the pre-Reformation period; it was defined for RCs in 1950. The doctrine of the *Immaculate Conception of the BVM, on the other hand, was a matter of dispute throughout the Middle Ages. In England *Eadmer wrote a treatise in defence of the doctrine, which had been denied by his master, *Anselm of Canterbury; Eadmer sought to solve the problem of the universal transmission of *original sin in the sexual act by teaching the 'passive' conception, that is, that only Mary herself, without reference to the parental act, was without stain of original sin from the moment of her conception; he argued that because God could do it and because it was fitting, He also did do it. This teaching was developed in more stringently scholastic terms by *Duns Scotus and led to a long-drawn-out controversy. The doctrine of the Immaculate Conception was defended by the *Franciscans and later the *Jesuits against the *Dominicans; it was defined for RCs in 1854.

In modern times, esp. in the 19th and 20th cents., efforts have been made to secure a Papal definition of Mary as 'Mediatrix of All Graces' and 'Co-Redemptrix'. The former description was widely popularized by St *Alphonsus Liguori, and Pope *Benedict XV sanctioned a Mass and Office of the BVM under this title. At the Second *Vatican Council, however, a chapter on Mary was added to the Constitution on the Church, against the wishes of those who sought a separate document on her. The chapter is remarkable for its restraint, its insistence on Scripture and the Fathers, and its stress on Mary's complete dependence on her Son.

The Marian doctrine of the Orthodox Church is very similar to that of the RC Church, though the corporeal Assumption of the BVM has not been made a dogma and the Immaculate Conception is denied. The Reformers, esp. M. *Luther, stressed the humility of Mary and attacked her glorification by the RC Church. Among all Protestant bodies there was a strong reaction against excessive devotion to her. In the C of E the *Thirty-Nine Articles forbade the invocation of saints, incl. the BVM, but the *Caroline Divines insisted on her holiness, and A. *Stafford could call her 'fountain of grace'. Since the *Oxford Movement certain Anglican theologians have accorded the BVM an increasingly important place which has come to differ little from the RC position. On the Continent also there has been a tendency among German Protestant theologians to restore an element of Marian doctrine.

Belief in the efficacy of Mary's intercession and hence direct prayers to her is prob. very old. It is attested in a Greek form of the well-known prayer 'Sub tuum praesidium' found in a papyrus dating from the late 3rd to early 4th cent. After the Council of Ephesus devotion to the Theotokos became so strong that her name was even substituted in the official service books in place of that of the Lord at the end of some of the liturgical prayers. In the W. St *Thomas Aquinas formulated the doctrine of the '*hyperdulia' proper to her, which, though infinitely inferior to the 'latria' (worship of adoration) due to her Son, surpasses that befitting angels and saints.

Liturgical devotions in the W. came to include the '*Little Office of Our Lady' as well as the Saturday Mass and Office. Popular piety found expression in the *Hail Mary, *Rosary, *Angelus, May and October devotions, and pilgrimages, esp. to *Lourdes and *Fatima. Since the Second Vatican Council, however, these practices have come to occupy a less prominent place in the RC Church. In the Orthodox Church Marian devotion is expressed in the *Acathistus hymn and the Theotokia or short prayers to the Theotokos following the invocation of the Trinity which came into use in the 8th century.

The first Marian feast was called the Commemoration (μνήμη) of St Mary and was kept in many places on the Sunday before Christmas; this developed into the feast of the Assumption (15 Aug.). The other major feasts of the BVM are the (Immaculate) Conception (8 Dec.), the *Nativity (8 Sept.), traditionally the *Annunciation (25 March; now in the RC Church called the Annunciation of the Lord and accounted a feast of Christ), the *Purification (2 Feb.; since 1960 called the Presentation of Christ), and the *Visitation (2 July; in the RC Church and some modern Anglican calendars, now 31 May). The calendar of the BCP retains all of these except the Assumption (which is retained in the Oxford University Calendar), but only the Annunciation and the Purification have a proper Collect, Epistle, and Gospel. A major general feast of the BVM is included in some modern Anglican calendars, e.g. in the ASB on 8 Sept., and in the American BCP (1979) on 15 Aug. Since 1969 the RC Church has observed 1 Jan. as the 'Solemnity of Holy Mary, the Mother of God' (in place of the *Circumcision), thus reverting to a practice attested at Rome in the *Gregorian Sacramentary. A number of minor feasts have also been observed in the RC Church; they include the (*Seven) Sorrows of the BVM (15 Sept.), the Presentation of St Mary in the Temple (21 Nov.), Our Lady of the Snows (5 Aug.; now renamed the 'Dedication of the Basilica of St Mary'), Our Lady of Mt. *Carmel (16 July; now reduced to an optional memorial) and the Holy Name of Mary (12 Sept.; now suppressed).

The earliest recorded vision of the BVM is supposed to be that of *Gregory Thaumaturgus (d. *c.*270), recorded in a panegyric almost certainly by *Gregory of Nyssa. The most famous modern apparitions are those of Lourdes and Fatima; lesser ones are those of *La Salette, Knock in Ireland (1879), Beauraing (1932–3) and Banneux (1933) in Belgium, and Medjugorje (1981) in what was then Yugoslavia; in all these (except Knock) the recipients were children. The apparition which resulted in the striking of the popular 'miraculous medal' took place in 1830; the visionary was Catherine Labouré, a 'Daughter of Charity' of St *Vincent de Paul. See also ECUMENICAL SOCIETY OF THE BLESSED VIRGIN MARY, LORETO, and WALSINGHAM.

There is an extensive collection of patristic texts ed. S. A. Campos, OFM, Corpus Marianum Patristicum (Facultas Theologica Hispaniae Septentionalis, Sedes Burgensis; 6 vols. in 7, Burgos, 1970–81). Classical discussions include St Thomas Aquinas, ST 3, qq. 27–30, and P. *Canisius, De Beata Maria Virgine (Ingoldstadt, 1577). Modern general studies from the RC position include P. Sträter, SJ, Katholische Marienkunde (3 vols., Paderborn, 1948–51); H. du Manoir, SJ, Maria: Études sur la Sainte Vierge (8 vols., 1949–71); E. *Schillebeeckx, OP, Maria, Moeder van de verlossing (Antwerp, 1954; Eng. tr., 1964); K. McNamara (ed.), Mother of the Redeemer: Aspects of Doctrine and Devotion (Dublin, 1959); H. [C.] Graef, Mary: A History of Doctrine and Devotion (2 vols., 1963–5); A. Müller in Mysterium Salutis, ed. J. Feiner and M. Löhrer, 3 (pt. 2; Einsiedeln [1969]), pp. 393–510; R. Laurentin, ibid. 4 (pt. 2 [1973]), pp. 316–37; J. McHugh, The Mother of Jesus in the New Testament (1975); G. Söll, Mariologie (Handbuch der Dogmengeschichte, 3, Heft 4; 1978), with extensive bibl. C. Miegge, La Vergine Maria (Torre Pellice, 1950; Eng. tr., 1955; a Protestant critique of the RC position). M. Thurian, Marie: Mère du Seigneur, Figure de l'Église (Taizé, 1962; Eng. tr., 1963). R. E. Brown and others, Mary in the New Testament: A Collaborative Assessment by Protestant and Roman Catholic Scholars (Philadelphia and London, 1978). A. M. Allchin, The Joy of All Creation: An Anglican Meditation on the Place of Mary (1984; 2nd edn., 1993). M. P. Carroll, The Cult of the Virgin Mary: Psychological Origins (Princeton, 1986). R. Schimmelpfennig, Die Geschichte der Marienverehrung im deutschen Protestantismus (Paderborn, 1952). R. Caro, SJ, La Homiletica Mariana Griega en el Siglo V (Marian Library Studies, NS 3–5; Dayton, Oh., 1971–3). J. Ledit, Marie dans la Liturgie de Byzance (Théologie Historique, 39 [1976]). Periodicals include Marianist (Dayton, Oh., 1905 ff. [suspended 1922–6]), Marianum (Rome, 1939 ff.), Marian Studies (Paterson, NJ, 1950 ff.), Ephemerides Mariologicae (Madrid, 1951 ff.). C. P. Ceroke and others in NCE 9 (1967), pp. 335–86, s.v. 'Mary, Blessed Virgin'; P. Grelot and others in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 408–82, s.v. 'Marie (Vierge)'. See also works cited under ASSUMPTION, IMMACULATE CONCEPTION, and other feasts.

Mary, Gospel of. An apocryphal Gnostic Gospel. Two pages of the original Greek survive in a 3rd-cent. *Oxyrhynchus papyrus, now in the John Rylands Library, Manchester (Pap. Ryl. III, 463), and a further fragment (Oxyrhynchus 3525) from a different 3rd-cent. papyrus. An incomplete 5th-cent. papyrus MS in Berlin (Pap. 8502) contains some eight pages (out of a total of 18) of a Coptic (Sahidic) version, including the passages extant in Greek, with some variations. In this Gospel *Mary [Magdalene] describes a vision in which the progress of the Gnostic through the seven planetary spheres is explained.

The Manchester text is ed. by C. H. Roberts in his Catalogue of the Greek and Latin Papyri in the John Rylands Library, Manchester, 3 (Manchester, 1938), pp. 18–23, incl. Eng. tr. and notes. P. Oxy. 3525, ed. P. J. Parsons, Oxyrhynchus Papyri, 50 (1983), pp. 12–14. Coptic text ed., with Ger. tr. and introd., by W. C. Till, Die gnostischen Schriften des koptischen Papyrus Berolinensis 8502 (TU 60; 1955), pp. 24–32 and 62–79; 2nd edn. by H.-M. Schenke (ibid., 1972), with additional material, pp. 336 and 338 f.; also, with Eng. tr. by R. McL. Wilson and G. W. MacRae in D. M. Parrott (ed.), Nag Hammadi Codices V, 2–5 and VI with Papyrus Berolinensis 8502, 1 and 4 (Nag Hammadi Studies, 11; Leiden, 1979), pp. 453–71; and, with Fr. tr., by A. Pasquier (Bibliothèque Copte de Nag Hammadi, Section 'Textes', 10; 1983). H. C. Puech in Schneemelcher, 1 (5th edn., 1987), pp. 313–15; Eng. tr., 1 (1991), pp. 391–5.

Mary, Gospel of the Birth of. An apocryphal book containing a narrative of the birth of the BVM to St *Joachim and St *Anne, her life in the Temple from the age of 3 to 12 years, her betrothal to St *Joseph, the *Annunciation, and the *Virgin Birth of Christ. It is a Latin work of the Middle Ages, though in a preface sometimes attached to it is attributed to St *Jerome, who is stated to have composed it after a Hebrew original. Its compiler drew largely on the canonical Gospels and other sources, esp. the Book of *James (the 'Protevangelium').

The text is taken over almost bodily in the '*Golden Legend' (q.v.). Crit. edn. by C. *Tischendorf (ed.), Evangelia Apocrypha (2nd edn., Leipzig, 1876), pp. 113–21. Brief summary of contents in M. R. James, The Apocryphal New Testament (1924), pp. 79 f. Bardenhewer, 1, pp. 536 f.

Mary of Egypt, St (5th cent.), penitent. After a career of infamy at Alexandria as an actress and courtesan, she is said to have been converted on the threshold of the Holy Sepulchre at *Jerusalem and fled to the desert E. of Palestine to expiate her sins. Here she is recorded to have lived a life of complete isolation for 47 years, and then made the acquaintance of a priest, Zosimas, who gave her communion and prepared her for death. Her story became very popular and she was the subject of many elaborate legends. Her 'Life' was translated into a number of languages; it found a place in the '*Golden Legend' and forms part of the liturgy for the 5th Sunday of Lent in the Orthodox Churches. Feast day in the E., 5th Sunday in Lent (also 1 Apr.); in the W., 2 (also 3 and 9) Apr.

The earliest account of St Mary of Egypt is in *Cyril of Scythopolis' 'Life of St Cyriacus'. This material was developed in legendary fashion by *Sophronius of Jerusalem (7th cent.). AASS, Apr. 1 (1675), pp. 67–90, with Gk. text, pp. xiii–xxi (of which Lat. tr., pp. 76–82). Eng. tr. (of Slavonic version) by Sisters Katherine and Thecla in their translation of St *Andrew of Crete, The Great Canon ... (Newport Pagnell, 1974), pp. 65–84. F. Delmas, 'Remarques sur la vie de Sainte Marie l'Égyptienne', ÉO 4 (1900–1), pp. 35–42; id., 'Encore Sainte Marie l'Égyptienne', ibid. 5 (1901–2), pp. 15–17. A. T. Baker, 'Vie de Sainte Marie l'Égyptienne', Revue des langues romanes, 59 (1916–17), pp. 145–401. 13th-cent. Life by Rutebeuf ed., with introd. on the legend, by B. A. Bujila (University of Michigan Contributions in Modern Philology, 12; Ann Arbor, 1949). K. Kunze (ed.), Die Legende der heiligen Maria Aegyptiaca: Ein Beispiel hagiographischer Überlieferung in 16 unveröffentlichen deutschen niederländischen und lateinischen Fassungen (Texte des späten Mittelalters und der frühen Neuzeit, 28; 1978). M. Schiavone de Cruz-Sáenz, The Life of Saint Mary of Egypt: An Edition and Study of the Medieval French and Spanish Verse Redactions (Biblioteca Universitaria Puvill, Estudios, 1; Barcelona [1979]). K. Kunze, Studien zur Legende der heiligen Maria Aegyptiaca im deutschen Sprachgebiet (Philologische Studien und Quellen, 49; 1969), esp. ch. 1. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 10 (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 2128–36, s.v. 'Marie l'Égyptienne', with bibl.

Mary of the Incarnation, Bl (1566–1618). See ACARIE, MADAME.

Mary of the Incarnation, Bl (1599–1672). See GUYARD, MARIE.

Mary Magdalene, St. A follower of Christ out of whom He is said to have cast 'seven devils' and who ministered to Him in Galilee (Lk. 8: 2). Later she stood by His cross at the Crucifixion (Mk. 15: 40), with two other women discovered the empty tomb and heard the angelic announcement of His *Resurrection (Mk. 16: 1 ff., etc.), and was granted an appearance of the Risen Christ early on the same day (Mt. 28: 9, Jn. 20: 11 ff.). At least since the time of St *Gregory the Great, W. tradition has identified her with the 'woman which was a sinner' who anointed Christ's feet in Simon's house (Lk. 7: 37), and with Mary the sister of *Martha, who also anointed Him (Jn. 12: 3); but the Gospels give no real support to either identification and they have now been abandoned by the RC Church. In several *Gnostic texts (e.g. the Gospel of Mary and Pistis Sophia) Mary Magdalene plays a prominent role as a mediator of revelation or in conversation between the risen Christ and His disciples. Acc. to an early legend in the E. Church, she went to *Ephesus with St *John and died there, whence her body was later taken to *Constantinople. In the W. a very popular but late and quite unfounded legend had arisen by the 9th cent. that she, with Martha and *Lazarus, came to the S. of France by sea, and in the Middle Ages her supposed relics were venerated at various places in Provence, and also at Vézelay. Feast day, 22 July.

Classic studies by J. *Faber Stapulensis (Paris, 1517 and 1519). AASS, Jul. 5 (1727), pp. 187–225. M. J. *Lagrange, OP, 'Jésus a-t-il été oint plusieurs fois et par plusieurs femmes?', R. Bibl. NS

9 (1912), pp. 504–32; R. E. Brown, SS, The Gospel according to John, 1 (Anchor Bible, 1966), pp. 449–52; A. Feuillet, 'Les deux onctions faites sur Jésus, et Marie-Madeleine', Revue Thomiste, 75 (1975), pp. 357–95. U. Holzmeister, SJ, 'Die Magdalenfrage in der kirchlichen Überlieferung', ZKT 46 (1922), pp. 402–22 and 556–84. F. Bovon, 'Le Privilège pascal de Marie-Madeleine', New Testament Studies, 30 (1984), pp. 50–62. On the NT material, see also other comm. to the Gospels. [E. M. Faillon (ed.)], Monuments inédits sur l'apostolat de sainte Marie-Madeleine en Provence et les autres apôtres de cette contrée (pub. by J. P. *Migne, 2 vols., 1848); C. Chabaneau (ed.), Sainte Marie-Madeleine dans la littérature provençale: Recueil des textes provençaux en prose et en vers relatifs à cette sainte (1887). H. M. Garth, Saint Mary Magdalen in Mediaeval Literature (Johns Hopkins University Studies in Historical and Political Science, 47th ser., no. 3; 1950). N. Hansel, Die Maria-Magdalena-Legende (Greifswalder Beiträge zur Literatur- und Stilforschung, 16, Heft 1; 1937). V. Saxer, 'Les Saintes Marie Madeleine et Marie de Béthanie dans la tradition liturgique et homilétique orientale', Rev. S.R. 32 (1958), pp. 1–37; id., Le Culte de Marie Madeleine en occident des origines à la fin du moyen âge (Cahiers d'archéologie et d'histoire, 3; 1959); cf. B. de Gaffier, SJ, in Anal. Boll. 78 (1960), pp. 161–8; V. Saxer, Le Dossier vézelien de Marie Madeleine (Subsidia Hagiographia, 57; 1975). E. Duperray (ed.), Marie-Madeleine dans la mystique, les arts et les lettres: Actes du Colloque international, Avignon, juillet 1988 (1989). S. Haskins, Mary Magdalene: Myth and Metaphor (1993). V. Saxer in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 8 (Rome, 1967), cols. 1078–1104, s.v. 'Maria Maddalena', with extensive bibl.; P.-M. Guillaume in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 559–75, s.v. 'Marie-Madeleine (sainte)'. For other works on the legend of her connection with S. France, see bibl. to MARTHA, ST.

Mary Magdalene de' Pazzi, St (1566–1607), *Carmelite mystic. Born of a noble family of Florence, she entered the Carmelite convent in her native town in 1582 and was professed during a grave illness two years later. In 1598 she was made novice-mistress and later subprioress. During the first years after her profession she was severely tried by spiritual desolation, temptations, and physical sufferings, but from 1590 her life became a series of ecstasies during which she often gave spiritual counsels which were taken down by her fellow-nuns and published after her death. She was an ardent believer in the value of suffering for the spiritual life and the salvation of souls, and the last three years of her life were spent bedridden in constant pain and often in great spiritual aridity. She was canonized in 1669. Feast day, 25 (formerly 29) May.

Works ed. L. M. Brancaccius, Florence, 1609; modern edn. under the direction of F. Nardoni (7 vols., Florence, 1960–6; Eng. tr. by G. M. Pausback, O. Carm., 5 vols., Fatima, 1969–75; also distributed by the Carmelites at Aylesford, Kent, and Aylesford, Ill.). Early Lives in Italian by V. Puccini, Carmelite, her last confessor (1st draft written in 1609; final version pub. Florence, 1621), and V. Cepari, SJ, also her confessor (written *c.*1626; first pub., Rome, 1669); both tr. into Lat. and pr., with introd. and other material, in AASS, Mai. 6 (1688), pp. 177–351; Eng. tr. of Life by V. Cepari in the series 'The Saints and Servants of God' (ed. F. W. *Faber, 1849). Modern studies by Sister Maria Minima di Gesù Sacramentato, O. Carm. (Florence, 1941; Eng. tr., Chicago, 1958), E. Ancilli, OCD (Rome, 1967), and B. Secondin, O. Carm. (ibid., 1974). A. E. Verbrugghe, O. Carm., The Image of the Trinity in the Works of St Mary Magdalene de' Pazzi (Rome, 1984). E. Ancelli, OCD, in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 576–88, s.v. 'Marie-Madeleine de Pazzi'.

Mary Major, Church of St. See SANTA MARIA MAGGIORE, ROME.

Mary, Queen of Scots (1542–87). She was the only child of James V, who died when she was a few days old, leaving her heiress to the throne of Scotland, of which she was crowned Queen in 1543. Her mother was Mary of Lorraine (or 'Mary of Guise', 1515–60). In 1548 she was sent to France for her education, and in 1558 married to the Dauphin Francis, becoming Queen Consort in 1559. After the early death of Francis (1560) she returned to Scotland (1561), where nationalist hatred of the pro-French Guise regime had combined with Protestant agitation led by J. *Knox to establish a Protestant-led government. Mary had a series of stormy interviews with Knox, who remained impervious to her charm. During her reign she displayed no understanding of her native kingdom, showed little inclination to defend Catholicism, and dissipated the considerable reserves of loyalty among her subjects. In 1565 she married her cousin, Henry Stewart, Lord Darnley. The match was approved both by the Pope and *Philip II of Spain, and by Darnley she became the mother of the future James VI of Scotland (*James I of England) in 1566. In 1566 Darnley collaborated in the murder of Mary's secretary, David Rizzio, of whom he had become jealous. This murder caused her complete estrangement from Darnley, who, in 1567, was assassinated by James Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell, who had become her favourite. In the same year Bothwell obtained a divorce from his wife and married Mary, after he had been tried for the murder of Darnley but found not guilty by judges who are generally held not to have been impartial. This marriage, which was concluded acc. to the Protestant rite, was denounced by the Pope and opposed by most European courts. How far she was implicated in the murder of Darnley is still disputed; the verdict depends chiefly on the contested authenticity of the so-called Casket Letters, purporting to have been written by Mary to Bothwell. Soon after this third marriage the Protestant lords rose against her, defeated her army at Carberry Hill, and imprisoned her in Lochleven Castle. Bothwell, whom she refused to give up, fled to Scandinavia; the rebellious lords confirmed the position of Protestantism as the established Church and suppressed Catholicism. In 1567 Mary signed her abdication and James VI was crowned king. In 1568 she escaped from Lochleven and raised an army, but was once more defeated at Langside. She fled to England, where she was imprisoned and tried by a commission, which produced the Casket Letters against her with a series of the most humiliating accusations against which she refused to defend herself. The commission of peers gave an open verdict, stating that nothing derogatory to her had been proved. This verdict technically restored her reputation, which had been gravely injured by the Bothwell marriage, and *Pius V wrote her a conciliatory letter. *Elizabeth I, however, who, on account of the legally ambiguous circumstances of her own birth, feared for the security of her throne as long as Mary was at liberty, continued to hold her in close captivity. There was a proposal, supported by the Catholic powers, to have her marriage with Bothwell annulled, to enable her to marry the Duke of Norfolk; but when a Catholic uprising in the north failed, the scheme came to nothing and Norfolk was executed (1572). For the next 14 years Mary was held a prisoner, at first in honourable house arrest guarded by the Earl of Shrewsbury, and later by Sir Amias Paulet.

Her secret correspondence was watched by spies, and an unguarded letter, written in 1586, which implicated her in the Babington Plot to murder Elizabeth, brought about her condemnation. She met her death at Fotheringay on 8 Feb. 1587 with great courage.

A. Labanoff, Lettres, instructions, et mémoires de Marie Stuart (7 vols., 1844); A. Teulet, Lettres de Marie Stuart (1859); Calendar of State Papers, Scotland. Modern rendering of the contemporary hostile account of the reign by George Buchanan (1506–82) by W. A. Gatherer (Edinburgh, 1958). J. H. Pollen, SJ, Papal Negotiations with Mary, Queen of Scots, etc. (Scot. Hist. Soc. 37; 1901); id., A Letter from Mary, Queen of Scots, to the Duke of Guise (ibid. 43; 1904); id., Mary, Queen of Scots, and the Babington Plot (ibid., 3rd ser. 3; 1922). Modern studies by D. Hay Fleming (London, 1897), A. Fraser (ibid., 1969), J. Wormald (ibid. [1988]) and ed. M. Lynch (Oxford, 1988). G. Donaldson, All the Queen's Men: Power and Politics in Mary Stewart's Scotland (1983). On the Casket Letters controversy, W. Goodall, Examination of the Letters said to be written by Mary, Queen of Scots, to Bothwell (2 vols., 1754); T. F. Henderson, The Casket Letters (1890); M. H. Armstrong Davison, The Casket Letters: A Solution to the Mystery of Mary Queen of Scots and the Murder of Lord Darnley (1965); G. Donaldson, The First Trial of Mary, Queen of Scots (1969). S. A. and D. R. Tannenbaum, Marie Stuart, Queen of Scots (A Concise Bibliography) (Elizabethan Bibliographies, 30–2; New York, 1944–6). T. F. Henderson in DNB 36 (1893), pp. 373–90.

Mary Tudor (1516–58), Queen of England from 1553. The daughter of *Henry VIII and Catherine of Aragon, she was betrothed to the Dauphin of France in 1518, and in 1522 by the Treaty of Windsor to the Emp. *Charles V, who, however, married a Portuguese princess in 1526. The disgrace and unhappiness of her mother and the subsequent separation made a deep impression on her. During *Anne Boleyn's ascendancy (1527–36) she was in disfavour; she was excluded from the succession at the birth of *Elizabeth (1533), regarded as the King's bastard, and placed in the humiliating position of lady-in-waiting to Anne Boleyn's daughter. In 1536 she signed a document acknowledging Henry's religious supremacy and the illegitimacy of her mother's marriage, and so was received back into favour, under the influence of Jane Seymour. In 1537 she was godmother to the future *Edward VI, and during the next years lived quietly in retirement. After Henry's last marriage she was on affectionate terms with Catherine Parr, and in 1544 was given the second place in the succession, after Edward, during whose reign she continued to live away from Court on her extensive estates. She made a courageous stand against the demands of the Protector *Somerset and his successors in government that she should abandon her maintenance of the traditional Catholic liturgy, particularly the *Mass, in her household.

On Edward's death (1553) Mary became Queen, despite the attempt by the dying King and his leading Protestant advisers to put Lady Jane Grey in her place. Her accession was welcomed with enthusiasm by the supporters of the old religion, and, acting on the advice of the Emperor, she at first showed leniency to her Protestant opponents though proscribing their religion. She was crowned by Stephen *Gardiner, Bp. of Winchester, and soon afterwards betrothed to *Philip II of Spain despite the opposition of Parliament. In 1554 she displayed great courage in quelling Thomas Wyatt's plot, and resolved to rule henceforth with greater sternness. Among the many victims of the persecution following the plot were Jane Grey and her husband; and Elizabeth, who had possibly been implicated, was committed to the Tower. In July 1554 Philip landed in England, but the marriage proved a failure and was disliked by the people. Early in 1555 R. *Pole, who had arrived in England at the end of 1554, reconciled the country to the Papacy. In the same year the heresy laws were restored, and the trials for heresy began, the steadfastness of the condemned greatly serving the cause of Protestantism. This persecution and her inability to have children lost her the affection of her people; Philip returned to the Continent; and in 1555 Mary also lost Gardiner, her trusted Chancellor. In 1555–6 T. *Cranmer, H. *Latimer, N. *Ridley, J. *Hooper, and others were burned as heretics; and new conspiracies, with Elizabeth at their centre, were discovered and severely quelled. In 1557 Philip, needing English aid against France, temporarily returned to the Queen; and war was declared on France in June, the French being defeated at St-Quentin. But in 1558 Calais fell, a blow which severely damaged Mary's remaining prestige. From this time her health began to fail, and she died at St James's Palace on 17 Nov. 1558.

P. F. Tytler, England under the Reigns of Edward VI and Mary, 2 (1839), pp. 186–500. The Chronicle of Queen Jane, and of the two years of Queen Mary, ed. J. Gough Nichols (Camden 1st ser. 48; 1850), and 'The Vita Mariae Angliae Reginae of Robert Wingfield of Brantham', ed. D. MacCulloch, Camden Miscellany, 28 (Camden 4th ser. 29; 1984), pp. 181–301, are contemporary accounts of the early days of Mary's reign. Modern Lives by H. F. M. Prescott (London, 1940; 2nd edn., 1952) and D. [M.] Loades (Oxford, 1989), with bibl. D. M. Loades, The Reign of Mary Tudor (1979; 2nd edn., 1991). J. Loach and R. Tittler (eds.), The Mid-Tudor Polity c.1540–1560 (1980). S. Lee in DNB 36 (1893), pp. 333–54.

Marys in the NT. Besides (1) the Virgin *Mary and (2) St *Mary Magdalene, there are four (or perhaps three) others. These are: (3) 'The wife of Cleopas' (Jn. 19: 25), who stood by the Cross. Some have identified her with '[Christ's] mother's sister', who is mentioned immediately before, but different women are probably meant. (4) 'The mother of James and Joses' (Mk. 15: 40), who stood by the Cross and was a witness of the Empty Tomb (Mk. 16: 1). She may well be the same as (3); and if this is so, her sons *James and Joses may be identified with the *Brethren of the Lord of those names. (5) Mary of Bethany, the sister of *Martha and *Lazarus (Jn. 11: 1 ff.), who sat at Christ's feet when he visited their village (Lk. 10: 38 ff.). Acc. to Jn. 12: 1–3, during the last week of the Lord's life she 'anointed the feet of Jesus, and wiped his feet with the hair of her head'. She has, particularly in the liturgy, been identified with Mary Magdalene (q.v.). (6) 'The mother of John *Mark' (Acts 12: 12).

Maskell, William (1814–90), ecclesiastical antiquary. Educated at University College, Oxford, he became an extreme *High Churchman and took holy orders in 1837. His two books, The Ancient Liturgy of the Church of England (1844) and Monumenta Ritualia Ecclesiae Anglicanae (1846), were important contributions to the revival of liturgical studies in the C of E. As chaplain to H. *Phillpotts, Bp. of Exeter, Maskell conducted the examination of G. C. *Gorham when the latter was presented to the vicarage of Brampford Speke; and the issue of the case led Maskell to secede to the RC Church in 1850. He never received RC ordination, but devoted himself to antiquarian studies and public service in Cornwall.

J. M. Rigg in DNB 36 (1893), pp. 413 f., s.v.

Mason, Francis (1566–1621), Archdeacon of Norfolk. He was educated at Oriel College, Oxford, and later had connections with Merton and Brasenose Colleges. His best-known writing was Of the Consecration of the Bishops in the Church of England (1613), written with the encouragement of Abp. G. *Abbot in refutation of the recently fabricated *Nag's Head Story. Composed in dialogue form and in an entertaining style and drawing on the records of *Lambeth Palace, it sought to establish the validity of the consecration esp. of M. *Parker. In reply to several attacks by RC writers, Mason revised and enlarged the work, and in this form it was reissued posthumously in a Latin translation by N. Brent in 1625. Its spirited defence of the C of E against Rome procured for him the title 'Vindex Ecclesiae Anglicanae'.

Extract from Of the Consecration of the Bishops in P. E. More and F. L. Cross (eds.), Anglicanism (1935), pp. 378–89 (no. 163). A. Wood, Athenae Oxonienses (ed. P. Bliss), 2 (1815), cols. 305–8. B. Porter in DNB 36 (1893), pp. 417–19.

Mass (Lat. missa). A title of the *Eucharist (q.v.). The word is a late form of missio (cf. late Lat. ascensa for ascensio, collecta for collectio), itself derived from mittere, 'to send'. (The older attempts to trace it back to a Heb. root may safely be ignored.) St *Avitus of Vienne (*c.*500) refers to its use, in churches and in the law courts, for the dismissal of the people (ep. 1 to Gundobald, PL 59. 199). The same use is attested by St *Isidore of Seville (Etymol. 6. 19. 4). But the word had long been current also for the service from which the people were dismissed. St *Ambrose (ep. 20; PL 16. 995) already applies to the Eucharist the expression 'missam facere' ('to perform the Mass'). The term was also used (less commonly) of other services, e.g., in the Rule of St *Benedict, of the Divine Office. In the present Roman Rite, '*Ite, missa est' remains the regular form of dismissal at the end of Mass. The word was retained by T. *Cranmer in the 1549 BCP ('The Supper of the Lord and the Holy Communion, commonly called the Mass'), but disappeared from later editions. In modern times it has come to be associated with the doctrine of the Eucharistic Sacrifice and in the C of E its use as a title of the Eucharist was revived by *High Churchmen.

J. A. Jungmann, SJ, 'Zur Bedeutungsgeschichte des Wortes Missa', ZKT 64 (1940), pp. 26–37. A. Pagliaro, 'Da missa est a missa "messa" ', Atti della Accademia Nazionale dei Lincei, 8th ser., Rendiconti. Classe di Scienze morale, storiche e filologiche, 10 (1955), pp. 104–35. C. Mohrmann, 'Missa', VC 12 (1958), pp. 67–92, repr. in her Études sur le latin des Chrétiens, 3 (1965), pp. 351–76. Jungmann (1958 edn.), 1, pp. 230–3 (Eng. tr., 1, 1951, pp. 173–5). A. *Fortescue in CE 9 (1910), pp. 790–2, s.v. 'Mass, Liturgy of the. A. Name and Definition'.

Mass, music for the. Those parts of the service sung by the choir or congregation (known as the concentus*) may be divided into music for (1) the Ordinary of the Mass (the Kyrie, Gloria in Excelsis*, Creed, Sanctus and Benedictus qui venit*, Agnus Dei* and Ite, missa est*) in which the words are always the same; and (2) the *Propers, in which the words vary acc. to the occasion. These have traditionally comprised the *Introit, *Gradual (replaced in the 1970 Missal by a *responsorial Psalm), *Offertory (dropped in 1970), and *Communion anthem. The Gradual used to be followed by *Alleluia and a verse, replaced on Sundays in Lent and certain penitential days by a *tract (verses of a Psalm); since 1970 the Alleluia has been sung after the second biblical reading, i.e. immediately before the Gospel. *Sequences were common in the Middle Ages but their number was drastically reduced at the Council of *Trent and has been still further curtailed in recent years.

The oldest chant for the Ordinary is little more than an inflective recitative corresponding to that used in the accentus* (or parts of the Mass sung by the officiant), and the Ite, missa est usually repeated the melody of the Kyrie. With the growth of polyphony from the 11th cent. onwards compositions for two or more voices began to appear. In the early 15th cent. the Sanctus and Agnus occur with a common musical arrangement, to be followed shortly by Gloria Credo pairs, and later in the 15th cent. a complete series (or 'Mass-cycle') became common. England and France seem to have been in the van of this development, except that in England the Kyrie was not usually included. In the earliest examples the Gregorian chant forms a substratum of the composition, occurring as a cantus firmus for one of the voices. The full development of polyphony in the 16th cent. led to the composition of very elaborate settings, such as those of G. P. da *Palestrina and W. *Byrd. In the 18th cent. orchestral settings became popular on the Continent and eventually led to the introduction of music ostensibly designed for the Mass into the concerthall. After the Reformation some of the choral parts of the Mass were preserved in Latin in the *Lutheran Church and it was for liturgical use that J. S. *Bach originally composed parts of his Mass settings. At about this time it became customary to divide the liturgical texts (esp. the Gloria in Excelsis and the Creed) into a series of separate musical numbers, in order to provide a variety of movement; this practice continued in the RC Church until it was forbidden by *Pius X in 1903. As the music was elaborated it became increasingly divorced from the words of the liturgical texts and the Sanctus grew so long that it was often not completed by the time the celebrant reached the consecration; it then became usual to postpone the Benedictus until after the consecration. Against this background, the proponents of the *Liturgical Movement encouraged the revival of plainchant. In recent years, and esp. since the Second *Vatican Council, there has been increased emphasis on the need for music in which the congregation can take part.

The translation of the liturgy into the vernacular in England in the 16th cent. created a need for new musical settings to fit the new text, and these were provided by a succession of English composers from J. *Merbecke to C. V. *Stanford and H. Darke (1883–1976). Until the 19th cent. the use of musical settings for the Eucharist in the C of E, however, was largely confined to cathedral and *collegiate churches, and even there usually only the Kyrie and Creed were set to music. When the *Oxford Movement led to the introduction of *High Mass into parish churches, new settings of the full texts became common, while those of Merbecke enjoyed a widespread revival. The recent modern-language liturgies have led to the composition of new musical settings, mostly designed for congregational singing and often employing the idioms of 20th-cent. popular music.

P. Wagner, Geschichte der Messe, 1: Bis 1600 (Leipzig, 1913 [all pub.]). O. Ursprung, Die katholische Kirchenmusik (Potsdam, 1931). W. Apel, Gregorian Chant [1958]. A. Hughes, OSB, 'The Enrichment of the Gregorian Cycle. Notes on the Music of the Ordinarium Missae', Laudate, 21 (1943), pp. 78–85; 22 (1944), pp. 41–7. E. H. Fellowes, English Cathedral Music from Edward VI to Edward VII (1941; 5th edn. by J. A. Westrup, 1969). B. Stäbelin and others in Die Musik in Geschichte und Gegenwart, 9 (1961), cols. 147–218, s.v. 'Messe'; R. Steiner and others in S. Sadie (ed.), The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, 11 (1980), pp. 769–97, s.v., both with further bibl.

Mass of the Catechumens. See CATECHUMENS, MASS OF THE.

Mass of the Faithful. See FAITHFUL, MASS OF THE.

'Massa Candida' ('White Lump'). See UTICA, THE MARTYRS OF.

Massillon, Jean-Baptiste (1663–1742), French *Oratorian preacher. A native of Hyères in Provence, he joined the Oratory in 1681 was ordained priest in 1691, and in 1696 L. A. *de Noailles appointed him Director of the Seminary of St-Magloire at Paris. From 1699 he often preached before Louis XIV (who voiced the mot that whereas hitherto he had been very well satisfied with his preachers, after hearing Massillon he was very ill-satisfied with himself). In 1717 he was nominated Bp. of Clermont (consecrated 1718) and in 1719 became a Member of the Academy. He was one of the foremost preachers of a great generation, much respected even by leaders of the *Enlightenment (*Voltaire, J. Le R. *D'Alembert). If his classical style fell short of the sublimity of J.-B. *Bossuet, his sermons were marked by unsurpassed brilliance, colour, and vehemence and he was unrivalled as a preacher of moral seriousness. Among his most celebrated sermons were the discourse 'On the Fewness of the Elect' (1704) and his series of *Lent sermons ('Le Petit Carême') delivered before Louis XV in 1718. He preached the funeral orations of C. de N. de Villeroy, Abp. of Lyons (1693), of Louis XIV 'le Grand' (1715; which began Dieu seul est grand) and of Liselotte of the Palatinate, Duchess of Orléans (1723). He spent his last 20 years in the devoted service of his diocese.

Sermons ed. J. Massillon, Cong. Orat. (nephew), in 15 vols. (Paris, 1745–9); later edn. of his Œuvres complètes by E. A. Blampignon (Bar-le-Duc, 3 vols., 1865–7). M. A. Bayle, Massillon, étude historique et littéraire (1867). E. A. Blampignon, Vie de Massillon d'après des documents inédits (1879); id., L'Épiscopat de Massillon (1884); id., Massillon: Supplément à son histoire et à sa correspondance (1891); J. Janin, Massillon et l'éloquence de la chaire (1882); A. A. L. Pauthe, Massillon (1908). J. Ehrard and A. Poitrineau (eds.), Études sur Massillon (Actes de la "Journée Massillon", Clermont-Ferrand, ... 25 mai 1974) (Publications de l'Institut d'Études Massif Central, 13; Clermont-Ferrand [1975]); J. Ehrard and J. Renwick (eds.), Catalogue de la Bibliothèque de Jean-Baptiste Massillon (ibid. 15 [1977]). A. M. P. Ingold, L'Oratoire et le jansénisme au temps de Massillon (1880). S. J. Washington in NCE 9 (1967), pp. 435 f., s.v.; P. Auvray in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 753–6, s.v.

Massoretes (from Heb. מסרת, Mas(s)oreth, prob. 'tradition'), Jewish grammarians who worked on the Hebrew text of the OT between about the 6th and 10th cents. AD. There were three main centres of Massoretic activity, Palestinian, Babylonian, and Tiberian, of which the last (based in Tiberias in N. Palestine) eventually gained the supremacy; the text of the Tiberian Massoretes thus finally became the recognized text form (although the Babylonian system continued to be used by Yemenite communities). In their endeavours to preserve a biblical text free from accretion, alteration, or corruption, the Massoretes provided marginal notes, which sometimes preserve careful reproductions of irregularities, and detailed instructions for copyists. There are two main types of Massoretic note: abbreviated notes which were written in the left- or right-hand margins of the text (the massorah parva), and more detailed explanations written in the upper or lower margins (the massorah magna). The latter includes detailed lists, which were sometimes copied at the end of the text if they could not be fitted into the margins (massorah finalis). These were subsequently collected in alphabetical order and printed at the end of Rabbinic Bibles. Among the best known aspects of the work of the Massoretes was their introduction into the text of the OT of *vowel points and accents, which were intended to show how words should be pronounced at a time when Hebrew had ceased to be a living language. The system was based on the pronunciation of the Synagogues and Schools. The text which derives from the work of the Massoretes is known as the 'Massoretic text'.

C. D. Ginsburg (ed.), The Massorah compiled from MSS (4 vols. in 3, 1880–1905). Modern scholars now hold that the Massorah is not and never existed as an independent corpus, but that it was essentially associated with a given text form. Thus the Leningrad MS B. 19a had its own Massorah; this has been ed. by G. Weil in the new edn. of the Biblia Hebraica Stuttgartensia by K. Elliger and W. Rudolph (Stuttgart [1978]), and the Hebrew University Bible Project, based on the Aleppo codex, contains the Massorah, magna and parva, as well as the text; pub. began with The Book of Isaiah, ed. M. H. Goshen-Gottstein (Jerusalem, 1975 ff.). The classic study is J. Buxtorf (the elder), Tiberias sive Commentarius Masorethicus Triplex (Basle, 1620). C. D. Ginsburg, Introduction to the Massoretico-Critical Edition of the Hebrew Bible (1897; repr. with prolegomenon by H. M. Orlinsky, New York, 1966). C. D. Ginsburg (ed.), Jacob ben Chajim's Introduction to the Rabbinic Bible (1865); id. (ed.), The Massoreth ha-Massoreth of Elias Levita (1867); these two works are repr. with prolegomenon by N. H. Snaith (New York, 1968); R. Butin (ed.), The Ten Nequdoth of the Torah (Baltimore, 1906; repr. with prolegomenon by S. Talmon, New York, 1969). S. Frensdorff, Die Massora Magna, 1. Massoretisches Wörterbuch (Hanover and Leipzig, 1876; repr. with prolegomenon by G. E. Weil, New York, 1968). W. Wickes, A Treatise on the Accentuation of the Three so-called Poetical Books of the Old Testament, Psalms, Proverbs, and Job (Oxford, 1881); id., A Treatise on the Accentuation of the Twenty-One so-called Prose Books of the Old Testament (ibid., 1887); these last two works were repr. with prolegomenon by A. Dotan (New York, 1970). P. Kahle, Der masoretische Text des Alten Testaments nach der Überlieferung der babylonischen Juden (1902); id., Masoreten des Ostens (1913); id., Masoreten des Westens (2 vols., 1927–30). G. E. Weil, Élie Lévita, humaniste et massorète (Studia Post-Biblica, 7; Leiden, 1963); id., Initiation à la Massorah: L'Introduction au Sépher Zikhronot d'Élie Lévita (Leiden, 1964). I. Yeivin, Introduction to the Tiberian Masorah, Eng. tr. of Heb. (orig. pub., Jerusalem, 1971/2), tr. and ed. E. J. Revell (Society of Biblical Literature, Masoretic Studies, 5; Missoula, Mont. [1980]). Textus: Annual of the Hebrew University Bible Project (Jerusalem, 1965 ff.). A. Dotan in Encyclopedia Judaica, 16 (Jerusalem, 1972), cols. 1401–82, with detailed bibl.

Master of Misrule. See MISRULE, LORD OF.

Master of the Sentences (Lat. Magister Sententiarum). A title in use from the 12th cent. onwards for *Peter Lombard (d. *c.*1160) on account of the central place which his 'Libri Sententiarum' occupied as a textbook in the medieval schools.

Mater et Magistra. The encyclical letter issued by Pope John XXIII 'On Recent Developments of the Social Question in the Light of Christian Teaching'. It was dated 15 May 1961 to commemorate the 70th anniversary of Rerum Novarum, but it was not published until 15 July of that year.

Text in AAS 53 (1961), pp. 401–64. Convenient Eng. tr. in D. J. O'Brien and T. A. Shannon (eds.), Catholic Social Thought (Maryknoll, NY [1992]), pp. 84–128, with introd. pp. 82 f. J. N. Moody and J. G. Lawler, The Challenge of Mater et Magistra (New York [1963]); J.-Y. Calvez, SJ, Église et société économique (1963; Eng. tr. [1964]); J. F. Cronin, PSS, Christianity and Social Progress: A Commentary on Mater et Magistra (Baltimore and Dublin [1965]).

material sin. An action which though in itself ('materially') contrary to the Divine law is not culpable, because the agent acted either in ignorance (e.g. when someone takes another's property, believing it to be his own) or under external constraint. It is contrasted with '*formal sin' (q.v.).

Mathew, Arnold Harris (1853–1919), *Old Catholic bishop. Educated for the Anglican ministry, he was ordained priest in the RC Church in 1878; but in 1892 he lost his status by a marriage and later was allowed to officiate in the C of E with the sanction of Abp. F. *Temple. On 28 Apr. 1908 he received episcopal consecration at Utrecht from the Dutch Old Catholic Church as their Archbishop in Great Britain. In 1910, however, he was repudiated by the Dutch Old Catholics on the ground that his consecration had been obtained under a misconception of the extent of his following in England (which appears to have been virtually non-existent). He continued to describe himself as 'Archbishop of the London Area' and (later) as 'Archbishop and Metropolitan of the English Catholic Church', and left irregular episcopal successions (see EPISCOPI VAGANTES) which were repudiated by the *Lambeth Conference of 1920. See also OLD CATHOLICS.

A. H. Mathew, An Episcopal Odyssey: An Open Letter to His Grace the Right Hon. and Most Rev. Randall Thomas Davidson, D.D. . . . (privately pr., Kingsdown, Kent, 1915), with docs. H. R. T. Brandreth, OGS, Episcopi Vagantes and the Anglican Church (1947), pp. 12–30, with bibl. pp. 71 f.

Mathurins. Another name for members of the *Trinitarian Order (q.v.), founded for the redemption of Christian captives in 1198 by St *John of Matha.

Matilda of Magdeburg. See MECHTHILD OF MAGDEBURG.

Matins. See MATTINS.

Matrimony. Christian marriage, though it claims to be based on the natural law, differs from earlier practice, whether Jewish or pagan, and also from modern secular usage, notably in the dignity it has sought for the woman and the life-long nature it ascribes to the marriage bond.

Early Hebrew law, which was founded on marriage by purchase, assigned a low status to the woman, who became in effect the property of her husband, though he could not sell her (Deut. 21: 14; cf. Ex. 21: 7 f.). The woman could neither own nor inherit property and had no rights of divorce, while the man might divorce her for some 'indecency' (Deut. 24: 1 RSV). Polygamy was practised, sometimes with the consent of the wife, as in the case of Sarah (Gen. 16: 2), that the bond might be preserved, but in later Judaism there was a growing realization that monogamy represented the ideal.

In His teaching about matrimony Jesus was concerned to restore it to its original place in God's plan of creation (Mk. 10: 6–9; Mt. 19: 4–6), and insisted therefore that divorce (allowed to the husband by Mosaic law) was contrary to God's will. This negative attitude to divorce, found also in the Damascus Document from *Qumran (CD 4. 20–5. 6), is based on a positive ideal of the marriage relationship as God's gift in creation (cf. Gen. 2: 18). It is expressed in different ways in the Synoptic Gospels. Acc. to Mk. 10: 12 Christ directs His teaching to the Greek and Roman setting in which, contrary to Jewish law, a woman was allowed to divorce her husband. Mt. 5: 31 f. (unlike Lk. 16: 18) and Mt. 19: 9 (unlike Mk. 10: 11) assume that the Lord intended an exception in cases of unchastity, implying His agreement with Deut. 24: 1. Remarriage is excluded to underline the Divine intention that the union should be for life. Unlike other Jewish thinkers, Christ also saw a place for celibacy for the sake of the *Kingdom of God (Mt. 19: 10–12), and Lk. 18: 29 includes 'a wife' among the list of what might be renounced for the sake of the Kingdom of God. In 1 Cor. 7: 25–40 Paul recommends celibacy in view of the imminence of the end (*Parousia), but recognises that this special gift is not granted to all (v. 7). His remark in v. 9 that it is better to be married than to burn (with desire) has often been taken out of its context of advice on *asceticism to suggest wrongly a low view of marriage. His position is that marriage is good, but in this time of crisis celibacy is better (vv. 38, 40). This religiously motivated enthusiasm for celibacy later found expression in *monasticism.

While acknowledging the Lord's opposition to divorce (1 Cor. 7: 10), Paul's pastoral practice permitted separation (1 Cor. 7: 11) and in some circumstance apparently freedom to remarry (v. 15). This became the basis of the so-called *Pauline Privilege developed (and widened) in RC moral theology (CIC (1983), cans. 1143–9). Paul teaches the equality of men and women in Christ (Gal. 3: 28), which some hold makes Christian marriage a partnership of equals, but at 1 Cor. 11. 3–12 he also echoed the patriarchal assumptions of his Jewish background and Greco-Roman context. The 'household codes' of the later NT Epistles assimilate those cultural norms without, however, losing the Christian principle of reciprocity in marriage (Eph. 5: 22–33, Col. 3: 18–19; 1 Pet. 3: 1–7). The importance of love and tenderness in marriage is christo-logically motivated and an elevated view of marriage expressed in Eph. 5: 25–33, where the union of man and woman is compared to that of Christ and the Church.

Roman matrimonial practice was in many ways also influential in the formation of Christian doctrine. Though under the Empire divorce was readily available to both parties, the jurist Modestinus could define marriage as 'a lifelong partnership, and a sharing of civil and religious rights' (consortium omnis vitae, divini et humani iuris communicatio, L. I, Dig. 23. 2), while the legal commonplace that it was not consummation but consent that made a marriage was equally agreeable to Christian belief. One part of Roman law, however, that there could be no marriage between bond and free, was repugnant to Christian sentiment and set aside in the 3rd cent.

The purpose of matrimony has traditionally been understood as threefold: fidelity, the procreation of children, and union of the parties in the marriage (fides, proles, sacramentum). The procreative, often understood as the primary end, demands that the good of children (bonum prolis) be put before all other considerations. This has led many Christian moralists to repudiate all artificial methods of family limitation (see CONTRACEPTION, PROCREATION, AND ABORTION, ETHICS OF). The unitive end has often been understood in a limited way, as no more than a means of avoiding sexual sin. This negative view has been influential in the W., owing esp. to St *Augustine's belief in the inextricable link between sexual intercourse and the transmission of *original sin. A more positive appreciation of the unitive aspect is seen in the Lord's teaching (Mt. 19: 5, Mk. 10: 8) and developed in Eph. 5: 31 f. Marriage came to be regarded as a *Sacrament. In the W. it was reckoned such by *Hincmar of Reims (d. 882), and from St *Thomas Aquinas onwards it was taught that it conferred grace (ST 3, Suppl. 49. 3). In the W. it is accounted peculiar among the Sacraments in that the parties themselves are the ministers, the priest being only the appointed witness. This view is not shared by the E. Church, where marriage was not usually included in the lists of Sacraments until the W. concept of seven Sacraments was adopted in the 17th cent.

Traditionally the rite of marriage consists of two parts: the betrothal and the marriage proper. This distinction goes back to Roman practice and is still present in the Christian ceremony, though obscured in modern W. rites. The betrothal (which originally took place some time before the marriage, and at the church door or in the *narthex, not in the church itself) consists of the giving of gifts, representing the marriage settlement, the exchange of a kiss (both of these usually omitted now), the giving of a *ring (or exchanging of rings), and the joining of hands. The making of vows (explicitly or implicitly) is part of the betrothal rite. The marriage service, essentially a service of blessing, from the time of *Tertullian included the celebration of the Eucharist (*Nuptial Mass), replacing the sacrificial rites (the confarreatio) of the Romans. The Nuptial Mass was frequently replaced by a service of blessing even in the medieval Church, but it still took place in church, in front of the altar, and this arrangement is preserved among Protestant Churches. In the E., the marriage service proper is rarely a Nuptial Mass, but it is more elaborate than a simple service of blessing: it preserves an epistle and gospel, the couple are given crowns (representing the crowns of the martyrs) and then share a cup of wine.

It was only in the 11th cent. that the claim of the Church to exclusive jurisdiction over matrimonial cases was conceded. The Reformation in England did not affect this, and the first breach with Canon Law was effected by the Clandestine Marriages Act 1753 (Lord *Hardwicke's Marriage Act), and more notably by the Marriage Act 1836 which established civil marriage. The Matrimonial Causes Act 1857 abolished the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts, and also allowed divorce a vinculo for adultery when allied to cruelty or desertion (hitherto it had been available only by private Act of Parliament). A series of subsequent acts widened the grounds for divorce until the Divorce Reform Act 1969 made the 'irretrievable breakdown' of marriage the sole ground of divorce. This criterion was preserved in the Matrimonial Causes Act 1973. Similar developments have taken place in most W. countries.

Civil legislation has not affected the belief of the Church, both RCs and many Anglicans holding that indissolubility is of Divine institution. In modern times, however, in the RC Church there has been an increase in the number of petitions for *nullity (i.e. to obtain a declaration that there has been no true marriage) which are allowed on various grounds by the Church courts. In some parts of the Anglican Communion after a civil divorce another Church marriage is often allowed; in other Provinces (e.g. the C of E), where a second Church marriage is not normally permitted during the lifetime of the first spouse, a blessing is sometimes given after a civil marriage, and the parties are subsequently admitted to Communion. In the Orthodox Church divorce was already formally tolerated in Byzantine times and is still recognized, though a different form of ceremony is used for second and third marriages.

The principle that any Christian man or woman may marry has naturally been subjected to limitation (see AFFINITY). The lifelong character of Christian marriage prohibits bigamy, which was made a felony in England in 1604 (it is now classed as an arrestable offence). The minimum age for marriage, which has varied, was fixed by the Age of Marriage Act 1929 at 16 for both parties, marriage below this age being void. The various restrictions were divided by RC canon law into impedient and diriment impediments (q.v.), but the 1983 Codex Iuris Canonici mentions only the latter.

As the Church took over the Roman view of marriage as the consent of the parties a certain publicity has always been required. Apart from the period 1753–1823 English civil law has accepted the teaching of the canonists that clandestine marriages are valid but irregular (for RC Canon Law on this subject, see NE TEMERE). The necessary publicity is secured by the publishing of *banns on three Sundays in the parishes of residence of both parties, and the celebration of marriage in one or the other (by the Marriage Act 1949 marriage may be celebrated in the usual place of worship of one party whose name is entered on the church electoral roll of that parish). Marriage may also be celebrated by licence, obtainable from *surrogates, or by special licence (normally only for weddings in non-parochial churches), obtainable from the Abp. of Canterbury, in virtue of his original legatine authority. Similar publicity is required for a civil marriage. Canon 62 of 1604 fixed the hours when marriages might be solemnized as between 8 a.m. and noon, but the latter was extended in 1886 to 3 p.m., and in 1934 to 6 p.m., and Convocation amended the Canon accordingly. The requirement that marriages should be solemnized only between 8 a.m. and 6 p.m. was retained in the 1969 Canons (B 35). See also MARRIAGE LICENCES.

Practice varies among the Christian bodies concerning clerical marriage. While the Orthodox Church preserves the primitive practice, that ordinands must either be already married or elect to remain celibate, the RC church (at least for all who follow the Latin rite) has generally enforced celibacy, while the Anglican Church (Art. 32 of the *Thirty-Nine Articles) and Nonconformist bodies allow a free choice.

See also DIVORCE.

G. Farnedi, OSB (ed.), La Celebrazione Cristiana del Matrimonio: Atti del II Congresso Internazionale di Liturgia, Roma, 27–31 maggio 1985 (Studia Anselmiana, 93; 1986). On the comparative study of the institution, E. Westermarck, The History of Human Marriage (1891 [partly issued, Helsingsfors, 1889]; 5th edn., rewritten, 3 vols., 1921); F. Meyrick in DCA 2 (1880), pp. 1092–114, s.v. 'Marriage'; L. Godefroy, G. Le Bras, and M. Jugie, AA, in DTC 9 (pt. 2; 1927), cols. 2044–335, s.v. 'Mariage'; R. Naz and C. de Clercq in DDC 6 (1957), cols. 731–802, s.v. 'Mariage'; J. C. Davies and others in id. (ed.), A New Dictionary of Liturgy and Worship (1986), pp. 349–64, s.v. 'Marriage', all with bibl.

Studies free from technicalities by Anglican writers include O. D. Watkins, Holy Matrimony (1895); T. A. *Lacey, Marriage in Church and State (1912; rev. edn. by R. C. Mortimer, 1947); K. E. *Kirk, Marriage and Divorce (1933; rev. edn., 1948); by RC writers, G. H. Joyce, SJ, Christian Marriage (1933; 2nd edn., 1948); H. Rondet, SJ, Introduction à l'étude de la théologie du mariage [1960]; E. [C. F. A.] *Schillebeeckx, OP, Het Huwelijk, aardse werkelijkheid en heilsmysterie (Bilthoven, 1963; Eng. tr., Marriage: Secular Reality and Saving Mystery, 2 vols., 1965); and W. Kasper, Zur Theologie der christlichen Ehe (Mainz, 1977; Eng. tr., 1980). Official RC teaching in the Second *Vatican Council's Constitution 'Gaudium et Spes', nos. 47–52, *Paul VI's encyclicals '*Humanae Vitae' (25 Jul. 1968) and 'Matrimonia Mixta' (31 Mar. 1970), and CIC (1983), cans. 1055–165. D. Palmieri, De Matrimonio Christiano (Paris, 1880). A. Esmein, Le Mariage en droit canonique (1891; 2nd edn. by R. Génestal and J. Dauvillier, 2 vols., 1929–35). P. Gasparri, Tractatus Canonicus de Matrimonio (2 vols., Paris, 1891; rev. edn., Vatican City, 1932); L. Örsy, SJ, Marriage in Canon Law: Texts and Comments. Reflections and Questions (Wilmington, Del., 1986; Dublin and Leominster, 1988) [on CIC (1983), cans. 1055–165]. Useful Guide to the law for Clergy of the C of E and the Church in Wales, Anglican Marriage in England and Wales, issued by the Faculty Office of the Archbishop of Canterbury [1992]. J. A. Brundage, Law, Sex, and Christian Society in Medieval Europe (Chicago and London, 1987). C. N. L. Brooke, The Medieval Idea of Marriage (Oxford, 1989). J. Zhishman, Das Eherecht der orientalischen Kirche (1863–5); A. Raes, SJ, Le Mariage: Sa célébration et sa spiritualité dans l'Église d'Orient (Collection Irénikon [1959]); J. Meyendorff, Marriage: An Orthodox Perspective (New York, 1971; 2nd edn., 1975). K. Ritzer, OSB, Formen, Riten und religiöses Brauchtum der Eheschliessung in den christlichen Kirchen des ersten Jahrtausends (Liturgiewissenschaftliche Quellen und Forschungen, 38 [1962]; Fr. tr., Le mariage dans les Églises chrétiennes du Iᵉ au XIᵉ siècle, Lex orandi, 45 [1970]). K. [W.] Stevenson, Nuptial Blessing: A Study of Christian Marriage Rites (*Alcuin Club Collections, 64; 1982); id., To Join Together: The Rite of Marriage (Studies in the Reformed Rite of the Catholic Church, 5; New York [1987]; L. Stone, The Family, Sex and Marriage in England 1500–1800 [1977].

matter. In medieval philosophy, the stuff underlying all material existence before it is determined and actualized by *form (q.v.). The conception is derived from *Aristotle, where it is used to explain the fact of change in the physical world. Since one substance passes into another, originates, and decays, but never springs from nothing or turns into nothing, Aristotle postulated 'matter' (ὕλη) as a common substratum. It is the mere potentiality of physical being and becoming, and hence no immediate object for the intellect, but something that can be known only through the body in which it is actualized by the form.

The conception (called '*hylomorphism') was developed and applied by the Schoolmen of the 13th cent. to the Sacraments. They substituted the terms 'matter' and 'form' for the older expressions 'things' and 'words'. The matter was the sensible element in the Sacraments, e.g. the water of *Baptism and the bread and wine of the *Eucharist. Though possessing a certain significance (cleansing and nourishing) in itself, the Sacramental matter or action needed for its perfection a more decisive determination, which it receives through the form, i.e. the accompanying words. The Scholastic terminology was accepted by Pope *Eugenius IV in his instruction to the Armenians and by the Council of *Trent; but it is not easily adapted to certain Sacraments, e.g. matrimony.

Matthew, St, Apostle and Evangelist. His name occurs in all four lists of the 12 Apostles (Mt. 10: 3, Mk. 3: 18, Lk. 6: 15, and Acts 1: 13). In Mt. 10: 3 he is described as a *publican. The call of Matthew by Christ is recorded in Mt. 9: 9 (in the parallel passages in Mk. 2: 14 and Lk. 5: 27 the name of the person called is given as 'Levi'). Acc. to *Papias he made a collection of Christ's sayings in Hebrew, and he is traditionally held to be the author of the First Gospel (see following entry).

Acc. to *Eusebius (HE 3. 24) Matthew preached to the Hebrews. Other traditions about his later life conflict and merit little credence. The Roman Martyrology states that he was martyred 'in Ethiopia', the Hieronymianum puts his death 'in Persia in the town of Tarrium' (perhaps Tarsuana east of the Persian Gulf, so A. von Gutschmid), while some apocryphal Greek Acts (prob. *Gnostic) state that he suffered in Pontus. In later times Salerno and other places laid claim to his relics. He is credited with a 6th-cent. apocryphal Latin work on the Lord's Infancy (De Ortu Beatae Mariae et Infantia Salvatoris), an adaptation of the *Protevangelium of St James. In Christian symbolism he has commonly (*Irenaeus, *Jerome, *Augustine) been allotted the figure of a man (cf. Rev. 4: 7) on the ground that his *Genealogy (1: 1–17) emphasizes the Lord's human origin. In art he is depicted with a sword, a money-bag, or a carpenter's square. Feast day in the E., 16 Nov.; in the W., 21 Sept.

'Passio' in R. A. *Lipsius and M. Bonnet (eds.), Acta Apostolorum Apocrypha, 2 (pt. 1; Leipzig, 1898), pp. 217–62. AASS, Sept. 6 (1757), pp. 194–227. B. de Gaiffier, SJ, 'Hagiographie salernitaine. La translation de S. Matthieu', Anal. Boll. 80 (1962), pp. 82–110, with refs. to other works on the post-biblical material. F. Spadafora and P. Cannata in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 9 (1967), cols. 110–45, s.v. 'Matteo', incl. section on iconography.

Matthew, Gospel acc. to St. Traditionally held to be the oldest of the four, this Gospel stands first in the Canon. It was prob. known to the author of the Didache (perh. c. AD 100) and St *Ignatius of Antioch (c. AD 110); and from the time of St *Irenaeus onwards it was regularly ascribed to the Apostle *Matthew by name. *Papias (c. AD 130) records that Matthew wrote the 'Logia' (τὰ λόγια) 'in the Hebrew tongue'; if the reference be to our Gospel (which, however, was written in Greek), this is still earlier evidence for its ascription to him. The Gospel is probably to be dated c. AD 80–90, and unlikely to have been written by an eye-witness.

Most scholars hold that the author drew extensively on Mark, which he expanded with other sources, esp. '*Q', whether this be regarded as a single source or a collection of material which circulated for teaching purposes. In addition to the (mainly discourse) material which is paralleled in Luke, however, there is much that is peculiar to Matthew. This last is often described as 'M'.

The Gospel begins with a *Genealogy of Christ (1: 1–17) and 'Infancy Narrative' (1: 18–2 end). It records the mission of St *John the Baptist (3: 1–12), the Baptism and Temptation of Christ (3: 13–4: 17), His Mission in Galilee (4: 18–15: 20), His work further afield including the revelation of His Messiahship to St *Peter at *Caesarea Philippi (15: 21–18 end), His Last Journey to Jerusalem (19 f.), concluding with the account of His last week, Passion and Resurrection (21–8). Matthew interpolates long sections of 'discourse' into the Marcan framework, and rearranges the narrative so as to bring 10 miracles together in chs. 8–9. His record of the teaching of Christ groups similar material, notably in the '*Sermon on the Mount' (5–7), whereas many of the parallel passages in Luke are widely scattered. This ordered presentation of the teaching is intended to guide Christian observance (28: 20), and the moral claim of the Gospel is underlined by references to God's judgement exercised by the *Son of Man. Christ is also presented as the fulfilment of prophecy and the true interpreter of the Jewish law. He is '*Immanuel', 'God with us' (1: 23) and remains with His disciples from the Resurrection to the end of time (28: 20).

The special commission given to Peter (16: 17–20) has been highly influential (see PETER, ST). It has contributed to the impression of an 'ecclesiastical' Gospel, the only occurrences of ἐκκλησία in the Gospels being here at 16: 18 and at 18: 17.

The Greek of the Gospel is 'correct, if rather colourless' (J. H. Moulton). Matthew avoids some of Mark's undignified words and is more concise, but much of Mark's subtlety and artistry is lost. Of the three Synoptic Gospels it is the most suitable for public reading; and it has probably always been the best-known of them.

Patristic comm. in Gk. incl. those of *Origen, St John *Chrysostom, and *Peter of Laodicea; in Lat., those of *Hilary of Poitiers and St *Jerome. Modern comm. incl. those by E. Klostermann (Hb. NT 5, 1909, pp. 121–52; 2nd edn., 3, 1927), A. H. McNeile (London, 1915), M. J. *Lagrange, OP (Études Bibliques, 1923; 7th edn., 1948), E. Lohmeyer and W. Schmauch (KEK, 1956), F. V. Filson (Black's NT Comm., 1960), J. C. Fenton (Pelican Gospel Commentaries, 1963), E. Schweizer (Das Neue Testament Deutsch, 1973; Eng. tr., 1976), H. B. Green, CR (New Clar. Bib., 1975), F. W. Beare (Oxford, 1981), D. A. Carson (The Expositor's Bible Commentary, ed. F. E. Gaebelein and others, 8, Grand Rapids, Mich. [1984], pp. 1–599), U. Luz (Evangelisch-Katholischer Kommentar zum Neuen Testament, 1; 3 vols., Neukirchen, 1985 ff.; Eng. tr., Minneapolis, 1989 ff., and Edinburgh, 1990 ff.), and W. D. Davies and D. C. Allison (ICC, 3 vols., 1988 ff.).

G. D. Kilpatrick, The Origins of the Gospel according to St Matthew (1946). E. Massaux, Influence de l'évangile de saint Matthieu sur la littérature chrétienne avant saint Irénée (Louvain, 1950; ed. F. Neirynck, with bibl. by B. Dehandschutter, 1986). A. M. Farrer, St Matthew and St Mark (The Edward Cadbury Lectures, 1953–4; 1954; 2nd edn., 1966). K. Stendahl, The School of Matthew (Acta Seminarii Neotestamentici Upsaliensis, 20; 1954). G. Bornkamm, G. Barth, and H. J. Held, Überlieferung und Auslegung im Matthäusevangelium (Wissenschaftliche Monographien zum Alten und Neuen Testament, 1; 1960; Eng. tr., Tradition and Interpretation in Matthew, 1963; enlarged edn., 1982). M. J. Suggs, Wisdom, Christology, and Law in Matthew's Gospel (Cambridge, Mass., 1970). M. D. Goulder, Midrash and Lection in Matthew (1974). G. Stanton (ed.), The Interpretation of Matthew (Issues in Religion and Theology, 3; 1983); id., The Gospel for a New People: Studies on Matthew (Edinburgh, 1992). See also SYNOPTIC PROBLEM.

Matthew of Aquasparta (*c.*1240–1302), *Franciscan theologian. A native of Aquasparta near Todi in Umbria, he became a Franciscan *c.*1254. By 1268 he was studying theology in Paris, and in due course he occupied one of the Franciscan chairs. He is also known to have taught in Bologna. In 1279 he succeeded John *Pecham, under whom he had studied in Paris, as lector sacri palatii in Rome. In 1287 he became General of his Order, in 1288 Cardinal, and in 1291 Cardinal Bp. of Porto and Rufina. He stood high in the confidence of Boniface VIII, whose views on Papal power he endorsed, and who entrusted him with political missions. His writings include sermons and biblical commentaries, and a commentary on the Sentences as well as quodlibets and Quaestiones disputatae. These last, which, like his other works, had little circulation, are perhaps the most important. They are notable for their clarity. They show him as a disciple of St *Bonaventure in following the *Augustinian doctrine on divine illumination and innate ideas, and on the direct knowledge which the soul has of its essence. Matthew was not content to be a slavish follower, and in more than one respect, as in his view of our direct knowledge of the singular and posterior knowledge of the universal, he looks forward to *Duns Scotus.

His Quaestiones Disputatae have now all been pub. at Quaracchi in the Bibliotheca Franciscana Scholastica Medii Aevi, 1 (1903; 2nd edn., 1957); 2 (1914; 2nd edn., 1957); 11 (1935), incl. important introd. on his life and works by V. Doucet, OFM, pp. xi–clxiii; 17 (1956); and 18 (1959); except for the Quaestiones de Anima VI, ed. A. J. Gondras in AHDLMA 32, for 1957 (1958), pp. 203–352, and the Quaestiones Disputatae de Anima XIII, ed. id. (Études de Philosophie Médiévale, 1; 1961). Various sermons ed. C. Piana, OFM, and G. Gál, OFM (Bibliotheca Franciscana Ascetica Medii Aevi, 9 and 10; Quaracchi, 1962). M. *Grabmann, Die philosophische und theologische Erkenntnislehre des Kardinals Matthaeus ab Aquasparta (Theologische Studien der Leo-Gesellschaft, 14; 1906). H. M. Beha, OSF, 'Matthew of Aquasparta's Theory of Cognition', Franciscan Studies, 20 (1960), pp. 161–204; 21 (1961), pp. 1–79, 383–465. Z. Hayes, OFM, The General Doctrine of Creation in the Thirteenth Century, with special emphasis on Matthew of Aquasparta (Munich, 1964). E. Brocchieri, La legge naturale nel pensiero di Matteo d'Acquasparta (Rovigo, 1967). P. Weber, 'La Liberté dans la théologie de Matthieu d'Aquasparta', RTAM 34 (1967), pp. 238–54, with bibl. P. Mazzarella, La dottrina dell'anima e della conoscenza in Matteo d'Acquasparta (Padua [1969]). Matteo d'Acquasparta, Francescano, Filosofo, Politico: Atti del XXIX Convegno storico internazionale, Todi, 11–14 ottobre 1992 (Spoleto, 1993). E. Longpré, OSB, in DTC 10 (pt.

1; 1928), cols. 375–89, s.v.; G. Gál, OFM, in NCE 9 (1967), p. 491, s.v.

Matthew Paris (*c.*1200–59), medieval chronicler. He became a member of the Benedictine monastery of *St Albans in 1217 and, as an expert scribe and illuminator, annalist of the monastery in 1236. His chief claim to fame lies in his Chronica Majora, a history of the world from the Creation to 1259. Its earlier sections are almost entirely a transcription of Roger of Wendover's Flores Historiarum, but its later pages are his own narration of contemporary events. The work is characterized by trenchant criticism of ecclesiastical abuses (in particular, Papal venality) and of Henry III's employment of foreigners in England, and was the fruit of his own experiences at St Albans and his wide travels, both at home and abroad. Matthew was also the author of a Historia Anglorum sive Historia Minor, an abridgement of his longer history.

His Chronica Majora, ed. H. R. Luard (7 vols., RS, 1872–83); his Historia Anglorum, ed. F. Madden (3 vols., ibid., 1866–9), with biog. preface in vol. 3, pp. vii–liv; the part of the 'Gesta Monasterii Sancti Albani' which is prob. mainly his work, ed. H. T. Riley in Gesta Abbatum Monasterii Sancti Albani a Thoma Walsingham, 1 (ibid., 1867), pp. 3–324. The section of his Chronica Majora and its continuation dealing with the period 1235–73 is tr. into Eng. by J. A. Giles, Matthew Paris's English History (Bohn's Antiquarian Library, 3 vols., 1852–4). The section of the Chronica Majora covering the period 1247–50 and the part of the 'Gesta Monasterii Sancti Albani' 1195–1255 also tr. into Eng. by R. Vaughan, The Chronicles of Matthew Paris (Gloucester and New York, 1984). Id., Matthew Paris (Cambridge Studies in Medieval Life and Thought, NS 6; 1958). S. Lewis, The Art of Matthew Paris in the Chronica Majora (California Studies in the History of Art, 21; Berkeley, Calif., and London [1987]). V. H. Galbraith, Roger Wendover and Matthew Paris (lecture; 1944). W. Hunt in DNB 43 (1895), pp. 207–13, s.v. 'Paris, Matthew'.

Matthew's Bible. This edition of the English Bible was issued in 1537. It was a revision of the work of W. *Tyndale, pieced out with Tyndale's unpublished MSS and portions of M. *Coverdale's OT, with expository notes drawn from Conrad Pellican (1478–1556). Printed at Antwerp in 1537, it was dedicated to *Henry VIII, who licensed it for general reading. 'Thomas Matthew', the name of the supposed editor, was a mere alias for John *Rogers (q.v.).

S. L. Greenslade in id. (ed.), The Cambridge History of the Bible: The West from the Reformation to the Present Day (Cambridge, 1963), pp. 150–2. W. T. Whitley, 'Thomas Matthew's Bible', CQR 125 (1937), pp. 48–69. Whitley's attempt to defend the existence of Thomas Matthew as a real person has been disposed of by J. F. Mozley, William Tyndale (1937), Appendix E. Darlow and Moule, ed. A. S. Herbert, 1 (1968), pp. 18 f. (no. 34).

Matthias, St, Apostle. According to the tradition preserved in Acts 1: 15–26, he was chosen by lot after the Ascension to fill the vacancy in the Twelve left by the treachery of *Judas Iscariot, and it is implied that he had been a follower of Christ from the beginning of His ministry, but he is not mentioned elsewhere in the NT. Acc. to apocryphal traditions, he (or, acc. to some versions, *Matthew) preached the Gospel in Ethiopia, or among the 'Anthropophagi', while the *Gnostic *Basilides claimed that his own doctrines derived from a private tradition going back to St Matthias. *Eusebius (HE 1. 12. 3, 2. 1. 1) and St *Epiphanius (Haer. 1. 22) believed that he was one of the Lord's 'Seventy Disciples' (Lk. 10: 1). Feast day in the W., 14 May (formerly 24, or, in leap year, 25 Feb.; 24 Feb. still observed in some Anglican Churches); in the Greek Church, 9 Aug.

AASS, Feb. 3 (1658), pp. 431–54. J. Renié, SM, 'L'Élection de Mathias (Act. 1, 15–26). Authenticité du récit', R. Bibl. 55 (1948), pp. 43–53; P. Gaechter, SJ, 'Die Wahl des Matthias (Apg. 1, 15–26)', ZKT 71 (1949), pp. 318–46; K. H. Rengstorf, 'Die Zuwahl des Matthias (Apg. 1. 15 ff.)', Studia Theologica, 15 (1961), pp. 35–67. See also comm. on Acts (s.v.), esp. that of E. Jacquier (2nd edn., Paris, 1926), pp. 30–41.

Matthias, Gospel of St. A lost apocryphal Gospel, mentioned by *Origen, Hom. I in Lc. and other early Christian writers. Perhaps it is to be identified with the treatise referred to by *Clement of Alexandria as 'the Traditions of Matthias' (Strom. 2. 9. 45, etc.).

H. C. Puech in Schneemelcher, 1 (5th edn.; 1987), pp. 306–9; Eng. tr., 1 (1991), pp. 382–6.

Mattins (from Lat. matutinus, 'of the morning', 'early in the morning'). Originally, the morning service in the primitive round of daily prayer. As the name implies, it was an early morning office, initially held at dawn or in the period between dawn and sunrise. Later, when it was more closely associated with dawn, it was preceded by an early morning *Vigil kept by the more devout. Ps. 63 was frequently a component because of a Latin rendering of v. 1: 'Deus, Deus meus es tu; ad te de luce vigilo', which passed into traditional English versions as 'O God, thou art my God: early will I seek thee'. In the W. the name was eventually attached to the Vigil or night part of the office, the older morning part becoming known as *Lauds. A real distinction of the two separate offices was apparent only from the later Middle Ages. Mattins itself, which remained basically unchanged until 1912, was composed as follows: some prayers said silently and opening *versicles led to Ps. 95 (the *Invitatory), a hymn suited to the hour, feast, or season, and then on Sundays and feasts, three divisions called *Nocturns (q.v.), the first of 12 and the other two of three psalms on Sundays and three psalms each on feasts; on weekdays there was a single nocturn of 12 psalms. The *Te Deum concluded the office on Sundays (except in Advent and the period from *Septuagesima to *Palm Sunday), feasts, and the weekdays of Eastertide. The number of psalms was reduced to nine in both Sunday and weekday offices by Pope *Pius X in 1912. Mattins was completely replaced by the *Office of Readings in 1971. From the Middle Ages until the 20th cent. Mattins and Lauds were often together anticipated on the previous evening. In modern Byzantine use, the office of *Orthros, which corresponds to Mattins and Lauds, is similarly anticipated on certain occasions.

In the C of E Thomas *Cranmer retained the name Mattins as a secondary designation for his 1549 order of Morning Prayer, but after 1552 it was dropped. The name seems to have come back into popular use in the 19th cent. The structure of the office is identical with that of *Evensong (q.v.), except that Ps. 95 is sung before the psalms for the day (except on the 19th day of the month, when it is in the ordinary course of the psalms, and on *Easter Day, when a special anthem is ordered). Also on 13 feast days in the year the *Athanasian Creed is ordered to be said in substitution for the Apostles' Creed, but in modern times this rubric has been widely disregarded. After the First (OT) Lesson, the Te Deum or, as an alternative, mainly in penitential seasons, the *Benedicite, is said or sung, and after the Second (NT) Lesson, the *Benedictus or *Jubilate. The Te Deum comes from the medieval office of Mattins, the Benedicite and Benedictus from Lauds, but the Apostles' Creed and Lord's Prayer with *Preces and Responses seem to owe more to forms found in *Prime, which also supplied one of the two fixed collects that follows that of the day. The ASB provides a wide choice of Canticles, and in the Shorter Form only one Canticle is used. If the Eucharist follows immediately, most of the latter part of the office may be omitted. Other modern Anglican liturgies provide similar flexibility.

J. A. Jungmann, SJ, 'Beiträge zur Geschichte der Gebetsliturgie I. Die Entstehung der Matutin', ZKT 72 (1950), pp. 66–79; repr. in id., Liturgisches Erbe und Pastorale Gegenwart (1960), pp. 139–62; Eng. tr., Pastoral Liturgy (1962), pp. 105–22. J. M. Hanssens, SJ, Aux origines de la prière liturgique: Nature et genèse de l'office des matines (Analecta Gregoriana, 57; 1952). See also works cited under VIGIL and OFFICE, DIVINE.

F. Procter and W. H. *Frere, A New History of the Book of Common Prayer (1901), esp. pp. 368–401. F. E. *Brightman, The English Rite, 1 (1915), esp. pp. lxxxv–xcii. R. C. D. Jasper and P. F. Bradshaw, A Companion to the Alternative Service Book (1986), pp. 75–125.

Mattins of Bruges. The massacre of the French lodged in Bruges by the Flemish inhabitants at daybreak on 18 May 1302. Those who fell had been marked by their inability to pronounce a prearranged Flemish shibboleth.

The principal authority is the contemporary author of the Annales Gandenses (ed. with Eng. tr. by H. Johnstone, London, 1951, pp. 23–5). E. Vanden Bussche, 'Les Matines de Bruges. Note pour l'histoire de Jean Breidel et Pierre de Coninc', La Flandre: Revue des Monuments d'Histoire et d'Antiquités, 12 (1881), pp. 319–28. J. Frederichs, 'Note sur le cri de guerre des Matines brugeoises', Compte Rendu des séances de la Commission royale d'Histoire, 5th ser. 3 (1893), pp. 263–74. F. Funck-Brentano, Philippe le Bel en Flandre (1896), pp. 388–94. H. Pirenne, Histoire de Belgique, 1 (1900), p. 382, with note on sources; id. in C. Med. H. 8 (1936), pp. 339 f.

Maundy Thursday. The traditional English name for the Thursday preceding *Easter, derived from the first antiphon of the ceremony of the washing of the feet, 'mandatum novum' (Jn. 13: 34). Its special celebration in commemoration of the Lord's Institution of the Eucharist on that day is attested already for the 4th cent. by the Council of *Hippo (393). Two other traditional liturgical features are the Blessing of the Holy Oils and the Reconciliation of Penitents, though the latter has long been obsolete. Two or even three Masses were celebrated on the day in the early centuries, but the Gregorian Sacramentary and the oldest Ordines Romani allow only one. In the W. Church since 1955 the Maundy Thursday Mass has been celebrated in the evening. White vestments are worn and the altar is adorned in festive manner. Before the Mass the tabernacle is emptied (any Hosts required for sick communion are taken to some other place of reservation without ceremony) because all are expected to receive Holy Communion from Hosts consecrated at this Mass. The Mass is marked by the solemn ringing at the Gloria in Excelsis* of all bells, which are henceforth silent until the *Paschal Vigil, and a special formula for the Consecration. A sermon is recommended and also the ceremony of foot-washing (see PEDILAVIUM). After the Mass the Hosts needed for the Liturgy of *Good Friday (which are consecrated at the Maundy Thursday Mass; see PRESANCTIFIED, MASS OF THE) are taken in solemn procession to the Altar of *Repose, where a watch is kept for some hours. The altars are stripped and holy water stoups emptied. In cathedral churches the Holy Oils are blessed during a special *Chrism Mass in the morning. The royal 'Maundy Ceremony' in England is an abbreviated survival of the Pedilavium. See also GREEN THURSDAY and SHEER THURSDAY.

H. A. P. Schmidt, SJ, Hebdomada Sancta, 1 (Rome, 1956), pp. 64–91; 2, pt. 1 (1957), passim; 2, pt. 2 (1957), pp. 710–77. J. W. Tyrer, Historical Survey of Holy Week, its Services and Ceremonial (*Alcuin Club Collections, 29; 1932), pp. 79–115. H. Thurston, SJ, Lent and Holy Week (1904), pp. 274–325. K. [W.] Stevenson, Jerusalem Revisited: The Liturgical Meaning of Holy Week (Washington, DC [1986]), pp. 29–50 [in origin devotional]. A. *Wilmart, OSB, Auteurs spirituels et textes dévots du moyen-âge latin (1932), no. 2, 'L'Hymne de la charité pour le Jeudi-Saint', pp. 26–36. W. J. O'Shea in NCE 7 (1967), pp. 105–7, s.v. 'Holy Thursday'.

Maurice, St, Primicerius ('leader') of the *Theban Legion. Acc. to the 5th-cent. 'Passio Agaunensium Martyrum', a composition of *Eucherius of Lyons, the Emp. Maximian (Caesar from 286 to 305) took an army to Gaul during *Diocletian's persecution, which included a wholly Christian 'Theban legion' (from the Thebaïd, Egypt) commanded by Mauricius. As it refused to sacrifice, it was massacred by Maximian at Agaunum (now St-Maurice-en-Valais; not to be confounded with other places of the same name, e.g. St-Moritz in the Engadine). The story, though unhistorical in this form, may spring from some action of Christian soldiers during Maximian's campaign against the Bagaudae (286). Feast day, 22 Sept.

The best text of the 'Passio Acaunensium Martyrum' is that ed. B. Krusch in MGH, Scriptores Rerum Merovingicarum, 3 (1896), pp. 20–41. Further details of edns. and other sources in BHL, pp. 841–4 (nos. 5737–64), and novum suppl. (1986), pp. 630 f. AASS, Sept. 6 (1757), pp. 308–403 and 895–926. Of the considerable literature the fullest account is that of J. Bernard de Montmélian, Saint Maurice et la légion thébéenne (2 vols., 1888; detailed but not entirely accurate); among the more reliable discussions is that of M. Besson, Monasticon Acaunense (Fribourg, 1913). L. Dupraz, Les Passions de S. Maurice d'Agaune: Essai sur l'historicité de la tradition et contribution à l'étude de l'armée pré-dioclétienne (260–286) et des canonisations tardives de la fin du IV^e siècle (Studia Friburgensia, NS 27; Fribourg, 1961). H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 10 (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 2699–729, s.v.; R. Henggeler and M. C. Celletti in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 9 (1967), cols. 193–205, s.v. 'Maurizio'.

Maurice, Frederick Denison (1805–72), Anglican divine. He was born at Normanstone, near Lowestoft, the son of a *Unitarian minister. After a boyhood spent among long and painful religious disputes in his family he entered Trinity College, Cambridge, in 1823 (where F. *Field was his tutor) with a view to becoming a barrister. In 1825 he migrated with his close friend, John Sterling, to Trinity Hall. Refusal to subscribe the *Thirty-Nine Articles excluded him from a degree and fellowship and he moved to London, where he wrote in defence of social reforms, criticizing the Benthamite materialism.

Having gradually accepted the Anglican faith, in 1830 Maurice went up to Exeter College, Oxford, and in 1834 was ordained to the curacy of Bubbenhall, Warwickshire. Here he wrote Eustace Conway (1834), an autobiographical novel, and Subscription No Bondage (1835), a pamphlet defending the imposition of religious tests at the universities. In 1836 he became chaplain of Guy's Hospital, where he lectured regularly on moral philosophy and wrote his most enduring book, The Kingdom of Christ; or Hints to a Quaker concerning the Principle, Constitution and Ordinances of the Catholic Church (1838). Its philosophical, yet fundamentally orthodox, presentation of theology was misunderstood and subjected to attacks from all ecclesiastical points of view. In 1840 he was elected Professor of English Literature and History at *King's College, London; in 1845 Warburtonian Lecturer (his lectures, The Epistle to the Hebrews, 1846, contained a reply to J. H. *Newman's Essay on the Development of Christian Doctrine [described as his Theory of Development]); in 1846 Chaplain at Lincoln's Inn; and in 1846 Professor of Theology in the newly created Theological School at King's College.

Maurice, who had been deeply moved by the political events of 1848, now became actively interested again in the application of Christian principles to social reform. Acquaintance with J. M. F. *Ludlow led to the formation of the *Christian Socialists (q.v.), which brought him into close contact with C. *Kingsley and others. But his orthodoxy was constantly under suspicion and in 1853 his Theological Essays, in which he attacked the popular view of the endlessness of future punishment and maintained that in the NT 'eternity' had nothing to do with time, provoked a crisis which resulted in his dismissal from King's College. In 1854 he started a 'Working Men's College' in London to promote his socialistic ideals. In What is Revelation? (1859) he made a fierce attack on the *Bampton Lectures of H. L. *Mansel (1858), who had defended Theism on the basis of the limitations of human reason and by implication repudiated philosophical theology. In 1860 he was appointed to the chapel of St Peter's, Vere Street, and in 1866 Knightsbridge Professor of Moral Philosophy at Cambridge. In 1870 he became incumbent of St Edward's, Cambridge. Among his other writings were *Three Letters to the Rev. W. Palmer (1842; defending the *Jerusalem Bishopric), The Lord's Prayer (1848), The Old Testament (1851), The Unity of the New Testament (1854), The Epistles of St John (1857), The Gospel of St John (1857), The Gospel of the Kingdom of Heaven (1864) and The Conscience: Lectures on Casuistry (1868). He also wrote a long article, 'Moral and Metaphysical Philosophy', originally published in the Encyclopaedia Metropolitana and later expanded and reissued in various forms. Many of his other writings were considerably revised in later editions.

In the American BCP (1979), feast day, 1 Apr.

Life and Letters, ed. by his son, F. Maurice (2 vols., 1884); C. F. G. Masterman, F. D. Maurice (1907); C. Jenkins, F. D. Maurice and the New Reformation (1938); M. B. Reckitt, Maurice to Temple (Scott Holland Memorial Lectures, 1946; 1947); F. Higham, F. D. Maurice (1947); A. R. Vidler, The Theology of F. D. Maurice (1948; pub. in New York as Witness to the Light); id., F. D. Maurice and Company (1966), pp. 13–202; A. M. *Ramsey, F. D. Maurice and the Conflict of Modern Theology (1951); W. M. Davies, An Introduction to F. D. Maurice's Theology based on the first edition of The Kingdom of Christ (1838) and The Faith of the Liturgy and the Doctrine of the Thirty-Nine Articles (1860) (1964); F. M. McClain, Maurice: Man and Moralist (1972); T. Christensen, The Divine Order: A Study in F. D. Maurice's Theology (Acta theologica Danica, 11; Leiden, 1973); D. Young, F. D. Maurice and Unitarianism (Oxford, 1992). L. Stephen in DNB 37 (1894), pp. 77–104.

Maurists. The *Benedictine monks of the *Congregation of St-Maur. The Congregation, which takes its name from St *Maurus (6th cent., q.v.), was founded in 1618 to represent in France the reform initiated in the Abbey of St-Vanne in 1600; it received Papal approval in 1621. The historical and literary work, for which the Congregation is famous, was largely centered at *St-Germain-des-Prés. The Maurists numbered among their members a succession of remarkable scholars, incl. J. L. *d'Achery, J. *Mabillon, E. *Martène, T. *Ruinart, and B. de *Montfaucon; they were able to undertake monumental works, since they trained younger monks to take over when older ones died. Their editions were based on a wide range of MSS, many of which have since perished. Some of the monks had Jansenist sympathies and appealed against the Bull Unigenitus; the subsequent internal divisions and relaxation of discipline led to the disintegration of the Congregation. Suppressed in 1790 by the Revolutionary government, it was finally dissolved by *Pius VII in 1818.

E. Martène, OSB, cont. by J. Fortet, OSB, Histoire de la congrégation de Saint-Maur, ed. G. Charvin, OSB (Archives de la France Monastique, 31–5, 42–3, 46–7; 1928–43); id., Les Vies des Justes, ed. B. Heurtebize, OSB (ibid. 27–8, 30; 1924–6). [R. P. Tassin, OSB], Histoire littéraire de la congrégation de Saint-Maur, ordre de S. Benoît (Brussels, 1770); suppl. by U. Robert (Paris, 1881); further suppl. by H. Wilhelm and U. Berlière, OSB (ibid., 1908). Mémorial du XIVe centenaire de l'abbaye de Saint-Germain-des-Prés: Recueil de travaux sur le monastère et la congrégation de Saint-Maur (Bibliothèque de la Société d'histoire ecclésiastique de la France, 1959). Y. Chaussy, OSB, Les Bénédictins de Saint-Maur (2 vols., Études Augustiniennes, 1989–'91'[92]). R. Lemoine, OSB, 'Histoire des Constitutions de la Congrégation de Saint-Maur', in Études d'histoire du droit canonique dediées à Gabriel Le Bras, 1 (1965), pp. 215–48. E. de Broglie, Mabillon et la société de l'abbaye de Saint-Germain-des-Prés à la fin du XVIIe siècle, 1664–1707 (2 vols., 1888); id., La Société de l'abbaye de S.-Germain-des-Prés au XVIIIe siècle: Bernard de Montfaucon et les Bernardins 1715–1750 (2 vols., 1891). [M.] D. *Knowles, Great Historical Enterprises (1963), pp. 33–62. B. Barret-Kriegel, Les Historiens et la Monarchie, 3: Les Académies de l'Histoire (1988), pp. 19–167. On the Maurist edn. of the works of St *Augustine, J. de Ghellinck, SJ, Patristique et Moyen Âge, 3 (Museum Lessianum, Section Historique, 9; 1948), pp. 412–84. L. A. St L. Toke in CE 10 (1911), pp. 69–72, s.v.; J. Baudot in DTC 10 (1928), cols. 405–43, s.v.; J. Hourlier, OSB, in DIP 5 (1978), cols. 1082–9, s.v. 'Maurini'.

Maurus, St (6th cent.), disciple of St *Benedict of Nursia. There are references to him in St *Gregory the Great's Dialogues, but practically nothing is certainly known of his career. Acc. to a biography ascribed to his companion, Faustus of *Monte Cassino (but apparently a 9th-cent. forgery by Abbot Odo of Glanfeuil), he made his way to France in 543, where he founded the abbey of Glanfeuil, afterwards St-Maur-sur-Loire; and, after resigning the abbacy to Bertulf in 581, spent the rest of his life in solitude and contemplation. He is the patron of charcoal-burners, and is invoked against gout and other diseases. Feast day, 15 Jan.

Life ascribed to Faustus of Monte Cassino pr. in Acta Sanctorum Ordinis S. Benedicti, 1 (Paris, 1668), pp. 275–98; also, with other material, in AASS, Jun. 1 (1643), pp. 1038–62. A. Giry, 'La Vie de saint Maur du Pseudo-Faustus', Bibliothèque de l'École des Chartes, 57 (1898), pp. 149–52. B. F. Adloch, OSB, 'Die Benedictiner-Tradition über den hl. Maurus und Abt Odo von Glanfeuil', Studien und Mitteilungen aus dem Benedictiner- und dem Cistercienser-Orden, 19 (1898), pp. 310–26; id., 'Zur Vita S. Mauri', ibid. 26 (1905), pp. 3–22 and 202–26; id., ' "Les Légendes hagiographiques" und die "Vita Sancti Mauri" per Faustum', ibid. 28 (1907), p. 101, all with refs. to other lit. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 6 (pt. 1; 1924), cols. 1285–319, s.v. 'Glanfeuil', with full discussion of authenticity of Life, and bibl.

Maximilian, St (d. 295), also Marmilian, martyr. It is recorded that he was executed at Theveste in Numidia, his native town, because he refused to serve in the Roman army. Feast day, 12 Mar.

'Acta' pr. in T. *Ruinart (ed.), Acta Primorum Martyrum Sincera et Selecta (Paris, 1689), pp. 309–11, repr., with Eng. tr., in H. Musurillo, The Acts of the Christian Martyrs (Oxford, 1972), pp. 242–9; and A. *Harnack, Militia Christi: Die christliche Religion und der Soldatenstand in den ersten Jahrhunderten (1905), pp. 114–17. H. *Delehaye, SJ, Les Passions des martyrs et les genres littéraires (1921), pp. 104–10. L. J. Swift, The Early Fathers on War and Military Service (Message of the Fathers of the Church, 19; Delaware, 1983), pp. 71–4. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 11 (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 1133–7, s.v. 'Militarisme. XIII, le martyre du conscrit Maximilien', with bibl.

Maximus, St (d. 408/23). Nothing is known of his life, except that he was bishop of Turin, and that he died in the reign of Honorius and Theodosius the Younger (408–23). Confusion about the dates of his life has been caused by an arbitrary conjecture of C. *Baronius, who identified him with a Bp. Maximus who was present at synods in Milan in 451 and Rome in 465. Over 100 of his sermons survive, chiefly in a collection found in three early MSS. Some of them had a wide circulation in medieval homiliaries. They are for the most part short, pithily expressed, sometimes over-rhetorical, and marked by a strong popular appeal. They throw much light on the history of the liturgy and the survival of paganism in N. Italy. Feast day, 25 June.

Editio princeps (only 74 sermons), by J. Gymnicus (Cologne, 1535). The edn. of B. Bruni (Rome, 1784), repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 57, contains much spurious material; cf. Dekkers (2nd edn., 1961), pp. 51–8 (nos. 220–6b). First crit. edn. by A. Mutzenbecher (CCSL 23; 1962). Eng. tr. by P. Ramsey, OP (ACW 50 [1989]). B. Studer in Quasten (cont.), Patrology, 4 (1986), p. 574. M. R. P. McGuire in NCE 9 (1967), p. 516; M. Pellegrino in DPAC 2 (1984), cols. 2176–9, s.v. 'Massimo di Torino (1)'; Eng. tr. in Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 1 (Cambridge, 1992), pp. 548 f.

Maximus the Confessor, St (c.580–662), Greek theologian and ascetic writer. A member of the old Byzantine aristocracy, after holding the post of Imperial Secretary under the Emp. *Heraclius, c.614 he became a monk (later abbot) of the monastery of Chrysopolis. During the Persian invasion (626) he fled to Africa. From c.640 onwards he was a determined opponent of *Monothelitism. After Pyrrhus, the temporarily deposed Monothelite Patriarch of *Constantinople, had declared his defeat in a dispute at Carthage (645), Maximus procured the condemnation of the heresy by several African Synods, and also had a share in its condemnation by the *Lateran Council of 649. In 653 he was brought to Constantinople, where pressure was put upon him to obtain his adherence to the '*Typos' of Constans II. On his refusal he was exiled to Thrace. In 661 he was again brought to the capital and severely questioned; a probably true tradition says that on this occasion his tongue and his right hand were cut off. He was then exiled to the Caucasus, but died soon afterwards.

Maximus the Confessor was a prolific writer on doctrinal, ascetical, exegetical, and liturgical subjects. His works include the 'Quaestiones ad Thalassium', 65 questions and answers on difficult passages of Scripture, the 'Ambigua', an exegetical work on *Gregory of Nazianzus, Paraphrases on the works of *Dionysius, the Pseudo-Areopagite (though many of the Paraphrases which have come down under Maximus' name are the work of John of Scythopolis, who wrote in the first half of the 6th cent.), several dogmatic treatises against the *Monophysites and Monothelites, the 'Liber Asceticus' and 'Capita de Caritate', and the 'Mystagogia', a mystical interpretation of the Liturgy. He maintained that the purpose of history was the Incarnation of the Son of God and the *deification (θέωσις) of man, which consisted in the restoration of the Image impaired by Original Sin. Man, created in an incorruptible nature devoid of passion, caused evil to come into the world by his desire for pleasure, which destroyed the dominion of reason over the senses; hence Christ had to redeem the race by pain to restore the equilibrium. It was through the Incarnate Word, the centre of Maximus' speculative as of his mystical doctrine, that man is not only freed from ignorance but given the power to practise virtue. The goal of the human life, attained through abnegation, is union with God by charity. Feast day in the W., 13 Aug.; in the E., 21 Jan. (also 13 Aug.).

Works ed. F. *Combefis, 2 vols., Paris, 1675 (the projected 3rd vol. never appeared). The Scholia to St Gregory of Nazianzus and the Ps.-Dionysius were first pr. in F. Oehler, Anecdota Graeca, 1 (Halle, 1857). All these repr. in J. P. Migne, PG 90 and 91, and (Scholia to Ps.-Dionysius), ibid. 4. 15–432 and 527–76. His 'Computus Ecclesiasticus' is in J. P. Migne, PG 19. 1217–80 (among the works of *Eusebius of Caesarea). Crit. edn. of 'Capita de Caritate' by A. Ceresa-Gastaldo, with Ital. tr. (Verba Seniorum, NS 3; Rome, 1963); of 'Quaestiones ad Thalassium' by C. Laga and C. Steel (CCSG 7 and 22; 1980–90); of 'Quaestiones et Dubia' by J. H. Declerck (ibid. 10; 1982); and of 'Opuscula Exegetica Duo' (incl. his Comm. on the *Lord's Prayer) by P. Van Deun (ibid. 23; 1991). Eng. tr. of Selected Writings by G. C. Berthold (Classics of Western Spirituality, 1985), with refs. to earlier trs. of individual works. On the Life of Maximus, repr. from Combefis in PG 90. 68–109, cf. R. Devreesse, 'La Vie de saint Maxime le Confesseur et ses Recensions', Anal. Boll. 46 (1928), pp. 5–49. W. Lackner, 'Zu Quellen und Datierung der Maximosvita (BHG[3] 1234)', ibid. 85 (1967), pp. 285–316. S. [P.] Brock, 'An Early Syriac Life of Maximus the Confessor', ibid. 91 (1973), pp. 299–346, incl. text and Eng. tr. H. U. von *Balthasar, Kosmische Liturgie: Maximus der Bekenner. Höhe und Krise des griechischen Weltbildes (1941; 2nd edn., 1961; Fr. tr., 1947); I. Hausherr, SJ, Philautie: De la tendresse pour soi à la charité selon Saint-Maxime le Confesseur (Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 137; 1952). P. Sherwood, OSB, An Annotated Date-List of the Works of Maximus the Confessor (Studia Anselmiana, 30; 1952); id., The Earlier Ambigua of Saint Maximus the Confessor and his Refutation of Origenism (ibid. 36; 1955). L. Thunberg, Microcosm and Mediator: The Theological Anthropology of Maximus the Confessor (Acta Seminarii Neotestamentici Upsaliensis, 25; Lund, 1965; 2nd edn., Chicago, 1995). W. Völker, Maximus Confessor als Meister des geistlichen Lebens (Wiesbaden, 1965). A. Riou, Le Monde et l'Église selon Maxime Confesseur (Théologie historique, 22; 1973); J. M. Garrigues, Maxime le Confesseur: La charité avenir divin de l'homme (ibid. 38; 1976); F.-M. Léthel, Théologie de l'Agonie du Christ: La Liberté humaine du Fils de Dieu et son importance sotériologique mises en lumière par saint Maxime Confesseur (ibid. 52; 1979); P. Piret, Le Christ et la Trinité selon Maxime le Confesseur (ibid. 69; 1983); F. Heinzer, Gottes Sohn als Mensch: Die Struktur des Menschseins Christi bei Maximus Confessor (Paradosis, 26; 1980); Id. and C. Schönborn (eds.), Maximus Confessor: Actes du Symposium sur Maxime le Confesseur Fribourg, 2 5 Septembre 1980 (ibid. 27; 1982); A. Louth, Maximus the Confessor (1996). B. R. Suchla, Die sogenannten Maximus-Scholien des Corpus Dionysiacum Areopagiticum (Nachr. (Gött.), 1980, no. 3). Bibliography, with discussion of works listed, by M. L. Gatti (Metafisica del Platonismo nel suo sviluppo storico e nella filosofia patristica, 2; Milan, 1987). Beck, pp. 356–9 and 436–42. CPG 3 (1979), pp. 431–50 (nos. 7688–721). Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 521–4 and 660 f. V. Grumel, AA, in DTC 10 (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 448–59; C. De Vocht in TRE 22 (1992), pp. 298–304, s.v.

Maximus the Cynic (4th cent.), intruded Bp. of Constantinople. After a disreputable life at *Alexandria, he conceived the idea of supplanting St *Gregory Nazianzen, and with the support of Peter II, Bp. of Alexandria, he went to Constantinople in 379. He ingratiated himself with Gregory, who even pronounced a panegyric on him (calling him 'Hero' acc. to St *Jerome). One night in 380, when Gregory was ill, Maximus was consecrated to the see. He then set out immediately for Thessalonica to secure the recognition of the Emp. *Theodosius, but in this he was unsuccessful. The Council of *Constantinople of 381 (can. 4) declared that Maximus 'neither is nor was a bishop'. Meanwhile, Peter recognized what Maximus was worth and withdrew his support. However, Maximus convinced St *Ambrose and others in the W., where only his version of events was known, of his claims, and some W. synods threatened to break off relations with the E. Church if Maximus was not restored to his see; but at the Council of Rome in 382 they were undeceived and abandoned him. Acc. to Jerome, he wrote a treatise De Fide adversus Arianos, now lost. He professed to combine belief in the Cynic philosophy with profession of the Nicene faith.

The chief sources are Gregory Nazianzen, Orat. 25–6; id., De Vita Sua (Poema de Seipso), ll. 728–1112; Ambrose, Ep. 13; Jerome, De Vir. Ill. 117 and 127; *Sozomen, HE 7. 9; *Theodoret, HE 5. 8. J. Mossay, introd. to his edn. of Gregory's Discours 24 26 (SC 284; 1981), pp. 120–41; id., 'Note sur Héron-Maxime, écrivain ecclésiastique', Anal. Boll. 100 (1982), pp. 229–36. E. Venables in DCB 3 (1882), pp. 878–80, s.v.

Maximus the Greek, St (*c.*1470–1556), monk. Michael Trivolis was a member of a Byzantine family who in his childhood moved from Arta in Epirus to Corfu. In 1492 he went to Florence, where he came under the influence of the Platonist M. *Ficino and of G. *Savonarola. After further travels in Italy, he entered the *Dominican Order in 1502. By 1504, however, he had left the Order and by 1505/6 he was a monk on Mt *Athos. In response to a request in 1516 from the Muscovite ruler for a competent scholar to translate works from Greek into Slavonic, Maximus was sent to Moscow, where he arrived in 1518. His first task was to prepare a translation of Greek commentaries on the Psalter. Besides a large number of translations from Greek, he produced works on theology, philosophy, statecraft, and social problems. He became involved in disputes over the ownership of monastic property (see RUSSIA, CHRISTIANITY IN) and seems to have been indiscreet in his comments on public affairs; in particular he held that the Russian Church should return to the obedience of its mother-church of *Constantinople. After trials in 1525 and 1531, he was sentenced to long terms of imprisonment and solitary confinement; prob. in 1548 he was released and allowed to spend the rest of his life in the monastery of the Holy Trinity near Moscow. He was canonized by the 1988 Synod of the Russian Orthodox Church; feast day, 21 Jan.

É Denissoff, Maxime le Grec et l'Occident (Université de Louvain, Recueil de Travaux d'Histoire et de Philologie, 3rd ser., fasc. 14; 1943). J. V. Haney, From Italy to Muscovy: The Life and Works of Maxim the Greek (Humanistische Bibliothek, Abh. 1, Bd. 19; Munich, 1973). D. Obolensky, 'Italy, Mount Athos, and Muscovy: The Three Worlds of Maximos the Greek (*c.*1470–1556)', Proceedings of the British Academy, 67, for 1981 (1982), pp. 143–61, repr. in Six Byzantine Portraits (Oxford, 1988), pp. 201–19.

Max Müller, Friedrich (1823–1900), comparative philologist and religious writer. A native of Dessau in Germany, he was educated at the universities of Leipzig (1841–3) and Berlin (1844–5), and in 1845 went to Paris, where he began to work on an editio princeps of the Rig-Veda. In 1846 he came to England, and in 1848 went to Oxford to supervise its printing (6 vols., 1849–75). In 1850 he was appointed deputy, and in 1854 full, Taylorian professor of modern European languages. He was elected a Fellow of All Souls in 1858. In 1859 he published his History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature, important esp. for its studies in chronology. Having failed to secure the Sanskrit professorship at Oxford in 1860, he devoted himself largely to other studies, esp. to comparative philology, on which he lectured at the Royal Institution in 1861 and 1863. In 1868 he was appointed to the chair of comparative philology at Oxford, founded esp. for him. In 1875 he undertook the edition of The Sacred Books of the East, a series of translations of E. religious classics in 51 vols., over 30 of which are devoted to the religions of India. Much of his work on the comparative study of religions is embodied in The Origin and Growth of Religion (*Hibbert Lectures (1878) and the *Gifford Lectures from 1888 to 1892, on Natural Religion (1889), Physical Religion (1891), Anthropological Religion (1892), and Theosophy or Psychological Religion (1893)). He also interested himself in comparative mythology, on which he wrote a large work, Contributions to the Science of Mythology (1897).

Max Müller was among the most learned and popular figures in post-*Tractarian Oxford. Through the influence of C. C. J. von *Bunsen, his work also attracted the attention of the Queen and the Prince Consort. His wide range of interests, his facility of expression, and his readiness to put forward highly speculative (and often inadequately tested) theories made his writings congenial to the religious liberals of his age. Though mostly without permanent theological importance, they exercised a great influence on the ideas of the later 19th century.

A collected edn. of his works appeared in 1898–1903. My Autobiography: A Fragment, ed. W. G. Max Müller (son) (1901) covers his life up to his early days in Oxford. His Life and Letters (2 vols., London, 1902) were ed. by his widow. N. C. Chaudhuri, Scholar Extraordinary: The Life of Professor the Rt. Hon. Friedrich Max Müller, P.C. (1974). A. A. Macdonell in DNB, Suppl. 3 (1901), pp. 151–7.

May Laws. The legislation associated with Bismarck's Kulturkampf* and directed against the RC Church in Germany. These laws, passed in May 1873 under the direction of P. L. A. *Falk, were based on the theory of the absolute supremacy of the state. They limited the extent of the disciplinary powers of the Church, instituted a Supreme Ecclesiastical Court whose members were appointed by the Emperor and directly under state control, ordered all ordinands to pass through a state Gymnasium and to take a state examination (the 'Kultur-Examen'), and brought all ecclesiastical seminaries under state control. The laws, with others of a similar nature, were condemned by *Pius IX in the encyclical 'Quod nunquam' (1875) as subversive of the constitution and rights of the Church, and also strongly opposed by many German Protestants.

P. Hinschius, Die preussischen Kirchengesetze des Jahres 1873 (1873), with full text. Eng. tr. of the most important clauses in R. G. D. Laffan (ed.), Select Documents of European History, 3, ed. H. Butterfield (1931), pp. 167 f. The encyclical 'Quod Nunquam' is pr. in Mirbt, no. 613, pp. 471–3, with further refs. See also bibl. to KULTURKAMPF.

Mayne, St Cuthbert (1544–77), the first RC seminary priest executed in England. Born in Devon, he was ordained at the age of 18. At St John's College, Oxford, he came under the influence of E. *Campion, and secretly became a RC. He then entered the English College at *Douai, where he was ordained to the RC priesthood. In 1576 he was sent on the English Mission and became chaplain to a landowner in Cornwall, passing as his steward. In 1577, however, a search was made, and Mayne was found concealed. On being tried at Launceston, he was sentenced to death. It was difficult to find grounds for a capital charge, as the Act of Parliament making it high treason to receive orders abroad had not yet been passed, and he was therefore condemned on the alleged grounds of denying the Queen's spiritual supremacy, saying Mass, possessing a printed copy of a bull for a jubilee, and wearing an *Agnus Dei. He was executed at Launceston on 29 Nov. 1577. He was beatified in 1888 and was among the *Forty Martyrs of England and Wales canonized on 25 Oct. 1970. The engraved portrait frequently reproduced as his likeness is prob. not authentic. Feast day, 29 Nov.

R. A. McElroy, CRL, Blessed Cuthbert Mayne: Protomartyr of the English Seminaries (1929); H. Whelan, Snow on the Hedges: A Life of Cuthbert Mayne (posthumous, Leominster, 1984). E. S. Knox, Cong. Orat., in B. Camm, OSB (ed.), Lives of the English Martyrs Declared Blessed by Pope Leo XIII in 1886 and 1895, 2 (1905), pp. 204–22 and 656. T. Cooper in DNB 37 (1894), pp. 161 f., s.v., for further refs.

Maynooth College. The 'Royal Catholic College' at Maynooth, Co. Kildare, 15 miles NW of Dublin, established in 1795 by the Irish Parliament for the education of RC clergy for Ireland. The present building was erected by A. W. N. *Pugin from funds supplied by Parliament in 1846. Until the disestablishment of the (Anglican) Church of Ireland in 1869, when the payment was commuted, the College was supported by an annual grant, originally of £8,000 but in 1845 raised by Sir Robert Peel from £9,500 to £26,000. Since 1896, as well as being the National Seminary for Ireland, Maynooth College has been a Pontifical University, and since 1910 also a College of the National University of Ireland.

P. J. Corish, Maynooth College 1795 1995 (Dublin, 1995). D. A. Kerr, Peel, Priests, and Politics (Oxford, 1982), esp. pp. 224–89.

Mazarin, Jules (1602–61), French statesman and cardinal. A native of Piscina in the Abruzzi, he was educated by the *Jesuits in Rome and accompanied Jerome *Colonna to the university of Alcalá, where he studied law. On his return to Rome *c.*1622, he became a captain in the army of the Colonna. His diplomatic skill attracted the attention of *Urban VIII, who in 1629 gave him the difficult task of ending the war of the Mantuan succession. From 1632 to 1634, and again from 1636 to 1640, he was vice-legate at *Avignon, where he promoted French interests. In 1639 he became a naturalized Frenchman and in 1640 entered the service of Louis XIII. At the king's instigation he was created a cardinal in 1641 and in 1642 he succeeded A. J. du P. *Richelieu as prime minister. He continued Richelieu's domestic and foreign policy and from now on virtually ruled France until his death. As Louis XIV's godfather he undertook his political education and had the complete confidence of Anne of Austria, the Queen Regent. At the Peace of *Westphalia (1648) he succeeded in enlarging French territory, but he could not prevent the economic crisis of the country or the civil wars of the Fronde (1648–53). He antagonized leaders of the nobility and parlementaires alike, and in a series of venomous Mazarinades he was attacked for his policies and as a foreigner. In 1651–3 he was temporarily banished, but he continued to handle the affairs of the country. His refusal to allow de *Retz to occupy the see of *Paris led to a long dispute with the Papacy. Towards the *Huguenots he pursued a conciliatory policy, maintaining the edicts in their favour and employing them in the service of France. In the *Jansenist controversy he furthered the acceptance of *Innocent X's constitution '*Cum Occasione' (1653). He concluded a trade treaty with Oliver *Cromwell, continued the war against Spain with success, and secured the marriage of Louis XIV to the Infanta Maria Theresa and the victorious Treaty of the Pyrenees (1659). Though he never received Major Orders, he held the see of Metz and a great number of abbeys; from these and other sources he amassed a large fortune. A great art and book collector, he founded the Collège des quatre nations (known as the 'Collège Mazarin') for students from the provinces added to France under his government and bequeathed to it his library, which he intended should be open to all scholars; it became the Bibliothèque Mazarine. Part of his own palace in the rue de Richelieu in Paris was incorporated into the Bibliothèque Nationale. See also following entry.

Lettres du cardinal Mazarin pendant son ministère, ed. [P.] A. Chéruel and G. d'Avenel (9 vols., Collection de documents inédits sur l'histoire de France publiés par les soins du Ministère de l'Instruction Publique, 1st ser., Histoire politique; 1872–1906). C. Moreau (ed.), Choix de Mazarinades (2 vols., Société de l'Histoire de France, 1853); id., Bibliographie des Mazarinades (3 vols., ibid., 1850–51). [P.] A. Chéruel, Histoire de France pendant la minorité de Louis XIV (4 vols., 1879–80); id., Histoire de France sous le ministère de Mazarin: (3 vols., 1882). Studies of Mazarin by A. Hassall ('Foreign Statesmen', London, 1903), ed. G. Mongrédien (Paris, 1959), and by G. Dethan (ibid., 1981). This last incorporates much of Dethan's earlier work, Mazarin et ses amis (1968), with unpub. letters; Eng. tr., without the letters, The Young Mazarin [1977]. P. Jansen, Le Cardinal Mazarin et le mouvement janséniste français 1653–1659 d'après les documents inédits conservés dans les Archives du Ministère des Affaires Étrangères (Bibliothèque de la Société d'histoire ecclésiastique de la France, 1967); V. Tornetta, 'La politica del Mazzarino verso il Papato (1644–1646)', Archivio storico italiano, 99, Disp. 3–4 for 1941 (1942), pp. 86–116; and 100, Disp. 3–4 for 1942 (1943), pp. 95–134. M.-N. Grand-Mesnil, Mazarin, la Fronde et la Presse 1647–1649 [1967]. J. Serroy (ed.), La France et l'Italie au temps de Mazarin. 15ᵉ Colloque du C.M.R. 17 . . . (Grenoble, 25–27 janvier 1985) (Grenoble, 1986), pp. 9–65. Mazarin: Homme d'état et collectionneur 1602–1661 (Bibliothèque Nationale. Exposition organisée pour le troisième centenaire de sa mort; 1961). G. Dethan in EB (1977 edn.), Macropaedia, 11, pp. 725 f., s.v.

Mazarin Bible. So called from a copy in the library of Card. *Mazarin which first attracted the attention of scholars to this magnificent work, it is also known as the 'Gutenberg Bible', after J. *Gutenberg, its printer, or again as the '42-line Bible', from having that number of lines to each column. It is both the first full-length book ever printed, and the first printed edition of the Bible. Gutenberg contributed to it the technical inventions of making matrices and casting movable type from them; his experiments were financed by Johann Fust, a Mainz banker, and the design of the type-face was the work of Peter Schoeffer, a professional scribe. In 1455 this triple partnership was dissolved after a lawsuit; it is probable that the printing of the Bible occupied the years 1453–5 (Enea Silvio de' Piccolomini, later *Pius II, reports that he saw the Bible in sheets, prob. visiting Mainz from Frankfurt am Main between 5 and 31 Oct. 1454, and one surviving copy bears notes that its 2 vols. had been rubricated and bound by 15 and 24 Aug. 1456). Following experiments with an earlier type (afterwards used to print the '36-line Bible'), the text of the Latin *Vulgate began to be set up at Mainz on no less than six presses at once. During production, the number of copies to be printed was increased and parts therefore had to be reset; also the number of lines per column was altered from 40 to 42 by filing down the body of the type, thus enabling more matter to be set in the same space.

Darlow and Moule, 2 (1911), pp. 905 f. See also works cited under GUTENBERG, J.

Mazzolini, Sylvester. See PRIERIAS, SYLVESTER.

Mechitarists. A community of *Uniat *Armenian monks, founded at *Constantinople in 1701. They live under a modified form of the *Benedictine Rule. Founded by Mechitar of Sebaste (1676–1749), an Armenian priest who had submitted to Rome and been ordained in the RC Church in 1696, the community was driven from Constantinople in 1703 and took refuge in Modon in the Morea, then Venetian territory. Upon the conquest of the Morea by the Turks, the Venetian senate gave the community the island of San Lazzaro, Venice, where it settled in 1717. Another section of the community later established itself at Vienna. The Mechitarists devote themselves to study, education, and missionary work, and have issued many important Armenian publications from their printing-houses in Venice and Vienna. Both communities have important collections of Armenian MSS. They use the Armenian liturgy.

V. Langlois, Notice sur le couvent arménien de l'île de S. Lazare (Venice, 1869; Eng. tr., Venice, 1874). V. Inglisian, Der Diener Gottes Mechitar von Sebaste: Stifter der Mechitaristen (der armenischen Benediktiner) und Kulturapostel der armenischen Volkes (Vienna, 1929) and other works of this author. P. Krüger, 'Die armenischen Mechitharisten und ihre Bedeutung', Ostkirchliche Studien, 16 (1967), pp. 3–14, with bibl. R. Janin, AA, in DTC 10 (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 497–502, s.v. 'Mékhitaristes'; E. El-Hayek in NCE 9 (1967), p. 545, s.v.; G. Amadouni and others in DIP 5 (1978), cols. 1112–23, s.v.

Mechlin, Conversations of. See MALINES CONVERSATIONS.

Mechthild of Magdeburg (*c.*1207–1282 or somewhat later), author of a book of mystical Revelations. Descended from a noble family in Saxony, she experienced visions from the age of 12 and left her family home *c.*1230 to become a *Beguine at Magdeburg under the spiritual guidance of the *Dominicans. Books 1–5 of her visions, entitled 'Das fliessende Licht der Gottheit' and containing dialogues with the Lord, bridal mysticism, as well as trinitarian theology and eschatology, were written down *c.*1250–9, a sixth book *c.*1260–70 (books 1–6 were posthumously rendered into Latin by the Dominicans at Halle, before 1298), and a final book *c.*1271–82. From the Revelations, which are the only document of her life, it emerges that in addition to the tribulations of illness she suffered personal threats and much disapproval from official sources, including the threat to burn her writings. During the 1260s, when opposition to the Beguines became intense, she returned for a time to her family, and around 1270 she became a nun at the *Cistercian-inspired convent at Helfta, where she had contact with younger visionary women, St Mechthild of Hackeborn (with whom she has sometimes been confused) and St *Gertrude the Great. The Revelations, which number among the most forceful and poetic examples of women's writing to have survived from the Middle Ages, are no longer extant in the original Low German, but only in a High German translation made towards the middle of the 14th cent. in the circle of Henry of Nördlingen and the *Friends of God at Basle.

Her work, discovered in 1860, was first ed. by G. Morel (Regensburg, 1869); crit. edn. by H. Neumann and G. Vollmann-Profe (Münchener Texte und Untersuchungen zur deutschen Literatur des Mittelalters, 100–101; 1990–93); the Lat. tr. ed. by the monks of *Solesmes, Revelationes Gertrudianae ac Mechtildianae, 2 (Poitiers and Paris, 1877), pp. 435–643; Eng. tr. by S. L. Clark and C. M. Galvani (New York, 1991). H. Neumann, 'Beiträge zur Textgeschichte des "Fliessenden Lichts der Gottheit" und zur Lebensgeschichte Mechthilds von Magdeburg', Nachr. (Gött.), 1954, pp. 27–80, repr. in K. Ruh (ed.), Altdeutsche und altniederländische Mystik (Wege der Forschung, 23; Darmstadt, 1964), pp. 175–239. A. M. Haas, Sermo mysticus (Fribourg, 1979), pp. 67–135. Id. in H. De Boor and R. Newald, Geschichte der deutschen Literatur, 3. 2, ed. I. Glier (Munich, 1987), pp. 242–54.

W. Haug, 'Das Gespräch mit dem unvergleichlichen Partner', in K. Stierle and R. Warning (eds.), Das Gespräch (Munich, 1984), pp. 251–79. N. F. Palmer, 'Das Buch als Bedeutungsträger bei Mechtild von Magdeburg', in W. Harms and others (eds.), Bildhafte Rede in Mittelalter und früher Neuzeit (Tübingen, 1992), pp. 217–35. J. Howard, 'The German Mystic Mechthild of Magdeburg', in K. M. Wilson (ed.), Medieval Women Writers (Athens, Ga. [1984]), pp. 153–85. G. J. Lewis, Bibliographie zur deutschen Frauenmystik des Mittelalters (Bibliographien zur deutschen Literatur des Mittelalters, 10; 1989), pp. 164–83 (nos. 1339–502/1). M. Schmidt in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 877–85; H. Neumann, in Verfasserlexikon (2nd edn.), 6 (1987), cols. 260–70, s.v.

Mede, Joseph (1586–1638), also 'Mead', biblical scholar. He was a native of Berden in Essex and educated at Christ's College, Cambridge, of which he was elected a Fellow in 1613, and where he remained for the rest of his life. He was a scholar of encyclopaedic knowledge. Though regarding the Pope as the antichrist, he admitted that the RC Church taught the principal doctrines of Christianity, and defended the sacrificial aspect of the Eucharist. Mede's best-known work, Clavis Apocalyptica (1627), is an interpretation of the Book of Rev. on the principle that its visions form an organic and related whole in chronological order; the Day of Judgement is a period of a thousand years of peace for the Church on earth. His *millenarian doctrines were partly influenced by the astrological studies of his youth. Among his other writings are treatises Of the Name Altar (1637) and on The Apostasy of the Latter Times (1641).

Collected Works, 2 vols., London, 1648; enlarged edn. [by J. Worthington], 2 vols., ibid., 1663–4; further extension, 2 vols., ibid., 1672. Brief Life appended to his posthumously pub. Diatribae: Discourses on Divers Texts of Scripture (4 parts, 1643–52); Life, pt. 4, pp. 675 ff. [no pagination]. K. R. Firth, The Apocalyptic Tradition in Reformation Britain 1530–1645 (Oxford, 1979), pp. 213–28 and 242–6. A. Gordon in DNB 37 (1894), pp. 178–80, s.v. 'Mead'.

Medina, Bartolomé (1527–80), Spanish *Dominican theologian. He taught theology first at the college of Alcalá, and from 1576 to his death as principal professor at the University of Salamanca; his main interest was centred upon commenting on St *Thomas Aquinas. He has been given the title of 'Father of *Probabilism', though whether he was the real author of this doctrine is still a matter of controversy. His opinions on the subject are laid down in an essay inserted in his Commentary on the 'Prima Secundae' of St Thomas, where he defends the view that of two opinions both of which are probable, though in an unequal degree, the less probable may be followed. This thesis was immediately taken up and defended by other Dominicans, esp. D. *Báñez, though in the subsequent development of the doctrine, in which the notion of the 'probable' was more and more enlarged, the *Jesuits had the main share in upholding it, whilst Dominican moralists came to reject it. See also SALMANTICENSES.

His Comm. on Summa Theol. II (1) was issued at Salamanca, 1572; on III, qq. 1–59, ibid., 1578; and Breve Instructión de como se ha de administrar el sacramento de la penitencia (Huesca, 1579). Two sets of Lectures on Summa Theol. I (1) and his 1569 lectures on II (2) survive in Vatican MSS. I. G. Menéndez Reigada, 'El pseudo-probabilismo de Fray Bartolomé de Medina', La Ciencia Tomista, 20 (1928), pp. 35–57; M.-M. Gorce, 'Le Sens du mot "Probable" et les origines du probabilisme', Rev. S.R. 10 (1930), pp. 460–4; cf. J. de Blic, 'Barthélemy de Medina et les origines du probabilisme', Ephemerides theologicae Lovanienses, 7 (1930), pp. 46–83. C. Pozo, SJ, La Teoría del Progreso Dogmático en los Teólogos de la Escuela de Salamanca (Biblioteca Theologica Hispana, 1st ser. 1; 1959), pp. 181–92. M.-M. Gorce in DTC 10 (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 481–5, s.v., with bibl.; T. Deman, ibid. 13 (pt. 1; 1936), cols. 463–70, s.v. 'Probabilisme'.

meditation (μελετή, meditatio) has been used in a variety of different senses in the Christian tradition: (1) the recitation or memorizing of Scriptural texts (this is the predominant sense in early monastic literature, but later fell into disuse); (2) keeping various religious truths or inspirational thoughts in mind during the day (sometimes with different thoughts being recommended for different periods of the day); (3) thinking about things, whether the emphasis is on intellectual rigour, acuteness of perception, or devotional fervour (the object of such meditation might be Scripture, doctrine, life, the world, or almost anything); (4) the application of the mind and often the imagination to the truths of the faith and esp. to episodes in the life of Christ, with a view to stirring an intense affective response (this tends to become a more or less formal exercise). Meditation in all these senses is easily associated with *prayer, because some of the favourite biblical texts are themselves prayers, and thinking about Christian truth sharpens a desire for God's gifts, and thinking about life reveals man's need of God; in sense (4) meditation came in due course to be regarded as part of prayer and so it could be integrated into various methods of prayer. Following St *Teresa of Ávila and St *John of the Cross, many writers have posited a sharp distinction between meditation (in sense (4)) and *contemplation. In modern times various forms of meditation have been adopted or adapted from Eastern non-Christian religions, often involving the abandonment of deliberate thought rather than its focusing on a specific religious object.

See works cited under PRAYER.

Megilloth (Heb. מגלות, 'rolls'). The name given to five Books in the OT, all of them in the third and latest section of the OT *canon known as the 'Writings' ('*Hagiographa'), which are read by the Jews on certain holy days. They are the Song of *Solomon (read at the *Passover), *Ruth (at the Feast of *Weeks), the *Lamentations of Jeremiah (at the anniversary of the Babylonian destruction of *Jerusalem), *Ecclesiastes (at the Feast of *Tabernacles), and *Esther (at the Feast of *Purim).

Meinrad, St (d. 861), Patron of *Einsiedeln (q.v.). Born near Tübingen, he became a monk at *Reichenau and for several years was active in teaching and pastoral work. In middle life he felt called to greater austerity, left his monastery and eventually settled at the spot in the Swiss forests where Einsiedeln ('hermitage') now stands, and here lived the life of a hermit for 25 years. A statue of the Virgin, given to him by a Benedictine abbess and placed in his chapel, is still venerated at Einsiedeln. He was put to death by two ruffians to whom he had given hospitality. His body was taken back to Reichenau and he became venerated as a martyr. Feast day, 21 Jan. His symbol is two ravens.

The late 9th-cent. Life by a monk of Reichenau was orig. ed. by S. Brandt (Basle, 1496); modern edns. by O. Holder-Egger in MGH, Scriptores, 15 (pt. 1; 1887), pp. 444–8, and O. Ringholz, OSB, Geschichte des fürstlichen Benediktinerstiftes U.L.F. Einsiedeln, 1 (Einsiedeln, etc., 1904), pp. 648–51; Life written in 1378 by Gergius de Gengenbach, pr. ibid., pp. 653–7. The Einsiedeln 'Blockbuch' of 1450, with legends of St Meinrad, ed. G. Morell (ibid., 1861); facsimile, with introd. by L. Helbling, OSB (ibid., 1961). O. Ringholz, OSB, Meinrads-Büchlein: Das Leben und Verehrung des Märtyrs von Einsiedeln (Einsiedeln, etc., 1905), pp. 1–80. Sankt Meinrad zum elften Zentenarium seines Todes 861 1961, ed. by the Benedictines of Einsiedeln, with preface by L. Helbling, OSB (ibid., 1961). T. Klüppel, Reichenauer Hagiographie zwischen Walahfrid und Berno (Sigmaringen, 1980), pp. 45–56. See also works cited under EINSIEDELN.

Mekitarists. See MECHITARISTS.

Melanchthon, Philipp (1497–1560), German Reformer. The name 'Melanchthon' (the Greek version of his German surname Schwartzerdt, 'Black earth') was given to him in 1509 by J. *Reuchlin, his mother's uncle and his patron. He studied at Heidelberg (from 1509) and Tübingen (from 1512). In 1518 he became professor of Greek at *Wittenberg, where he both influenced M. *Luther and was influenced by him. He took part in the *Leipzig Disputation (1519) and in the ensuing controversy with *Carlstadt. In 1521 he found himself at the head of the Reformation Movement while Luther was confined in the *Wartburg. Lecturing on Rom. at this time, he divided the Epistle into sections dealing with key doctrines: sin, Law, grace, etc. This work was the basis of the first of the many versions of his most influential book, Loci communes (1521). During 1521–7 he corrected Luther's translation of the NT and wrote several biblical commentaries.

One of the most erudite and intellectually powerful figures of his age, Melanchthon was closer than Luther to RC teaching on the Law, free will, and questions of *adiaphora. On the other hand, his concern to prevent further divisions in the Church (although it did not extend to embracing the *Anabaptists and other radical sects) made him more open to *Zwinglian and *Calvinist doctrines of the Eucharist. Unlike Luther, he considered philosophy and other 'profane disciplines' to be of great value to theology.

His distancing from Luther's doctrine dates from 1527–8 and the publication of the Thüringen Visitation Articles in which Melanchthon emphasizes that *penance (in a modified form) is dictated by Divine Law. There was, however, no question of a break, at least before Luther's death in 1546, and Melanchthon sided with him firmly against the Zwinglians in the controversy on Eucharistic doctrine in 1525–36. He took part in the Diet of *Speyer (1529), the *Marburg Colloquy (1529), and the Diet of Augsburg (1530), where he was the chief architect of the *Augsburg Confession. In 1537, however, he alone among the Protestant theologians objected to the overt condemnation of the Papacy in the *Schmalkaldic Articles. He was present at the Catholic-Protestant colloquies of *Worms (1540–1) and *Ratisbon (1541) and, together with M. *Bucer, he went to great lengths to unite the Reformed and the RC Church. In his later years he was largely concerned with the organization of the Church in Saxony on a semi-episcopal basis. At the same time, his apparently favourable attitude to the *Augsburg Interim (1548) made him many opponents among the Lutherans, who also objected increasingly to his *Crypto-Calvinism and his views on free will and to his acceptance of RC rituals as matters of no importance—questions which remained controversial until they were settled by the Formula of *Concord in 1577.

Melanchthon's characteristic teaching on free will, known as *synergism (q.v), received its definitive formulation in the 1535 edition of the Loci communes. In this he also stresses that Christians are bound by the Law of God contained in the Bible: they are not to rely on their *predestination to salvation, but must act justly. In addition to the Loci and numerous biblical commentaries, he wrote a commentary on *Aristotle, works on logic, rhetoric, philosophy, and science, and edited historical documents such as the Chronicon Carionis. He was also responsible for major innovations in the German educational system.

Collected Works and Letters ed. K. G. Bretschneider and E. Bindseil (Corpus Reformatorum, 1–28; Brunswick, 1834–60), works omitted from this collection pub. as Supplementa Melanchthoniana (Leipzig, 1910 ff. [5 vols. to 1929]). Selected Works ed. R. Stupperich (7 vols., Gütersloh, 1951–75). Separate modern edns. of Loci Communes by G. L. Plitt (Erlangen, 1864; rev. T. Kolder, ibid., 1890; 4th edn., ibid., 1925; Eng. tr. by C. L. Hill, Boston, 1944) and of Correspondence by H. Scheible (Stuttgart and Bad Cannstatt, 1977 ff.). Further Eng. trs. of Loci communes by C. L. Manschreck (Library of Protestant Thought, New York, 1965) and in W. Pauck (ed.), Melanchthon and Bucer (Library of Christian Classics, 19 [1969]), pp. 3–152 (incl. introd.). Lives by C. Schmidt (Elberfeld, 1861), G. Ellinger (Berlin, 1902), C. L. Manschreck (New York [1958]), and R. Stupperich (Berlin, 1960; Eng. tr., 1966). C. Hartfelder, Melanchthon als praeceptor Germaniae (1889). O. Clemen, Studien zu Melanchthons Reden und Gedichten (1913). F. Hildebrandt, Melanchthon, Alien or Ally? (1946). A. Agnoletto, La Filosofia di Melantone (Milan, 1959). P. Fraenkel, Testimonia Patrum: The Function of Patristic Argument in the Theology of Philip Melanchthon (Geneva, 1961). W. Maurer, Der junge Melanchthon zwischen Humanismus und Reformation (2 vols., Göttingen [1967–9]). H. Pfister, Die Entwicklung der Theologie Melanchthons unter dem Einfluss der Auseinandersetzung mit Schwarmgeistern und Wiedertäufern (Freiburg i.B. Diss., 1968). S. Wiedenhofer, Formalstrukturen humanistischer und reformatorischer Theologie bei Philipp Melanchthon (Regensburger Studien zur Theologie, 2; 2 vols., 1976). R. W. Quere, Melanchthon's Christum Cognoscere: Christ's Efficacious Presence in the Eucharistic Theology of Melanchthon (Bibliotheca Humanistica & Reformatorica, 22; Nieuwkoop, 1977). C. E. Maxcey, Bona Opera: A Study in the Development of the Doctrine in Philip Melanchthon (ibid. 31; 1980). T. Wengert, Philip Melanchthon's 'Annotationes in Johannem' in Relation to its Predecessors and Contemporaries (Travaux d'Humanisme et Renaissance, 220; Geneva, 1987). W. Hammer, Die Melanchthonforschung im Wandel der Jahrhunderte (Quellen und Forschungen zur Reformationsgeschichte, 35, 36, and 49; 1967–81). Survey of works pub. 1945–65 by P. Fraenkel and M. Greschat (Geneva, 1967). J. Paquier in DTC 10 (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 502–13; W. Maurer in RGG (3rd edn.), 4 (1960), cols. 834–41; H. Scheible in TRE 22 (1992), pp. 371–410, all s.v., with further bibl.

Melanesian Brotherhood. An Anglican religious order of evangelists who take the traditional vows of poverty, chastity, and obedience, but normally for a limited period only. It was founded in 1925 by a Solomon Islander, Ini Kopuria, with the encouragement of the Bp. of Melanesia. It works in the Solomon Islands, Vanuatu, Fiji, Papua New Guinea, and *Australia, and is prob. the largest community for men in the Anglican Communion. The parallel Community of the Sisters of Melanesia was founded by Solomon Island women in the 1970s.

M. Lycett, Brothers: The Story of the Native Brotherhood of Melanesia (1935); C. E. Fox, Kakamora (1962). History by B. J. Macdonald-Milne in preparation.

Melania, St (c.342–c.410), 'the Elder'. A Roman lady of aristocratic descent and great wealth, on the early death of her husband she adopted the ascetic life, in 372 or 374 left Rome for Egypt and Palestine, and founded a double monastery with *Rufinus of Aquileia on the Mount of *Olives. In 399 or 400 she returned to Italy. Some time before 408 she fled before the Goths by way of Sicily and Africa to *Jerusalem, where she died.

The chief sources are the Life of St Melania the Younger (see below), and scattered refs. in *Palladius' Lausiac History and in the Epp. of *Jerome and *Paulinus of Nola. F. X. Murphy, CSSR, 'Melania the Elder: a Biographical Note', Traditio, 5 (1947), pp. 59–77; N. Moine, 'Melaniana', Recherches Augustiniennes, 15 (1980), pp. 3–79. W. H. Fremantle in DCB 3 (1882), pp. 888 f.; N. Moine in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 955–60, s.v. 'Mélanie (1)'. See also bibl. to foll. entry.

Melania, St (c.385–438/9), 'the Younger', granddaughter of the preceding. She fled with her husband Pinian to Africa, where they founded two monasteries at Tagaste. Later they joined St *Jerome and entered monasteries at *Bethlehem. After Pinian's death (431/2), Melania founded another monastery on the Mount of *Olives. She also visited Constantinople, but returned to *Jerusalem to die. Feast day, 31 Dec.

Lat. Life ed. [prob. H. *Delehaye, SJ] in Anal. Boll. 8 (1889), pp. 16–63 (incomplete); Gk. Life ed. H. D[elehaye, SJ], ibid. 22 (1903), pp. 5–50, and, with Fr. tr., by D. Gorce (SC 90; 1962). Complete Lat. text, with Gk. text, ed. Card. M. Rampolla del Tindaro (Rome, fol., 1905). Eng. tr., with introd. and comm., by E. A. Clark (New York and Toronto [1984]). It is disputed whether the Gk. or Lat. text is the original; cf. A. d'Alès, 'Les Deux Vies de sainte Mélanie la Jeune', Anal. Boll. 25 (1906), pp. 401–50. N. Moine, 'Melaniana', Recherches Augustiniennes, 15 (1980), pp. 3–79. W. H. Fremantle in DCB 3 (1882), p. 889, s.v.; N. Moine in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 960–5, s.v. 'Mélanie (2)'.

Melchiades, St. See MILTIADES, ST.

Melchiorites. See HOFFMANN, MELCHIOR.

Melchisedech. An alternative spelling of *Melchizedek (q.v.).

Melchites (or Melkites). This term, derived from the Gk. form of the Syriac adjective mălkāyā, 'imperial', is used of those Christians of Syria and Egypt who, refusing *Monophysitism and accepting the Definition of Faith of the Council of *Chalcedon (451), remained in communion with the Imperial see of Constantinople as 'Emperor's men'. Today the term is applied to Christians of the Byzantine rite (particularly the *Uniats, but to a lesser degree the Orthodox also) belonging to the Patriarchates of Antioch, Jerusalem, and Alexandria. The Orthodox, most of whom are under the jurisdiction of the Patriarch of Antioch (resident in Damascus), number c.750,000, while the Uniats (for whom there has been a separate hierarchy since 1684) number c.400,000. Since the 8th cent. the Melchites have produced a large literature in Arabic.

K. P. Karalevsky, Histoire des patriarcats melkites (Alexandrie, Antioch, Jérusalem) depuis le schisme monophysite du sixième siècle jusqu'à nos jours (tom. 2, fasc. 1; tom. 3, fascs. 1–2; all pub., Rome, 1909–11). C. Descy, Introduction à l'histoire et l'ecclésiologie de l'Église melkite (Jounich, Lebanon, 1986; Eng. tr., The Melkite Church, Newton, Mass., 1993). A. *Fortescue, The Uniate Eastern Churches (1923), pp. 185–233. J. Hajjar, Les Chrétiens Uniates du Proche-Orient [1962]. C. H. Malik in A. J. Arberry (ed.), Religion in the Middle East, 1 (Cambridge, 1969), pp. 297–346, and G. C. Anawati, ibid., pp. 366–8. J. Nasrallah, Histoire du mouvement littéraire dans l'Église Melchite du Ve au XXe Siècle (1979 ff.). C. Karalevskij in DHGE 3 (1924), cols. 563–703, s.v. 'Antioche'; R. Janin, AA, in DTC 10 (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 516–20, s.v.

Melchizedek. Acc. to Gen. 14: 18, the 'King of Salem' and 'Priest of the Most High God (El Elyon)' who offered *Abraham bread and wine as he was returning from his defeat of the four kings. The only other mention of him in the OT occurs in Ps. 110: 4, where the King addressed is styled 'a priest for ever after the order of Melchizedek'. Both these passages were used by the author of the Ep. to the Hebrews (6: 20; 7: 1 ff.) to prove the superiority of the priesthood of Christ, prefigured by Melchizedek, over that of Aaron and the Levites. In the *Dead Sea Scrolls there are speculative traditions about Melchizedek as a heavenly being who will judge the world. From the time of *Clement of Alexandria (c.200) onwards his offering of bread and wine has been regarded as a type of the Eucharist, esp. in the W., and *Cyprian argued from it the necessity of using wine, and not merely water, for the celebration of the Christian sacrifice. In the same connection the name of Melchizedek was introduced into the Roman *Canon of the Mass, where his offering is mentioned together with those of Abel and Abraham as an acceptable sacrifice typifying that of Christ on the Cross. Another liturgical mention occurs in the first antiphon of the Second *Vespers of *Corpus Christi, where Christ is called in the words of Ps. 110 'Sacerdos in aeternum . . . secundum ordinem Melchisedech'. In the first Christian centuries several heretical interpretations of his person were condemned by the Fathers, e.g. the belief that he was a power of God superior to Christ (by St *Epiphanius), that he was the Holy Spirit (by St *Ambrose), and that he was an incarnation of the Logos (by *Mark the Hermit).

See comm. ad locc. F. L. Horton, The Melchizedek Tradition: A Critical Examination of the Sources to the Fifth Century A.D. and in the Epistle to the Hebrews (Society for New Testament Studies, Monograph Series, 30; Cambridge, 1976), with bibl. M. de Jonge and A. S. van der Woude, '11Q Melchizedek and the New Testament', New Testament Studies, 12 (1966), pp. 301–26.

On the 'Melchisedekians', described by Epiphanius (Haer. 55), see also G. Bardy in DTC 10 (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 513–16, s.v. 'Melchisédéciens'.

Melitian Schisms. Two 4th-cent. schisms go under this name:

(1) That due to Melitius (often, but wrongly, spelled 'Meletius'), Bp. of Lycopolis in Egypt. It arose out of Melitius' objections to the terms laid down by *Peter, Bp. of Alexandria, during a lull in the Diocletianic persecution c.306, for the return of the lapsed to the Church. Thinking the conditions too lax, Melitius created disturbances, and ordained some of his supporters, whereupon he was excommunicated by Peter. After a further period of persecution, during which Peter was martyred and Melitius himself banished to the mines, he returned to Egypt and founded a schismatic Church with clergy of his own ordination.

The schism continued to flourish for several decades. At the *Council of Nicaea (325), where the matter was raised, it was determined that Melitian clergy should be allowed to continue their functions, but to be subordinate to *Alexander (who had meanwhile succeeded Peter). Their bishops, if legally elected, might take the places of the Catholic bishops when the latter died. Melitius himself was to retain the title of bishop, but to have no see. On the accession of St *Athanasius (328), however, this arrangement broke down, as the Melitians, encouraged by *Eusebius of Nicomedia, again went into schism. Melitius was succeeded by John Arkaph of Memphis. The sect continued, and evidence for the life of Melitian monastic communities has come to light in a number of British Library papyri. It seems to have survived as a small body down to the 8th cent.

(2) The 4th-cent. schism at Antioch which followed the leadership of Melitius. See the next entry.

The chief authorities for the Egyptian Schism are the Melitian docs. in the *Theodosian Codex (Ver. lx [58]); the papyri, ed., with introd., in H. I. Bell, Jews and Christians in Egypt (1924), pp. 38–99; scattered refs. in Athanasius; and *Epiphanius, Haer. 68. E. *Schwartz, 'Zur Geschichte des Athanasius', Nachr. (Gött), 1905, pp. 164–87, repr. in his Gesammelte Schriften, 3 (1959), pp. 87–116; F. H. Kettler, 'Der melitianische Streit in Ägypten', ZNTW 35 (1936), pp. 155–93; R. [D.] Williams, 'Arius and the Melitian Schism', JTS NS 37 (1986), pp. 35–52. F. J. Foakes-Jackson in HERE 8 (1915), p. 538, s.v. 'Meletianism'; É. Amann in DTC 10 (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 531–6; C. Vagaggini, OSB, in EC 8 (1952), cols. 640 f., s.v. 'Melezio (Melizio) di Licipoli'.

Melitius, St (d. 381), Bp. of *Antioch. He was translated from the see of Sebaste to Antioch in 360, and both *Arians and Nicenes looked for his support. An orthodox inaugural sermon on Prov. 8: 22 led to his immediate exile by the Emp. Constantius; but when he returned in 362 under *Julian, he failed to secure the support of *Athanasius for his claim to the see. He was twice banished under Valens, from 365 to 366 and from 371 to 378, St *Basil being unswerving in support for his claims, but Alexandria wavering and Rome hostile. He was finally restored in 378 and presided at the Council of *Constantinople of 381, during which he died. The schism at Antioch called by his name (not to be confused with the *Melitian Schism in Egypt half a century earlier) arose from the presence of two rival orthodox parties at Antioch which failed to co-operate. The supporters of *Eustathius (Bp. of Antioch *c.*324–*c.*327) suspected the theology of Melitius and created the schism by securing the consecration of one Paulinus in 362. Though it lasted until after the death of Melitius, canonical right was on his side. Feast day, 12 Feb.

F. Cavallera, Le Schisme d'Antioche (1905), passim. G. Bardy, 'Le Concile d'Antioche (379)', R. Bén. 45 (1933), pp. 196–213. E. *Schwartz, 'Zur Kirchengeschichte des vierten Jahrhunderts', ZNTW 34 (1935), pp. 129–213; repr. in his Gesammelte Schriften, 4 (1960), pp. 1–110. W. A. Jurgens, 'A Letter of Meletius of Antioch', HTR 53 (1960), pp. 251–60. CPG 2 (1974), pp. 254–6 (nos. 3415–25). F. *Loofs in PRE (3rd edn.), 12 (1903), pp. 552–8, s.v., and É. Amann in DTC 10 (1930), cols. 520–31, s.v., both with bibls.

Melito, St (d. *c.*190), Bp. of Sardis. Apart from the fact that he made a visit to Palestine to visit the Holy Places, practically nothing is known of his life. He was described by *Polycrates (ap. *Eusebius, HE 5. 24. 5) as one of the great lights of Asia and an upholder of *Quartodeciman practice, and the author of the '*Little Labyrinth' applauded him as an upholder of orthodox Christology. He was a prolific writer, but only fragments of his works were known until 1940, when C. Bonner published a work preserved in a papyrus shared between the *Chester Beatty collection and the University of Michigan. The work bore no title in this papyrus, but a further text found among the *Bodmer papyri (pub. 1960) and also the Coptic and Georgian versions provide the title 'On the Pasch' (Περὶ Πάσχα, Peri Pascha). A Latin epitome survives among the sermons of both *Augustine and *Leo I. Its main theme is the new *Pasch inaugurated by Christ. The liturgical context appears to be the Quartodeciman Pasch, and there are interesting parallels with the Jewish Passover haggadah. There is much polemic against the Jews who crucified the Lord. The Christology of the work bears out Melito's reputation: he describes Christ as 'by nature God and Man' (φύσει θεὸς ὢν καὶ ἄνθρωπος). There is an anti-Gnostic insistence on the true humanity of Christ and on the unity of the Old and New Covenants. Man was created a harmonious unity of body and soul, and Redemption consists in the restoration of this unity, which has been dissolved by sin and death. The surviving fragments of his other works include parts of an 'apology' addressed to the Emp. *Marcus Aurelius and a treatise on Baptism, which seems to owe something to Stoic sources. Melito's theology prob. influenced *Irenaeus and *Tertullian. Feast day, 1 Apr.

Crit. edn. with Fr. tr. of Peri Pascha and frags. of other works by O. Perler (SC 123; 1966); and with Eng. tr. by S. G. Hall (Oxford Early Christian Texts, 1979). Chester Beatty-Michigan papyrus of the Peri Pascha ed. C. Bonner (Studies and Documents, 12; Philadelphia and London, 1940); the Bodmer text by M. Testuz (Papyrus Bodmer, 13; Cologny and Geneva, 1960); and the Georgian version, with Eng. tr., by J. N. Birdsall in Muséon, 130 (1967), pp. 121–38. H. Chadwick, 'A Latin Epitome of Melito's Homily on the Pascha', JTS NS 11 (1960), pp. 76–82. F. L. Cross, The Early Christian Fathers (1960), pp. 103–9. CPG 1 (1983), pp. 35–43 (nos. 1092–8). O. Perler in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 979–90, s.v., with bibl.

Mellitus, St (d. 624), Abp. of *Canterbury. Sent to England by St *Gregory I in 601, he was consecrated by St *Augustine missionary bishop for the East Saxons in 604, with London (where *Ethelbert built the church of St Paul for him) as his headquarters. After some years, evangelization was arrested by the accession of kings of the East Saxons and of Kent who were hostile to Christianity, and Mellitus was forced to take refuge for a time in Gaul. In 619, soon after his return to England, he succeeded Lawrence as the third Abp. of Canterbury. Feast day, 24 Apr.

The main source is *Bede, HE 1. 29 f. and 2. 3–7; cf. comm. by J. M. Wallace-Hadrill (Oxford, 1988), pp. 39, 42 f., 62, 64. W. *Stubbs in DCB 3 (1882), pp. 90 f.

Melville, Andrew (1545–1622), Scottish *Presbyterian Reformer and theologian. He was born at Baldovie, nr. Montrose, and educated at St Andrews, where he was the only member of the university who knew Greek. In 1564 he went to Paris to study oriental languages, and thence to Poitiers (1566), where he read civil law. The political troubles in France led him to retire to *Geneva in 1569, where T. *Beza procured him the professorship of humanity at the Academy. On his return to Scotland in 1574 he became principal of Glasgow university. His educational reforms, which included a new plan of studies and the establishment of chairs in languages, science, philosophy, and theology, met with great success. He also took an active part in attacking what was left of the Scottish episcopal system. In 1575 he was entrusted with the drawing up of the 'Second Book of *Discipline' (q.v.), which was largely inspired by the Genevan model and sought to discard the remnants of prelacy. In 1578 he was appointed commissioner for the visitation of St Andrews, and in 1580 he became principal of St Mary's College, St Andrews. When Moderator of the General Assembly of 1582, he prosecuted R. Montgomery, one of the '*tulchan' bishops, who had accepted the see of Glasgow from *James VI [I] and the Duke of Lennox on condition that the bulk of the revenues should revert to the Duke. Thereby brought into opposition to the King, he was charged at Edinburgh in 1584 with treason, and fled to England to escape imprisonment and possible death. In 1585 he returned to Scotland, was again Moderator of the General Assembly in 1587, and became rector of St Andrews in 1590. His attacks on the King's interference in religious matters led to the loss of his rectorship in 1597, but he was made Dean of the Theological Faculty at St Andrews in 1599. After the accession of James to the English throne he again incurred the royal displeasure by insisting on the right of a free Assembly and was summoned to London in 1606. A sarcastic Latin poem on Anglican worship caused him to be charged before the Privy Council and confined to the Tower in 1607, whence he was released in 1611 on being offered the chair of biblical theology at Sedan university. Here he spent the remaining years of his life. Though his bitter invective frequently marred the success of his work, his reform of the Scottish universities and of Scottish Presbyterianism are lasting achievements. Among his writings are Latin poems on biblical subjects, the finest of which is the Carmen Mosis (1573); a treatise on free will (1597); and a commentary on Romans (pub. 1850).

The standard modern work is the Life by T. McCrie (2 vols. bound in 1; Edinburgh, 1819; 2nd edn., 1823). Study by S. Mechie in R. S. Wright (ed.), Fathers of the Kirk (1960), pp. 37–48. A. Gordon in DNB 37 (1894), pp. 230–7, with further refs.

Memling (or Memlinc), Hans (*c.*1440–94), painter. A native of Seligenstadt on the Main, he was registered as a citizen of Bruges by 1465, and was among its wealthiest inhabitants. The legend that he became an inmate of St John's Hospital is an 18th-cent. fabrication, though the Hospital possesses a fine collection of his works. Despite his German origins, the main influences on his style were Netherlandish, esp. Roger van der Weyden. His paintings, which are notable for their colour and harmony, include the Shrine of St *Ursula, the Donne Triptych in the National Gallery, London, as well as several Madonnas and other altarpieces. His precise drawing and high finish are most apparent in his portraits.

Reproductions of his pictures, with introd. by K. Voll (Klassiker der Kunst in Gesamtausgaben, 14; 1909). Details of his 'Passionsaltar' at Lübeck ed. C. G. Heise (Hamburg, 1950). Studies by L. von Baldass (Vienna, 1942) and [K.] B. McFarlane (posthumously ed. E. Wind and G. Harriss; Oxford Studies in the History of Art and Architecture, 1971). M. J. Friedländer, Die altniederländische Malerei, 6 (1928), pp. 9–70, with plates i–lxvi and suppl., 14 (1937), pp. 102 f.; Eng. tr., 6 (pt. 1; Leiden, 1971).

Memorare (Lat., 'Remember'). A widely used intercessory prayer addressed to the BVM. It is commonly ascribed to St *Bernard of Clairvaux, prob. owing to a confusion with Claude Bernard ('The Poor Priest'; 1588–1641), who popularized the prayer; but its real author is unknown. The earliest known texts date from the late 15th cent. when they are embodied in a much longer prayer to the BVM. In 1846 Pope *Pius IX attached considerable indulgences to its recitation, and it is included in the 1849 edn. of the *Raccolta. The most popular Eng. version begins, 'Remember, O most loving Virgin Mary'.

N. Paulus, 'Das Alter des Gebetes Memorare', ZKT 26 (1902), pp. 604–6. H. Thurston, SJ, 'The Memorare', The Month, 132 (1918), pp. 269–78, repr. in his Familiar Prayers, ed. P. Grosjean, SJ (1953), no. 9, pp. 152–63, with refs.

memoria (Lat., commonly rendered in English 'memorial'). The name given in current RC liturgical documents to the least important of the three categories of *feast. The class is divided into obligatory and optional memoriae. See also FEASTS, ECCLESIASTICAL, and SOLEMNITAS.

Memoriale Rituum (also known as Rituale parvum). A Latin liturgical book containing the forms traditionally used in the blessing of candles (for *Candlemas), ashes (for *Ash Wednesday), and palms (for *Palm Sunday), as well as the service for the last three days in *Holy Week in the shortened form usual in smaller RC parish churches. The book was first issued in 1725 by *Benedict XIII for use at Rome, and nearly 100 years later (1821) approved by *Pius VII for the whole Church of the Roman rite. It has been rendered obsolete by *Pius XII's reordering of the Holy Week liturgy and subsequent changes.

P. Siffrin in EC 8 (1952), cols. 666 f., s.v.

Memphitic. See BOHAIRIC.

Memra (Aram. מֵימְרָא 'word'). The word was used in a specifically theological sense in Jewish literature, esp. for the Divine creative Word (see LOGOS), manifesting God's power in the material world and in the human mind, and acting as His agent and as the mediator between God and men. In the *Targums 'Memra' is sometimes used where the OT has '*Yahweh', to avoid anthropomorphism. The Memra concept possibly underlies the 'Logos' or 'Word' of Jn. 1: 1–14.

[C. T.] R. Hayward, Divine Name and Presence: The Memra (Oxford Centre for Postgraduate Hebrew Studies Publications; Totowa, NJ [1981]).

Menaion (Gk. μηναῖον, from μήν, 'month'). In the E. Church, the name given to each of the 12 liturgical books (one for each month) which contain the variable parts of the Divine *Office for the immovable feasts. They correspond with the proprium sanctorum in the W. The series begins with the Greek ecclesiastical year, in September. An appendix contains the rite for the saints which have no *proper office, corresponding to the commune sanctorum of the Latin *Breviary. See also MENOLOGION.

Partial Eng. tr. by Mother Mary and K. [T. R.] Ware, The Festal Menaion (The Service Books of the Orthodox Church, 1969).

Menas, St (*c.*3rd–4th cent.), Egyptian martyr. He was probably born and martyred in Egypt, but his story was apparently fused with that of a soldier executed in Phrygia under the Emp. *Diocletian, possibly another Menas, possibly St Gordian. His reputed birthplace, to the SW of Lake Mareotis, became an important pilgrimage centre, associated with miraculous cures by water. The church and town were excavated in 1905–8, and many further *ampullae bearing a figure of Menas between camels were found. He was a popular saint and there are many other representations of him, incl. a 6th-cent. ivory *pyx in the British Museum. He is the patron saint of merchants. Feast day, 11 Nov.

'Acta S. Menae' (Gk. text, with Lat. tr.) in Anal. Boll. 3 (1884), pp. 258–70. Selection of Coptic texts relating to St Menas ed., with Fr. tr., by J. Drescher (Publications de la Société d'Archéologie Copte; Cairo, 1946). P. Devos, 'Un Récit des miracles de S. Ménas en copte et en éthiopien', Anal. Boll. 77 (1959), pp. 451–63; 78 (1960), pp. 154–60; id., 'Le Juif et le Chrétien. Un miracle de saint Ménas', ibid. 78 (1960), pp. 275–308, both with text and Fr. tr. The primary sources are the Reports of C. M. Kaufmann (3 vols., Cairo, 1906–8), who directed the Frankfurt expedition to the site. C. M. Kaufmann, Die Menasstadt und das Nationalheiligtum der altchristlichen Ägypter in der westalexandrinischen Wüste (1910). M. A. Murray, 'St Menas of Alexandria', Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology, 29 (1907), pp. 25–30, 51–60, and 112–22 (with plates). H. *Delehaye, SJ, 'L'Invention des reliques de St Ménas à Constantinople', Anal. Boll. 29 (1910), pp. 117–50. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 11 (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 324–97, s.v., with bibl.

Menas, St (also Mennas) (d. 552), Patr. of Constantinople from 536. He was consecrated by Pope *Agapetus (535–6) to succeed the *Monophysite, Anthimus. In 543 he presided over an anti-Origenist Council. At the beginning of the *Three Chapters' controversy (543) he subscribed with some hesitation to the Imperial Edict and forced his suffragans to do the same. But on their complaining to the vacillating Pope, *Vigilius (537–55), Menas was excommunicated, first in 547, and again in 551. In neither instance did the sentence last for long and he died in full communion with the Papacy. His patriarchate was a high-water mark of Papal influence at Constantinople. Feast day, 25 Aug.

AASS, Aug. 5 (1741), pp. 164 f. The chief docs. of Menas' patriarchate are calendared in V. Grumel, AA, Les Regestes des actes du patriarcat de Constantinople, 1: Les Actes des patriarches, fasc. 1 (2nd edn., 1972), pp. 169–76 (nos. 232–43). L. Magi, La Sede Romana nella corrispondenza degli imperatori e patriarchi bizantini (VI–VII sec.) (Bibliothèque de la RHE, 57; 1972), pp. 124–48 and passim. CPG 3 (1979), pp. 310–12 (nos. 6923–34). W. M. Sinclair in DCB 3 (1882), pp. 902 f.; A. Stiernon, AA, in DPAC 2 (1984), cols. 2217–18, s.v. 'Mena'; Eng. tr. in Encyclopedia of the Early Church, 1 (Cambridge, 1992), p. 553.

Mendicant Friars. Members of those orders which were forbidden to own property in common. Unlike the monks, they work or beg for their living and are not bound to one convent by a vow of 'stability'. In the Middle Ages their activities were carried on chiefly in towns, and their privileges, esp. exemption from episcopal jurisdiction and extensive faculties for preaching and hearing confessions, aroused much hostility among the bishops and the secular clergy as well as in the universities. Opposition was particularly strong at *Paris, where it was led by William of St Amour and where St *Thomas Aquinas and St *Bonaventure wrote in their defence. In 1256 the dispute was settled in their favour by Alexander IV.

Originally restricted to the *Franciscans and *Dominicans, the name and privileges of Mendicant Friars were given to the *Carmelites by *Innocent IV in 1245, to the Hermits of St *Augustine by Alexander IV in 1256, and to the *Servites by *Martin V in 1424, several other orders following later. Acc. to RC canon law Mendicant Friars may seek funds whilst others are forbidden to do so without the written permission of their own *Ordinary and that of the local Ordinary. However, National Conferences of Bishops can determine norms on seeking alms which are binding even on mendicants (CIC (1983), can. 1265).

The Mendicant Orders are listed in the Annuario Pontificio. F. Vernet, Les Ordres mendiants (Bibliothèque Catholique des Sciences Religieuses, 1933). L. Gillet, Histoire artistique des ordres mendiants: Étude sur l'art religieux en Europe du XIII^e au XVI^e siècle (1912). Y. J.-M. *Congar [OP], 'Aspects ecclésiologiques de la querelle entre mendiants et séculiers dans la seconde moitié du XIII^e siècle et le début du XIV^e', AHDLMA 28, for 1961 (1962), pp. 35–151, with further refs. F. Dal Pino and others in DIP 5 (1978), cols. 1163–89, s.v. 'Mendicanti, Ordini'; A. Carpaneto, OFM Cap., and E. Piacenti, OFM Conv., ibid. 7 (1983), cols. 1154–60, s.v. 'Questua'. See further bibl. under separate Mendicant Orders.

Mennonites, the followers of Menno Simons (1496–1561), from whom they take their name. At one time parish priest in Dutch Friesland, he renounced his connections with the RC Church in 1536 and joined the *Anabaptists, then suffering severe persecution and obloquy after the attempted Kingdom of the Saints at Münster. For 25 years he shepherded and reorganized the stricken companies in the Netherlands and neighbouring territories. His views, which were similar to those of the *Swiss Brethren, included stress on believers' Baptism, a connectional type of Church organization with an emphasis on the responsibilities and rights of the local congregation, a rejection of Christian participation in the magistracy, and non-resistance. John *Smyth and other English Separatist exiles in the Netherlands were in friendly touch with Mennonites. In the 17th and 18th cents. the Mennonites became a numerous and influential community in the Netherlands; certain branches adopted *Socinian views. The number of Mennonites in 1990 was said to be over 856,500. In Europe the largest numbers were in Germany (*c.*18,500) and the Netherlands (*c.*18,000), with perhaps some 26,000 in all the territories of the former Soviet Union. There were *c.*226,000 in the *United States of America (where there has been much internal division), *c.*114,000 in *Canada, perhaps nearly 113,000 in *Zaire, *c.*76,000 in *India, *c.*65,000 in *Indonesia, and *c.*19,500 in *Mexico.

Common ground of the different Mennonite communities is the practice of believers' Baptism and a symbolic interpretation of the Lord's Supper. Each congregation is independent. Preaching occupies a central place in worship, and both men and women may preach. Most communities stipulate that their members should undertake some sort of social work, either at home or abroad, in place of military service. Some groups are full members of the *World Council of Churches; others have observer status. The Mennonite World Conference comprises all groups.

C. H. Smith, The Story of the Mennonites (Berne, Ind., 1941; 5th edn. by C. Krahn, Newton, Kan., 1981); C. J. Dyck (ed.), An Introduction to Mennonite History (Scottdale, Pa., 1967; rev. 1981). R. Friedmann, Mennonite Piety Through the Centuries: Its Genius and its Literature (Studies in Anabaptist and Mennonite History, 7; Goshen, Ind., 1949). J. Horsch, Mennonites in Europe (Scottdale, Pa., 1942; 2nd edn., 1950); J. C. Wenger, The Mennonite Church in America (ibid., 1966); F. H. Epp, Mennonites in Canada, 1786–1920 (Toronto, 1974); id., Mennonites in Canada, 1920–1940 (ibid., 1982). B. S. Hostetler, American Mennonites and Protestant Movements (Studies in Anabaptist and Mennonite History, 28; Scottdale, Pa., etc., 1987). C. [W.] Redekop, Mennonite Society (Baltimore and London [1989]). H. S. Bender and others (eds.), The Mennonite Encyclopedia (4 vols., Scottdale, Pa., 1955–9). N. P. Springer and A. J. Klassen, Mennonite Bibliography 1631–1961 (2 vols., ibid. and Kitchener, Ont., 1977).

The Complete Writings of Menno Simons c.1496–1561, tr. from the Dutch by L. Verduin, ed. J. C. Wenger, with biog. by H. S. Bender (Scottdale, Pa., 1956). Further studies of Menno Simons by J. Horsch (ibid., 1916), C. Krahn (Karlsruhe, 1936), and C. Bornhäuser (Beiträge zur Geschichte und Lehre der Reformierten Kirche, 35; Neukirchen, 1973). I. B. Horst, A Bibliography of Menno Simons (Nieuwkoop, 1962). Id. in Biografisch Lexicon voor de Geschiedenis van het Nederlandse Protestantisme, 2 (1983), pp. 318–22, s.v. 'Menno Simons'; H.-J. Goertz in TRE 22 (1992), pp. 444–57, s.v. 'Menno Simons/Mennoniten', both with bibl.

Menologion (Gk. μηνολόγιον, from μήν, 'month'). In the E. Church, a liturgical book containing the Lives of the saints, arranged by months throughout the ecclesiastical year (which begins with September). The word is used in a variety of senses, being applied to several distinct books current in the E. Church corresponding to the description just given, e.g. counterparts of the W. '*Proper of the Saints' (the 'Menaion', q.v.), '*martyrology' and 'Acta Sanctorum'. One of the most celebrated Menologia is that compiled by *Simeon Metaphrastes. The term has also been applied (in the W.) to private non-liturgical collections of the Lives of saintly persons, and esp. to books of the Lives of members of religious orders arranged according to their date of death. See also SYNAXARION.

[H. *Delehaye, SJ,] 'Le Synaxaire de Sirmond', Anal. Boll. 14 (1895), pp. 149–434; [id.,] 'Les Ménologes grecs', ibid. 16 (1897), pp. 311–29; [id.,] 'Le Ménologe de Métaphraste', ibid. 17 (1898), pp. 448–52. Id., AASS, Propylaeum ad Nov. (1902), pp. iv–lxxvi. H. Thurston, SJ, in CE 10 (1911), pp. 191 f.; H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 11 (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 419–30, both s.v.; G. Bottereau, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 1024–7, s.v. [mainly on the private biog. collections of religious orders]. See also bibl. to SIMEON METAPHRASTES.

mensa (Lat., 'table'). In early Christian times the word was applied esp. to the large tablets of stone set over or near a grave, and used apparently for receiving food for meals in memory of the deceased. A large number of such mensae have been recovered from N. Africa, and in recent times also from N. Germany (Bonn, Xanten). In Africa their use was widespread among the pagans, and the superstitious and unbecoming nature of the associated rites led St *Augustine and other Christian theologians to denounce them.

The word is also in common use among liturgists for the flat stone which forms the top of an altar. Acc. to modern RC requirements, it should normally be of stone, but may be of other solid material (Ordo Missae, General Instruction, 263).

H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 11 (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 440–53, s.v. On the use of the word in the second sense, see Braun, CA 1 (1924), pp. 245–316, with pls. 41–5.

mental prayer. Since prayer should come from the heart, not just from the lips, all prayer needs to be attended by an interior sincerity. In this sense some medieval writers say that all prayer is 'mental', whether or not it is spoken aloud. St *Thomas Aquinas argues that it is 'intention' rather than 'attention' that is required, but other writers put more stress on 'attention' and fervour. In the 16th cent. 'mental prayer' comes to be used in a confusing variety of new senses: (1) prayer of love, as opposed to discursive meditation, (2) meditation or contemplation, (3) discursive meditation as opposed to contemplation (q.v.). The third sense prevailed and remained normative until the modern period.

See works cited under PRAYER.

mental reservation. The conflict which may arise between the duty of telling the truth and that of keeping a secret has caused the development of the doctrine of mental reservation. RC moral theology distinguishes between restrictio pure mentalis ('strict mental reservation') and restrictio late mentalis ('wide mental reservation'). In the former a qualification is added mentally which completely alters the statement pronounced, so that the hearer is necessarily deceived; it has been thought that it was this form that was condemned by *Innocent XI in 1679. In the 'wide mental reservation', on the other hand, words are used which, acc. to the circumstances, are susceptible of more than one interpretation, without the speaker giving an indication as to the sense in which he uses them. The wide mental reservation may be used when the person who puts a question has no right to the truth, or else only where a professional secret is involved, as, e.g., in the case of a priest denying knowledge of a fact with the mental reservation 'apart from confession'. In instances such as these the deception of the hearer is allowable for a good reason and involves no sin on the part of the speaker. In an extreme form, the teaching was developed by the *Jesuit theologian J. Caramuel, in his Haplotes de restrictionibus mentalibus (Leiden, 1672).

Merbecke (or Marbeck), John (d. *c.*1585), English divine and musician. Appointed organist at St George's Chapel, *Windsor, in 1541, he was condemned to the stake for heresy in 1543, because he had written the first *concordance in English of the Bible. He was pardoned, however, through the influence of Bp. Stephen *Gardiner, and the concordance was published in 1550 with a dedication to *Edward VI. In 1550 he produced his Book of Common Prayer Noted, in which he composed plainchant-style music for Edward VI's first (1549) liturgy. Although its use did not survive the appearance of the 1552 liturgy, it underwent a notable revival with the *Oxford Movement in the 19th cent. He continued his musical and theological studies for some years and apparently died about 1585.

Extracts from his works, ed., with introd., by R. A. Leaver (Courtenay Library of Reformation Classics, 9; Sutton Courtenay [1978]). E. H. Fellowes, The Office of the Holy Communion as set by John Merbecke (1949). J. Blezzard in New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, ed. S. Sadie, 12 (1980), pp. 168–70, s.v. 'Merbecke, John'.

Mercati, Giovanni (1866–1957), Prefect of the *Vatican Library. Born in 1866 at Villa Gaida in the province of Reggio Emilia, he was ordained priest in 1889, and from 1893 until 1919 was on the staff of the 'Bibliotheca *Ambrosiana' at Milan. In 1898 he was nominated Scriptor of the Greek Language at the Vatican Library, pro-Prefect in 1918, and Prefect in 1919. In 1936 he was created cardinal. Mercati wrote innumerable studies, esp. on matters of patristic and palaeographical interest; and he was one of the editors of the Catalogue of the Vatican Greek MSS (1923 ff.).

His brothers, Angelo Mercati (1870–1955) and Silvio Giuseppe Mercati (1877–1963), were also distinguished scholars.

Mercati's chief papers to date assembled in Opere minori raccolte in occasione del settantesimo natalizio sotto gli auspicii de S.S. Pio XI, ed. A. M. Albareda, OSB (ST 76–80; 5 vols., 1937–41), with biog. notice and bibl. [for years 1890–1941] in vol. 80. Miscellanea Giovanni Mercati (ibid. 121–6; 6 vols., 1946). Further list of his works in Nel novantesimo anno del cardinale Mercati 1866–1956 (Vatican, 1956), pp. 57–130. P. Simonelli, Il Card. Giovanni Mercati: Profilo biografico (Reggio Emilia, 1956). There was also a commem. vol. ed. L. Donati in La Bibliofilia, 60 (1958; issued separately, Florence, 1959).

Angelo Mercati's Saggi di storia e letteratura collected at Rome, vol. 1, 1951. Vols. in his honour in ST 165, 1952, and Fontes Ambrosiani, 30 (Milan, 1956), with list of his works, pp. 7–25. Vols. in honour of S. G. Mercati in Studi Bizantini e Neoellenici, 9 (1957), with list of his works, pp. ix–xxiii, and 11 (1964), and Byzantion, 34 (1964).

Mercator, Marius. See MARIUS MERCATOR.

Mercedarians. A religious order of men, dedicated to Our Lady of Ransom (Nuestra Señora de la Merced), which was founded in the 13th cent. by St *Peter Nolasco to assist in the ransoming of Christians captured by the Moors. The exact date of its foundation is uncertain, but it was confirmed by *Gregory IX in 1235. Its first base was in Barcelona, but it spread fairly rapidly throughout most of the Iberian peninsula and then into Italy. Later it was also very strong in Latin America. At first it was almost entirely lay, but it soon began attracting clerics, and early in the 14th cent. the clerics took control. Its main work was collecting alms and raising money from its own properties for the ransoming of captives, but its members also travelled regularly into Muslim lands to negotiate the freeing of Christians. Later, some of its members devoted themselves to academic work and theology, and in the 19th cent. its apostolate was defined in broader educational, charitable, and missionary terms. There is also a second order, of nuns, whose roots go back to the 13th cent. In 1603 an order of Discalced Mercedarians was founded.

Tirso de Molina (Gabriel Téllez) [d. 1648], Mercedarian, Historia general de la Orden de Nuestra Señora de las Mercedes, ed. M. Penedo Rey, Mercedarian (2 vols., Madrid, 1973–4). G. Vásquez Núñez, Mercedarian, Manual de Historia de la Orden de Nuestra Señora de la Merced, 1 (1218 1574) (Toledo, 1931); 2 (1574 1935) (posthumously pub., Madrid, 1936). F. D. Gazulla Galve, Mercedarian, La orden de Nuestra Señora de la Merced: Estudios histórico-críticos, 1218–1317 (1934). J. W. Brodman, Ransoming Captives in Crusader Spain: The Order of Merced on the Christian-Islamic Frontier (Philadelphia, 1986). P. N. Pérez, Mercedarian, Religiosos de la Merced que pasaron a la América Española, 1514-1777 (Seville, 1924). V. M. Barriga, Mercedarian, Los Mercedarios en el Perú en el Siglo XVI: Documentos inéditos del Archivo General de Indias, 1 (Rome, 1933), 2–5 (Arequipa, 1939–54); id., Mercedarios ilustres en el Perú (2 vols., ibid., 1943–9). Y. Dossat, 'Les Ordres de Rachat. Les Mercédaires', Cahiers de Fanjeaux, 13 (1978), pp. 365–87, with bibl. G. Placer López, Mercedarian, Bibliografía Mercedaria (3 vols., Madrid, 1963–83; detailing works by Mercedarians). A. Morales, Mercedarian, in NCE 9 (1967), pp. 669 f., s.v.; A. Rubino, Mercedarian, in DIP 5 (1978), cols. 1219–34, s.v. 'Mercedari', 'Mercedari Scalzi', 'Mercedarie'.

Mercersburg Theology. A school of thought originating in one of the smaller *Reformed Churches in America (the 'German Reformed Church'). It opposed both the emotionalism and the rationalism of the mid-19th cent. by emphasizing the importance of doctrine, with special stress on Christology and sacramental theology; while upholding the teaching of the Reformers, it saw this in relation to patristic and subsequent thought. The name derives from the small town of Mercersburg in the Appalachian foothills in Pennsylvania, in which Marshall College and the Theological Seminary of the German Reformed Church were situated. The intellectual roots of the movement were in the organic philosophy of Frederick A. Rausch (1806–41), who sought to combine the insights of German and Scottish systems of philosophy in what he called an 'Anglo-German philosophy'. His method appealed both to J. W. *Nevin and his colleague, P. *Schaff. The movement came into prominence with the publication of Nevin's work, The Anxious Bench (1843), which attacked the current methods of revivalist preaching. The stress which Nevin and his colleagues laid on the need for liturgical renewal and their teaching about the 'Mystical Presence' of Christ in the Eucharist have led to comparisons with the *Oxford Movement in England, but it seems that the Mercersburg theologians drew their inspiration from contemporary thought in Germany. Indeed Nevin was critical of some aspects of *Anglo-Catholicism, and Schaff was favourably impressed by the views of F. D. *Maurice. See also NEVIN, J. W.

Extracts, mainly from the works of Nevin and Schaff, ed., with introd., by J. H. Nichols, The Mercersburg Theology (New York, 1966). L. J. Binkley, The Mercersburg Theology (Lancaster, Pa., 1953); J. H. Nichols, Romanticism in American Theology: Nevin and Schaff at Mercersburg (Chicago, 1961); J. M. Maxwell, Worship and Reformed Theology: The Liturgical Lessons of Mercersburg (Pittsburgh Theological Monographs, NS 10; Pittsburgh, 1976). New Mercersburg Review (Reading, Pa., 1985 ff.).

Mercier, Désiré Joseph (1851–1926), Belgian philosopher and prelate. Educated at Malines and Louvain and ordained to the priesthood in 1874, in 1877 he became Professor of Philosophy at the Petit Séminaire at Malines and in 1882 first Professor of Thomist Philosophy at Louvain. From the first he was an ardent promoter of the Thomist revival heralded by Aeterni Patris* (1879), esp. interesting himself in the application of Thomist principles to modern science. The new school ('Neo-Scholasticism') developed in conscious opposition both to the Scientific *Positivism of J. S. Mill and H. *Spencer and to the Neo-Kantian Idealism. Under Mercier's inspiration an Institute of Philosophy was founded at Louvain which gave a prominent place to experimental methods. Mercier expounded his own philosophical position in a tetralogy—Psychologie (1892), Logique (1894), Métaphysique (1894), and Critériologie (1899). He was also mainly responsible for the Revue Néoscolastique de Philosophie (1894 ff.).

In 1906 Mercier was made Abp. of Malines and in 1907 created a cardinal. He was in many ways a model prelate, ever concerned for the spiritual life of his clergy and people. He naturally had little interest in the activist philosophy of the *Modernist school; and in his Lenten Pastoral for 1908 he denounced G. *Tyrrell, who replied in his Medievalism (1908). During the World War of 1914–18 he strenuously upheld Belgian interests against the German invaders, and encouraged resistance by his own example. Prompted by his desire for the promotion of Christian unity, he was the leading spirit on the RC side in the Conversations at *Malines (1921, 1923, 1925, q.v.), which were cut short by his death.

Mercier's correspondence with the German Government during the occupation, 1914–18, ed. F. Mayence (Brussels, 1919; Eng. tr. as Cardinal Mercier's Own Story, 1920). His Œuvres pastorales were pub. in 7 vols., Brussels and Louvain, 1911–29. Commemorative vol. under the title Le Cardinal Mercier (1851–1926), pub. Brussels, 1927, with list of his works, pp. 341–72. Other Lives incl. those by G. Ramaekers (Brussels, 1926), H. L. Dubly (Paris, 1927; Eng. tr., 1928), and A. Simon (Brussels, 1960). The centenary of his birth was marked by celebrations at Louvain; a commemorative vol. was prepared by L. de Raeymaeker and others, Le Cardinal Mercier: Fondateur de l'Institut Supérieur de Philosophie à l'Université de Louvain [1952]. A. Simon, Position philosophique du cardinal Mercier: Esquisse psychologique (Académie Royale de Belgique. Classe de Lettres. Mémoires. Collection in-8°, 2nd ser. 56, fasc. 1; 1962). I. Meseberg-Haubold, Der Widerstand Kardinal Merciers gegen die deutsche Besetzung Belgiens 1914–1918 (Europäische Hochschulschriften, Reihe 3, Bd. 176; 1982).

mercy, corporal works of. See CORPORAL WORKS OF MERCY.

Mercy, Sisters of. See SISTERS OF MERCY.

mercy, spiritual works of. See SPIRITUAL WORKS OF MERCY.

mercy-seat. In the Jewish Temple, the covering of solid gold laid on the '*Ark of the Covenant' which was conceived to be God's resting-place. The Hebrew כַּפֹּרֶת, Greek (LXX, ἱλαστήριον), and Latin (Vulgate, propitiatorium) words are all connected with the idea of 'propitiation'. The AV rendering 'mercy seat' goes back to W. *Tyndale's version, following M. *Luther's Gnadenstuhl.

G. A. *Deissmann in E.Bi. 3 (1902), cols. 3027–35, s.v.; J. Herrmann and F. Büchsel in TWNT 3 (1938), pp. 319–24 (Eng. tr., 1966, pp. 318–23), s.v. ἱλαστήριον. H. Reventlow in TRE 13 (1984), pp. 459–64, s.v. 'Gnade I'; B. Lang in Theologisches Wörterbuch zum Alten Testament, ed. G. J. Botterweck and others, 4 (Stuttgart, 1984), pp. 303–18, s.v. 'Kippaer'. See also bibl. to ARK (2).

merit. In the theological sense of the term, 'merit' designates man's right to be rewarded for a work done for God. The conception has its foundation in the Bible, where in both the OT and the NT rewards are promised to the just for their good works (e.g. Exod. 23: 20–2, Deut. 5: 28–33 and passim, Mt. 5: 3–12, 6: 4, 19 f., 7: 21). The term appears to have been first employed by *Tertullian, who already recognizes diversity of merit followed by diversity of reward, 'Quomodo multae mansiones apud Patrem si non pro varietate meritorum?' (Scorp. 6). This doctrine was endorsed by *Cyprian, *Augustine (partly), and the later Fathers, until the theology of merit was fully developed by the Schoolmen. These last distinguish two kinds of merit, meritum de condigno and meritum de congruo. *Condign merit confers a claim to reward due in justice to services rendered, whilst *congruous merit may only claim the reward on grounds of fitness. In the relation between God and man, condignity of merit in the strict sense is impossible owing to the creature's absolute dependence on the Creator. It is, however, admitted in the sense that God, by His free promise, has bound Himself to confer rewards on certain works. The following are the conditions to be fulfilled in order to obtain merit de condigno. The work must be morally good, be done freely, be assisted by actual grace, performed with a supernatural motive (whether with charity or whether faith alone is sufficient is contested by theologians) in the sphere of this life (in statu viae), be done in the state of grace, and, lastly, God must have promised to reward it. Merit de congruo is held to be conferred on similar conditions except for the state of grace, as it may be possessed by those not yet justified in so far as they cooperate with actual grace.

The traditional doctrine of merit was repudiated by the Reformers, esp. by M. *Luther, who taught the sinfulness of all human works whether done before or after justification. Most subsequent Protestant theology has denied that merit is a valid Christian category. The medieval doctrine was reformulated by the Council of *Trent, which, while maintaining the impossibility of meriting the initial grace of justification, emphasized the reality of human merit, based on the supernatural life communicated by Christ as the Head to the members of His Mystical Body.

K. H. Wirth, Der 'Verdienst'-Begriff in der christlichen Kirche (2 vols., 1892–1901; on Tertullian and Cyprian). C. S. Sullivan, FSC, The Formulation of the Tridentine Doctrine of Merit (Catholic University of America, Studies in Sacred Theology, 116; Washington, DC, 1959). R. S. Franks in HERE 8 (1915), pp. 561–5, s.v. 'Merit (Christian)'; J. Rivière in DTC 10 (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 574–785, s.v. 'Mérite'; N. J. Hein and others in RGG (3rd edn.), 6 (1962), cols. 1261–70, s.v. 'Verdienst'; C. S. Sullivan in NCE 9 (1967), pp. 683–6, s.v.; A. Solignac, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 1040–51, s.v. 'Mérite et Vie spirituelle', with extensive bibl.

Merle d'Aubigné, Jean Henri (1794–1872), Swiss historian of the *Reformation. The son of French Protestant refugee parents, he studied at Berlin under J. A. W. *Neander and W. M. L. *de Wette. After taking charge of the French Protestant church in Hamburg from 1819 to 1823, he became pastor to a congregation and court preacher at Brussels. In 1831 he returned to *Geneva as professor of Church history in the new theological faculty. Here he wrote his popular, but unreliable, Histoire de la Réformation du XVI^e siècle (5 vols., 1835–53). His Histoire de la Réformation en Europe au temps de Calvin (8 vols., 1863–78) was a more finished work.

J. Winkler, Der Kirchenhistoriker Jean Henri Merle d'Aubigné (Basler Studien zur historischen und systematischen Theologie, 12; 1968), with extensive bibl. —. Duchemin in PRE (3rd edn.), 12 (1903), pp. 637–43.

Merry del Val, Rafael (1865–1930), Cardinal. The son of Don Rafael Merry del Val, secretary to the Spanish Legation in London, he was educated by the *Jesuits at Namur and Brussels, at Ushaw College, Durham (1883–5), and at the Roman Accademia dei Nobili (1885–1891). He was ordained priest in 1888. Singled out by *Leo XIII for the Papal service, he became secretary to the commission which pronounced against *Anglican Ordinations (1896). In 1897 he was entrusted with important negotiations in *Canada on the schools question which arose out of the Manitoba Laws of 1890. In 1900 he became titular Abp. of *Nicaea. In 1903 he was created Cardinal and also Secretary of State by *Pius X, with whose intransigent policy (Loi de Séparation in France, anti-*Modernism) he became closely identified. After he had ceased to be Secretary of State, in acc. with custom, on the Pope's death, he became Secretary of the *Holy Office, where he unobtrusively exercised great influence. He had a strong pastoral sense; and he often regretted that his career gave him only limited scope (e.g. through spiritual correspondence) for its exercise. His tomb in the crypt of St Peter's, Rome, near that of Pius X, is inscribed 'Da mihi animas. Caetera tolle.'

Life by P. Cenci (Rome, 1933, with preface by E. Pacelli, afterwards *Pius XII); popular Life based on Cenci by V. Dalpiaz, Attraverso una porpora (1935; Eng. tr., 1937). Other studies by F. A. Forbes (London, 1932), I. Flores de Lemus (Madrid, 1956), M. C. Buehrule (London, 1957), H. Mitchell (Paris, 1957), and J. M. Javierre (Barcelona, 1961; 2nd edn., 1965).

Mersch, Émile (1890–1940), *Jesuit theologian. He was ordained priest at Louvain in 1917 and taught philosophy at Namur from 1920 to 1935. Throughout his life his aim was to construct a theological synthesis in terms of the 'Mystical Body of Christ'. In Le Corps mystique du Christ: Études de théologie historique (2 vols., Louvain, 1933; Eng. tr., The Whole Christ, Milwaukee, 1938; London, 1949), he traced the development of the doctrine of the Church, so understood, through history; in La Théologie du corps mystique (ed. J. Levie, SJ; 2 vols., Louvain, 1946; posthumous; Eng. tr., 1951) he expounded the doctrine from a more systematic standpoint. He was killed at Lens in an air attack on 23 May 1940.

Memoir by J. Levie, SJ, prefixed to Mersch's La Théologie du corps mystique, 1, pp. vii–xxxiii, with full list of Mersch's writings, pp. xxxi–xxxiii. Full edn. of his introd. to La Théologie du corps mystique, which was abridged in the 1946 edn., issued as Le Christ, l'homme et l'univers (Museum Lessianum, Section théologique, 57; 1962). G. Dejaifve, SJ, ' "La Théologie du corps mystique" du P. Ém. Mersch', Nouvelle Revue Théologique, 67 (1945), pp. 408–1[illegible]

Mersenne, Marin (1588–1648), French philosopher, scientist, and theologian. He was educated at the *Jesuit College at La Flèche, where he formed a lifelong friendship with his younger fellow-pupil, R. *Descartes. In 1611 he joined the *Minims and finally settled in 1620 at the convent of L'Annonciade at Paris. Though himself the author of several works, among them Quaestiones celeberrimae in Genesim (1623), L'Impiété des déistes (1624), and La Vérité des sciences (1624), 'Père Mersenne' (as he was universally known) fills a place in the history of modern philosophy which rests on the links that he forged by his friendship and correspondence between many of the leading French philosophers and scientists of his day. In this way he did much to foster the new scientific movement and also to prevent it from developing in an anti-religious direction.

Correspondance de Mersenne, crit. edn. by Mme P. Tannery, C. de Waard and others (17 vols., Paris, 1932–88), with substantial introd. by A. Beaulieu in vol. 17; 2nd edn. of vol. 3, 1969. Contemporary Life by Hilarion de Coste (Paris, 1649; new edn. by B. T. de Sarroque, with unpub. letters, ibid., 1932). R. Lenoble, Mersenne ou la naissance du mécanisme (1943). H. Ludwig, Marin Mersenne und seine Musiklehre (1935). P. Dear, Mersenne and the Learning of the Schools (Ithaca, NY, and London, 1988). Series of arts. on Mersenne in Revue d'histoire des Sciences et de leurs applications, 2 (1948), pp. 5–89. E. Dumoutet in DTC 10 (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 788 f.; A. C. Crombie in Dictionary of Scientific Biography, 9 (1974), pp. 316–22.

Merton, Thomas (1915–68), *Trappist monk and writer. Born in Prades, in the French Pyrenees, he was educated in England at Oakham School and Clare College, Cambridge (which he left without taking a degree), before he went on to Columbia University in New York. In the USA he became a RC and in 1941 he joined the Trappists at Gethsemani Abbey in Kentucky, taking the name of Louis. His autobiography, The Seven Storey Mountain (1948; pub. in a slightly abridged form in England in 1949 as Elected Silence) portrayed a traditional conversion to Catholicism, but at the same time it presented monastic spirituality to the public, and it had a very wide appeal. Merton's development, recorded in his immense literary output, echoes the changes in modern RCism, leading to a greater openness to other traditions (both Christian and non-Christian), and to a deep concern for the moral dilemmas of modern man. His understanding of monasticism also developed, leading him eventually to seek the life of a *hermit. He died, electrocuted by a faulty shower, while attending a world conference of contemplatives in Bangkok.

M. Mott, The Seven Mountains of Thomas Merton (Boston, 1984; London, 1986). D. Grayston, Thomas Merton: The Development of a Spiritual Theologian (Toronto Studies in Theology, 20 [1985]). Popular Life by M. Furlong (London, 1980).

Mesha, inscription of. See MOABITE STONE.

Mesonyktikon (Gk. μεσονυκτικόν). In the E. Church, the Midnight Office. There is no exactly corresponding service in the Roman rite.

Mesrob, St (*c.*361–439), *Armenian ecclesiastic and translator. Over a long period he was coadjutor-bishop to the Catholicos *Isaac, and on Isaac's death acted as locum tenens, but died himself within less than six months. Zealous for a Christian national culture in Armenia, he made it one of his main objects to eliminate from Armenian life all traces of Syriac institutions. His ardent love of learning induced him to compose for the Armenians an alphabet which was adopted in 406; and, gathering round him a band of keen scholars (among them, acc. to a doubtful tradition, *Moses of Chorene), he sent some of his disciples as far as Rome in search of MSS of the Scriptures and of ecclesiastical and profane writers. In the Armenian Bible, based on the Syriac and issued *c.*410, Mesrob was himself the translator of the NT and Prov.; and later (*c.*433) he assisted in its revision with the use of Gk. MSS. He also did much to encourage the development of monastic institutions. Feast days in the Armenian *menologion, 19 Feb. and 25 Nov. (the latter also in W. calendars).

Armenian Lives, of uncertain trustworthiness, by Koriun, his pupil (ed. Venice, 1833; modern edn. by M. Abelyan, Erevan, 1941; Ger. tr. and comm. by G. Winkler, Orientalia Christiana Analecta, 245; 1994), and by Lazarus Pharbetzi. Many sermons, theological discourses, hymns, and other writings which pass under the name of *Gregory the Illuminator are prob. the work of Mesrob. Bardenhewer, 5, pp. 197–201. J. Marquart, Über den Ursprung des armenischen Alphabets in Verbindung mit der Biographie des heiligen Mast'oc' (Vienna, 1917). F. Feydit, Considérations sur l'alphabet de saint Mesrop (Studien zur armenischen Geschichte, 11; 1964). J. Karst in DTC 10 (pt. 1; 1928), cols. 789–92; P. Ananian in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 9 (Rome, 1967), cols. 374–9; B. L. Zekiyan in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 1070–4, all s.v. 'Mesrop', with bibl.

Messalians, also known as Euchites (Εὐχῖται), a pietistic mendicant sect. Their name is derived from a Syriac word which, like the corresponding Greek, means 'praying people'. They appear to have originated in Mesopotamia soon after the middle of the 4th cent. and to have spread to Syria, Asia Minor, Thrace, etc., and later to Egypt. They were attacked by *Amphilochius of Iconium, Flavian of Antioch, and St *Epiphanius, and condemned at the Council of *Ephesus of 431. They survived, however, down to the 7th cent. They held that in consequence of Adam's sin everyone had a demon substantially united with his soul, and that this demon, which was not expelled by Baptism, was completely liberated only by concentrated and ceaseless prayer, the aim of which was to eliminate all passion and desire. Those who had in this way become spiritual and perfect received an immediate vision of the Holy Trinity. In recent years there has been much debate about the connections with Messalianism of the writings of *Diadochus, *Gregory of Nyssa, and *Macarius/Simeon.

The earliest mention of the sect is in *Ephraem Syrus, Contra Haereses, 22. 4; fuller details (but unreliable) in Epiphanius, Haer. 80 ('Contra Messalianos'). The main sources are conveniently collected by M. Kmosko in the preface to his edn. of the 'Liber Graduum', in Patrologia Syriaca (ed. R. Graffin), 3 (Paris, 1926), cols. clxxi–ccxciii. I. Hausherr, SJ, 'L'Erreur fondamentale et la logique du messalianisme', OCP 1 (1935), pp. 328–60; H. Dörries, Symeon von Mesopotamien: Die Überlieferung der messalianischen 'Makarios' Schriften (TU 55, Heft 1; 1941); R. Staats, Gregor von Nyssa und die Messalianer (Patristische Texte und Studien, 8; 1968); H. Dörries, 'Die Messalianer im Zeugnis ihrer Bestreiter', Saeculum, 21 (1970), pp. 213–27; J. Gribomont, OSB, 'Le dossier des origines du Messalianisme', in J. Fontaine and C. Kannengiesser (eds.), Epektasis: Mélanges patristiques offerts au Cardinal Jean Daniélou, (1972), pp. 611–25. C. Stewart, OSB, 'Working the Earth of the Heart': The Messalian Controversy in History, Texts, and Language to AD 431 (Oxford Theological Monographs, 1991). E. Peterson in EC 8 (1952), cols. 841 f., s.v.; A. Guillaumont in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 1074–83, s.v. See also works cited under DIADOCHUS and MACARIUS/SIMEON.

Messiah (מָשִׁיחַ, lit. 'anointed'). The term denotes a person invested by God with special powers and functions. It was rendered into Greek by χριστός (from χρίω, 'anoint'), from which the title '*Christ' derives.

In the OT the term could be applied to anyone set apart for any special function, such as the priest in Lev. 4: 3, 5, who is described as 'the priest that is anointed'. It was however used more particularly of the king, who was conceived as anointed by Divine command (cf. 1 Sam. 10: 1); and his person, as 'the Lord's anointed', was held to be sacrosanct (1 Sam. 24: 6). After the promise made to *David through the prophet Nathan that the throne of his 'seed' should be established 'for ever' (2 Sam. 7: 12–13), the whole Davidic dynasty came to be regarded as especially chosen by God (2 Sam. 22: 51; Ps. 89: 35 f.). Nevertheless, the term could still be used of other people, such as the patriarchs (1 Chron. 16: 22) or even a pagan like Cyrus (Is. 45: 1). Under the later monarchy, when the kingdom was threatened by Assyria and Babylon, the appearance of a future king of the house of David, whose rule would be glorious, wise, and secure, was foretold by *Isaiah and *Jeremiah; and after Jerusalem had fallen *Ezekiel, in exile, had no doubt that the restored Israel in Palestine would be shepherded by 'my servant David' (Ezek. 34: 23 f.; 37: 24 f.). Immediately after the return from exile it seemed possible that the kingship might be restored in the person of the Davidic prince Zerubbabel (cf. Zech. 4: 6–10) in association with Joshua the *High Priest, but in the event it was the High Priests alone who became the secular rulers down to the time of the *Maccabees, from whom (and not from the Davidic line) the *Hasmonaeans, who ruled Palestine from the middle of the 2nd cent. until the middle of the 1st cent. BC, were descended. But the hope of a king who should be both 'the Lord's anointed' and 'the son of David' never died and is reflected e.g. in the Psalms of *Solomon (17: 23–38). The *Qumran community may have looked for two 'Messiahs', one royal and the other priestly (e.g. 1QS 9. 11, CD 8)—the 'Messiah of Aaron' and the 'Messiah of Israel'.

In the NT, Jewish expectations of a deliverer are echoed at Lk. 24: 21 and Acts 1: 6, and at Mt. 2: 2–4 where, using the absolute form not found in early Judaism, he is called 'the Christ' (AV) or 'the Messiah' (modern translations commonly render the word thus where the Greek has a definite article, and leave it as 'Christ' where there is no such article). The expectation that this deliverer would be descended from David is present in the Bethlehem tradition (cf. Lk. 2) and more directly in the Christological titles 'Son of David' (Mk. 10: 47 f., more frequently in Mt., and cf. Lk. 1: 32, Acts 2: 30–6, Rom. 1: 3, Rev. 5: 5, 22: 16), 'King of Israel' (Mk. 15: 32, Mt. 27: 42, Jn. 1: 49, 12: 13), and the non-Christian title 'King of the Jews' (Mt. 2: 2 and all Passion narratives). Even if Mk. 12: 35–7 indicates some earlier dispute or unease about the Davidic title, the Christian belief was subsequently secured by the genealogies. Jesus was executed as a Messianic figure, as the inscription on the Cross confirms, but the traditions leave room for debate whether He Himself defined His unique eschatological role in these terms. Some 500 occurrences of χριστός (Christos) in the NT testify to the general conviction about Jesus which can be traced back behind St *Paul (1 Cor. 15: 3). As early as the epistles the title 'Christ' (or 'Messiah') was on the way to becoming simply a name. Though much rarer in the Gospels, it usually retains its full significance. Throughout the NT it is interpreted in the light of Jesus' death and exaltation, and equated not only with 'Son of David' but more importantly with the title 'Son of God' (Mk. 1: 1–11, 14: 61, Jn. 20: 31, an identification with roots in 2 Sam. 7 and Ps. 2: 7). At the central point of Mark's narrative, St *Peter confesses Jesus as Messiah (8: 29), but the disciples are silenced and Jesus begins to teach that the *Son of Man must suffer and be vindicated. This Gospel thus insists that the Messiah is a Crucified Messiah. Jesus' true identity is revealed only at His Passion (14: 61 f.) and in His death (15: 39). The other Gospels use the title 'Christ' rather more frequently than Mk., and Jn. 1: 41 and 4. 25 explain the Hebrew word, but as 'Christ' becomes a proper name, it is the synonym 'Son of God' which is commonly used by Mt. and Jn., opening a way for subsequent Christology. See also CHRISTOLOGY, JESUS CHRIST, and MESSIANIC SECRET.

Modern works incl. W. *Wrede, Das Messiasgeheimnis in den Evangelien (1901; Eng. tr., 1971); A. *Schweitzer, Von Reimarus zu Wrede (1906; 2nd edn., 1913; Eng. tr., The Quest of the Historical Jesus, 1910); W. *Bousset, Kyrios Christos (1913; 2nd edn., 1921; Eng. tr., Nashville, 1970); W. Manson, Jesus the Messiah (1943); A. Bentzen, Messias, Moses Redivivus, Menschensohn (Abhandlungen zur Theologie des Alten und Neuen Testaments, 17; 1948; Eng. tr., 1955); S. [O. P.] *Mowinckel, Han som Kommer: Messiasforventningen i det Gamle Testament og på Jesu tid (Copenhagen, 1951; Eng. tr., He that Cometh, Oxford, 1956); H. Ringgren, The Messiah in the Old Testament (Studies in Biblical Theology, 18; 1956); J. Klausner, The Messianic Idea in Israel from its Beginning to the Completion of the Mishnah (Eng. tr. from Heb., 1956); F. Hahn, Christologische Hoheitstitel: Ihre Geschichte im frühen Christentum (Forschungen zur Religion und Literatur des Alten und Neuen Testaments, 83; 1963; Eng. tr., The Titles of Christ in Christology, 1969); W. Kramer, Christos Kyrios Gottessohn (Abhandlungen zur Theologie des Alten und Neuen Testaments, 44; 1963; Eng. tr., Studies in Biblical Theology, 50; 1966); J. Coppens, Le Messianisme royal: Ses origines. Son développement. Son accomplissement (Lectio divina, 54; 1968); id., Le Messianisme et sa relève prophetique (Bibliotheca Ephemeridum Theologicarum Lovaniensium, 38; 1974); id., La Relève apocalyptique du messianisme royal (ibid. 50, 55, and 61; 1979–83); D. Lauenstein, Der Messias: Eine biblische Untersuchung (Stuttgart [1971]). G. [G.] Scholem, The Messianic Idea in Judaism and Other Essays on Jewish Spirituality (1971), pp. 1–77. E. *Schürer, The History of the Jewish People in the Age of Jesus Christ, rev. Eng. tr. by G. Vermes and others, 2 (Edinburgh, 1979), pp. 488–554. V. H. Stanton in HDB 3 (1900), pp. 352–7, s.v.; W. Fairweather, ibid., Extra Vol. (1904), pp. 295–302, s.v. 'Development of Doctrine in the Apocryphal Period. V: The Messianic Hope'; L. Dennefeld in DTC 10 (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 1404–568, s.v. 'Messianisme'; A. Gelin in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 5 (1957), cols. 1165–212, s.v. 'Messianisme'; H. L. Ginsberg and others in Encyclopaedia Judaica, 11 (Jerusalem, 1972), cols. 1407–17. K. Seybold in Theologisches Wörterbuch zum Alten Testament, ed. G. J. Botterweck and others, 5 (1986), pp. 46–59, s.v. 'māšah'.

Messianic Secret. The phrase was given currency by W. *Wrede, Der Messiasgeheimnis in den Evangelien (1901; Eng. tr., 1971) and designates a central issue in Gospel criticism. Wrede argued that Jesus' silencing of the demoniacs and the secrecy about His *messianic identity in St *Mark's Gospel, together with the obtuseness of the disciples and the theory that the *parables were intended to conceal, were not historical reminiscences but arose out of a tension between the early Church's post-resurrection messianic belief and the historical reality of Jesus's ministry and self-understanding. Opinion remains divided over how far this motif can be credited to Mark, how far to the tradition available to him, and how far, if at all, it represents the self-consciousness and practice of Jesus Himself. The reasons for it are also a matter of continuing debate.

A selection of critical opinion is available in Eng. tr. in C. [M.] Tuckett (ed.), The Messianic Secret (Issues in Religion and Theology, 1; 1983).

Metaphrast, the. A traditional name for the Byzantine hagiographer, *Simeon (q.v.; fl. *c.*960), derived from his translation (Gk. metaphrasis, μετάφρασις) of older versions of the saints' Lives.

Metaphysical Poets. The term was first adapted by Dr S. *Johnson for a group of 17th-cent. poets in a pejorative sense implying a pretentious display of learning, strained images, and wit leading to wilful obscurity. Their contemporaries, however, had hailed the style as 'strong lines', accepting the difficulty as a challenge to the prevailing facile convention. Critics from the end of the 19th cent. have effected a remarkable revaluation. The skill shown in conducting a lyric along the lines of an argument; the wit in deploying philosophical or theological concepts; the concentration of statement; the daring use of unconventional imagery, and the occasional prosodic ingenuity now command admiration for many, if not all, whose work exhibits these features in varying degrees. The Metaphysical Poets specially concerned with religious insights and sentiments are J. *Donne, G. *Herbert, R. *Crashaw, Henry *Vaughan, Sir Fulke Greville (1554–1628), St Robert *Southwell, Henry King (1592–1669, Bp. of *Chichester), William Alabaster (1567–1640), F. *Quarles, T. *Traherne, Andrew Marvell (1621–78), and Abraham Cowley (1618–67).

Metaphysical Lyrics and Poems of the Seventeenth Century, Donne to Butler, selected and ed. H. J. C. Grierson (1921), with introd. pp. xiii–lviii; The Metaphysical Poets, selected and ed. H. [L.] Gardner (1957; 2nd edn., Oxford, 1967). European Metaphysical Poetry, ed. F. Warnke (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1961). S. Johnson, The Lives of the English Poets, 1 (1779), pp. 19–42 (in his 'Life of Cowley'). J. B. Leishman, The Metaphysical Poets: Donne, Herbert, Vaughan, Traherne (Oxford, 1934); L. L. Martz, The Poetry of Meditation: A Study in English Religious Literature of the Seventeenth Century (Yale Studies in English, 125; 1954; rev. edn., 1962); id., The Paradise Within: Studies in Vaughan, Traherne, and Milton (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1964); W. H. Halewood, The Poetry of Grace: Reformation Themes and Structures in English Seventeenth-Century Poetry (ibid., 1970); [J.] P. Grant, The Transformation of Sin: Studies in Donne, Herbert, Vaughan, and Traherne (Montreal and London, 1974); A. Low, Love's Architecture: Devotional Modes in Seventeenth-Century English Poetry (New York, 1978); B. K. Lewalski, Protestant Poetics and the Seventeenth-Century Religious Lyric (Princeton, NJ [1979]); S. C. Seelig, The Shadow of Eternity: Belief and Structure in Herbert, Vaughan and Traherne (Lexington, Ky. [1981]); I.

Clark, Christ Revealed: The History of the Neotypological Lyric in the English Renaissance (Gainesville, Fla., 1982); D. R. Dickson, The Fountain of Living Waters: The Typology of the Waters of Life in Herbert, Vaughan, and Traherne (Columbia, Mo., 1987); J. N. Wall, Transformations of the Word: Spenser, Herbert, Vaughan (Athens, Ga., and London [1988]). R. D. Dunn and J. Horden in NCBEL 1 (1974), cols. 1161–70.

Metaphysical Society. A society founded in 1869 by Sir James Knowles (1831–1908) to foster constructive debate between leading exponents of science and religion. Its last meeting was held on 16 May 1880. Many of its members were later prominent in the 'Synthetic Society' (1869–1908), founded with similar but rather more definitely religious interests.

A. W. Brown, The Metaphysical Society (New York, 1947).

metaphysics. The name given by the Greek editors of *Aristotle to his 'First Philosophy', and by analogy to all philosophical treatises concerning cognate topics. The title was merely intended to indicate the position of the books on this subject in the Aristotelian corpus—τὰ μετὰ τὰ φυσικά, 'the [books] that succeed the Physics'. The precise scope of metaphysical inquiry is very hard to define. To Aristotelians, it is the study of being qua being; to idealists, that of the ultimate implication of experience, cognitional, volitional, and aesthetic; to modern realists, that of the most pervasive features of reality (self-consistency, spatial and temporal relatedness, causality, substantiality, etc.). Several currents in modern philosophy have cast doubts on the validity of metaphysics. I. Kant's Critique of Pure Reason attacked the current metaphysical proofs of God, freedom, and immortality, yet he insisted that God, freedom, and immortality were all necessary postulates of practical reason, thus 'destroying reason to make room for faith'. Other trends, e.g. Marxism and Freudianism, seek to undermine traditional metaphysics by demonstrating that the real determinants of philosophical belief are unconscious. Overall these doubts have tended to modify and deepen the enterprise of metaphysics rather than to overthrow it altogether. Christian theology has tended to take a realist metaphysics more or less for granted (see ANALOGY; THOMAS AQUINAS), but modern theology has not been immune from the influence of contemporary philosophical preoccupations.

Since nearly the whole range of philosophical speculation has at different times been comprised under the term 'metaphysics', the literature is virtually limitless. Works in Eng. incl. A. E. *Taylor, Elements of Metaphysics (1903); J. S. Mackenzie, Elements of Constructive Philosophy (1917); R. G. Collingwood, Philosophical Essays (2 vols., 1933–40); S. E. Toulmin and others, Metaphysical Beliefs (1957); D. F. Pears (ed.), The Nature of Metaphysics (1957); G. Martin, Einleitung in die allgemeine Metaphysik (1957; Eng. tr. 1961); P. F. Strawson, Individuals: An Essay in Descriptive Metaphysics (1959); W. H. Walsh, Metaphysics (1963); M. Lazerowitz, Studies in Metaphilosophy (1964); E. E. Harris, The Foundations of Metaphysics in Science (1965); J. W. Yolton, Metaphysical Analysis (Toronto, 1967; London, 1968); E. L. Mascall, The Openness of Being: Natural Theology Today (Gifford Lectures, 1970–1; 1971); D. M. Mackinnon, The Problem of Metaphysics (Cambridge 1974); G. E. M. Anscombe, Collected Philosophical Papers, 2: Metaphysics and the Philosophy of Mind (Oxford, 1981); S. Körner, Metaphysics: Its Structure and Function (Cambridge, 1984). W. *Pannenberg, Metaphysik und Gottesgedanke (Göttingen, 1988; Eng. tr., with additional material, 1990). See also bibls. to such entries as PLATO; ARISTOTLE; NEOPLATONISM; SCHOLASTICISM; DESCARTES, R.; SPINOZA, B.; LEIBNIZ, G. W.; WOLFF, C.; KANT, I.; FICHTE, J. G.; SCHELLING, F. W. J. VON; HEGEL, G. W. F.; LOTZE, H.; DILTHEY, W.; BRADLEY, F. H.; BOSANQUET, B.; CROCE, B.; PATTISON, A. S. PRINGLE-; HEIDEGGER, M.; WITTGENSTEIN, L.; PHENOMENOLOGY; EXISTENTIALISM.

metempsychosis. The doctrine that souls migrate from one body into another until complete purification has been achieved. The belief is widespread, esp. in India, where it forms an integral part of Hinduism and Buddhism; but it is also found in the later Jewish teaching of the *Kabbala and among many savage races. In pre-Christian Europe its most outstanding advocates were *Plato and Pythagoras, both of whom were probably influenced by Orphism, and the doctrine was generally accepted among the later Platonists, by whom the word μετεμψύχωσις was in current use. In the Christian era *Origen's doctrine of the pre-existence of souls often approached actual metempsychosis. It was frequently attacked, e.g. by St *Augustine and by *Aeneas of Gaza, and it was implicitly condemned by the Councils of *Lyons (1274) and *Florence (1439), which affirmed that souls go immediately to heaven, purgatory, or hell. In modern times belief in metempsychosis was revived by Giordano *Bruno, G. E. *Lessing, Charles Fourier, and others, and recently it has come to the fore through the spread of *Spiritualism and *Theosophy. Its attraction lies partly in its claim to provide a morally satisfying explanation of the inequalities of fortune and character among mankind, which it ascribes to deeds done in former lives. Belief in metempsychosis is fundamentally at variance with the Christian doctrine of the resurrection of the body.

Methodism. The system of religious faith and practice promoted, orig. at Oxford in 1729, by John and Charles *Wesley and their followers in the *Holy Club. The term was then applied to the evangelical movement led by the Wesleys and George *Whitefield from the late 1730s. In the 18th cent. it was often used loosely of evangelicals of all sorts. Since the organization of the movement as a separate denomination, the designation has been confined to members of this Church and the other Churches derived from it. The circumstances of the original application of the word 'Methodist' to the followers of the Wesleys (first recorded instance, 1732) have never been satisfactorily explained. Various religious groups were so designated in the 17th cent.

Most of the Methodist Churches, including the influential Methodist Episcopal Church of the USA, are *Arminian in their theological sympathies. The '*Calvinistic Methodists' (q.v.) of Wales, however, are *predestinarian and federated with the Presbyterian Churches. See also WESLEY, JOHN and CHARLES; WHITEFIELD, GEORGE; BIBLE CHRISTIANS; METHODIST CHURCHES; METHODIST NEW CONNEXION; PRIMITIVE METHODIST CHURCH; UNITED METHODIST CHURCH; and UNITED METHODIST FREE CHURCHES.

R. P. Heitzenrater, Mirror and Memory: Reflections on Early Methodism (Nashville, 1989), pp. 13–32.

Methodist Churches. In 1784 J. Wesley (q.v.) made provision for the continuance as a corporate body of the 'Yearly Conference of the People called Methodists' by nominating under a deed poll 100 persons whom he declared to be its members and laying down the method by which their successors were to be appointed. The Conference had power to appoint preachers to the various 'Preaching Houses' (later 'chapels'), the ownership of which was vested in boards of trustees acc. to a model trust deed, which since 1763 had already specified Wesley's Notes on the New Testament (1754) and his four volumes of sermons as a doctrinal standard. Provision was made for the case of preachers who should be, like J. and C. *Wesley, clergy of the C of E, but in fact there were few such. On Wesley's death in 1791 the future relations of Methodism with the C of E were a matter of dispute, but the 'Plan of Pacification' adopted by the Conference of 1795 eventually led to the administration of the sacraments (i.e. Baptism and esp. Holy Communion) in all Methodist chapels and the declaration that the admission of a preacher to 'full connexion with the Conference' conferred ministerial rights without any form of ordination. Ordination by the imposition of the hands of ministers was again adopted by the Conference in 1836.

The secession of the *Methodist New Connexion (q.v.) in 1797 was relatively small, the great majority of Methodists remaining in connexion with the Conference thus constituted by Wesley, and organized according to his principles in local societies and circuits. There were further small secessions in 1805, of a body mainly in the N. of England who later became the 'Independent Methodists'; in 1810 of the followers of H. Bourne and W. Clowes who became the *Primitive Methodist Church (q.v.); and in 1815 of those of W. O'Bryan, known as the *Bible Christians (q.v.). The causes were in each case disputes over revivalism, discipline, and polity, not on doctrine. Economic, social, and political tensions, however, helped to aggravate these conflicts. Similar disagreements with the official policy arising out of such matters as the installation of an organ in a chapel at Leeds (1827) and the foundation of a theological college for the training of ministers (1834) led to the formation of the Wesleyan Methodist Association. A more serious controversy over the expulsion of three ministers in 1849 led to the formation of the Wesleyan Reformers. Some of the Reformers united with the Association in 1857 to form the *United Methodist Free Churches (q.v.). The original body of Methodists continued, considerably weakened by these latter secessions. In course of time more friendly relations between all branches of Methodism were re-established and all took part, with Methodist Churches abroad, in a decennial Ecumenical Conference (first held 1881). In 1907 the Methodist New Connexion, the Bible Christians, and the United Methodist Free Churches came together in a union as the *United Methodist Church (q.v.), and this itself reunited in 1932 with the original or 'Wesleyan' Methodist Church and the Primitive Methodist Church to form the Methodist Church in Great Britain as it now exists. The United Methodists and Wesley Reform Union remain separate bodies. The *Calvinistic Methodists in England, who were followers of G. *Whitefield, were eventually absorbed into *Congregationalism; those in Wales, whose origins had nothing to do with Wesley, are also known as the Presbyterian Church of Wales.

The Methodist Church considers itself part of the Church Universal but claims no rights for its particular form of Church order iure divino, believing in the priesthood of all believers and following in organization the principles laid down by Wesley for the pastoral oversight of the societies of Methodists which had grown up as a result of his preaching. Though not usually so called, the resulting organization is in principle, in the judgement of at least one Methodist scholar (H. B. Workman), presbyterian. The supreme authority is the Conference, the legal successor of that originally constituted by Wesley, and now regulated in Statute law by the Methodist Church Union Act 1929, and the Methodist Church Act 1976. It consists of 288 ministers and 288 laymen for the most part elected by the District Synods; the ministers sit separately in 'Ministerial Session' to decide affairs concerning ministers, but decisions affecting the whole Church are taken by the full Conference ('Representative Session'). A minister as President and, for the Representative Session, a layman as Vice-President are elected annually by the Conference. The Conference delegates certain duties to the Synods, held twice-yearly in each District, of which there are 33 in Great Britain, containing mostly about 20 or 30 Circuits in each; it also appoints ministers as Chairmen of each District and Superintendents of each circuit, the latter consisting normally of a number of local 'societies' (Wesley's term for the local bodies of Methodists), which form the several churches of the denomination. A distinction is made between those on the 'Community Roll' who may be in fact regular members of a congregation, and 'full members' who have been formally admitted to the Church. 'All those who confess Jesus Christ as Lord and Saviour and accept the obligation to serve Him in the life of the Church and the world are welcome as full members of the Methodist Church.' Those who apply on this basis are admitted first for a probationary period and then (after Baptism, if previously unbaptized) by a public service of reception into membership at which the Holy Communion is celebrated. Acc. to Wesley's system, which is peculiar to Methodism, 'All members shall have their names entered on a Class Book, shall be placed under the pastoral care of a Class Leader, and shall receive a Quarterly Ticket of Membership'. The weekly class-meeting for 'fellowship in Christian experience' has from the beginning been a valuable institution. On removing to another place a member receives a recommendation which entitles him to membership in another local society.

In each circuit there is a Circuit Meeting consisting of ministers and lay office-holders, including Class Leaders, and in each Society there is a Church Council on the same basis. A meeting of all Church members is held annually in each Society to appoint representatives to the Church Council and for fellowship and consultation, but it has few of the powers of a Church Meeting in the Congregational or Independent Churches. Ministers are not 'called' to particular churches, but may be invited, the appointment being made by authority of the Conference, which also regulates the whole organization of Districts and Circuits, sets up special enterprises (e.g. the *Anglican–Methodist Conversations, revision of the liturgy), and controls other central organizations and committees, which are responsible to it. It also governs the selection, training, and ordination of ministers. The ordained ministry is open to women on virtually the same terms as men.

By tradition Methodism has an active concern with both evangelism and social welfare and by means of its centralized organization it is able to make co-ordinated efforts in these directions. Under the leadership of Hugh Price *Hughes (q.v.) the Methodist Forward Movement was active from 1885 in founding Missions in various parts of London, beginning with the East London Mission in Stepney, and in Manchester. Hughes's preaching at the West London Mission (from 1887) was a notable force in presenting Christianity as intimately concerned with social betterment and public morals: it was through his influence that the phrase 'the Nonconformist conscience' gained currency in connection with the divorce suit involving C. S. Parnell (1846–91), and Hughes willingly accepted the phrase as a description of his standpoint. J. Scott Lidgett (1854–1953), founder in 1891 of the Bermondsey Mission and its Warden till 1949, was another outstanding figure.

Methodism outside Great Britain dates from the lifetime of Wesley, who in 1784 'set apart' T. *Coke and others for N. America, where by 1791 there were already 42,265 members of Methodist Societies, compared with 71,688 in Great Britain. With the growth of the USA Methodist numbers increased and now greatly exceed those in Britain. After the Civil War there were two main Churches, in North and South respectively, which were reunited in 1939. In 1968 the Methodist Church of the United States was joined by the Evangelical United Brethren to form the United Methodist Church; there are still also a number of smaller Methodist bodies. Wesley had 'set apart' Coke as 'Superintendent'; Coke, with others, ordained F. *Asbury to the same office, and himself, against Wesley's opinion, took the title of 'bishop'; and American Methodism is largely 'episcopal' in possessing superintendents who are called bishops, though claiming no Episcopal Orders in the Catholic sense. There are also Methodist Churches under separate Conferences in *Ireland, *New Zealand, Southern Africa, *Nigeria, Ghana, *Sri Lanka, Upper *Burma, Samoa, Fiji, the Caribbean and the Americas (incl. the *West Indies), *Kenya, *Sierra Leone, Hong Kong, *Zimbabwe, Italy, the Ivory Coast, and Tonga. In continental Europe there are several small Methodist Churches, some of British and some of American origin. In Germany the union of the Methodist Church of the United States with the Evangelical United Brethren in 1968 entailed a parallel union of German Methodists with the Evangelische Gemeinschaft. Methodists have also united with other Protestant Churches in *Belgium, *Spain, and *France (though some congregations in France have remained independent). They entered the United Church of *Canada (1925), the Church of *South India (1947), the United Church of Papua and the Solomon Islands (1968), and the Uniting Church of *Australia (1977), while the Methodist Districts formerly related to the British and Australian Conferences entered the Church of *North India (1977). This world-wide extension of Methodism has been largely due to the vigorous work of the (British) Methodist Missionary Society which was formally organized on a national basis in 1818, though the British Conference had sent out missionaries as early as 1786. In other parts of the world, notably in South America, SE Asia, and N. *India, there are Churches resulting from the work of American Methodists. The world total of Methodist members in 1990 was over 20 millions, of whom 12.5 millions were in the USA and *c.*500,000 in Britain. The total world Methodist community was estimated at over 49 millions. See also ANGLICAN–METHODIST CONVERSATIONS.

W. J. Townsend, H. B. Workman, and G. Eayrs (eds.), A New History of Methodism (2 vols., 1909); R. [E.] Davies, [E.] G. Rupp, and A. R. George (eds.), A History of the Methodist Church in Great Britain (4 vols., 1965–88). R. E. Davies, Methodism (1963; rev. 1976). F. Baker, A Charge to Keep: An Introduction to the People Called Methodists (1947). R. F. Wearmouth, Methodism and the Common People of the Eighteenth Century (1945); id., Methodism and the Working Class Movements in England, 1800–1850 (1937); id., The Social and Political Influence of Methodism in the Twentieth Century (1957). W. J. Warner, The Wesleyan Movement in the Industrial Revolution (1930). M. [L.] Edwards, After Wesley: A Study of the Social and Political Influence of Methodism in the Middle Period (1791–1849) (1935); id., Methodism and England: A Study of Methodism in its Social and Political Aspects during the Period 1850–1932 (1943). D. Hempton, Methodism and Politics in British Society 1750–1850 (1984). J. C. Bowmer, The Sacrament of the Lord's Supper in Early Methodism (1951); id., The Lord's Supper in Methodism 1791–1960 (1961). G. S. Wakefield, Methodist Devotion: The Spiritual Life in the Methodist Tradition 1791–1945 (1966). T. B. Shepherd, Methodism and the Literature of the Eighteenth Century (1940). W. W. Sweet (ed.), Religion on the American Frontier, 1783–1840, 4: The Methodists: A Collection of Source Material (Chicago, 1946). Id., Methodism in American History (New York, 1933); E. S. Bucke (ed.), The History of American Methodism (3 vols., New York, 1964); F. A. Norwood, The Story of American Methodism: A History of the United Methodists and their Relations (Nashville and New York, 1974). F. Baker, From Wesley to Asbury: Studies in Early American Methodism (Durham, NC, 1976). G. G. Findlay and W. W. Holdsworth, The History of the Wesleyan Methodist Missionary Society (5 vols., 1921–4). W. C. Barclay, History of Methodist Missions (6 vols. planned; 1–3, New York, 1949–57; 4, by J. T. Copplestone, 1973). J. Kent, The Age of Disunity (1966). R. Currie, Methodism Divided: A Study in the Sociology of Ecumenicalism (1968). H. Spencer and E. Finch, The Constitutional Practice and Discipline of the Methodist Church (1951; 4th edn., 1964), with text of historical docs. K. E. Rowe, Methodist Union Catalog (Methuen, NJ, 1975 ff.). N. B. Harmon (ed.), The Encyclopedia of World Methodism (2 vols., Nashville [1974]). See also bibl. to PRIMITIVE METHODIST CHURCH; WESLEY, J.

Methodist New Connexion. The group of Methodists which in 1797 seceded from the Wesleyan *Methodist Church and in the union of 1907 was incorporated in the *United Methodist Church.

This, the first of the Methodist secessions, originated six years after the death of *J. Wesley (1791). The leader of the 'reforming' movement which led to the disruption, Alexander *Kilham (q.v.), was ordained a minister in the Methodist Church in 1792. In the controversy on the relationship of Methodism to the C of E he strongly supported complete separation, contending that Methodists should have the right to receive Communion from their own preachers. He also desired the lay members of the Church to take a much greater part in its administration than government through Wesley's Conference of preachers allowed. Kilham embodied his proposals for reform in a series of polemical pamphlets in which he also exposed what seemed to him abuses of the existing system. His writings and agitation led to his trial by the Wesleyan Conference of 1796 and expulsion.

In 1797 Kilham and his supporters summoned a Convention to negotiate with the Conference; but as the Conference's concessions did not affect the central issue, namely the representation of the laity in the ruling courts of the Church, Kilham at once founded the 'New Itinerancy' or 'Methodist New Connexion'. When its second Conference was held, a year later, the denomination had 19 ministers. On Kilham's death in 1798 he was succeeded by William Thom. The Connexion achieved only slow and limited growth, reaching 37,017 members at its maximum in 1906. It differed from Wesleyan Methodism chiefly in the matter of Church government and the exclusion of any use of Anglican worship; it made no doctrinal changes.

In 1907 the Methodist New Connexion united with the *Bible Christians and the *United Methodist Free Churches to form the United Methodist Church.

For bibl. see previous entry; also The Jubilee of the Methodist New Connexion [by T. R. Allin and others] (1848). O. A. Beckerlegge and E. A. Rose, A Bibliography of the Methodist New Connexion (Westcliff-on-Sea, 1988).

Methodius and Cyril, Sts. See CYRIL, ST, AND METHODIUS, ST.

Methodius of Olympus, St (d. *c.*311), bishop in Lycia. Very few biographical details are known. St *Jerome's assertion (De Vir. Illus. 83) that he was also Bp. of Tyre, and probably, too, that of '*Leontius of Byzantium' (De Sectis, 3. 1) that he was Bp. of Patara, seem mistaken. He was apparently put to death in the concluding years of the *Diocletianic persecution. Feast day in W., 18 Sept.; in E., 20 June.

One of the first assailants of *Origen—perhaps the reason for the absence of mention of him by *Eusebius—Methodius wrote extensively, though only a small portion of his works has been preserved. The 'Symposium [Banquet], or On Chastity' (Συμπόσιον, ἢ Περὶ ἁγνείας) also known as the 'Banquet of the Ten Virgins' alone remains entire. Written in dialogue form after the manner of *Plato, it extols the excellence of virginity. At the end is a hymn to Christ as the Bridegroom of the Church. In a treatise on the Resurrection (Ἀγλαοφῶν, ἢ Περὶ τῆς ἀναστάσεως) he upheld against Origen the identity of the resurrection body with that worn in this life. His work on Free Will (Περὶ τοῦ Αὐτεξουσίου) is a defence of human liberty against the fatalism of the *Gnostics. Considerable portions of the Greek text of these two writings have come down. His other works, surviving only in Slavonic, include writings on the food laws of the OT, on the mystical interpretation of the references to leprosy in Lev. 13, and on the leech in Prov. 30: 15. His lost writings include an extensive work against *Porphyry, commentaries on Genesis and the Song of Songs, and a treatise on the Witch of Endor (1 Sam. 28) directed against Origen.

Earliest collection of Methodius' writings ed. (with those of other Fathers) by F. *Combefis, OP, Paris, 1644; the 'Symposium', however, was first pub. by L. *Allatius, Rome, 1656. Crit. edn. by G. N. Bonwetsch (GCS 27; 1917). Slavonic version of 'De Autexousio', with Gk. texts, ed. A. Vaillant in PO 22. 5 (1930). Collected works also in J. P. Migne, PG 18. 9–408. Eng. tr. by W. R. Clark in ANCL 14 (1869), pp. 1–230. Modern edn. of 'Symposium' by H. Musurillo, SJ, with Fr. tr. by V. H. Debidour (SC 95; 1963); Eng. tr. by H. Musurillo (ACW 27; 1958). G. N. Bonwetsch, Die Theologie des Methodius von Olympus (1903); J. Farges, Les Idées morales et religieuses de Méthode d'Olympe (1929); M. Pellegrino, L'Inno del Simposio de S. Metodio Martire: Introduzione, testo critico e commento (Università di Torino. Pubblicazioni della Facoltà di Lettere e Filosofia, 10, fasc. 1; 1958). V. Buchheit, Studien zu Methodios von Olympos (TU 69; 1958). A. Vitores, OFM, Identidad entre el Cuerpo Muerto y Resucitado en Origenes según el 'De Resurrectione' de Metodio de Olimpo (Studium Biblicum Franciscanum, Analecta, 18; Jerusalem, 1981). CPG 1 (1983), pp. 248–53 (nos. 1810–30). Bardenhewer, 2, pp. 334–51; Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 215 f., and 591. G. *Salmon in DCB 3 (1882), pp. 909–11; H. A. Musurillo, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 1109–17, s.v. 'Méthode (3)'; R. [D.] Williams in TRE 22 (1992), pp. 680–4.

Methuselah. The eighth in the list of antediluvian patriarchs in Gen. 5 and the longest lived (969 years; Gen. 5: 27). He appears in the parallel list in Gen. 4 as 'Methusael' (RV 'Methushael') (v. 18).

metrical psalters. At the Reformation metrical psalmody was introduced in the Low Countries and in the French and Swiss Reformed Churches as a more biblical form of musical worship than the German *Lutheran hymns. M. *Coverdale published adaptations of German hymns and tunes for England [?1535], but these were suppressed by *Henry VIII; under *Edward VI metrical versions of the Psalms were published by T. *Sternhold (d. 1549) and others. In 1556 the Marian exiles in Geneva, doubtless inspired by the work of C. *Marot (q.v.) and L. Bourgeois (*c.*1510/15–*c.*1560), published along with their Book of Common Order 51 metrical psalms composed by Sternhold, J. Hopkins (d. ?1570), and W. *Whittingham (d. 1579). In 1562 the first complete Anglo-Genevan edition was printed in England. Until the middle of the 19th cent., when the use of metrical psalmody waned, many English versions were produced. The most widely used of these was the New Version of the Psalms (1696) of N. *Tate and N. Brady.

In Scotland the use of a metrical psalter became a permanent and characteristic feature of national worship. The Anglo-Genevan version was printed with additions in 1564 (with 105 tunes). An important harmonized edition followed in 1635. In 1650 in place of this Old Version the Scottish General Assembly adopted, in a much revised form, the simple, rugged and dignified version of Francis Rous, which had earlier been commended by the *Westminster Assembly and approved by the English House of Commons. The Assembly made no provision, however, for music for the new book and gradually many of the old tunes were forgotten. The Scottish Psalter (1929) revived the old tradition, and has much influenced subsequent hymnals such as the Church of Scotland's Church Hymnary (3rd edn., 1973).

R. R. Terry (ed.), Calvin's First Psalter (1932). N. Livingston (ed.), The Scottish Metrical Psalter of A.D. 1635 reprinted in full from the original work . . . and . . . illustrated by Dissertations, Notes, and Facsimiles (Glasgow, 1864). P. Pidoux (ed.), Le Psautier huguenot du XVI^e siècle, 1 and 2 (Basle, 1962). R. Zim, English Metrical Psalms: Poetry as Praise and Prayer 1535–1601 (Cambridge, 1987). R. A. Leaver, 'Goostly psalmes and spirituall songes': English and Dutch Metrical Psalms from Coverdale to Utenhove 1535–1566 (Oxford, 1991). N. Temperley, The Music of the English Parish Church (Cambridge Studies in Music, 2 vols., 1979), 1, pp. 13–243 passim; 2, pp. 30 f., 37–53. Id. and others in S. Sadie (ed.),

New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, 15 (1980), pp. 347–82, s.v. 'Psalms, metrical'.

Metrophanes Critopoulos (1589–1639). A Greek monk of Mt. *Athos who was sent by Cyril *Lucar to study theology in England at the invitation of G. *Abbot. From 1617 to 1622 he was at Balliol College, Oxford, and then in London, partly with Abbot, until 1624. After visiting universities and Protestant churches in Germany (1624–7) and Switzerland (1627), he returned via Venice (1627–30) to Egypt in 1631. In 1633 he became Metropolitan of Memphis in Egypt, and in 1636 Patriarch of Alexandria. In 1638 he signed the anathemas pronounced against Cyril Lucar for Calvinism. His works include a Ὁμολογία τῆς ἀνατολικῆς ἐκκλησίας (ed. J. Horne, Helmstedt, 1661).

His Ὁμολογία τῆς ἀνατολικῆς ἐκκλησίας (Wolfenbüttel MS 1048) has also been ed. by H. Weissenborn in E. J. Kimmel, Monumenta Fidei Ecclesiae Orientalis, 2 (Jena, 1850), pp. 1–213, and in I. N. Karmires, Τὰ δογματικὰ καὶ συμβολικὰ Μνημεῖα τῆς Ὀρθοδόξου Καθολικῆς Ἐκκλησίας, 2 (Athens, 1953), pp. 489–561. Modern studies by I. N. Karmires (Athens, 1937 and 1948). C. Davey, Pioneer for Unity: Metrophanes Kritopoulos (1589–1639) and Relations between the Orthodox, Roman Catholic and Reformed Churches (1987; repr. of earlier arts.), with bibl. G. Podskalsky, Griechische Theologie in der Zeit der Türkenherrschaft (1453–1821) (Munich, 1988), pp. 219–29. E. Legrand, Bibliographie hellénique ... au XVII^e siècle, 5 (1903), pp. 192–218. V. Grumel, AA, in DTC 10 (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 1622–7; D. Stiernon, AA, in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 1125 f., both s.v.

metropolitan. The title of a bishop exercising provincial, and not merely diocesan, powers. The organization of the early Church broadly followed that of the Roman Empire. Each city, with its territory, was governed by a bishop, and in each province the bishop of the civil metropolis (normally) came to possess rights over his comprovincial bishops, later called suffragans. These rights were determined by local custom before the Council of *Nicaea (325), whose 4th canon, in which the title metropolitan first appears, began the gradual process of legal definition. The duties and rights of a metropolitan have varied in time and place. Chief among them are the summoning and presidency of provincial synods, the visitation of dioceses, the care of vacant sees, some share in the appointment and consecration of suffragans and some disciplinary powers over them. Owing to *Diocletian's grouping of civil provinces into civil dioceses, metropolitans were in time subordinated to synods of the civil diocese or to a superior bishop (*exarch, *patriarch). The W. Church saw many conflicts between metropolitans and Popes, the latter being generally victorious (see PALLIUM). Provincial organization continues in episcopal Churches (*Canterbury, *York), though the metropolitical see is not always the civil capital. In the early Church, the metropolitan of some African provinces was the bishop senior by consecration. Metropolitans have commonly the titles of *archbishop and *primate.

At the present time, in the Church of Greece all diocesan bishops have the title Metropolitan, but in the Russian Church the title retains more or less its original meaning.

Mexico, Christianity in. The pre-Spanish Aztec empire of Mexico appears to have had vague traditions of biblical and Christian ideas, but their source cannot be traced. But within five years of the first Spanish invasion (1519) *Franciscan and other missionaries arrived. Conversions were numerous, though not always entirely voluntary, and Mexican Christians have, from the first, kept much of the old paganism under an outward profession of Christianity. Throughout Mexican history from the 16th cent. onwards, hardly any Christians of other denominations have entered the country to challenge the prevailing RCism.

Mexican independence was won in 1821 after a decade of war with Spain but, despite the many fundamental changes which then occurred, the Church's influence in political, social, and esp. financial affairs remained exceptionally strong. For more than 30 years liberals struggled to reduce clerical power, but it was not until the mid-19th cent. Reform, led by President Benito Juárez, that Church and State were separated, all ecclesiastical property nationalized, and the process of secularization of the clerical colonial society really began. After the 1910 Mexican Revolution, the 1917 Constitution, which still prevails, incorporated much of the Juárez anticlerical legislation. The Church was again banned from owning land or mortgages, Church schools were closed, the number of priests was strictly regulated, and the Juárez suppression of all religious orders was reaffirmed. These measures were not strictly enforced until 1926 when the so-called Cristero rebellion began and the last major conflict between Church and State took place. The intransigence of both sides resulted in the closing of churches, the deportation of bishops, and considerable bloodshed among both clergy and laity. By 1929 a compromise was reached; although from time to time there were serious disagreements between Church and State, by and large a modus vivendi was achieved whereby, provided the Church accepted the supremacy of the State and did not intervene in politics, the restrictive measures in the constitution were not all rigidly enforced. The accession to power of Carlos Salinas de Gortari in 1988 marked the beginning of a rapprochement between the Church and State. In 1992 amendments to the constitution recognized Churches of all denominations as legal entities, with the right to hold property, and legalized the presence of foreign clergy, removing a number of restrictions. In the same year diplomatic relations between Mexico and the Vatican were restored.

M. Cuevas, Historia de la Iglesia en México (5 vols., Tlalpam, 1921–8). C. Alvear Acevedo, La iglesia en la historia de México (Mexico, 1975). C. S. Braden, Religious Aspects of the Conquest of Mexico (Durham, NC, 1930). P. Ricard, La 'Conquête spirituelle' du Mexique: Essai sur l'apostolat et les méthodes missionnaires des ordres mendiants en Nouvelle-Espagne de 1523 à 1572 (thesis, Paris, 1933; Eng. tr., Berkeley, Calif., 1966). N. Farriss, Crown and Clergy in Colonial Mexico, 1759–1821: The Crisis of Ecclesiastical Privilege (1968). W. H. Callcott, Church and State in Mexico, 1822–1857 (Durham, NC [1926]). M. P. Costeloe, Church Wealth in Mexico: A Study of the 'Juzgado de Capellanías' in the Archbishopric of Mexico, 1800–1856 (Cambridge, 1967); id., Church and State in Independent Mexico: A Study of the Patronage Debate 1821–1857 (Royal Historical Society Studies in History, 1978). R. E. Quirk, The Mexican Revolution and the Catholic Church 1910–1929 (Bloomington, Ill., and London, 1973). J. A. Meyer, La Cristiada (3 vols., Mexico, 1973–4; Eng. tr., The Cristero Rebellion: The Mexican People between Church and State 1926–1929, 1976). J. L. Mecham, Church and State in Latin America (rev. edn., Chapel Hill, NC, 1966), pp. 340–415. G. W. Grayson, The Church in Contemporary Mexico (Significant Issues Series, 14, no. 5; Washington, DC [1992]). J. Bravo Ugarte, SJ, Bio-Bibliografía Eclesiástica Mexicana (1821–1943) (3 vols., Mexico, 1949). On the Evangelical Church, D. McGavran and others, Church Growth in Mexico (Grand Rapids, Mich. [1963]). Latourette, 3, pp. 108–23; 6, pp. 72–7 passim and 113–15; and 7, pp. 176–81, with further refs.; K. S. Latourette, Christianity in a Revolutionary Age, 3 (1961), pp. 303–10; 5 (1963), pp. 170–80.

Meyer, Heinrich August Wilhelm (1800–73), German NT scholar. Born at Gotha, he studied theology at the University of Jena and held various ecclesiastical offices at Hanover. The chief work of his life was his editorship of the well-known Kritisch-exegetischer Kommentar zum Neuen Testament (16 vols., 1832–52; Eng. tr., 20 vols., 1873–95), to which he himself contributed the Gospels, Acts, and most of the Pauline epistles. It was highly praised for its completeness and philological exactness, and has been constantly revised and rewritten by a long series of distinguished scholars down to the present time.

F. Düsterdieck in PRE (3rd edn.), 13 (1903), pp. 39–42.

Meynell, Alice Christiana Gertrude (1847–1922), née Thompson, poet and essayist. Having become a RC *c.*1872, in 1877 she married Wilfrid Meynell, to whom she gave much help in his literary work. A great part of her writing both in prose and verse has religion as its subject or background. Her verse, collections of which appeared at intervals from Preludes (1875) to the posthumously edited Last Poems in 1923, developed from the more emotional poetry of her earlier period to the subtle thought and restrained language of her riper years. In 1912 she published Mary, the Mother of Jesus, a collection of essays.

Centenary edn. of her Poems by F. Meynell (son) (1947) and of selected Prose and Poetry (1947), with introd. by V. [M.] Sackville-West, pp. 7–26. V. Meynell (daughter), Alice Meynell: A Memoir (1929). J. [Countess] Badeni, The Slender Tree: A Life of Alice Meynell (Padstow, 1981). A. K. Tuell, Mrs. Meynell and her Literary Generation (New York, 1925). F. Page in DNB, 1922–1930, pp. 584–6.

Micah, Book of. The sixth of the *Minor Prophets. From Mic. 1: 1 it appears that the author after whom the book is named lived in the 8th cent. BC and began to prophesy (Mic. 1: 5–7) before the fall of *Samaria (*c.*721). The first three chapters are generally accepted as the genuine work of this author, who is mentioned by *Jeremiah (Jer. 26: 17–19) as preaching with some success. They foretell the destruction of Samaria and of *Jerusalem. The rest of the book is regarded by most critics as of later date. Chs. 4–5 predict the regeneration of the people and the advent of a *Messiah. Chs. 6–7 are mainly occupied with a dispute between Yahweh and his people; they are usually recognized as a collection of material from miscellaneous sources, the last section (7: 7–20) being identified as a prophetic liturgy.

The Book foretells the destruction of the *Temple (Mic. 3: 12) as a punishment for presumption on the trust in Divine protection. Mic. 6: 8 sums up true religion as justice, mercy, and humble communion with God, and the complaints of Yahweh in Mic. 6: 3–5 are the model on which have been formed the *Reproaches in the liturgy used in the W. Church on *Good Friday.

Comm. by J. M. P. Smith (ICC on Mic., Zeph., Nah., Hab., Obad., Joel, 1912, pp. 5–156), J. L. Mays (London, 1976), H. W. Wolff (Dodekapropheton, 4; Biblischer Kommentar, Altes Testament, 14/4; Neukirchen, 1982), and D. R. Hillers (Philadelphia [1984]). J. Lindblom, Micha literarisch untersucht (Acta Academiae Aboensis, Humaniora, 6. 2; 1929). W. Beyerlin, Die Kulttradition Israels in der Verkündigung des Propheten Micha (Göttingen, 1959). B. Renaud, Structure et attaches littéraires de Michée iv–v (Cahiers de la Revue Biblique, 2; 1964). T. Lescow, Micha 6, 6–8: Studien zu Sprache, Form und Auslegung (Arbeiten zur Theologie, 1, Heft 25; 1966). H. W. Wolff, Mit Micha reden: Prophetie einst und jetzt (Munich, 1978; Eng. tr., Micah the Prophet, Philadelphia [1981]). K. Jeppesen, 'New Aspects of Micah Research', Journal for the Study of the Old Testament, 8 (1978), pp. 3–32. E. Otto in TRE, 22 (1992), pp. 695–704, s.v. 'Micha/Michabuch'.

Mi-Carême. See LAETARE SUNDAY.

Michael the Archangel, St. He is mentioned four times in Scripture: twice in Dan. (10: 13 ff. and 12: 1), where he is represented as the helper of the Chosen People, once in Jude (5: 9), disputing with the devil over the body of *Moses, and once in Rev. (12: 7–9), fighting the dragon. He also plays an important part in the apocryphal literature, e.g. in the 'Assumption of *Moses', in '*Enoch', and in the 'Ascension of *Isaiah' (qq.v.), where he appears as 'the great captain' 'who is set over the best part of mankind'. In connection with the scriptural and apocryphal passages he was early regarded in the Church as the helper of Christian armies against the heathen, and as a protector of individual Christians against the devil, esp. at the hour of death, when he conducts the souls to God, a belief echoed in the Offertory of the Roman Mass for the Dead until 1970: 'Signifer S. Michael repraesentet eas in lucem sanctam'.

His cult originated in Phrygia, where he was chiefly venerated as a healer, and many hot springs were dedicated to him both in Greece and Asia. The cult soon spread to the W., and in the *Leonine Sacramentary St Michael is named in four of the five Masses for 30 Sept. of a dedication festival of a basilica erected in his honour on the Via Salaria. This feast, which is kept throughout the W. Church on 29 Sept., is identical with that of the BCP of St Michael and All Angels. (In the RC Church the day now commemorates St *Gabriel and St *Raphael, with St Michael.) The cult of St Michael in the W. Church received a strong impetus from the famous apparition on Mt. Garganus in the time of Pope *Gelasius (492–6), in commemoration of which a feast was kept in the RC Church on 8 May until 1960. Throughout the Middle Ages St Michael enjoyed general veneration. His feast, 'Michaelmas Day', is connected with many popular usages and numerous churches are dedicated to him. He is usually represented with a sword, standing over, or fighting with, a dragon. Feast day in E., 8 Nov. See also MONT-ST-MICHEL.

AASS, Sept. 8 (1762), pp. 4–123. W. Lueken, Michael: Eine Darstellung und Vergleichung der jüdischen und der morgenländisch-christlichen Tradition vom Erzengel Michael (Göttingen, 1898). O. Rojdestvensky, Le Culte de Saint Michel et le moyen âge latin (1922); Millénaire Monastique du Mont Saint-Michel, 3: Culte de Saint Michel et Pèlerinages au Mont, sous la direction de M. Baudot (1971), pp. 7–234 and 297–520. J. P. Rohland, Der Erzengel Michael: Arzt und Feldherr. Zwei Aspekte des vor- und frühbyzantinischen Michaelskultes (Beihefte der Zeitschrift für Religions- und Geistesgeschichte, 19; Leiden, 1977). J. Lemarié, OSB, 'Textes liturgiques concernant le culte de S. Michel', Sacris Erudiri, 14 (1963), pp. 277–85. R. H. *Charles in HDB 3 (1900), pp. 362 f.; F. Spadafora and M. G. Mara in Bibliotheca Sanctorum, 9 (Rome, 1967), cols. 410–46.

Michael Cerularius (d. 1058), Patr. of *Constantinople from 1043, to whose period of office the beginning of the schism between the E. and W. Churches is conventionally dated. Destined for a political career, he was implicated in a conspiracy against the Emp. Michael IV, and became a monk *c.*1040, perhaps to escape the consequences. In outlook he was violently anti-Latin, fiercely attacking the *Filioque and unleavened *bread in the Eucharist. The attempted mediation at Constantinople between a Roman legation, led by Cardinal *Humbert of Silva Candida, and the E. Emp., Constantine IX (Monomachus), failed; the Latins laid a bull of excommunication against the Easterns on the altar of *Sancta Sophia; and Cerularius replied by anathemas (21 and 24 June 1054) and an encyclical embodying the Byzantine case. Later he took part in the political plot to put Isaac Comnenus (Emp. 1057–9) on the throne in place of Michael VI, but then came into conflict with Isaac, was exiled, and would have been deposed if he had not died.

Collection of his works in J. P. Migne, PG 120. 719–820, with refs., but incl. also material of an anterior date. Some of his correspondence also pr. in C. Will (ed.), Acta et Scripta quae de Controversiis Ecclesiae Graecae et Latinae Saeculo Undecimo Composita Extant (Leipzig and Marburg, 1861), pp. 65–85, 89–92, 153 f., and 172–204. V. Grumel, AA (ed.), Les Regestes des actes du patriarcat de Constantinople, 1, 2nd edn. of fascs. 2–3 by J. Darrouzès (1989), pp. 358–73 (nos. 855a–86). A. Michel, Humbert und Kerullarios (Quellen und Forschungen aus dem Gebiete der Geschichte herausg. von der Görres-Gesellschaft, 21 and 23; 1925–30). Id., 'Verstreute Kerullarios- und Humbert-Texte', RQ 39 (1931), pp. 355–76. M. Jugie, AA, Le Schisme byzantin (1941), pp. 187–246. M. H. Smith, And Taking Bread . . .: Cerularius and the Azyme Controversy of 1054 (Théologie Historique, 47 [1978]). F. Tinnefeld, 'Michael I. Kerullarios, Patriachen von Konstantinopel (1043–58)', Jahrbuch der Österreichischen Byzantinistik, 39 (1989), pp. 95–127. J. M. Hussey, The Orthodox Church in the Byzantine Empire (Oxford History of the Christian Church, 1986), pp. 129–38. É. Amann in DTC 10 (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 1677–703, s.v. 'Michel (4) Cérulaire', with detailed refs.; M. J. Higgins in NCE 9 (1967), pp. 796 f.

Michael Psellus. See PSELLUS, MICHAEL.

Michael the Syrian (1126–99), *Syrian Orthodox Patr. of *Antioch. He was a monk and later archimandrite of the monastery of Barsauma; when he became Patriarch of Antioch in 1166 he had for some time to struggle against a rival supported by the Armenians. He compiled a chronicle covering the period from the creation to 1194/5. This work preserves many Syriac sources now lost and affords important evidence for the history of the Syrian Orthodox Church and for the *Crusades. The original Syriac was discovered in 1888; previously the Chronicle had been known only in a shortened Armenian version.

Syriac text of the Chronicle ed., with Fr. tr., by J. B. Chabot (4 vols., Paris, 1899–1910). Fr. tr. of Armenian version by V. Langlois (Venice, 1868). A. *Baumstark, Geschichte der syrischen Literatur (1922), pp. 298–300. E. Tisserant in DTC 10 (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 1711–19, s.v. 'Michel (9) le Syrien'.

Michaelis, Johann David (1717–91), German Protestant theologian. He was professor of oriental languages and theology at Göttingen from 1746 to his death, and is important chiefly for his studies in Hebrew and Arabic and his research work on the early versions of the Bible, esp. the *Peshitta. In 1750 he published his critical Einleitung in das NT, and from 1769 to 1791 his influential annotated translation of the OT in 13 volumes. In his famous Mosäisches Recht (6 vols., 1770–5; Eng. tr., 4 vols., 1840) he treated the legislation of the Pentateuch as a human achievement, and thus appeared to deny its character as Divine Revelation. His rationalist methods as well as his comprehensive linguistic studies had a far-reaching influence on the development of German biblical criticism.

Michaelis's correspondence ed. J. G. Buhle (3 vols., Leipzig, 1794–6). J. M. Hassencamp, Leben des Herrn Johann David Michaelis, von ihm selbst beschrieben (Rinteln, 1793). R. Smend in B. Moeller (ed.), Theologie in Göttingen (Göttingen, 1987), pp. 59–71. J. C. O'Neill, The Bible's Authority (Edinburgh, 1991), pp. 28–38.

Michelangelo (1475–1564), Italian Renaissance artist. Michelangelo Buonarroti was the son of the Podestà of the village of Caprese. In 1488 he became the pupil of the Florentine painters Domenico and Davide Ghirlandaio, but, following his attraction for sculpture, went the next year to Bertoldo, a disciple of *Donatello, who introduced him into the circle of Lorenzo the Magnificent (de' Medici). Here he learnt to appreciate the classic ideal of sensuous beauty, which was for a long time to struggle in him with the ideal of religious asceticism represented by his older contemporary Savonarola. In 1496 he went to Rome, where he did a Pietà (finished in 1500) in which Christian austerity and classic beauty are admirably harmonized. During a temporary stay at Florence he carved his famous David (1501–4). In 1505 *Julius II called him back to Rome to execute the Papal tomb. His design, which was on so grand a scale that it would have been almost impossible to carry it through in a lifetime, seems to have been meant to represent the three orders of Nature, Law, and Grace in their relation to the Papacy. Its most important finished part is the great figure of Moses (1513–6) representing to perfection the majestic wrath of the Law-Giver of the Old Dispensation.

Between 1508 and 1512, under pressure from Julius II, Michelangelo painted the celebrated frescoes on the ceiling of the *Sistine Chapel. Their subject is the praeparatio evangelica, leading from the Creation of the world through temptation and sin to the Prophets of the OT and the Sibyls of the Gentiles. The two frescoes representing the 'Creation of Light' and the 'Creation of Man' are among the most grandiose paintings of all time, combining in the Creator human tenderness with stupendous force. The artist continued in Papal employment under *Leo X and his successors, executing for them (*c.*1524/5) parts of his plan for a mortuary chapel of the Medici in San Lorenzo with its famous figures of Night and Day, Morning and Evening, representing the frailty of human greatness. From 1534 to 1541 he was engaged on the Last Judgement in the Sistine Chapel. After the death of his friend Vittoria Colonna (1547), to whom he addressed many sonnets full of devotion and religious feeling, he was entrusted with the direction of the building of *St Peter's, and he was engaged on this work till his death.

Letters, ed. G. Milanesi (Florence, 1875) and in Eng. tr. by E. H. Ramsden (2 vols., London, 1963). Complete correspondence ed. G. Poggi, P. Barrochi, and R. Ristori (5 vols., Florence, 1965–83). Notebooks (Ricordi), ed. L. Bardeschi Ciulich and P. Barocchi (Florence [1970]). Poems, ed. C. Frey (Berlin, 1897; 2nd edn., 1964) and by E. N. Girardi (Scrittori d'Italia, 217; Bari, 1960). Edn., based on that of Girardi, with Eng. tr., by C. Ryan (London, 1996). Further Eng. tr. of Poems and Selected Letters, by C. Gilbert (New York [1963]). Collection of reproductions (in black and white), ed. F. Knapp (Klassiker der Kunst in Gesamtausgaben, 7; 1906); of his paintings, ed. L. Goldscheider (London [1939]); of his sculpture, by id. (ibid. [1940]; 2nd edn., 1950) and by F. Hartt (ibid., 1969); of his drawings by K. Frey (3 vols., Berlin, 1909–11), L. Goldscheider (London [1951]; 2nd edn., 1966), F. Hartt (New York, 1970; London, 1971), and C. de Tolnay (4 vols., Novara [1975–80]). Selection of his paintings, sculpture, and architecture (some in colour) by L. Goldscheider (London, 1953; 5th edn., 1975).

Lives by G. Vasari (Florence, 1550), ed. K. Frey (Munich, 1911) and P. Barocchi (5 vols., Milan and Naples, 1962); by A. Condivi (Rome, 1553), ed. E. Spina Barelli (Milan, 1964); Eng. tr. of the latter by A. S. Wohl, ed. H. Wohl (London, 1976). Modern studies by J. [A.] Symonds (2 vols., London, 1892), C. Justi (Leipzig, 1900), H. Thode (6 vols. bound in 7, Berlin, 1902–13), K. Frey (vol. 1 only pub., ibid., 1907), C. de Tolnay (5 vols., Princeton, NJ, 1943–60, also, ibid., 1975), H. von Einem (Stuttgart, 1957; rev. Eng. tr., 1973), F. Hartt (New York and London, 1965), H. Hibbard (London, 1975), J. Wilde (Oxford, 1978), and L. Murray (London, 1984). J. Wilde, Italian Drawings in the Department of Prints and Drawings in the British Museum: Michelangelo and his Studio (1953); Drawings by Michelangelo in the Collection of Her Majesty the Queen . . . and other English Collections: An Exhibition held . . . in the British Museum . . . 1975 [1975]; L. Steinberg, Michelangelo's Last Paintings [1975]; L. Berti, Michelangelo: I Disegni di Casa Buonarroti (Florence [1985]); M. Hirst, Michelangelo and his Drawings (New Haven, Conn., and London [1988]). J. S. Ackerman, The Architecture of Michelangelo (2 vols., 1961); P. Portoghesi and B. Zevi (eds.), Michelangelo architetto (Turin, 1964). M. Weinberger, Michelangelo the Sculptor (2 vols., 1967); U. Baldini, Michelangelo scultore (Florence, 1981; Eng. tr. 1982). D. Summers, Michelangelo and the Language of Art (Princeton, NJ [1981]). E. Steinmann and R. Wittkower, Michelangelo Bibliographie 1510–1927 (Leipzig, 1927); L. Dussler, Michelangelo-Bibliographie 1927–1970 (Wiesbaden, 1974).

Micrologus. An 11th-cent. Roman Mass book, attesting several practices, e.g. the omission of Gloria in Excelsis in *Advent and *Septuagesima and the use of Placeat tibi after the dismissal, which later became universal in the Latin West. There is still never more than one *collect, the *Creed has not yet been introduced, *incense at the *Offertory is discouraged, as are Offertory prayers. The author was prob. Bernhold of Constance (*c.*1054–1100), a monk of Schaffhausen and a supporter of *Gregory VII; he was trying to restore a purely Roman use but had to tolerate certain local additions. The work was formerly attributed to St *Ivo of Chartres.

Editio princeps (incomplete), Paris, 1510. First complete edn. by J. Pamelius, Antwerp, 1560 (repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 151. 973–1022). S. B[äumer], OSB, 'L'Auteur du Micrologue', R. Bén. 8 (1891), pp. 193–201, incl. text of two additional chs., pp. 200 f. G. *M[orin], OSB, 'Que "L'Auteur du Micrologue" est Bernold de Constance', ibid., pp. 385–95; S. Bäumer, OSB, 'Der Micrologus ein Werk Bernold's von Konstanz', NA 18 (1892–3), pp. 429–46. V. L. Kennedy, CSB, 'For a new edition of the Micrologus of Bernold of Constance', in Mélanges en l'honneur de Monseigneur Michel Andrieu (Revue des Sciences Religieuses, volume hors série; Strasbourg, 1956), pp. 229–41. F. *Cabrol, OSB, in DACL 2 (pt. 1; 1910), cols. 817–20, s.v. 'Bernold (de Constance) et le Micrologue', and H. *Leclercq, OSB, ibid. 11 (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 908–12, s.v. 'Micrologue'.

Middle Ages, the. The era preceding the Renaissance, formerly taken to date from the fall of the W. Roman Empire in 476, but in more recent writers from *c.*1100, and extending down to the end of the 15th cent. The conception of the 'medium aevum' is to be found in the writings of Flavio Biondo (1388–1463), and was in established use by 1467. Once viewed as a sterile period, it has come to be regarded as one of the most creative and fruitful periods in the world's history. For the historian of Christianity it has special interest as the age which approached most nearly the realization of Christendom as a cultural unity.

G. Gordon, Medium Aevum and the Middle Age (Society for Pure English, Tract 19; 1925).

Middleton, Thomas Fanshawe (1769–1822), first Bp. of Calcutta. After graduating at Pembroke College, Cambridge, he was ordained in 1792 and held a number of livings before being appointed vicar of St Pancras in 1811. Three years later he was consecrated first Bishop of Calcutta, constituted as a vast diocese covering all the territories of the East India Company. His episcopate witnessed a great advance in Church life, including the foundation at Calcutta of the Bishop's College, a training college for missionaries in Asia, in 1820. Possessed of a somewhat chill exterior, Middleton was a man of great ability as well as a scholar of note, his chief work being The Doctrine of the Greek Article applied to the Criticism and Illustration of the New Testament (1808; rev. edn. by H. J. *Rose, 1833).

C. W. Le Bas, Life of T. F. Middleton (2 vols., 1831). W. Wroth in DNB 37 (1894), pp. 363–5.

Mid-Lent. See LAETARE SUNDAY.

Midrash (Heb., 'investigation/study [sc. of Scripture]'). The term, which occurs as early as 2 Chron. 24: 27 ('midrash of the Book of Kings', commonly rendered in English Bibles as 'commentary' or 'discourse of the book of the kings') and in the *Dead Sea Scrolls in the Manual of Discipline, 8. 15 ('midrash of the *Torah'), is commonly applied to the whole tradition of Jewish biblical exegesis (incl. the Book of *Jubilees, *Philo, and the Liber Antiquitatum Biblicarum). However, it primarily denotes Rabbinic interpretation of the Bible as it flourished in Palestine, and to a lesser extent in Babylonia, in the Tannaitic and Amoraic periods (2nd–8th cent. AD). The extensive corpus of midrashic texts is classified in a number of ways. The Halachic Midrashim (i.e. the Mechilta on Exod., Sifra on Lev., and Sifrei on Num. and Deut.) concentrate on the *halachic (or legal) portions of the Pentateuch, as opposed to the *haggadic (narrative, non-legal) portions. They are also known as the Tannaitic Midrashim, because they largely cite authorities from the time of the *Mishnah (i.e. before c. AD 200). The Homiletic Midrashim (e.g. Tanḥuma and Pesiqta de Rab Kahana) expound only the opening verse(s) of the Sabbath or Festival lection used in synagogue, in contrast to the Exegetical Midrashim (e.g. Genesis Rabba), which give a running commentary on each biblical verse. The largest collection of classic Midrashim is Midrash Rabba. First published in Constantinople in 1512, it contains texts ranging in date from the 5th cent. AD (Genesis Rabba and Lamentations Rabba) to the 13th (Numbers Rabba, in its present form).

All the Midrashim exhibit a similar hermeneutical approach to Scripture, the spirit of which is summarized in the maxim, 'Turn it [Torah] over and over again, for everything is in it. Reflect upon it. Grow old and worn in it, and do not stir from it, for you have no better rule than it' (*Pirqe Aboth, 5. 22). Scripture is the primary source of all wisdom and truth. It originated in the mind of God and so is inerrant and totally coherent. The aims of the expositor (the darshan) are to explain apparent errors, to harmonize contradictions and demonstrate the unity of Scripture, and to draw out the teachings of the Torah and apply them to Jewish life. To this end he may resort even to extreme techniques of text-manipulation, such as notariqon (treating the words of Scripture as acronyms), gematria* (computing the numerical values of the words of Scripture), and al tiqrei (revocalizing words). Though they make some use of a tradition of popular Bible exegesis in synagogue (the Petiḥah [Proem] and Yelammedenu forms appear to represent preaching styles), the Midrashim as they stand are scholastic commentaries which reflect learned discussions on Scripture in the Rabbinic academies. They sometimes incorporate much earlier material, but broadly they appear to be post-Mishnaic in origin, an attempt to read Scripture in the light of the Mishnah and to justify the distinctive Rabbinic view of the world.

The classic phase of midrash ended around the 8th cent. AD. Though Midrashim were composed later, in the 10th cent. a new style of biblical commentary (known as parshanut) emerges, which, though sometimes citing Midrash (notably in the case of *Rashi, 1040–1105), is distinct from it. Despite the chronological problems the Rabbinic Midrashim have been used to elucidate the methods, content, and form of NT exegesis of the OT. They also shed light on the writings of *Origen and *Jerome, both of whom drew extensively on Jewish tradition. In recent years literary critics have seen in midrash anticipations of modern ways of reading texts.

Trs. of major Midrashim (into Eng., unless otherwise specified) include: Mechilta by J. Z. Lauterbach (3 vols., Philadelphia, 1933–5); Sifra by J. Neusner (Brown Judaic Studies, 138–40 and 142; Atlanta, Ga. [1988]) and J. Winter (Schriften der Gesellschaft zur Förderung der Wissenschaft des Judentums, 42; Breslau, 1938; Ger.); Sifrei Numbers by J. Neusner (Brown Judaic Studies, 118–19 [1986]); Sifrei Deuteronomy by R. Hammer (Yale Judaica Series, 24; New Haven, Conn., and London [1986]); Midrash Rabba by H. Freedman, M. Simon, and others (10 vols., London, 1939); Pesiqta Rabbati by W. G. Braude (Yale Judaica Series, 18; 2 vols., 1968); Pesiqta de Rab Kahana by W. G. Braude and I. J. Kapstein (Philadelphia and London, 1975) and J. Neusner (Brown Judaic Studies, 122–3 [1987]); Tanhuma by J. T. Townsend (Hoboken, NJ, 1989 ff. [Gen. only to date]) and H. Bietenhard (2 vols., Judaica et Christiana, 5–6; Bern and Frankfurt, 1980–2; Ger.); Midrash Psalms by W. G. Braude (Yale Judaica Series, 13; 2 vols., 1959).

The best general introd. is H. L. Strack, Einleitung in Talmud und Midrash (1887; 7th edn. by G. Stemberger, 1982; Eng. tr., Edinburgh, 1991), with bibl., incl. details of major edns. of the texts. Other works incl. G. Vermes, Scripture and Tradition in Judaism: Haggadic Studies (Studia Post-Biblica, 4; Leiden, 1961, 2nd edn., 1973); id., 'Bible and Midrash: Early Old Testament Exegesis', in P. R. Ackroyd and C. F. Evans (eds.), The Cambridge History of the Bible, 1 (1970), pp. 199–231, repr. in Vermes, Post-Biblical Jewish Studies (Studies in Judaism in Late Antiquity, 8; Leiden, 1975), pp. 59–91; J. Neusner, Midrash in Context: Exegesis in Formative Judaism (Philadelphia [1983]); P. S. Alexander, 'The Rabbinic Hermeneutical Rules and the Problem of the Definition of Midrash', Proceedings of the Irish Biblical Association, 8 (1984), pp. 97–120; id., 'Quid Athenis et Hierosolymis? Rabbinic Midrash and Hermeneutics in the Graeco-Roman World', in P. R. Davies and R. T. White (eds.), A Tribute to Geza Vermes (Journal for the Study of the Old Testament, Supplement Series, 100; Sheffield [1990]), pp. 101–24; G. G. Porton, Understanding Rabbinic Midrash: Texts and Commentary (Hoboken, NJ, 1985); M. Fishbane, Biblical Interpretation in Ancient Israel (Oxford, 1985); A. Goldberg, 'Form-Analysis of Rabbinic Literature as a Method of Description', Journal of Jewish Studies, 36 (1985), pp. 159–74; id., 'The Rabbinic View of Scripture', in A Tribute to Geza Vermes, op. cit., pp. 153–66; G. H. Hartman and S. Budick (eds.), Midrash and Literature (New Haven, Conn. [1986]); D. Boyarin, Intertextuality and the Reading of Midrash (Bloomington, Ill., and Indianapolis [1990]); A. Samely, 'Between Scripture and its Rewording: Towards a Classification of Rabbinic Exegesis', Journal of Jewish Studies, 42 (1991), pp. 39–67.

Migetius (8th cent.), Spanish heretic. The little that is known of him comes from the letters of his opponents, esp. *Elipandus. He seems to have taught the curious doctrine that God was revealed successively in David (as Father), in Jesus (as Son), and in St Paul (as Holy Spirit). He was condemned at synods held at Seville in 782 and 785.

É. Amann in DTC 10 (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 1720–2, s.v. See also bibls. to ADOPTIANISM and ELIPANDUS.

Migne, Jacques Paul (1800–75), editor and publisher of theological literature. A parish priest near Orléans from 1824 to 1833, he then went to Paris, where he founded a printing-house and published an immense collection of religious texts and dictionaries, notably the Patrologia Latina, a corpus of Latin ecclesiastical writers up to *Innocent III (221 vols., 1844–64), and the Patrologia Graeca, of Greek writers to 1439 (162 vols., Greek text with Latin tr., 1857–66). He used many editions since superseded and printers' errors abound, but for most of the authors the collections remain the standard means of reference and citation. Migne's commercial activities were disliked by H. L. Quelen, Abp. of Paris (1817–39), but subsequent archbishops were more favourable. In 1868 his workshops and stereotype moulds were destroyed by fire.

A series of suppl. to PL ed. A. [G.] Hamman, OFM (5 vols., Paris, 1958–74). Useful index to PG by F. Cavallera (Paris, 1912); to the same series there is also a more elaborate Index Locupletissimus by T. Hopfner (2 vols., ibid., 1928–45). P. Glorieux, Pour revaloriser Migne: Tables rectificatives (Mélanges de Science religieuse, IXᵉ Année, 1952. Cahier Supplémentaire). A. G. Hamman [OFM], Jacques-Paul Migne: Le Retour aux Pères de l'Église (Le Point Théologique, 16 [1975]). A. Mandouze and J. Fouilheron (eds.), Migne et le Renouveau des Études Patristiques: Actes du Colloque de Saint-Flour, 7–8 juillet 1975 (Théologie historique, 66 [1985]), esp. pp. 93–317. R. H. Bloch, God's Plagiarist: Being an Account of the Fabulous Industry and Irregular Commerce of the Abbé Migne (Chicago and London, 1994). L. Marchal in DTC 10 (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 1722–40, s.v.; H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 11 (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 941–57, s.v.

Milan, Edict of. The document so called is in fact a circular of 313 to provincial governors issued in Bithynia by the Emp. Licinius. In accordance with an agreement made with *Constantine at Milan, he extended to the E. provinces freedom of worship for all, including Christians, and the restitution of possessions lost by the Churches since the persecution of 303, concessions previously made in the W. by Constantine and Maxentius. It is preserved in divergent forms by *Lactantius (De Mortibus Persecutorum, 48) and *Eusebius (Hist. Eccl. 10. 5). See also PERSECUTIONS, EARLY CHRISTIAN.

Comm. by J. Moreau in his edn. of Lactantius, De Mortibus Persecutorum (SC 39), 2 (1955), pp. 456–64. N. H. Baynes, Constantine the Great and the Christian Church (Raleigh Lecture for 1929; 1930), pp. 69–74 (full and valuable bibl.).

Milanese rite. See AMBROSIAN RITE.

Mildred, St (*c.*700), Abbess of Minster-in-Thanet. Acc. to late and not wholly reliable sources (among them, *Goscelin, Thorn, *William of Malmesbury), she was the granddaughter of Penda, King of Mercia, and daughter of St Ermenburga, the foundress and abbess of the nunnery at Minster. She was sent for education to the convent of Chelles near Paris, whence, after resisting strong inducements to marriage, she returned to Minster, and became a nun at her mother's house, later succeeding her as abbess. After the destruction of Minster by the Danes in 1011, two of the monasteries at *Canterbury (St Augustine's and St Gregory's) laid claim to the possession of her relics; the resulting dispute provoked Goscelin's 'Libellus contra usurpatores S. Mildrithae'. Later her remains found their way to Deventer in the Netherlands. Feast day, 13 July (more recently, 20 Feb.).

Life repr. from J. Capgrave, with introd. and other late material, in AASS, Jul. 3 (1723), pp. 512–23. Earlier material described in Hardy, 1 (pt. 1; 1862), pp. 376–84. BHL 2, p. 870 (nos. 5960–94). D. W. Rollason, The Mildrith Legend: A Study in Early Medieval Hagiography in England (Leicester, 1982); id., 'Goscelin of Canterbury's Account of the Translation and Miracles of St Mildrith . . . An Edition with notes', Mediaeval Studies, 48 (1986), pp. 139–210. W. *Stubbs in DCB 3 (1882), pp. 914 f., s.v.

Milíč, Jan (*c.*1325–74), the most important of the pre-*Hussite reformers in Bohemia and Moravia. A native of Kroměříž (Kremsier), he held offices in the Imperial chancery of Charles IV, but abandoned all his temporal interests before the end of 1363 and vigorously preached against the vices of the clergy at Prague and elsewhere. During the later 1360s he was for a time imprisoned by the *Inquisition at Rome, and he died at *Avignon while still under suspicion of heresy. His writings include a Libellus de Antichristo and many Latin sermons, but his significance lies in his handling of the spoken word. His moral and eschatological vision, which drew on the teaching of Konrad Waldhauser and was passed on to Matthias of Janov and Tomáš Štítný in the next generation, laid the ideological ground for the Hussite revolt.

Tres Sermones Synodales, ed. V. Herold and M. Mráz (Prague, 1974). Idd., 'Johann Milíč von Kremsier—ein ideologischer Wegbereiter des Hussitentums und des deutschen Bauernkrieges', Deutsche Zeitschrift für Philosophie, 23 (1975), pp. 570–82. M. Kaňák, Milíč z Kroměříže (Prague, 1975). E. [J.] Winter, Frühhumanismus: Seine Entwicklung in Böhmen und deren europäische Bedeutung für die Kirchenreformbestrebungen im 14. Jahrhundert (Beiträge zur Geschichte des Religiösen und Wissenschaftlichen Denkens, 3; 1964), esp. pp. 86–103; id., Ketzerschicksale: Christliche Denker aus neun Jahrhunderten (1979), pp. 48–63.

militant, the Church. The body of Christians still on earth, as distinct from those in *Purgatory (*expectant) and those in *Heaven (*triumphant) (see COMMUNION OF SAINTS). Cf. the 'Prayer for the Church Militant' in the BCP.

Mill, John. See MILLS, JOHN.

Mill, William Hodge (1792–1853), English orientalist and *High Church divine. Educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, where he was elected Fellow in 1814, he was from 1820 to 1838 the first principal of Bishop's College, Calcutta. Here he became keenly interested in Arabic and Sanskrit studies and assisted with the publication of works in the Indian vernaculars for spreading the Christian faith. Forced through ill-health to return to England in 1838, he became chaplain to Abp. W. *Howley and *Hulsean advocate (1839) and later Regius professor of Hebrew at Cambridge (1848). His support of the 'Cambridge *Camden Society' did much to further the interests of *Tractarian principles at the university.

His Lectures on the Catechism, delivered in the Parish Church of Brasted, Kent, were posthumously ed. by his son-in-law B. *Webb, (1856), who also ed., with notes, a 2nd edn. of his Five Sermons on the Temptation of Christ Our Lord in the Wilderness: preached before the University of Cambridge, in Lent 1844 (1873). C. Bendall in DNB 37 (1894), p. 400, s.v.

Millenarianism. The belief in a future 'millennium', i.e. a thousand-year period of blessedness. The Christian concept may owe something to the Book of Daniel and to ideas popular in late pre-Christian Jewish apocalyptic literature, esp. 2 Esd., and the non-canonical Books of Enoch. The main source of the teaching is, however, the Book of Rev., ch. 20.

Its advocates fall into two groups, pre- and post-millennialists. The former maintain that the millennium will follow the Second Coming of Christ, but are divided as to whether it will be spent by the saints in heaven or upon earth; the latter believe that it precedes the Advent and, indeed, prepares the way for it by the spread of righteousness over the earth, a view which, in its modern form, owes much to D. *Whitby (1638–1726).

In the early Church, Millenarianism was found among the *Gnostics and *Montanists, but was also accepted by more orthodox writers such as St *Justin Martyr, St *Irenaeus, and St *Hippolytus of Rome, all of whom were pre-millennialists. Millenarianism came, however, increasingly to stress the carnal pleasures to be enjoyed during the thousand years of the saints' earthly reign and eventually a revulsion against the whole concept set in, initiated by *Origen and completed by St *Augustine. During the medieval period the principal exponent of millenarian themes was *Joachim of Fiore, whose doctrines aroused much excitement in the W. Church but were treated with suspicion by the ecclesiastical authorities.

At the Reformation many *Anabaptists, as well as the *Bohemian Brethren, were millenarians, and millenarian beliefs were widely held in 16th- and 17th-cent. English Protestantism, finding particular expression in the writings of Joseph *Mede. In Germany the millenarian view gained its widest currency in the *Pietist Movement of the 17th and 18th cents. In 18th-cent. England also there were millenarian groups, some inspired by *Huguenot piety, but also later in reaction to the upheavals of the French Revolution. In the 19th cent. new advocates of apocalyptic and millenarian ideas arose in the USA and in Britain, among them the *Irvingites, *Plymouth Brethren, and *Adventists, the last-named reviving the concept of a heavenly millennium after the Second Advent. In the 20th cent. the indigenous Churches of Asia, Africa, and South America have produced a rich variety of millenarian beliefs. In the RC Church the *Holy Office gave a ruling against post-millenarianism in 1944, and all the larger Christian bodies, have treated the subject with the greatest reserve.

L. Gry, Le Millénarisme dans ses origines et son développement [1904]; C. E. Hill, Regnum Caelorum: Patterns of Future Hope in Early Christianity (Oxford Early Christian Studies, 1992). M. Simonetti, 'Il millenarismo in Oriente da Origene a Metodio', in Corona Gratiarum: Miscellanea patristica, historica et liturgica Eligio Dekkers, O.S.B. . . . oblata, 1 (Instrumenta Patristica, 10; Brugge, 1975), pp. 37–58. N. Cohn, The Pursuit of the Millenium (1957; rev. edn., 1970). M. [E.] Reeves, Joachim of Fiore and the Prophetic Future (1976). R. B. Barnes, Prophecy and Gnosis: Apocalypticism in the Wake of the Lutheran Revolution (Stanford, Calif., 1988). B. S. Capp, The Fifth Monarchy Men: A Study in Seventeenth-century English Millenarianism (1972); K. R. Firth, The Apocalyptic Tradition in Reformation Britain 1530–1645 (Oxford, 1979), esp. pp. 204–54. J. S. Erwin, The Millennialism of Cotton Mather (Studies in American Religion, 45; Lewiston, NY [1990]). H. Schwartz, The French Prophets: The History of a Millenarian Group in Eighteenth-Century England (Berkeley, Calif., and London [1980]). C. Garrett, Respectable Folly: Millenarians and the French Revolution in France and England (Baltimore and London, 1975). E. R. Sandeen, The Roots of Fundamentalism: British and American Millenarianism 1880 1930 (Chicago and London, 1970); J. F. C. Harrison, The Second Coming: Popular Millenarianism 1780–1850 (1979). W. H. Oliver, Prophets and Millennialists: The Uses of Biblical Prophecy in England from the 1790s to the 1840s (Auckland and Oxford, 1978). A. Taylor, Visions of Harmony: A Study in Nineteenth-Century Millenarianism (Oxford, 1987). T. P. Weber, Living in the Shadow of the Second Coming: American Premillennialism 1875 1925 (New York and Oxford, 1979; enlarged edn., covering 1875–1982, Grand Rapids, Mich., 1983; Chicago and London, 1987). M. [E.] Reeves and W. Gould, Joachim of Fiore and the Myth of the Eternal Evangel in the Nineteenth Century (Oxford, 1987). M. Adas, Prophets of Rebellion: Millenarian Protest Movements against the European Colonial Order (Chapel Hill, NC [1979]; Cambridge, 1987); K. E. Fields, Revival and Rebellion in Colonial Central Africa (Princeton, NJ [1985]). The 1994 ruling of the Holy Office is conveniently pr. in Denzinger and Hünermann (37th edn., 1991), pp. 1066 f. (no. 3839). W. Bauer in RAC 2 (1954), cols. 1073–8, s.v. 'Chiliasmus'; B. E. Daley [SJ] in E. Ferguson (ed.), Encyclopedia of Early Christianity (New York and London, 1990), pp. 193–7, s.v. 'Chiliasm'. See also bibl. to ESCHATOLOGY, ADVENTISTS, JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES, JOACHIM OF FIORE, PLYMOUTH BRETHREN, SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTISTS, etc.

Millenary Petition. The petition presented in Apr. 1603 by the Puritans to *James I on his way from Scotland to London, in which they prayed to be relieved from their 'common burden of human rites and ceremonies'. It was so called from the thousand ministers whose wishes it professed to embody. The practices objected to included the cross in Baptism, *Confirmation, the surplice, the ring in marriage, the length of the service, the profanation of the Lord's Day, bowing at the name of Jesus, and the reading of the *Apocrypha in the lessons; but to avoid giving offence nothing was said against episcopacy as such. It was the immediate occasion of the *Hampton Court Conference (q.v.).

Text in T. *Fuller, The Church History of Britain from the Birth of Jesus Christ to the Year M.DC.XLVIII (1655), bk. 10, pp. 21–3 [Fuller's comments (p. 7; cf. also pp. 23 f.) have very frequently been repeated]. Text repr. in Bettenson (2nd edn., 1963), pp. 397–400, and J. P. Kenyon, The Stuart Constitution 1603–1688 (Cambridge, 1966), pp. 132–4 (no. 37). Useful note in S. R. Gardiner, History of England from the Accession of James I to the Disgrace of Chief Justice Coke, 1 (1863), p. 163, n. 1. See also bibl. to HAMPTON COURT CONFERENCE, JAMES I, and PURITANS.

Mill Hill Missionaries, officially 'St Joseph's Society for Foreign Missions', a RC missionary society of secular priests and lay brothers, devoted to the propagation of the Gospel among unevangelized peoples. It was founded in 1866 at Mill Hill, in NW London, by H. *Vaughan (q.v.). The foundation was one of the first foreign missionary initiatives by English RCs after emancipation; it was given final approval by the Holy See in 1908. Although an English society, using English as its common language, it recruited members from many different countries, esp. the *Netherlands and the Tyrol. In the *United States of America, it developed an independent community, the Josephite Fathers, but since 1951 members have again been recruited there. More recently non-western students are being enrolled. As a society of English origin, the Mill Hill Missionaries played an important role in *Uganda when a British Protectorate was established in 1894, after bitter conflict between RC and Anglican factions. In Africa they also work in *Kenya, *Sudan, *Zaire, and Cameroon; elsewhere in *India, Pakistan, Malaysia, the *Philippines, *New Zealand, *Chile, *Brazil, and the Falklands.

Accounts of their work in different parts of the world by J. Dempsey, Mission on the Nile (1955); H. P. Gale, Uganda and the Mill Hill Fathers (1959), pp. 88–318; H. Burgman, The Way the Catholic Church Started in Western Kenya (1990). See also works cited under VAUGHAN, H.

Mills, John (1645–1707), NT textual critic. From 1670 to 1682 he was a fellow of Queen's College, Oxford, and from 1685 till his death principal of St Edmund Hall. His edition of the Greek text of the NT, published in 1707, was a great advance on any of its predecessors, as Mills added to it a critical apparatus containing the readings of nearly 100 MSS. His correct name appears to have been 'Mills', not (as commonly given) 'Mill'.

D. *Whitby, Examen Variantium Lectionum J. Millii . . . in Novum Testamentum (Leiden, 1724; hostile). A. Fox, John Mill and Richard Bentley: A Study of the Textual Criticism of the New Testament 1675–1729 (1954), pp. 3–102. B. Porter in DNB 37 (1894), pp. 388–90.

Milman, Henry Hart (1791–1868), Dean of *St Paul's. After a brilliant career at Oxford, Milman was ordained in 1816 and in 1818 appointed rector of St Mary's, Reading. In early life he was known esp. as a poet and writer of plays, and held from 1821 to 1831 the professorship of poetry at Oxford, where he was the immediate predecessor of J. *Keble. His History of the Jews (1829; anon.) first brought his name prominently before the theological world. The way in which it handled the OT narratives, treating the Jews as an oriental tribe and attaching relatively little weight to the influence of the miraculous, met with much criticism. In 1835 Peel made him rector of St Margaret's, Westminster, and in 1849 he became Dean of St Paul's. While in the latter office he published his well-known treatise on the History of Latin Christianity (1855), a work which, despite many blemishes in matters of detail, treated a vast subject with balance, candour, and sympathy, and did much to foster the study of medieval life and institutions. Among his other writings were editions of E. *Gibbon's Decline and Fall (1838) and of his Life and Correspondence (1839), a History of Christianity to the Abolition of Paganism in the Roman Empire (1840) and Annals of St Paul's Cathedral (1868; posthumous).

The standard Life is by his son, A. Milman (London, 1900; not entirely satisfactory). C. [H. E.] Smyth, Dean Milman (1949). R. Garnett in DNB 38 (1894), pp. 1–4.

Milner, Isaac. See MILNER, JOSEPH.

Milner, John (1752–1826), RC apologist. Educated at the English College at *Douai, he was ordained priest in 1777. He soon returned to England as a zealous propagandist for his creed, where, however, his extreme claims in the matter of Catholic Emancipation alienated many of his co-religionists. In 1803 he was appointed titular Bp. of Castabala and *Vicar Apostolic of the Midland District. As an enthusiastic *Ultramontane, he eagerly pressed the case for Papal Infallibility. His chief work, The End of Religious Controversy (written 1801–2; published 1818; new edition by L. Rivington, 1896), forcefully presented the RC case in a series of letters, and has gone through many editions.

F. C. Husenbeth, Life of John Milner (1862). M. N. L. Couve de Murville, John Milner (Archdiocese of Birmingham Historical Commission, Publication 2; 1986). T. Cooper in DNB 38 (1894), pp. 14–16.

Milner, Joseph (1744–97), *Evangelical divine. He was educated at Leeds grammar school and Catharine Hall, Cambridge. After ordination he was curate at Thorp Arch, W. Yorks (near Tadcaster), until 1768, when he moved to Hull. In 1770 he became an ardent Evangelical, and for the rest of his life was successively curate and vicar of North Ferriby on the Humber. Shortly before his death he was presented to the living of Holy Trinity, Hull, mainly through the efforts of W. *Wilberforce. His History of the Church of Christ, largely put into shape and extended by his brother, Isaac Milner (1750–1820, from 1791 Dean of *Carlisle), was brought out in stages between 1794 and 1809. Though inaccurate and uncritical, it won great popularity. It was one of the few Evangelical works to quote extensively from the Fathers, and it had an influence on the young J. H. *Newman. Among Joseph Milner's other writings were Gibbon's Account of Christianity Considered (1781) and Essays on Several Religious Subjects (1789). After his death many of his sermons (Practical Sermons, 4 vols., 1800–30) were published.

Life by I. Milner, prefixed to Joseph Milner's Practical Sermons (London, 1800). J. D. Walsh, 'Joseph Milner's Evangelical Church History', JEH 9 (1959), pp. 174–87. J. H. Overton in DNB 38 (1894), pp. 17 f.

Miltiades (2nd cent.), early Christian *Apologist. *Tertullian (Adv. Valent. 5) and *Eusebius (HE 5. 17. 1 and 5) mention him as having written against the pagans and the Jews, as well as against the *Montanists and *Valentinians; but all his works are lost. He wrote in Asia Minor.

Testimonia on Miltiades assembled in J. C. T. Otto (ed.), Corpus Apologetarum Christianorum Saeculi Secundi, 9 (Jena, 1872), pp. 364–73. Bardenhewer, 1 (1913), pp. 284–6. G. *Salmon in DCB 3 (1882), pp. 916 f., s.v.; É. Amann in DTC 10 (pt. 2; 1929), col. 1765, s.v.

Miltiades, St (d. 314), less correctly, Melchiades, Pope from 310 (or perhaps 311). Acc. to the Liber Pontificalis*, he was an African by birth. His pontificate was remarkable for *Constantine's victory over Maxentius and the issue of the so-called 'Edict of *Milan'. In Oct. 313 he held a Council at the *Lateran at which *Donatism was condemned. G. B. *de Rossi believed, but on evidence now generally thought insufficient, that he had discovered his tomb in the Catacomb of St Callistus. Feast day, 10 Dec.

LP (Duchesne), 1, pp. 8 f., 74 f., 168 f. C. Pietri, Roma Christiana: Recherches sur l'Église de Rome . . . (311–440) (Bibliothèque des Écoles Françaises d'Athènes et de Rome, 224; 2 vols., 1976), esp. 1, pp. 154 f., 159–67; see index in vol. 2. G. B. de Rossi, Roma sotterranea cristiana, 2 (1867), pp. 188–90 and pl. xxiii. H. U. Instinsky, 'Zwei Bischofsnamen konstantinischer Zeit. I. Miltiades von Rom', RQ 55 (1960), pp. 203–6, with refs. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 11 (pt. 1; 1933), cols. 1199–203, s.v., and 13 (pt. 1; 1937), cols. 1194–6, s.v. 'Pape'; J. N. D. Kelly, Oxford Dictionary of Popes (1986), pp. 26 f., s.v.

Miltitz, Carl von (*c.*1480–1529), Papal nuncio. Born near Meissen of a noble Saxon family, after studying at Mainz, Trier, and *Cologne, he made his way to Rome, where he was appointed Papal chamberlain (*c.*1514) and acted as agent of *Frederick III ('the Wise'), Elector of Saxony. After Card. T. de V. *Cajetan's attempts to silence M. *Luther had failed, Miltitz, by now a respected German curialist, was chosen late in 1518 to take the *Golden Rose to Frederick and to try to win his support against Luther. He took it upon himself to negotiate a compromise, and at a meeting in Altenburg (4–6 Jan. 1519), Luther agreed to cease from further action pending reference of the matter to a German bishop, but made no offer of recantation. Miltitz then proceeded to Leipzig, where, in the hope of restraining the movement, he disavowed J. *Tetzel. He soon discovered that nothing could be achieved by conciliation and two further meetings with Luther, at Liebenwerda (5 Oct. 1519) and Lichtenberg, near *Wittenberg (12 Oct. 1520), were fruitless. After a further visit to Rome, he returned to Germany, where he spent his last years at Mainz and Meissen. He was accidentally drowned in the Main on 20 Nov. 1529 and was buried in Mainz Cathedral.

H. A. Creutzberg, Karl von Miltitz, 1490–1529: Sein Leben und seine geschichtliche Bedeutung (Studien und Darstellungen aus dem Gebiete der Geschichte, 6, Heft 1; 1907). P. Kalkoff, Die Miltitziade: Eine kritische Nachlese zur Geschichte des Ablassstreites (1911).

Milton, John (1608–74), poet and controversialist. The son of a scrivener, he was educated at St Paul's School, London, and at Christ's College, Cambridge (1625–32), where he won a high reputation for his scholarship and literary gifts; his famous Ode on the Morning of Christ's Nativity (1629) belongs to this period. From 1632 to 1638 he lived on his father's estate at Horton in Buckinghamshire. Having abandoned his original intention of taking orders because of the 'tyranny' that had invaded the Church under Abp. W. *Laud, he devoted himself entirely to scholarship and literature. Among his finest poems of this period are L'Allegro and Il Penseroso, which are sometimes taken as expressing the two sides of his nature, torn between the desire for pleasure and the love of meditation and silence. In 'A Maske Presented at Ludlow Castle, 1634' [Comus] (pr. 1637), he sings the praises of chastity in a dramatic poem. In 1637 he wrote the monody Lycidas on the death of a friend, containing a sharp satiric allusion to the clergy, one of his main themes in later years. Next year he travelled in Italy, and after his return moved to London, where he spent many years in political and religious controversy. In 1641 he joined the *Presbyterians and took part in the famous '*Smectymnuus' affair, and about the same time wrote The Reason of Church Government Urged against Prelacy, a fierce attack on episcopacy in which he saw only an instrument of tyranny. In 1643 he married Mary Powell, a member of a strongly royalist family. She left him shortly afterwards, and he returned once more to the question of the reform of the divorce laws, writing The Doctrine and Discipline of Divorce (1643), in which he made a passionate appeal for the solubility of marriage on the grounds of incompatibility of character and declared the sanctity and sacramental character of marriage to be a clerical invention. The treatise, which roused a heated discussion, caused his break with the Presbyterians. Its publication without a licence from the censor led the case to be submitted to Parliament and drew from Milton his celebrated Areopagitica (1644) in defence of the freedom of the press. Parliament dropped the case, but the real success of Milton's pleading came only many years later. From this time his religious views tended more and more towards the *Independents, and he came to regard sects and schisms as a sign of health in the body politic. In 1645 he was reconciled to his wife, and in the same year published the first collection of his Poems. From 1649 Milton supported the new government. He defended the execution of the King in his Tenure of Kings and Magistrates (1649) and accepted a government post as secretary for foreign tongues, which involved chiefly the drafting of letters in Latin to foreign governments. In the same year he published Eikonoklastes, his reply to the royalist pamphlet Eikon Basilike*. In 1651 he wrote his Pro Populo Anglicano Defensio, an answer to the accusations of regicide levelled (esp. by *Salmasius) against the English people. It was followed by the Defensio Secunda (1654). In 1651 he became totally blind, and in 1652 he lost his wife. Despite his admiration for O. *Cromwell he disagreed with the ecclesiastical policy of his later years, which ran counter to Milton's main idea of a complete disestablishment of Churches everywhere. After Cromwell's death his chief preoccupation was to prevent the re-establishment of the monarchy, and after the Restoration he was for a short time imprisoned. With the fall of his religious and political hopes he turned once more to poetry, and from 1658 to 1665 wrote his greatest work, Paradise Lost (q.v., pub. 1667), in which he undertook to 'justify the ways of God to men' and to show the cause of evil and injustice in the world. In 1671 appeared its sequel, Paradise Regained, which dealt with the temptation of Christ in the wilderness, and Samson Agonistes (which is now thought to have been written before Paradise Lost). In the latter, which described in dramatic form the last hours of Samson 'before the prison in Gaza', the blind hero partly represented Milton himself, a trait that added poignancy to the masterly representation of the tragic death of the OT hero. Milton's theological testament is contained in the treatise De Doctrina Christiana, which was published posthumously. It contains much unorthodox doctrine, denying the coeternity and coequality of the Divine Persons as well as the dogma of creation ex nihilo, and asserting that matter is inherent in God. Despite his attachment to the Puritan party, his independent outlook can hardly be forced under a party label. His theological as well as his political opinions were highly individualistic and a strange blend of love of order and hierarchical values with the revolutionary ideas of a mind wishing to be a law to itself.

Collected edn. of his works in prose and verse by F. A. Patterson and others (18 vols. in 21 parts, New York, 1931–8, with index, 2 vols., ibid., 1940). First edn. of his collected verse, 5 parts, fol., London, 1695; modern edns. incl. those by H. Darbishire (2 vols., Oxford, 1952–5; London, 1958 and 1961) and J. Carey and A. Fowler (London, 1968); prose writings ed. J. *Toland (3 vols., fol., 'Amsterdam' [London], 1698); also ed. J. A. St John (5 vols., London, 1848–53) and D. M. Wolfe and others (8 vols., New Haven, Conn., and London, 1953–82). Private Correspondence and Academic Exercises tr. into Eng. by P. B. Tillyard, ed., with introd., by E. M. W. Tillyard (Cambridge, 1932). S. *Johnson, The Lives of the English Poets, 1 (Dublin, 1779), pp. 137–230 (often repr.). H. Darbishire (ed.), The Early Lives of Milton (1932) with useful introd. J. M. French (ed.), The Life Records of John Milton (5 vols., New Brunswick, NJ, 1949–58). Standard Life by D. Masson (6 vols., London, 1859–80; index, 1894); modern biog. by W. R. Parker (2 vols., Oxford, 1968; rev. ed. by G. Campbell, 2 vols., 1996). D. Saurat, La Pensée de Milton (Paris thesis, 1920), expanded and tr. as Milton, Man and Thinker (1925). R. D. Havens, The Influence of Milton on English Poetry (Cambridge, Mass., 1922). H. F. Fletcher, The Use of the Bible in Milton's Prose (University of Illinois Studies in Language and Literature, 14, no. 3; 1929); id., The Intellectual Development of John Milton (2 vols., Urbana, Ill., 1956–61). E. M. W. Tillyard, The Miltonic Setting, Past and Present (1938); id., Studies in Milton (1951). A. Sewell, A Study in Milton's Christian Doctrine (1939). D. M. Wolfe, Milton in the Puritan Revolution (1941). A. Barker, Milton and the Puritan Dilemma, 1641–1660 (University of Toronto, Department of English, Studies and Texts, 1; 1942). J. H. Sims, The Bible in Milton's Epics (Gainesville, Fla., 1962). F. M. Krouse, Milton's Samson and the Christian Tradition (Princeton, NJ, 1963). C. A. Patrides, Milton and the Christian Tradition (Oxford, 1966). B. K. Lewalski, Milton's Brief Epic: The Genre, Meaning, and Art of Paradise Regained (Providence, RI, and London, 1966). [J. E.] C. Hill, Milton and the English Revolution (1977). G. Grose, Milton and the Sense of Tradition (New Haven, Conn., and London [1988]). J. Bradshaw, A Concordance to the Poetical Works of John Milton (1894); I. Sterne and H. H. Kollmeier, A Concordance to the English Prose of John Milton (Medieval and Renaissance Texts and Studies, 35; Binghamton, NY, 1985). D. H. Stevens, Reference Guide to Milton from 1800 to the Present Day (Chicago, 1930); addenda by H. F. Fletcher (University of Illinois Studies in Language and Literature, 16, no. 1; 1931); C. Huckaby, John Milton: A Bibliographical Supplement 1929–1957 (Duquesne Studies. Philological Series, 1; Pittsburgh and Louvain, 1960; rev. to cover period 1929–1968; 1969); P. J. Klemp, The Essential Milton: An Annotated Bibliography of Major Modern Studies (Boston [1989]). L. Stephen in DNB 38 (1894), pp. 24–41.

Milvian Bridge, Battle of the. The battle on 28 Oct. 312 between the Emps. *Constantine and Maxentius (Emperor in Italy and Africa). Maxentius, who had made a sortie from Rome, met his rival advancing from the north, and after being outmanœuvred was defeated at the 'Saxa Rubra' on the Flaminian Way. On taking flight he was drowned in the Tiber some five miles nearer Rome at the Ponte Milvio (whence the battle is named, somewhat inaccurately). The battle was decisive for the history of Christianity, for it enabled Constantine to establish himself with Licinius as joint Emperor and thus prepared the way for the 'Edict of *Milan'.

N. H. Baynes, Constantine the Great and the Christian Church (Raleigh Lecture for 1929; 1930), pp. 65 f. (full and valuable bibl.).

Minims (Ordo Fratrum Minimorum). The order of friars founded by St *Francis of Paola; the traditional date of the foundation is 1435. As their name indicates, they meant to practise humility as their chief virtue, regarding themselves as the least (minimi) of all religious. Their first rule, confirmed by *Alexander VI in 1493, was based on that of St *Francis of Assisi, whereas the second one, sanctioned by the same Pope in 1501, was more or less independent. Its chief characteristic was the fourth vow of perpetual abstinence not only from fresh meat and fish, but also from eggs, cheese, butter, and milk. The penitential aspects of the rule were, however, somewhat mitigated in 1973. Members of the order wear a black habit, and the superiors have traditionally been called 'correctors'. The order spread quickly, and by the time of the death of the founder (1507) had over 30 houses in Italy, France, Spain, Germany, and Bohemia. It reached its zenith in the 16th–17th cents., suffered severely in the secularization of the late 18th and 19th cents., but has experienced some revival in the 20th cent., expanding into the United States of America and Brazil. There is also a Second Order of enclosed nuns (of which the community at Andujar in Spain was addressed in a letter of 1489, though the date of the foundation is commonly given as 1495) and a Third Order for people living in world; its rule was approved in 1501 and confirmed in 1506.

G. Moretti, Acta Capitulorum Generalium Ordinis Minimorum (2 vols., Rome, 1916). G. M. Roberti, Disegno storico dell'ordine dei Minimi (3 vols., 1902–22). A. [M.] Galuzzi, OM, Origini dell'Ordine dei Minimi (Corona Lateranesis, 11; 1967). P. J. S. Whitmore, The Order of Minims in Seventeenth-Century France (Archives Internationales d'Histoire des Idées, 20; 1967). A. Bellantonio, OM, in NCE 9 (1967), pp. 869 f., s.v.; A. M. Galuzzi, OM, in DIP 5 (1978), cols. 1356–61, s.v. 'Minimi'; id., ibid., cols. 1346–8, s.v. 'Minime'; id. and R. Darricau in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 1239–55, s.v. 'Minimes'.

minister (Lat., 'servant'). A person officially charged to perform spiritual functions in the Christian Church. As a general designation for any clergyman, it is used esp. in non-episcopal bodies. In the BCP it usually means the conductor of a service who may or may not be a priest. A minister is also one who assists the higher orders in discharging their functions, and in this sense the *deacon and *subdeacon at *High Mass were known as the 'Sacred Ministers'. In yet another sense, the word is used semi-technically of one who 'administers' the outward and visible signs of a Sacrament. Thus, should a layman baptize in a case of necessity, he would in that case be the 'minister' of the Sacrament.

minor canon. A cleric attached to a cathedral or collegiate church to assist in the rendering of the daily service. He holds a position analogous to that of a *canon, but is not a member of the *chapter. In cathedrals of the Old Foundation the Minor Canons are often known as Vicars Choral.

Minor Orders. The inferior degrees of the ministry, below the three *Major Orders of *bishops, *priests, and *deacons, to which, in the past, the W. Church added *subdeacons. These last were formally placed among the major orders by Pope *Innocent III in 1207; until then they were commonly reckoned as minor orders, as they still are in the E. Church. In the W. until 1972 there were four minor orders, namely *doorkeepers, *lectors, *exorcists, and *acolytes. They are first mentioned in a letter of Pope *Cornelius to Fabian of Antioch in 251. By the motu proprio 'Ministeria quaedam' of 1972 the minor orders, henceforth to be called 'ministeria', were reduced to two, lectors and acolytes alone surviving. In the E., since the *Trullan Council of 692, lectors and cantors have survived, whereas the other three—doorkeepers, exorcists, and acolytes—have been merged in the subdiaconate.

The rite by which minor orders are conferred differs essentially from ordination to major orders. In the W. it has remained in essentials as laid down in the '*Statuta Ecclesiae Antiqua' (*c.*450–500). It consists chiefly of a commission to exercise their office and the handing over of the *Instruments. According to present RC usage they are conferred by a bishop (or his delegate), but an abbot who has received episcopal benediction or a major religious superior may confer them on his own subjects. Before 1972 the minor orders had become no more than transitory stages to the priesthood, but the ministry of acolyte and lector may now be conferred on laymen. To these offices have been assigned the former duties of the subdeacon (suppressed in 1972).

F. Wieland, Die genetische Entwicklung der sog. Ordines Minores in den drei ersten Jahhunderten (RQ Suppl. 7; 1897). M. Andrieu, 'Les Ordres mineurs dans l'ancien rite romain', Rev. S.R. 5 (1925), pp. 232–74. For post-1972 practice in the RC Church, see P. Jounel in G. A. Martimort (ed.), L'Église en Prière (new edn.), 3 (1984), pp. 197–200; Eng. tr. (1988), pp. 181–184.

Minor Prophets, the. In the OT the authors of the 12 shorter Prophetic Books, as contrasted with the three Major Prophets—*Isaiah, *Jeremiah, and *Ezekiel. They are *Hosea, *Joel, *Amos, *Obadiah, *Jonah, *Micah, *Nahum, *Habakkuk, *Zephaniah, *Haggai, *Zechariah, and *Malachi. This, the usual order, is apparently based on chronological considerations. In the Greek Bible they were termed collectively the 'Twelve' (δωδεκαπρόφητον). (*Daniel, although placed in English Bibles between Ezekiel and Hosea, is assigned in the Hebrew Bible to the *Hagiographa and thus not included among the Prophetic Books at all.)

See bibl. to individual Books.

Minorites. An older name for the *Franciscan 'Friars Minor'. The street in the city of London called the 'Minories' takes its name from a convent of the 'Minoresses' (Minorite nuns).

minster (Lat. monasterium, 'monastery'; cf. Ger. Münster). A name applied to certain cathedrals and other large churches in England, esp. the cathedrals of *York, *Lincoln, *Ripon, *Southwell, and *Lichfield, and the churches at *Beverley, Wimborne, etc. As a common noun it originally meant any monastic establishment or its church, whether strictly a monastery (e.g. the abbey at *Westminster) or a house or college of secular canons (which was also often called 'monasterium' in the Middle Ages), such as were all those mentioned above. In Anglo-Saxon England 'old minsters' founded by kings and bishops on their estates and staffed by groups of clergy living in community, were the centres of vast parishes, within which new churches, each served by a single priest, were created to serve smaller areas. One such minster is still recalled by Minster Street in Reading; Lambourn, Aylesbury, Bampton, and Sonning were others in the same region.

Minucius Felix (2nd or 3rd cent.), author of the 'Octavius'. Apparently an African, he wrote in Latin an elegant defence of Christianity in the form of a conversation between Octavius, a Christian, and Caecilius, a pagan, who was converted by the argument. The book refutes the common charges against Christians (see PERSECUTIONS, EARLY CHRISTIAN), argues the case for monotheism and providence, and attacks pagan mythology, but says little of specifically Christian doctrines. It is probably a 3rd-cent. work, dependent on *Tertullian's 'Apology' (*c.*197), though some scholars believe it to be Tertullian's source.

The 'Octavius' survives in a poor text in Cod. Par. 1661 (9th cent.), where it appears as Bk. 8 of *Arnobius, Adversus Nationes. Editio princeps in Works of Arnobius, ed. Rome, 1543. Crit. edns. by M. Pellegrino (Turin, 1950; with introd. and comm.), J. Beaujeu (Collection des Universités de France, 1964), and B. Kytzler (Teub., Leipzig, 1982). J. P. Migne, PL 3. 193–652. Eng. trs. by G. H. Rendall (Loeb edn., 1931, with Tertullian, Apology and De Spectaculis, pp. 303–437) and by G. W. Clarke (ACW 39; New York [1974]). J. P. Waltzing, Lexicon Minucianum, with edn. of text (Bibliothèque de la Faculté de Philosophie et Lettres de l'Université de Liège, 3; 1909). P. Monceaux, Histoire littéraire de l'Afrique chrétienne, 1 (1901), pp. 463–508. H. J. Baylis, Minucius Felix and his Place among the Early Fathers of the Latin Church (1928). C. Becker, Der 'Octavius' des Minucius Felix: Heidnische Philosophie und frühchristliche Apologetik (Sb. (Bayr.), Jahrgang 1967, Heft 2). Altaner and Stuiber (1978), pp. 146–8 and 577, with bibl. H. von Geisau in PW, Suppl. 11 (1968), cols. 952–1002 and 1365–78, s.v. with bibl.

minuscule script. See CURSIVE SCRIPT.

miracle. Acc. to the traditional view, a miracle is a sensible fact (opus sensibile) produced by the special intervention of God for a religious end, transcending the normal order of things usually termed the Law of Nature. The possibility of miracles began to be questioned with the rise of modern science in the 17th and 18th cents., with its ever-growing tendency to regard the world in which we live as a closed system, subject to the laws of nature, and to exclude all interference from a higher power. Neither *pantheism (B. *Spinoza, G. W. F. *Hegel), which identifies God with the Law of Nature, nor *Deism (J. *Toland, M. *Tindal), which separates God from the world, nor 18th-cent. thought as represented by the scepticism of D. *Hume, accorded a place to supernatural intervention. Thus the miracles of Scripture and Church history were normally regarded as facts within the sphere of natural explanation, misrepresented by credulous contemporaries, and the term 'miracle' came to be treated as a cover for human ignorance. Such views were widely held by rationalistic exponents of Christianity in the 19th cent., e.g. E. *Renan, D. F. *Strauss, T. H. *Huxley, and M. *Arnold.

In support of the traditional belief it has been argued that on a genuinely theistic view miracles are not only possible but even probable, for if God is held to be the supreme First Cause responsible for, but not subject to, the Laws of Nature, it would be likely that He should, from time to time, act directly without the intervention of secondary causes. The latest developments in the field of science, which move further and further away from a hard-and-fast determinism, may indicate an approaching reconciliation between the Christian tradition and modern scientific research.

Whereas Protestant orthodoxy normally confines itself to belief in the miracles recorded in Scripture, Catholic orthodoxy claims that miracles have at all times occurred within the pale of the Church. The reputed cures at *Lourdes are among the best known, and acc. to current RC practice a reputation for successfully interceding in requests for graces and favours (fama signorum) and proof of one miracle are required for *beatification, and proof of another miracle since beatification is needed for *canonization; the procedure is, however, under review.

F. R. Tennant, Miracle and its Philosophical Presuppositions: Three Lectures (1925); I. T. Ramsey, Miracles: An Exercise in Logical Mapwork (Inaugural Lecture, Oxford, 1952); J. S. Lawton, Miracles and Revelation (1959); C. F. D. Moule (ed.), Miracles: Cambridge Studies in their Philosophy and History (1965). E. and M.-L. Keller, Der Streit um die Wunder (Gütersloh, 1968; enlarged Eng. tr., Miracles in Dispute, 1969); G. Theissen, Urchristliche Wundergeschichten: Ein Beitrag zur formgeschichtlichen Erforschung der synoptischen Evangelien (Studien zum Neuen Testament, 8; Gütersloh, 1974; Eng. tr., The Miracle Stories of the Early Christian Tradition, Edinburgh, 1983); H. C. Kee, Miracle in the Early Christian World: A Study in Sociohistorical Method (New Haven, Conn., and London [1983]); H. Hendrickx, The Miracle Stories of the Synoptic Gospels (1987); R. A. Greer, The Fear of Freedom: A Study of Miracles in the Roman Imperial Church (University Park, Pa., and London [1989]).

Miracle Plays. See MYSTERY PLAYS.

Mirari Vos. *Gregory XVI's encyclical (15 Aug. 1832) condemning the social and political doctrines of F. R. de *Lamennais and his circle. Without naming Lamennais it censured his writings in defence of social liberty as inciting to sedition and as contrary to the spirit of obedience inculcated by the Gospel, as well as his teaching on the liberty of worship and of the press as opposed to the maxims of the Church. Its reactionary standpoint foreshadowed the Syllabus Errorum of 1864. After Lamennais's reply in Paroles d'un croyant the Pope reiterated the condemnations in the encyclical 'Singulari Nos' of 25 June 1834.

Text of 'Mirari Vos' is pr. among the Acta Gregorii Papae XVI, ed. A. M. Bernasconius, 1 (Rome, 1901), pp. 169–74; text of 'Singulari Nos', ibid. 3 (Rome, 1902), pp. 356–8; the principal clauses are repr. in Denz.-Bann. (1952 edn.), pp. 447 f. (nos. 1613–16) and pp. 448 f. (no. 1617) respectively, with refs. to other edns. of texts. See also bibl. to LAMENNAIS, F. R. DE.

Mirfield. See COMMUNITY OF THE RESURRECTION.

Mirk, John. See MYRC, JOHN.

Miserere. A common designation of Ps. 51 (Vulg. 50) derived from the initial word of the Latin version, 'Miserere mei, Deus'. The term is sometimes inaccurately applied to the '*misericord'.

misericord (Lat. misericordia, 'mercy'). The projection on the underside of a hinged seat of a choir-stall, designed to provide support to those incapable of standing for long periods during Divine worship. The term is also sometimes used of a room set apart in a monastery for the use of those monks whose health or age requires some relaxation of the observance of the rule.

F. Bond, Wood Carvings in English Churches, 1, 'Misericords' (1910), with bibl. M. D. Anderson, Misericords (King Penguin Books, 72; 1954). G. L. Remnant, A Catalogue of the Misericords in Great Britain, with an essay on their iconography by M. D. Anderson (Oxford, 1969). M. Laird, English Misericords (1986).

Mishnah (Heb., מִשְׁנָה, 'repetition', hence 'instruction'). One of the earliest and most authoritative documents of rabbinic Judaism, it is attributed to Rabbi Judah ha-Nasi (d. *c.*AD 229). In slightly different recensions, it forms the basis of both the Palestinian and the Babylonian *Talmuds. The Mishnah is a redaction and collection of earlier material; apart from *Pirqe Aboth, it consists almost entirely of *Halachic material; and it is written in the Hebrew characteristic of Jewish scholars of the time. Each of the six divisions—Seeds (laws on agriculture), Festivals, Women (marriage laws), Injuries (civil and criminal law), Holy Things (ritual law), Purifications—is divided into parts ('Tractates'), the parts further subdivided into chapters, and the chapters into paragraphs. Among the Tractates are the well-known 'Yoma' (on the Day of *Atonement) and the 'Pirqe Aboth' (q.v.).

The Mishnah and the Talmud have had an influence on the life of Judaism second only to that of the Scriptures. Its authority rests on the view that the Oral Law was given to Moses on *Sinai at the same time as the Written Law and so is of Divine origin. In a wider sense the word 'Mishnah' was used of the teaching and learning of the tradition and then of the tradition itself, the study of which goes back to at least the 2nd cent. BC. See also TOSEFTA.

Editio princeps of the entire Mishnah pub. at Naples, 1492. There is no crit. edn. of the Heb. text; the edn. with most comprehensive comm. is that pub. by Widow Romm and Brothers, Vilna, 50th edn., 6 vols., 1922. Mod. edn., with Eng. tr., by P. Blackman, 7 vols., London, 1951–6. There are many trs. of the Mishnah into W. languages; good Eng. version by H. Danby, Oxford, 1933, with introd. and notes; also by J. Neusner (New Haven, Conn., and London [1988]). Concordance to Heb. text by H. J. Kassowski (2 vols., Frankfurt a.M., 1927). C. Albeck, Untersuchungen über die Redaktion der Mischna (Veröffentlichungen der Akademie für die Wissenschaft des Judentums, Talmudische Sektion, 2; 1923). S. Rosenblatt, The Interpretation of the Bible in the Mishnah (Baltimore, 1935). H. Strack, Einleitung in Talmud und Midras (7th edn. by G. Stemberger, 1982), pp. 111–49; Eng. tr. (Edinburgh, 1991), pp. 119–66. The best general study is that by J. N. Epstein (Heb.; 2 vols., Jerusalem, 1948; rev. edn., 1964). J. [W.] Bowker, The Targums and Rabbinic Literature (Cambridge, 1969), pp. 40–61. A. Goldberg in S. Safrai (ed.), The Literature of the Sages, 1 (Compendia Rerum Iudaicarum ad Novum Testamentum, section 2, vol. 3, pt. 1; Assen and Philadelphia, 1987), pp. 211–62. E. E. Urbach in Encyclopaedia Judaica, 12 (Jerusalem, 1972), cols. 93–109, s.v.

Misrule, Lord of (also known as the Abbot or Master of Misrule). In medieval times, a person selected to preside over the Christmas revels and games. The custom was closely connected with the 'Feast of *Fools' kept at this season, it being the practice to nominate at the celebration a 'precentor of the fools' (praecentor stultorum). In a secularized form the institution survived till the 17th cent. See also BOY BISHOP; ASSES, FEAST OF.

E. K. Chambers, The Medieval Stage (1903), 1, pp. 390–419 ('Masks and Misrule').

Missa Cantata (Lat., 'Sung Mass'). In the W. Church the form of celebrating Mass in which the celebrant and congregation sang the liturgical parts of the rite set to music for *High Mass, but without *deacon and *subdeacon. It was in essence a simplification of High Mass, esp. used in places where there were insufficient ministers for the full ceremonial. Since the Second *Vatican Council the RC Church has encouraged singing at all Masses and the term has been rendered obsolete.

Jungmann (ed. 1958), 1, pp. 273–9; Eng. tr. (1951), 1, pp. 207–12.

Missa Catechumenorum. See CATECHUMENS, MASS OF THE.

Missa Fidelium. See FAITHFUL, MASS OF THE.

Missa Illyrica. A Mass ordo published by M. *Flacius 'Illyricus' at Strasbourg in 1557. Acc. to J. Braun, it was composed at Minden for the use of Bp. Sigebert (*c.*1030). (F. *Cabrol's contention that it came from the Court of *Charlemagne rests on a confusion between *Alcuin and the Ps.-Alcuin of the 10th cent.) It is characterized by the unusually large number of 'apologiae' (i.e. avowals of personal unworthiness interpolated into the Liturgy by the celebrant) at various points of the rite. Flacius, who argued that the rite was free from the corruptions of medieval Eucharistic doctrine, wrongly dated the Mass at *c.*700. The stir which its publication created among 16th-cent. theologians and liturgists was hardly justified by its contents.

The text is repr. in E. *Martène, De antiquis Ecclesiae Ritibus (Rouen, 1700), lib. 1, cap. 4, ordo 4 (vol. 1, pp. 481–513); also in J. P. Migne, PL 138. 1305–36. J. Braun, 'Alter und Herkunft der sog. Missa Illyrica', Stimmen aus Maria Laach, 69 (1905, 2), pp. 143–55. F. Cabrol, OSB, 'La Messe de Flacius Illyricus', R. Bén.

22 (1905), pp. 151–64. O. K. Olson, 'Flacius Illyricus als Liturgiker', Jahrbuch für Liturgie und Hymnologie, 12 (for 1967; 1968), pp. 45–69. F. Cabrol in DACL 5 (pt. 2; 1923), cols. 1625–35, s.v. 'Flacius Illyricus (La Messe latine de)'.

Missal (Lat. Liber missalis, also Missale), the book usually containing everything to be sung or said at, with ceremonial directions for, the celebration of the *Mass throughout the year. As a liturgical book, the Missal began to make its appearance in the 10th cent. as a combination of the *Antiphonal, the *Gradual, the *Epistolary and *Evangeliary, and the *Ordo with the *Sacramentary. Its development was fostered by the custom of saying private Masses. The 1970 Missale Romanum does not, however, contain the biblical readings; these were issued separately in an independent *lectionary in 1969.

A. Ebner, Quellen und Forschungen zur Geschichte und Kunstgeschichte des Missale Romanum im Mittelalter: Iter Italicum (1896). J. Baudot, OSB, Le Missel romain: Ses origines, son histoire (2 vols., 1912). A. *Baumstark, Missale Romanum (Eindhoven, 1930). H. Grisar, SJ, Das Missale im Lichte der römischen Stadtgeschichte (1925). J. B. Ferreres, Historia del misal romano (Barcelona, 1929). S. J. P. van Dijk, OFM, and J. Hazelden Walker, The Origin of the Modern Roman Liturgy: The Liturgy of the Papal Court and the Franciscan Order in the Thirteenth Century (1960), esp. pp. 57–66. O. Nussbaum, Kloster, Priestermönch und Privatmesse: Ihr Verhältnis im Westen, von Anfängen bis zum hohen Mittelalter (Theophaneia, 14; 1961). W. H. I. Weale, Bibliographia Liturgica: Catalogus Missalium Ritus Latini . . . Impressorum (London, 1886; ed. H. Bohatta, 1948). F. *Cabrol, OSB, in DACL 11 (pt. 2; 1934), cols. 1431–68 and 1468–94, s.v. 'Missel' and 'Missel romain'; A. P. Frutaz and G. Ronci in EC 8 (1952), cols. 831–41, s.v. 'Messale'.

Missale Francorum. An incomplete Sacramentary, formerly thought to be of Gallican provenance, but now generally recognized to be closely related to the (Roman) *Gelasian Sacramentary. It contains rites of Ordination, of the blessing of virgins and widows, and of the consecration of altars, and 11 Masses, concluding with the Canon of the Roman Mass as far as Nobis quoque peccatoribus. The MS, which is in *uncials, was written in France *c.*700. In the 13th cent. it was in the possession of the abbey of *St-Denis and is now in the *Vatican Library (Reg. lat. 257).

Text ed. by G. M. *Tommasi (Rome, 1680), J. *Mabillon (Paris, 1685; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 72. 317–40), and L. A. *Muratori (Venice, 1748). Crit. edn. by L. C. Mohlberg, OSB (Rerum Ecclesiasticarum Documenta, Series Maior, Fontes, 2; Rome, 1957).

Missale Gallicanum Vetus. This is the name given to a MS now in the *Vatican Library (Pal. lat. 493). It consists of fragments of two *Gallican *Sacramentaries written in the 8th cent. The first contains a Mass for the feast of St *Germanus, formularies for the consecration of virgins and widows, together with a Mass and homily for use 'in symboli *traditione'. The second contains Masses for Advent, Lent, Easter, and the Rogation days. The parts were bound with other material which came to be preserved at *Lorsch.

The text has been pr. by G. M. *Tommasi (Rome, 1680), J. *Mabillon (Paris, 1685; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 72. 339–82), L. A. *Muratori (Venice, 1748), and J. M. *Neale and G. H. *Forbes (Burntisland, 1855). Crit. edn. by L. C. Mohlberg, OSB (Rerum Ecclesiasticarum Documenta, Series Maior, Fontes, 3; Rome, 1958).

Missale Gothicum. A *Gallican *Sacramentary, now in the *Vatican (Reg. lat. 317). It contains Masses of the season from Christmas Eve to Whitsunday interspersed with some for saints' days, and followed by Masses for the *Common of Saints, six Sunday Masses, and a fragment of a Mass for use on ferias described as 'romensis'. Some of its formularies are Roman, but the arrangement throughout is acc. to the order of the Gallican Mass. It was written in the scriptorium of *Luxeuil *c.*700. The misleading title, 'Missale Gothicum', which was added to the MS in the 15th cent., wrongly suggested to G. M. *Tommasi, its first editor, that it was from the province of Narbonne when under Visigothic rule. It was prob. drawn up for the Church of Autun.

Earlier edns. by G. M. Tommasi (Rome, 1680), J. *Mabillon (Paris, 1685; repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 72. 225–318), L. A. *Muratori (Venice, 1748), A. F. Vezzozi (Rome, 1747), and J. M. *Neale and G. H. *Forbes (Burntisland, 1855). Modern edns., with introd. and notes, by H. M. Bannister, HBS 52 (1917 for 1916) and 54 (1919 for 1917), and L. C. Mohlberg, OSB (Rerum Ecclesiasticarum Documenta, Series Maior, Fontes, 5; Rome, 1961). Facsimile ed. L. C. Mohlberg, OSB, 2 vols. (Tafelband and Textband), Augsburg, 1929.

Missale speciale. A smaller version, containing selections from the complete *missal, drawn up for special needs. The best known is that which came to be called the Missale Speciale Constantiense (of Constance), though liturgical evidence now indicates only a general affinity with Upper Rhineland uses. This edition is unsigned and undated, but printed with an imperfect state of the smaller of the two types cast for the 1457 Mainz Psalter, the first printed book with a date. Hence the discoverer of the first known copy of the Missale speciale, Otto Hupp, claimed the missal as the earliest book ever printed. But in 1967 Allan Stevenson showed from watermark evidence that batches of the same Basle-made papers used for the Missale speciale were being used for other books dating from 1472–4. Stevenson's work demonstrates that the missal was printed during 1473 and suggests Johannes Meister (Hans Koch; d. 1487), a little-known journeyman at Basle, as the actual printer. Only four copies are known, plus some fragments, and a single copy of a shortened version, the Missale abbreviatum, which was completed first.

O. Hupp, Ein Missale Speciale, Vorläufer des Psalteriums von 1457 (1898); id., Zum Streit um das Missale Speciale Constantiense (1917). A. [H.] Stevenson, The Problem of the Missale Speciale (1967). S. Corsten, 'Das Missale speciale', in H. Widmann (ed.), Der gegenwärtige Stand der Gutenberg-Forschung (Bibliothek des Buchwesens, 1; 1972), pp. 185–99.

Missionary Sisters of Our Lady of Africa. See WHITE SISTERS.

missions. Missionary enterprise, i.e. the propagation of the Christian faith, was one of the main tasks of the Christian Church from its beginning. To the Risen Christ Himself was attributed the command to 'make πάντα τὰ ἔθνη (all nations, or all the Gentiles) my disciples' (Mt. 28: 19) and the prediction 'ye shall be witnesses unto me, both in Jerusalem, and in all Judaea, and in Samaria, and unto the ends of the earth' (Acts 1: 8). Apart from the labours of St *Paul and the missionary journeys attributed rightly or wrongly to the Apostles (notably St *Thomas), unknown Christians soon carried the Gospel to the far corners of the Roman world (including Britain) and beyond it. In the early period *Pantaenus (d. *c.*190) is said to have preached in 'India'; St *Gregory the Illuminator (*c.*240–332) took Christianity to *Armenia; the (*Arian) *Ulphilas (*c.*311–83) converted Goths; St *Frumentius (*c.*300–*c.*380) preached in *Ethiopia, and missionaries of the *Church of the East went to *Sri Lanka, *Malabar, *Indonesia, and *China (where the Church was esp. active in the 7th and 8th cents.). In the W., St *Patrick's work in *Ireland (5th cent.) was followed by intensive *Celtic missionary enterprise embracing *Scotland (where St *Columba established the monastery of *Iona and further advance was made during the 5th to 7th cent. by St *Ninian, St *Kentigern, and St Maol Rubh), Gaul (where St *Columbanus worked), and England, where St *Aidan's work in the North was supplemented in the South by the Roman mission of St *Augustine. Pope *Gregory I's instruction to him (601) not to destroy pagan shrines but to convert them into Christian churches was important in the development of missionary thought. The evangelization of Britain was so successful that in the 8th cent. British missionaries took a prominent part in the conversion of northern and central Europe. Most notable was the work of St *Willibrord (in Frisia) and St *Boniface (in Thuringia and Hesse). The conversion of Scandinavia (where the task was long and difficult) also owed much to English missionary enterprise. Of the missionaries to *Sweden in the 9th cent. St *Anskar is the most notable. The conquests of *Charlemagne (d. 814) were accompanied by the forcible Baptism of the vanquished to the Christian faith. In Slavonic lands the chief missionaries were St *Cyril and St Methodius (9th cent.), *Bulgaria witnessing a struggle between the rival 'missionary' interests of Rome and Constantinople. This early stage of missionary enterprise culminated in the conversion of the *Poles, the Magyars (esp. through St *Stephen at the end of the 10th cent.), and the *Russians (esp. through St *Vladimir, d. 1015).

The first half of the second millennium witnessed three aspects of missionary work:

(1) Efforts were made to convert the remaining heathen tribes in Europe. The task was gradually completed through the labours of St Adalbert (the martyr-apostle of Prussia), *Vicelin (among the Wends), Meinhard and Albert of Apeldern (in Livonia), the *Teutonic Knights and others.

(2) Missions among the Muslims were initiated. Though St *Francis of Assisi may well claim to have begun this branch of missionary activity, the missions were overshadowed by the *Crusades until the end of the medieval period. The need for more specific missionary work was urged, however, by the Spanish mystic, Ramon *Llull, who emphasized the need to study oriental languages.

(3) Work was carried on further afield among Tartars, Chinese, and, to a lesser extent, Indians (e.g. Bishop Jordanus in the 14th cent.). In 1245 *Innocent IV sent two embassies, whilst a few years later St *Louis IX sent a Franciscan, William of Rubruck, to the Mongols. The Emperor Kublai, whose court the Polo brothers visited at the end of the 13th cent., apparently asked for more information about Christianity, and, although his request went for the moment unanswered, missionaries very soon penetrated his dominions. The Franciscan, John de Monte Corvino, who worked for over thirty years in China until his death in 1328, made many converts, and even hoped to convert the Emperor himself. His work included a translation of the NT and Pss. The success of such missionary enterprise was impeded by the nationalist and isolationist policy pursued by the Ming dynasty, whilst in the Nearer East, for which *John XXII had appointed an archbishop with his seat at the Ilkhan's capital, Sultaniyah, in 1318, further advance was stayed by the invasions of Timur (1380–1405).

With the Reformation missionary enterprise slackened, particularly in the Reformed Churches which were busily engaged in establishing themselves against the attacks of the *Counter-Reformation, while the seas were chiefly the preserve of RC *Spain and *Portugal. In addition, the call to evangelize the non-Christian world was blunted by the *predestinarianism held in some *Calvinist Churches and the perception in *Lutheran orthodoxy of missionary enterprise as human interference in God's work, as well as by the individualism sponsored by the Reformation. In the RC Church, the Counter-Reformation and colonialism brought about a rebirth of missionary work. New gains were sought to counteract the 'losses' in north-western Europe, and the *Dominicans, *Franciscans, Augustinians, and the newly founded *Capuchins and *Jesuits worked unstintingly in the Americas, in *India, *Japan, China (where the RC Church flourished in the 17th cent.), and in *Africa. In Paraguay the Jesuits not only sought to make converts but experimented with 'reductions', safe havens for the American Indian populations. In 1622 Gregory XV formed the Congregatio de propaganda fide (popularly, the *Propaganda) which struggled to liberate missionary work from Spanish and Portuguese secular interests; its establishment was an indirect result of the protests from the Christian kingdom of the *Congo against colonialism and the slave trade. It subsequently had general supervision of missionary work in the RC Church. Early in the 19th cent. RC foreign missions experienced a powerful revival. It was supported by such societies as the 'Associations for the Propagation of the Faith' (founded at Lyons in 1822) and a number of modern religious orders devoted themselves specifically to missionary work, including the *Marists, the *Holy Ghost Fathers, the 'Congregatio Immaculati Cordis Mariae' or Scheut Fathers (founded in 1862), the *Mill Hill Missionaries, the Society of the *Divine Word, and the *White Fathers. Notable in this period was the prominence given to charitable and educational works, and also the important part taken by women religious, who had hitherto been practically excluded from work abroad. It has been estimated that the number of converts to RCism in mission centres in the 19th cent. was over 8 million. In the early 20th cent. a different approach was foreshadowed by *Benedict XV in his encyclical Maximum illud (1919); this was directed to the firm establishment of the Church locally, with clergy and hierarchy of its own, aiming ultimately at self-sufficiency. The Second *Vatican Council's decree on the missionary activity of the Church ('Ad Gentes', 7 Dec. 1965) not only emphasized the missionary nature of the Church but also stressed the need to understand peoples and cultures as a precondition for adapting liturgy and theology. These concerns were reinforced by *John Paul II in his encyclical Redemptoris Missio (7 Dec. 1990).

In the Reformed Churches there was at first little missionary activity, for the reasons outlined above. Gradually, however, missionary societies were established throughout the Protestant world. In England a Corporation for the Propagation of the Gospel in New England was founded in 1649, but more important was the establishment of the *SPCK (1698) and the *SPG (1701), both largely inspired by Dr Thomas *Bray. None the less, the main success and burden of missionary work rested with the *Moravians, who under the inspiration of Count N. L. *Zinzendorf regarded themselves as a missionary community, and the Danish-Halle missions in India. Through the influence of the *Evangelical Revival, fostered in England by the work of the *Wesleys and G. *Whitefield, a new impetus was given to evangelization on a world-wide scale, which caused K. S. Latourette to speak of the 19th cent. as the 'Great Century' in this respect. (Nevertheless, there were more W. missionaries (esp. from N. America) working in non-Western countries in 1990 than there were in 1890.) The Methodist Missionary Society dates its origin from 1786 and the *Baptist Missionary Society from 1792, the Baptist, W. *Carey, sailing for India in 1793. They were followed by the founding of the London Missionary Society (*LMS, 1795), the Church Missionary Society (*CMS, 1799), the *British and Foreign Bible Society (1804), and the London Society for Promoting Christianity amongst the Jews (1809). In the meantime, similar organizations were springing up in Scotland, America, Germany, France, Scandinavia, and the Netherlands. The phenomenal expansion of the work saw the rise of innumerable Societies, most being specialized in their sphere of activity. Among the larger of these in England were the South American Missionary Society (1844), the Melanesian Mission (1846), and the *Universities' Mission to Central Africa (1859), the last-named being the outcome of the challenge sent out by D. *Livingstone. In 1965 it joined with the SPG to become the *United Society for the Propagation of the Gospel.

The evangelistic missions held by D. L. *Moody in America and England were largely responsible for the rise of a distinctive feature in more modern missionary effort—the interdenominational Missionary Society. Of such Societies the largest was the *China Inland Mission (1865), founded by J. Hudson *Taylor, but many have in the 20th cent. reached large proportions, with work in most parts of the world.

In the 20th cent. the nature of missionary enterprise has changed. Medicine and education have increasingly become the responsibility of the state, and, though expatriate advice and financial assistance are still sought, the social elements in missionary work are largely channelled through such specialist bodies as *Christian Aid. Native ministries have taken over responsibility in most areas and indigenous Churches have been established. At the same time, Christian missionaries from the non-western world are playing an increasingly important role, including attempts to reintroduce the Gospel to W. culture and to overcome the gulf between the established Churches and secularized people. The so-called 'inculturation' of the Gospel (interpreting it in terms of a particular culture) and the tasks of freeing the Church and theology from the restrictions of W. thought patterns are part of the present missionary enterprise. Within the Anglican Communion, the importance of missionary work and the changed nature of it were emphasized at the *Lambeth Conference of 1988, which envisaged the remaining years of the 20th cent. as a 'Decade of Evangelism', esp. in Britain.

A feature of missionary activity in the modern period has been the growth of ecumenism. Though the (*Orthodox) Holy Synod of the Church of Constantinople had in 1919 sought to propagate the idea of a 'league of Churches', missionary co-operation was until recently confined to Protestant denominations, with the Anglican Communion taking a part which usually stopped short of regional unions. A series of conferences, beginning in New York in 1854, culminated in the World Missionary Conference at *Edinburgh in 1910; this aimed at world-evangelism on an ecumenical basis. The International Missionary Council was founded in 1921 to further the same purpose; in 1961 it joined the *World Council of Churches and became its Division of World Mission and Evangelism (now its Mission, Education and Witness unit). Since 1963 this has enjoyed the co-operation of the Orthodox Church, which in the 20th cent. has expanded from Europe and America to parts of Africa and the Far East. A considerable amount of missionary work, however, is carried out by those who see themselves as non-denominational. The RC Church remains formally outside the World Council of Churches' mission structures, but for the most part the old hostilities have disappeared and there is increasing co-operation in many fields, e.g. in the International Association for Mission Studies. Another element in the missionary scene is the activity of the various 'independent' Churches which are often not affiliated to the World Council of Churches. This has to some extent balanced the decline in missionary activity in the mainstream Churches.

K. S. Latourette, History of the Expansion of Christianity (7 vols., 1939–45); id., Christianity in a Revolutionary Age (5 vols., 1959–63). S. [C.] Neill, Christian Missions (Pelican History of the Church, 6; 1964; rev. by [W.] O. Chadwick, 1986). M. [D.] Goodman, Mission and Conversion: Proselytizing in the Religious History of the Roman Empire (Oxford, 1994). R. E. Sullivan, 'The Carolingian Missionary and the Pagan', Speculum, 28 (1953), pp. 705–40, repr., with other relevant material, in his Christian Missionary Activity in the Early Middle Ages (Aldershot [1994]). B. Z. Kedar, Crusade and Mission: European Approaches toward the Muslims (Princeton, NJ [1984]). C. H. Robinson, History of Christian Missions (1915 [mainly post-Reformation]). G. Warneck, Geschichte der protestantischen Missionen (10th edn., 1913; Eng. tr., 7th edn., 1901). S. Bolshakoff, The Foreign Missions of the Russian Orthodox Church (1943). S. Delacroix (ed.), Histoire universelle des missions catholiques (4 vols., 1956–9). M. [A. C.] Warren, The Missionary Movement from Britain in Modern History (1965); id., Social History and Christian Mission (1967). T. Yates, Christian Mission in the Twentieth Century (Cambridge, 1994).

H. Kraemer, The Christian Mission in a Non-Christian World (1938). G. E. Phillips, The Gospel in the World: A Re-Statement of Missionary Principles (1939). M. Jarrett-Kerr, CR, Patterns of Christian Acceptance: Individual Response to Missionary Impact 1550–1950 (1972). A. Camps and others, Oecumenische Inleidung in de Missiologie (Kampen, 1988). R. Gray, Black Christians and White Missionaries (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1990). C. P. Williams, The Ideal of the Self-Governing Church: A Study in Victorian Missionary Strategy (Studies in Christian Mission, 1; Leiden, 1990). D. J. Bosch, Transforming Mission: Paradigm Shifts in Theology of Mission (American Society of Missiology Series, 16; Maryknoll, NY [1991]). J. A. Schere and S. B. Bevans (eds.), New Directions in Mission and Evangelization: Basic Statements 1974–1991 (ibid. [1992]). S. [C.] Neill and others (eds.), Concise Dictionary of the Christian World Mission (1970); H. Rzepkowski, Lexikon der Mission: Geschichte, Theologie, Ethnologie (Graz, 1992). Also reports of the International Missionary Conferences at Edinburgh (1910), Jerusalem (1928), and *Tambaram (1938), and histories of individual missionary societies, missionary orders, and individual countries; also THEOLOGY OF RELIGIONS.

Mit brennender Sorge (Ger., 'with burning anxiety'). The German encyclical of *Pius XI ordered to be read from all Roman Catholic pulpits in Germany on *Palm Sunday, 21 Mar. 1937. In it the Pope, whose fear of Communism had induced him to make a Concordat with Hitler in 1933, gave unequivocal expression to his belief that Nazism is fundamentally unchristian. It denounced Nazi breaches of the Concordat and attacked the idea of a German National Church, the abolition of the OT from the schools, and other views typical of the '*German-Christians' which the Nazis were imposing on the Church.

Text in AAS 29 (1937), Ger. pp. 145–67; Ital. pp. 168–88. Eng. tr. of main clauses in P. Matheson, The Third Reich and the Christian Churches (Edinburgh, 1981), pp. 67–71. H.-A. Raem, Pius XI und der Nationalsozialismus: Die Enzyklika 'Mit brennender Sorge' vom 14. März 1937 (1979).

Mithraism. Mithras was a god associated with light and the sanctity of oaths in India and Iran; he became the object of a distinctive cult in the Roman Empire prob. *c.*AD 100. The mysteries of Mithras were celebrated by small groups of male initiates in underground temples, lined on either side by benches used for ritual meals, and dominated by a representation of the god slaying the primal bull. Over 100 Mithraic caves, as the temples were called, have been found in the W. Roman Empire, esp. near the frontiers, where they were frequented by soldiers, but also at *Rome (e.g. under the churches of San Clemente and Santa Prisca), Ostia, and elsewhere. There were seven ascending grades of initiation, corresponding to the seven planetary spheres; neophytes passed through tests of endurance and took an oath before admission to each level. Modern knowledge of the significance of the rites is heavily dependent upon the philosopher *Porphyry and on the hostile accounts of Christians. *Tertullian (de praescriptione haereticorum, 40) denounced the mysteries as a parody of the Christian sacraments, but generally the Fathers directed less polemic against the private cult of Mithras than against the traditional public cults of the pagan world. Mithraism appears to have died out in the 4th cent.; some Mithraea, e.g. at Rome (*Jerome, ep. 107. 2) and three on Hadrian's Wall seem to have been closed by Christian action. Earlier scholarship emphasized the affinities of Mithraism with *Zoroastrianism; some recent work (R. L. Gordon) has presented it as a product of its Roman context.

F. Cumont, Textes et monuments figurés relatifs aux mystères de Mithra (2 vols., Brussels, 1896–9); M. J. Vermaseren (ed.), Corpus Inscriptionum et Monumentorum Religionis Mithriacae (2 vols., The Hague, 1956–60). F. Cumont, Les Mystères de Mithra (Brussels, 1900; 3rd edn., 1913; Eng. tr., 1903); an abridgement of Cumont's earlier work with additional bibl. A. Dieterich, Eine Mithrasliturgie (1903; 2nd edn., 1910). R.[-A.] Turcan, Mithras Platonicus: Recherches sur l'Hellénisation Philosophique de Mithra (Études Préliminaires aux Religions Orientales dans l'Empire Romain, 47; Leiden, 1975); id., Mithra et le Mithriacisme (1981); R. Merkelbach, Mithras (Königstein i. Ts., 1984). A. D. Nock, 'The Genius of Mithraism', Journal of Roman Studies, 27 (1937), pp. 108–13, repr. in Nock's Essays on Religion and the Ancient World, ed. Z. Stewart, 1 (Oxford, 1972), pp. 452–8; R. L. Gordon, 'Mithraism and Roman Society', Religion, 2 (1972), pp. 92–121. J. P. Gillam, I. MacIvor, and E. Birley, 'The Temple of Mithras at Rudchester', Archaeologia Aeliana, 4th ser. 32 (1954), pp. 176–219; M. J. Vermaseren and C. C. van Essen, The Excavations in the Mithraeum of the Church of Santa Prisca in Rome (Leiden, 1965). There have also been international conferences on Mithraic Studies: the Proceedings of the first were ed. by J. R. Hinnells (2 vols., Manchester, 1975); a second ed. by J. Duchesne-Guillemin (Acta Iranica, 17; 1978); and of that held in Rome, 1978, ed. U. Bianchi (Études Préliminaires aux Religions Orientales dans l'Empire Romain, 80; 1979). E. Wüst in PW 15 (pt. 2; 1932), cols. 2131–55; K. Prümm, SJ, in Dict. Bibl., Suppl. 6 (1960), cols. 136–51, s.v. 'Mystères, VIII. Le Culte de Mithra'.

mitre (Gk. μίτρα, 'turban'). The liturgical head-dress and part of the insignia of a bishop. In the E. Church it takes the form of a crown, decorated with medallions in enamel or embroidery; it is apparently derived from the crown of the Byzantine Emperors, and was not worn by bishops until after the fall of Constantinople (1453). In the Russian Church *archimandrites and certain *archpriests have the privilege of wearing a mitre, but in the Greek Church its use is restricted to bishops.

In the W. Church the mitre is shield-shaped and was originally always of white linen, but later the common material was embroidered satin, which was often jewelled. Two fringed lappets (infulae or fanones) hang down at the back. The mitre is not found before the 11th cent. and apparently took its origin in the '*camelaucum' of the Pope, an unofficial hat worn chiefly in procession. In certain cases permission to wear it has been granted to prelates other than bishops, notably to many *abbots and formerly to members of certain cathedral chapters, e.g. *Ravenna. It is worn in the W. Church at all solemn functions, but is removed during the prayers (cf. 1 Cor. 11: 4) and the *Canon of the Mass. In modern practice, three types of mitre have been distinguished, namely: (1) the Precious Mitre, adorned with gold and precious stones, worn on feasts and ordinary Sundays; (2) the Golden Mitre, of cloth-of-gold, worn in penitential seasons and when the Bishop has to remain seated during a sacred function; and (3) the Simple Mitre, of plain white silk or linen, worn at funerals, on Good Friday, at the blessing of the candles at *Candlemas, and on certain other occasions. Since 1968, however, only one mitre at any one celebration has been required in the RC Church.

Though the frontispiece of T. *Cranmer's 'Catechism' depicts bishops wearing mitres, this attire was rarely, if ever, used in the C of E from the Reformation to the 19th cent., except at *coronations (down to that of George III). Mitres were, however, regularly borne at the funerals of bishops.

J. Braun, LG (1907), pp. 424–98; P. Hofmeister, OSB, Mitra und Stab der wirklichen Prälaten ohne bischöflichen Charakter (Kirchenrechtliche Abhandlungen, Heft 104; 1928), passim; T. Klauser, Der Ursprung der bischöflichen Insignien und Ehrenrechte

(Bonner Akademische Reden, 1 [1949]), pp. 17–22. J. Braun, SJ, in CE 10 (1911), pp. 404–6, with illustrations; O. J. Blum in NCE 9 (1967), pp. 981 f., s.v. 'Miter', with further refs.

Mixed Chalice. The practice of mixing water with wine for drinking was general in the ancient world. From allusions in the writings of *Justin Martyr, *Irenaeus, *Clement of Alexandria, and *Cyprian, it would appear that the ancient Church continued at the *Eucharist what had probably been the practice of the Lord at the *Last Supper; and, with the exception of the *Armenian, the historic Liturgies all enjoin or presuppose the mixture of water with the wine in the Eucharistic chalice. The First BCP of 1549 directed the continuance of this traditional usage; but the direction disappeared in the Book of 1552 and was not restored in 1662. The usage was not wholly abandoned, however, and its widespread revival during the 19th cent. was the subject of controversy between the adherents of the *Anglo-Catholic Revival and their opponents. The usage was declared to be not contrary to the law of the C of E by Abp. E. W. *Benson's *Lincoln Judgement (1890). See also SIX POINTS.

mixed marriage. A marriage between Christians of different denominations or of a Christian and an unbaptized person. A marriage is so described esp. when one of the parties is a RC. Such marriages, which used to be tolerated only in exceptional cases, still require the express permission of the diocesan bishop or other competent ecclesiastical authority. The motu proprio 'Matrimonia Mixta' (31 Mar. 1970) permitted more liberal arrangements than had formerly been allowed. The marriage may now be conducted before a minister of another denomination using the liturgical rite of that denomination. The basic law is contained in CIC (1983), canons 1124–9. National conferences of bishops decide on such local variations as are allowed. See also NE TEMERE.

Moabite Stone (*c.*850 BC). An inscription in Moabite (a dialect very closely related to Hebrew) discovered in 1868 by F. Klein at Dîbân, E. of the Dead Sea (the biblical Dibon, Num. 21: 30, etc.; the Moabite capital), and commemorating the successes gained by Mesha, King of Moab, against *Israel. The text, which has several points of contact with the Bible (particularly 2 Kgs. 3: 4–27, which gives an account of the same events from the Hebrew side), indicates a close kinship between the Moabite religion of Chemosh and the contemporary conception of *Yahweh in Israel. The stone was broken up by the local Bedouin during its removal; but a squeeze had already been taken and this, together with many fragments of the stone, is preserved in the Louvre at *Paris.

Crit. edn. of the text by J. C. L. Gibson, Textbook of Syrian Semitic Inscriptions, 1 (Oxford, 1971), pp. 71–83, with Eng. tr. and comm. Eng. tr. and comm. also by E. Ullendorff in D. W. Thomas (ed.), Documents from Old Testament Times (1958), pp. 195–9, with bibl. [J.] M. Miller, 'The Moabite Stone as a Memorial Stela', Palestine Exploration Quarterly, 106 (1974), pp. 9–18.

Moberly, Robert Campbell (1845–1903), *Anglican theologian. He was the son of George Moberly, Bp. of *Salisbury, 1869–85. Educated at New College, Oxford, he was Regius Professor of Pastoral Theology and Canon of Christ Church, Oxford (1892–1903). He belonged to the school of High Churchmen which produced Lux Mundi (1889), to which he contributed 'The Incarnation as the Basis of Dogma'. His two principal works were Ministerial Priesthood (1897), a theological study of the Christian ministry, with a notable appendix on the validity of *Anglican Ordinations, and Atonement and Personality (1901), an original and profound study of the doctrine of the *Atonement.

His son, Sir Walter Hamilton Moberly (1881–1974), who held several distinguished academic and civil appointments, contributed the essays on 'The Atonement' and 'God and the Absolute' to Foundations* (1912).

Appreciations of R. C. Moberly by W. *Sanday in JTS 5 (1903), pp. 481–99, and by W. H. Moberly [son], ibid. 6 (1905), pp. 1–19. H. S. *Holland, Personal Studies (1905), pp. 272–9. A. Clark in DNB, 1901–1911, pp. 624–6.

On W. H. Moberly, P. R. Clifford in DNB, 1971–1980 (1986), pp. 572 f.

Modalism. In the early Church a form of unorthodox teaching on the Trinity which denied the permanence of the three Persons and maintained that the distinctions in the Godhead were only transitory. Among its leading exponents were *Praxeas, *Noetus, and Sabellius (see SABELLIANISM). It was a form of *Monarchianism (q.v.) and also known as *Patripassianism.

For bibl. see s.v. MONARCHIANISM.

Moderates. In the Church of *Scotland, the party in the ascendant in the second half of the 18th cent. which held a more moderate conception of doctrine and discipline than their opponents (the 'Evangelicals'). Under the leadership of W. *Robertson, they sought to be friends of learning, culture, and order and emphasized morality rather than dogma. They were opposed to the abolition of lay patronage, insisting that presbyteries should induct patrons' presentees acc. to the law of the land, whether the people called them or not. The *Disruption of 1843 (q.v.) under T. *Chalmers was largely inspired by hostility to the principles of the Moderates.

I. D. L. Clark, 'From Protest to Reaction: The Moderate Regime in the Church of Scotland, 1752–1805', in N. T. Phillipson and R. Mitchison (eds.), Scotland in the Age of Improvement (Edinburgh, 1970), pp. 200–24. R. B. Sher, Church and University in the Scottish Enlightenment: The Moderate Literati of Edinburgh (Princeton, NJ [1985]). See also works cited under SCOTLAND, CHRISTIANITY IN.

Moderator. In *Presbyterian church courts the Moderator is the presbyter appointed primus inter pares to constitute the court and to preside over its proceedings. He has only a casting vote. In the lowest court, the *Kirk session, the minister is Moderator ex officio. In *presbyteries and synods one of the members, as a rule a minister, is appointed Moderator for a term, generally six months. The Moderator of the *General Assembly is elected for a year. In the Church of Scotland, the Moderator of the General Assembly is given the courtesy title 'Right Reverend' during his period of office and afterwards is styled 'Very Reverend'. Although it is inaccurate to speak of him as the Moderator of the Church, he serves as its representative, wears distinctive dress, and in court precedence in Scotland he comes before the peers.

Modern Church People's Union. An Anglican society, for the advancement of liberal religious thought, esp. in the C of E. Founded in 1898 as the 'Churchmen's Union', from 1928 to 1987 it was called the 'Modern Churchmen's Union'. Among its aims are to uphold the comprehensiveness of the C of E and to maintain the legitimacy of doctrinal re-statement and the adjustment of the forms of worship in acc. with the believed requirements of modern discovery. Its policy has been marked by hostility to *Anglo-Catholic and RC ideals and (esp. latterly) to socialistic programmes of reform in Church or State. Among those who have taken a prominent part in the movement are H. *Rashdall, W. R. *Inge, E. W. Barnes (Bp. of Birmingham, 1924–53), K. *Lake, and W. R. Matthews (Dean of *St Paul's, 1934–67). The Modern Churchman (1911–93; Modern Believing, 1994 ff.), founded by H. D. A. Major (1871–1961; principal of Ripon Hall, Oxford, 1919–48), serves as its organ.

A. M. G. Stephenson, The Rise and Decline of English Modernism (Hulsean Lectures, 1979–80; 1984).

Modern Devotion. See DEVOTIO MODERNA.

Modernism. A movement within the RC Church which aimed at bringing the tradition of Catholic belief into closer relation with the modern outlook in philosophy, the historical and other sciences and social ideas. It arose spontaneously and independently in several different countries in the later years of the 19th cent. In France, where it was most vigorous, it was fostered in its earlier years esp. by a number of professors at the *Institut Catholique at Paris, notably L. *Duchesne (who himself, however, stood apart from the Movement when it had developed) and his pupils. It reached the height of its influence in the first years of the 20th century. It was formally condemned by *Pius X in 1907.

The Modernists, having no common programme, differed widely among themselves. The leading ideas and tendencies to be found in the Movement were:

(1) The whole-hearted adoption of the critical view of the Bible, by this date generally accepted outside the RC Church. The Bible was to be understood as the record of a real unfolding of Divine truth in history. Abandoning artificial attempts at harmonizing inconsistencies, the Modernists recognized that the biblical writers were subject to many of the limitations of other historians. They approached the scriptural record with considerable independence, indeed often with much greater scepticism than the Protestant scholars. In the 1890s they found encouragement in *Leo XIII's two-edged *'Providentissimus Deus' (1893).

(2) A strong inclination to reject the 'intellectualism' of the Scholastic theology and correspondingly to subordinate doctrine to practice. Many of the Modernists accepted a philosophy of 'action' (M. *Blondel) and welcomed the *Pragmatism of W. *James and the Intuitionism of H. *Bergson. They sought the essence of Christianity in life rather than in an intellectual system or creed.

(3) A teleological attitude to history, finding the meaning of the historic process in its issue rather than in its origins. Since the Church's growth took place under the guidance of the Spirit, the essence of the Gospel will lie in its full expansion rather than in its primitive historic kernel. This belief was sometimes reflected in an extreme historical scepticism about Christian origins. Thus, whether or not the historic Jesus founded a Church was a question of small importance and one to which we should never know the answer: the significant fact was that the seed then sown had developed into the worldwide institution for bringing men into touch with supernatural reality and saving their souls; the Mass was to be understood in its developed glory, and this would remain whether or not the historic Christ instituted it.

Among the leaders in the Modernist Movement were, in France, A. F. *Loisy, M. Blondel, E. I. Mignot (1842–1918; Abp. of Albi from 1899), L. *Laberthonnière, and Édouard Le Roy (1870–1954); in Italy, Romolo Murri (1870–1944) and A. Fogazzaro (1842–1911); and in the British Isles, F. *von Hügel and G. *Tyrrell. In some ways von Hügel filled a special position in the Movement as the chief link between the Modernists in the different countries.

The accession of Leo XIII (Pope, 1878–1903) gave those who held liberal views considerable encouragement, for Leo had a real respect for learning and sought to abandon the isolationism of his predecessor. But his tolerance of Modernism prob. rested rather on grounds of expediency than on any personal sympathy with its ideals; and in his later years he became increasingly critical of the Movement. His successor, St Pius X (Pope, 1903–14), wholly distrusted the Movement from the first. Officially described as the 'synthesis of all the heresies', Modernism was finally condemned in 1907 by the decree '*Lamentabili' and the encyclical 'Pascendi'. These decrees were carried into effect by the motu proprio 'Sacrorum Antistitum' (1910), imposing an Anti-Modernist oath on all clerics at their ordination and on taking up various offices. While the clergy who had been identified with the Movement were for the most part excommunicated, the laymen, such as von Hügel and Blondel, were generally left untouched.

With regard to the word 'Modernism', it should be noted that it was apparently not applied to the Movement until after the turn of the 20th century. In a wider sense the term 'Modernist' has been used more recently of radical critics of traditional theology in the non-RC Churches, esp. of the thought of those associated with the *Modern Church People's Union (q.v.).

For the official condemnation of Modernism, see bibl. to the decree, LAMENTABILI. Other primary sources for the history of the Movement are the works of A. Loisy (esp. Mémoires, 3 vols., 1930–1), G. Tyrrell and F. von Hügel (esp. Selected Letters, 1927). R. Marlé, SJ (ed.), Au cœur de la crise moderniste: Le dossier inédit d'une controverse. Lettres de Maurice Blondel, H. Bremond, Fr. von Hügel, Alfred Loisy, Fernand Mourret, J. Wehrlé . . . (1960). Collection of extracts from the writings of the chief modernists tr. into Eng., with introd., by B. M. G. Reardon, Roman Catholic Modernists (1970). The most comprehensive single study is J. Rivière, Le Modernisme dans l'Église: Étude d'histoire religieuse contemporaine (1929). É Poulat, Histoire, dogme et critique dans la crise moderniste (1962; 2nd edn., 1979); id., Modernistica: Horizons, physionomies, débats (1982 [collected papers repr. from various sources]). Good summary also in A. R. Vidler, The Modernist Movement in the Roman Church (Cambridge, 1934); id., A Variety of Catholic Modernists (Sarum Lectures, 1968–9; ibid., 1970). A. L. Lilley, Modernism: A Record and a Review (1908); A. Houtin, Histoire du modernisme catholique ('1913' [pub. 1912]); M. D. Petre, Modernism: Its Failure and its Fruits (1918). L. da Veiga Coutinho, Tradition et histoire dans la controverse moderniste (1898–1910) (Analecta Gregoriana, 73; 1954). P. Scoppola, Crisi modernista e rinnovamento cattolico in Italia [Bologna, 1961], with unpub. 'Petite Consultation sur les difficultés concernant Dieu' by F. von Hügel, pp. 365–92. T. M. Loome, Liberal Catholicism, Reform Catholicism, Modernism: A Contribution to a New Orientation in Modernist Research (Tübinger Theologische Studien, 14; 1979). G. Daly, OSA, Transcendence and Immanence: A Study of Catholic Modernism and Integralism (Oxford, 1980). B. M. G. Reardon in N. Smart and others (eds.), Nineteenth Century Religious Thought in the West, 2 (Cambridge, 1985), pp. 141–77. A. L. Lilley in HERE 8 (1915), pp. 763–8, s.v.; J. Rivière in DTC 10 (pt. 2; 1935), cols. 2009–47, s.v. 'Modernisme'.

Moffat, Robert (1795–1883), pioneer missionary in *South Africa. Born at Ormiston, in Lothian, he was apprenticed as a gardener. Under *Wesleyan influence he was drawn to missionary work. In 1815 he became engaged to Mary Smith (1795–1870), his employer's daughter, who was to be a constant assistant in his work. Becoming a *Congregationalist he was accepted in 1816 as a candidate by the *London Missionary Society and sent to South Africa. He arrived at Cape Town in 1817 and proceeded NE to Namaqualand, where he stayed over a year. Here he succeeded in converting the Hottentot chief known as Africaner, and by reconciling him to the British Government gained official support. From 1821 to 1830 he worked among the Bechuanas. In 1825 they began to lay out for him a new station at Kuruman, where a native convert organized the erection of a school-house. Moffat then began a translation of the Gospel of Luke into Sechwana and in 1830 the printing started at Cape Town. This was the first of a series of translations which extended to hymns and other literature and which laid the foundations for subsequent missionary enterprise. Meanwhile he had established his first contact with the Matabele tribe (1829–30), to which other visits followed in 1835, 1854, 1857, and 1859–60. In 1839 he returned to England and in 1840 persuaded D. *Livingstone, his future son-in-law, to go out to Africa. In 1843 he returned to S. Africa, where he remained until 1870. In 1857 he completed his translation of the Bible. His publications include Missionary Labours and Scenes in Southern Africa (1842), Rivers of Water in a Dry Place (1863), and The Bible translated into Sechwana (1872).

J. P. R. Wallis (ed.), The Matabele Journals of Robert Moffat, 1829–60 (Government Archives of Southern Rhodesia, Oppenheimer Series, 1; 2 vols., 1945); I. Schapera (ed.), Apprenticeship at Kuruman, being the Journals and Letters of Robert and Mary Moffat, 1820–28 (Central African Archives, Oppenheimer Series, 5; 1951). J. S. Moffat (son), The Lives of Robert and Mary Moffat (1885). Other Lives by W. Walters (London, 1881), E. W. Smith (ibid., 1925), and [W.] C. Northcott (ibid., 1961), with bibl. R. H. Vetch in DNB 38 (1894), pp. 97–101.

Moffatt, James (1870–1944), NT scholar. A native of Glasgow, where he was educated at the University and the Free Church College, he was ordained in 1896, and after some years in the ministry of the Free Church of Scotland taught at Mansfield College, Oxford, from 1911 to 1915 and at Glasgow from 1915 to 1927. From 1927 to 1939 he was professor of Church history in the *Union Theological Seminary, New York. Encyclopaedic and versatile, he became well known as a writer in many fields. His Introduction to the Literature of the NT (1911) is a comprehensive survey of contemporary NT scholarship. Of his translation of the Bible, which is written in a colloquial style, the NT appeared in 1913, the OT in 1924, and the whole was revised in 1935. Moffatt also edited a complete commentary on the NT (17 vols., 1928–49), for which his version is taken as the textual basis and to which he himself contributed the volumes on 1 Cor. and the 'General Epistles' (Jas., 1 and 2 Pet., and Jude). Besides many other writings on biblical matters and Church history, he also produced works on general English literature, among them a book on the novels of G. Meredith.

E. F. Scott in DNB, 1941–1950, pp. 602 f., s.v.

Mogila, Peter (1596–1646), Orthodox theologian. A Wallachian of noble birth, he studied at the University of Paris, and became abbot of a monastery at Kiev in 1627 and Metropolitan of Kiev in 1632. The most important of his writings was the 'Confession', the first draft of which he prepared at the behest of Abbot Kozlovsky of Kiev with the aid of three bishops in 1638. A comprehensive survey of the faith of the Greek Orthodox Church, it was formally approved by the Synod of *Jassy (1642) and by the four E. Patriarchs (1643), was first published in 1645 as Ὀρθόδοξος ὁμολογία τῆς πίστεως τῆς καθολικῆς καὶ ἀποστολικῆς ἐκκλησίας τῆς ἀνατολικῆς, and again approved by the Synod of *Jerusalem in 1672. It remains one of the primary witnesses to Orthodox doctrine. Mogila also issued in 1645 his very widely circulated 'Catechism'.

The Gk. text of his Confession is pr., with modern Lat. tr., in E. J. Kimmel, Monumenta Fidei Ecclesiae Orientalis, 1 (Jena, 1850), pp. 56–324; also by I. N. Karmires, Τὰ δογματικὰ καὶ συμβολικὰ Μνημεῖα τῆς Ὀρθοδόξου Καθολικῆς Ἐκκλησίας, 2 (Athens, 1953), pp. 582–686. Early Lat. tr. in the MS Par. gr. 1265, ed., with notes and introd., by A. Malvy and M. Viller (Orientalia Christiana, 10, fasc. 39; 1927; an important study of Mogila and his Confession). Eng. tr. of Gk. text by Philip Lodvel (orig. pub. 1762), ed. J. J. Overbeck (London, 1898). The classic study on Mogila is the work (in Russian) of S. Golubev (2 vols., Kiev, 1883–98). E. Picot in E. Legrand, Bibliographie hellénique ... au XVII^e siècle, 4 (1896), pp. 104–59. T. Ionesco, La Vie et l'œuvre de Pierre Movila, métropolite de Kiev (1944); O. Barlea, De Confessione Orthodoxa Petri Mohilae (Frankfurt a.M., 1948). I. Ševčenko, 'The Many Worlds of Peter Mohyla', Harvard Ukrainian Studies, 8 (1984), pp. 9–40, with other arts. on him by F. E. Sysyn, pp. 155–87, and M. Cazacu, pp. 188–221. [C. J.] S. Runciman, The Great Church in Captivity (Cambridge, 1968), pp. 340–7. G. Podskalsky, Griechische Theologie in der Zeit der Türkenherrschaft (1453–1821) (Munich, 1988), pp. 229–36. M. Jugie, AA, in DTC 10 (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 2063–81, s.v. 'Moghila', with full bibl Mohammedanism. See ISLAM.

Möhler, Johann Adam (1796–1838), RC historian and theologian. He was educated at Ellwangen and the University of Tübingen, and in 1819 ordained priest. In 1828 he became professor of Church history at Tübingen, later (1835) moving to Munich. Shortly before his death he was appointed Dean of Würzburg Cathedral. One of the principal representatives of the Catholic 'Tübingen School', he sought to revive RC theology by emphasizing the nature of the Church as a living community filled with the Holy Spirit, rather than seeing it as an institution. In developing this approach he was influenced by German *Romanticism and the Idealism of F. W. J. von *Schelling and G. W. F. *Hegel. He has been both accused of foreshadowing *Modernism and hailed as a precursor of the theology of the Second *Vatican Council. His works include Die Einheit in der Kirche oder das Prinzip des Katholizismus (1825; Fr. tr., 1939), the controversial Symbolik, oder Darstellung der dogmatischen Gegensätze der Katholiken und Protestanten nach ihren öffentlichen Bekenntnisschriften (1832; Eng. tr., 1843), a Life of *Athanasius (2 vols., 1827), and, among posthumous writings, a commentary on Romans (1845) and a Church History (3 vols., ed. P. B. *Gams, 1867–70).

Collected essays ed. J. J. I. *Döllinger, 2 vols., Ratisbon, 1839–40. Die Einheit in der Kirche, ed., with comm. by J. R. Geiselmann (Cologne and Olten, 1957); Symbolik, ed., with comm. by id. (2 vols., ibid., 1960–1). Nachgelassene Schriften, from shorthand notes taken by S. Lösch (1881–1966), ed. R. Reinhardt (Konfessionskundliche und Kontroverstheologische Studien, 52–3 [1989–90]). Studies by J. *Friedrich (Munich, 1894; with unpub. docs.), E. Vermeil (Paris, 1913), K. Eschweiler (Braunsberg, 1930). J. R. Geiselmann (Mainz, 1942; 2nd edn., 1966, and Freiburg, 1955), P. W. Scheele (Munich, 1964), H. Savon (Théologiens et Spirituels Contemporains, 1 [1965; Eng. tr., Glen Rock, NJ 1966]), and H. Geisser (Kirche und Konfession, 18 [1971]). P. Chaillet, SJ (ed.), L'Église est une: Hommage à Möhler (1939). S. Bolshakoff, The Doctrine of the Unity of the Church in the Works of Khomyakov and Moehler (1946), pp. 217–62. H. Wagner, Die eine Kirche und die vielen Kirchen: Ekklesiologie und Symbolik beim jungen Möhler (Beiträge zur ökumenischen Theologie, 16; 1977). J. T. Burtchaell, CSC, in N. Smart and others (eds.), Nineteenth Century Religious Thought in the West, 2 (Cambridge, 1985), pp. 125–35, with bibl., pp. 138 f. J. R. Geiselmann in L.Th.K. (2nd edn.), 7 (1962), cols. 521 f.; H. Holstein in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 1446–8, s.v. with bibl.

Molina, Luis de (1535–1600), Spanish *Jesuit theologian. In 1553 he entered the Society of Jesus, and later taught at Coimbra (1563–7) and Evora (1568–83). He then spent several years at Lisbon writing, and in 1588 published his Concordia liberi arbitrii cum gratiae donis. In 1590 he retired to Cuenca, where he remained until, in the year of his death, he was appointed professor of moral theology at Madrid. His major work on political theory, De Justitia et Jure (1593–1609), was completed by other Jesuits and partly published after his death.

The term 'Molinism' is used loosely by theologians to describe doctrines of grace of the kind elaborated in de Molina's Concordia (1588) and unified (in spite of divergences of detail) by the central tenet that the efficacy of grace has its ultimate foundation, not within the substance of the Divine gift of grace itself (ab intrinseco), but in the Divinely foreknown fact of free human co-operation with this gift. It is claimed that human free will is not adequately safeguarded by any other system. The Divine foreknowledge of free human actions is held to imply a knowledge, peculiar to God Himself, of hypothetical future contingents; and it is maintained that this scientia conditionata or media is therefore fundamental.

The system, which was widely adopted by the Jesuits, was soon attacked by conservative theologians, esp. the *Dominicans, and the ensuing controversies '*De Auxiliis' were the subject of a special Congregation in Rome (1598–1607). The points at issue, however, were left undecided.

F. Stegmüller (ed.), Geschichte des Molinismus, 1, Neue Molinaschriften [all pub.] (BGPM 32; 1935). E. Vansteenberghe in DTC 10 (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 2094–187, s.v. 'Molinisme', with detailed bibl. On de Molina, J. Rabeneck, SJ, 'De Ludovici de Molina Studiorum Philosophiae Curriculo', Archivum Historicum Societatis Iesu, 6 (1937), pp. 291–302; id., 'De Vita et Scriptis Loudovici Molina', ibid. 19 (for 1950; 1951), pp. 75–145; id., 'Antiqua Legenda de Molina narrata examinatur', ibid. 24 (1955), pp. 295–326. Eng. tr. of pt. 4 of the Concordia ('On Divine Foreknowledge'), with introd. and notes, by A. J. Fredosso (Ithaca, NY, and London, 1988). V. Muñoz, Mercedarian, Zumel y el molinismo: Informe del P. Francisco Zumel, Mercedario, sobre las doctrinas del P. Luis Molina, S.J., presentado en julio de 1595 (1953). B. Hamilton, Political Thought in Sixteenth-Century Spain: A Study of the Political Ideas of Vitoria, De Soto, Suárez, and Molina (Oxford, 1963); F. B. Costello, SJ, The Political Philosophy of Luis de Molina, S.J. (1535–1600) (Bibliotheca Instituti Historici S.I., 38; 1974). Sommervogel, 5 (1894), cols. 1167–79; Polgár, 2 (1990), pp. 544–9. J. Pohle in CE 10 (1911), pp. 437–41, s.v.; F. Stegmüller in L.Th.K. (2nd edn.), 7 (1962), cols. 527–30, s.v. 'Molinismus', and col. 526, s.v. 'Molina', the latter with list of specialized arts.

Molinaeus, Petrus. See DU MOULIN, PIERRE.

Molinos, Miguel de (1628–96), Spanish *Quietist. Born at Muniesa in Aragon, he trained for the priesthood in Valencia and was ordained in 1652; he styled himself doctor, without justification. He was sent to Rome in 1663, and soon became a much-sought-after confessor and spiritual director, and had friends in the *Curia. He founded a branch in Rome of the Valencian Escuela de Cristo (confraternity). In 1675 he published both an Italian translation of his Breve tractado de la comunión frecuente (the Spanish appeared only in 1677) and the Guía espiritual que desembaraza al alma y la conduce por el interior camino para alcanzar la perfecta contemplación y la conduce al rico tesoro de la interior paz. In one he advocated daily communion, and in the other, a didactic, but impersonal work, he recommended the prayer of acquired or active *contemplation. Unlike discursive *meditation, the prayer of quietude requires no help from reason or imagination, but a total submission to the will of God and, once all obstacles have been overcome, temptations can be disregarded (Book I). This imperfect contemplation is open to all under the guidance of an expert spiritual director (Book II). Infused or passive (perfect) contemplation, which is entirely God's gift, is described in a somewhat confused way in Book III. Molinos quotes mystical writers, notably St *Teresa of Ávila, and draws upon the works of St *John of the Cross.

In spite of his reputation and connections Molinos was arrested by the *Holy Office in 1686, tried and condemned on propositions culled from his letters and from witnesses rather than from the Guide, and on perhaps doubtful accusations of immorality. He submitted in 1687, but remained in prison until his death.

Many of his followers gave up the usual practice of vocal prayer and the Sacraments and took disregard of temptations to immoral lengths. His teaching became influential in the Quietist movement in France (F. de S. de la M. *Fénelon and Mme *Guyon) and among the *Pietists.

Crit. edn. of the Guía espiritual (the 'Guide') by J. I. Tellechea Idígoras (Madrid, 1976), with concordance (ibid., 1991). An Eng. tr. of both his works, made from an Ital. version, was pub., London, 1688; repr. Glasgow, 1885, and (Guide only), London, 1928. An extract from the 1688 tr. of the Guide, somewhat adapted, was incl. by J. Wesley in the Christian Library, 38 (Bristol, 1754), pp. 247–93. Molinos' letters and papers concerning his trial disappeared from the archives of the Holy Office during the French occupation of Rome in 1810–14; only 1

summary of the case and unreliable accounts, such as that of Card. C. d'Estrées, remain. The basis of the charges was a set of 263 'Theses Damnandae', pr. in Analecta Juris Pontificii, 10 (1869), cols. 574–94; the 68 errors condemned on 28 Aug. 1687 and inserted by Innocent XI on 19 Nov. 1687 in the bull Coelestis Pastor, are repr. in Denzinger and Hünermann (37th edn., 1991), pp. 645–56 (nos. 2201–69). Molinos' Defensa de la Contemplación, ed. F. Trinidad Solano (Biblioteca de Visionarios Heterdoxos y Marginados [1983]). J. Fernandez Alonso, 'Una Bibliografía inédita de Miguel de Molinos', Anthologica Annua, 12 (1964), pp. 293–321 [despite title, an early Life]. G. *Burnet, Three Letters concerning the Present State of Italy (1688), pp. 1–95 (no. 1: 'Relating to the Affair of Molinos and the Quietists'). Modern Life by P. Dubon, SJ (hostile; Paris, 1921). J. Ellacura Beascoechea, Reacción española contra las ideas de Miguel de Molinos (Procesos de la Inquisición y refutación de los teólogos) (1956). F. Sánchez-Castañer, Miguel de Molinos en Valencia y Roma (Nuevos Datos Biográficos) (Valencia, 1965). L. Kolakowski, Chrétiens sans Église (Fr. tr. from Polish, 1969), pp. 494–566 passim. R. Robres Lluch, 'En torno a Miguel de Molinos y los orígenes de su doctrina. Aspectos de la piedad barroca en Valencia (1578–1691)', Anthologica Annua, 18 (1971), pp. 353–465; J. I. Tellechea Idígoras, 'Molinos e el Quietismo Español', in R. García-Villoslada (ed.), Historia de la Iglesia en España (1979), pp. 475–521, repr. in id., Molinosiana: Investigaciones históricas sobre Miguel Molinos (1987), pp. 17–63. R. A. *Knox, Enthusiasm (Oxford, 1950), pp. 295–318. E. Pacho in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 1486–514, s.v.

Moltmann, Jürgen (b. 1926), German Reformed theologian. A native of Hamburg, he saw his home town destroyed in an air-raid in 1943. Both his Christian faith and the roots of his particular theological perspective date from his experience as a prisoner-of-war; he was captured by the British in 1945 and not repatriated until 1948. On his return to Germany, he studied theology at Göttingen and served a pastorate in Bremen-Wasserhorst. He held chairs in the universities of Wuppertal (1958–63) and Bonn (1963–67), was visiting professor at Duke University, North Carolina (1967–8), and in 1967 was appointed Professor of Systematic Theology at *Tübingen. He is best known for a trilogy of writings comprising complementary perspectives on theology: Theologie der Hoffnung (1964; Eng. tr., Theology of Hope, 1967); Der gekreuzigte Gott (1972; Eng. tr., The Crucified God, 1974), and Kirche in der Kraft des Geistes (1975; Eng. tr., The Church in the Power of the Spirit, 1977). A second series of six major works on *messianic theology is planned: Trinität und Reich Gottes (1980; Eng. tr., The Trinity and the Kingdom of God, 1981), God in Creation (*Gifford Lectures for 1984–5; 1985; translated from Gott in der Schöpfung, 1985), Der Weg Jesu Christi (1989; Eng. tr., The Way of Jesus Christ, 1990), Der Geist des Lebens (1991; Eng. tr., The Spirit of Life, 1992), and Das Kommen Gottes: Christliches Eschatologie (1995; The Coming of God, 1996) have appeared to date. His earlier work was characterized by a strong eschatological orientation towards the coming kingdom of God. Theology of Hope was influential in rehabilitating and reinvigorating futurist *eschatology. As one of the pioneers of the German political theology of the late 1960s, Moltmann also developed the political implications of Christian hope. The Crucified God sets the cross in the context of the theological problem of suffering, presenting it as God's act of loving solidarity with the suffering. In his later work the christological, eschatological, and political perspectives are retained, while Moltmann's understanding of God and the relationship between God and the world is further developed. This is characterized especially by Divine passibility (in contrast with the traditional notion of *impassibility) and social trinitarianism. The three Divine Persons are seen as deeply involved in a history of mutual relationships with the world and the world is seen as moved by God's suffering love towards His eschatological glory. Moltmann has also written in collaboration with his wife, the feminist theologian Elisabeth Moltmann-Wendel.

H. Deuser and others (eds.), Gottes Zukunft, Zukunft der Welt: Festschrift für Jürgen Moltmann zum 60. Geburtstag (1986). M. D. Meeks, Origins of the Theology of Hope (Philadelphia [1974]); R. Gibellini, La Teologia di Jürgen Moltmann (Brescia, 1975); R. J. Bauckham, Moltmann: Messianic Theology in the Making (Basingstoke, 1987); id., The Theology of Jürgen Moltmann (Edinburgh, 1995). D. Ising and others, Bibliographie Jürgen Moltmann (Munich, 1987).

Mommsen, Theodor (1817–1903), Roman historian and jurist. The eldest son of a Lutheran pastor in Schleswig, he studied law at Kiel. He was involved in the political upheaval of 1848, but when the liberal cause failed he became Professor Extraordinarius at Leipzig. He was subsequently appointed to professorial chairs at Zurich (1852) and Breslau (1854) and elected to the Berlin Academy (1854). In 1858 he moved to Berlin to edit the Corpus Inscriptionum Latinarum (vol. 1, 1863), on which he worked until 1883. In 1861 he became Professor of Ancient History at Berlin. His reputation had been established with the publication of the first three volumes of his Römische Geschichte (1854–6; Eng. tr., 1862–6), the first complete survey of Roman Republican history; the fifth volume, on the Roman provinces from Caesar to *Diocletian, followed in 1885 (Eng. tr., 1886). In Römisches Staatsrecht (3 vols., 1871–88) Mommsen provided the first systematic treatment of Roman constitutional law. He also wrote the standard text on Roman criminal law, Römisches Strafrecht (1899). As Secretary of the Berlin Academy (1874–95), Mommsen sponsored work in prosopography, *archaeology, and *papyrology. He touched on NT studies in his work on Roman Law, and on Church History in his study of the relations between Church and State during the persecutions; and he produced fine editions of the Liber Pontificalis (1898) and the Variae of *Cassiodorus (1894).

Gesammelte Schriften (8 vols. only pub., Berlin, 1905–13). E. *Schwartz (ed.), Mommsen und Wilamowitz, Briefwechsel: 1872–1903 (1935); L. Wickert (ed.), Theodor Mommsen Otto Jahn: Briefwechsel, 1842–1868 (Frankfurt [1962]). Theodor Mommsen als Schriftsteller: Ein Verzeichnis seiner Schriften von Karl Zangemeister, ed. E. Jacobs (1905). L. Wickert, Theodor Mommsen: Eine Biographie (4 vols., Frankfurt [1959–80]). A. Wucher, Theodor Mommsen: Geschichtschreibung und Politik (Göttinger Bausteine zur Geschichtswissenschaft, 26 [1956]). A. Heuss, Theodor Mommsen und das 19. Jahrhundert (Veröffentlichungen der Schleswig-Holsteinischen Universitätsgesellschaft, NF 19; Kiel, 1956). G. P. Gooch, History and Historians in the Nineteenth Century (1913), pp. 454–65; K. Christ, Von Gibbon zu Rostovtzeff (Darmstadt, 1972), pp. 84–118. A. Demandt in W. W. Briggs and W. M. Calder (eds.), Classical Scholarship: A Biographical Encyclopedia (New York and London, 1990), pp. 285–309, s.v.

Mommsen Catalogue. Also known as the Cheltenham List. The early list of biblical Books and of the works of St *Cyprian discovered in 1885 by T. *Mommsen in the *Phillipps MS 12266 at Cheltenham (10th cent.) and first published in Hermes, 21 (1886), pp. 142–56. The list dates from the year 359. Notable points about it are the number of the Psalms (151, not 150), the order of the Gospels (Mt., Mk., Jn., Lk.), the omission of Heb., the inclusion of Rev., and an abridged list of the *Catholic Epp. (Jas. and Jude wanting). It is generally agreed that the list is of W. origin. The MS is now in the Biblioteca Nazionale at Rome, Fondo Vittorio Emanuele 1235.

W. *Sanday, 'The Cheltenham List of the Canonical Books of the OT and NT and of the Writings of Cyprian', Studia Biblica et Ecclesiastica, 3, § 6 (1891), pp. 217–325.

monachism. See MONASTICISM.

Monarchianism. A theological movement in the 2nd and 3rd cents. In its attempt to safeguard *Monotheism and the Unity ('Monarchy') of the Godhead, the movement became heretical, as it failed to do justice to the independent subsistence of the Son. There were two distinct groups of Monarchian theologians. (1) The '*Adoptionist' or 'Dynamic' Monarchians, who included *Artemon, two persons named *Theodotus, and perhaps also *Paul of Samosata. They maintained that Jesus was God only in the sense that a power or influence from the Father rested upon His human person. (2) The 'Modalist' Monarchians or *Sabellians, of whom the most notable were *Noetus, *Praxeas, and Sabellius. They held that in the Godhead the only differentiation was a mere succession of modes or operations. They were also called '*Patripassians', as it was a corollary of their doctrine that the Father suffered as the Son. The term monarchia, in itself susceptible of a perfectly orthodox meaning, was used as a slogan by *Tertullian's opponents (Adv. Praxean, 3 and 9) who thus came to be known as 'Monarchians'.

A. *Harnack, History of Dogma (Eng. tr.), 3 (1897), ch. 1, pp. 1–118. E. Evans in introd. to Tertullian, Adversus Praxean (London, 1948), pp. 6–31. J. N. D. Kelly, Early Christian Doctrines (1958; 5th edn., 1977), pp. 115–23. M. Simonetti, 'Sabellio e il Sabellianismo', Studi storico-religiosi, 4 (1980), pp. 7–28. A. Harnack in PRE (3rd edn.), 13 (1903), pp. 303–36, s.v.; G. Bardy in DTC 10 (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 2193–209.

Monarchian Prologues. The short introductory narrative passages prefixed in many MSS of the *Vulgate to each of the four Gospels. They contain brief accounts of the respective evangelists and of their supposed objects in writing the Gospels. Their Latin is very involved and their meaning uncommonly obscure; but it was obviously one of their purposes to inculcate a particular dogmatic position. Until the 20th cent. it was widely held that they were of 2nd–3rd cent. date and came from *Monarchian sources; hence their name. Most recent critics, however, following J. *Chapman, hold that they are *Priscillianist in inspiration and date from the late 4th or early 5th cent. Their undoubtedly close literary relationship with the *Anti-Marcionite Prologues (q.v.) has been variously explained.

Text conveniently pr. by H. *Lietzmann in Kleine Texte, no. 1 (1902), pp. 12–16; also in Regul (see below). P. Corssen, Monarchianische Prologe zu den vier Evangelien (TU 15, Heft 1; 1896); J. Chapman, OSB, Notes on the Early History of the Vulgate Gospels (1908), pp. 217–88. J. Regul, Die antimarcionitischen Evangelienprologe (Vetus Latina. Ergänzende Schriftenreihe aus der Geschichte der Lateinischen Bibel, 6; 1969), esp. pp. 40–74 (incl. text) and 207–67. H. Chadwick, Priscillian of Avila (Oxford, 1976), pp. 102–9.

monastery. The house of a monastic community of *monks or *nuns. The modern custom of using the word to describe all religious houses of men and of calling houses of nuns '*convents' has no authority behind it. The Lat. monasterium, with its English form '*minster', was formerly applied vaguely to large churches, whether served by religious or secular priests.

Monastic Breviary. The *Breviary formerly used by monks and nuns following the Rule of St *Benedict. It developed out of the directions given by St Benedict in chs. 8–19 of his rule, and was revised by *Paul V (1608–11) on the lines of the Roman Breviary. Among its distinctive features were a different distribution of the Psalms, the omission of the *Nunc Dimittis at *Compline, and differences in the text of some of the hymns. It has been replaced by the four alternative forms of the *Office provided in the Thesaurus Liturgiae Monasticae Horarum (1977).

monasticism. Christian monasticism is motivated by a desire to seek God through a life of *asceticism and *prayer. It is the oldest form of Christian *religious life which exists today. It is generally considered to be fundamentally different from non-Christian monasticism because the Christian monk seeks God through following Christ, and believes himself to have received a personal call from God to lead the monastic life on a permanent basis. The two main forms of the monastic life are the eremitical or *hermit life, and the *cenobitical or common life. Men leading the monastic life are called *monks; women are called *nuns.

Monasticism involves a celibate life and a certain amount of seclusion from the world, normally including the renunciation of private property. Prayer, reading, and work form the framework of the monk's daily life, which is so structured as to facilitate his progress towards his spiritual goal. Unlike some later forms of the religious life, monasticism does not have the pursuit of some specific work of charity as its secondary purpose. The principal duty of the monk is to offer praise to God within the confines of the monastery; in cenobitic monasticism the liturgy, and particularly the Divine *Office, came to play a central part in monastic prayer. Monastic work may take any form. Traditionally it includes agriculture, teaching, art, and all kinds of scholarly research. In the Middle Ages copying MSS was a work often associated with monks. In both E. and W., the practice of appointing monks as bishops has meant that monasticism has had a considerable impact on the life of the Church as a whole, and in the Middle Ages monks and nuns were among the chief teachers of Europe and an influential civilizing force.

The roots of monasticism should probably be seen in the ascetical movements of the early Church. Its development in Egypt in the 4th cent. was of particular importance; St *Antony and St *Pachomius are generally seen as the forerunners of the eremitical and cenobitical life respectively. Syria, Palestine, and Asia Minor also saw a rapid development of monasticism.

In the W., although there were independent ascetical movements, E. monastic tradition became increasingly important as the monastic literature of the E. became known in the 5th cent., through the translations of *Rufinus and St *Jerome, and the writings of John *Cassian and others. Cassian, together with the anonymous Regula Magistri, had a strong influence on St *Benedict, who wrote his Rule for cenobitical monasteries in the early 6th cent. (see BENEDICT, RULE OF ST). The E. monastic tradition, as interpreted in the W., was also influential in the development of monasticism in *Ireland, with its more vigorous ascetical traditions. Irish monasticism was in turn brought to Europe, and the Rule of St *Columbanus was widely used in the 7th cent.; however by the 9th cent. the Rule of St Benedict had obtained dominance in W. Europe (see BENEDICTINE ORDER). The new forms of religious life which began in the W. in the Middle Ages, the *canons regular and the *mendicant friars, borrowed many of their institutions from monasticism. The 11th to 14th cents. saw the institution of many new monastic orders following the Rule of St Benedict (notably the *Cistercian Order), and also the *Carthusian Order (the only monastic order in the W. which does not follow the Rule of St Benedict) which practises a more eremitical form of life. In the 16th cent. monastic life disappeared in the Reformed Churches, but it continued (often in a flourishing condition) in RC countries until the French Revolution and Napoleonic conquests, when it came close to extinction. A revival took place in the mid-19th cent. in many European countries, and monasticism spread to N. America and *Australia. In the 20th cent. monasticism has begun to take root in Africa, Asia, and S. America.

Monasticism also flourished in the Byzantine empire, esp. in Constantinople and its environs. Here it enjoyed great influence within society and monks took part in the theological and ecclesiastical controversies of the time. Although monasticism in the E. never divided into different vocations and orders, as it did in the W., there are several forms of the tradition. The main distinction is between the ancient lavra or skete on the one hand, and monasteries on the other. The former groups together monks living an eremitical life, while monasteries may be either cenobitic (with a strict common life) or *idiorrhythmic, in which the monks are relatively free to choose their own way of life. The doctrine and practice of the Desert Fathers, of St *Basil the Great and St *Theodore of Studios, are of great importance, but there is no single rule in the E. with the same authority as that held by the Rule of St Benedict in the W. Monasticism spread with Christianity to the Slav countries; St Antony of Pechersk (983–1073) founded monasteries in Kiev, and in the 14th cent. the influence of St *Sergius of Radonezh prompted the establishment of a flourishing monastic life round Moscow. The 19th cent. saw a strong revival in Russian monasticism, which continued until 1917. In Orthodox monasticism a special place is held by Mount *Athos in Greece, which is inhabited by monks from all the Orthodox Churches, and which continues today, albeit with diminished numbers.

See also under the various monastic orders mentioned above; also RELIGIOUS ORDERS IN ANGLICANISM.

There is an immense literature; many of the principal items are listed under the separate orders. Useful survey of existing orders and congregations in M. Heimbucher, Die Orden und Kongregationen der katholischen Kirche (3rd edn., 2 vols., 1933–4). [M.] D. *Knowles, From Pachomius to Ignatius: A Study in the Constitutional History of the Religious Orders (Sarum Lectures, 1964–5; Oxford, 1966); id., Christian Monasticism (1969). C. J. Peifer, OSB, Monastic Spirituality (New York [1966]). P. Levi, The Frontiers of Paradise: A Study of Monks and Monasticism (1987). Good introd. on early monasticism by T. Fry, OSB (ed.), RB 1980: The Rule of St Benedict (Collegeville, Minn. [1981]), pp. 3–64. K. Heussi, Der Ursprung des Mönchtums (Tübingen, 1936). D. J. Chitty, The Desert a City: An Introduction to the History of Egyptian and Palestinian Monasticism under the Christian Empire (Birkbeck Lectures for 1958–9; Oxford, 1966). A. Vööbus, History of Asceticism in the Syrian Orient (CSCO 184 and 197; 1958–60). A. J. Festugière, OP (ed.), Les Moines d'Orient (4 vols. in 5, 1961–5; primary texts tr. into Fr., with introd.). B. Lohse, Askese und Mönchtum in der Antike und in der alten Kirche (Religion und Kultur der alten Mittelmeerwelt in Parallelforschungen, 1; 1969). H. Bacht, Die Vermächtnis des Ursprungs: Studien zum frühen Mönchtum (Studien zur Theologie des geistlichen Lebens, 5 and 8; 1972–83). G. M. Colombás, OSB, El monacato primitivo (Biblioteca de Autores Cristianos, 2 vols., 1974–5). F. Prinz, Askese und Kultur: Vor- und frühbenediktinisches Mönchtum an der Wiege Europas (Munich [1980]). Id., Frühes Mönchtum im Frankenreich: Kultur und Gesellschaft in Gallien, den Rheinlanden und Bayern am Beispiel der monastischen Entwicklung (4. bis 8. Jahrhundert) (Munich, 1965; 2nd edn., repr. with additional material, Darmstadt, 1988).

J. Ryan, SJ, Irish Monasticism: Origins and Early Development (1931). M. Pacaut, Les ordres monastiques et religieux au moyen âge (1970), pp. 3–115 and 147–69. Useful collections of essays ed. K. S. Frank, Askese und Mönchtum in der alten Kirche (Wege der Forschungen, 409; 1975); F. Prinz (ed.), Mönchtum und Gesellschaft im Frühmittelalter (ibid. 312; 1976). [M.] D. Knowles, The Monastic Order in England, 943–1216 (Cambridge, 1940; 2nd edn., 1963); id., The Religious Orders in England (3 vols., ibid., 1948–59). Id. and R. N. Hadcock, Medieval Religious Houses, England and Wales (1953; rev. edn., 1971); D. E. Easson, Medieval Religious Houses, Scotland (1957); A. [O.] Gwynn and R. N. Hadcock, Medieval Religious Houses, Ireland (1970). On Orthodox monasticism, see also I. Smolitsch, Russisches Mönchtum: Entstehung, Entwicklung und Wesen 988–1917 (Das östliche Christentum, NF 10–11; 1953). J. M. Hussey, 'Byzantine Monasticism' in id. (ed.), C.Med.H. (2nd edn.), 4 (pt. 2; 1967), pp. 161–84, with bibl. pp. 439–43. G. Barone Adesi, Monachesimo Ortodosso d'Oriente e Diritto Romano nel Tardo Antico (Università di Roma Pubblicazioni dell'Istituto di Diritto Romano e dei Diritti dell'Oriente Mediterraneo, 65; 1990). G. Constable, Medieval Monasticism: A Select Bibliography (Toronto Medieval Bibliographies, 6; 1976). J. Leclercq, OSB, J. Gribomont, OSB, and others in DIP 5 (1978), cols. 1672–742, s.v. 'Monachesimo'; A. Solignac, SJ, and others in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 1524–617, s.v. 'Monachisme', both with bibl. See also works cited under individual orders, esp. the BENEDICTINE ORDER.

Monasticon Anglicanum. The title under which Sir William *Dugdale published a vast collection of monastic charters and other sources relating to the history of English monasteries and collegiate churches in the Middle Ages. It was a co-operative work based in the main on the collections of Roger Dodsworth, and issued in three vols. in 1655, 1661, and 1673 respectively.

The best edn. is that of J. Caley, H. Ellis, and B. Bandinel (6 vols., London, 1817–30; new edn., 8 vols., 1846).

Mone, Franz Joseph (1796–1871), German historian and liturgical scholar. He was a native of Baden and studied at Heidelberg University, where he was professor from 1819 to 1827. From 1827 to 1831 he taught at Louvain, returned to Heidelberg in 1831, and in 1835 was appointed Director of the Baden Archives, a post he held till 1868. He did important research work on Latin medieval literature and early German history. His chief liturgical publication was his Lateinische und griechische Messen aus dem zweiten bis sechsten Jahrhundert (1850), which contains the text of eleven (properly, seven) Masses of the pure Gallican type, notable for the absence of all reference to the cycle of liturgical feasts. He also published a collection of medieval hymns, Lateinische Hymnen des Mittelalters (1853–5).

The 'Masses of Mone' are repr. in J. P. Migne, PL 138. 863–82; crit. edn. by L. C. Mohlberg, OSB, Missale Gallicanum Vetus (Rerum Ecclesiasticarum Documenta, Series Maior, Fontes, 3; Rome, 1958), pp. 74–91. A. *Wilmart, OSB, 'L'Âge et l'ordre des messes de Mone', R. Bén. 28 (1911), pp. 377–90. L. Eizenhöfer, 'Arator in einer Contestio der Mone-Messen und in einer Mailändischen Praefation', ibid. 63 (1953), pp. 329–33, with further refs.

Monica, St (*c.*331–87), mother of St *Augustine of Hippo (q.v.). (In the oldest MSS the spelling is 'Monnica'.) Presumably a native of Tagaste, she was of Christian upbringing. Her husband, Patricius, a vir curialis, was a pagan of apparently dissolute habits and violent temper, whom she eventually won over to the faith; he became a *catechumen when Augustine was about 15. At the age of 40 Monica was left a widow. Of her three children (Augustine, Navigius, Perpetua), Augustine was the eldest; and, in acc. with a common custom of the time, Monica had him enrolled as a catechumen without having him baptized. Apprehensive at her son's waywardness she earnestly prayed for his conversion, and after Augustine had set out for Italy (383) she resolved to follow him. From *Rome she pursued him to Milan, where she came under the influence of St *Ambrose, took a devout part in public worship and witnessed her son's conversion. She and Augustine then retired to Cassiciacum, where she appears as an interlocutor in the dialogues 'De Ordine' and 'De Beata Vita'. Having set out with Augustine on his return to Africa, she died at Ostia on the way.

A cult of St Monica began to develop in the later Middle Ages and in 1430 *Martin V transferred her supposed relics from Ostia to Rome, where they rest in the church of S. Agostino. She has often been chosen as the patron of associations of Christian mothers. Feast day, 27 Aug. (formerly, 4 May, as in the American BCP, 1979).

The main source is St Augustine, Confessions, bk. 9. AASS, Mai. 1 (1680), pp. 473–92. Modern Lives by L. V. É. Bougaud (Paris, 1865; Eng. trs. by Lady Herbert of Lea, 1894, and by Mrs Edward Hazeland, 1886, repr. Chumleigh, Devon, 1983) and L. Cristiani (Paris, 1959). P. Henry, SJ, La Vision d'Ostie: Sa place dans la vie et l'œuvre de St Augustin (1938). A. Mandouze, Prosopographie Chrétienne du Bas-Empire, 1: Prosopographie de l'Afrique Chrétienne (303–533) (1982), pp. 758–62. H. C. G. *Moule in DCB 3 (1882), pp. 932–4, s.v.; H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 11 (pt. 2; 1934), cols. 2232–56, s.v.

Monism. The philosophy which seeks to explain all that is in terms of a single reality. The term was first used by C. *Wolff. Typical exponents of different varieties of Monism are the earliest Greek philosophers, e.g. Thales of Miletus (who held that everything was a form of water), B. *Spinoza, and G. W. F. *Hegel. Modern forms of Monism (E. H. *Haeckel) are often esp. concerned to eliminate the dualism of the physical and the psychical by postulating a reality transcending these, of which both are modes. Materialism is another form of Monism. All forms of Monism are in conflict with the Christian belief in a radical distinction between the uncreated God and the created order.

monk (Gk. μοναχός, from μόνος, 'single' or 'one alone'). The original meaning of the word is uncertain. In popular use it is applied to any member of a *religious community of men, living under vows of chastity, poverty, and obedience. Its use is properly confined to *hermits or members of a monastic community, whose principal duty is to offer praise to God within the confines of the *monastery. The term is therefore not properly used of other religious (such as *canons regular, *mendicant friars, *clerks regular). See also MONASTERY, MONASTICISM.

J. Leclercq, OSB, Études sur le vocabulaire monastique du moyen âge (Studia Anselmiana, 48; 1961), pp. 7–38; F.-E. Morard, 'Monachos, Moine. Histoire du terme grec jusqu'au 4ᵉ siècle', Freiburger Zeitschrift für Philosophie und Theologie, 20 (1973), pp. 332–411; E. A. Judge, 'The Earliest Use of Monachos for "Monk" (P. Coll. Youtie 77) and the Origins of Monasticism', Jahrbuch für Antike und Christentum, 20 (1977), pp. 72–89.

Monnica, St. See MONICA, ST.

Monogenes, The (Gk. μονογενής, 'only-begotten'). The hymn beginning Ὁ Μονογενὴς Υἱὸς καὶ Λόγος τοῦ Θεοῦ addressed to the Triumphant Redeemer which forms the conclusion of the second *antiphon in the *Enarxis of the Byzantine Liturgies. It also occurs in the Liturgies of St *James and St *Mark, where it is found at the *Little Entrance, probably its original position. It is traditionally ascribed to the Emp. *Justinian (527–65).

Gk. text in Brightman, LEW, pp. 365 f. J. Puyade, OSB, 'Le Tropaire Ὁ Μονογενής', Revue de l'Orient chrétien, 17 (1912), pp. 253–67, with Syriac and Gk. text; V. Grumel, AA, 'L'Auteur et la date de composition du tropaire Ὁ Μονογενής', ÉO 22 (1923), pp. 398–418. J. Breck, 'The Troparion Monogenes: An Orthodox Symbol of Faith', St Vladimir's Theological Quarterly, 26 (1982), pp. 203–28.

monolatry (Gk. μόνος, 'single' and λατρεία, 'worship'). Restriction of worship to one god, when other gods may be held to exist. The term was introduced *c.*1880 by J. *Wellhausen and taken up by W. R. *Smith. It has been held by some OT historians to be a necessary stage in the transition from polytheism to monotheism, and to have marked Israel's religious condition from the time of the *Sinai Covenant (Exod. 24) to that of the prophets.

Monophysitism (Gk. μόνος, 'only one', and φύσις, 'nature'). The doctrine that in the Incarnate Christ there is only one nature, not two. Monophysitism which represents a strict form of *Alexandrian Christology, covers a variety of positions, some capable of orthodox interpretation, others not. The term 'Monophysite' was first used in the aftermath of the Council of *Chalcedon (451) to describe all those who rejected the Council's Definition that the Incarnate Christ is one Person 'in two Natures', and upheld, as their key formula the phrase of St *Cyril of Alexandria' 'one Incarnate Nature of the Word'. It is still sometimes used to refer to the *Oriental Orthodox Churches.

*Eutyches taught a heretical form of Monophysitism, namely that after the Incarnation there was only one nature in Christ, and that nature was not 'consubstantial with us'. The Eutychian position was condemned at the Council of Chalcedon and seems never to have been widely held; it has likewise been explicitly condemned at the outset by most other Monophysites (and all the Oriental Orthodox Churches).

Moderate Monophysitism, on the other hand, teaches that in the Incarnate Christ there was 'one Nature out of two' (i.e. Divine and Human), a phrase which was prob. once in the draft of the Chalcedonian Definition. Owing to their different understandings of the meaning of the term 'nature', the Monophysites rejected the final form of the Definition ('One Person in Two Natures') on the grounds that it obscured the full reality of the Incarnation and appeared to them to verge on *Nestorianism. Among the early leaders of moderate Monophysitism (which remained implacably opposed to the Chalcedonian Definition and to the *Tome of Leo) were *Timothy Aelurus and *Peter the Fuller; the most important theologian was *Severus of Antioch.

Many variant forms of Monophysitism soon developed. An extreme type was that held by the followers of *Julian, Bp. of Halicarnassus ('Julianists'), who taught the incorruptibility and immortality of the Body of the Human Christ from the first moment of the Incarnation; this group was dubbed by their opponents '*Aphthartodocetae', or 'Phantasiastae'. Opposed to them were the followers of Severus, Patr. of Antioch, who held a doctrine much closer to Catholic teaching and whose only divergence from orthodoxy may have been terminological; they in turn were termed by the Julianists 'Corrupticolae'.

During the later 5th and the 6th cents. many attempts were made at reconciling the Monophysites to the Catholics. The Emp. *Zeno (474–91) drew up the *Henoticon (q.v.) to replace the Chalcedonian definition; but his formula was rejected by the Pope as well as by the extremist Egyptian Monophysites and resulted in the *Acacian schism. *Justinian I (527–65) sought to win them over on several occasions, but his attempts failed, perhaps more for political than theological reasons. Some further attempts were made by later emperors, in particular Justin II (565–78) and *Heraclius (610/11–61), but by then positions had hardened and separate hierarchies had emerged to constitute the *Armenian, *Coptic, *Ethiopian, and *Syrian Orthodox Churches; the political separation of Armenia, Syria, and Egypt from the Byzantine Empire, brought about by the Arab invasions of the 7th cent., then removed these Churches from the sphere of Byzantine influence and control. In modern times, however, there have been renewed contacts both between the Oriental Orthodox and the Orthodox Churches and the RC Church, and a large measure of agreement on Christology is reflected in the Common Declarations of Pope *Paul VI and the Coptic Orthodox Pope Shenouda III in 1973 and that of Pope *John Paul II and the Syrian Orthodox Patriarch Ignatius Zakka II in 1984.

In modern times the subject has attracted much attention. Important new work in A. Grillmeier, SJ, and H. Bacht, SJ (eds.), Das Konzil von Chalcedon: Geschichte und Gegenwart (3 vols., 1951–4), notably the essays in vol. 1 by J. Lebon, C. Moeller, and M. Richard; this treatise has full bibl. refs. W. H. C. Frend, The Rise of the Monophysite Movement (Cambridge, 1972). The radical differences between the Eutychian and Severian doctrines were first emphasized in J. Lebon, Le Monophysisme sévérien (Louvain, 1909). R. Draguet, Julien d'Halicarnasse et sa controverse avec Sévère d'Antioche sur l'incorruptibilité du corps du Christ (ibid., 1924). A. A. Luce, Monophysitism Past and Present: A Study in Christology (1920). W. A. Wigram, The Separation of the Monophysites (1923). R. G. Roberson, CSP, 'The Modern Roman Catholic-Oriental Orthodox Dialogue', One in Christ, 21 (1985), pp. 238–54. G. Krüger in HERE 8 (1915), pp. 811–17, s.v.; M. Jugie, AA, in DTC 10 (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 2216–51, s.v. 'Monophysisme', with bibl.; id. in EC 8 (1952), cols. 1299–302, s.v. 'Monofisiti'.

Monotheism. Belief in one personal and transcendent God, as opposed to polytheism on the one hand and *pantheism on the other. Acc. to traditional Christian teaching it was the original religion of man revealed to our first parents, but subsequently lost by most men as a consequence of the Fall. In the 19th cent., under the influence of the newly aroused interest in comparative religion and natural science, this account of the beginnings of Monotheism was largely abandoned in favour of the evolutionary theory. Acc. to this view, defended by E. B. Tylor and many others, the religious beliefs of mankind have progressed from *animism by way of polytheism to Monotheism as the last link in a long chain of development. Today this theory is less widely held. It is pointed out that on the one hand neither *Judaism nor Christianity nor *Islam, the three great monotheistic religions properly so called, have grown up as developments of polytheism but rather in opposition to it, and the same may be said of the Monotheism of Greek philosophy. On the other hand, known polytheistic religions do not show signs of issuing in Monotheism, whereas, acc. to some scholars, there is evidence among primitive peoples for a residue of Monotheism, belief in the 'High God', inherited from a forgotten past. See also HENOTHEISM.

It is sometimes alleged against Christianity that it does not profess pure Monotheism because of its dogma of the Holy *Trinity (q.v.). Christian orthodoxy, however, has consistently denied this charge, maintaining that though there are Three Persons in the One Godhead, yet, as the *Athanasian Creed affirms, there are 'not three Gods, but One God'.

The subject is regularly discussed in works on the philosophy of religion and Christian doctrine. W. Schmidt, Der Ursprung der Gottesidee (12 vols., 1912–55). E. Peterson, Der Monotheismus als politisches Problem: Ein Beitrag zur Geschichte der politischen Theologie im Imperium Romanum (1935). W. F. Albright, From the Stone Age to Christianity: Monotheism and the Historical Process (Baltimore, 1942; 2nd edn., 1946). P. Hartill, The Unity of God: A Study in Christian Monotheism (1952). O. Keel (ed.), Monotheismus im Alten Israel und seiner Umwelt (Biblische Beiträge, 14; 1980). J. Royce in HERE 8 (1915), pp. 817–21, s.v. [philosophical]; P. Palazzini and L. Vannicelli in EC 8 (1952), cols. 1311–19, s.v. 'Monoteismo'; W. Holsten and F. Baumgärtel in RGG (3rd edn.), 4 (1960), cols. 1109–15, s.v. 'Monotheismus und Polytheismus'. See also bibl. s.v. GOD.

Monothelitism (Gk. μονοθελῆται, from μόνος 'one', and θέλειν, 'to will'; the more correct, but less usual, spelling of the word is 'Monotheletism'). A 7th-cent. heresy confessing only one will in the God-man. The heresy was of political rather than of religious origin, being designed to rally the *Monophysites to their orthodox (*Chalcedonian) fellow-Christians when division endangered the Empire, faced with Persian and later with Islamic invasions. In 624 conferences of the Monophysite leaders with the Emp. *Heraclius resulted in producing a formula seemingly acceptable to both, which asserted two natures in Christ but only one mode of activity (μία ἐνέργεια)—a solution often termed 'monenergism'. It was referred to *Sergius, the Patr. of *Constantinople, who, having found a similar formula in the writings of St *Cyril of Alexandria, approved the Imperial expedient. When, by its means, Cyrus of Alexandria had reconciled a large number of Monophysites to the Church, its success seemed to prove its truth. It was vigorously rejected, however, by *Sophronius of *Jerusalem, whose opposition caused Sergius *c.*634 to write to Pope *Honorius (q.v.). In two unguarded letters the Pope approved the Patriarch's conduct and himself used the unfortunate expression of 'one will' in Christ, which henceforth replaced the 'one energy'. Honorius' term was taken up in the '*Ecthesis' (Ἔκθεσις), probably drawn up by Sergius and issued by Heraclius in 638. This Ecthesis, the chief document of the Monothelites properly so called, forbids the mention of one or two energies and admits only one will (ἓν θέλημα) in Christ. In two Councils held at Constantinople in 638 and 639 the E. Church accepted the Ecthesis. But the successors of Honorius, Severinus, John IV, and Theodore I all condemned Monothelitism, so that the Emp. Constans II, in order to obtain religious peace, withdrew the Ecthesis in 648, replacing it by another document, the so-called *Typos. In it he rejected both the monothelitic and the dyothelitic formulas and forbade their use. This, however, did not solve the problem, and the Typos was condemned at the *Lateran Council of 649. The controversy was finally settled by the Council of Constantinople in 681, which confirmed the decisions of a synod held at *Rome in 680. The Council condemned the Monothelitic formulas and their adherents, and proclaimed the existence of two wills in Christ, Divine and human, to be the orthodox faith.

Theologically, the issues at stake in the controversy were closely similar to those raised by Monophysitism (q.v.)

The main sources are preserved in the Acta of the 7th-cent. Councils, pr. in the standard collections of J. *Hardouin and J. D. *Mansi; much material also in the writings of St *Maximus the Confessor and St *Anastasius of Sinai (q.v.). Primary docs. are listed, with refs., in CPG 4 (1980), pp. 167–72 (nos. 9369–97). L. J. Tixeront, Histoire des dogmes, 3 (1912), pp. 160–92. V. Grumel, AA, 'Recherches sur l'histoire du monothélisme', ÉO 27 (1928), pp. 6–16, 257–77; 28 (1929), pp. 19–34, 272–82; and 29 (1930), pp. 16–28. G. Krüger in PRE (3rd edn.), 13 (1903), pp. 401–13, s.v. 'Monotheleten', with full bibl.; id. in HERE 8 (1915), pp. 821–5, s.v.; M. Jugie, AA, in DTC 10 (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 2307–23, s.v. 'Monothélisme'; A. Mayer, OSB, in EC 8 (1952), cols. 1319–24, s.v. 'Monotelismo', with bibl.

Monsignor, usually abbreviated Mgr. In the RC Church, an ecclesiastical title attached to an office or distinction ordinarily bestowed by the Pope. It is also used in some countries, e.g. France (in the form Monseigneur), as a regular style for archbishops and bishops.

monstrance. The vessel, also known as an 'ostensorium', used for exposing relics or, more usually, the Eucharistic Host for veneration. In its modern form it normally consists of a disc-shaped receptacle, framed by gold or silver rays, with a glass window through which the Host may be seen by the people. When the cultus of the Blessed Sacrament began to spread in the later Middle Ages, the Host was at first venerated in a closed *ciborium, but later a transparent cylindrical container became customary, and by the late 15th cent. the monstrance had assumed its present shape.

Braun, AG (1932), pp. 348–411, with pls. 62–78. M. Andrieu, 'Aux origines du culte du Saint-Sacrement. Reliquaires et monstrances eucharistiques', Anal. Boll. 68 (1950), pp. 397–418. L. Perpeet-Frech, Die gotischen Monstranzen im Rheinland (Bonner Beiträge zur Kunstwissenschaft, 7; Düsseldorf, 1964). C. C. Kovacs, 'Monstrances', in Eucharistic Vessels of the Middle Ages: Exhibition Catalogue, Busch-Reisinger Museum (Cambridge, Mass., 1975), pp. 97–109.

Montagu, or Montague, Richard (1577–1641), successively Bp. of *Chichester and *Norwich. Educated at Eton and King's College, Cambridge, he held two country benefices before he was appointed Dean of *Hereford in 1616, and in the following year Canon of *Windsor. An eloquent but somewhat intemperate champion of the C of E, he claimed 'to stand in the gap against puritanism and popery, the Scylla and Charybdis of Ancient Piety'. His Appello Caesarem, a defence against charges of Popery and *Arminianism, was condemned by Parliament (1626), but this did not prevent its bringing Montagu into favour with *Charles I, who appointed him to the see of Chichester in 1628. At both Chichester and Norwich, whither he was translated in 1638, he showed himself a stern opponent of Puritanism, a faithful shepherd of his dioceses, and a follower of Abp. W. *Laud. An erudite if somewhat cumbrous scholar, his best-known books, apart from his controversial writings, are Eusebii De Demonstratione Evangelica (1628) and De Originibus Ecclesiasticis (1636).

Extracts in P. E. More and F. L. Cross, Anglicanism (1935), nos. 3, 137, 160, 237. N. [R. N.] Tyacke, Anti-Calvinists: The Rise of English Arminianism c.1590–1640 (Oxford, 1987), esp. pp. 125–67. W. H. *Hutton in DNB 38 (1894), pp. 266–70.

Montaigne, Michel de (1533–92), French essayist. Of recently ennobled family, he was born at Montaigne, near Bordeaux, the son of Pierre Eyquem, a merchant. He was brought up to speak Latin as his first language, and at the age of 6 was sent to the Collège de Guyenne in Bordeaux, where George Buchanan was one of the masters. Later he studied law, prob. at Toulouse. When he was 21 he became a counsellor in the Cours des Aides at Périgueux; from 1557 he served in the Parlement of Bordeaux, with which the Périgueux Cours had merged. In 1559 and again in 1561 he visited the Court at Paris, partly in connection with the religious strife in Guyenne. He married Françoise de La Chassaigne in 1565. On succeeding to the family estates (1568), he sold his office as counsellor in 1570, and in 1571 he retired to the Chateau de Montaigne, planning for a life of studious leisure. He edited the works of his friend Étienne La Boëtie (1530–63), including the Discours de la Servitude Volontaire or Contr'un (1576), and defended his memory against charges of sedition. In the 1570s he also wrote most of the Essais for the first two books, pub. in 1580. He travelled in Italy in 1580–1, and was twice elected Mayor of Bordeaux (in 1581 and 1583). In 1588 he published a new edition of his Essais, adding a third book written after he had ceased to be Mayor in 1585.

For his father, Montaigne translated the Theologia Naturalis of *Raymond of Sebonde (pub. 1569), and the longest of his Essais is his 'Apologia' for Raymond. In this he demonstrates the fallibility of the human mind and its inability to know anything with certainty; he concludes that judgement must be suspended and adopts the famous motto 'Que sais je?'. At the same time, scepticism is used to humble man's pride and defend the Faith, revealed exclusively to the RC Church, by destroying all philosophical and religious certainty based on unaided human reason, and by emphasizing each man's need for grace. The design of the Essais arose from an acute attack of melancholy. Man is body wedded to soul; he should enjoy his being, joyfully grateful for both bodily necessities and spiritual delights, but only a handful of saints privileged by special grace should practise separating body and soul in ecstasy: for most of humanity this leads to madness. Montaigne lived and died a Catholic. He fought for the Catholics in the Wars of Religion; he nevertheless believed toleration to be unavoidable, though it could weaken Christianity. The main impact of his thought came from his scepticism, which in later generations caused his works to be favoured by free-thinkers who ignored his total submission to the Church. After his death, owing to its excessive trust in reason the preface to the Théologie Naturelle was placed on the *Index in 1595, as were the whole of the Essais in 1676. Modern editions of the Essais are normally based less on the posthumous edition of 1595, prepared by his widow and his admirer or fille d'alliance, Marie de Gournay, than on the copy prepared by Montaigne for the printers and covered with numerous additions (known as the exemplaire de Bordeaux).

The best edn. of his complete works is that of A. Armaingaud (12 vols., Paris, 1924–41). Works also ed. A. Thibaudet and M. Rat (ibid., 1962). Eng. tr. his works by D. M. Frame (Stanford, Calif. [1957]; London [1958]). Among the many modern edns. of his Essais, the standard text is that of F. Strowski and others (5 vols., Bordeaux, 1906–33); convenient edn. by P. Villey (3 vols., Paris, 1922–3; ed. V.-L. Saulnier, ibid., 1965). Eng. trs. by J. Florio (London, 1603) and C. Cotton (3 vols., ibid., 1685–6); both frequently republished. Modern Eng. trs. by E. J. Trechmann (2 vols., London, 1927) and by M. A. Screech (ibid., 1991).

Biog. by D. M. Frame (New York and London, 1965); R. Trinquet, La Jeunesse de Montaigne (1972). P. Villey, Les Sources et l'Évolution des Essais de Montaigne (2 vols., 1908; 2nd edn., 1933). The many other studies incl. works by H. Friedrich (Bern, 1949; 2nd edn., 1967), D. M. Frame (Englewood Cliffs, NJ, 1969), R. A. Sayce (London, 1972), P. Burke (Oxford, 1981 [brief]), J. Starobinski (Paris, 1982), M. A. Screech (London, 1983), Y. Bellenger (Paris [1987]), and M. Lazard (ibid. [1992]). H. Janssen, CSSR, Montaigne fidéiste (Nijmegen and Utrecht, 1930). R. H. Popkin, The History of Scepticism from Erasmus to Descartes (Assen, 1960), esp. pp. 44–56. D. L. Schaefer, The Political Philosophy of Montaigne (Ithaca, NY, and London, 1990). P. Bonnet, Bibliographie méthodique et analytique des ouvrages et documents relatifs à Montaigne [to 1975] (1983); H. P. Clive, Bibliographie annotée des ouvrages relatifs à Montaigne publiés entre 1976 et 1985 (Études montaignistes, 4; 1990); R. A. Sayce and D. Maskell, A Descriptive Bibliography of Montaigne's Essais 1580–1700 (1983).

Montalembert, Charles René Forbes (1810–70), French RC historian. He was the son of a French émigré and born in London. An ardent religious *liberal who desired to see the Church freed of State control, he soon associated himself with the movement sponsored by F. R. de *Lamennais and H.-D. *Lacordaire, and enthusiastically supported Lamennais's newspaper, L'Avenir. A journey to Rome to win Papal support, however, proved fruitless, and when in 1832 *Gregory XVI condemned liberalism in his '*Mirari Vos', Montalembert submitted and ceased to propagate his views, though he did not altogether abandon them. From 1848 to 1857 he sat in the French Chamber of Deputies, where he became a vehement champion of Catholic principles. His revived advocacy of liberal views, notably in Des intérêts catholiques au XIX^e siècle (1852), in Le Correspondant, and at the Congress of Malines in 1863, made him an object of dislike to more reactionary Catholics. His historical writings were composed under the influence of the *Romantic Movement. Their style was polished and eloquent, and their purpose edifying, but as works of history they were uncritical. The best known is his Moines d'occident (5 vols., 1860–7; Eng. tr., 1896), which developed out of a study of the life of St *Bernard of Clairvaux.

Collected Works in 9 vols. (Paris, 1860–8). His addresses ed. by C. de Meaux (son-in-law; 3 vols., ibid., 2nd edn., 1892). Lettres à un ami de collège [L. Cornudet] (ibid., 1873); much enlarged edn., ibid., 1905. Letters to F. R. de Lamennais, ed. by G. Goyau and P. de Lallemand (ibid. [1932]); Correspondence with C. Cantù, ed. F. Kaucisvili Melzi d'Eril (Milan, 1969); Catholicisme et Liberté: Correspondance inédite avec le P. Lacordaire, Mgr. de Mérode et A. de Falloux, ed. P. Baron, OP, and others (1970); Lacordaire–Montalembert: Correspondance inédite 1830–1861, ed. L. Le Guillou and A. Duval [OP] (1989). E. Lecanuet, Montalembert d'après son journal et sa correspondance (3 vols., 1895–1902). Shorter Lives by Mrs M. O. Oliphant (2 vols., London, 1873), V. Bucaille (Paris, 1927), and A. Trannoy (ibid., 1947). P. de Lallemand, Montalembert et ses amis dans le romantisme (1830–40) (1927); id., Montalembert et ses relations littéraires avec l'étranger jusqu'en 1840 (1927); A. Trannoy, Le Romantisme politique de Montalembert avant 1843 (1942). A. Latreille, 'Les Dernières Années de Montalembert', Revue d'Histoire de l'Église de France, 54 (1968), pp. 281–314; series of arts. by B. Aspinwall, V. Conzemius, and others, ibid. 56 (1970), pp. 1–137. G. Goyau in CE 10 (1911), pp. 513–16; Y. Marchasson in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 1662–6, both s.v.

Montanism. An apocalyptic movement in the latter half of the 2nd cent. which is to be traced back to one Montanus in Phrygia. It lived in expectation of the speedy outpouring of the Holy Spirit (the Paraclete) on the Church, of which it saw the first manifestation in its own prophets and prophetesses. Montanus himself, who began to prophesy either in 172 (*Eusebius' Chronicle) or 156–7 (*Epiphanius, Haer. 48. 1), proclaimed that the Heavenly Jerusalem would soon descend near Pepuza in Phrygia. Closely associated with him were two women, Prisca and Maximilla.

The movement soon developed ascetic traits which became esp. prominent in an offshoot of Montanism in Roman Africa. Here, where *c.*206 it won the allegiance of *Tertullian (q.v.), it disallowed second marriages, condemned the existing regulations on fasting as too lax, imposing a discipline of its own, and forbade flight in persecution. Tertullian also condemned the current penitential discipline for its leniency and termed the Catholics 'Psychics' (psychici), or 'animal men', as opposed to their own members, who were the 'Pneumatics' (pneumatici) or 'Spirit-filled'.

Certain elements in the movement (enthusiasm, ecstatic prophecy) had their parallels in primitive Christianity, and in modern times it has sometimes been regarded (e.g. by A. *Harnack) as an attempt to revert to primitive fervour in the face of a growing institutionalism and secularization of the Church. More probably the movement is to be understood as an early instance of the apocalyptic groups which have constantly sprung up in Christian history. It was attacked by a large number of orthodox writings most of which have unhappily been lost, among them those of Claudius *Apollinarius, *Miltiades, and *Rhodo. It was formally condemned by Asiatic Synods before AD 200 and also, after some hesitation, by Pope *Zephyrinus.

The chief sources are to be found in P. de Labriolle, Les Sources de l'histoire du montanisme (1913); more selective collection ed. R. E. Heine, The Montanist Oracles and Testimonies (North American Patristic Society Patristic Monograph Series, 14; Macon, Ga., 1989). Among patristic writers they incl. *Hippolytus' Syntagma (lost in its orig. form; but in substance in later writers), Eusebius, HE 5. 16 f., and Epiphanius, Haer. 48; and the later writings of Tertullian. P. de Labriolle, La Crise montaniste (1913), with full bibl.; W. Schepelern, Montanismen og de Phrygiske Kulter (1920; Ger. tr., Tübingen, 1929). B. Poschmann, Paenitentia Secunda: Die kirchliche Busse im ältesten Christentum bis Cyprian und Origenes (1940), pp. 261–348. K. Aland, Kirchengeschichtliche Entwürfe (Gütersloh, 1960), esp. pp. 105–48 ('Bemerkungen zum Montanismus und zur frühchristlichen Eschatologie'); J. M. Ford, 'Was Montanism a Jewish-Christian heresy?', JEH 17 (1966), pp. 145–58; T. D. Barnes, 'The Chronology of Montanism', JTS NS 21 (1970), pp. 403–8; F. Blanchetière, 'Le Montanisme originel', Rev. S.R. 52 (1978), pp. 118–34, and 53 (1979), pp. 1–22. H. Kraft, 'Die Lyoner Martyrer und der Montanismus', in E. Dassmann and K. S. Frank (eds.), Pietas: Festschrift für Bernhard Kötting (Jahrbuch für Antike und Christentum, Ergänzungsband, 8; 1980), pp. 250–66. A. Strobel, Das heilige Land der Montanisten: Eine religionsgeographische Untersuchung (Religionsgeschichtliche Versuche und Vorarbeiten, 37; 1980). G. *Salmon in DCB 3 (1882), pp. 935–45, s.v. 'Montanus'; G. Bardy in DTC 10 (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 2355–70, s.v.; H. Bacht, SJ, in Dict. Sp. 10 (1980), cols. 1670–6, s.v. See also works cited under TERTULLIAN.

Montboissier, Peter of. See PETER THE VENERABLE.

Monte Cassino. The principal monastery of the *Benedictine Order, founded by St *Benedict *c.*529 when he migrated from *Subiaco; it lies midway between Rome and Naples. He and his sister St *Scholastica were buried there. The buildings were destroyed by the Lombards *c.*585, and the monks fled to the *Lateran basilica. The monastery was rebuilt by Abbot Petronax *c.*717, but was destroyed yet again by the Saracens in 884 and by earthquake in 1347. The house reached the peak of its prosperity under Desiderius (Abbot, 1058–87, later Pope Victor III) and Oderisius I (1087–1105), when the church was consecrated (1071) and the fame of the scriptorium established. With varying prosperity it has remained the chief house of the order. In 1866 it was declared a national monument by the Italian government, with the monks as guardians. The buildings were almost totally destroyed in 1944, but have been restored. The rebuilt abbey was reconsecrated by *Paul VI on 24 October 1964. See also CASSINESE CONGREGATION.

Chronica Monsterii Casinensis, ed. H. Hoffmann (MGH, Scriptores, 34; 1980). E. Gattula, OSB, Historia Abbatiae Cassinensis (2 pts., Venice, 1733); id., Ad Historiam Abbatiae Cassinensis Accessiones (2 pts., ibid., 1734), with orig. sources. L. Tosti, OSB, Storia della badia di Monte-Cassino (3 vols., Naples, 1842–3). Series of specialized studies in Miscellanea Cassinese, ossia Nuovi contributi alla storia, alle scienze e arti religiose (Monte Cassino, 1897 ff.). Casinensia: Miscellanea di studi cassinesi pubblicati in occasione del XIV centenario della fondazione della badia di Monte-Cassino (ibid., 1929). T. Leccisotti, OSB, Montecassino: La vita. L'irradiazione (Florence, 1946; 10th edn., 1983; Eng. tr., Monte Cassino, 1987), and other works of this author. H. Bloch, Monte Cassino in the Middle Ages (3 vols., Rome, 1986). Further bibl. in L. H. Cottineau, OSB, Répertoire topo-bibliographique des abbayes et prieurés (Mâcon, 1935), cols. 1913–16. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 11 (pt. 2; 1934), cols. 2451–84, s.v. 'Mont-Cassin'; H. Bloch in NCE 9 (1967), pp. 1080–2, s.v.; A. Pantoni, OSB, in DIP 6 (1980), cols. 80–9, s.v.

Montefiore, Claude Joseph Goldsmid (1858–1938), biblical student and prominent advocate of 'Liberal Judaism'. A Jew by religion, he was educated at Balliol College, Oxford, under B. *Jowett, with T. H. *Green as his tutor, who imbued him with an idealist outlook on life. His writings, based on a wide, rather than deep, learning, include a set of *Hibbert Lectures on The Origin and Development of the Religion of the Ancient Hebrews (1892); The Synoptic Gospels (2 vols., 1909; 2nd edn., much rev., 1927); Liberal Judaism and Hellenism (1918); and Rabbinic Literature and Gospel Teachings (1930). In his insistence on the importance of the Rabbinic writings for the understanding of the NT, he was at one with his friend Israel *Abrahams, with whom he worked in close conjunction.

Extracts of his writings, with introd., ed. E. Kessler, An English Jew (1989). Appreciation by F. C. Burkitt in Speculum Religionis: Being Essays . . . presented . . . to . . . Montefiore (Oxford, 1929), pp. 1–17, incl. list of his works. L. Cohen, Some Recollections of Claude Goldsmid Montefiore (1940), with bibl. M. G. Bowler, Claude Montefiore and Christianity (Brown Judaic Studies, 157; Atlanta, Ga. [1988]). H. Danby in DNB, 1931–1940, pp. 624 f.

Montes Pietatis. In the later Middle Ages, charitable institutions for lending money in cases of necessity. The first was started by Michael Northburgh (d. 1361), Bp. of London, but failed because it charged no interest. From the middle of the 15th cent., Italian *Franciscans established many successful montes which charged a low contribution towards expenses. They were opposed esp. by the *Dominicans on the ground that they offended against the canonical prohibition of *usury, but were approved by *Leo X at the Fifth *Lateran Council in 1515. They then spread to the Low Countries, France, Spain, and Germany, but failed in England. In modern times they have been superseded in some countries by secular institutions with similar objects.

H. Holzapfel, OFM, Die Anfänge der Montes Pietatis (1462–1515) (Veröffentlichungen aus dem kirchenhistorischen Seminar München, 11; 1903). V. Meneghin, Bernardino da Feltre e i Monti di Pietà (Vicenza, 1974), with refs. and docs. A. McPadden in NCE 9 (1967), pp. 1086 f., s.v.; J. Heers in Lexikon des Mittelalters, 6 (1993), cols. 794 f., s.v. 'Montes', with bibl.

Montesquieu, Charles Louis Joseph de Secondat, Baron de la Brède et de (1689–1755), French historian and philosopher. He was educated by the *Oratorians at Juilly and studied law at Bordeaux, where he became counsellor of the Parlement of Guyenne in 1714, but soon embraced a literary career. In 1721 he published anonymously his Lettres persanes, a witty satire on European society which had a resounding success. The Lettres criticized Louis XIV's government and the Catholic Church, ridiculing esp. the dogmas of the *Trinity and of *transubstantiation, and accusing Christianity of the worst crimes. In 1728 he was elected a member of the French Academy, and, after travelling for several years in Europe and England, he wrote his Considérations sur les causes de la grandeur et de la décadence des Romains (also anonymous; 1734). Its thesis was that the history of empires was governed by moral and physical causes, and, apart from the writings of G. B. *Vico, it may be considered the first important work on the philosophy of history. In 1748 Montesquieu published at Geneva his most important work, the Esprit des lois (2 vols.), strongly influenced by J. *Locke and Viscount Bolingbroke, and defending the English principle of the division of powers as the safeguard of liberty and the way to an ideal form of government. In L'Esprit des lois he takes a more positive view of religion than in Lettres persanes, regarding Christianity as a powerful moral force in society which, though directly occupied only with the next life, makes for order and happiness in this; but he strongly attacked clerical celibacy and doctrinal intolerance, and the book was placed on the *Index in 1752. Montesquieu's ideas were later taken up and developed by A. de Tocqueville (1805–59).

The classic edn. of his works is that by E. Laboulaye (7 vols., Paris, 1875–9); more recent edns. by R. Callois (2 vols., ibid., 1949–51) and by A. Masson and others (3 vols., ibid., 1950–5). Eng. tr. of works so far pub., 4 vols., London, 1777. The best biog. is that of R. Shackleton (Oxford, 1961). Other studies incl. those by J. Dedieu ('Les Grands Philosophes', 1913; also shorter study, 'Le Livre de l'étudiant', 12 [1941]), G. Lanson ('Réformateurs sociaux', 1932), and P. Gascar (Paris [1989]). Introd. by J. N. Shklar (Past Masters, Oxford, 1987). E. Carcassonne, Montesquieu et la problème de la Constitution Française au XVIII^e siècle [1927]. F. T. H. Fletcher, Montesquieu and English Politics, 1750–1800 (1939). E. Vidal, Saggio sul Montesquieu (Pubblicazioni dell'Istituto di Filosofia del Diritto dell'Università di Roma, 17; 1950); G. C. Vlachos, La Politique de Montesquieu (1974); C. Dédéyan, Montesquieu ou les lumières d'Albion (1990). C. Rosso, Montesquieu moralista (Pisa, 1965). P. Kra, Religion in Montesquieu's Lettres persanes (Studies on Voltaire and the Eighteenth Century, 72; Geneva, 1970). D. C. Cabeen, Montesquieu: A Bibliography (New York, 1947), with suppl. in Revue Internationale de Philosophie, 9 (1955), pp. 409–34; C. Rosso, 'Montesquieu présent: études et travaux depuis 1960', Le XVIII^e Siècle, 8 (1976), pp. 373–404. C. Constantin in DTC 10 (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 2377–88, s.v.; R. Shackleton (rev.) in EB (1985 edn.), micropaedia, 8, pp. 283–5, s.v.

Montfaucon, Bernard de (1655–1741), one of the foremost *Maurist patristic scholars. After embarking on a military career he joined the Maurist Benedictine congregation in 1676. He produced splendid editions of St *Athanasius (3 vols., 1698), of the '*Hexapla' of *Origen (2 vols., 1713), and of St *Chrysostom (13 vols., 1718–38), this last using MSS which he found during his searches in Italy in 1698–1701. In his Collectio nova patrum et scriptorum graecorum (2 vols., 1706), he printed for the first time many previously unedited texts. His Palaeographia graeca (1708; repr. Farnborough, 1970) virtually created the science of Greek palaeography. His other writings include his survey of MSS in his Bibliotheca Bibliothecarum (2 vols., 1739), the work by which he is prob. best known, treatises incorporating masses of material on French historical antiquities, and a defence (1699) of the Benedictine edition of the works of St *Augustine against continued *Jesuit attacks.

E. de Broglie, La Société de l'abbaye de Saint-Germain-des-Prés au XVIII^e siècle: Bernard de Montfaucon et les Bernardins (2 vols., 1891). M. Valéry, Correspondance inédite de Mabillon et de Montfaucon avec l'Italie (3 vols., 1846). List of Montfaucon's works with short Life in [R. P. Tassin,] Histoire littéraire de la congrégation de Saint-Maur, 2 (Brussels, 1770), pp. 585–616. H. *Leclercq, OSB, in DACL 11 (pt. 2; 1934), cols. 2608–72; E. Peterson in EC 8 (1952), cols. 1374–6, for further bibl.

Month's Mind. The *Requiem Mass until 1970 celebrated on the 30th day after death or burial. The custom of observing this day as the conclusion of a thirty-days mourning was known already to the Jews (cf. Num. 20: 29; Deut. 34: 8) and the Greeks. For the W. Church it is attested in the 'Dialogues' of St *Gregory the Great (4. 55) and the *Gelasian Sacramentary, which has a special Mass for it.

Montini, Giovanni Battista. See PAUL VI.

Mont-St-Michel. The abbey and fortress of this name lie on a rocky island a mile or so off the north coast of France, near St-Malo. An oratory is said to have been established there by St Aubert, Bp. of Avranches (early 8th cent.), in obedience to the commands of an apparition of St *Michael. In 966 a *Benedictine monastery was founded on the mount, to which a fortress was added later; and the sanctuary gradually became the most famous of all shrines dedicated to St Michael. The monastery is now secularized, but the buildings remain, surmounted by a Gothic spire on which is a statue of St Michael. St Michael's Mount, Cornwall, is an English counterpart on a smaller scale and of less fame.

Millénaire monastique du Mont-Saint-Michel, ed. J. Laporte, OSB, and others (6 vols., 1967 ff.), with full bibl. refs. P. Gout, Le Mont-Saint-Michel: Histoire de l'abbaye et de la ville. Étude archéologique et architecturale des monuments (2 vols., 1910; rev. edn., 1978); G. Bazin, Le Mont Saint-Michel (1933). H. J. L. J. Massé, A Short History and Description of the Church and Abbey of Mont S. Michel (Bell's Handbooks to Continental Churches, 1902). J. J. G. Alexander, Norman Illumination at Mont St Michel 966–1100 (Oxford, 1970), with 'History of Abbey to c. 1100', pp. 1–21, incl. detailed bibl. refs. J. Hourlier, OSB, in DIP 6 (1980), cols. 127–9, s.v.

Montserrat (Lat. Mons Serratus). This celebrated mountain near Barcelona is surrounded by legends which locate there the Castle of the Holy Grail. The *Benedictine monastery, whose church enshrines the famous image of 'Our Lady of Montserrat', was founded between 1025 and 1035 by Abbot Oliba of Ripoll (d. 1046) and raised to the rank of an abbey in 1409. In 1493 it joined the congregation of Valladolid, and soon became a popular place of pilgrimage. One of its most distinguished visitors was St *Ignatius Loyola, who hung up his sword there after his conversion. Partly destroyed in the Napoleonic wars of 1811–12, and sacked by Spanish militia in 1820 and 1834, the abbey was abolished in 1835. It was restored, however, in 1844 and in 1862 affiliated to the congregation of *Subiaco, of which it is now the principal monastery in the Spanish province. Its monks are famous for their researches into Catalonian culture, ecclesiastical history and Scripture, their interest in sacred music, and their extensive library. They also care for the numerous pilgrims who visit the shrine.

G. de Argais, La perla de Cataluña: Historia de Nuestra Señora de Montserrate (Madrid, 1677). M. Muntadas, OSB, Montserrat: Su pasado, su presente y su porvenir, ó lo que fué hasta su destrucción el año 1811, lo que es desde su destrucción y lo que será en adelante (Barcelona, 1867). A. M. Albareda, OSB, Història de Montserrat (Montserrat, 1931; rev. by J. Massot i Muntaner, 1972); Id., L'Abat Oliva, fundador de Montserrat (971[?] 1046) (ibid., 1931; repr. 1972). Analecta Montserratensia (Montserrat, 1918 ff.). A. Mundó, OSB, in EC 8 (1952), cols. 1327–30, s.v. 'Monserrato', with bibl.

Moody, Dwight Lyman (1837–99), evangelist. The son of a bricklayer, he left his home at Northfield, Mass., in 1854 for work in Boston. After reception into the *Congregational Church in 1856, he moved to Chicago, where he prospered in business (which he abandoned in 1860) and entered on successful evangelical work in connection with his Sunday School. During the Civil and Spanish wars (1861–5) he worked under the *YMCA, labouring particularly to evangelize the wounded. Returning to Chicago in 1865, he organized several state and international Sunday School teachers' Conventions, during which he met Ira David Sankey (1840–1908), who joined him in 1870 and regularly accompanied his preaching with singing and organ-playing. After a first visit to England in 1867, he returned with Sankey on a preaching tour from 1872 to 1875, in the course of which the 'Sankey and Moody Hymn Book' was published (1873) with many of the songs used by Sankey and other revivalists who found the hymns in use in England unsuited to their type of appeal. The tour through England, Scotland, and Ireland, which was supported by clergy of many denominations, met a wide and enthusiastic response. After conducting similar missions to Brooklyn, Philadelphia, New York, and Boston, Moody founded the Northfield Seminary for Young Women in 1879 and the Mount Hermon School for Young Men in 1881. After a second tour in Great Britain from 1881 to 1884, during which he made his first appeal to the academic world, he began organizing annual student conferences for Bible study. In 1893 he organized a mission in connection with the World Fair at Chicago, out of which grew the Bible Institute Colportage Association, for the production of cheap religious literature (founded 1895).

Moody's success as an evangelistic preacher was the fruit of his undaunted courage in pursuing converts in spite of all opposition, the frankness, vigour, and urgency of his appeal, and the use of the inquiry-room and other revivalist methods.

W. R. Moody (son), The Life of Dwight L. Moody [1900]. Modern studies by J. C. Pollock (London, 1963) and J. F. Findlay, Jun. (Chicago and London, 1969). J. [H. S.] Kent, Holding the Fort: Studies in Victorian Revivalism (1978), pp. 132–214. L. A. Weigle in Dict. Amer. Biog. 13 (1934), pp. 103–6.

Moore, Aubrey Lackington (1848–90), Anglican theologian. Educated at St Paul's School and Exeter College, Oxford, he was successively Fellow of St John's College, Oxford (1872–6), rector of Frenchay, Avon (1876–81), and tutor at Keble College (1881–90). His keen intellect, equally at home in philosophy and the natural sciences, and a rare depth of spiritual power made him one of the chief religious influences in Oxford. His publications included the essay on 'The Christian Doctrine of God' in Lux Mundi* (1889), a collection of papers on Science and the Faith (1889), and Lectures on the History of the Reformation (1890; posthumous); but these books in no sense reflect his real abilities.

R. D. Middleton, 'Aubrey Moore', Theology, 51 (1948), pp. 85–9. H. E. D. Blakiston in DNB 38 (1894), p. 342.

moral philosophy. In current usage, the branch of philosophy which explores questions of what is good and right apart from any considerations derived from a supernatural revelation; in particular, it examines the nature, meaning, and justification of moral concepts. The word is thus another name for what philosophers also term 'ethics'.

Moral Re-Armament (MRA). The name by which the work of the *Oxford Group came to be generally known after 1938, when F. N. D. *Buchman called for 'moral and spiritual re-armament'. The idea was suggested to him by the Swedish socialist author Harry Blomberg (1893–1950) who, as the armaments race intensified, spoke of the need to 'rearm morally'. For the history and bibl. see OXFORD GROUP.

moral theology. A term used since the late 16th cent. to denote the study of moral questions and the foundations of morality in the light of Christian belief. From the earliest times Christian thinkers were concerned with questions of morality; they developed the ideas of pre-Christian philosophers on the nature of true happiness and built on the teaching of the Bible (esp. the Ten *Commandments and the *Sermon on the Mount) and Jewish writers. Moral theology, however, began to emerge as a discipline independent of dogmatic theology only at the end of the 16th cent. Since then, in the RC and Anglican Churches the term has become associated with the attempts of *casuistry to relate the tradition of moral teaching derived from St *Augustine and St *Thomas Aquinas more closely to individual cases and circumstances. By contrast, Protestants since the early 19th cent. have generally preferred the title 'Christian ethics' for the discipline of Christian moral enquiry.

The '*Didache' contains perhaps the earliest Christian treatise of moral theology in its teaching of the Two Ways, and the 'Shepherd' of *Hermas gives a compendium of Christian moral teaching in the twelve 'Mandates'. *Clement of Alexandria produced guides to the Christian life in the 'Protrepticus' and 'Paedagogus', which give a detailed description of the morality of the true Christian. *Tertullian taught that the will of God was the first principle of the moral life, and he and St *Cyprian wrote several practical treatises on patience, almsgiving, and virginity. With the conversion of large numbers of pagans in the 4th cent. strict moral teaching became particularly urgent. It was given in the E. by, among others, all three *Cappadocian Fathers, and by St *Cyril of Jerusalem, esp. in his 'Catecheses'. In the W. St *Ambrose produced a Christian counterpart to Cicero's 'De Officiis' in his 'De Officiis Ministrorum'. St Augustine's adaptation of classical and *Neoplatonist thought to Christian theological purposes was the dominant patristic influence on W. medieval ethical thought. He established *charity (or love) as the fundamental principle of Christian morality from which flow all other virtues (esp. in his 'Enchiridion' and 'De Moribus'), and he wrote smaller treatises on marriage, continence, and similar subjects. The moral teaching of antiquity was summed up by St *Gregory I in his 'Moralium Libri XXV' and 'Liber Regulae Pastoralis', in which also were laid the foundations of medieval developments.

New needs were reflected in the appearance of the '*Penitential Books', dating from the 5th–7th cents. These deal with the practical moral requirements of the newly-converted barbarians and reflect the resulting weakening of the penitential practice of the Church. Most medieval thought followed St Augustine in his orientation towards the summum bonum of mankind, identified objectively with God, and subjectively with ultimate happiness (which was sited by some in the volitional act of love, and by others in the intellectual act of *contemplation). The criterion of moral action was conformity to the Divine law known through Scripture and reflection on natural experience. *Platonism was the dominant philosophical inspiration until the revival of *Aristotelianism in the 13th cent., largely under the influence of St Thomas Aquinas. Building on St Augustine and Aristotle, Aquinas devoted the whole of the second part of his 'Summa Theologiae' to moral theology, treating it from the point of view of the speculative theologian, and linking it closely to *natural law, the natural and supernatural virtues, and the gifts of the Holy Spirit. At the same time precursors of the modern casuistry made their appearance with *Raymond of Peñafort's famous 'Summa de Poenitentia' (*c.*1225), a compilation of relevant passages from the Fathers, Councils, and Papal decisions, and a century later, with the even more practical so-called 'Summa Astensis' of an unknown *Franciscan of Asti, in Italy (*c.*1317). In the 14th and 15th cents. a large number of similar 'Summae' were produced, usually arranged in alphabetical order, one of the most celebrated being the 'Summa Theologica Moralis' of St *Antoninus of Florence, which proved an important source of information for all subsequent manuals of casuistry.

At the time of the *Counter-Reformation, the RC Church was much influenced by the need to respond to the Protestant emphasis on grace. The period was marked esp. by the many commentaries on the 'Summa Theologiae', by the growth of and controversies over different systems of casuistry, esp. *Probabilism, and by the numerous manuals and treatises on moral theology, produced largely by members of the *Dominican and *Jesuit Orders. This development was greatly fostered by the increased frequency of sacramental confession. Among the commentaries on the second part of the 'Summa', those by B. *Medina, G. *Vázquez, F. *Suárez, and D. *Báñez are held in great esteem by RC moralists, as is also the comprehensive work of the *Salmanticenses 'Cursus Theologiae Moralis' (1665 ff.). Of the casuists M. de *Sá's Aphorismi Confessariorum (1595) was widely used, and J. de *Lugo's Disputationes scholasticae et morales (1644) is still frequently regarded as the classic textbook of casuistry. Perhaps the most renowned moral theologian of modern times, whose work received the special approval of the RC Church, is St *Alphonsus Liguori. Against the harsher *Probabiliorist method, which was common at that time in France and Italy after the attacks of e.g. B. *Pascal on the laxist tendency of casuistry, Liguori's Theologia Moralis (1753–5) finally established the milder *Equiprobabilism. Most subsequent RC handbooks on moral theology have been strongly influenced by his teaching.

In response to widespread criticism of the prevailing casuistical approach, in the 20th cent. RC moral theology has developed significantly, esp. since the Second *Vatican Council. Attempts are being made to give greater prominence to Biblical authority, the role of moral theology in providing positive guidance in Christian living rather than simply instructions to confessors about minimum standards of obligation, the social dimensions of human existence, contemporary philosophical discussion, the place of moral theology within theology as a whole, and *ecumenical and interdisciplinary dialogue.

Protestants have tended to dissociate themselves from attempts to produce detailed systems of duties binding on all Christians, on the ground that good works are a free and grateful response to the completed work of *justification in Christ. Thus for M. *Luther Christians are freed from the self-concern implicit in 'works-righteousness' to serve their neighbours in love. J. *Calvin, while admitting the liberty of the Christian, gives a greater weight to the directive use of the moral law. Many English Protestants in the 17th cent. were attracted by the claims of the casuistical approach to govern in detail every aspect of human existence, and important contributions to moral theology were made by *Puritans (e.g. W. *Perkins and R. *Baxter) as well as by *High Churchmen (e.g. R. *Sanderson and Jeremy *Taylor). During the 18th cent. Protestant thinkers (including divines, esp. Joseph *Butler) looked increasingly to *moral philosophy for guidance. Throughout the 19th cent. moral theologians were greatly influenced by I. *Kant's ethics, attempting either to incorporate his doctrine of ethical autonomy into a theological framework or to qualify it by developing specifically Christian ethics in response to it.

In the 20th cent. K. *Barth's revolt against liberal theology helped to reinstate in Europe a distinctively theological conception of ethics (cf. E. *Brunner and D. *Bonhoeffer), while in the *United States of America R. *Niebuhr's attack on the '*Social Gospel' movement employed an Augustinian awareness of sin to criticize the dominant optimism. The diverse and conflicting trends in recent Protestant ethics include: attempts wholly to subordinate norms to particular situations; by contrast, a stress on order and the principled analysis of recurrent moral problems; a recovered awareness of the importance of hope; and the reassertion of non-violence as an approach to social and political reform. At the same time distinctions between RC and Protestant moral theology have become less sharp and in all the Churches rapid cultural and technological change has set the agenda for many current debates in moral theology, e.g. concerning *bioethics, social and economic justice, and the morality of modern *war; business and professional ethics and comparative religious ethics are also receiving attention, while *liberation and *feminist theologies are introducing new factors into the task of providing Christian guidance for living in and evaluating the contemporary world.

Modern works on RC moral theology include B. Häring, CSSR, Das Gesetz Christi (Freiburg i.B., 1954; 8th edn., 1967; Eng. tr., 3 vols., Cork [1963–7]); id., Free and Faithful in Christ (3 vols., New York and Slough, 1978–81 [the latter book written after the Second Vatican Council]); and G. [G.] Grisez, The Way of the Lord Jesus, 1: Christian Moral Principles (Chicago [1983]). There is a useful introd. from a largely Catholic point of view by an Anglican, R. C. Mortimer, Elements of Moral Theology (1947). Other Anglican works include several writings of K. E. *Kirk, esp. The Vision of God (1931), and O. [M. T.] O'Donovan, Resurrection and Moral Order: An Outline for Evangelical Ethics (Leicester and Grand Rapids, 1986). On the development of moral theology, see G. W. Forell, History of Christian Ethics (Minneapolis, 1979 ff.); J. Mahoney, The Making of Moral Theology: A Study of the Roman Catholic Tradition (Oxford, 1987); J. Liébaert, Les enseignements moraux des pères apostoliques (Gembloux, 1970); E. F. Osborn, Ethical Patterns in Early Christian Thought (Cambridge, 1976); T. Wood, English Casuistical Divinity during the Seventeenth Century (1952); E. Rose, Cases of Conscience: Alternatives open to Recusants and Puritans under Elizabeth I and James I (Cambridge, 1975). Modern Protestant works incl. K. Barth, Die kirchliche Dogmatik, 3, part 4 (Zurich, 1951; Eng. tr., Edinburgh, 1961); D. Bonhoeffer, Ethik, ed. E. Bethge (Munich, 1949; Eng. tr., 1955); R. Niebuhr, An Interpretation of Christian Ethics (New York, 1935; London, 1936); H. R. *Niebuhr, Christ and Culture (New York [1951]; London, 1952); H. Thielicke, Theologische Ethik (3 vols. in 4, Tübingen, 1951–64; abridged Eng. tr. of vol. 1, Philadelphia, 1966, London, 1968; vol. 2, Philadelphia and London, 1969; vol. 3, entitled The Ethics of Sex, New York and London, 1964); [R.] P. Ramsey, Deeds and Rules in Christian Ethics (Scottish Journal of Theology Occasional Papers, 11, 1965; repr. with important additional material, New York [1967]); I. T. Ramsey (ed.), Christian Ethics and Contemporary Philosophy (1966); and G. H. Outka and [R.] P. Ramsey, Norm and Context in Christian Ethics (New York [1968]; London, 1969). For comparative work in contemporary moral theology, see J. M. Gustafson, Protestant and Roman Catholic Ethics (Chicago and London, 1978). Questions of recent concern are considered by T. Rendtorff, Ethik (2 vols., 1980–81); S. Hauerwas, The Peaceable Kingdom: A Primer in Christian Ethics (Notre Dame, Ind., 1983; London, 1984); and C. E. Curran, Critical Concerns in Moral Theology (Notre Dame, Ind. [1984]). J. Macquarrie and J. Childress (eds.), A New Dictionary of Christian Ethics (1986). B. Häring and W. Trillhaas in Sacramentum Mundi, ed. K. *Rahner, SJ, and others, 4 (1969), pp. 122–33, s.v., with bibl. Surveys of recent work on moral theology are pub. annually in Theological Studies.

Morality Play, or Morality. A form of drama, popular in the 15th and 16th cents., in which a moral truth or lesson was inculcated by the chief characters personifying various abstract qualities. It developed independently of the *Mystery Plays, but at the same time. Originally the interest of these plays was mainly religious, but from the end of the 15th cent. onwards they became more secular in character, though in their later form they were sometimes used, e.g., for defending Protestantism against Catholicism. 'Everyman', the best known of them, is a translation from a Dutch original. The name 'Morality', which is derived from the French, was not applied to them till the late 18th cent.

Anthology of texts in D. Bevington, Medieval Drama (Boston [1975]), pp. 789–963. R. Potter, The English Morality Play (1975). See also bibl. to MYSTERY PLAYS; also to DRAMA.

Moravian Brethren, now more usually known as the Moravian Church. The remnant of the *Bohemian Brethren (Unitas Fratrum) who from 1722 onwards settled at *Herrnhut under the patronage of N. L. von *Zinzendorf, became known as the Moravian or United Brethren. As a consequence of Zinzendorf's influence, there was a strong *pietistic element in the community, and in the early years they were closely linked to the *Lutheran Church. They came to feel that they had a particular calling to witness to Christ among people who did not know Him rather than to establish a new Church in places where Christianity was already established, and in 1732 Moravian missionaries began work in the *West Indies, soon going also to Greenland (1733), *South Africa (1736), Labrador (1752), and elsewhere. Other groups settled in N. America. In 1738 the Moravian Peter Boehler, who exercised a deep influence on J. *Wesley, established a 'religious society' at Fetter Lane, London. This became the first Moravian Church in Britain.

Moravians have always emphasized fellowship and service rather than credal statements. They accept the *Apostles', *Athanasian, and *Nicene Creeds and the main Reformation statements of faith (including the *Augsburg Confession, the shorter Catechism of M. *Luther and the *Thirty-Nine Articles of the C of E) as helpful in formulating Christian truth, but they do not make adherence to any of them a requirement for membership. The Liturgy, esp. the Easter Liturgy, conveys the essence of Moravian belief. In their worship hymns, from many sources, play an important part. A 'Text Book' with OT and NT passages for daily meditation is issued annually. Moravians have retained the offices of *bishop, *presbyter, and *deacon, but they do not wholly correspond with their Catholic counterparts. The oversight of each Province is the responsibility of the Provincial Board, elected by its Synod. The Moravian Church is now made up of 19 self-governing Provinces, closely linked through the international Unity Synod and Unity Board. It has a total membership of *c.*600,000, of whom over a quarter are in Tanzania, where missionary work started in 1890.

H.-C. Hahn and H. Reichel (eds.), Zinzendorf und die Herrnhuter Brüder: Quellen zur Geschichte der Brüder-Unität von 1722 bis 1760 (1977). D. Cranz, Alte und neue Brüder-Historie oder Kurzgefasste Geschichte der Evangelischen Brüder-Unität in den altern Zeiten und insonderheit in dem gegenwärtigen Jahrhundert (Barby, 1771; Eng. tr., 1780). E. [A.] De Schweinitz, The History of the Church known as the Unitas Fratrum (Bethlehem, Pa., 1885); J. E. Hutton, A Short History of the Moravian Church (1895; enlarged edn. as A History of the Moravian Church, 1909); J. T. Hamilton, A History of the Church known as the Moravian Church . . . . during the Eighteenth and Nineteenth Centuries (Bethlehem, Pa., 1900; rev. by K. G. Hamilton as History of the Moravian Church . . . 1722–1957, ibid., 1967); W. G. Addison, The Renewed Church of the United Brethren, 1722–1930 (1930); E. Langton, History of the Moravian Church (1956); A. W. Schattschneider, Through Five Hundred Years: A Popular History of the Moravian

Church (Bethlehem, Pa. [1956]; rev. edn., 1990). M. P. van Buijtenen and others (eds.), Unitas Fratrum: Herrnhuter Studien (Utrecht, 1975). W. R. Ward, 'The Renewed Unity of the Brethren: Ancient Church, New Sect or Interconfessional Movement?', Bulletin of the John Rylands University Library, 70 no. 3 (1988), pp. 77–92. J. E. Hutton, A History of Moravian Missions [1922]; H. Beck, Brüder in vielen Völkern: 250 Jahre Mission der Brüdergemeine (Erlanger Taschenbücher, 58; 1981). Transactions of the Moravian Historical Society (Nazareth, Pa., 1876 ff.). On the early history see also bibl. to ZINZENDORF, N. L. VON, and BOHEMIAN BRETHREN.

More, Dame Gertrude (1606–33), *Benedictine nun and spiritual writer. A direct descendant of St Thomas *More, she entered the house of the English Benedictine congregation at Cambrai in 1623 as one of its first postulants. During her novitiate she was much troubled by scruples and temptations, which continued after she had made her vows, until she came under the direction of Dom Augustine *Baker. On account of her repute for sanctity she was nearly made abbess at the age of 23. She died four years later of smallpox. Her writings, which were published after her death as The Holy Practices of a Deuine Lover, or, the Saintly Ideot's Deuotions (Paris, 1657) and Confessiones Amantis (ibid., 1658), contain affective meditations of considerable beauty and an apology for her way of prayer. See also IDIOT, THE.

Her Life, written by her director, A. Baker, was lost to sight until comparatively recent times. The first half of Baker's MS, recovered in Germany c.1850, is in the possession of Stanbrook Abbey, Worcs.; the whole Life, somewhat abbreviated by a copyist, has since been identified in another MS now at *Ampleforth Abbey. The Life was first pr. by Dom B. Weld-Blundell in a vol. entitled The Inner Life of Dame Gertrude More (London, 1911; the ed. appears to have dealt rather freely with the text and, somewhat misleadingly, omitted to print Baker's name on the title-page). Modern edns. of her 'Devotions' by H. Collins (London, 1873), of the Holy Practices by H. Lane Fox, OSB, (ibid., 1909), and of her 'Writings' by B. Weld-Blundell, OSB (ibid., 1910). Life by H. Collins (London, 1875). M. Norman, IBVM, 'Dame Gertrude More and the English Mystical Tradition', Recusant History, 13 (1976), pp. 196–211.

More, Hannah (1745–1833), religious writer and philanthropist. Born at Stapleton, Avon, from c.1757 she attended a school established by her sisters in Bristol. About 1773 she came into contact with the literary circle of David Garrick (1717–79) and S. *Johnson, who encouraged her to publish plays and poems. After Garrick's death she devoted herself more to religious activities, though she distrusted the more emotional aspects of *Evangelicalism. She published a series of Sacred Dramas for the instruction of young persons in 1782 and Thoughts on the Importance of the Manners of the Great to General Society (anon.) in 1788; this last had a very wide circulation. In 1787 she became closely acquainted with W. *Wilberforce and also with J. *Newton, who became her spiritual adviser. Under Wilberforce's influence she established schools at Cheddar and in the neighbouring villages at a time when schemes of popular education were almost unprecedented; religious education was combined with a training in spinning, designed to relieve poverty. She also established friendly societies and other philanthropic organizations for the relief and education of adults. In spite of initial opposition her system of schools was finally commended by R. Beadon, Bp. of *Bath and Wells from 1802 to 1824. Four of the schools which she founded survived. Between 1793 and 1799 she wrote a large number of Tracts designed to counteract the influence of the French Revolution (collected under the title Cheap Repository Tracts). Moving to Barley Wood in 1802, she came into closer contact with the *Clapham Sect and in 1809 anonymously published Coelebs in Search of a Wife (2 vols.), the most popular of her books. Although suffering from ill-health during the last years of her life, she continued to write religious and moral treatises.

Collected edn. of her Works in 8 vols., London, 1801; rev. edn., 11 vols., ibid., 1830. W. Roberts, Memoirs of the Life and Correspondence of Mrs Hannah More (4 vols., 1834); A. Roberts (ed.), Letters of Hannah More to Zachary Macaulay (1860); selected letters ed. R. Brimley Johnson (London, 1925). Further contemporary Life by H. Thompson (ibid., 1838); modern Lives by C. M. *Yonge ('Eminent Women Series', 1888) and M. G. Jones (Cambridge, 1952, with list of 'Cheap Repository Tracts' ascribed to Mrs More, pp. 272 f.). F. K. Brown, Fathers of the Victorians (Cambridge, 1961), passim. J. McLeish, Evangelical Religion and Popular Education: A modern interpretation (1969), passim. S. Pedersen, 'Hannah More Meets Simple Simon: Tracts, Chapbooks, and Popular Culture in Late Eighteenth-Century England', Journal of British Studies, 25 (1986), pp. 84–113. L. Stephen in DNB 38 (1894), pp. 414–20.

More, Henry (1614–87), *Cambridge Platonist. Educated at Christ's College, of which he became a Fellow in 1639, he remained in Cambridge all his life, despite the fact that he was offered several rich preferments. His chief interests were theological, philosophical, and ethical. Among his principal works were Antidote against Atheism (1653), The Immortality of the Soul (1659), and Divine Dialogues (1668). In these discursive writings he sought to vindicate theism and immortality against the materialism represented by T. *Hobbes. He emphasized in particular the instinctive reasonableness of Divine truth and affirmed the existence of a higher principle, 'more noble and inward than reason itself', which he termed the 'Divine Sagacity'. He held that it was possible to apprehend this higher truth only through the cultivation of a righteous disposition and a free intellect, though afterwards this intuitive instinct might be confirmed by the methods of reason. He also defended innate ideas and notions, and postulated the existence of a Spirit of Nature or 'anima mundi'. Despite his curiously superstitious leanings, he had a high reputation for learning and saintliness.

Works collected in 3 vols., fol., London, 1675–9. Modern edn. of selection of his philosophical works, with introd. and notes, by F. I. Mackinnon (New York, 1925); philosophical poems ed. G. Bulloch (Publications of the University of Manchester, 209; English Series, 20; 1931). The 1662 edn. of The Immortality of the Soul was repr., with introd. by A. Jacob (International Archives of the History of Ideas, 122; Dordrecht, etc., 1987). Life by R. Ward, rector of Belton (London, 1710; ed. M. F. Howard, ibid., 1911). Modern studies by A. Lichtenstein (Cambridge, Mass., 1962), S. Hutin (Studien und Materialien zur Geschichte der Philosophie, 2; 1966), and P. Cristofolini (Urbino [1974]). [F.] J. Hoyles, The Waning of the Renaissance 1640–1740 (International Archives of the History of Ideas, 39; The Hague, 1971), pp. 3–72. J. Henry, 'A Cambridge Platonist's Materialism. Henry More and the Concept of Soul', Journal of the Warburg and Courtauld Institutes, 49 (1986), pp. 172–95. J. H. Overton in DNB 38 (1894), pp. 421–3. See also works cited s.v. CAMBRIDGE PLATONISTS.

More, St Thomas (1478–1535), Lord Chancellor of England. The son of Sir John More (a judge of the King's Bench), he embarked on the study of law in 1494, after spending some years in the household of Abp. J. Morton and at Oxford. Called to the bar in 1501, he had a distinguished career at Lincoln's Inn. After testing his vocation to the religious life at the London *Charterhouse, he decided against celibacy, and married Jane Colt in 1505. Upon her death in 1511, he took a second wife, Alice Middleton. His household in Chelsea became a centre of learning and piety, frequented by such humanist scholars as J. *Colet, *Erasmus, and W. *Grocyn. His public career began with his appointment as Under-Sheriff of London in 1510, and his abilities won him a place on an embassy to Flanders in 1515. There he wrote his most famous work, Utopia (Louvain, 1516). This description of an ideal community living by natural law, religion, and reason aimed many satirical barbs at contemporary abuses. More joined the Privy Council in 1517, and soon afterwards became Master of Requests, to be knighted three years later. Speaker of the House of Commons in 1523, he was made Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster in 1525, and finally replaced T. *Wolsey as Lord Chancellor in 1529.

During the 1520s, when the *Lutheran controversy raged throughout Europe, More emerged as a zealous defender of Catholicism. He had a hand in *Henry VIII's attack on M. *Luther, the Assertio Septem Sacramentorum (1521), and under the pseudonym of Gulielmus Rosseus he vilified Luther's reply to Henry in his Responsio ad Lutherum (1523). From 1528 he produced a succession of polemical writings against, among others, W. *Tyndale and the anticlerical propagandist Christopher St German. However, his reluctance to support Henry VIII in his pursuit of a divorce was rendering his political position difficult. Henry's attack on the liberties of the Church in England rendered it untenable, and More resigned the Chancellorship—ostensibly on grounds of ill-health—on 16 May 1532, within hours of the *Convocation's acceptance of Henry's demands (see SUBMISSION OF THE CLERGY). In his retirement he held aloof from all political engagements, even refusing to attend the coronation of *Anne Boleyn in 1533—to Henry's annoyance. This strategy served him well, for he was able to persuade the House of Lords to delete his name from the bill of Attainder against Elizabeth *Barton and her followers in 1534. However, it could not protect him from the Act of Succession. On his refusal to take an oath to this Act in April 1534, he was confined to the Tower of London, where he spent the rest of his life in prayer and penance, composing several devotional treatises, including the fine Dialogue of Comfort against Tribulation. On 1 July 1535 he was tried for high treason on the charge of having denied the Royal *Supremacy. Convicted on the probably perjured evidence of Richard Rich, he was sentenced to death, and was executed on 6 July 1535. He was beatified by *Leo XIII in 1886 and canonized by *Pius XI in 1935. Feast day, formerly 9 July; now, with St. John *Fisher, 22 June. He is commemorated in the ASB on 6 July.

Eng. works ed. by his nephew William Rastell (London, 1557); Lat. works pub. at Louvain, 1565, and at Frankfurt a.M., 1689. Yale Edition of Complete Works, under the auspices of G. L. Carroll and J. B. Murray (New Haven, Conn., and London, 1963 ff.). Eng. works also ed. W. E. Campbell (London, 1931 ff. [only 2 vols. pub.]). The Correspondence of Sir Thomas More, ed. E. F. Rogers (Princeton, NJ, 1947); further letters ed. H. S. Herbrüggen (Münster, 1966). The earliest Life, based on orig. docs., is that by William Roper, More's son-in-law (first pr., Paris, 1626; crit. text by E. V. Hitchcock, EETS, Original Series, 197; 1935); other early Lives by Thomas Stapleton (Tres Thomae, Douai, 1588; Eng. tr. by P. E. Hallett, 1928), Nicholas Harpsfield (d. 1575; Harleian MS 6253; ed. E. V. Hitchcock, EETS, Original Series, 186; 1932), Cresacre More, his great-grandson [Antwerp, c.1630], and 'Ro. Ba.', ed. E. V. Hitchcock and P. E. Hallett (EETS, Original Series, 222; 1950). Modern Lives by R. W. Chambers (London, 1935), L. Paul (ibid., 1953), E. E. Reynolds (ibid., 1953 and 1968), A. Prévost ([Paris,] 1969), and R. Marius (New York and London, 1984). G. Marc'Hadour, L'Univers de Thomas More: Chronologie critique de More, Érasme et leur époque (1477–1536) (De Pétrarque à Descartes, 5; 1963). J. A. Guy, The Public Career of Sir Thomas More (Brighton, Sussex, 1980); A. Fox, Thomas More: History and Providence (Oxford, 1982). R. W. Gibson, St Thomas More: A Preliminary Bibliography of his Works and of Moreana to the Year 1750 (1961). S. Lee in DNB 38 (1894), pp. 429–49.

Morgan, William (1545–1604), translator of the *Welsh Bible. Born in the Conway valley, the son of a tenant farmer, he was educated in the free school maintained by his father's landlord, and, through his patronage, at St John's College, Cambridge. Though ordained in 1568, it was only on his induction to the living of Llanrhaedr-ym-Mochnant, ten years later, that he undertook full-time parish duties. He was appointed Bp. of *Llandaff in 1595 and in 1601 translated to *St Asaph, where he died in penury.

It was during his time as a parish priest that Morgan translated the Bible into Welsh, a task completed with its publication in 1588. He based his version of the NT on a translation made by William Salesbury and Richard Davies (1567), but he rendered the OT and Apocrypha from the original languages single-handed. As a work of scholarship his translation stands on a par with the English AV. It is clear that he was well-versed in the biblical languages and consulted the standard versions of his day. His Bible was epoch-making in that it not only gave the people of Wales the Scriptures in their mother-tongue, but it also saved the Welsh language from extinction.

Life by W. Hughes (London, 1891). P. Morgan, A Bible for Wales (Aberystwyth, 1988); I. Thomas, William Morgan and his Bible (Cardiff, 1988). G. [R.] Gruffydd, 'The Translating of the Bible into the Welsh Tongue' by William Morgan in 1588 (1988); G. Williams and T. M. Bassett, William Morgan's Bible 1588–1988 (1988). J. E. Lloyd in DNB 39 (1894), pp. 38 f.; M. Stephens (ed.), The Oxford Companion to the Literature of Wales (Oxford and New York, 1986), pp. 409–11, both s.v. See also works cited s.v. WELSH BIBLE AND PRAYER BOOK.

Morin, Germain (1861–1946), *patristic scholar. A native of Caen, in 1881 he became a Benedictine monk at Maredsous in Belgium. From 1907 to 1916, and again in his later years, he resided chiefly at Munich. He made many important original contributions to Latin patristics and liturgy, mostly in the Revue Bénédictine, and published an outstanding edition of the works of St *Caesarius of Arles (1937–42). He also issued collections of previously unpublished sermons of St *Jerome (1897, 1903) and of St *Augustine (1917, 1930).

G. Ghysens and P.-P. Verbraken, La Carrière Scientifique de Dom Germain Morin (1861–1946) (Instrumenta Patristica, 15; 1986).

Morin, Jean (1591–1659), *Oratorian theologian. The son of *Calvinist parents, he was converted to Catholicism in 1617 under the influence of P. de *Bérulle, became an Oratorian in the following year, and devoted his life almost wholly to studies in patristics and the text of the Bible. At the invitation of Pope *Urban VIII he spent nine months in Rome in 1639–40 as theological adviser in the matter of *Orders during the attempts to reunite the E. and W. Churches. His works included De patriarcharum et primatum origine . . . atque antiqua et primigenia censurarum in clericos praxi (1626), Vetus Testamentum secundum LXX (3 vols., 1628), Exercitationes ecclesiasticae in utrumque Samaritanorum Pentateuchum (1631) and De Sacris Ecclesiae Ordinationibus (1655). A notable feature of the last-named work was its rejection of the view formerly widely held among Latin theologians that the Tradition of the *Instruments constituted the *matter of the Sacrament of Orders.

R. *Simon in Antiquitates Ecclesiae Orientalis cum Notis et Vita I. Morini (London, 1682), pp. 1–117 (hostile, Simon having then left the Oratory). P. Auvray, Cong. Orat., 'Jean Morin (1591–1659)', R. Bibl. 66 (1959), pp. 397–414. A. Molien in DTC 10 (pt. 2; 1929), cols. 2486–9. See also works cited under ORATORIANS (2).

Morison, James (1816–93), founder of the '*Evangelical Union'. Educated at Edinburgh University, he was trained for the ministry of the *United Secession Church. In 1839 he was appointed to the charge of Cabrach and in 1840 to a church at Kilmarnock. His preaching of the universal atonement of Christ and the publication of his beliefs in a short tract, The Question 'What must I do to be saved?' Answered (1840), led his teachings to be challenged as incompatible with the *Westminster Confession, and in 1841 he was expelled from the United Secession Church. In 1843, with three other ministers and nine laymen, he founded at Kilmarnock the 'Evangelical Union', and later was joined by others. In 1851 he left for Glasgow. He retired from active work in 1884.

Memorial Volume, ed. G. G[ladstone] (on occasion of Morison's ministerial jubilee; 1889). Lives by W. Adamson (London, 1898) and [W. H.] O. Smeaton (Edinburgh, 1901). R. Small, History of the Congregations of the United Presbyterian Church from 1733 to 1900, 2 (1904), pp. 288–91; [T. E.] H. Escott, A History of Scottish Congregationalism (Glasgow, 1960), pp. 116–34. A. Gordon in DNB 39 (1894), pp. 57 f.

Moritz, St. See MAURICE, ST.

